Worley is the daughter of Tabitha and Coy Worley.

Worley has been a standout leader in the Coahoma FFA program. She is the Coahoma FFA Chapter President, El Rancho District FFA President, and Area 2 FFA Vice President. She was a FFA state qualifier for two years and a FFA area qualifier for four.

Worley has shown leadership skills in other activities. She is the drum major for the CHS band. She has served as the president of the National Honor Society. She was a cheerleader and was named an All-American Cheerleader for three years. She has also participated in Academic UIL and One-Act Play.

Worley plans to attend Texas A&M University to pursue a degree in animal science and then continue on to receive a doctorate in veterinary medicine. After college graduation, she plans to become a veterinarian specializing in large animals.

The Coahoma High School graduation ceremony for the Class of 2019 was held at the Dorothy Garrett Coliseum.

Iconic mustangs sculpture site near Dallas to get makeover

By STEVE BROWN
The Dallas Morning News

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Just look at the photos on Google or Instagram: The most recognized landmark in Irving is the Towers at Williams Square.

The Dallas Morning News reports that's the Las Colinas high-rise complex with the sculpture of wild mustangs out front.

Any time of the day or night, you can find visitors taking Facebook photos or selfies on the stone plaza that surrounds the horses.

Soon they'll be romping through a park, not a field of granite, at the site about 10 miles northwest of downtown Dallas.

"When the Green Bay Packers were staying at the hotel over there, they asked if they could put cheesehead hats on all the horses — we said no," said Bill Brokaw, senior vice president with Dallas-based Hillwood, which is a partner in the project and leases and manages the four-building office development.

Built as the centerpiece for Las Colinas, the 1.4 million-square-foot high-rise complex sold for $330 million in 2015 to Apollo Global Real Estate of New York and Vanderbilt Partners of Chicago. Since then, the owners have been working to upgrade the 34-year-old Irving project and keep it competitive for business tenants.

While one phase of the mega building makeover is wrapping up, a more visible renovation of the Irving project is still ahead, including a redo of the central plaza.

"We are redefining this building as the iconic piece of Las Colinas," Brokaw said.

That's what Las Colinas founder Ben Carpenter was aiming for when he built Williams Square in the 1980s. He even named it after his brother-in-law.

At 26 stories, the central tower at Williams Square was the tallest building outside downtown Dallas when it opened.

Carpenter added two flanking 14-story buildings and a five-story bank to create an instant town center.

Putting a 2-acre plaza and larger-than-life mustang sculpture at the heart of Williams Square sealed the deal to create a one-of-a-kind local attraction.

Soon they'll be romping through a park, not a field of granite, at the site about 10 miles northwest of downtown Dallas.

The office buildings have maintained their stature through the years and are currently about 98 percent occupied.

"We've just finished a huge new tenant lounge," Brokaw said. "It's a 5,000-square-foot space that people now want to see in every building they look at."

"We've reconfigured and redone our fitness center to more than 8,000 square feet," he said. "We've got all the amenities anybody needs in the complex."

Bigger changes are coming at the front door.

The city of Irving is working with Williams Square's owners on a complete revamp of the mustang plaza that will make it more like a park than a hot granite landing field. The redo will add trees, plantings and lounging spaces around the beloved mustang fountain.

"The city recognizes the potential here," said Hillwood executive vice president Ken Reese. "It will increase the retail opportunities around the plaza and mesh well with the new Water Street development across the street.
