JUST HUMANS
By Gene Carr

"I HAD MY LAST RIDE WITH YOU, OL' MAN!"

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS
By H. IRVING KING

MOTHS, HUMMING BIRDS

THAT the sphinx-moth turns into a butterfly is a common belief all over the United States. In some sections this superstition is varied to the effect that the sphinx-moth is a cross between a butterfly and a humming bird, or a humming bird that has been changed into a moth. In nearly all cases it is the moth known as the morning-sphinx, a very common winged insect of striking appearance, that is meant. This superstition is, of course, merely a survival of the ancient belief in the change of one living entity into another of a different species as a man into a wolf, a woman into a plant—as Daphne was changed into a laurel—or a flower into a bird or a butterfly. Any one form of life was supposed to be capable of suffering a change into another by the primitive mind. There is an old Chinese belief that sparrows when they become old dive into the sea and become clams. Then there is the well known "barnacle goose" so strongly believed in down to comparatively recent times, which was asserted to spring from barnacles growing on trees. That one animal might become changed into another was a thing not to be doubted by our ancestors—and ancestors not so very far removed, either. To primitive man there was nothing in this metamorphosis to conflict with his daily experience, nothing more wonderful than that which was taking place all around him. When he saw an egg changed into a bird, or a tadpole into a frog, it appeared the most natural thing in the world that a humming bird should change into a moth, or that a moth should change into a humming bird. The striking colorations of the morning sphinx-moth suggests a humming bird much more than the tadpole suggests the bullfrog. The American Folk-Lore society found this moth-humming bird superstition existing in this country from Maine to California. It is a striking example of the survival of the ancient belief in metamorphosis.

SUPERSTITIOUS SUE

SHE HAS HEARD THAT—

There is an old English belief that if you fall upstairs with a pot of tea in your hand—don't growl, girlie, but gurgle for joy—it's an omen that cupid will play a wedding march in your house within six months.

And giveth happiness or peace,

—Lowell.

SPONGE CAKES

SPONGE cakes are a favorite with mothers of little children. They are much more wholesome than the richer butter cakes and are especially to be recommended for children's parties. For them of course, nuts will not be used, but in the following some will be found that the children may eat.

Balmoral Cake.

Break four eggs into the upper part of a double boiler, add one-half cupful of granulated sugar and place over hot water or on the back of the range where the heat is low. With a rotary egg beater whip the mixture over the hot water until it doubles in quantity and becomes thick and creamy; it should be quite warm, but not hot, during the beating. Add one teaspoonful of vanilla and fold in seven-eighths of a cupful of pastry flour which has been sifted several times. Bake in a moderate oven forty-five minutes. Ice with orange confectioner's icing.

Swiss Roll.

Beat the whites of five eggs until stiff, add one cupful of granulated sugar and one-half teaspoonful of lemon, almond or vanilla extract during the beating, then add one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, and the yolks beaten until thick, sift the flour, using one cupful of pastry flour, then sift again, fold into the first mixture. Pour into a greased floured pan, spreading the batter evenly with a spatula.

Bake about ten minutes in a hot oven. Spread thickly with marshmallow filling and roll up closely. Wrap in a towel for a short time, then cover with chocolate icing. Serve with whipped cream.

Butter Sponge Cake.

Beat three eggs well, add one cupful of sugar and beat again; when a creamy batter add one-fourth cupful of warm water, not hot, then one cupful of pastry flour sifted with one teaspoonful of baking powder: beat very hard, then add two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and a teaspoonful of flavoring. The butter should be sizzling hot and no time lost in getting the cake into the oven. Bake about thirty minutes—in a loaf. Makes good layer cake, but shorten the time of baking.

Nut Sponge Cake.

Beat the white, and yolks of four eggs separately, then combine and beat again, add one cupful of sugar slowly, beating well; when of a batter-like consistency add one cupful of pastry flour sifted with one teaspoonful of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Add one-fourth cupful each of chopped dates and nuts, flavor to taste and add two tablespoonfuls of hot melted butter. Bake in a shallow pan forty-five minutes. Spread with butter while hot and sprinkle with powdered sugar mixed with cinnamon.

Only Then

"But you are not always bothered with poor light, are you?" inquired the light company's clerk.

"Oh, no, not always!" replied the complaining householder.

"Ah, I thought so. It's only at certain times that you notice it, eh?"

"Yes; only after dark!"

MY ROAD

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THERE are two roads I travel on,
And one road is the highway.
There wealth and honor both are won,
But that road isn't my way.
All day I battle men and fate,
Upon the world's hot highroad,
And crowd, and push, and heave, and hate
And then I come to my road.

There are two roads, and one dips down
Where cottage lights are gleaming,
A little bridge, a little town,
And even a little dreaming.
I come upon it just at eve,
A path that leaves the highroad,
And then the world's white dust I leave
And feel my feet on my road.

There are two roads that run through life,
And one road is the fame road,
And there's a road to house and wife
That never is the same road.
I hope for heaven, as all men hope,
Yet not beyond the highroad
I think I'll find that lovely slope,
But at the end of my road.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT
By F. A. WALKER

MAKE HASTE SLOWLY

EVERY now and then, prominent physicians try to impress upon the fevered minds of the people in our great cities that they are rushing into heart disease, which, when all other ailments are considered, is the most dangerous in the great, bustling city.

Last year nearly 15,000 persons died in New York of this illness, an increase of several hundred over the preceding year.

But nothwithstanding these repeated warnings, city folk continue to drive ahead.

In the morning they snatch breakfast, run to trains, leap up stairs, or down from elevated structures, two steps at a clip, burst into their offices and begin to urge business with a lash.

At luncheon time they scurry to restaurants, demand the food they can get quickest and bolt it down half chewed.

Back they rush again to their desks to drive furiously until the hour comes for them to go home, where they arrive tired and nervous.

Some exciting entertainment must be had to "rest them up!" so off they go still in a mad quest.

In the wee small hours of the morning they drop into bed and try to hurry sleep, which stubbornly refused to be driven.

Five or six hours on the mattress must suffice, for all the world is ringing at the telephone and message-boys are hot on the trail.

Later to bed Saturday night than usual, up at dawn Sunday morning, they are off for a strenuous outing, with the heart still on the jump, pumping almost three ounces of blood at each beat.

And this little organ, through which all the blood of the body passes in three minutes, pumps each day what is equal to lifting one hundred and thirty tons one foot high, or one ton one hundred and thirty feet high. When exerted, its burden is even greater.

Is it any wonder that it tires and stops suddenly in mid-life?

Is it any wonder that the doctors are alarmed?

To preserve health and enduring strength, and to get the best there is in life, make haste slowly. This can be done by getting sufficient sleep and rest each night.

If you do this, provided your heart functions normally, there will be less liability of collapse when all your strength is needed to carry you safely over some unusual crisis.

To follow the rushing habit so common in the large cities, is but to hasten the end of your days, and that, too, when life is at the height of its greatest usefulness to yourself and to your loved ones.

GIRLIGAGS

"There is a little bit of bad in the best of us," says Cynical Sue, "and generally that is the part the best of us brag about."

Courtesy of the Domestic Science Department Perfection Stove Company

NANCY'S own kitchen had been undergoing improvements, along with the others. And, as might have been expected, its color scheme was a little out of the ordinary. For Nancy, as you may remember, was an artist, and not at all afraid to experiment with color.

Her house was Colonial in style, and the woodwork throughout was white, with mahogany trim. In her kitchen, the door and window frames were of mahogany color, with all the built-in furniture, white. Walls, lavender-gray, very light. Curtains, sea blue, bordered with French blue and lavender. Floor, light gray linoleum. Oval rugs of French blue, with bands of sea blue and lavender. Breakfast table, sea blue trimmed with French blue. Chairs, French blue, trimmed with sea blue. Oil range, pots and pans, snow-white.

"I got stage fright at the thought of cooking for you experts," she told the assembled Kitchen Club. "But I have some good sandwich recipes I'm going to give you."

"I always break the first rule of sandwich making—to use day-old bread. It does make much neater sandwiches, but they are not nearly so good as those made with fresh bread. I have a very sharp knife, and use it with the lightest pressure possible."

LEAVES FROM NANCY'S KITCHEN CLUB NOTEBOOK

These are the recipes I gave the Club:

Toasted Nut Sandwiches

Toast over a slow fire pecans, English walnuts or blanched almonds in butter and salt, constantly stirring. Slice fresh bread and spread thinly with olive oil mayonnaise. Sprinkle with the nuts, using the toasted butter as part of the spread. Are best if served immediately.

Cheese and Nut Sandwiches

Run fresh American cheese through a food chopper until it is puffy. Mix with enough evaporated milk to make a paste. Do not use fresh milk. For this recipe, the evaporated is far better. Season with salt and red pepper. Mix with nuts and spread on fresh bread without mayonnaise. While this sandwich is better if eaten at once, it can stand for hours, if necessary, and still be good.

Cheese and Pimiento Sandwiches

Run American cheese through food chopper until it is puffy. Mix with chopped canned pimiento and enough olive oil mayonnaise to spread nicely. This filling will keep for days, but is better eaten at once.

"Pick Up Supper" Sandwiches

Toast bread on one side. On soft side spread mayonnaise. Lay on this a lettuce leaf, two slices of tomato and two of crisp, hot bacon. Salt and pepper. Serve at once.

Chicken Salad Sandwiches

Chopped chicken, sweet pickle, chopped hard-boiled eggs. Pepper, salt, celery salt. A little chopped celery. Moisten with mayonnaise and spread on bread.

Cheese Dreams

These are hard to digest, but oh, so good on cold nights! Crumble fresh American cheese on fresh bread. Salt. Cover with another slice. Toast in frying pan with butter. When brown on one side turn and toast on the other. Serve at once.

Cake and Bread Box

I showed the Kitchen Club the combination cake and bread box I found at Green's yesterday. It has two compartments. Comes in half-a-dozen different colors. I got one. But, as I already had a cake box, I'm going to put silver in the top compartment of mine.

Vanishing Garbage Bucket

One store showed me a garbage bucket with an attachment to fasten it to the pipe under a kitchen sink. It pulls out on a lever to fill, and is pushed back out of sight when one is through with it. It comes in beautiful, bright colors, though, and it seems a shame to hide it.

Vegetable Bin

I found a wonderful new vegetable bin to tell the Kitchen Club about. It has three "stories," each ventilated. The bottom one could hold potatoes, the next, apples, and the two small ones at the top, onions and beans. The bin comes in tin, all different colors.

"This young man's bachelor days are numbered."

Mrs. Percival served us a simply divine dessert, made of big hunks of angel cake, covered with hot chocolate sauce filled with nuts, and topped with ice cream! Here are the recipes:

Angel Cake

Whites of 12 eggs
1½ cups granulated sugar (measured after sifting)
1 cup and 1 tablespoon pastry flour
1 teaspoon vanilla
Pinch salt
1½ teaspoons cream of tartar

Sift sugar five times. Set aside. Sift flour, cream of tartar and salt together five times. Set aside. Beat whites to a froth, not quite as stiff as for meringue. Sift in sugar, folding it into eggs as lightly as possible. Sift in flour. This also must be done with as light a handling and as much speed as possible. Turn into unbuttered pan and cook in slow oven for fifty-five minutes. Put pan of water in oven with it and keep it there for forty minutes. Do not open the oven door for twenty minutes after cake starts to bake. At the end of forty minutes take pan of water out. At the end of fifty-five minutes take out cake and turn it upside on plate to cool in pan.

Chocolate Sauce

2 cups white sugar
2 tablespoons cocoa
½ cup water.

Cook to thick syrup. Add nuts and serve hot over cake.

Proper Heat of Oil Stove for Angel Cake

Keep flames low, so that they show blue. (For faster cooking turn them up 1½ inches.) A really good oil stove will burn with a steady flame, and will need no watching.

How to Cut Angel Cake

Never use a knife on angel cake. Pull it apart with two forks. This keeps the feathery texture from crushing.

New Heat Indicator

Mrs. Alden's new range has a heat indicator which she says is the most accurate she has ever seen for an oil stove. It is built into the side of the oven.

We got some recipes for excellent imitation sea dishes this afternoon. Here they are:

Beef Oysters

Beat one pound of round steak. Cut it into pieces the size of an oyster. Soak for ten minutes in water with a teaspoon of baking soda in it. Take out, dry, salt and pepper. Dip in meal. Fry in hot fat until very brown. This process makes the steak taste very much like oysters, and it can be eaten at any time of year.

Tomato Oysters

Slice half-ripe tomatoes. Salt, pepper, and dip into cracker crumbs. Fry in deep fat. This dish also tastes like oysters, and many like it better.

Salsify (Oyster Plant)

Scrape the salsify. Boil it tender. Remove from fire; mash well and mix with cracker crumbs, butter, salt, pepper and a beaten egg. Make into patties the size of an oyster, roll in cracker dust and fry in hot fat.

"Treasure Chest" Salad

"Yo ho ho and a plate of salad!"

Take curved leaves of lettuce. Wash and arrange on plate. Halves of fresh or canned peaches. Scoop out center of both halves. Set one half on lettuce leaf. Fill with grated pineapple. Cover with other half. French dressing and paprika over the top. Makes a beautiful salad, as curved lettuce leaf resembles a sea shell; and the peach, of course, is the treasure chest.

A message to the editor of this paper from GENERAL MOTORS

JUST about a year ago we published, in your advertising columns, a message in which we sought to give you and your readers an idea of what General Motors is and what it is trying to accomplish. At that time the public was purchasing our cars at the rate of about one in every three; and our Frigidaire automatic refrigerator and Delco-Light electric plants were leading in popular preference in their respective fields.

Since then each of our car divisions has introduced new, further improved models and public patronage has reached the point where almost one out of two automobiles purchased is a General Motors car. Frigidaire and Delco-Light products have showed comparable increases in sales.

The reason for this is two-fold. First, the public wants value for its automobile dollar and recognizes value when it is given. Second, General Motors is seeking so to conduct its operations as to deserve the goodwill of the public.

We are particularly impressed with the number of letters which have come to us from editors of small city newspapers during recent months. These editors, who are in a position to reflect local sentiment, speak of the goodwill which attaches to General Motors in their communities and express an obviously sincere appreciation of the character of General Motors' advertising in their publications.

For our advertising has been as much concerned with giving your readers facts of helpfulness to them in the purchase of automobiles as with the merits of our own products. Our messages have set forth the principles of trade-in transactions and used car allowances. They have dealt with time payments and the change in the public's attitude toward the used car. Other messages have told of the policies of General Motors and of how our resources are being employed to effect them.

That General Motors enjoys the goodwill of the people in the small cities and on the farms of America gives us an especial satisfaction and confidence in the future. It is in the country sections of the United States that half our population lives. It is there that the whole industry must look in increasing measure for maintenance of the production volume upon which high values and low prices depend. And it is there that General Motors is paying particular attention to its facilities for sales and service.

To our friends in your community we express our thanks.

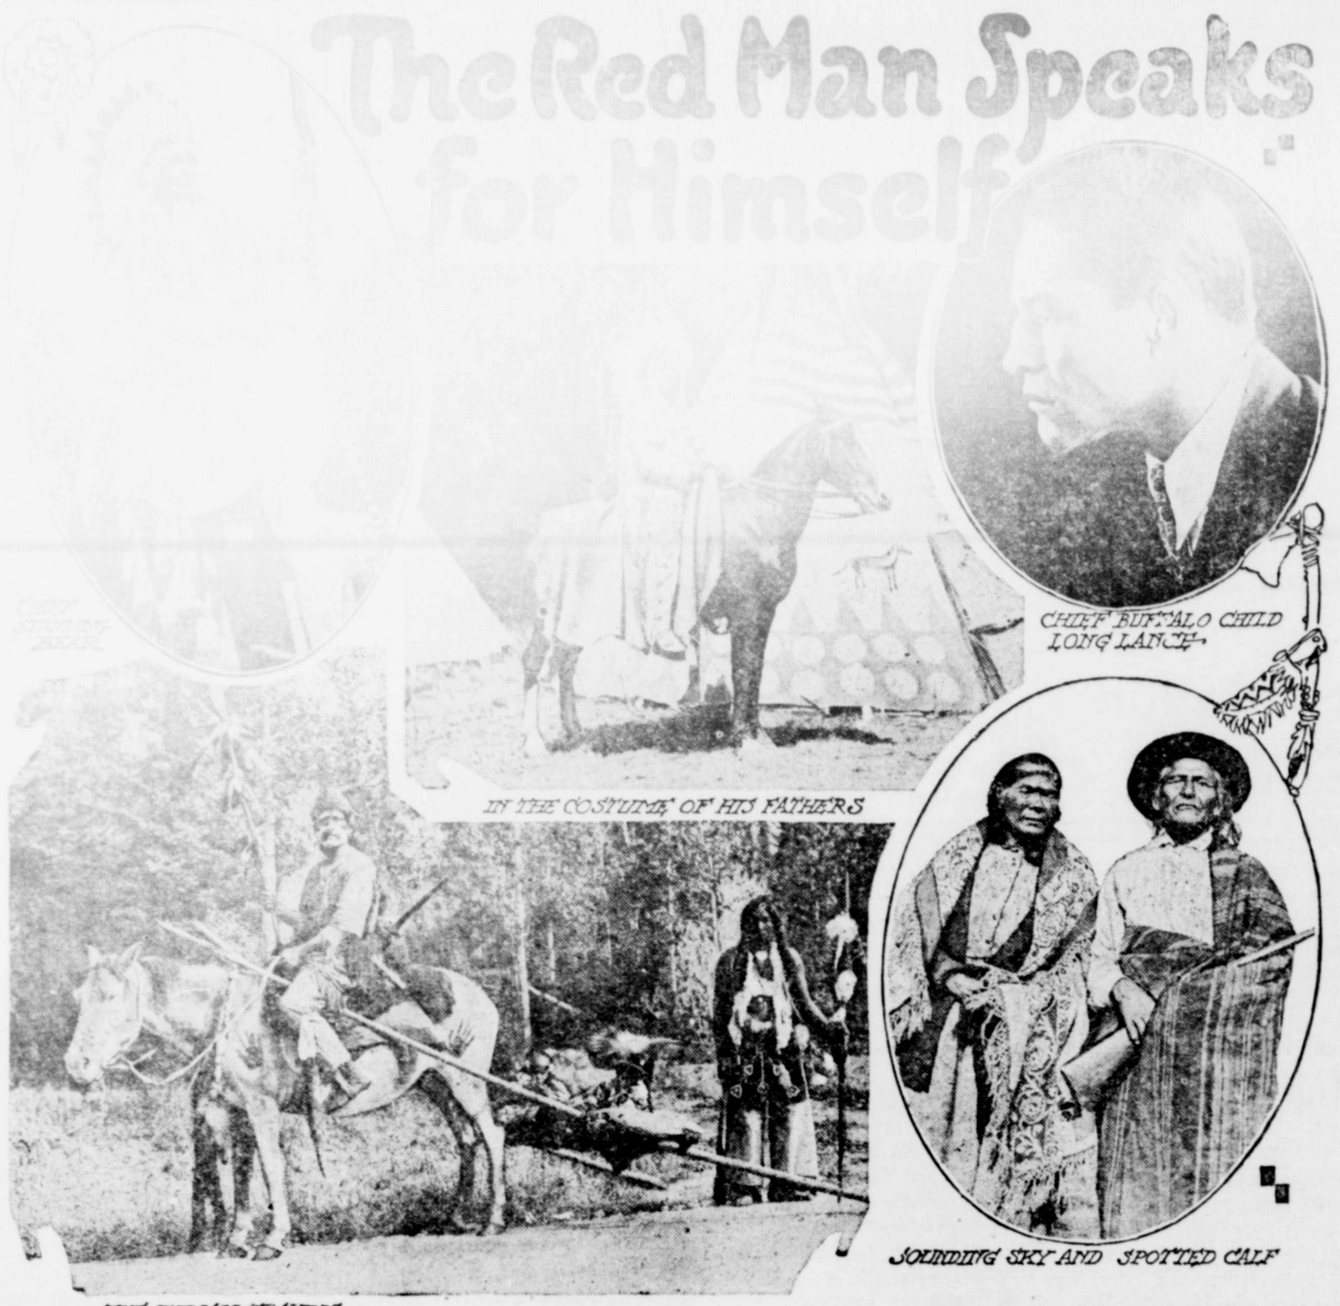
The Red Man Speaks for Himself



CHIEF BUFFALO CHILD LONG LANCE

IN THE COSTUME OF HIS FATHERS

SOUNDING SKY AND SPOTTED CALF

THE INDIAN TRAVOIS

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AMERICAN Indian day comes on September 28 and indications are that it will be more widely observed this year than at any time since it was originated in Illinois in 1919. The purpose of American Indian day is to foster more cordial relations and a better understanding between the red and white races, but more especially to bring to the attention of the whites the many accomplishments of the Indian.

In view of that fact, the recent appearance of two books, written by Indians, is especially noteworthy, for in both "My People, the Sioux," by Chief Standing Bear, published by Houghton Mifflin company, and "Long Lance," by Chief Buffalo Child Long Lance, published by the Cosmopolitan Book corporation, the white man can find an accurate portrayal of the Indian character, as exemplified in the life stories of these representatives of two of the finest types of North American Indians—the Sioux and the Blackfeet. For what Chief Standing Bear says in the preface to his book applies to both. He writes:

The preparation of this book has not been with any idea of self-glory. It is just a message to the white race; to bring my people before their eyes in a true and authentic manner. The American Indian has been written about by hundreds of authors of white blood or possibly by an Indian of mixed blood who has spent the greater part of his life away from a reservation. These are not in a position to write accurately about the struggles and disappointments of the Indian.

White men who have tried to write stories about the Indian have either foisted on the public some blood-curdling, impossible "thriller"; or, if they have been in sympathy with the Indian, have written from knowledge which was not accurate and reliable. No one is able to understand the Indian race like an Indian.

A brief review of the career of Standing Bear will show how eminently fitted he is to interpret his people of the red race to the white race. He was born in 1868 when the Sioux were still nomads, whose proud spirit had not yet been tamed by military conquest and by being penned upon reservations, where they came enough into contact with a certain class of white man to have their primitive virtues corrupted by that contact. As a boy he lived in the buffalo-skin tipi of the old time Plains Indians and received from his elders the spiritual and physical training which resembled that of the Spartans of ancient times; as a young man he knew the thrill of the buffalo chase and the intertribal wars which developed a race of first class fighting men of whom General F. W. Benteen once said "They (the Sioux) are the greatest warriors that the sun ever shone on." Although too young to have a part in the last stand of the Sioux against the United States government in the War of 1876-77, the fact that he was the son of an hereditary chief of the Sioux and one who was prominent in both the war and peace councils of his tribe gave Standing Bear an unusual opportunity to know the facts about some of the incidents of that last stand. And it may be noted in passing that historians of the future might well take into consideration Standing Bear's narrative before writing again of such matters as the Battle of the Little Big Horn where Custer perished, the death of Crazy Horse in the guard house at Camp Robinson, Neb., and the now famous affair at Wounded Knee which some white historians have called a "battle" but which the Sioux to this day call a "massacre."

Standing Bear's education (in the sense in which the white man uses that term) began when he was one of the first group of Sioux children to enter the newly-established school for Indians at Carlisle, Pa., in 1879. It continued there for several years, was supplemented as an employee of John Wanamaker at his store in Philadelphia and continued as an employee of the government on the Rosebud and Pine Ridge reservations, as a member of Buffalo Bill's wild west show both in this country and abroad and as a movie actor in southern California where he now lives. The distance which Standing Bear of the Sioux has covered in "following the white man's road" is nothing less than amazing. In the short space of sixty years there has been written in the history of this individual at least a thousand years of racial history, a giant's stride from barbarism to what we call "civilization"!

Soon after Standing Bear was born his people saw for the first time a railroad train on the Union Pacific railroad, which was then being pushed west. With mixed emotions of amazement and fear they watched this great "snake" go puffing across the prairie, little realizing that it was to be one of the vital forces in bringing about the downfall of their race at the hands of a more powerful and ruthless type of civilization. The naive attitude of the Sioux toward the railroad, as well as toward many other of the things used by the white men, as reflected in the pages of this red man's book, is the best possible commentary upon the great difference between the Standing Bear of 1868 and the Standing Bear of 1928. And reading this, the white man may learn how unjust he has been to the red man—not unjust in the sense that he robbed the Indian of his lands and his freedom and imposed upon him restrictions hateful to a free spirited and roving people, but unjust in his attitude toward the Indian, the attitude which made him expect the red man to adopt almost overnight a social and economic order which the white man had evolved only after centuries of painful effort.

It is this fact which makes the reading of such books as those written by Standing Bear and Buffalo Child Long Lance especially appropriate to the aims of American Indian day. For by doing so, the American of the present day, no matter how indifferent he may be to the "wrongs" perpetrated upon the Indian by Americans of past generations, can come more nearly having an adequate understanding of the Indian point of view, both past and present, and thus be able to do his share in avoiding further injustice to a brave people who still form a not inconsiderable part of the population of this country.

What is true of Chief Standing Bear as an authentic interpreter of the real Indian is no less true of Chief Buffalo Child Long Lance, and the history of his life is as romantic a record of transformation as is that of the Sioux chiefs. What that life was is intimated by Irvin S. Cobb, who wrote in the foreword to "Long Lance" this:

It was an altogether another and a different book that my friend Buffalo Child Long Lance might have written. He might have written to tell how he won scholastic and athletic honors at Carlisle and at Manlius; of how, while mastering the white man's tongue, he learned half a dozen tribal languages other than his own; of how, having received a presidential award of appointment to West Point, he threw away that most cherished dream of his—the dream of being a full-blooded Indian officer in the regular army—to cross the line in 1916, and at the first call for recruits for overseas service, to enlist in the Canadian forces; of how, going in as a private, he came out at the end of the World war as a captain of infantry, his body covered with wounds and his breast glittering with medals bestowed for high conduct and gallantry; of how he fought as a sniper, as a raider, as a leader of forlorn hopes in the trenches and across No Man's Land; of how his own people conferred upon him the chieftainship of one of the four principal bands of the Northern Blackfeet; of how, beginning as a reporter on a western Canadian paper, he has earned for himself distinction as a writer of magazines.

He might have told these things, but, being an Indian, he didn't. And I for one am glad that he has written this one. For here, sinking his own engaging personality, his own individual achievements in the background, he depicts graphic phases of a life which has altogether vanished, of a race which is rapidly vanishing. I know of no man better fitted than Chief Long Lance to write a true book about the true American Indian and I know of no book on the subject which better reveals the spirit of the Indian in the years that are gone and the spirit of times the like of which will never be seen again.

Although Chief Buffalo Child Long Lance is a younger man than Chief Standing Bear, his recollections of his childhood are of those of a people as primitive as the Sioux from which Standing Bear sprang. They were the Blackfeet, called the "Tigers of the Plains," who were the ruling tribe of a wild domain known as the northwest territories in Canada until 1905 when the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan came into being. Go among those Blackfeet today and they will tell you of their thoughts at seeing their first white men—so lately did "civilization" touch their lives.

Long Lance's first remembrance is of an intertribal battle which took place in northern Montana—perhaps on the very spot where today some automobile tourist is camping! And Chief Buffalo Child Long Lance is scarcely thirty years of age. Like Standing Bear he received a Spartan training and learned "to ride, to shoot and speak the truth," and reading in their books of the qualities which this training developed in the Indian boys makes one wonder if perhaps the modern "civilized" American might not learn some profitable lessons in child-training from these "barbarians."

Although of different tribes—and tribes which were ancient and hereditary enemies—there is a striking similarity between the narratives of this Sioux and this Blackfoot. Both bring out very forcibly the qualities of honesty, generosity, true reverence and simple kindliness of the primitive Indian character before it was influenced by the white man's ways. A typical incident is given in Long Lance's book in telling of a buffalo hunt. It was the Indian man's job to provide the meat for the family by killing the buffalo and the Indian woman's job to follow the hunt and skin and dress the dead animals. Long Lance writes:

Each wife knew which animals had been brought down by her husband by the arrow which had been left in it. For every Indian had his arrow painted a certain way, so that anything he killed with it could easily be identified. If he shot a buffalo with a buffet he would circle back and hurl one of his arrows in its body, so his wife would know it was his.

The young son of our late medicine man, White Dog, was sitting on his pony among us boys. He was carrying on his back a quiver full of his dead father's arrows, which his mother had given him to play with. One of the women came over to this lad and took out one of White Dog's arrows and walked out on the field and pulled one of her own husband's arrows out of a buffalo bull and stuck White Dog's arrow in the hole. She said nothing to anyone; but later we saw White Dog's widow squatting over the buffalo, skinning it and sobbing quietly over the bloody pelt.

Just as Standing Bear has written in his book some real "Indian history" from the point of view of the Sioux, so has Long Lance written the story of the relations between the white and red races from the point of view of his people, the Blackfeet. And there is no more thrilling and inspiring (if a person admires pure "grit" in a man, whether he be white or red) story anywhere than his account of the epic of the Indian outlaw, Almighty Voice. Almighty Voice was the son of Sounding Sky and Spotted Calf, who were Long Lance's foster parents, wherefore he knows whereof he writes in telling that warrior's story.

Almighty Voice became an outlaw through an unfortunate chain of circumstances. By mistake he had killed a steer belonging to the government of the Northwest Territories and he was arrested by the mounted police and lodged in jail. One of the police jokingly told him they were "going to hang him for killing that steer," little realizing the terrible effect which this joke would have on the untutored Indian. But Almighty Voice escaped from jail and then began what was perhaps the most famous man-hunt in the history of that famous organization, noted for the fact that it "always gets its man." It is true that the mounted police finally did get Almighty Voice but at a terrible cost.

The hunt for him lasted two years. Finally they cornered him, but it was not until artillery was brought into action and the place in which Almighty Voice and two companions were entrenched thoroughly shelled that he was finally conquered. And when he was conquered, he was no longer able to harm his attackers. For Almighty Voice had died fighting.

Butter Stored for Winter

The Department of Agriculture says that for butter, to be stored for winter use, pasteurized sweet cream should be used, churned at a low temperature and the butter washed so that it will be firm and waxy. Rolls or prints of butter should be wrapped in parchment butter paper, placed in a stone crock, and covered with strong brine. Butter should be stored in as cool a place as is available and in a place free from odors likely to be absorbed by the butter.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Constipation Gone. Has Roses in Her Cheeks Now

"About seven years ago, I was dying slowly of constipation. My system was full of poison, which not only dulled my senses, but my complexion was muddy, eyes blurred, my stomach was ruined, and I was continually catching cold. I did not have any life or energy.

"After reading one of your ads, I bought several bottles of Milks Emulsion, and began improving at once. Improvement was so marked that everyone noticed it, and spoke of how it cleared my skin, made my eyes much brighter, and put roses in my cheeks. In fact, I was an entirely different person. I took altogether 15 large bottles of Milks Emulsion, and looked wonderful and felt the same way. It absolutely made me over. It adds more to your looks than anything I have ever heard of. After I had taken the first 8 bottles, people began to notice the improvement in my skin and my eyes being brighter.

"Every woman should know of it. I have never had a cold since I took Milks Emulsion, no stomach trouble or constipation. I think it is a God-send to humanity.

"A nephew of mine was almost dead of stomach trouble. I started him on Milks Emulsion and while he has only taken 4 bottles, he can eat nearly anything, and is beginning to feel fine.

Has World's Softest Job

The world's softest job is the one held by Sergins Ughet, a Russian in Washington who once represented the Kerensky regime, according to a writer in Capper's Weekly. "We refused the new Russian government recognition and during all these 10 years Ughet has been in charge of the Russian embassy at Washington living off the fat of the land, responsible to no one. He has had charge of business of former Russian governments involving the collection of assets which exceeded liabilities by many millions. Only the other day he received a check from an American railroad for $984,104 in settlement of a Russian claim. And he doesn't have to render an account to anyone."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Many Nations Sign Kellogg Treaty Renouncing War as a National Policy.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WAR—selfish and wilful war—is now outlawed. Which is to say that the representatives of fifteen of the leading nations of the world gathered in Paris and signed the Kellogg treaty by which they agree to renounce war as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

Neither Secretary of State Kellogg nor any other of the signers pretends that the pact is a panacea for the ills of the World war nor that the ceremony in the Quai d'Orsay means that there will be no more wars. But as Lord Cushendun, British acting foreign secretary, said, it is the most important step yet made in the long road to realizing eventual world-wide peace.

"The world has not been remade by the signing of the pact," said the British plenipotentiary. "Wars may still occur and we must not be too terribly disappointed if some minor war breaks out in the next few years."

He warned Europeans not to be optimistic that treaties make any change in America's traditional aloofness from European affairs. "There is no implication or any indication of America's part to concern herself with European affairs," he said.

Before it is binding on the United States the pact must be ratified by the senate, and it is certain that there will be a fight on that action next winter, for a good many people, including some senators, profess to believe the treaty will lead us into foreign entanglements and toward membership in the League of Nations. If our senate does act favorably, the other nations signatory will ratify the pact within one year.

The fifteen original signers of the treaty, led by Germany because it came first in the French alphabetical list, are: Germany, United States of America, Belgium, France, Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Irish Free State, India, Italy, Japan, Poland and Czechoslovakia. The treaty remains open for the adherence of all other powers, and telegrams and cablegrams of adherence began to come in before the ink was dry. Among the first nations to express the wish to sign were Denmark, Norway, Bulgaria, Cuba, Rumania, Yugo-Slavia and Peru. And Yugo-Slavia was first to sign. An especial invitation to join the other signatories was extended to Soviet Russia by M. Herbette, the French ambassador to Moscow.

Here are the two chief articles in the treaty:

"The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

"The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means."

A group of feminists, led by Doris Stevens of America, tried to "crash the gates" at the assemblage of eminent diplomats to obtain recognition for their demand for equal rights for women. They created so much disturbance that Miss Stevens and others were taken into custody by the police.

ASSERTING that any attempt to supervise the production of armaments was calculated merely to mislead the public, Soviet Russia has refused to collaborate with the League of Nations in its present efforts to control the manufacture of arms. Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet vice commissar for foreign affairs, in telegraphing this decision to Sir Eric Drummond, secretary of the League, pointed out his government's contention that the League has done nothing toward the solution of the problem of real disarmament. He insisted that urgent steps should be taken to obtain definite results and avoid the risk of future wars.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI, whose inspired press poked all kinds of fun at the Kellogg treaty, and continues to do so, has submitted to Spain a new treaty with Italy that is looked upon in Europe as his reply to the Anglo-French naval agreement. It is said that Spain is highly flattered by the Duce's attentions, fully realizing that it was Spain's neutrality in the last war which enabled France to concentrate on the east. The sole obstacle appears to be the Spanish king's British sympathies, and it is considered that the deciding voice may be that from the Vatican, to which Fascist diplomats are now said to be turning their warmest attentions.

RUSSIA is striving earnestly to attract foreign capital to that country, and the congress of the Communist internationale, in session at Moscow, has revised a new method to do this, embodied in a resolution which instructs foreign Communist parties energetically to oppose further investments of capital in colonial or half-colonial countries. The resolution classes China, India, Egypt and South Africa as colonial countries. Latin American is classed as half colonial and the order instructs agitators to hinder by all means possible the entrance of capital to such countries. Through arranging strikes, uprisings, and sabotage, the Communists can make these countries appear a poor place to risk money, as compared with Bolshevik Russia.

AMERICAN marines continued their successful attacks on rebel bands in Nicaragua by routing a group commanded by Miguel Ortiz in Neuva Segovia. Amnesty has been granted to Col. Guadalupe Rivera, one of Augustino Sandino's supply chiefs and foragers, who surrendered to the marines at Jingotega. His surrender is believed to have been caused by recent rebel defeats along the Coco river and the capture of his brother by a marine patrol.

BY PROCLAMATION of Gov. Harvey Parnell, last Thursday was a holiday in Arkansas in honor of the state's favorite son, Senator Joe T. Robinson, who on that day was formally notified that he is the Democratic party's nominee for vice president. The governor also called out several units of the National Guard which took part in the parade in Hot Springs, scene of the ceremony, and helped to maintain order. Something like 40,000 persons flocked to Hot Springs, many of them in automobiles, and the traffic problem was serious for there is only one through street in the city. Senator Robinson received the notification standing on the veranda of the Arlington hotel. In front of him were seated 24,000 persons, and other thousands stood in "Bathhouse row" or on roof tops and in windows. For the broadcasting of the ceremony the local radio station's power was increased ten-fold and new lofty towers were erected to prevent interference from the surrounding mountains. Altogether it was a great day for Senator Joe and Arkansas.

OF THE personal defections from one party to the other, the most significant of the week, because of its possible consequences, was that of Senator John J. Blaine of Wisconsin. He is listed in the congressional directory as a Republican, is a La Follette follower and was governor of Wisconsin before being elected to the senate. His predilection for Al Smith was more than suspected, and in a speech at Burlington he said: "I have no doubt that my friends and supporters are going to vote for Governor Smith for President. These are times when partisanship must not blind us. We must condemn Republican silence on the scandal of the Harding administration as an accessory after the fact." Blaine also denounced the methods of the federal prohibition department which he said was honeycombed with crime and bribery. He assailed "snoopers and spies who shoot down innocent men with dum-dum bullets."

The applause that greeted the senator's speech indicated that the La Follettetes of Wisconsin will follow him into the Smith camp.

Democratic Chairman Raskob, during a visit to the Middle West, said the budget of the national committee calls for a fund of $4,000,000. He said the party would spend $500,000 in ten corn belt states and $600,000 in radio campaigning.

HERBERT HOOVER opened his personal headquarters in a house on Massachusetts avenue, Washington, and from now on this will be the base of the Republican Presidential campaign. There the candidate is receiving political workers from all parts of the country and deciding questions of policy. It was stated that he was paying especial attention to New York state and would soon go there to make some speeches. Whether or not he would discuss prohibition was not decided. National Chairman Work, Secretary Fort, and Earl S. Kinsley of Vermont went to Maine for a conference with Republican leaders of that state. The Maine state election comes September 10 and as it is always taken as an indication of relative party strength the Republicans are anxious to poll a heavy vote.

Prohibition party leaders decided that their national ticket should be withdrawn and members of the party advised to vote for Hoover, not as a partisan but as a firm supporter of the Eighteenth amendment.

DOWN in Texas the run-off Democratic primary was won by Congressman Tom Connally by a majority of more than 50,000 over Senator Mayfield. Nomination being equivalent to election, Connally will replace Mayfield in the senate at the expiration of his term.

Incomplete returns showed that Senator Tom Johnson had been renominated by the Republicans of California. Idaho Republicans renominated Senator Frank Gooding.

DIRECTOR OF THE BUDGET LORD issued a report that was not at all pleasing to President Coolidge, since it estimated that there would be a treasury deficit of $94,279,346 for the current fiscal year. It is the first time since the war the government's estimators definitely have forecast a deficit in their annual reports. They base their contention on an increase in prospective government expenditures, due to increased activities of bureaus during the fiscal year 1929 and to a prospective decrease in revenue. This switch in estimates has converted the estimated surplus of $252,540,283, figured upon when the 1929 budget first was fixed, into the deficit.

Mr. Coolidge let it be known that he will take stringent measures to reduce government expenditures during the remainder of his administration. When he returns to Washington about the middle of September he will consult members and department heads on means of cutting expenditures even below what was allotted them in the budget.

Walter Maddock, a real "dirt farmer."

DIFFERENCES between Western railroads and employees organized in the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors are expected to be reconciled by an agreement announced by the United States board of mediation which has been discussing the issue with both groups since July 22. The proposed settlement, details of which cannot yet be made public, must be ratified by the Association of General Committees on behalf of the railway employees before it goes into effect.

Eskimos "Mine" Ivory Left by Ancestors

Ancient fossil ivory valued at $50,000 came South on the first boat from Nome this season. The ivory on board represented an unintentional bequest from the long deceased Eskimo to the present generation. The natives from time immemorial feasted on walrus and the tusks, having no value, were tossed aside.

These piles accumulated, especially on the St. Lawrence and the Pribilof Islands, during the centuries.

Then white men came north with trading schooners and bought freshly killed walrus ivory. The Eskimos, remembering the wasteful habits of their ancestors, promptly began sinking mines on the sites of ancient camps. Each summer they dig out thousands of dollars' worth of fossil ivory, valuable because of its deep coloring and extreme hardness.

I popped out from the door and picking up a hide slid it into place, remaining until I had three skins in place. I would have persisted longer had she not run out to upbraid me, scolding like a vixen. Then began the phase of warfare I had been dreading, the sending of fire-arrows. None hit the roof; and while they were preparing more fire I rushed forth and finished one side of the roof.

The girl scolded me as if I had been a wayward child. Her gravity and seriousness became her prettily. The little lecture was interrupted by another flight of burning arrows. This time they had the range and we heard two strike on the roof. Before I knew what she was doing she had stepped out to observe how her scheme was working. I followed and picked her up and carried her inside.

"Anyway, mister, there ain't any arrers on the roof," she told me as I stood her on her feet. "Points couldn't git any hold on them skins. Just slithered off."

Between volleys was the golden time for work. I begged her to keep under cover and went to finish patching the south side. This time the foe was awaiting my appearance and delivered a crashing volley the moment I cleared the door. Some of the lead whistled unwholesomely close. A voice shouted loudly and ten Indians, selected for their fleetness of foot, came racing across the opening. It was grimly significant that they were armed with axes only. They were determined to bring the fight to close quarters. I entered the cabin as the girl began firing from the rear loophole.

"Here they come from all directions! They mean it this time!" she cried.

The attack was persisted in until one brave was hacking the door with his ax. It is a peculiar fact that with them at such close quarters none of their number was mortally wounded. Doubtless we were nervous and a bit confused by the attack being pressed on three sides while some of them actually climbed on to the roof and dislodged some of the skins. I have no clear recollection of details. I know we darted from side to side and discharged the two rifles and the muskets. The room was thick with smoke and I recall my fear lest those on the roof should make an opening and jump down upon us.

It was not until they began to fall back that I discovered the girl had been more calm than I, for she had refused to discharge her pistol. I peered from a loophole and saw them running for the woods and not a weapon in the cabin was loaded. One of their number had been hit in the foot and was limping along with two men helping him. Probably he had been hit while climbing onto the roof, his foot coming in range with one of the loopholes as a musket was discharged.

I loaded rapidly to get one of the three men making off together, but the moment I opened the door a warning was shouted from the leader in the woods and the wounded man was dropped in a little hollow. His assistants raced off in different directions. The hollow containing the wounded man was too slight effectually to protect him, and opening the door sufficiently to accommodate my rifle-barrel I would have stirred him up had not the girl thrust her hand over the flint and at the same time pulled me backward. I opened my mouth to rebuke her, but she clapped a hand over my mouth and pointed toward the room. Then pulling my ear down to her lips she whispered:

"They didn't all quit the roof, mister. I heard a little noise up there."

I nodded and gently closed the door and barred it and cocked my ear. She nudged me as the man on the roof made a faint scraping sound. This was a danger I had never counted upon. To get at the fellow necessitated my leaving the cabin. We began talking to allay any suspicions on his part, and the girl said:

"He's moving along to git directly over the door. We must fool him."

Bidding her to move about at the rear of the cabin and to keep on talking, I stepped to the door and in the notches cut in the logs, so that one might climb to a crevice under the eaves and scrutinize the opening before opening the door, gently placed my feet and pulled myself up until my eyes were at the crevice. My head was close to the roof and as the girl chattered along I heard the telltale sound of the savage working his way down to the eaves and directly over the door.

As I was about to descend, I was further rewarded, for a moccasined foot dropped down across my narrow range of vision. The Indian was sitting with one foot hanging down from the eaves and waiting for me to leave the cabin, when he would drop down upon me. The roof was formed of sapling-size poles covered with large sections of thick bark, which in turn was held in place by poles running lengthwise at regular intervals. I drew my knife and gently inserted it between two of the poles, then desisted, as at the most I would only prick the fellow and put him on his guard.

Regaining the floor I moved a rough table, which Frazier used for displaying his trade-goods, close to the chimney, and gave the girl an iron prod and directed her to stand on the table and pretend to be making an opening through the roof. She hesitated and asked:

"You're going out?"

"He'll be watching the chimney."

"There may be two of 'em."

I shook my head and held up a finger and directed her to keep talking in a loud voice as she assailed the roof. Then taking the short rifle and loading it I tiptoed to the door and noiselessly removed the bar and waited.

The girl began jabbing the iron rod between two of the poles and calling down to me to mount the table and help her. She made much noise and yet I believed I caught a faint sound from over the door. Lifting the door so it would not sag and scrape the floor, I worked it open wide enough for me to pass out.

"The rod's through the roof!" cried the girl.

At the same time a shout rose from the forest. I darted through the narrow opening and whirled about and raised the rifle. One savage was there and had been on the point of crawling to the ridge-pole to investigate the several inches of iron rod showing through the bark when the yell from the woods had warned him to be on his guard. He must have connected the outcry of his friends with the sudden appearance of the rod, for he was on all fours and staring over his shoulder to where his friends were in hiding.

When he saw me the rifle was at my shoulder. He made a convulsive effort to hurl his ax and roll off the roof, but he was dead before he could throw it.

From the Indians' point of view there should have been but one thing for them to do—return at once with their guns and endeavor to shoot us through the loopholes. Luckily for us, they were not inclined to risk any more of their men. I could hear their leader shouting to them, but if he were exhorting them to charge, they had no heart for it. They renewed the attack with fire-arrows. With loose hides I patched the bare spots as far as I could reach while the girl looped skins together to go over the ridge-pole. I had ignored their musket fire but when a small bullet whined close to my head I knew some Indian or Frenchman had arrived on the scene with a rifle, and I lost no time in taking cover.

"That sounds like cannon," said the girl as I closed and made fast the door.

"It was a rifle. We must be more careful."

"I know a rifle when I hear it. That's what I mean, mister."

I listened and heard it. It was thunder beyond any doubt. I opened the door a crack and scanned the heavens. There was no storm in sight.

"It's up the Monongahela, I told her. "It's so far off I fear we won't get even the skirt of it."

We needed much of it; not only to drench the cabin but to cool the air inside. With the door closed and the stout shutter in place over the one small opening that served as a window it was blood-hot in the cabin. The place was so insufferable from smoke and powder fumes and the heat that I risked a chance shot from the forest by removing the shutter and opening the door. The thunder rolled across the sky again and the girl sighed:

"Let's wish it's a smart one and will come this way."

[illegible]

"Sit here, just inside the door, while I stand watch. I've never had a chance to wait on such a brave little woman before."

"Boo! That's fooling," she scoffed and eyeing me in surprise. "You've been in big settlements. You've seen women, mebbe, who never see a Injun. All they have to do is be brave. If I had a pair of shoes like what some of them settlement women most likely wear, I'd die fighting to keep 'em."

"If we get out of this, you shall have the gayest pair of shoes to be found in Alexandria," I promised, and I thought of Josephine and her love of luxury and wondered how she would have endured the ordeal of being cornered in a trader's cabin at the mouth of Turtle creek.

"I ain't used to have folks give me things," she gravely told me. "We'll have to think about that." Then shyly: "Is that where you want me to go? To Alexandria, a real big settlement?"

In truth, I had given no thought as to just where she should go did we escape. Yet how could I give her a pair of shoes in Alexandria if she were not there to receive them?

"If I go back there, yes. I have no home there now. Like yourself, I am homeless."

This pleased her and she snuggled against my knee and murmured:

"I'm thinking it's mighty good that you're like that—no home. You can build a home anywhere. All you need is an ax and some trees. If you'd had a home, you'd never have come poking round Great cove. Lor's love! What would have happened to me if you hadn't come along? At Will's creek, too. And in that other cabin, when I run away. And now here."

"You have nothing to thank me for," I sadly told her. "At all those places you name, you have had trouble because I did go to the cove. Now we'll close the door while I take a look at the woods from the back of the cabin. The Indians are too quiet to suit me."

I bent down to the loophole and immediately called to her to make sure the bar was firmly in place.

"Another fight," she sighed. "And we was having such a talk!"

I heard her reloading her rifle but did not remove my eye from the hole. Something was slowly approaching the cabin. For a moment I could not make it out, and then glimpsed the top of a feather showing above the strange object. Simultaneously with my discovery, the Indians began firing their guns at the front of the cabin and yelling. I paid no heed to the gunfire and the shouting for the real menace was where the feather bobbed and slowly advanced.

She elbowed me aside and after a glance informed me:

"They've fastened some of the skins together and are holding them in front of them. Wonder if it'll stop a bullet."

I fired my rifle. The moving barricade stopped, and then came on again. The savage, or savages, had difficulty in keeping it in place and their approach was very slow. Exulting cries resounded from the woods as the hidden watchers witnessed how ineffective had been my bullet.

It seemed to be a very long time that I waited, and finally noted how dark the interior of the cabin was growing. Had I not known the position of the sun, I would have said it was later than the twilight hour.

"I can't hardly see you, mister," said the girl uneasily. "You look all humped over like a bear."

Found Pleasure Only in Business Triumph

The American business man, taking his vacation abroad, is one of the most depressing sights of the Riviera, according to Lloyd Morris, writing in Harper's.

"I recall an American whom I met on the terrace of a restaurant in the hills back of Nice," he says. "His wife had inveigled him into taking a winter holiday; it was so much more smart, she said, than a summer vacation. They had come to the Riviera for the winter. I inquired whether he was enjoying it. 'Enjoying it? H—l, no!' He spat expressively. 'But I'll tell you,' he added, his eyes lighting up, 'back home my factory has just sold a thousand beds. New hotel in Cleveland. Had a wire today.' He stared off into the distance. He didn't see the vineyards in the valley below or the blue Mediterranean, framed by hills. And when he added wistfully, 'I wish I was there now,' I knew what he saw—a thousand beds, in crates stamped with his name, on the shipping platform of his busy factory."

Of the Conifer Family

The torrey pines occur in restricted localities in Florida, California, Japan and China. They are a genus of conifer, belonging to the taxineae or yew tribe. The California species, known as Californian nutmeg, is the largest, reaching a height of 70 feet and occasionally even 100 feet.

Bristol Old Port

Bristol is one of the oldest ports in England. Its history is generally believed to go back 2,000 years, when it was the terminal place of barter for the Phoenician traders. It was later used by the Roman navigators.

VELVET COSTUME FOR THE STREET; MODISH COATS LAVISHLY FURRED

[illegible]

GOWNED FOR THE STREET

...ion's edict for women's wraps both for daytime and evening wear.

Shawl collars, deep cuffs and novelty border effects are stressed. Another important feature is color contrast between fur and fabric.

A red broadcloth that has collar and cuffs of gray kimmer, a green-toned cloth collared and cuffed with bright badger, black coats with platinum wolf collars and cuffs, countless gay woolens both patterned and plain with showy long-haired fur trimmings confirm the vogue for contrasts between fur and fabric.

While there is considerable talk as to a changing silhouette which suggests a slightly fitted waistline with a tendency toward a flaring hemline, yet the fact remains that straight lines still hold their own and that the wrap-to-one-side effect at the front fastening prevails.

To be sure, these slim lines are broken by irregular fur borders, some of which are quite fantastic, but withal the cloth itself is straight-lined. There is, however, any amount of fancy seaming and novel fabric manipulation which bespeaks intricate tailoring.

Black fabrics, mostly broadcloth or suedelike weaves contest, this season, the supremacy of novelty cloths both solid and patterned. These are smart...

...printed velveteen indicates its mission as distinctively as does an afternoon costume of sheer velvet assert its intention, or a luxurious transparent velvet declares its identity as an evening mode.

For street wear a costume of plain with print velvet is autumn's choice supreme. The one in the picture is typical of the velvet modes which will be crowding avenue and boulevard during the coming months. This smart costume is equally as fetching and as fashionable carried out in tones of brown high-lighted with ruddy orange or in shades of the exceedingly popular blues. Have you noticed in the picture that the bag this smartly frocked young woman carried is of the same printed velvet as that of which the blouse of her ensemble is made? It's the latest!

COATS APPROPRIATELY FURRED

Velvets for daytime wear give equal prominence to plain or print types. Most of the short jackets are free hanging and they are lined with the material, usually satin or georgette which makes the blouse. Another idea is to line the velvet coat with georgette of identical shade.

Much favor is expressed for two-piece types of plain sheer black velvet with blouses of nude-colored satin, this same lining the coat.

Brown printed velvet in small patternings for the suit is one of the stunning new things for fall. With blouses of tea-rose pink satin, they are about as handsome a number as the advance style program carries.

...est when trimmed with a contrasting fur, after the manner of the model to the left in the picture. A pointed panel of self cloth is set in the center back. A raccoon shawl collar and deep matching cuffs answer to the call for contrast between fur and fabric.

That much exploited color, grackle, which is really a duck blue, is the chosen shade for the other coat, which also is broadcloth. Its light badger trimming is very flattering.

In cloakings there is a very wide choice, smooth broadcloths being smart for the dresser types, with very loose woven and muchly patterned soft woolens for sports, travel and general utility wear.

Real Tolerance

Tolerance means reverence for all the possibilities of Truth; it means acknowledgment that she dwells in diverse mansions, and wears vesture of many colors, and spreads in strange tongues; it means frank respect for freedom of indwelling conscience against mechanic forms, official conventions, social force; it means the charity that is greater than even faith and hope.—Lord Morley.

STOP THAT ITCHING

Use Blue Star Soap, then apply Blue Star Remedy for Eczema, itch, tetter, ringworm, poison oak, dandruff, children's sores, cracked hands, sore feet and most forms of itching skin diseases. It kills germs, stops itching, usually restoring the skin to health. Soap, 25c; Blue Star Remedy, $1.00. Ask your druggist.—Adv.

Basket as Elevator

High seas prevented the use of the companion ladder when passengers wished to board the liner "Llandovery" at Port Elizabeth, South Africa, recently, so a large basket was lowered from a derrick and the travelers swung to the deck without difficulty. The container was fashioned like an elevator car.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois for free trial bottle.

SINGING CONVENTION IS ENJOYABLE EVENT

The Singing Convention held here last Saturday night and Sunday was a great success and enjoyed by a large attendance.

President L. H. Earthman of the Donley County Convention presided, the Saturday evening meeting being held in the First Christian church. The Sunday meetings were held in the school auditorium, and the dinner was served at the tabernacle.

J. Les Hawkins was in charge of the "eats" department, and did his job well. The business men and the Hedley women co-operated in furnishing good things to eat, of which there was plenty and to spare.

The occasion was a pleasant one in all particulars, and the company and their good singing were a joy to all of us.

NEW BUILDINGS HELP LOOKS OF OUR TOWN

The appearance of the business district near the intersection of Main street and the Highway is so much improved that a person who had been out of town the past few weeks would hardly recognize the place. Brick work on the five new and handsome buildings there is completed and carpenters, plasterers, painters, electricians and plumbers are having their innings. The various tenants will likely move in not later than Oct. 15. When this is done, and the debris removed, that will be the "swell" part of town.

The First State Bank, to keep up with the new neighbors, is undergoing a fresh paint treatment.

The B. M. A. church and the several new residences heretofore mentioned are completed or practically so.

Hedley is already the best little town in the country in many respects. The way it's going now it will soon be the best in all respects.
