El Paso horticulturist Dr. Sammy Helmers examines crops in Bill Holiman's garden near the Gardendale community west of Midland. Holiman's fare for the Permian Basin Farmers Market includes blackberries, tomatoes, beets, sweet corn, Irish potatoes, black-eyed peas, cucumbers, cantaloupes and watermelons. Local farmers prepare to share their fruits

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

GARDENDALE — The farmers were leisurely sauntering through Bill Holiman's vegetable-fruit-berry garden, which, in many cases, was producing the sort of fruit they wished their gardens were producing.

By nature's quirks and flukes and the farmer's hoe, some gardens do better than others.

"Anybody had any major problems with cantaloupes?" asked Dr. Sammy Helmers, a Texas Agricultural Extension Service horticulturist who was appraising Holiman's farm near the Midland-Ector County-line and just on the outskirts of the Gardendale community.

At least one farmer did.

"Just ice balls," shouted Betty Hoelscher who, joined by her husband Jerome Hoelscher, farms over at Midkiff southeast of Midland.

Those "ice balls," more commonly called "hail," about two weeks ago plummeted down on the Hoelscher farm and "took the cantaloupes and everything," Mrs. Hoelscher said. "I had watermelons this big (football-size). I had a melon crop that wouldn't quit" — until the hail came.

It was not good.

"That hailstorm wasn't two miles wide," Mrs. Hoelscher said. "I am thankful it didn't get everybody."

In large measure, Mrs. Hoelscher was put out of the marketing end of the produce business for awhile.

A week after hail hit her crop, Bill Tarlton, who farms east of Midland, got a setback. Hail damaged his vegetable garden.

"I am replanting," Tarlton said. "I will be back in the market. I will be a little late."

But he will be there.

Aside from the melons, which the hailstones "dented in" as if they were pounding by baseball bats, Mrs. Hoelscher's 2,000 tomatoes plants were torn by the hail. Ripe and ripening tomatoes were knocked from the vines. And if not fallen, they were too damaged to sell at the market. Many of the tomato plants were four feet high and growing.

"So, I am back to praying for blossoms," Mrs. Hoelscher said.

Her garden fare included and includes the melons and tomatoes, corn, squash, black-eyed peas, green beans and okra.

And next week, when the Permian Basin Farmers Market opens in Midland and Odessa, Jerome and Betty Hoelscher will be bearing good news in the wake of the hailstorm: Fredericksburg peaches. Many Texans favor and savor them just like many people are convinced that, among cantaloupes, there is none better than the Pecos cantaloupes.

Hoelscher, who is president of the Permian Basin Farmers Market, disagrees. Some Midland-grown melons are "better" than the Pecos fruit, he said.

Industry developing an oil spill program

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The petroleum industry announced a new national program Tuesday to prevent and clean up oil spills like the 11 million gallons of crude oil that befouled Alaska's coastline in March from the crippled tanker Exxon Valdez.

The combined oil spill and prevention plan would cost $250 million in its first five years.

Allen E. Murray, Mobil Corp.'s president and also the chairman of an oil spill task force, said the industry will absorb the cost as "the cost of doing business."

"If we don't do it, the government will," said Richard M. Morrow, chairman of the American Petroleum Institute and Amoco Corp.'s chief operating officer. "The industry will be funding it one way or another."

Acknowledging that some of that cost will be passed on to consumers, Murray estimated they will pay no more than an additional 1/20th of a cent per gallon of gasoline.

Murray said the task force, set up by the American Petroleum Institute on April 7 after the Exxon Valdez spill, believes its recommendations are "consistent" with the direction taken by the Bush administration and congressional committees focusing on the oil spill issue.

The task force report provides the basis for a "meaningful dialogue for the government" in developing a public-private partnership on oil spill prevention and cleanup, Murray said.

Midlander making drug abuse an issue

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midlander Clayton W. Williams Jr., who announced his Texas gubernatorial candidacy today, is basing his early campaign on a call to win the battle against drug abuse.

The first announced candidate on the Republican side of the ticket, Williams, 57, told about 300 friends and supporters in Austin that the state's drug problem overshadows all other priorities.

He presented a four-point plan to combat drug abuse, a problem that has reached into his own familiy, he said, referring to his 19-year-old son, Clayton Wade.

The younger Williams is said to have kicked an abuse habit three years ago at the STRAIGHT Family Rehabilitation Center in Irving, where Williams today plans to take a second leg of his announcement campaign swing.

The candidate's plans to combat drug abuse include increasing support for law enforcement, building more prisons and instituting the death penalty for drug dealers who kill lawmen or children.

In addition, "we must get tougher on the user," he said.

Other aspects of Williams' platform, which he plans to reveal in fuller detail later, include greater economic development and more jobs, greater efficiency in government and improving rural health care.

All his goals he can accomplish without new taxes, he claimed, "by running the state more like a business" and "establishing our priorities with the money available."

"If it wasn't for efficiency, my company would have failed," said Williams. "I cut to the core and did what we had to do to survive."

He stated a specific opposition to a state income tax.

On a more general footing, Williams promised to be a governor "who is committed to restoring family values and the old-fashioned Texas work ethic."

While Williams acknowledged no prior elected governmental service, he said he started 26 Texas companies over the last 32 years in areas that are "bedrock" industries.

"And we had some fun doing it," said Williams, who also is noted for his antics as a Texas A&M Aggie and yearly attendee of Texas Railroad Commission State of the Industry hearings.

Three executed; China sentences more to death

BEIJING (AP) — Shanghai authorities today publicly executed three men convicted of setting a train on fire during pro-democracy protests, and more people were sentenced to die in another city for their roles in the protests.

The executions were the first announced since the June 3-4 military crackdown that crushed the student-led movement. The three died one day after Shanghai's highest court rejected their appeals and just two weeks after their alleged crimes were committed.

The men were shot to death in front of a crowd, said a spokesman at the Shanghai Foreign Affairs office. He said he did not know other details and refused to give his name.

Death sentences in China usually are carried out by a bullet to the back of the head. There is no record of a death sentence in Communist China being overturned on appeal, although they sometimes are commuted to life in prison.

The United States and other Western governments had appealed for clemency for the three, and for eight people in Beijing also given death sentences in connection with the protests.

But Shanghai radio, in announcing the court's rejection of the appeal, said, "There are no legal reasons for mitigating the punishment of Xu Guoming, Bian Hanwu and Yan Xuerong."

Xu and Yan, who are workers, and Bian, who is unemployed, set fire to a train June 6 after it ran through a barricade set up by protesters and killed six people. The three were convicted Thursday.

In the northeastern city of Jinan, 45 people accused of taking part in protests were convicted in a mass trial before a crowd of about 10,000, Beijing radio reported.

The report said some of the 45 were sentenced to death. Others received death sentences with a two-year reprieve. At the end of two years, the sentences could be reduced to life in prison for good behavior.

Others were given life in prison or lesser terms according to the report, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp. It did not give a breakdown but said those given death were convicted of "seriously endangering public order."

Texas Republicans say Wright won't gain bipartisan support

■ Related story — 2B

DALLAS (AP) — Some Republicans say bipartisan support is highly unlikely should former House Speaker Jim Wright decide to run for the seat he pledged to give up by month's end.

Wright, who resigned his speakership under the cloud of an ethics investigation, announced Tuesday he might consider seeking re-election if he were subject to "an absolute genuine draft of a bipartisan nature."

But some GOP members said such a draft is improbable at best.

"I'd say, it's nonexistent," said Steve Hallern, Tarrant County Republican Party chairman. "There's nothing personal about this, but Congressman Wright has never worked for the Republican platform or to balance the budget."

Lawsuit on council election method dismissed

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

A lawsuit charging that the Midland City Council's makeup was unconstitutional has been dismissed at the request of the plaintiffs' counsel, an attorney said Tuesday.

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton signed the order June 16 at the request of an attorney representing local chapters of the League of United Latin American Citizens and the Black Advisory Council.

The dismissal came in response to the historic election May 6 of John Castro, a Hispanic, to an at-large seat on the City Council, plaintiff attorney William Garrett said Tuesday.

Castro was the first minority ever elected to an at-large seat on the City Council.

The suit, filed Feb. 23, 1989, sought to have the remaining two at-large seats on the six-member Council elected to single member district positions as the other four are.

The mayor's election to an at-large position was never questioned.

"After this last election in which Mr. Castro was elected, the evidence that we would have presented at trial would have been ambiguous," Garrett expalined.

"I don't think it clearly proved one case or the other. It didn't make any sense to spend more time and money on a case that was 51 percent one way and 50 percent the other."

Midland City Attorney David Reagan "always felt there were some problems with their second case.

"As a lawyer, I felt like the system we had was constitutional and fair," Reagan said Tuesday.

"As far as this particular suit is concerned, we agreed to the dismissal because it's not in the public's interest to litigate at this time."

The city incurred about $5,000 in legal expenses, the city attorney said. The plaintiffs paid nothing, said Edia Hernandez, District 5 LULAC director.

The June 16 dismissal reflected the city's stance that the law hadn't changed since Bunton ordered the City Council to disband its total at-large election system in December 1984, court records show.

Firms ordered to pay damages to Wagner & Brown

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A federal judge Tuesday ordered Dow Chemical Co. of Midland, Mich., and Dowell Schlumberger Inc. of Houston to pay a combined $18 million damage award to Midland-based Wagner & Brown.

The judgment written by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton came three weeks after a six-member jury concluded that Wagner & Brown suffered $38 in damages related to Dow and DSI's use of "blow-down" cement in its wells.

In the ruling, Bunton ordered DSI to pay $3 million in damages — the difference in market value found by the jury to be caused by the negligent acts of DSI. Likewise, the judge said Wagner & Brown is entitled to collect $15 million from Dow Chemical Co.

When reached by telephone this morning at his Houston office, defendants' attorney Blake Tartt said Dow and DSI probably will file a motion for a new federal court trial.

If refused, an appeal of the case to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, La. is likely.

"We don't believe that there were any damages to the wells serviced by DSI and we respectfully disagree with the calculations of Wagner & Brown's expert witnesses. They are purely speculative, and the judge, in his judgment, said we forcefully argued that point during the trial," Tartt said.

Wagner & Brown spokesman Grant Billingsley declined to say whether representatives of the company, owned by Jack E. Brown and Cyril Wagner, were pleased or disappointed by the judgment.

"We haven't had time to review the judge's ruling," Billingsley said Wednesday. "It would be unfair to comment until we've had a chance to give it a fair reading."

Earlier, attorney William White, whose Houston law firm of Susman, Godfrey & McGowan represented Wagner & Brown, termed the $38 million jury finding "fair" and "appropriate."

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the upper 60s and winds will be from the south at 10-20 mph and gusty.

Skies will continue to be partly cloudy on Thursday with the chance of thunderstorms increasing to 30 percent. The high will be in the middle 90s and winds will be mainly from the south at 10-20 mph and gusty.

Tuesday's high of 99 was 10 degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 109 set for that date in 1951. The overnight low of 67 was 14 degrees warmer than the record low of 53 set for this date in 1973.

STATE

A cold front moving southward across Nebraska and Colorado was expected to trigger thunderstorms in the Panhandle late today.

Elsewhere, thunderstorms are expected in Southeast Texas and along the upper coastal plains.

It will be partly cloudy tonight and Thursday over the Panhandle, South Plains and northwestern portions of North Texas and Southeast Texas with a chance of showers and thunderstorms in all those area. The rest of the state will have mostly cloudy skies and continued hot temperatures through Thursday.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 70s, ranging from the low 60s in the Panhandle to the 80s along the coast.

Highs Thursday will be mostly in the 90s, ranging from the upper 80s along the coast to near 110 in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 60s and 70s with a few readings around and slightly above 80 in South Texas. Extremes ranged from 66 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 82 at Corpus Christi.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 71 at Amarillo, 74 at Wichita Falls and Fort Worth, 76 at Waco, 73 at Austin, 75 at San Antonio, 77 at Houston and Brownsville, 75 at San angelo, 71 at Lubbock, 68 at Midland and 81 at El Paso.

NATION

Rain and thunderstorms were scattered through the East this morning after a day of storms that caused flooding in several states and contributed to at least two traffic deaths in the Atlanta area.

More than 2½ inches of rain fell in the Atlanta area Tuesday, causing minor street flooding. About 30 miles to the southwest, the Chattahoochee River was forecast to crest almost a foot above flood stage today.

Former Paulding County Commission Chairman Donald C. Watson was killed and his wife injured when a 70-foot-tall oak tree toppled onto their car as they were driving through the Kennesaw Mountain National Battlefield Park in Cobb County.

Elizabeth Farris was killed and her husband, former Fulton County Commissioner Milton Farris, was injured when their car hydroplaned into a moving van north of Atlanta, Fulton County police said.

Heavy rains also exacerbated flooding in eastern and central Alabama, where rainfall ranged from 2 inches to more than 5 inches on Tuesday. The Tallapoosa River was expected to crest 8 to 9 feet above flood stage at Milstead today.

Fifteen to 20 families were evacuated from trailer homes in low-lying areas of Tallapoosa County and floods destroyed half the county's cotton crop, authorities said.

Suspected triggerman held in Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Federal Judiciary Police arrested Tuesday a former national security agent and onetime movie actor suspected of being the triggerman in the 1984 murder of a leading newspaper columnist.

The Mexico City Attorney General's Office identified the suspect as Juan Rafael Mora Avila, 35, a member of a prominent family of politicians from the neighboring state of Puebla.

Jose Antonio Zorrilla Perez, director of the now-dissolved Federal Security Administration, was arrested June 13 in Mexico City for allegedly masterminding the murder and is now awaiting trial on charges of homicide.

Manuel Buendia, whose front-page column in the newspaper Excelsior exposed wrongdoing in high places, was shot dead May 30, 1984, at the entrance of a parking garage minutes after he had left his office in the Pink Zone.

The Attorney General's Office called Zorrilla, 47, the "intellectual author" of the crime.

It said it was presenting evidence to prove that Zorrilla ordered Buendia, his friend of 15 years, shot dead when he learned the columnist planned to expose his links to prominent drug traffickers.

In a news release Tuesday, the Attorney General's Office said Mora was booked 'on suspicion of being one of the material authors" in the slaying of Buendia. But a police source, who insisted on anonymity, said authorities have evidence indicating that Mora was the "triggerman."

The government news agency Notimex identified Mora as the grandson of former Puebla Gov. Maximino Avila Camacho, a onetime Secretary of Communications and Transportation.

Notimex said Mora was also a grandnephew of Manuel Avila Camacho, who was president of Mexico from 1940 to 1946.

A 1973 graduate from the Judiciary Police Technical School, Mora served in various police forces and law enforcement agencies until he joined the Federal Security Administration in 1982 as a member of an "elite" group of 20 special agents, the news release said.

Mora was also a motorcycle fan, had a pilot's license, was a member of a rock music group, and played bit parts as an actor in at least four horror and crime movies.

He is still a member ANDA, the National Actors' Association.

Zorrilla was director of the Federal Security Administration, which was similar to the FBI, from 1982 until the government dissolved it in 1985 for widespread corruption.

In a statement earlier Tuesday, the Attorney General's Office said it also had evidence that Zorrilla received millions of dollars every month in bribes from drug baron Rafael Caro Quintero to allow the smuggling of large quantities of cocaine from Colombia to the United States through Mexico.

Caro Quintero is now awaiting trial for the 1985 torture-slaying of U.S. Drug Enforcemement Administration agent Enrique Camarena Salazar and his Mexican pilot Miguel Zavala Avelar in Guadalajara.

The Attorney General's Office said Zorrilla also had links with Miguel Angel Felix Gallardo, the country's top drug trafficker, also arrested earlier this year.

Zorrilla, who was first on the scene of the Buendia slaying minutes after the crime was committed, conducted the first investigation into the Buendia case. He has also been indicted for obstructing justice and abuse of authority.

WRIGHT

Wright announced his resignation as Speaker of the House May 31 and said he will leave his congressional seat of 34 years by the end of June. Ardent supporters met with him over the weekend in Fort Worth and proposed that he seek re-election in a special ballot to fill his unexpired term.

"He may find some scattered Republicans here and there who would support him, but I don't think you'd find a single person in the activist or leadership group who would support him," Hallern said. "There is not a groundswell of opinion in his favor."

On Monday, state Sen. Hugh Parmer, D-Fort Worth, announced he would not seek Wright's seat. Parmer, the former mayor of Fort Worth, had been considered a frontrunner for the post.

Instead, Parmer urged Wright to remain in office, or resign and run for re-election on the special ballot. About 30 Wright supporters who met at a weekend breakfast also urged him not to resign.

Wright replied Tuesday that he was "touched by the warm and gracious spirit of the request coming ... from a variety of different sources." But he said, "the only way that I could even consider it at all would be if it were an absolutely genuine draft of a bipartisan nature."

But Texas GOP chief Fred Meyer said he believes the Republicans will have a good chance of winning Wright's seat.

"The people of that district classify themselves as conservatives," he said.

Republicans mentioned as possible 12th District candidates include Dr. Bob Lanier of television's "60 Second Housecall," Dr. Bruce Jacobson and state Rep. Bill Carter of Haltom City.

Pete Green of Fort Worth is now considered a likely Democratic candidate.

WILLIAMS

Among Williams' business interests are ClayDesta Communications, the ClayDesta National Bank, the Williams Companies, and farms and ranches near Fort Stockton and Alpine.

He said he has created more than 100,000 jobs in 50 Texas cities as a businessman.

He said his "courage" in indentifying problems and fixing them before they become worse "is the key to why some people call me a survivor."

Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, introduced Williams in Austin, calling him "the first person from Midland to ever run for governor."

"Right now we need a bunch of people in Midland to build our census, but we don't mind if you move to Austin, Claytie," said Craddick.

The Williams campaigned seemed unmarred by recent revelations that he has donated campaign funds for Democratic candidates in the past. Williams pointed out the contributions were offered while he was a businessman, not a politician. "I made the contributions and I take responsibility for them." He said the campaign would be decided on the issues.

Other potential Republican gubernatorial candidates include railroad commission chairman Kent Hance and Amarillo businessman T. Boone Pickins.

Former Midland businessman George W. Bush, the son of the president, also is said to be considering a run for the office.

FARM

And there are some good peaches around. But the Fredericksburg peaches rate among the more flavorsome and succulent among peaches.

Hoelscher, who is farming parttime following severe burns he suffered in an accident two years ago, accepted the hailstorm philosophically.

"That's all part of farming," he said.

Tarlton agreed.

"Yeah, that's part of the game," Tarlton said. "I sure would like to be rich enough to buy hail insurance."

He surveyed Holiman's rich garden, which was spared the severe hailstorm but not the blistering heat which tends to cause plants not to "set" as prolifically as they otherwise would.

"Let me get out of here and chop some weeds (in his own garden patch)," Tarlton said. "Bill (Holiman) has made me jealous."

Jerome Hoelscher noted the appeal of farm-fresh produce. Prices, which are set by the individual farmer, may or may not be at grocery-store prices.

"They (consumers) seem to really appreciate fresh produce," Hoelscher said. "The money is spent at home, and we appreciate that."

CHINA

An editor at the Jinan Daily, contacted by telephone, said 17 of the 45 were sentenced to death. He said he did not know if the figure included those given two-year reprieves. He said the trial was held Tuesday and no executions had been carried out.

The stiff sentences came one day after China's supreme court ordered lower courts to deal swiftly and severely with people accused of taking part in the protests, which the party is condemning as counterrevolutionary rebellion.

In other developments, the government today ordered colleges to set up new political education programs so students will learn to "love socialism and love the army" and accept official condemnation.

New arrests were reported, raising the total reported nationwide to more than 1,600 since June 4, when the army killed hundreds of unarmed civilians in Beijing in crushing the student-led movement for a freer, less corrupt society.

Authorities at Beijing airport arrested four people who were involved in the protests and trying to flee, the Beijing Daily said. It said two were women trying to board a Paris-bound plane under false names. It did not detail their alleged crimes.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher today condemned the executions as "totally out of proportion to the crime" and said she and Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke discussed steps against China during a meeting in London.

Network of Oil-Spill Response Teams

★ Petroleum Industry Response Organization Headquarters (Washington, D.C.)

● 5 regional spill response centers (staffed around the clock, capable of handling up to 30,000-ton oil spills)

Fourteen of the nation's largest oil companies already have signed up to participate in the plan and another 25 or 30 smaller companies are expected to volunteer to join, Murray said.

Participants would pay based on the amount of oil they move by tanker and spillers would ultimately repay the cleanup costs.

The plan calls for creating a Washington-based Petroleum Industry Response Organization (PIRO) that will set up five regional centers prepared to respond quickly in any future major oil spill.

About 285 people will be stationed at headquarters and at the centers planned for Seattle, New York, Norfolk, New Orleans and Long Beach, Calif.

Each center will be staffed around the clock and prepared to respond to a spill of up to 200,000 barrels. Operating from "staging areas" in the five regions, oil experts and contractors also will stand ready to respond to a spill.

Staging areas for the Seattle center are planned for Port Angeles and Bellingham, Wash., and Portland, Ore. The New Orleans center will operate staging areas at Houston, New Orleans and Mobile, Ala.

Staging areas for the Long Beach, Calif., center will be at San Francisco and San Diego as well as Hawaii. The New York center will operate staging areas at Portland, Maine; Boston; New Haven, Conn. or Providence, R.I., and Cape May, N.J. as well as in the New York area.

The Norfolk, Va., center, will operate staging areas there and at Wilmington, N.C., Savannah, Ga., and Tampa, Fla.

An extensive new research and development program for spill control is planned. It will include studies of chemical, biological and environmental effects of spilled oil, techniques for recovering spilled oil and ways to prevent shoreline damage after a spill.

Environmental activists were cautiously optimistic that the oil executives' plan could work to minimize or clean up oil spills.

Lois Epstein of the Environmental Defense Fund urged the government to review the recommendations "to be sure the industry is doing all it can and should do." She said the cleanup plan is flawed because it does not address reducing the reliance on fossil fuels like oil.

Bob Adler, spokesman for the National Resources Defense Coucil, acknowledged that the proposal "includes some very frank admissions of the fact that they can't prevent catastrophic or small spills. And once spills happen, they are at the mercy of the wind and tide."

The response scenario envisioned by the oil industry "still does not plan for the 'worst case' accidents," Adler said.

LULAC

That initial lawsuit, initiated by LULAC and the Black Advisory Council, was responsible for the city of Midland's current Council organization of four-single member districts and two-at-large representatives.

Bunton found the total at-large council system violated the voting rights of minorities in Midland.

Ms. Hernandez, an active participant in both suits, said Tuesday "we're all in agreement that the purpose is to seek equal opportunities for minorities to be elected.

"However, we will continue keeping an eye on it. If this continues to happen then everything is alright," she added.

"I am very pleased that the suit has been dismissed. I think it's in the best interests of the city and City Council because it will allow us to continue to have at-large members," Mayor Carroll Thomas said Tuesday.

"The advantage of having at-large members is that their agenda doesn't become politicized.

"They don't feel they've got to represent a certain segment of the population and they can weigh the issues to see if its beneficial to the entire city," Thomas believes.

Garrett says the history of elections in Midland, however, eventually will lead to "the evidence swinging back in our favor."

SUIT

"The jury listened to the evidence and they said we deserve $38 million so that we can be put back into the position we would be in if good cement had been put down our wells," he said.

In filing suit, Wagner & Brown alleged that Dow and DSI had "cheated" the firm on oil-well services between 1979-86 by doing inadequate work and using inferior materials in acidizing, fracturing and cementing projects.

The plaintiffs maintained during the week-long trial that Dow and DSI's use of "blow-down" or "returned" cement caused 18 casing leaks in 13 Conger (Penn) Field oil wells.

However, Dow and DSI attorneys brought in witnesses to testify that the casing leaks were caused by a combination of lost circulation and the oil company's failure to order sufficient volumes of cement to fully seal off a corrosive water zone.

Bunton's judgment avoided the issue of punitive damages. That could be decided by another federal trial jury should Dow and DSI appeal.

In the verdict, the jury found that the reasonable future costs of repairing or replacing Wagner & Brown wells would amount to $38 million

The loss in fair market value of those same wells totaled $18 million, according to the verdict.

Dowell Schlumberger Inc. was formed as the result of a corporate buy-out in 1984, with DSI becoming jointly owned by Dow Chemical Co. and Schlumberger Inc.

Wagner & Brown, which owns and operates working interests in Texas and Oklahoma, filed suit against the companies in September 1988 in 238th Texas District Court in Midland.

The litigation, which charged Dow and DSI with violation of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, was later moved to federal court in Midland.

Swindall found guilty on all perjury counts

ATLANTA (AP) — Pat Swindall, eight months ago a congressman and one day ago a Senate hopeful, now stands convicted of lying to a grand jury investigating a drug-related money laundering sting.

"Obviously, I'm very disappointed," said the 38-year-old conservative Republican, who lost re-election in November following his perjury indictment.

He was convicted Tuesday of all nine counts and faces a possible 10 months to five years in prison and $250,000 fine on each count. Sentencing was scheduled for Aug. 25.

Probation is not an option under new federal sentencing guidelines, which Swindall supported as a congressman.

Swindall, who spent two terms representing Atlanta's eastern suburbs, had hoped for an acquittal and a 1990 race against Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga. Now, barring a victory on appeal, he will go to prison after his Aug. 25 sentencing.

Swindall sat impassively in the federal courtroom as the jury announced its verdict on the 22nd day of his trial. His wife, Kim, rested her hand on his back.

"I could have understood one or two counts, but I just don't understand this," he told companions as he headed to a probation office.

Later, he told reporters he would appeal.

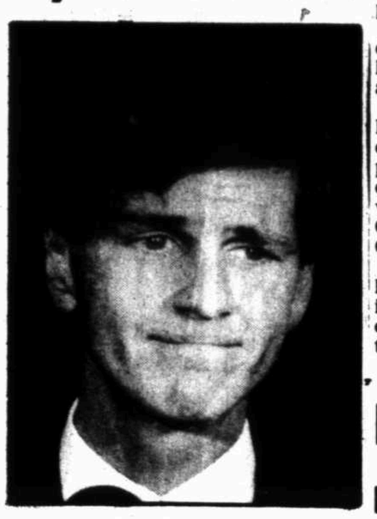
"This process is not over," he said. "We'll be trying this case again, and, I hope, not in Atlanta."

Swindall's attorneys asked before and during the trial for his case to be moved because of pretrial publicity.

He said he "had gotten involved in something I never should have gotten involved in, but I've said I had been 100 percent truthful before the grand jury. That hasn't changed."

Swindall, who went to Congress in 1984, was defeated in November by Democrat Ben Jones, a former TV actor in "The Dukes of Hazzard," while under the cloud of the perjury indictment.

Swindall was accused of lying to a federal grand jury in his Feb. 2, 1988, testimony concerning his month-long 1987 negotiations with an undercover Internal Revenue Service agent and with a Swindall supporter later convicted of money laundering. The IRS agent was posing as a drug-money launderer.



Pat Swindall

The government said Swindall was seeking $850,000 to complete construction on his luxurious suburban home; the money was to be funneled to Swindall through a mortgage company created by his friend and political supporter, Charles LeChasney, authorities said.

Swindall had been accused of 10 counts that said he made 20 false statements to the grand jury. The judge dropped one count, and the jurors Tuesday found 18 to be willful lies.

Specifically, they found that he lied when he said he didn't recall being told the money included narcotics dollars, when he said he never agreed to accept the money and when he said a $150,000 check he received — but later returned — had nothing to do with the deal.

"To me, this is among the most important, if not the most important, case we've handled," said U.S. Attorney Robert Barr.

Swindall, a lawyer, said the trial included at least two "very reversible errors" which he hopes will win him a new trial: Freeman's dismissal of the testimony of Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., that House members have an overwhelming workload, and a prosecutor's remark concerning the possible motivation of defendants to testify during criminal trials.

Senators open to child care compromise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators sponsoring a major child care package say they are open to compromise with the White House but one of them, a Republican, says the GOP and conservative groups must first stop lying about the plan.

"I'm ashamed when I hear some of the arguments that I've heard on this floor," Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah said Tuesday, criticizing Republican colleagues for spreading "misinformation and disinformation and distortions" about the child care proposal.

"I have no respect for people who distort the facts," Hatch said. "We have an obligation to tell the truth and let the chips fall as they may."

Hatch, who has been critical of the Bush administration's competing child care proposal, said he believed provisions of the president's tax-credit package could be merged with the revised Act for Better Child Care sponsored by Hatch and Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn.

"This should not be a partisan political issue," Hatch said. "We're willing to do what it takes to get a child care bill and we don't care who gets the credit for it."

Republican leader Bob Dole had planned to offer a White House-backed alternative to the ABC plan on Tuesday but held off as the GOP leadership sought support from Southern Democrats.

"We're willing to do what it takes to get a child care bill and we don't care who gets the credit for it."

— Sen. Orrin Hatch

It relies almost exclusively on tax credits, including an expansion of the existing earned income tax credit for low-income families with children under the age of 5. Like the Dodd-Hatch proposal, the Dole alternative would provide up-front money to families that otherwise could not take advantage of the existing dependent care tax credit because of low income.

Dole also called for a $400 million block grant program states could use to fund programs designed to improve the quality and quantity of child care. And, borrowing a proposal from Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo., Dole proposed exempting child care earnings from the outside income limitations faced by Social Security recipients.

Dole and other Republicans have touched on their plan during the four days of Senate debate. Democrats, joined by the GOP's Hatch, have called it inadequate while offering to merge its tax credit provisions with the direct subsidies provided to parents and child care providers under the ABC plan.

Benefits under Bush's plan would be available mainly to those making under $10,000 a year. The Democratic subsidies would be available according to formulas determined at the state level.

An aide to Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell predicted Dole's effort to substitute his proposal for the Dodd-Hatch measure would fail. "Senator Mitchell has proven in the past that he knows how to count," the aide said.

Mitchell, unable to reach agreement with Republicans on a timetable to bring the issue to a final vote, warned he would delay a two-week Senate recess due to begin next week if debate and amendments prevented a final vote by Friday.

"This is a very important matter," Mitchell said. "We're going to stay as long as it takes."

With Dole holding his plan, the highlight of Tuesday's debate was Hatch's angry criticism of fellow Republicans and conservatives.

Waiving a copy of a circular distributed at a Republican caucus that attacked the Dodd-Hatch bill, Hatch said he did not mind arguments over honest disagreements but added: "I mind people who try to win their case with falsehoods." He said the letter was on paper without a letterhead. "I do not know who prepared this piece of junk."

As revised, the ABC bill would authorize $1.75 billion for child care programs in fiscal 1990, with 70 percent of the money going to low-income parents to help them pay for child care. The remaining funds would go to states for programs to improve the quality and quantity of available child care.

Politics helped gain HUD money, GOP strategist says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Republican political strategist says his political pull helped get the federal government to pump millions of dollars into a New Jersey housing project that local officials say was a waste of money.

"You could characterize this as influence peddling," Paul Manafort told a congressional panel investigating the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Manafort, who had advised the presidential campaigns of Ronald Reagan and George Bush, was making money off the New Jersey deal two ways — as a part owner of the company developing the property, and as the consultant who served as a go-between to get money for that company from the government.

As a consultant, Manafort's lobbying firm, Black, Manafort, Stone & Kelly — which once counted GOP National Committee Cairman Lee Atwater among its partners — was paid $326,000 to help win HUD funding for the Seabrook apartment project in southern New Jersey. Manafort said he charged the developers $1,000 per apartment.

The housing project was denounced as wasteful by Democratic and Republican members of Congress and by local officials from the 7,000-person township where it is located, Upper Deerfield.

"I think it is a horrible waste of taxpayers' money," said Bruce T. Peterson, the township's mayor, after learning that with tax credits, rent subsidies and repair grants the 326-apartment project was costing the federal government about $43 million.

Peterson said local officials were told nothing about the project until well after the developers and their paid consultants started going after the federal money.

Rep. Christopher Shays, R-Conn., later said he believed that the project was not worthy of federal funds in the first place.

HUD has been rocked by allegations that its money to rehabilitate run-down housing for the poor and elderly was handed out to developers who hired high-priced political consultants with ties to the Republican Party or the Reagan administration.

Other Republicans who benefited by access to HUD money included former Interior Secretary James Watt, former Sen. Edward Brooke of Massachusetts and the late John Mitchell, attorney general during the Nixon administration. All made thousands of dollars by helping others get money from the department.

The New Jersey housing project was built in the 1940s and had become dilapidated over the years.

North's sentencing postponed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver L. North's sentencing is postponed while the judge considers defense charges that one of the Iran-Contra jurors who convicted the former White House aide deliberately lied during jury selection.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell postponed Friday's scheduled sentencing after North's lawyers produced evidence that juror Tara King failed to disclose that a brother had been convicted of armed robbery and that two others had arrest records.

The defense also alleged that Ms. King's statements to reporters after the verdict that she used marijuana and cocaine before the trial suggests she was under the influence of drugs during the trial.

Ms. King told interviewers that she did not use drugs during her jury service.

The judge on Tuesday postponed sentencing until July 5 and scheduled a June 28 hearing on defense allegations that Ms. King intentionally withheld the information when she filled out a questionnaire given to prospective jurors.

The questionnaire asked if any member of her family had ever been a party or witness to a civil or criminal court proceeding or had been under investigation by law enforcement authorities.

The 35-year-old office worker answered the question in the negative.

"This apparently intentional misstatement raises serious questions as to juror bias and impartiality," North's lawyers said in pleadings that were unsealed Tuesday by the judge.

Gesell might be forced to grant a mistrial if the defense can prove that it learned after the verdict that Ms. King deliberately withheld information to get on the jury.

Independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh, in other pleadings ordered unsealed, said North and his lawyers must prove that they learned about Ms. King's misstatements after the verdict.

Otherwise, his motion "'constitutes an impermissible attempt to sandbag the judicial process,'" Walsh said, quoting from a 1982 appellate court decision.

Walsh also argued that Ms. King may have inadvertently answered the question incorrectly, noting that she is nearly 17 years younger than the brother convicted of armed robbery in 1987.

Walsh said it was possible that "any knowledge she did have simply did not come to mind at the time she completed the jury questionnaire," particularly since Ms. King has 14 brothers and sisters.

Worldwide ivory bans on increase

NEW YORK (AP) — After years of crusades to stop poachers from destroying the African elephant, conservationists are reaping success with a series of national bans on ivory imports.

"It's been a real snowball effect," said Jorgen Thomsen, senior program officer for elephant conservation at the World Wildlife Fund.

Since June 4, the United States, Japan, the 12-nation European Economic Community, Switzerland and Canada have imposed bans on imported ivory. The EEC, Japan and the United States buy up to 75 percent of the ivory on world markets.

Hong Kong, the world's major ivory dealer, has announced a moratorium on raw ivory imports.

The 102-nation Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species will consider a worldwide ban at a Geneva meeting in October.

The conservationists' sweeping success follows June 1 appeals by the World Wildlife Fund and Wildlife Conservation International. The two groups said poachers were wiping out the elephant populations in Africa faster than had been thought and the pachyderms could be extinct within 15 years.

But conservationists now fear that prospects of a worldwide ban could lead poachers to a frenzy of elephant killings unless interim measures are taken immediately.

"An elephant holocaust across Africa is likely unless consumer countries take immediate action," the World Wildlife Fund said.

France, on June 4, began the string of national actions against importing ivory and it was followed the next day by the United States.

Penalties vary for violations. In the United States, the maximum is a year in jail and a $100,000 fine.

President Bush, in announcing the U.S. decision, said: "We do this out of mounting concern for the rapid decline of the wild elephant, one of nature's most majestic creatures.

"If their populations continue to diminish at current rates, the wild elephant will soon be lost from this Earth."

Japan and Hong Kong are considered critical to any effective reduction in ivory demand. Japan is the largest importer, accounting for 40 percent of the world market, and Hong Kong is heavily involved in making ivory carvings for export.

"The real victory is Japan," Thomsen said. "Hong Kong's action was very much to save face" because its two biggest customers — Japan and the United States — had outlawed imports.

"This proves that we have taken more responsibility as consumer countries," he said. "We may have prevented a catastrophe. Credit should also be placed with the African countries, who previously had opposed a ban but now realize the crisis situation."

Hong Kong began enforcing its crackdown quickly. On Sunday, it seized 448 tusks and other ivory products worth an estimated $2.6 million that officials said were to to have been smuggled to Japan.

Several African countries recently reversed their stands and took steps to protect their elephants. Last month, Kenya followed neighboring Tanzania and Somalia and called for a worldwide ban.

Delegates at an Organization of African Unity conference that ended Saturday recommended establishing a marketing cartel to ensure that money from the worldwide ivory trade benefits the continent.

Conservationists estimate African elephant populations have dropped from 1.5 million in 1978 to between 400,000 and 700,000 today.

They say ivory exports have increased from 300 tons a year in the 1950s to more than 800 tons annually in this decade and prices are running at a record $91 per pound.

An aerial survey last year found about 20,000 elephants in Kenya. Fifteen years ago it had 121,000. The number of elephants in Tanzania has fallen to 80,000 from 300,000 in 1979, according to government officials.

Conservationists say the elephant populations in most other African countries have suffered similar fates, but Zimbabwe, Botswana and South Africa are the exceptions because of controls.

Zimbabwe has annual elephant kills and a thriving legal trade in elephant products. In the last 12 months it earned about $600,000 in legal ivory sales.

Poachers have killed most of the big male elephants in some countries and now their targets are females and young beasts, according to a conservationists' report.

The result is that three times as many elephants must be killed to provide the same amount of ivory as 10 years ago.

The New York Post's Tuesday edition featured a story on two Regents exams reported stolen in New York City. The article said test copies were sold for $5 to $2,000.

School tests canceled after newspaper publishes answers

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The state is looking for ways to keep its high school achievement tests under wraps after it was forced to cancel an exam when the answers were published in the New York Post.

The newspaper, saying it was showing that illicitly obtained tests were widely available, published the answer sheet to a chemistry test Tuesday, the day it was to be given to an estimated 80,000 students across the state.

Officials probing the theft of the test results have found the exams were widely available to students in New York City, said Education Commissioner Thomas Sobol. Tests in biology, math, French and global studies also were reported to be available, he said.

"We are considering several measures which will improve our security in the future," Sobol said.

Thomas Gilles, a spokesman for the state attorney general, said the office was investigating reports the tests and results were being sold for $2,000, although some tests were available for as little as $5 or $10 the night before the exam.

The regents tests, given in 17 subjects over a one-week period in late June, are taken by high school students and generally account for a portion of a students' grade.

After the Post published the chemistry answers, they were quickly distributed through copy and fax machines across the state, forcing only the second cancelation in the test's history.

Jerry Nachman, editor of the Post, said it took a reporter 15 minutes to find a copy of a test after he was assigned to check reports they were stolen.

He said the test results were published on the front page as a service to students who were planning to take the exam legitimately when there was so much cheating going on.

"Their inability to recognize the ingenuity of teen-agers, coupled with the proliferation of photocopiers and fax machines, was silly," Nachman said.

Sobol said the department believed it could contain the damage to New York City and that the tests could have been given elsewhere in the state on Tuesday. But several hours after the newspaper was published, it became clear this was impossible, he said.

The Education Department is considering suing the Post for the cost of preparing and giving a replacement test, said Sobol's spokeswoman, Linda Fisher. She estimated those costs at $250,000.

"If they want to sue us, fine," Nachman said. "I think the discovery will be very revealing to us and all our colleagues in the press."

Abandoned girls return home; Mother undergoes evaluation

CLEVELAND (AP) — Two small children abandoned in other states have returned to Ohio in the care of relatives.

Natalie Hart, 3, has flown home to Cleveland from San Jose, Calif., nearly a month after she was abandoned by her mother near a ticket counter at San Jose International Airport.

And Natalie's 3-month-old sister, Gabriel, who also was abandoned last month, also has arrived from Houston with an aunt, Toni Farmer.

Gabriel, who returned late Tuesday night, was abandoned at Hobby Airport in Houston, apparently on May 26, and Natalie, who arrived Tuesday morning, was abandoned the day before, according to police.

Natalie was accompanied Tuesday by Juanita Hart, her grandmother, and another aunt, Tracey Hart. American Airlines provided round-trip transportation for Juanita Hart, of East Cleveland.

Asked how her flight was, Natalie smiled and said, "Fine."

Juanita Hart won temporary custody of Natalie during a hearing Monday in San Jose Superior Court, Juvenile Division.

"I told the judge I would take care of Natalie," Hart said. "He decided that Natalie belongs home with her family."

In Houston, Judy Hay of Children's Protective Services said a civil court ruling Monday temporarily released Gabriel to Ms. Farmer.

The mother, Michael Ellen Hart, 38, of Cleveland, is now a patient at St. Vincent Charity Hospital and Health Center, where she is undergoing psychiatric evaluation.

She had been the object of a two-week search until she called Lakewood, Ohio, police June 11 and identified herself. She reportedly told police she abandoned them because she was afraid someone was following her and she did not want them to get hurt.

Juanita Hart said her daughter had extreme postpartum depression after Gabriel's birth.

"We explained everything to her (Natalie) as best as we could," Juanita Hart told reporters at Cleveland Hopkins International Airport. "I think she understands. She's just glad to be home and hopes to see her mother. She was elated when she saw us (in San Jose)."

Nuts may help prevent heart attack deaths, study shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — A handful of nuts a day may keep the heart attack away, according to a group of California researchers.

A six-year study of diet and fatal coronary heart disease among 34,000 California members of the Seventh-Day Adventists Church found that nuts were the only food item listed with a statistically significant protection against heart attack death.

"Compared to a person who never ate nuts, a person who ate them at least once a day had only 47 percent of the risk" of fatal heart attack, said Dr. Gary E. Fraser, co-author of a study presented Tuesday at the 2nd International Conference of Preventive Cardiology.

"Making this even more significant is that a year ago we looked at non-fatal (heart attacks) and got findings that were extremely similar," said Fraser. "Nuts seem to reduce the risk of both fatal and non-fatal heart disease."

The researcher cautioned that the study is from only one population group and "should be interpreted as an interesting, but still somewhat preliminary finding" until other studies are done.

Fraser said the data was collected through questionnaires mailed between 1976 and 1982. In a follow-up study, the researchers found there had been 260 fatal heart attacks among those surveyed earlier. The scientists then compared answers on the dietary questionnaires to determine what foods, if any, tended to suggest protection against heart disease.

"Significant protective relationships were seen with consumption of whole wheat bread, nuts and citrus fruits," the report said. But in a further refinement of the data, Fraser said nuts appeared to be the major common food that protected against heart disease.

"It was fairly consistent across the sexes, by the age groups, by smokers and nonsmokers, and all of the major risk factors," he said.

A re-survey of part of the study group determined that peanuts were the most commonly consumed nut — chosen by about 60 percent of those questioned.

Fraser said the questions dealt only with the frequency of nut consumption and found that the more often nuts were eaten, the greater the protection. Those who ate nuts at least once a day did best.

As to quantity, Fraser said "a handful of nuts, or something like that" was probably typical.

Fraser said it is not now known what in nuts can provide protection from heart attack, but he speculated that it could be the types of vegetable fats.

"They are relatively fatty, as vegetable foods go, but they have much more polyunsaturated fat than most of the fatty foods one would eat," he said.

Navy to search ocean for jet's cargo door

HONOLULU (AP) — The Navy will search the ocean floor more than three miles down for the 800-pound cargo door that ripped from a United Airlines jet on Feb. 24 and sent nine people to their deaths, according to a news report.

The Navy operation about 85 miles southwest of Honolulu is scheduled for October, ABC reported Tuesday.

A row of seats was sucked through the hole on the New Zealand-bound flight when the fuselage tore open. The pilots managed to get the crippled Boeing 747 back to Honolulu for a landing that saved the 345 people still aboard.

The National Transporation Safety Board, which requested the search, the Federal Aviation Administration, United and Boeing Co. have agreed to share the estimated $300,000 cost of recovering the door, ABC said.

"At this time we intend to pursue getting it," NTSB spokesman Ted Lopatkiewicz told The Honolulu Advertiser.

United spokesman Rob Doughty told the Advertiser the airline is willing to pay its $70,000 share and had been in contact with the safety agency.

David Jimenez, a Boeing spokesman, said Tuesday, "I think we're proceeding to recover the door." But he said he did not know any details of the plan or how the Navy would do it.

NTSB investigators have said the door would help determine what caused the plane to pop open at 22,000 feet, ripping a 10-by-20-foot hole in the fuselage.

In April, a three-day hearing on the accident failed to produce conclusive evidence of the cause. United executives said then they wanted to see the door recovered.

Negotiations were reported to be under way at that time on whether to retrieve the door and how the costs would be divided.

Colleges failing their true purpose

The promise of tomorrow is symbolized these days by thousands of graduation ceremonies. For some, however, there is no diploma. Thousands of scholarship athletes quietly slip away from college before graduation. They never make it academically and have little to show for these years. Yet they helped bring millions of dollars in income to their respective colleges.

These young people entered college and played sports under rules set up by the National Collegiate Athletic Association. Many were recruited despite records that showed little academic inclination or performance in high school. In some cases, it is questionable whether they deserved to graduate from high school.

There is not much that can be done for these young people now. Few have become pro sports figures. Virtually all are unprepared to face the job competition of their college classmates.

Big time college sports continues on its merry way. The University of Kentucky, now on three years probation for breaking NCAA rules, recently signed New York Knicks' pro basketball coach Rick Pitino to a seven-year $5-million contract. David Stern, National Basketball Association commissioner, reacted:

"I think the University of Kentucky and the NBA are in the same business: making money from basketball. But I think we're a lot more honest in our approach."

What of the young who are now deciding which college athletic scholarship to accept? Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., has an answer. He has introduced a bill in the U.S. Senate that would require all colleges receiving federal funds to report the graduation rates of scholarship athletes — by race, gender and sport.

A number of colleges quietly oppose similar rules belatedly proposed by an embarrassed NCAA. The reasons are they are troubled at their low graduation rates, yet they fear such disclosures might well harm their future athletic recruiting.

Some colleges continue to play down gambling, illegal recruiting and other aspects of their athletics because these programs represent big income for them. In this hypocrisy, they betray their true institutional purposes and responsibilities to society.

Boycott not answer

While the International Whaling Commission meets in San Diego this week, environmental activists are "whale-backing" the event to bring attention to the plight of dolphins killed in tuna fishing. It's a legitimate concern. And, it's particularly appropriate for San Diego, hailing port for the U.S. tuna fleet.

Twenty-eight vessels of the fleet fish for the yellowfin tuna in the eastern tropical Pacific. For reasons unclear to scientists, schools of yellowfin swim with dolphins in this area, traveling an expanse of ocean from Southern California to Chile.

Helicopters from tuna boats use dolphins as spotters. Speedboats quickly surround the dolphins, discharging explosives to disrupt their acoustic communication. The mother ship encircles the subdued dolphins with a milelong curtain of netting. The netting is quickly closed, or pursed, at the bottom, trapping them along with the tuna that swim in deeper water. As the tuna boat hauls in the net, dolphins inevitably become victims of the catch.

With increased awareness over the years, the tuna industry has made concerted efforts to reduce dolphin deaths. The industry now claims to release 99 percent of all dolphins caught in purse seining. But the potential death of even a small percentage of an estimated total population of 4 million to 5 million dolphins in the eastern Pacific is still avoidable overkill.

A quota set by law in 1984 allows for 20,500 "incidental" killings of dolphins annually in the U.S. tuna industry. The tuna fleet has decreased in size by almost 60 percent over the past 10 years, but the quota remains unchanged.

Observers from the U.S. National Marine Fisheries Service monitor dolphin mortality on the tuna boats, but only instant mortality qualifies for quota. Disoriented dolphins harmed in the catch and released to possible delayed death do not count.

Tuna fishermen, understandably, are concerned for their livelihood if purse seining for yellowfin is banned. And, they are concerned when environmentalists call for a boycott of all tuna products. A boycott is not the answer, although, ultimately, the tuna industry may have to focus on other varieties of tuna, such as skipjack. Dolphins are a concern only with the yellowfin.

As we encouraged Japan to find alternative fishing for its whaling industry, we similarly urge the U.S. tuna fleet to change its focus. Most tuna consumers would be willing to pay a bit more for their tuna if it meant sparing the dolphins. There are plenty more fish in the sea.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, June 21, the 172nd day of 1989. There are 193 days left in the year. Summer arrives at 5:53 a.m. EDT.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 21, 1964, civil rights workers Michael H. Schwerner, Andrew Goodman and James E. Chaney disappeared after they were released from a jail in Philadelphia, Mississippi. Their bodies were found buried in an earth dam six weeks later. (Seven men, including a chief deputy sheriff and a Ku Klux Klan leader, were convicted in 1967 of conspiracy in the killings.)

On this date:

In 1982, a jury in Washington found John Hinckley Jr. innocent by reason of insanity in the shooting of President Ronald Reagan and three others more than a year earlier.

In 1983, two American journalists, Dial Torgerson of the Los Angeles Times and Richard Cross, a freelance photographer, were killed by artillery fire along the Honduras-Nicaragua border.

In 1985, American, Brazilian and West German scientists announced that skeletal remains exhumed from a graveyard in Brazil were those of Nazi war criminal Dr. Josef Mengele.

Ten years ago: Declaring there had been a "breakdown of trust" between the government and people of Nicaragua, Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance called on President Anastasio Somoza to step down.

Five years ago: French President Francois Mitterrand raised the case of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov during a Kremlin banquet, saying it cast doubt on the human rights guarantees contained in the Helsinki accords.

One year ago: Leaders of the world's seven richest nations concluded their three-day summit in Toronto with a debt-relief plan for the world's most desperately poor countries.

Today's birthdays: Cartoonist Al Hirschfeld is 86. Author Mary McCarthy is 77. Actress Jane Russell is 68. Actress Maureen Stapleton is 64. Former NBC News President Lawrence K. Grossman is 58. Actor Bernie Kopell is 56. Actor Monte Markham is 54. Actor Ron Ely is 51. Actress Mariette Hartley is 49. Comedian Joe Flaherty is 49. Rock singer-musician Ray Davies is 45. Actor Michael Gross is 42. Actress Meredith Baxter-Birney is 42. Pakistan Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto is 36.

Palestinian informants don't live long

ISRAELI-OCCUPIED WEST BANK — Not all of the Palestinian victims of the intifada, or uprising, have been killed by Israelis. Some have been killed by other Palestinians.

Jack Anderson

The 18-month-old intifada has been kept alive, in part, because Palestinians are willing to kill their own people who collaborate with Israel.

The message is driven home in bloody ways. On June 7, an Arab man was beaten and stabbed to death in Hebron. His body was left hanging by chains from a telephone pole as a warning to others who might be tempted to inform to the Israelis. On May 14, an Arab man was kidnapped by a group of masked Arab youths and stabbed to death. On April 17, a prostitute from Nablus was stabbed to death by masked Arabs who suspected her of forcing other prostitutes to be informants. On the same day, a woman and her son were shot to death. Her daughter, suspected of being the informant in the family, survived the shooting.

This is the hidden side of the popular uprising. And not one of the intifada leaders or supporters we secretly met with on a recent trip here seemed to think there was anything wrong it. Collaborators or spies are seen as a threat to the Palestinian nationalist movement.

One 16-year-old Palestinian told us that when he was arrested for the third time last January, it finally became clear that the village had an informant for Shin Bet, the domestic Israeli intelligence service.

The boy and others figured that the informant had turned in three village rock throwers who were arrested and sent to prison. The informant himself was then sent to prison to get more information. The prisoners pieced the story together and stabbed the informant to death in a prison bathroom.

At least 45 suspected collaborators have been murdered since the intifada began. The killings dried up what used to be an extensive spy network for Shin Bet. This is one battle of the bodies that the Palestinians have won. Only a few intifada leaders have been exposed by the informants and the rest direct the uprising without the Israelis even knowing who is in charge.

Palestinian sources told us that only the "weakest" and most disloyal Palestinians cooperate with Shin Bet. Oftentimes Shin Bet agents blackmail them over a dalliance with a prostitute or some other sexual escapade.

Shin Bet can't do much to protect its spies, but it has made those who attack them pay after the fact. People suspected of harming collaborators are arrested and imprisoned, often with their innocent family members. Their homes are demolished.

Israel has made the most of this Arab-against-Arab violence. Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Arens publicly claimed in late April that "not a day passes" that Palestinians don't kill one of their own for being a less-than-enthusiastic champion of the cause. "They are being hacked to death," Arens said. "People are burnt alive, people are knifed, people are being shot and the PLO (Palestine Liberation Organization) is trying to impose a rule of terror on the population."

The Israeli Defense Ministry claims there have been more than 950 such attacks against Arabs, including burning down the shops of Arabs who sell Israeli goods or who refuse to observe strikes called by the intifada leadership.

We left the West Bank on the day of one such strike. Our taxi driver, an intifada supporter, stopped when he saw a band of children standing by a rock pile waiting to pelt Palestinian taxis violating the strike. The driver did some fast talking to spare his car — an adult, humbly negotiating with a band of kids with rocks. In another country they would be considered hooligans. Here they are the forefront of a nationalist uprising.

TUGGING THE PURSE STRINGS — The U.S. Navy is looking for a concessionaire to operate its fleet of tugboats used for towing, rescue and other services. The companies competing for the contract are puzzled about the specifications. The Navy apparently has champagne tastes while the taxpayers are on a beer budget. The request for bidders specifies that the contractor must provide exercise equipment, waiters and bus people at mealtime, a choice of entrees for every meal and someone to make the beds and clean the toilets of government personnel on board. The Navy justifies the luxuries saying the tugs are at sea for a long time and the people on them deserve the best.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The U.S. Customs Service has 16 radar balloons costing up to $22 million each that are supposed to track airplanes smuggling drugs. They work when they aren't grounded by bad weather, destroyed by tornadoes or baffled by interference. According to the General Accounting Office, the balloons probably aren't worth the exorbitant cost. George Bush had better listen to such advice before someone finds out his anti-drug program is full of hot air.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

In the pink, on the green and red all over

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — I want you to get a mental picture of this:

I'm standing on the eighth tee at Bermuda Run, site of the Crosby, my favorite golf tournament. Forget the Masters.

Lewis Grizzard

I don't get to play in the Masters, but the Crosby allows me to go out there and hack it around, just like I was Ben Crenshaw or somebody.

Celebrities (all the way from Bob Hope down to newspaper columnists) are paired with executives of other companies involved in the tournament, and all prize money — which is more than $1 million — is handed over to charity by the winning players.

The tournament is three days, 54 holes. The darn thing draws thousands of people, and so now let's get on with the story.

It's the opening day of the tournament and I'm still standing there on the eighth hole at Bermuda Run.

The eighth is a beautiful par-3. The pin is 185 yards away. My shot must carry a lake to reach the green.

I'm not certain how many spectators are around me as I address my ball, or how many are up at the green awaiting my shot, but it is a fair-sized number.

I have a 3-iron in my hands.

I firmly believe I could stand in front of 5,000 people in my underwear and make a speech and not get nervous.

But, oh, the agony and the pressure of hitting a golf ball in front of strangers. They announce your name before you hit in this tournament, which only makes you more nervous.

"These people know who I am," I think to myself, "and if I hit a terrible shot, I cannot hide in obscurity."

I'm paired with Ernie Banks' team. Mr. Cub can hit it a mile.

"Great shot, Ernie!" a guy in the crowd says when Ernie's ball hits close to the pin.

Now I'm up.

"God," I begin my prayer, "you don't have to let me get on the green. You can even make my ball go into a sand trap. But, please, God, don't let me hit it in the water and embarrass myself."

If you do not play golf, you may not know the term "shank."

It is a term from hell. When a golfer shanks his ball, it makes this awful metallic sound and the ball goes to the right. As in sideways.

To shank in front of a crowd is the worst thing that can happen.

I feel sick to my stomach. My palms are covered with perspiration. My mouth is dry. My arms are made of concrete.

I take the club back. I swing. And I hear that sound. I have shanked. The ball has gone straight into the water.

"Look, Daddy," says a kid in the gallery. "That man hit it sideways."

Otherwise, there is silence. No applause like Ernie got. I consider dying. It would be easier than walking up to the green where all those people are, taking their stares like daggers.

Finally, the nightmare is over. We move onto the ninth. But there are more people there.

I take out my driver and hook my shot into the trees. More silence.

If I didn't enjoy the Crosby so much, it might just be more embarrassment than I could handle.

Zen offers answer to communication barrier

To prick your mind, let's look at a Zen approach to politics.

Zen is a part of Buddhism primarily concerned with a full and complete understanding of the universe.

Charley Reese

One Buddhist saying is, "If you understand, things are as they are; if you do NOT understand, things are as they are."

That's easy enough to grasp. The river is as deep as it is whether I think it's deep or I think it's shallow. My perception does not change the river.

Unfortunately, however, us homo saps act on the basis of our perceptions, whether they are or are not accurate. We do so because it's the only information we have, all data from outside ourselves being filtered through our sense organs and interpreted by our brains.

Our brains, however, are much more complex than computers. Computers receive data and manipulate it but cannot alter it nor can they disobey their programming. Our brains can even censor the data our senses send them; and in handling the data, add all sorts of extras like memory, attitudes, biases, and emotions. Love and hate, for example, can alter our perceptions strikingly.

What's this got to do with politics? This. Self-government depends on the people making the right decisions when they choose their political leadership and when they communicate with that leadership on particular issues.

The ability to make the right decisions depends on the ability to gain information that reflects as accurately as possible the reality of the situation. Suppose you have a man in public office who is intelligent, reasonable, philosophically in tune with you and honest, but you don't know it, because the information you receive about him doesn't reflect those qualities?

Or suppose that he is the opposite, stupid, venal, and dishonest but you don't know because the information you receive doesn't reflect that part of his reality?

Well, if that is consistently the case, then self-government must inevitably fail. If you took the navigation lights and radio signals and altered them so they gave the wrong information, any plane attempting to navigate by them would crash. So, too, if people are consistently misled and thus have perceptions that don't accurately reflect reality, they will make the wrong decisions and political disasters will befall them.

We have just seen in Beijing how the students' perceptions of their government and their army were incorrect. Many paid with their lives for the error. Sometimes accurate perception is an immediate life-death matter — will the man with the gun shoot or not shoot? Do I have time to drive across the intersection before that car gets here? At Pearl Harbor in 1941, approaching planes were seen on radar but they were perceived to be American, not Japanese.

But accurate perception is vital in situations that aren't immediately life or death. Is this politician good or bad? Is this bill good or bad? Is this description of what purports to be a social problem accurate or inaccurate?

If I had to restrict myself to naming one single pressing political problem we face, I would have to say communication. Despite the technological revolution that bombards us with millions of bits of information data, it has become more, not less, difficult to get accurate information about government and public affairs.

Our society has factionalized with a vengeance and all of the thousands of factions are armed with photocopiers, statistics, charts, and claims. Both print and broadcast news organizations have reacted to competitive pressures by moving more toward entertainment and superficiality. The Zen answer is to weed out, edit, delete, simplify, calm down.

Fire crews battle blazes in California, Florida

Associated Press

Firefighters labored in 87-degree heat early today to surround a desert wildfire near the grotesquely shaped trees of California's Joshua Tree Monument. In Florida, rain helped fire crews battling a blaze in the dry Everglades.

The 1,200-acre blaze in the desert raged within 1,000 feet of homes and was the largest of four brush fires crackling across Southern California.

The fire was pushed early today by 25 mph winds through brittle vegetation, said Tom Barnes, a fire dispatcher. "With the hot weather and the rough terrain, this is really a tough one to fight," he said.

The blaze was 40 percent contained and firefighters were hoping for full containment before temperatures hit an expected 110 degrees on the first day of summer, said Barnes.

The fire was burning away from the monument, a grove named for the trees with dagger-shaped leaves and branches that extend like upraised arms.

The fire started Tuesday, prompting authorities to evacuate 85 homes as flames bore down on a neighborhood in the city of Joshua Tree. But the fire was stopped short of the houses, and most people had returned by late in the day.

One outbuilding was destroyed in the sparsely populated area 110 miles east of Los Angeles.

In Florida, rain brought firefighters closer to putting out a wildfire that has scorched 43,700 acres of the Everglades. Nearly 400 firefighters from at least seven states battled the blaze, which has been fed by wind and dry grass.

"If things work like they're working now, I'd say two to three days," information officer Sam Logan said Tuesday. "If all of a sudden it dries up and we get some crazy winds, it could do something else."

The area is so dry that alligators have abandoned their secluded marshes for the canal that rims the Arthur R. Mitchell Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge, Florida's largest. As a result, it has been closed to boaters and fishermen.

NATION IN BRIEF

House panel rejects move to kill Trident

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee says the Pentagon should be allowed to keep the Trident submarine in its 1990 budget, but it wants a study on whether the one-a-year purchases are necessary.

The House Armed Services seapower subcommittee on Tuesday rejected 8-3 a plan by Rep. Herbert H. Bateman, R-Va., to replace the $1.28 billion Trident with a smaller Los Angeles-class attack submarine.

The attack subs are made by both the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. in Virginia and the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics Corp. in Connecticut. The Trident is made exclusively by Electric Boat.

The Reagan administration budget had called for a Trident and two attack subs, but Defense Secretary Dick Cheney scratched one attack submarine from his revised budget in a cost-cutting move.

Earlier this year, Rep. Thomas Foglietta, D-Pa., and Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, called for scaling back the yearly purchases of Tridents in light of U.S.-Soviet arms control advances.

Mayors end meeting

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — The nation's mayors were ending their conference today after an eruption of partisan name-calling, with New York's Edward Koch calling GOP chief Lee Atwater a "hired gun" who uses "disgusting tactics."

The annual U.S. Conference of Mayors planned final votes on new policy statements calling for higher federal taxes, a ban on semiautomatic assault weapons and greater federal actions on drugs and homelessness.

The mayors also were to settle in their final session an unprecedented contested race for the conference's future leadership. Boston's Democratic Mayor Raymond Flynn is running against York, Pa., Mayor William Althaus, a Republican.

The contest was thrown to the full conference when two Democratic mayors sided with the Republicans on secret ballots and deadlocked a nominating committee that for 57 years has settled such matters in private.

The meeting, where partisanship is often submerged in discussions of common urban needs, saw party bickering flare when Atwater, the GOP national chairman, spoke Monday.

Panel requests travel

WASHINGTON (AP) — International observers and journalists must be allowed to travel throughout Nicaragua during the upcoming election campaign, a private panel monitoring plans for the vote said today.

On June 12, the State Department accused Nicaragua of trying to restrict foreign monitoring of the February balloting by requiring Americans — for the first time — to acquire entry visas as of July 1.

Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega said the visa requirement was imposed because U.S. government employees "continue to abuse the hospitality" of Nicaragua and "conspire against the people of Nicaragua."

The panel, the Bipartisan Commission on Free and Fair Elections in Nicaragua, also proposed a variety of other reforms, although Ortega said last month, "The reforms that were going to take place have taken place and that's the end of it."

The commission said its proposals were "but the minimal requirements for a free and fair electoral campaign and election."

"They are consistent with Central American practices and are by no means ideal standards or an attempt to impose U.S. practices on Nicaragua," the panel said.

The commission, which held three days of hearings in Washington May 9-11, is sponsored by the conservative World Freedom Foundation.

Attorney says law must go

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — An attorney for a teen-age dropout relieved of his driving privilege because of a state measure aimed at curbing truancy says the law must go, or else all West Virginia teens must stay in school until age 18.

Attorney Chris Butch said the dropout law conflicts with another state statute that allows a person to drop out of school at 16.

"They can't stand together. One has to fail or the Legislature has to throw both out and say kids can't drop out until they're 18," he said.

Michael Means, 17, a married Charleston teen-ager who dropped out of ninth grade last year, was to appear in Kanawha County Circuit Court today to appeal a state Department of Motor Vehicles ruling that revoked the youth's license.

Chicago suburb sued

CHICAGO (AP) — The U.S. Justice Department has sued a suburb for denying a zoning permit for a home for retarded adults.

The lawsuit filed Tuesday was the first brought by the federal government alleging housing discrimination against the handicapped under the Fair Housig Amendments Act that went into effect March 12, the department said.

The department contends the Chicago Heights City Council denied the request in May because of neighbors' opposition "based on fears and prejudices concerning the mentally retarded."

The council in the suburb of 32,000 people denied a special-use permit for construction of a home for 15 adults in a neighborhood of single-family and two-family homes.

Chicago Heights Police Commissioner John Gliottoni, one of the five council members, said the council followed recommendations of the city's zoning board and its planning commission, as it almost always does.

Midland County farmer Bill Schneider works the dirt with hoe and plow and with the companionship of his dog-friend, Pepper, south of Midland. Schneider, a house painter by trade, grew up on a cotton farmer in Dawson County. He returned to farming cotton and vegetables in the mid-late 1980s.

MISD, ECISD alternative schools to be expanded

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Midland schools could take a deeper stab at lowering the dropout rate and saving at-risk students by expanding its alternative school next fall, while Ector County schools may create a similar daytime school by the 1990-91 school year.

Midland Independent School District, however, will need to raise $515,000 in donations and find a new site for the program, a self-motivated learning system which helps dropouts obtain their General Equivalency Diploma or work back into mainstream curriculums.

The school, located in Dellwood Mall, had 126 students between the ages of 16 and 21 during the 1988-89 school year. The proposal would extend the school to at-risk seventh-graders and accommodate more than 200 students, said Tex Paris, vocational instruction coordinator.

In addition, the program would allow the students to gain credit for their schoolwork, include vocational classes and provide day care and transporation, Paris said.

Paris said the proposal could come before school board members at Tuesday's regular meeting.

Deputy Superintendent Don Mercer said Ector County Independent School District offers alternative classes at night but is considering going to a daytime alternative school possibly by the 1990-91 school year.

Created to curb a roughly 10 percent yearly dropout rate, MISD's program takes those who have the mental tools to get a GED or return to class. About 400 students between the ages of 16 and 21 have come and gone since the school opened in March 1987.

Helen Lackey, the school's teacher, principal, director and sometimes counselor, said her students have plenty of social and academic elbow room in her classes.

"It erases timelines," said Ms Lackey, who is assisted by two aides. "It's open entry, open exit and self-paced. I don't care if it takes 55 minutes to do a lesson or three 55-minute sessions."

The students can use either computer programs or work on paper and take tests at any time. They learn what they want, when they want, and work with other students or find a quiet study sanctuary in a nearby carrell.

With the teens allowed to talk, listen to music on headphones and take breaks as often as needed, about the only rules are to show up on time, work on something and avoid bothering others.

"We erase some of those distractions they might have in a regular school environment," Ms. Lackey said. "Some of these kids are not built to sit down, stay still and focus their attention for a long period of time."

Paris said that out of the 126 attending alternative school in 1988-89, 20 earned their GED and 85 percent gained one or more years in reading or math.

"It's been a tremendous success for one teacher and two aides to provide services to that many kids who earned that many GEDs," Paris said.

If the expansion proposal becomes reality, Ms. Lackey will have seven more teachers assisting her, enabling the school to offer more individualized instruction, Paris said. About 250 seventh- through 12th-graders have been identified as at-risk students in danger of dropping out for social, academic or economic reasons.

In ECISD, at-risk eighth- through 12th-graders can take catch-up classes three nights a week while attending regular school.

The district has had 800 at-risk students take one or more of the classes during the past three years. During the past year, 63 junior high pupils and 179 high school students took at least one course, while 20 were already out of regular school and earned enough credits to receive their diplomas.

Mercer said he and other administrators have been studying San Angelo school district's alternative school, which is similar to MISD's program.

"We really like what we're seeing there," Mercer said. "We won't be able to do it next year, but we may have something by 1990-91.

"We would try to certainly find existing facilities for it, but we just really looked into the logistics of the program itself and haven't yet planned that far."

Mercer said the district would seek funding through the federal Job Training Partnership Act and other organizations.

MISD trustee Ken Marks said the Midland community desperately needs a bigger dropout program and supports the district's proposal.

"We have to get down and take a good, hard look at it," Marks said. "If we could get those youngsters so they can pursue their education, I think that would be a great thing."

But Paris said the plan's existence relies on jumping the hurtles of finance and location.

State and JTPA funds have maintained the school, but the district must seek outside donations to support the expansion. The Abell-Hanger Foundation awarded the school a $40,000 grant for the 1987-88 and 1988-89 school years.

Better communication can prevent shoplifting, according to seminar

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Shoplifting — which has been called society's costliest crime — can be prevented, but not by more police, better alarms and locked merchandise cabinets.

It takes communication, between business owners and the thieves, and between store employees, experts reported at Tuesday's seminar aimed at preventing shoplifting.

Shoplifting from Midland stores is a "severe problem that affects us all," said Bill Stovall of First City National Bank, the co-sponsor of the seminar with Midland police.

In an hour-long video shown at the Midland Park Mall Cinema, experts explained how to safeguard a business against shoplifting, including the use of cameras, cash registers placed near the door, displays kept at eye-level or below, and signs warning against shoplifting. But the most important antidote is a well-trained sales staff that greets every customer and can spot potential thieves.

Losses to thieves have been estimated at 5 percent of any retail shop's business, "but we know better," said Sgt. Lalo Camarillo of the police crime prevention unit.

The busiest thieves in Midland are housewives, according to Camarillo, followed closely by youngsters.

"The kids do it for kicks," the officer said of the juvenile problem. "The store won't miss it, they think. I want to be a big shot. The check-out line is too long. The store's prices are too high."

Shoplifters, especially the professionals, often use "boosters" when they are at work. The boosters may be a shopping bag which looks full but is empty or an empty gift-wrapped package. An umbrella that can be opened long enough to drop some items in it, then re-closed, also is a favorite tool. Diaper bags, knitting bags, oversized purses, and briefcases also should grab the attention of sales clerks, according to Camarillo.

"Palming" and the "grabber" also are terms that are in the shoplifting lexicon, the officer said.

Painting contractor does little farming on the side

It's no leisurely haven yet. It may never be. But it could be. That's sort of his dream.

Schneider is a volunteer farmer. He sought out the work. He asked for it. Begged.

"This turned out to be something I always wanted to do," said the middle-aged farmer who still has to work in town to help support his farming. "I have to hustle to hold onto the land. It's not something you can make a living at per se."

Schneider has been the farming route before.

He was raised on a 160-acre cotton farm near Sparenberg south of Lamesa in Dawson County. "We farmed with a two-row tractor," he recalled.

Schneider acutely remembers the Dust Bowl of the 1950s and earlier days when "farming was a little different." His family raised beef, chickens and pork and harvested a vegetable garden to help feed the family.

"Most farmers back then planted gardens." And his father, now retired, worked in town as a carpenter when he wasn't working the farm.

"I love farming," said the 54 year-old farmer who raises cash crops — cotton to tomatoes.

He won't harvest the cotton 'til fall. But now, as summer is just beginning, he will be harvesting his truck crop and taking much of the fruit, including tomatoes, and vegetables such as okra, corn, black-eyed peas, squash and onions to market — the Permian Basin Farmers Market in Midland, Odessa and Big Spring. He is growing watermelons and cantaloupes.

"Most farmers are not going to pick it and deliver it free," said Schneider, who, by trade, is a painting contractor. He is still paying for the land. And much of his cash reserves went to the down payment on the farm and for drilling two water wells to supplement the rainfall, which sometimes is a rare phenomenon.

"I had a garden in town," Schneider said. "I always grew tomatoes. I like to watch things grow."

MC trustees approve proposed $12.1 million operating budget

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland College trustees Tuesday unanimously approved a proposed $12.1 million operating budget for 1990 that is about $1.2 million higher than last year and reflects a 6 percent across-the-board increase in salaries.

Even so, college president Jess Parrish doesn't foresee a property tax hike for 1989 due to the $1 million increase in state funding, which Texas lawmakers approved last month.

"What we're doing, we're doing with mirrors and there's no tax increase reflected in these figures at all," Parrish said in proposing the budget to trustees at their first budget study session of the summer.

Besides the increase in faculty salaries, Parrish also is asking for a $64,307 increase in staff benefits, $190,332 more for general academic courses, $426,624 more for resident instruction and $630,000 for capital improvements.

Parrish pointed out the 6 percent salary increase reflected in next year's budget is the first in four years. "I promised the faculty that I would work with the board and put all the money into salaries that I could," he said.

In addition, Parrish is asking for a variety of capital improvements, including a $75,000 wood floor for Chaparral Center, that was put off because of declining revenues, which he attributed to the three-year downturn in the local and state economies.

About $6 million — or 54 percent — of the college's total revenue comes from state aid, with $168,973 derived the federal government, $3.2 million from local property taxes, and $933,332 from tuition and fees.

Expenditures break down as follows: instruction, 45 percent; physical plant, 16 percent; administration, 15 percent; general instruction, 4 percent; staff benefits, 6 percent; and other costs, 14 percent.

In a related topic, trustees voted unanimously to revise the college's health insurance policy, raising the deductible from $100 to $300 and eliminating prescription medicines from the coverage.

Make-A-Wish providing teen whale of a time at Sea World

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

Michael Brown beat the medical odds when he celebrated his first birthday. Sixteen birthdays later, the cheerful, redheaded Midland youngster is still disproving the doctors' best guesses about his prognosis.

This morning, Michael, his 15-year-old cousin and best friend Russell Hubbard and his mother, Barbara, boarded a Southwest Airlines jet for a "dream trip" to San Antonio and Sea World.

Frail of body — but not of spirit — 5-foot tall, 73-pound Michael is the 18th child to be granted a wish by the West Texas chapter of the Make-A-Wish Foundation, since the group's founding two-and-a-half years ago.

Looking far less than his 17 years, Michael beams when he talks about Shamu, the killer whale; Lone Star, the harbor seal pup; and the other marine life at the San Antonio theme park.

Mrs. Brown expects her son to easily recognize the park and its various attractions. His favorite videotapes for the VCR are three Sea World specials, which he has watched dozens of times, she said.

"I know where Shamu Stadium and the dolphin stadium are," Michael said. The most recent ABC Sea World special was filmed in San Diego, but Michael has two earlier shows from the San Antonio park, "their grand opening and the All-Star Lone Star Celebration," on tape as well, he said.

Michael's development has been severely slowed by a combination of congenital heart defects — transposition of the great vessels of the heart, tricuspid atresia, ventricular septal defect and pulmonary hypertension — since birth and he developed adolescent scoliosis — curvature of the spine — about four years ago, his mother said.

Michael is living proof that "there is always hope and that children have a strong will to live, overcoming odds that older people might give up on," she said.

Michael's name was submitted to the Make-A-Wish Foundation by his teachers at the Midland Cerebral Palsy Center, where he gets most of his schooling. Science is his favorite subject, "but I don't like math," he added emphatically.

However, this year Michael was able to attend class at Lee High School one hour a day as well.

Russell also attends Lee, where he will be a junior this fall, and has a unique understanding of Michael's condition. The same heart defects claimed the life of his infant sister several years ago.

Michael's fragile medical condition will make it impossible for the family to visit the vast water park during the heat of the day. Daytime will be devoted to cooler activities, such as the six-story IMAX rounded-screen movie theater, the wax museum and the Alamo, during their five-day stay.

"I'd like to go (to Sea World) a couple of times while we're there," he said. "They have fireworks every night."

The disappointment was evident in Michael's face when he mentioned not being able to attend last weekend's Air Show. "It was too hot and the tickets were too much," he said.

"I really wanted to see the C-5A and the B-1."

Michael's wish come true this week is thanks to "the generosity of many companies and individuals," according to Denton Hines, vice president of the local Make-A-Wish chapter.

"Southwest Airlines donated the airfare and the admission tickets for Sea World and La Quinta motels has agreed to provide rooms for Make-A-Wish kids anywhere in the country," Hines said.

Of the 17 wishes granted by the local group, trips to Disney World — five of them — have been the most popular request made by children.

Wright says he might consider running in special election

By JAMES R. PIEROBON
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Former House Speaker Jim Wright refused Tuesday to repudiate supporters' efforts to draft him for a special election to the Texas congressional seat he is expected to vacate next week.

Wright, who gave up the speakership and resigned his Fort Worth seat amid charges of official wrongdoing, said he might consider running in a special election later this year if "an absolutely genuine draft of a bipartisan nature" materialized.

"I am not sure that I would even consider it then, but I do very earnestly appreciate it," Wright said in a statement released by his staff in Washington and Fort Worth.

Fred Meyer, chairman of the Texas Republican Party, said Wright could not gain bipartisan support for re-election.

"In my opinion, Jim Wright said that he was going to resign and the people who elected him...expect him to do that," Meyer said.

In resigning the speakership May 31 amid charges that he skirted House limits on outside income and accepted improper gifts, Wright said he would give up the seat he has held since 1955 by the end of the month.

"Only he knows how it feels to go from being speaker to a normal member of Congress. There's a vast difference," said Bob Slagle, chairman of the Texas Democratic Party.

Some Fort Worth political activists expressed surprise at Wright's willingness to permit the draft effort to gather steam. Others saw it as the best way for him to win personal vindication from allegations he broke House rules.

"A guy like Jim will find it very difficult to turn down this kind of groundswell," said a supporter who attended a Saturday brunch in Fort Worth honoring Wright's 35 years of House service.

The supporter, who requested anonymity, said the brunch turned into a rally calling on Wright not to surrender his political career.

The special election to fill the seat would likely be held Aug. 12.

Wright's resignation from the House would leave the chamber's ethics committee without jurisdiction to pursue the charges against him. But if he returned to Congress before the end of the current session in December 1990, the panel again would have jurisdiction. The committee has delayed considering motions to dismiss the principal charges against Wright pending his departure.

Some observers questioned why Wright would want to continue defending and possibly face additional charges now that he has surrendered the nation's highest legislative post.

"He just can't resist these people coming to him," said another supporter who also requested anonymity.

Most political observers believe Wright is popular enough to win the seat without a serious challenge in a special election.

While resigning and then winning back his seat would make Wright the most junior member of Congress in seniority, he still could exert influence based on his relations with House leaders and committee chairmen, including three from Texas: Democrats Jack Brooks of the Judiciary Committee; Eligio "Kika" de la Garza of the Agriculture Committee; and Henry B. Gonzalez of the Banking Committee.

Some House Democrats fear the prospect of Wright's return might re-ignite the partisan bickering that has dominated the chamber this year. The infighting has waned since Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., became speaker last week.

Foley said he believes Wright would be re-elected in a special election and that it would demonstrate the strong support that exists in the district for him.

"It's never bad for the party to have constituents expressing support," Foley said.

Salary and Insurance Committee chairman Ken Peeler told fellow board members that the revisions should keep rising premiums in check, although the administration still anticipates a 15 percent net increase in the annual rate this year.

In other action Tuesday, trustees authorized the administration to submit application for a veterinary technology program to the Coordinating Board, Texas Higher Education.

Plans to implement the program have been under study for about a year, although Parrish doesn't foresee it being implemented in the near future.

"It's a high-cost program and wouldn't get underway until we determine that we have adequate funding," he said.

Also, trustees:

■ Voted unanimously to continue its bank depository contract with NCNB of Midland.

■ Passed a resolution approving a written college investment policy for accreditation purposes.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Scholtzky's burglary suspect free on bond

From Staff Reports

A 26-year-old Midland has been charged with burglary for breaking into the Scholtzky's Sandwich shop the same night it was set on fire, according to officials.

David Fowler, 26, was charged with burglary of a building and released on $5,000 bond, according to Midland County records.

Assistant Fire Marshal Lon Dominguez said he recommended the charge be burglary with intent to commit arson.

The June 10 fire heavily damaged the shop, located in the Plaza Center shopping center. The business appeared to be have been vandalized. Cups and food were thrown around, and a small amount of silverware was believed taken, Dominguez said.

A cash register was opened in the business during the burglary, he noted.

Napkins and toilet tissue were lit to set the fire, Dominguez said.

Burglary suspects arrested

Two Midland men were arrested late Tuesday as they were loading videocassette recorders from a rental business, according to police reports.

The men, ages 22 and 24, are expected to be charged today with burglary of a building, police Lt. Earl Luckey said.

The duo was arrested at Ike's Rent to Buy, 1203 N. Lamesa Road, about 11:30 p.m. At about 11:20, police were notified that an alarm had been tripped at the business. When officers arrived, they spotted the suspects on the roof, Luckey said.

One suspect ran down an alley and escaped, police said.

Three locks had been cut from gates by bolt cutters, and the suspects had also moved cinder blocks to gain entrance, Luckey said.

Six videocassette recorders valued at about $2,600 had been removed from their display area when officers arrived, according to reports.

Ex-CNB teller charged

Guadalupe Martinez, a 37-year-old ex-teller for Community National Bank in Midland, has been charged in federal court with embezzling $140,000 from the bank.

She was to appear before U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton today to enter a plea on the charge, according to U.S. Assistant Attorney Tom Beery.

Ms. Martinez was charged by information with purloining the funds between January 1987 and March 1989.

The woman is accused of making fictitious cash-out teller tickets of $140,000.

Tough battle expected on SSC bill

By JENNIFER DIXON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation is pending before the House that authorizes $200 million to begin construction of the super collider next year, but supporters say they may have a fight on their hands when the bill gets to the floor.

"I think it could be a tough battle," says Rep. Jim Chapman, a member of the House Appropriations Committee, "so I have asked the committee chairman to move it quickly. He promised we'll have our bill on the floor by next week."

Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash., has also promised quick consideration of the legislation, Chapman said.

The Sulphur Springs Democrat said opponents of the super collider could be well-organized by the time the bill is on the House floor, but that moving the legislation quickly may be a way to end run such opposition efforts.

"The bottom line is that at each step of the process we become a larger and larger target for those who oppose the project," Chapman said. "We're out of the committee process, no longer in the back rooms of Congress; now we're on the floor of the House, where C-SPAN watches everything we do."

The House Appropriations Committee on Tuesday voted to spend $200 million on the super collider in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1, setting aside $110 million for construction and $90 million for research and development of what would be the largest scientific instrument ever built.

The vote came less than a week after the Appropriations subcommittee on energy and water development approved the collider funds as part of a spending package for Energy Department and U.S. Army Corps of Engineers projects.

"People who oppose the super collider do so with some jeopardy," Chapman warned, pointing to the thousands of energy and water projects in the bill that affect many members' districts.

"Anyone who wants to take on the super collider and strip it out of this bill, having it unanimously approved by the subcommittee and unanimously approved by the full committee, would do so at some risk," Chapman said.

Chapman said there is "some grumbling out there" about the collider, and some members who believe their priority projects did not get a proper allocation could be resentful of the collider's $200 million appropriation.

President Bush, however, had sought $250 million for the project, which would be built south of Dallas.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen acknowledged after the vote that finding the $250 million will be difficult as the focus on the project shifts to the Senate.

"However, I believe the case for the SSC is compelling and I am working to ensure that adequate funding is available to begin construction in 1990," said Bentsen, a Texas Democrat.

Chapman said he was able to strike language in the subcommittee bill that said funding for ultimate construction may become more difficult in future years.

Chapman said that language was inserted by staff, and that he sought to have it removed because "that kind of equivocation sends the wrong kind of signal" to the foreign countries the Energy Department wants to recruit to help share the construction costs.

DEATHS

Frances Douglas

Funeral services for Frances Faulk Douglas of Midland will be at 10 a.m. Thursday at St. Luke's United Methodist Church in Midland. Burial will be at 10 a.m. Friday in Rosehill Cemetery in Fort Worth.

Mrs. Douglas died Tuesday.

She was born Nov. 7, 1901 in Waco and had been a resident of Fort Worth until 1984 when she moved to Midland as a resident at Trinity Towers.

Survivors include one daughter, Genevieve Frances Douglas Hawley of Midland; two grandchildren; two great-grandchildren; seven nieces and two nephews.

SCHOOL

Paris said he already has begun seeking help from corporations and foundations.

"At this point in time it's very doubtful that any of the corporations are going to come through with a half million dollars," he said. "We're in the process of applying to two or three of the local foundations."

MISD lost its lease in Dellwood Mall and must move out by Aug. 31.

Superintendent Joe Baressi said mall officials wanted to remove what they perceived as an unsavory element. The students represent varying backgrounds and social attitudes. One student in this year's school had a Mohawk haircut and earrings, while another had hair down his back.

Jack Geers, mall property manager, would not elaborate on why the school no longer was welcome.

"I don't know what I'm allowed to say and what I'm not allowed," Geers said. "We do have a bigger tenant looking at that space. They'll take that whole wing of the mall."

Paris said it should be easy to find a new home for the school. "We're going to try to make it more on the east side of town," he said.

Confrontation with dog leads to drug bust

FORT WORTH (AP) — A drug bust that started with a confrontation between a mailman and a basset hound has resulted in the naming of two men and a woman in an 11-count federal indictment, authorities say.

The indictment returned Tuesday names Charles Kenneth Apodaca, 32, Sylvia Apodaca, 40, and Ira Wayne Privette, 42, and accuses them of assaulting a mail carrier, manufacturing amphetamine and illegal possession of firearms, including a machine gun.

The incident that led to their arrest began when a mailman used chemical spray to protect himself from a basset hound owned by Charles Apodaca.

The mailman continued on his route, but was confronted by Charles Apodaca, who threatened him with a board for spraying his dog with the chemical.

While the men struggled over the board, a witness called police.

The officer summoned to the scene said he noticed a strong odor commonly associated with illegal speed labs coming from Apodaca's clothing and wafting from his home.

A subsequent search of the home turned up laboratory equipment, more than $5,000 in cash, 16 guns, one-half pound of street-ready amphetamine powder and three quarts of amphetamine liquid, police said.

An Arlington warehouse believed to be the distribution point for the operations was also raided. Officers said they seized stolen cars, guns, more than $7,900 in cash, more amphetamine powder and small quantities of cocaine and marijuana.

Cook returns to England

FARMER

And much does grow here.

"You know," he said with a farmer's optimism, "we can raise practically anything in this part of the country" if the water from direct rainfall is timely and well water is there. However, there is a "but" to that. But because of the "labor intensity," big-time vegetable farming in West Texas is risky and expensive — possibly debt-building expensive — and mostly sidestepped for relatively small-time farming. "There's too much labor involved." But the "awfully big" farmers in California, for example, make a go of it through cooperatives through which they buy expensive harvesting equipment.

But Schneider's one-man operation is a full-time venture for him when he's not painting. "Of course, the painting business has been real slow."

In addition to the hard work, farming, even working a small plot such as Schneider's 26 acres south of Midland, is expensive. There is his labor — hardly an 8-to-5 routine. Generally, he begins work at dawn and toils into dark.

The fruit of his labor and that of dozens of Midland-Odessa area farmers will be up for sale beginning next week. Throughout the summer and fall harvest seasons, the farmers will be taking their produce to market. Some people will come out to the farm and, for example, pick roasting ears and okra.

However, many like the convenience of the grocery store, where many fruits and vegetables are on showroom display and fairly well preserved in the days and weeks following picking.

Dozens of West Texas farmers, such as Schneider, Jerome and Betty Hoelscher, Bill and Shirley Holiman, and Bill Tarlton, will be taking their produce to market beginning next week. Weekly market days are set for:

• Monday and Friday in Midland at Carter Street and U.S. Highway 80 East (Front Avenue).

• Tuesday and Saturday in Midland at Princeton Avenue and the old Wild River Canyon parking lot.

• Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday in Odessa off Golden Avenue.

• Wednesday in Big Spring at Highland Mall.

The fresh vegetables and fruit will on sale from about 8 a.m. "until it's sold out," noted Midkiff farmer Jerome Hoelscher, who is president of the Permian Basin Farmers Market.

Though some farmers were "hailed out" in recent weeks, and crops of other farmers suffered from the searing 100-plus-degree spring temperature, there will be plenty of fresh produce at the market, noted Earnest Kiker, Midland County agricultural agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"It looks real good," Kiker said today. "We had some producers who got hailed out."

Many replanted. Others are waiting for new blooms and fruit on their crops.

"There's enough to open the market," he said. "We have a real good market. They (producers) are all geared up. We've got the (market) locations cleaned up and ready for the people."

And many of those in-town people, who will be shopping for fresh produce, grew up on farms and recall gardening, Schneider noted. And the taste of fresh produce is better than the taste of cold-storage fruits and vegetables, he said.

While he is hoping for good produce and good sales, Schneider is striving to make his operation work despite discouragements.

"Old-time farmers say you can't make a living on 26 acres," he said. And the hardest part of farming is "paying the bills."

"But it depends on how well you want to live and how hard you want to work. Right now," Schneider lamented, "I'm not living too high on the hog."

However, the farmer said he is "just as happy now as when I was making good money painting back during the boom" of the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Farming appeals to Schneider. He enjoys working the soil on "God's green Earth — something I can put the plow into."

Court will hear poor schools' lawsuit

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court today agreed to consider the lawsuit brought against the state by poor school districts claiming the state's method of funding public education is unconstitutional.

The high civil appeals court scheduled oral arguments July 5 in the landmark Edgewood vs. Kirby case.

Poor school districts have challenged the state system, saying they cannot raise enough property taxes to enrich education funding with local dollars to the same extent that wealthy districts can.

Public school education in Texas is funded through a mixture of state and local funds.

In 1987, poor school districts won a round in the battle when a state district judge held that education is a fundamental right and that equal access to funds was lacking in the state's financing method.

But the 3rd Court of Appeals in Austin later overturned that decision. Plaintiffs in the suit appealed to the state Supreme Court.

Gov. Bill Clements recently signed into law a $450 million school finance bill designed to help close the gap between poor and wealthy schools, but representatives of poor school districts said that is not enough.

Sid Pruitt, president of the Equity Center, said about $1.2 billion was needed for the two-year budget period to make a "good down payment" on the issue of equity funding.

Jimmy Vasquez of the Edgewood school district, the San Antonio system that is the lead plaintiff in the lawsuit, said in a news conference Monday, "The time is now to move swiftly to remedy the situation through our Supreme Court."

When the 3rd Court overturned State District Judge Harley Clark's decision it ruled the state's funding method was unequal, but not unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court, in agreeing to hear the case, said it will review six alleged points of error in the 3rd Court's decision.

The alleged points of error include whether the appeals court failed to recognize that school finance systems may not deny equal education opportunities unless the state shows it has a "substantial" reason for doing so.

Also in question is whether the 3rd Court erred in not holding that the Texas system of funding public education meets the constitutional guarantee that it be efficient.

Police think case of poisoned tree to be solved soon

AUSTIN (AP) — Police, who have a suspect in the poisoning of the centuries-old Treaty Oak, hope to solve the case soon, says an officer involved in the investigation.

Sgt. John Jones, who declined to give details Tuesday about the suspect, said people have been calling with tips about the poisoning of the historic live oak.

The tree was poisoned when Velpar, a Du Pont-made herbicide, was poured around its base several months ago.

SHOP

The former refers to the technique used to pick up a small item, such as cosmetics or cologne bottle, then walk away with it cupped in the hand. The grabber is a thief who stations a getaway car and accomplice near an exit, then snatches an armful of items and bolts out the door.

County Attorney Mark Dettman, whose office prosecutes shoplifters, left no doubt about his position.

"As far as I'm concerned, if someone steals from your store, I don't see a good reason not to prosecute," Dettman said. He advised against letting a thief go if he offers to pay for the items.

"That is a license to steal," he noted. "Almost all cases should be prosecuted."

Prison overcrowding, the bane of law enforcement officials throughout the state, also adds to the shoplifting problem. Dettman brought up the example of a thief who might get a 25-year prison sentence for repeated offenses.

"A 25-year-sentence sounds great, but in two Christmases you will be seeing him again," he said.

First time shoplifters likely will be fined but will not serve any time in jail, the prosecutor said.

"The value of the fine is that we get a final theft conviction," Dettman said, noting that is not always the case with a probated sentence. After a second offense, prosecutors can recommend 30 days in jail, and if the merchandise stolen was valued above $200, a 90-day sentence is likely.

Midland prosecutors like to see shoplifters punished, Dettman said.

"I don't like thieves," he said. "They are at the very bottom of my list."

Other wishes have ranged from things as simple as the companionship of a dog and an airplane ride, to a computer and desktop publishing system for an aspiring journalist, and a two-story playhouse, valued at more than $10,000, although all the materials and labor were donated.

The foundation grants wishes for children between the ages of 3 and 18 with life-threatening medical conditions.

Said Hines: "I don't think there is anything that makes you feel better than seeing the look on the face of our wish children."

Artist recreates nature scenes on delicate porcelain pieces

NOCONA, Texas (AP) — In the quiet wooded hills of Red Bud Acres, an artist paints with brushes on a surface most artists would not want their paint to touch.

Ethel Murry is a porcelain artist who takes pieces of white china and paints fiery red apples, blueberries or flowers on them, decorating them to appear as natural as if they had been made with painted designs.

She said she notices natural scenes around her and transposes them to porcelain.

"Living a good life from day to day requires the skill of an artist, so living may really be a fine art for me," she said.

She has a jewel box lined with red velvet with a rose pattern decoration. The "rose bowl" won a first place ribbon at the 1979 State Fair of Texas in Dallas.

After painting pieces of porcelain, Ms. Murry heats them in a kiln, where the paint is absorbed. She also lines porcelain chinaware with 14 karat gold.

"The gold is liquefied and we put two or three layers on with a brush — a brush that is not used for anything else, because it can contaminate the gold," she said.

Her works have won ribbons in the "Gold Work" category of the fair.

She has a piece of porcelain decorated in wild rose patterns in blue monochrome. Other porcelain vases sport blackberries and 18-karat gold edging. Still other pieces are porcelain portraits.

Ms. Murry began painting porcelain 11 years ago. She lived in Lewisville, then and worked as a beautician in a parlor she still owns. A customer talked her into trying porcelain painting, and she attended a class on the subject at the Lewisville Ben Franklin store, she said. She moved to the ranch outside Nocona two years ago, where her husband, Bill, works cattle.

But her background in art is lengthy. She got her start in water colors as a child. Although she received no formal training in porcelain art outside of the Ben Franklin demonstration, Ms. Murry said she has done her own research and discussions with well-known porcelain artists.

Besides, she said, with her love of beautiful china, she found painting on china was a natural.

"Porcelain is much more challenging than canvas. It is not an art that you do quickly; it is a challenge to capture the nature," she said.

Porcelain painting involves careful study of the shape of the piece before a design is drawn, she said. She then draws on paper and paints by looking at the pattern, she said.

Because she avoids tracing the pattern directly, Ms. Murry said the design has more life, which only freehand drawing can give.

She said one piece can take about two weeks to produce, and she has produced hundreds since taking up the hobby that quickly turned into a full-time business.

Texas breeder finds wolves popular pet

STINNETT, Texas (AP) — David Vaughn isn't afraid of the Big, Bad Wolf. In fact, until recently, he had 11 wolves at his door — and they were on the inside.

Vaughn is the owner of Shadow and Timber, two pets that are more wolf than dog. Both are three-quarters McKenzie Valley Timberwolf and a quarter German Shepherd.

The 2½-year-old Timber gave birth to nine cubs seven weeks ago. Shadow, the proud father, is 3 years old.

After seeing an ad in Outdoor Magazine, Vaughn said he decided to purchase a McKenzie Valley Timberwolf. And after Shadow arrived, Vaughn wanted to start breeding, so he ordered a female.

Vaughn paid $600 for each wolf plus $130 to have them flown to Texas from Alaska.

"From everything I've read, McKenzie Valley is the largest strain of wolves and they are basically a gray wolf," he said.

He decided to buy this particular type of wolf mix because he said he likes the temperament and intellect of shepherds.

"Wolves have a third more brain capacity than a dog, so they remember real well," Vaughn said.

Other breeders breed wolves with malamutes or huskies, Vaughn said. Some mixes can have as much as seven-eighths wolf in them.

"The breeder I bought my wolves from has some that are seven-eighths part wolf," Vaughn said. "He said you can't tell them from full-blooded wolves, but they are still controllable."

All nine cubs from Timber's first litter are sold, Vaughn said, adding there is fairly good market in the area. Each cub went for $350, but Vaughn said $500 isn't out of the question. The cubs found homes as far away as Arkansas and Kansas.

Vaughn said the morning they were born it was 34 degrees below zero. Shadow dug a large den under the back porch that had an opening only about 20 inches wide — just big enough for Timber to enter, he said.

"I put some straw in the den after they were born because it was so cold and they immediately threw it back out," Vaughn said. "After doing some reading I found out wolves only want a clean dirt den, and by putting the straw in there, I had dirtied it."

After about three weeks the cubs started coming out of the den and at four weeks, Vaughn said he took them out and started feeding them dry food.

They eat Science Diet, a high-protein food that can only be purchased from a veterinarian.

"It's more expensive than regular dog food, but it is more nutritious so they eat less," he said.

Although the cubs have a slightly different look than regular dogs, one trait that gives them away is their yellow eyes. Vaughn explained that the pups' eyes are just beginning to turn yellow, which is characteristic of all wolves.

"At birth their eyes were black, but by six months they will be yellow."

Wolves, according to Vaughn, have two layers of fur. The outside layer is called guard hair and the under-layer is thick and warm like wool.

"When it rains they look soaked but their skin is dry," he said. "The guard hair repels dirt, water and snow."

The wolf traits are very dominant, Vaughn said. Unlike a female dog, Timber showed off her cubs. Shadow helped clean them, babysat and he never abandoned them or Timber. Wolves are very family-oriented, Vaughn said.

In the wild, he said, once wolves pair up they are mates for life, but once they are domesticated, that changes.

Vaughn said several people have asked him if the wolves are dangerous.

"I haven't seen them be mean or aggressive to other people except the meter reader and strange animals."

According to Vaughn, they make good watchdogs and if you want them aggressive they can be trained. Shadow and Timber haven't been taught to be aggressive because Vaughn has a 7-year-old son, Samuel.

"My son plays with them all the time, but I do supervise him," Vaughn said.

Shadow and Timber are very territorial of their backyard, Vaughn said. They use their scent glands on their tails and around their feet to mark their territory, he said.

Normally among wolves the male is the dominant figure in a pack. Shadow is the dominant figure, Vaughn said.

"The others will fight among themselves, but not with the dominant figure," he said.

Another wolf trait is howling and the cubs howled from the beginning, Vaughn said.

"Someday I would like to retire and do only this," Vaughn said. "The only problem is I wouldn't be retired!"

Hobby blasts business lobbyists

House considering comp bill

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby blasted business lobbyists as "idiots" Tuesday as lawmakers returned to the Capitol for a special session to work out reform of the way injured workers are compensated.

The House Business and Commerce Committee gave a quick review to the pro-business House Bill 1 by Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, before it sent the bill to the House floor. House Speaker Gib Lewis said he hopes the House will pass the bill on to the Senate Thursday so the two chambers can start working toward a compromise by this weekend.

While senators worked on another version, which is expected to be more palatable to organized labor and trial lawyers, Hobby said business lobbyists were "incredibly silly" to fight over whether juries should hear appeals of workers compensation awards.

"Some of the idiots who represent the business community take great exception to trial by jury," Hobby said, but insurance companies, which represent businesses, call for 57 percent of those jury trials.

The Senate bill, to be introduced today, will keep a limited right to trial by jury, Hobby said, adding that the issue should be resolved quickly now that special interests are out of the negotiations.

After waiting in vain for the interest groups to work out an agreement during the past two years, Hobby said, "Now is the time for legislators to come and write a bill."

He added, "I'm really not much concerned any more with what business, labor, lawyers, whatever, agree to."

The Senate version, which takes up where House and Senate conferees left off at the end of the session, would eliminate "trial de novo," or new trials in district court on compensation appeals, but although district court juries could still review awards.

Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, said the Senate plan also would personalize the House plan of compensating workers for various impairments. He also predicted the Senate also would stand firm on safety requirements in an attempt to reduce costly injuries.

The Senate version will order reductions in insurance premiums, he said. "If we don't do anything about rates, we're wasting everybody's time," he said.

The House committee Tuesday evening advanced House Bill 1 despite the opposition of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association, whose main objection was to elimination of jury involvement, and the Texas AFL-CIO, which is seeking stronger safety requirements and more money for injured workers.

Gov. Bill Clements has pledged to keep the Legislature in session as long as it takes to produce a "satisfactory" reform bill that eliminates "trial de novo," a term he has used interchangeably with jury trials.

Lewis said he expected the House to stick as close as possible to the recommendations of an interim task force that studied the problem and sought statewide input over 18 months before it made its report.

The Teamsters visited the Capitol looking for support for labor's position on the proposed worker's compensation legislation, the issue which made the special session necessary.

STATE

"Some of the idiots who represent the business community take great exception to trial by jury."
— Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby

House Bill 1 was based upon that report.

Among the recommendations was that the state restrict compensation appeals and increase its benefits to injured workers. Lewis said 47 states do not allow jury trials on appeals. "Those states...are eating our lunch as far as competitiveness in industrial development," he said.

But he would not rule out jury trials in the process. "I think there ought to be some system in place where someone under some circumstances are entitled to trial by jury," he said.

Lewis also said Clements told him he expected to open the call "somewhere along the way" to allow a bill to expand the University of Texas at Dallas to four-year undergraduate status and to make the creation of a new state university in Killeen contingent upon Coordinating Board approval. Lewis said Clements also was considering opening the call to unspecified college mergers.

Clements, at the urging of Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, vetoed a bill that would have expanded UT-Permian Basin as well as UT-Dallas and would have established Pan American University at Brownsville as a free-standing university.

Craddick also said he believes most House members were satisfied with the original workers compensation reform bill, but he was willing to consider the compromises Smith has proposed, including the stronger language on worker safety.

In the three weeks since the regular session, Craddick said, most of the reaction he heard was from people who were mad that the Legislature did not pass the workers compensation reform bill. "We passed a bill that was acceptable," he said of the House, but Craddick said he was prepared to wait for the Senate to make its move.

"I think it may be a long session, but I think our only chance is to hold firm," he said.

Nation's schools struggle to fulfill asbestos cleanup law

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The "A-Team" had to wait until classes let out to descend into the boys' gym office at Dimner Beeber Middle School so they didn't frighten students with their masks and billowy, airtight suits.

Their mission is to remove asbestos insulation from a leaking steam pipe as required by a federal law that is forcing every school in the nation to take costly and drastic steps to control a mineral once used widely as a fire retardant. It is now linked to lung cancer and other diseases.

"I've seen people die of asbestosis," said Jim Breslin, abatement supervisor for the Philadelphia School District and a former pipe insulator at the Philadelphia Naval Shipyard. "I'm not interested in catching it."

It's a fight some say could have been avoided if asbestos companies had heeded and divulged early warnings of health risks. Instead, the substance was used in insulation, ceilings, floors and walls for decades.

The Philadelphia School District will have to spend $425.6 million to remove asbestos from more than 400 buildings, including 291 used by children, in addition to more than $50 million already spent on asbestos abatement in the nation's sixth-largest school district.

Every school had to submit an asbestos management plan by May 9 or face fines up to $5,000 a day under the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act of 1986. Some 21 percent of U.S. school systems had violated the law by not filing plans before the original Oct. 12 deadline or obtaining a deferral to May 9.

Pennsylvania schools were fifth-worst with 41.3 percent failing to comply. Indiana had 41.5 percent not in compliance; Maine, 41.9 percent; Virginia, 43.9 percent; and Mississippi, 46.2 percent. Compliance generally has been higher for public than private schools, said Environmental Protection Agency spokeswoman Alicia Tenuta in Washington.

An estimated 44,600 of the nation's 107,000 school buildings contain asbestos that could become dangerous.

Asbestos fibers can cause asbestosis, a scarring of lung tissue that diminishes breathing capacity; mesothelioma, a cancer of the lining of the chest or abdominal cavity; and lung cancer, often long after exposure.

The cleanup law requires only management, not removal, of al asbestos.

"We're talking well into the next century for some of this removal," said Bernard Rafferty, district asbestos cleanup chief. Nevertheless, the district expects to spend $75.8 million fighting asbestos during the next six years.

"We don't question the need to address this environmental hazard," said Albert I. Glassman, associate superintendent for buildings.

"I'm sure responsible school people all over the nation feel the same way. But we do question the imposition of the total burden for doing this on the backs of financially strapped school systems."

Washington has provided little to offset cleanup costs the EPA estimates at $3 billion nationwide. From fiscal 1985-1988, $160 million had been distributed under the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act, with $47.5 million to be distributed this year, said EPA spokesman Lee Blackburn.

"It's clear there's limited resources for schools and a lot of other demands — educational reform issues, increasing teachers salaries, drug education," said Joel C. Packer, coordinator of the Washington-based Asbestos In Schools Coalition. His organization is pushing for more federal money.

The law requires states to review plans and monitor abatement.

The Department of Environmental Resources, ordered by Gov. Robert P. Casey to review the plans, was 3½ months late with its report on compliance. It gave Pennsylvania schools a higher mark than EPA, with 36 percent noncompliance, but the DER still is developing ways to review the plans, casting uncertainty over cleanups that the law requires to start by July 9.

"School districts either cannot go ahead with removal work or run the risk of having to do work over again if it is not approved by DER," said state Sen. Mike Fisher, chairman of the Senate Environmental Resources and Energy Committee.

"We have acknowledged that we've had a slow start, but we're moving very aggressively now," DER Deputy Secretary Mark M. McClellan said. The department is adding staff and plans to hire contractors this summer to speed the reviews.

STATE IN BRIEF

Texan gets new heart

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A Texan whose death was averted by a temporary artificial heart implant was given a new human heart Tuesday.

George Hancock, 35, of El Paso was listed in critical condition as is typical following the 8½-hour operation that was completed at University Medical Center shortly before noon.

Hancock had been kept alive for 112 days by a Jarvik 7-70 artificial heart implanted on Feb. 28. A UMC spokesperson said Hancock had been on a heart transplant waiting list in Albuquerque, N.M., for a month when his condition worsened. He was dying when he was transferred to the Tucson center, the spokesperson said.

Doctors said the deterioration of his heart stemmed from a viral infection.

He was the center's eighth patient for whom an artificial heart served as a temporary bridge to a heart transplant. Three of the others have survived.

Bar OKs regulations

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas lawyers approved new regulations governing their professional conduct, marking the first change in such rules since 1971, the Texas Bar Association said.

The old Code of Professional Responsibility "was viewed by many as being ambiguous, contradictory and irrelevant," said a news release from the bar Tuesday.

The newly adopted Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct are "clear, candid and fair," the bar said.

"By their action, lawyers have demonstrated their abiding concern for protection of the public they serve," said state bar president James B. Sales of Houston.

A total 27,988 lawyers voted in the month-long referendum on the rules change, which was ordered by the Texas Supreme Court. Eighty-one percent voted in favor of the change.

Sales called the action "a remarkable tribute to the members of the State Bar of Texas responsibly exercising the privilege of self-governance on the behalf of the public interest."

Center to be investigated

AUSTIN (AP) — A three-member Senate subcommittee has been appointed to investigate allegations of child abuse at Santo Nino Day Care Center in Laredo, according to a statement from Sen. Judith Zaffirini's office.

Ms. Zaffirini was appointed chair of the subcommittee by Sen. Chet Brooks, chairman of the Senate Committee on Health and Human Services. Brooks, D-Pasadena, also will serve on the committee with Sen. Frank Tejeda, D-San Antonio.

Ms. Zaffirini said the subcommittee would invite District Attorney Joe Rubio and members of the Webb County Grand Jury, "who have done a good job of searching for solutions," to testify.

"We know the regulatory system failed the children at that day care center. We must ensure that such tragedies do not recur," she said.

Police shoot suspect

FORT WORTH (AP) — Police chasing a suspect late Tuesday night opened fire when the suspect got out of a car with some sort of explosive device, authorities said.

The suspect was shot and wounded, but according reports no officers were wounded, said Fort Worth Police Sgt. Harold Rich.

Rich said the chase began in Sansom Park Village, a Fort Worth suburb. The suburban police were joined in the chase by Fort Worth police at about 10:30 p.m. when the suspect crossed the city line.

Rich said the explosive device detonated after the shooting ended, but no one was injured by the blast.

The suspect was sent to Harris Hospital-Fort Worth. Officials at the hospital said a gunshot victim was being treated, but they would not release his identity and did not know if he was involved in the shooting.

Fire causes evacuations

IRVING (AP) — A three-alarm fire at a motel near the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport forced the evacuation of 20 guests but caused no injuries, fire officials said.

There was no immediate explanation for the Tuesday blaze at the three-story Red Roof Inn along Texas Highway 114, nor was there a damage estimate, authorities said.

Thirty firefighters responded, and the fire was reported extinguished about an hour later, said Irving Fire Department dispatcher L.R. McDonald.

The fire burned the structure's roof and attic and damaged 14 rooms. Two firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation and heat exhaustion.

Bill delays retirement

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill prohibiting public colleges and universities from requiring professors with tenure to retire at age 70 has been signed into law by Gov. Bill Clements, according to the Texas Faculty Association.

"This important law ends age discrimination against tenured faculty members in Texas 4½ years ahead of the time when the federal government is scheduled to do the same thing," said association president Kenneth Margerison.

He said Rep. Libby Linebarger, D-Manchaca, had sponsored the bill at the request of Dr. Norman Whalen, professor of anthropology at Southwest Texas State University at San Marcos.

The bill takes effect immediately, according to the faculty association.

State's tourism increases

AUSTIN (AP) — The state's latest national advertising campaign to lure tourists to Texas is doing the job, attracting more than a half million inquiries already this year, the Department of Commerce says.

Officials said Tuesday that a record 529,343 requests for travel information have been received during the first five months of this year, a 184 percent increase over last year. Some 155,000 requests were received in May alone, officials said.

"These statistics indicate that our advertising campaign is achieving one of our major marketing goals — to attract new interest in Texas as a visitor destination," said J. William Lauderback, the department's executive director.

The state is spending $7.2 million this year on tourism advertising, including about $4 million on network and cable television commercials.

Man shot twice in head identified

NEW BOSTON, Texas (AP) — Sheriff's officials used fingerprints to identify a man found shot in the head in a brushy area.

Authorities Tuesday issued an all points bulleten for a car belonging to Alexander Leps, 31, of Atlanta, said Bowie County Sheriff Mary Choate.

Leps was found Monday dying of two bullet wounds to the head in woods near this town 20 miles west of Texarkana in the northeast corner of Texas, said Bowie County Sheriff Mary Choate. New Boston is a town of approximately 4,000 people.

Two girls spotted a bloody sheet Monday that led neighbors to the area. Authorities said Leps was carrying $2,500 in cash.

"The kids apparently saw the sheet and heard some kind of moaning or gurgling. They were afraid to walk in there, so they went to a neighbor's home and the neighbors went in there and found him," said Bowie Sheriff's Capt. Gary M. Owen.

Leps was shot twice in the head with a small-caliber handgun.

He was flown to Wadley Regional Medical Center in Texarkana, where he died about 11 hours later Monday evening.

Authorities say the bloody sheet appears to have been used to carry Leps, leading them to believe there may have been more than one assailant.

"At this time, we don't believe he was shot at that particular place. We believe he was shot somewhere else and transported there," Owen told the Texarkana Gazette.

Ms. Choate said the man had been traveling on Interstate 30.

"We got a description of the van from a relative," Ms. Choate said.

Prison officials hope programs cut recidivism

KYLE (AP) — State officials hope experimental teaching and counseling programs set for use in a new, privately run correctional center will reduce the number of repeat offenders.

Andrews

"If it works, then we should be turning out better citizens," said James Lynaugh, director of the Texas Department of Corrections, who heralded the opening of the Kyle Pre-Release Center on Tuesday.

The 500-bed facility south of Austin will house non-violent state inmates with six to 24 months left in their sentences, said John Bonner, warden.

The center's design is more relaxed than normal prison units, with porcelain bathroom fixtures and bright day rooms and recreation areas. One wing contains numerous carpeted classrooms.

"It's still a prison, but in this environment, a lot of our program is to teach people," said John Andrews, programs manager for Wackenhut Corrections Corp., which will manage the $11.7 million facility.

"What we have to do is de-institutionalize these individuals to a certain extent" to ease their return to society, said Andrews.

The prison has 36 IBM personal computers worth $100,000 for inmates to use in classes to help them earn high school equivalency diplomas, expand existing skills and get jobs, Andrews said.

Six certified teachers and six counselors will be on staff, Andrews said.

Wackenhut, of Coral Gables, Fla., operates a similar facility in California. Three others are to open in Texas in 1989.

State lawmakers authorized construction of the centers, and bonds to pay for them, in 1987 as part of a 25,000-bed increase in the state's prison capacity. The Kyle center will begin accepting inmates June 28.

Many residents of the 3,100-member Kyle community strongly opposed locating the prison there, but city leaders prevailed, saying it would be an economic boost, said former Mayor Sandra Martinez.

Lynaugh said he gained confidence in private management of the facility and in the new programs after working with Wackenhut officials.

"A lot of people are apprehensive about new programs, and we're dealing with a situation that needs to work. Texas needs a solution" to its prison crowding, Lynaugh said.

The state is under a federal court order to keep its prison population under 95 percent capacity.

"I think you're going to see a very successful solution" in the new prerelease centers, which will house a total 2,000 inmates, Lynaugh said.

Daily cost per inmate will be $34.79, about 10 percent less than the amount at which TDC could operate the center, which is a requirement of the contract, Lynaugh said.

Texans' plane forced down by Indian air force fighters

DALLAS (AP) Two Texas businessmen have been questioned in India after their private plane was forced down by two Indian air force fighters because authorities suspected them of espionage, family members and friends say.

The U.S. State Department Tuesday confirmed that Frank Haile Jr., 57, of Dallas, and his companion, Carson Gilmore of Rocksprings, near San Antonio, were detained and interrogated in a remote town in India.

The two men left suburban Addison Airport three weeks ago for a round-the-world trip in a Beechcraft Bonanza V-35B. They reportedly are unharmed.

Family members and friends said they were flying in formation with another aircraft piloted by two West German citizens when the planes, which changed their flight plan to Delhi after they encountered bad weather, were intercepted Friday by the Indian air force fighters near the northwestern border with Pakistan.

All four people were being detained at an airfield in Bhuj, a tiny town about 350 miles northwest of Bombay, friends of the Texas pilots said.

Indian officials confiscated the four pilots' belongings, including their pilot's licenses, passports and aircraft as well as a video camera they believed was being used to film secret Indian airfield operations, family members said.

Frances Jones, a spokeswoman for the State Department's bureau of consular affairs, said a consular officer is enroute to Bhuj to investigate the incident.

Friends and family members in Texas and California have been attempting to locate someone who can help expedite the release of the two men.

Haile's wife, Joan Haile, said she has spoken with her husband once since he was detained and believes he is safe.

"But I really don't know since I haven't spoken with him since Saturday morning," she said.

Haile is the owner and president of a Dallas-based engineering firm, has flown around the world twice and is an experienced long-distance pilot, Mrs. Haile said.

Auditor recommends tighter security for DPS cash division

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Public Safety should consider tighter security for a division that receives about $500,000 per day, and keeps three days' receipts on hand, says the state auditor's office.

The auditor's recommendations for the Central Cash Receiving location were included in a report to DPS management on "selected federal activities" at the DPS for the 1988 fiscal year.

The auditor's report noted that it had expressed no opinion on the DPS's systems of internal control, but said the examination "disclosed no material weaknesses in relation to the department's federal programs."

However, the report said the primary security for Central Cash Receiving "is a security guard at the main entrance to the building. Additionally, personnel are generally aware of persons who do not belong in the area."

The report said the DPS should consider "increasing monitoring of the closed circuit television system, physically restricting access, and installing an alarm system."

DPS management responded by saying it was considering restricting access to the cash receiving division by installing an electric lock door system and an intercom system for requesting entrance.

Shamir urges Israelis not to fight each other

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who has been denounced as a traitor by ultra-nationalist Jewish settlers, urged Israelis not to battle among themselves over how to end the Palestinian uprising.

Shamir also endorsed a proposal to include Jewish settlers in army defense units in the occupied lands despite a recent rise in settler attacks on Palestinians.

In the West Bank city of Nablus, meanwhile, assailants shot and killed taxi driver Hassan Sharoub, a 47-year-old Palestinian who was suspected of cooperating with Israel, radio reports and Arab journalists said.

An army official confirmed a fatal shooting in Nablus and said the circumstances were under investigation.

Sharoub's death brought to 527 the number of Palestinians killed in the 18½-month uprising against Israeli rule in the West Bank and occupied Gaza Strip. The figure includes 64 suspected collaborators. Twenty-three Israelis also have died.

Israeli newspapers reported today that Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin has asked Israeli experts to examine the legality of using harsher measures against Palestinians.

Rabin reportedly wants to deport Palestinians within a week after such an order has been issued. Deportees now can appeal the order and the legal procedure can take months.

Rabin also wants to scrap the possibility of appealing army-ordered house demolitions, the Davar newspaper reported.

The army sometimes destroys or seals the homes of Palestinians suspected of attacks on Israelis. The United States has condemned the practice, saying it denies suspects due process of law because the army usually acts before a suspect has been tried.

Shamir has come under growing pressure from the extreme right to use harsher measures to quell the uprising. His critics also argue that his peace plan, based on elections in the occupied lands, will pave the way for a Palestinian state.

Tuesday, settlers shouted down Shamir as he spoke at the funeral of a U.S.-born West Bank settler allegedly slain by Palestinians.

Shamir said on Israel radio today that disagreements over government policies must not degenerate into domestic strife.

"We must do everything to make sure such a war never happens. This is the most dangerous thing," Shamir said.

"I would suggest to everyone to lower the profile of our internal debates, because if the profile rises you can slide into irresponsible actions," he added.

Shamir's rival in the Likud bloc, ultra-nationalist Industry Minister Ariel Sharon, was met by thunderous applause during Tuesday's funeral. Sharon has engineered a showdown with Shamir over the peace plan at a Likud convention next month.

A poll published by the Yediot Ahronot daily Wednesday indicated Shamir had the support of 55 percent of the 2,600 members of the party's Central Committee. Twenty-one percent opposed it and 24 percent were undecided, the poll said.

In an apparent bid to appease the settlers, Shamir said he backed a proposal to include them in regional defense units. "We can definitely take this path," he said.

In the past, settlers doing army reserve duty were barred from serving near their hometowns. Most Israeli men serve in the reserves for up to two months a year until age 54.

Shamir also criticized an attack Tuesday in which a 23-year-old Jewish settler fired at a group of Palestinians standing at an intersection near Tel Aviv. Two Arabs were wounded, one of them seriously.

250 arrested on Stonehenge's grounds

Police monitor roads around Stonehenge, Wiltshire, in southern England, Monday, in an effort to prevent fun-seekers and would-be worshippers from reaching the ancient monument of standing stones to celebrate today's summer solstice.

AP Laserphoto

AMESBURY, England (AP) — Police said they arrested at least 250 hippies who tried today to enter the grounds of the 4,000-year-old Stonehenge monument before dawn to celebrate the summer solstice.

Six people managed to scale a fence on the perimeter of the famed archaeological site before they were detained, and one of them shouted to reporters, "Free the stones! Free the people!"

Wiltshire police said they had warned about 300 people gathered on a highway near the monument to disperse or face arrest for breaking a ban on processions within a 4-mile radius of Stonehenge.

The police, numbering about 800, later moved in on the crowd, making arrests on the highway and in and around Amesbury, a village 2 miles from Stonehenge.

Stonehenge is a mysterious double circle of gigantic standing stones set in Salisbury Plain about 80 miles southwest of London. It is thought to have been a center for pre-Christian and astronomical worship, because the sun rises over a particular stone.

Most arrests were made for breaches of the Public Order Act banning processions within the exclusion zone, police said. Violators faced a maximum three-month prison sentence.

Police denied access to modern-day druid sun worshipers who in previous years have celebrated the summer solstice — the longest day of the year in the Northern Hemisphere — with a ritual sunrise ceremony at Stonehenge.

About a dozen youths who evaded roadblocks and tried to reach the site under cover of darkness were arrested as they crossed fields.

Police closed all roads to the public and dozens of officers protected by visor: patrolled on horses.

"Our aim was to avoid confrontation and violence and we have achieved that," said Wiltshire deputy police Superintendent Allan Elliott. "Our second aim was to make sure an illegal festival was not established and that also has been achieved. The run-up to the solstice was very quiet this year."

About 2,000 of the hippies gathered for a music festival on specially allocated farmland in Somerset.

Israelis bomb Palestinian guerillas in Lebanon

NAAMEH, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes today bombed the headquarters of a Palestinian guerrilla faction in the hills south of Beirut, and officials said at least eight guerrillas were wounded.

The Israeli army said its air force jets attacked targets that serve as the base for Ahmed Jibril, head of the pro-Syrian Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command.

A spokesman for the Lebanese Civil Defense said rescuers evacuated eight wounded guerrillas from the targeted site — wooded hills of Naameh overlooking the Mediterranean. The spokesman refused to say which faction the guerrillas belonged to.

"All planes returned safely, and the targets were damaged," the Israeli army said in an announcement from Jerusalem. It made no mention of casualties.

It was Israel's ninth air attack into Lebanon this year and the second in a week.

Friday, Israeli warplanes raided south Lebanon's Rashidiyeh Palestinian refugee camp. Police said two children were wounded in the attack.

By police count, nine people have been killed and 60 wounded in the previous eight Israeli air strikes, which began Jan. 11.

Jibril's group is headquartered in the Syrian capital, Damascus, and maintains bases in a chain of tunnels across the Naameh hills.

A police spokesman said four warplanes blasted the hilltop positions in six runs spaced over one hour. Thick palls of dust and smoke billowed from the stricken targets.

Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party militia also has bases in the hills, and his militiaman blocked all roads leading to Naameh, firing AK-47 assault rifles into the air to prevent reporters from passing checkpoints to the stricken area.

"Civilians are not allowed into the area!" shouted one militiaman as the raiding jets roared overhead.

Several Israeli gunboats were seen cruising the Mediterranean off Naameh.

Two Israeli helicopter gunships approached the coast, drawing anti-aircraft fire from Jumblatt's militia and Palestinian guerrillas, but no hits were observed.

The Palestinian guerrilla groups with bases in the area also include George Habash's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine; Nayef Hawatmeh's Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the Palestine Popular Struggle Front.

"But it seems that the main target of the raid is the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command," said a Druse militiaman.

Israeli air, naval and ground forces fought a nine-hour battle with the faction in the Naameh hills on December 9.

U.N. cites threats by South African police in Namibia

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — A campaign of terror by the South African-led police threatens free and fair independence elections in Namibia, the U.N. special representative for Namibia asserts.

Namibian police in armored cars mounted with heavy machine guns reportedly drive through villages destroying crops and terrorizing inhabitants, the official, Martti Ahtisaari, wrote in a letter obtained Tuesday.

"Their activities appear to have created an atmosphere of fear and intimidation among much of the population in the northern region," he wrote Louis Pienaar, South Africa's administrator-general in Namibia.

The letter said a feared counterinsurgency unit called "Koevoet," Afrikaans for crowbar, is behind the terror campaign.

Ahtisaari sent the letter on June 9. No reply has been received, U.N. spokeswoman Nadia Younes said Tuesday.

Ahtisaari is leading a U.N. commission monitoring Pretoria's cooperation with a U.N.-mediated plan to free Namibia from 74 years of South African rule.

November elections for the territory's first black majority-ruled government are scheduled under the independence plan.

Northern Namibia is the homeland of the Ovambo tribe, which supports the South-West Africa People's Organization, known as SWAPO.

Admiral William J. Crowe, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, stands with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Moscow today.

Gorbachev meets top U.S. military chief

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev told the chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff today that his visit was evidence the superpowers are viewing each other more as partners than adversaries.

Gorbachev met Adm. William J. Crowe in a Kremlin office on the last day of a 10-day visit in which Crowe viewed military exercises in Byelorussia, looked at a Soviet nuclear submarine and traveled widely in the Soviet Union.

"The very fact that you have visited the Soviet Union and have visited military facilities and units demonstrates that we are moving from the notion of enemies to the notion of partners," Gorbachev told Crowe in the presence of a handful of reporters.

"I believe that in the plans made by the Joint Chiefs of Staff we are still considered to be adversaries, but the process is going along new lines, and this is extremely significant," the president said.

Crowe, accompanied by U.S. Ambassador Jack Matlock, then met with Gorbachev, his military adviser Marshal Sergei F. Akhromeyev and military Chief of Staff Mikhail A. Moiseyev for about an hour.

"Obviously there still are differences in our points of view," especially on arms control, Crowe said at a news conference later. But he added, "The atmosphere for discussing them has improved markedly.

"I believe we now have an environment in which we can talk candidly, ask the kinds of questions that are important, we can talk without rancor or emotion," he said.

Crowe's visit followed a trip by Akhromeyev to the United States. He is to leave Moscow early Thursday.

The visit came as the United States and Soviet Union resumed talks in Geneva on reducing their arsenals of strategic nuclear missiles, negotiations that were stalled by disagreements and the change of U.S. administrations.

The two sides also are engaged in negotiations on short-range nuclear weapons, chemical weapons and conventional forces in Europe.

Crowe spent much of his visit assessing changes in Soviet military policy under Gorbachev. The policy is based on the concept of "reasonable sufficiency," that the country only needs enough soldiers and military hardware to defend itself.

Gorbachev has said the nation needs to redirect resources from the military to satisfy pent-up domestic demand for food and consumer goods.

Crowe told a Moscow military academy last week that the Soviet Union still has "overwhelming numbers" and that he assumes it might attack.

But he also said the Soviet Union must be given time to make good on promises to cut the size of its armed forces by 500,000 soldiers, take 500 nuclear weapons out of Eastern Europe and withdraw tanks and artillery.

"There is change afoot in this country, politically and militarily," Crow said today, adding that he found Gorbachev "very impressive."

Crowe said Gorbachev's plan to withdraw 500 tactical nuclear weapons from Eastern Europe and President Bush's proposals on reducing conventional forces made him optimistic about superpower arms talks.

"We now believe there are some positive offers, some constructive offers on the table, that both sides are serious and sincere and that we can now continue the process of negotiations and some optimism," Crowe said.

Tourists fly home after iceberg ends voyage

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Charter planes flew hundreds of weary tourists home today after they were plucked from a Soviet ocean liner that had crashed into an iceberg, cutting short a pleasure cruise to the land of the midnight sun.

Workers plugged the holes on the 630-foot cruise ship Maxim Gorky and the vessel steamed toward the island of Spitsbergen today, escorted by two other Soviet vessels, the Soviet news agency Tass said.

Maritime experts said the ocean liner, on a cruise to see the 24-hour summer light in the arctic, was moving too fast when it struck the ice in the Norwegian Sea, 300 miles east of northern Greenland and 180 miles west of Spitsbergen. No one was seriously injured.

Norwegian helicopters flew the aged and most infirm to safety, but some passengers spent up to seven hours huddled under blankets in lifeboats until they were picked up. Others waited on ice floes.

For West German passenger Giesela Rillinger, "It was six hours of nothing but ice floes and the sky. If a storm had come up it would have been all over for us. Six hours of facing death."

The Norwegian coast guard ship Senja evacuated 660 passengers — all but about a dozen West Germans — and 193 Maxim Gorky crew members to Longyearbyen, Norway's administrative center on Spitzbergen island, from where the tourists were flown to Dusseldorf, West Germany.

Capt. Marat S. Galimov and 192 other Soviet crew members remained on the Maxim Gorky, said Sigurd Kleiven, captain of the Senja. Kleiven said it was Galimov's first voyage in the area.

Tour leader Winfried Prinz said he was standing on the bridge next to Galimov when the ship struck the iceberg.

"It happened very fast," Prinz told a reporter in Dusseldorf. "We went into the ice field without warning and unexpectedly, something nobody had counted on. The ship was cruising at normal speed, about 18 knots, so it wasn't exactly slow, as the collision shook the ship," Prinz said.

Kleiven said the liner was moving at 18.4 knots when it hit the ice, tearing a gash 20 feet long and four to six inches wide in the bow.

"I would hardly have sailed faster than two to three knots in such ice-clogged water," Kleiven told reporters on board his coast guard vessel.

But experienced Norwegian sailors agreed the Maxim Gorky had sailed too fast in an area often clogged with ice.

"Not even the coast guard vessels sail faster than three to five knots in such waters," Guttorm Jacobsen, a skipper who has sailed the arctic for 40 years, told the Verdens Gang newspaper. "The Maxim Gorky must have been too eager to keep its schedule."

The newspaper quoted other experts as saying that even if the captain had seen the ice from a distance of 10 miles it would have taken his ship up to 45 minutes to stop from a speed of 18 knots.

Kabul claims Jalalabad siege over

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The government today said the 15-week-old guerrilla siege of Jalalabad had ended with a government victory and that troops were pushing the insurgents toward Pakistan.

Guerrilla leaders denied that the bloodiest battle in the decade-long war was over.

There was no way to independently verify either claim.

Jalalabad, the capital of Nangahar province and once the country's fifth-largest city, came under rocket and artillery bombardment March 7, three weeks after Soviet troops left Afghanistan and ended their nine-year intervention.

"We have conquered Jalalabad from the opponents," said Foreign Ministry spokesman Mohammad Nabi Amani, quoting the province's military commander, Gen. Asif Delawar.

In Pakistan, where the insurgents are based, guerrilla spokesman Azim Nasser-Zia of the moderate National Islamic Front of Afghanistan said of the government claim, "It's certainly not true."

Abdul Rahim, a spokesman for the more fundamentalist Jamiat-i-Islami, added: "The siege is not over. But if they're talking about opening part of the Jalalabad highway, that may be true." He also spoke from Pakistan.

He was referring to the battles for control of the key supply route between Pakistan and Kabul, the capital. Government forces have succeeded in pushing through any number of supply and weapons convoys, but the guerrillas have periodically regained control and sealed off the road.

An editor for the Afghan News Agency, an organ of hard-line guerrilla leader Gulbaddin Hekmatyar, called the report "propaganda." He did not want to be quoted by name.

Amani said government forces had pushed the guerrillas about 15 miles east. "The government's mopping up operations are still continuing. Every day we are able to destroy deserted rebel posts," he said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Vietnam returns possible remains of 28 American

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam today returned the remains of what it says are 28 American servicemen missing from the Vietnam War, and is ready to repatriate 16 others, a U.S. military spokesman said.

A 21-member U.S. military team, headed by Lt. Col. James D. Spurgeon, received the remains in a ceremony at Hanoi's international airport, said Maj. Dan Trout, who accompanied the mission.

Trout said it was learned that 16 other remains would be turned over to the United States but no date has been set.

Today's repatriation was the 10th since August 1987, when a senior delegation to Hanoi obtained promises from the Vietnamese to step up efforts to resolve the issue of the missing in action, or MIAs.

Trout said the remains were delivered in wooden boxes, inspected by a U.S. forensic expert and then transferred into aluminum caskets. An honor guard saluted as an American flag was placed atop each each casket before being loaded into a C-141 transport aircraft.

The aircraft, which flew into Hanoi from Bangkok earlier today, was scheduled to make a refueling stop on Guam before flying on to Honolulu for identification at a U.S. military laboratory.

With today's turn-over, 212 remains will have been returned since August, 1987, with 56 identified to date as those of American servicemen. Hanoi has also allowed joint U.S.-Vietnamese search teams to investigate MIA cases in the Vietnamese countryside.

The U.S. Defense Department says 2,353 Americans are still listed MIA from the Indochina war, including 1,719 in Vietnam, 545 in Laos, 83 in Cambodia and six in China.

La Prensa against U.S. aid

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (NYT) — Stung by word that the Bush administration is considering efforts to influence the elections here, Nicaraguan opposition leaders have spoken out against such aid, calling suggestions that it is on the way a potentially fatal blow to their electoral hopes.

"What more could Daniel Ortega want than to cry out to the world that the CIA is helping the opposition and that the democratic opposition is a kind of civilian Contra that has sold itself to imperialism?" said the opposition newspaper La Prensa.

The government of Daniel Ortega Saavedra, the Nicaraguan president, has devoted much space in the official press to detailed coverage of payments reportedly received by opposition candidates and parties.

The government has used the issue to mock the opposition's claim that the elections will not just decide among candidates, but serve as a national referendum on the Sandinistas. The election is scheduled next February.

African pollution noted

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Scientists have discovered air pollution over much of Africa, and it is chemically similar to the smog that plagues southern California, a research leader said Tuesday.

Meinrat Andreae, a chemist with West Germany's Max Planck Institute, said the deliberate burning of huge savanna areas produces acid rain and ozone pollution that settles over Africa's rain forests.

"These levels we've seen over the rain forests are dramatically higher than anything anybody has seen over rain forests before," Andreae said in a telephone interview.

Andreae headed the West German group in a 20-member project

Transportation strike stalls London

LONDON (AP) — Traffic jams started at dawn today in London as commuters contended with one-day strikes by rail, bus and subway workers over pay and working conditions.

"By 6 a.m. the traffic buildup was what it is usually like at 8 a.m.," said a Scotland Yard spokesman. Many city parking lots were full by 6:30 a.m.

Perhaps because of the early start, the Automobile Association reported, the usual jams on the six-lane M25 motorway that circles the city were no worse than usual.

The strike by 75,000 railroad workers was the first national rail strike since 1982.

London had the worst problems because of a strike called Tuesday night by 18,500 bus workers to coincide with the strike by the capital's 10,500 subway workers. The subway strike was the seventh unofficial 24-hour walkout in 11 weeks in London.

London's red double-decker buses and sprawling subway network carry more than 3 million passengers daily, while British Rail carries 2 million passengers a day.

"I saw a car with three bikes on the roof, two in the back, and five people in the car. I guess they just drive as far as they can and get on their bikes," said Patrick Gilligan of London Bicycle Co.

Barclays Bank and the Midland Bank hired buses and organized pickup points to get their employees to work.

Giamatti seeks to make Rose gambling report public

CINCINNATI (AP) — Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti wants to make public a report containing allegations that Pete Rose bet on Cincinnati Reds games, a charge the manager is vehemently denying.

An Ohio judge decided Tuesday that the report, by baseball investigator John M. Dowd, will remain confidential while he decides on Rose's attempt to block a hearing next week before Giamatti.

Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert N. Nadel scheduled a hearing for Thursday morning on Rose's request for a temporary restraining order that would put next Monday's meeting with Giamatti on hold. Lawyers for Rose and Giamatti will call witnesses at the hearing Thursday.

Nadel decided Tuesday during a 30-minute meeting with the laywers in his chambers that he'll look privately at Dowd's report, which contains allegations that could get Rose banned from baseball for life.

However, lawyers for baseball said they want the entire report made public because Rose's lawyers released parts of it Monday in their lawsuit against Giamatti.

"It is our position that since portions have been made public, the door's been opened and the whole report should be made available," Louis L. Hoynes Jr., baseball's lawyer and the National League counsel, said after the hearing.

The 225-page report written by Dowd was placed in the court record Tuesday by lawyers for the commissioner. Nadel decided he's the only one who will see it for now.

"It was our intention that it become part of the public record," deputy commissioner Francis T. Vincent Jr. said in New York. "It is surely up to the judge now."

Nadel declined to be interviewed after the hearing.

Giamatti and other baseball officials indicated their unhappiness with Rose releasing parts of the report Monday in his lawsuit, which accused the commissioner of being biased and prejudiced against him. Rose's attorneys called Dowd's report a "hatchet-job."

In their lawsuit Monday, Rose's lawyers said that bookmaker Ronald Peters told Dowd that Rose had bet on Reds games. Rose wants the court, not Giamatti, to determine whether the allegations are true.

Since baseball's investigation was made public on March 20, Rose has repeatedly denied any wrongdoing, saying the betting allegations were untrue. Since the lawsuit was filed Monday, he has emphatically repeated his denials.

"I'm happy to look into the camera now and say I never bet on baseball and I never bet on Cincinnati Reds baseball," Rose said Tuesday in Atlanta, where the Reds' game against the Braves was rained out. "Pete Rose would never do anything to hurt baseball. Baseball has been my life and it will be my life."

Rose said his lawsuit against Giamatti is aimed at giving him a fair chance.

"We just want to play on the same (level) field, and we don't think Pete Rose going to New York and sitting in front of Bart Giamatti is sitting on the same field," Rose said.

Giamatti is asking the judge to let him hold the meeting Monday in New York, which would be the final step before he decides Rose's fate.

"I am gratified that the judge is aware of my desire to have baseball's hearing on the merits on June 26 as scheduled," Giamatti said in a statement issued after the hearing Tuesday.

Baseball's attorneys promised during the meeting Tuesday with Nadel that Giamatti would take no action against Rose through Sunday at 5 p.m. Baseball's rules give the commissioner authority to suspend anyone who refuses to cooperate with a baseball investigation.

Robert G. Stachler, one of Rose's lawyers, said he was concerned that Giamatti might have taken action against the manager this week.

"He very well could have," Stachler said. "We wanted to make sure we could get the assurance. I'm very pleased."

A receptionist at Riverfront Stadium said team owner Marge Schott was declining comment on the court proceedings.

Also Tuesday, CBS aired an interview in which Peters called Rose a "sick gambler." He said Rose had a standing $2,000 bet on the Reds to win. He also said he once received a call from Rose shortly before a game.

Gibbs ascends to Sooner throne

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Gary Gibbs, who has spent his entire collegiate football career under the winningest coach in Oklahoma history, takes over as head coach undaunted by Barry Switzer's three national championships and 12 Big Eight Conference titles.

"I'm Gary Gibbs. I know what I can do," said the defensive coordinator, who becomes the 18th coach at Oklahoma but only the third alumnus to take over the reins.

Athletic director Donnie Duncan and interim president David Swank recommended Gibbs as the next head coach over two other assistants, Merv Johnson and Jim Donnan.

Gibbs' appointment lacks formal approval from the university's regents, who meet today.

The regents also were scheduled to discuss a settlement package for Switzer, whose resignation followed six months of turmoil and pressure to step down from a national power wounded by a three-year NCAA probation and five players charged in incidents involving guns, drugs and sexual assault.

Swank would only say the settlement is a mutual agreement between Switzer and the university. Swank denied that a settlement was in order because Switzer, who had four years left on his rollover contract, was forced to resign.

Switzer had recommended his replacement come from his staff. Gibbs, 36, was confident Tuesday about moving in, and promised that the cloud hanging over the university would dissipate.

"We've got to remove that cloud, that uncertainty of 'What's going on down there? Who's in control?' " Gibbs said. "We're a bunch of good guys. All we've got to do is the right thing."

When asked how he would handle disciplining his players, Gibbs said, "That's really an easy question. You do what's right. You don't do what's wrong."

Gibbs, who also received his master's in business administration from Oklahoma, said any other job but head coach at Oklahoma would be a step down.

"This is my school," Gibbs said. "I came to Oklahoma because of people. Now I have the opportunity to pay something back to those people."

In announcing sanctions against the Sooners, the NCAA had criticized Switzer for not having enough control over the program. Gibbs promised that would not happen under his regime.

"I will be in complete control of the football program," Gibbs said. "I'm responsible for the football program at the University of Oklahoma."

But he quickly added that "I'm not going to stand here and say we're not going to have a problem."

Duncan bristled with confidence in announcing Gibbs as his choice to replace Switzer.

"He possesses the necessary qualifications for a head coach at any college," Duncan said. "Others have had opportunities. He has not. Now he will.

"OU has a history of young coaches rising to the top," Duncan said. "In the years to come you'll understand why I made the recommendation to name Gary Gibbs as head football coach."

Switzer was 35 when he was named head coach in 1973. Chuck Fairbanks, whom Switzer succeeded, became head coach at Oklahoma in 1967 at age 33.

The state's three largest newspapers and the 1949 Oklahoma football team had called for new leadership, but Duncan said he was satisfied that promoting from within would give Oklahoma a clean start.

"Gary Gibbs will sell himself," Duncan said. "He is an ideal person that anyone would want representing him."

While Gibbs pronounced "great fondness" for his mentor, he said success would not end with Switzer's departure.

Switzer cited for errant illustration

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — If the NCAA were grading Barry Switzer's resignation speech, he might get one A and one F.

In denouncing a system that prevents coaches from providing basic necessities to needy kids, Switzer championed an idea that NCAA executive director Dick Schultz himself has endorsed. But the 16-year Oklahoma coach made a poor choice of examples when he said a school can't even pay for a poor kid's trip home to attend a parent's funeral.

In fact, about 25 needy athletes since 1988 have attended services for close relatives at their school's expense.

"Barry had better read his rule book," Schultz said Tuesday. "We've changed the thing about funerals."

Speaking of a coach's inability to assist needy students, Switzer said during his farewell news conference Monday: "How can any coach stick to these rules when a young man's father dies many miles away and the son has no money for a plane ticket home to the funeral?"

Actually, NCAA schools adopted a special provision in January 1988 to make allowances for that very thing.

"It's called an incidental expense waiver," Nancy Mitchell of the NCAA's legislative services department said. "An institution can request permission to pay the expenses for a student-athlete to fly home to attend a parent's funeral."

Mitchell said roughly 25 schools have been granted the waiver.

But Switzer would find an ally in Schultz in his campaign to provide money for such things as trips home and clothing allowances to athletes from disadvantaged backgrounds.

"It was difficult to turn my back on these young men when they needed help," Switzer said. "We have created a system that does not permit me or the program to buy a pair of shoes, or a decent coat for a player whose family can't afford these basic necessities."

Foes hope Strange suffers letdown

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Curtis Strange can anticipate some problems this week in the Canadian Open, according to Masters champion Nick Faldo.

"After coming out of a major, particularly a guy who has done well, you feel pretty drained," Faldo said.

"You have to guard against that, but it's a difficult thing to do, to get yourself motivated, get yourself up again. You have to work on it. It isn't easy."

Strange, who made a successful defense of his U.S. Open title last weekend in Rochester, N.Y., will be seeking a second consecutive national title this week in the Canadian Open.

In the busy aftermath of his Open victory, however, Strange took a day off Tuesday, did not appear at the Glen Abbey Golf Club course and was not available for comment.

"There's quite a gap between winning the majors (the U.S. and British Opens, the Masters and PGA) and a regular tournament," Faldo said.

Strange's U.S. Open victory, Faldo said, simply solidified his membership in the tight little group of players who now dominate world golf, Faldo said.

"Is he No. 1? Maybe he could claim it," Faldo said. "Was I No. 1 after winning the Masters and a couple of tournaments in England? Maybe I could claim it.

"There's a half-dozen or so players at the top. They just hand it back and forth," Faldo said of the No. 1 ranking. "This week one will be No. 1. Next week it will be another one."

He listed those leading players as Seve Ballesteros of Spain, Greg Norman of Australia, Sandy Lyle of Scotland, Strange, Ian Woosnam of Wales, Tom Kite "and maybe (Mark) Calcavecchia."

Faldo did not mention himself but, obviously, is a member of that group as he has won both the Masters and British Open.

The Englishman's victory in the British Open came in 1987 at Muirfield, Scotland where he made 18 consecutive pars in the final round, a performance that drew criticism from the British press.

Gonzales signs with Cleveland

From Staff Reports

Former Midland High Bulldog Michael Gonzales has been signed by the Cleveland Indians. Gonzales, who has already reported to the Indians' rookie league team, was signed as a free agent.

Gonzales was drafted by the New York Yankees in the 1988 amateur draft, but opted instead to finish his education at Sul Ross State University. Gonzales graduated in the spring with a bachelor's degree in business.

"He's got the potential and size to make it," said Byron Brooks, head coach at Sul Ross. "He's got the mental discipline necessary. Michael's aware that it's a hard road to get to the majors. He's got his chance now, which is what every kid wants."

A 1985 MHS graduate, the right handed pitcher will play for the Burlington Indians in the Appalachian League. Gonzales was signed by Tom Chandler, former Texas A&M head coach turned Cleveland scout.

Graf may get early shot at revenge

Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Sometimes, it takes years for tennis players to avenge defeats that hurt their pride and shock the world.

Steffi Graf may have the chance to take revenge on Arantxa Sanchez sooner than either of them possibly could have expected.

Graf, the world's No. 1 player, was matched Tuesday against British wild-card entry Julie Salmon in the first round of next week's Wimbledon championships.

But Salmon is just a stepping stone to what lies down the road.

In the quarterfinals, the defending champion is due to meet Sanchez, the bubbly teen-age Spaniard who beat Graf in the French Open earlier this month in one of the year's biggest upsets.

Sanchez beat Graf 7-6, 3-6, 7-5 in a dramatic women's final in which the Spaniard rallied from a 3-5 deficit in the final set.

Graf said she was below par mentally and suffering physically from menstrual cramps and couldn't raise her game to its normal high level to put away the tigerish Sanchez.

Now, provided Sanchez gets that far, Graf has a chance to take her revenge in the quarterfinals at Wimbledon. This time, on grass.

"Grass is a totally different thing," Graf said. "Arantxa on grass is a different story. She doesn't have much experience yet on the surface."

Neither does Monica Seles, the 15-year-old Yugoslav who almost upset Graf in the semifinals in Paris, losing 6-3 in the third set.

Seles sparked rumors of a possible withdrawal from Wimbledon when she pulled out of the main warmup event at Eastbourne this week.

But her agent, Stephanie Tollison, said the 11th-seeded Seles definitely would play.

"She is firmly committed to playing at Wimbledon," Tollison said. "She has no doubts in her mind that she will compete."

Seles has been practicing secretly and is due to arrive for Wimbledon this weekend.

Graf said she had gotten over the loss to Sanchez and was raring to return to competition.

"I feel perfect," Graf said. "It took me two or three days to get over Paris but that's natural. I needed a break at home with my family. I'm much more motivated now."

Graf is seeded to meet Martina Navratilova in the final for the third straight year. Navratilova, trying to set a record of nine women's singles titles at Wimbledon, opens against Jill Hetherington of Canada.

In the men's draw, top-seeded Ivan Lendl was paired with Venezuela's Nicolas Pereira, the world junior champion. If Lendl, who has never won Wimbledon, makes it to the semifinals, he is scheduled to face two-time titlist Boris Becker of West Germany.

Defending men's champion Stefan Edberg opens up Monday on Centre Court against Canada's Chris Pridham and looks to have a safe passage to the semifinals if he maintains his form through the early rounds.

Amos Mansdorf of Israel, the 16th seed, could be Edberg's first serious test in round four. In the quarterfinals, the second-seeded Swede is scheduled to face eighth-seeded Tim Mayotte. But a possible replay of Paris looms there as well.

Michael Chang, the 17-year-old American who beat Edberg in the men's final of the French Open, is seeded ninth and due to play Mayotte in the fourth round. Mayotte has reached at least the quarterfinals in eight Grand Slam tournaments on grass, while Chang has never moved past the second round.

Men's fifth seed John McEnroe, trying at age 30 to win a fourth Wimbledon title, has an awkward first-round match against a high-class serve-and-volleyer.

The left-handed American opens against Darren Cahill of Australia, who reached the semifinals of the U.S. Open last year.

If McEnroe gets through, his next serious threat may not come until the quarterfinals where he should play Sweden's Mats Wilander, the victim of a season-long slump in form after rising to the No. 1 position in world tennis last year.

Craig sticks with book in win

Associated Press

Roger Craig is a manager who likes his team to go by the book.

Scott Garrelts allowed no runs and seven hits in 7 1-3 innings as the surging Giants beat Houston 4-0 Tuesday night to take a three-game lead over the Astros in the National League West.

The Giants have won four straight and nine of their last 11 games to take command of first place.

"It was a text book ball game," Craig said. "Our middle fielders made outstanding plays. Brett Butler made a great throw. We had clutch hits, especially by Jose Uribe to get the run home. It was the best played game of the year."

Garrelts, 6-2, struck out four and walked none.

"I'm trying to move the ball in and out," Garrelts said. "I'm trying to slow my slider and fastball off the same motion, and I'm not throwing the ball down the middle of the plate."

Craig Lefferts pitched 1 2-3 innings for his 14th save, allowing no hits, to finish the combined seven-hitter.

Elsewhere in the NL it was Chicago 5, Pittsburgh 4 in 11 innings; Montreal 8, New York 5; San Diego 2, Los Angeles 0; San Francisco 4, Houston 0; and St. Louis swept a doubleheader from Philadelphia, 6-4 and 5-3. Atlanta at Cincinnati was rained out.

In the sixth inning, Butler made a strong throw from center to nail Greg Gross at the plate.

"Candy Maldonado has a good arm, and he's been helping me along with (Coach) Dusty Baker," Butler said. "Tonight I was just in the right place at the right time. The hit was a one-hopper, but I just tried to keep the throw down in case we needed to get the guy at second. It turned out to be good enough to get the runner at the plate."

Jose Uribe had an RBI single, Ernest Riles and Will Clark hit sacrifice flies and Ken Oberkfell squeezed home the Giants' fourth run.

"Tonight they put together a complete game — fielding, timely hitting, good pitching. I won't lose any sleep after this game. We just got beat," Astros manager Art Howe said.

Padres 2, Dodgers 0

Bruce Hurst pitched a six-hitter for his first NL shutout as San Diego beat Los Angeles at Jack Murphy Stadium.

Hurst, 6-5, pitched his third complete game, striking out six and walking none. While pitching for Boston in the American League, Hurst had 13 shutouts.

National League

Garry Templeton had an RBI double in the third inning and Roberto Alomar hit a sacrifice fly in the fourth.

Tim Belcher, 4-6, allowed five hits in four innings to remain winless since May 29.

Cubs 5, Pirates 4

Shawon Dunston's two-out single in the 11th inning scored the go-ahead run as Chicago beat Pittsburgh at Three Rivers Stadium.

Vance Law singled off Miguel Garcia, 0-1, the sixth Pirates pitcher, to start the 11th and advanced on pitcher Calvin Schiraldi's sacrifice. Damon Berryhill flied out, but Dunston singled up the middle.

Schiraldi, 2-4, pitched 2 2-3 scoreless innings for the victory, the Cubs' 17th in their last 26 road games. Paul Kilgus got the last out for his first major-league save.

Expos 8, Mets 5

Tim Raines broke out of a 1-for-17 slump when he tied the game with a two-run single in the eighth inning and then won it with a two-run single in the ninth as Montreal overcame a five-run deficit and rallied past New York at Shea Stadium.

The Expos ended a three-game losing streak and won for just the second time in seven games. The Mets, who led 5-0 after the first inning, lost for the third time in nine games.

Tim Burke, 5-1, pitched two innings for the victory.

Cardinals 6, Phillies 4
Cardinals 5, Phillies 3

Len Dykstra, Roger McDowell and Terry Mulholland made their debuts with Philadelphia, but the losing continued as St. Louis swept a doubleheader, 6-4 and 5-3, at Veterans Stadium.

In the opener, Terry Pendleton's three-run double off Mulholland, 0-1, keyed a five-run sixth inning as the Cardinals won 6-4.

The start of the second game was delayed 1 hour and 39 minutes by rain. In the nightcap, Ozzie Smith had two RBIs and Pendleton one to send the Phillies to their 20th loss in 25 games.

Dykstra, acquired from the Mets along with McDowell on Sunday for Juan Samuel, went 2-for-4 with a walk and three runs scored in the opener. He also made a diving catch in the sixth inning. In the second game, Dykstra was 2-for-4 with a double, walk and stolen base.

Orioles rebound to help rook

Associated Press

Overcoming a 5-0 lead wasn't that difficult for the Baltimore Orioles. It happened so fast that Mickey Weston couldn't think about what was happening.

"There's no way I could envision that I would get my first major-league win tonight," Weston said Tuesday night after Baltimore beat the Seattle Mariners 8-6 for their fifth consecutive victory.

"I'm kind of in a dream world right now," Weston said. "When we took the lead in the fifth, that's when I started thinking I had a shot at the win."

Weston, called up Saturday from Class AAA Rochester of the International League, struck out four and walked one after replacing starter Jeff Ballard, who got only one batter out.

Seattle manager Jim Lefebvre was impressed that Orioles manager Frank Robinson had the confidence to remove Ballard for a rookie.

"He had his ace on the mound and he went out in the first inning and took him right out of there," Lefebvre said. "Robinson didn't fool around. He went to Weston and the rookie shut us down."

In other games, Boston beat Texas 6-3, Oakland beat Detroit 6-4, Chicago beat New York 13-6, Kansas City beat Milwaukee 8-2 in 11 innings, Toronto beat California 6-2 and Minnesota beat Cleveland 7-4.

Gregg Olson followed Weston and pitched two innings for his ninth save.

"It was the bullpen story again," Robinson said. "Our relievers shut them down and allowed us to get back into it. Right now, we have the confidence to come back in games like this."

American

Jerry Reed, 3-5, gave up four runs and two hits in 5 2-3 innings, walking three.

Red Sox 6, Rangers 3

Boston rallied with six runs in the eighth inning as Mike Greenwell hit a two-run double and Nick Esasky hit a two-run, go-ahead triple.

Nolan Ryan allowed four hits and struck out six in seven innings, leaving with a 3-0 lead. But Kenny Rogers and Jeff Russell, 3-2, allowed four hits in the eighth and errors by second baseman Julio Franco and shortstop Scott Fletcher led to an unearned run.

Mike Boddicker, 4-6, won for only the second time in nine starts since May 3, giving up nine hits. Lee Smith finished for his eighth save.

Athletics 6, Tigers 4

Oakland snapped a four-game losing streak, its longest since last July 5-7, as pinch-hitter Terry Steinbach's homer snapped a 4-4 tie in the sixth.

Mark McGwire, whose three-run homer in the third tied it, doubled in the sixth off Brad Havens, 0-1. One out later, Steinbach hit his fourth homer and the first by an Athletics pinch-hitter since June 19, 1988.

Gene Nelson, 2-2, allowed one hit in three innings. Todd Burns pitched two perfect innings, striking out four, for his fourth save.

White Sox 13, Yankees 6

Dan Pasqua and Harold Baines hit three-run homers and drove in four runs apiece and 40-year-old Jerry Reuss won his fifth straight decision as Chicago had season highs in hits (17) and runs.

Reuss, 7-2, allowed eight hits in five innings to win for the 218th time in his career. John Davis, purchased Monday from Class AAA Vancouver of the Pacific Coast League, finished for his first save.

Rich Dotson, 2-5, retired just two batters, allowing four runs and four hits.

Royals 8, Brewers 2

Bo Jackson hit his 17th homer of the season in a six-run 11th inning, tying Baltimore's Mickey Tettleton for the AL lead.

Bob Boone doubled off Mark Knudson, 2-3, and pinch-runner Rey Palacios scored the go-ahead run on Frank White's single. George Brett hit a two-run double, Jackson a two-run homer and Palacios an RBI single.

Tom Gordon, 9-2, gave up Gary Sheffield's game-tying RBI single in the eighth, then pitched three scoreless innings.

Blue Jays 6, Angels 2

Tony Fernandez hit a two-run homer in the first and a solo homer in the second for the first two-homer game of his career. He has five homers, matching his totals for each of the last two seasons.

Jimmy Key, 7-6, allowed five hits in seven innings to snap his four-game losing streak.

Kirk McCaskill, 7-4, allowed seven hits and five runs in 1 2-3 innings, his shortest outing this season.

Twins 7, Indians 4

Jim Dwyer had his first four-hit game since July 17, 1983, and Minnesota had 15 hits off four Cleveland pitchers.

Alan Anderson, 8-4, allowed six hits in 7 1-3 innings and Jeff Reardon finished for his 13th save.

Tom Candiotti, 7-5, gave up four runs and 10 hits in 6 2-3 innings and saw his nine-game home winning streak snapped. Candiotti, who last lost in Cleveland Stadium on June 9, 1988, is 14-3 at home since the start of the 1988 season.

Injured Winfield prepares for trial

HOUSTON (AP) — Testimony is scheduled to begin Thursday in a trial in which New York Yankees outfielder Dave Winfield is being sued by a woman who bore his daughter and claims to be his common-law wife.

Sandra Renfro, 34, of Houston, is suing Winfield for divorce, child support and unspecified damages for a marriage the injured player claims never existed.

Winfield has countersued Ms. Renfro to establish visitation rights with his daughter, 7-year-old Lauren Shanel.

Jury selection before Family District Court Judge Allen Daggett was completed Tuesday.

Winfield, 37, claims that he and Ms. Renfro, a United Airlines flight attendant, dated, but never met the legal requirements for a common law marriage.

"In April of 1982, Sandra and David were married and we're asking the jury to find that they were married," said Earl Lilly, Ms. Renfro's lawyer.

According to court papers, Winfield bought a $110,000 Houston condominium for his daughter and Ms. Renfro to live. Ms. Renfro said she and Winfield lived in the condo as husband and wife.

But Winfield, who lives in New Jersey, claims Ms. Renfro's lawsuit, filed in 1985, was the first time he heard of the alleged matrimony. He said he already pays Ms. Renfro $1,400 a month in child support.

"Mr. Winfield, my client, is married, but not to Mr. Lilly's client," attorney Tom Alexander said. "He was never married to the plaintiff and the case should come out that way."

Winfield married another woman in a formal ceremony last year. Lilly claims Winfield committed bigamy when he married Tonya Turner last February.

Under Texas law, such a marriage exists when a couple agrees to be married, represent themselves as married and live together.

Rodriguez, Boyer shine on local bowling lanes

Isenberg

Leo Rodriguez is averaging 220 after the frist eight games of the Mens Scratch League at Dellwood Lanes. Leo posted a 255 game and 920 four-game series in the Tuesday night league.

Mike Boyer is averaging 216 for the first eight in the same league. He rolled an 823 four-game set. Jeff Von Rosenberg scored a 257 game and 857 series.

Paula Bayley paced the ladies scratch league with an 704 four-game set.

Other top scores were turned in by Dave Freeman 224-593 and Tom Aylesworth with a 222 game.

Dellwood Lanes will host a 12 game marathon over the July 4th weekend.

Basin women shine at WT

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Several Permian Basin golfers earned berths in the championship flight during Monday qualifying for the West Texas Women's Golf Championship here.

Former Odessa Permian standout Candice Morgan shot a 73 for the second-best qualifying score. Abilene's Judy Casey shot a 70 to earn top honors.

Midlanders Jo Dickson and Marna Raburn shot 78 and 80, respectively, to qualify eighth and tenth. Andrews' LaNell Guelker qualified 14th with an 82.

Match play in the venerable tournament began Tuesday and continues until Friday's finals.

Pursuit-Coors nine places 9th

From Staff Reports

DALLAS — The Pursuit-Coors softball team of Midland finished ninth in the Greater Southwest Shootout here recently.

This World Series qualifying tournament featured 54 teams in a six-state region. Pursuit-Coors finished 5-2 to boost their season record to 28-9.

Outstanding performers in the Dallas tournament included Jackie Warrick, Aileen Miller, Janette Amado and Janette Sloan.

HR Haloes burn EP

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — The Midland Angels continued their red-hot hitting in a 12-7 romp over the El Paso Diablos here Tuesday.

The Haloes have once again gotten off to a quick start in the Texas League-West race, jumping out to a one-game lead over the second-place San Antonio Missions after four games in the season's second half.

Manager Max Oliveras' club is batting .436 during this El Paso series and has scored 58 runs in four games. Left fielder Steve DeAngelis has been leading the charge in his first week of Class AA ball since being promoted from Class A Quad City, batting over .500 this week.

The Angels had 10 home runs in the first three games of the series, and four-baggers by Danny Grunhard and Bob Rose set the tone Tuesday off loser Jim Austin, 2-9.

After Chris Graves led off the game with a walk, Grunhard bashed his seventh homer of the season over the right field fence at Dudley Field.

De Angelis then singled and made second on a wild pitch. With two out, Mark Howie singled home DeAngelis and Rose followed with an opposite field homer.

Former Midland Angel Jesus Alfaro socked a pair of solo homers for El Paso. Alfaro has used a nine-game hitting streak to raise his average to .252.

Chris Beasley, 0-1, looks for his first win in a Midland uniform tonight. Steve Monson, 4-1, goes on the mound for El Paso.

HALO HOOPS: Grunhard is batting .297 going into tonight's game, courtesy of a .463 spurt over his last 13 games.

Recently-promoted Jeff Richardson saved his first game for Midland Tuesday. Richardson saved five for Palm Springs — the California organization's other Class A franchise.

GIBBS

"In replacing Barry Switzer, I am replacing a man who played an integral part in the success of this program," Gibbs said. "But I know the success of a program occurs because of the contributions of many."

Johnson said he did not think the transition would be awkward. The Sooners have six weeks before players return for fall practice, and just more than two months before their Sept. 2 opener against New Mexico State.

"But I want to tell you that even if we had conducted a national search for our new coach rather that promote from within, I do not believe we could have found a better person for the job," Swanks said. "Gary Gibbs is one of the outstanding young coaches in the country."

Switzer became head coach while Oklahoma was serving a two-year NCAA probation. He leaves the program in the first year of a three-year probation, mostly for recruiting violations.

Longtime UT aide resigns

AUSTIN (AP) — Bill Bethea, who served 21 years as an assistant coach to Cliff Gustafson's University of Texas baseball team, announced his resignation Tuesday.

Bethea's departure becomes effective at the end of summer. Bethea said he wanted to "pursue other career opportunities," but didn't elaborate, except to say he had no specific plans.

SWITZER

Switzer said he would join others "who are calling for changes in rules to permit universities to provide players with reasonable assistance, perhaps based on financial need as proposed by Dick Schultz."

Schultz, who became NCAA executive director in 1987, thinks it may be an idea whose time has not come.

"Whether it will ever pass or not, I don't know," Schultz said. "Some would say that the scholarship is enough, and the college experience is a big reward in itself. I'm saying I would support it if the schools should come forward with it."

NCAA rules, which are all adopted by majority vote of NCAA schools, have always strictly prohibited any benefit not available to non-athletes.

"I would support additional financial aid over and above the cost of attendance if it was based on demonstrated need," Schultz said. "So the athlete who has a real need would get direct help, and the person who doesn't need it wouldn't get it."

Schultz said he doubted the idea would get much support at the next NCAA convention in January 1990.

"I think there is a good chance it might be on the agenda in the 1991 convention," he said. "A main argument against it is that many schools could just not afford it. And some schools might fear it would give others a competitive edge."

A cost-reduction committee is now looking into financial aide on all levels, with the idea of coming up with new legislation for the 1991 convention.

"They might come up with something on this subject, something comparable to what we're talking about," Schultz said.

Dion says rock 'n' roll lifts his spirits, keeps him young

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — Dion is turning 50, but he's ready to rock 'n' roll till he's in a rocking chair.

As a teen-ager in the Bronx, Dion DiMucci put together a group of singers and named it for the neighborhood's Belmont Avenue. Dion and the Belmonts became the most popular vocal group of rock 'n' roll's doo-wop era.

At 15, he made his first professional appearance, on a Paul Whiteman show, and he first saw, walking down the street, the redhead who's still his wife and the mother of his three daughters.

Five years later, Dion and the Belmonts had their first Top 10 record, "A Teenager in Love."

This year, Dion, who wears a jaunty Bronx taxi driver's cap even at home in Boca Raton, Fla., has a new rock 'n' roll album, "Yo Frankie," which is getting good reviews. He wrote most of the songs.

Dion, who turns 50 on July 18, was inducted into the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame in January.

Some of his generation became tuxedoed nightclub singers.

"I'm a die-hard," Dion says. "I've always been a rock 'n' roll enthusiast. In case I lose my job as a rock 'n' roll singer, I'll drive a cab. I've got my cabbie cap. But I've been fortunate. I always paid the rent. I've never done another job. Never."

Dion isn't buying any "don't trust anybody over 30" stuff or pronouncements by Mick Jagger and Peter Townshend of the Who about not wanting to be geriatric rockers.

"When I started there was no rock 'n' roll, no expectations, no rules," Dion says. "Some people got the idea that rock 'n' roll was just for the young. Today we know that's not so. You could be an old fogey at 19. You can be kicking up your heels at 63. It's an attitude.

"Rock at its best lifts your spirit, keeps you aware, makes you feel and think, keeps you young.

"If you start with the anger and a sound to get the girls, and keep on, you find out it's really an artistic expression. You can share your thoughts. This is powerful."

Rock 'n' roll may have moved through doo-wop, British invasions and disco to post-punk, but for Dion it hasn't changed much.

"The only thing that has changed is the equipment," he says. "Basically, you've got a backbeat, electric guitars and it's dance music.

"This new album is an '80s album. But it has elements of my music. It's black music filtered through an Italian neighborhood. You come out with an attitude.

"I always used a bunch of guys to imitate a horn section, because I couldn't afford a horn section. I became kind of identified with that sound — 'Ruby Baby,' 'Runaround Sue.' I use it all through this album.

"When I was growing up we used to bang on cardboard boxes and I had a guitar and a bunch of guys would sing. You put a drum to that and you go. With all the technology today it comes out with more power and clarity."

After doo-wop faded and Dion conquered a drug problem, he became a folk singer. He had a hit with "Abraham, Martin and John."

"I wasn't striking lightning in the sky," he says. "That song gave me a chance to sit in coffeehouses which were flourishing around the country and play acoustic guitar and express myself.

"Those times were wonderful for me. For the first time it became a two-way street, the audience and me. When I started out, we used to run out at the Brooklyn Fox and do two songs. Then Fats Domino would do two songs. Jerry Lee Lewis would do two.

"In 1980 I got into gospel music. It was a way to express what was inside me. I made five gospel albums. I don't call it religious music. I don't look at myself as religious."

Dion, a solo singer since 1960, had a reunion concert with the Belmonts in 1972 but has stayed off rock revival tours. "I feel like I would dry up if I did that.

"But I love doing the old songs. Those songs become more valuable to me every year. I love to see the joy 'The Wanderer' and 'Runaround Sue' bring to people. When Arista Records wanted me to do an album, I said I'd do it if I can do a rock 'n' roll album in the tradition of those two songs, meaning get into some strong characters."

Dion says he got a lot of help on his new album. Paul Simon sings on "Written on the Subway Wall" and he's in the video. "We did it on a subway platform in the middle of the night," Dion says. "We had about 15 cops, 20 Guardian Angels. It was great. We had dinner served down there.

"I had Paul sing one of my favorite doo-wop songs, 'Little Star,' done by the Elegants, in the middle of 'Subway Wall.'

"One of my friends had a bunch of 8mm film of us from the old days. It's woven through the whole video. The end shows me in my first car, which I bought for $75."

Personally, Dion says, "I'm kind of an oddball. I've got the same wife I started off with. We grew up together. We love each other. The real thing that kept us going is that we accepted each other at our worst. We walked through the valley. I was with her at her lowest and she was with me at my lowest.

"We've got three great daughters. They're a joy. I'm blessed."

Dion is looking forward to his 50th birthday party.

"It's going to be a bash," he says. "There'll be a lot of friends with instruments. I probably will get into the mood to play."

Networks schedule two western series for fall

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The television western, as rootless as a steely-eyed gunslinger, has drifted back into town, and there are two on the networks' fall schedules, the first time that's happened in 15 years.

CBS' "Paradise," starring Lee Horsley as a 1890s gunfighter who has to care for his late sister's four children, is returning for a second season.

ABC is adding a new show called "The Kid," about the youngsters who rode for the Pony Express in the days before the railroads were completed coast to coast.

This past season the CBS miniseries "Lonesome Dove" proved that audiences will watch a well-made drama, even if it's in Western dress. The eight-hour miniseries, based on the Pulitzer Prize-winning book by Larry McMurtry, was the highest-rated multi-part movie of the 1988-89 season.

"Paradise" is a family drama set against the background of the Old West. Horsley plays Ethan Allen Cord, a fugitive gunslinger who inherits his dying sister's children. She had sent them to him in the mistaken belief that he was the upstanding proprietor of a general store.

"The Kid" attempts to blend the traditional Western story with a youthful twist, the way the movie "Young Guns" did. The young Pony Express riders find themselves bound into a family because of the common jeopardy they face. Sounds like a Western version of "21 Jump Street."

The renewal of "Paradise" is the first time a Western series has been renewed by a network since "Kung Fu," an "Eastern Western" that ran on ABC from 1972-75.

The networks haven't had two Western series on the air at the same time since 1974, when "Kung Fu" was on ABC and "Gunsmoke" was in its last season on CBS.

'Ghostbusters' sequel hot at box office

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "Ghostbusters II" zapped through a record by collecting $29.4 million in its first three days as the summer of '89 kept going like gangbusters at the nation's box offices.

The Columbia Studios' film's $8.3 million on Sunday was the biggest non-holiday Sunday ever, according to Exhibitor Relations Inc., which tallies box-offce receipts.

"We are thrilled with the opening weekend's record breaking results and we anticipate that 'Ghostbusters II' will play very strongly in the coming weeks," said Columbia's new chief, Dawn Steel.

The previous three-day record was set earlier this month by "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," which earned $21.2 million in its second week.

It also easily topped Columbia's previous three-day record of $13.6 million for "Ghostbusters" in June 1984.

Since the debut of Bill Murray's and Dan Aykroyd's paranormal investigators, Columbia has been spooked by several cinematic clunkers, most recently "True Believer," "The Adventures of Baron Munchausen" and "Physical Evidence."

The company's only hit in recent years was 1987's "La Bamba."

The true test for 'Ghostbusters II" comes Friday, when it will compete with the much-hyped "Batman."

Steven Spielberg's "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" kept up its charge, selling $11.7 million in tickets last weekend to claim second place on the box-office charts. In just four weeks, it has grossed more than $122 million.

"Dead Poets Society," the bittersweet prep school drama, earned $9.1 million to pass "Star Trek V: The Final Frontier" and move into third place.

"Star Trek V," the first film directed by star William Shatner, slipped badly from first to fourth place on sales of $7.1 million.

In fifth was "See No Evil, Hear No Evil," with Richard Pryor and Gene Wilder, with $2.5 million. The baseball movie "Field of Dreams," starring Kevin Costner, finished in sixth with $2.4 million. In seventh was the wrestling film "No Holds Barred," with $1.7 million.

Boston Pops marks 20 years on PBS

BOSTON (AP) — Last summer, viewers of "Evening at Pops" tapped their feet to everything from Tchaikovsky to Stephen Sondheim, Simon and Garfunkel to Irving Berlin, not to mention conductor John Williams' scores for "Star Trek," "E.T., The Exterrestrial" and "Raiders of the Lost Ark."

After 20 years on PBS, the eclectic summertime perennial is one of the longest-running and most-watched public television programs.

"I don't think its name is accidental," said Peter McGhee, program manager for national productions at WGBH-TV, which produces the series.

THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: It will be easier to deal with those feelings that have lingered from childhood. Tie up loose ends in your personal life. Your worldly ambitions may get a boost from a partner's or friend's activities late in the year. Family harmony is essential to your success. The moment of truth for a relationship will arrive this summer. Know your own heart.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: writer-director Billy Wilder, actress Meryl Streep, TV correspondent Ed Bradley, actress Lindsay Wagner, basketball star Pete Maravich, fashion designer Bill Blass, singer Kris Kristofferson, author Anne Morrow Lindbergh, Hall of Famer Carl Hubbell.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Service people could be touchy today. Place your orders later. Show more consideration for those who work for you. Give advance warning if overtime will be necessary. Use the telephone to cut your business losses.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your best ally today is your intuition. Check the TV schedule before making social plans. Energetic use of your mental powers will add sparkle to your job performance. Voice those innovative ideas.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be careful not to do anything that will alienate a neighbor. You have a chance to move up at work. Play your cards judiciously. Someone may be envious of your good fortune.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Others are not aware of your cash position at present. Be cagey! Financial speculation is unlikely to produce good results, no matter how lucky you have been lately. Show caution.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Carry out plans that will bring you greater peace of mind. Reduce debt. Do not ignore danger signals when it comes to credit card bills. Try to pay cash or do without.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): It may be time to reorder your priorities. Make your home the center of your social life. A change of residence or employment could lead to new happiness. Discuss your ideas with mate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Someone else's money could occupy your thoughts. Do what you know is right. Using inside information without permission could lead to trouble. Keep all of your dealings strictly aboveboard. Maintain high standards.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Genuine desire may be more important than natural talent in achieving your goals. Be persistent; refuse to give up when the going gets tough. You find allies when you need them most.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Spreading yourself too thin could affect both productivity and your money supply. Try to preserve a longtime relationship; ending things now could lead to regrets later. Talk over recent misunderstandings and get at the source of quarrels.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Joint financial matters will be stalled until you make some important decisions. Seek a framework for peaceful coexistence. It is time to let bygones be bygones. Focus on the benefits of teamwork.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A fast-paced day lies ahead. Partner could give you a valuable resource to call on in times of crisis. A large purchase can be made now. Shop around before putting any money down.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Joint investments show greater promise. Work quietly on plans that will improve your position at work. Travel is favored. Try to take a loved one along.

Once in a while the fate of your contract will hinge on a pure guess. Before you commit yourself, make sure you have availed yourself of every opportunity.

The auction was simple enough. South correctly used Blackwood to make sure he wasn't committing his side to a small slam that was off two aces. Unfortunately, that allowed East to get in a lead-directing double.

West dutifully led his top heart, and declarer found himself faced with three possible finesses, two of which could be taken either way. The bidding, however, had marked East with the king of hearts, so declarer rose with the ace and drew trumps in two rounds.

Since declarer would have to lose a heart trick, the problem was to avoid losing a spade as well. ESP experts would, perhaps, have no problem; lesser mortals have to find other ways. One would be simply to guess which finesse to take, but that's at best a 50–50 shot. Rather better is to cash the ace and king of spades in an attempt to drop the queen. When that doesn't happen, fall back on trying to guess which way to take the club finesse.

Before committing himself to that line, declarer decided to test the nerves of his opponents. He led the jack of hearts from dummy and played his queen under East's king! Obsessed with the idea that continuing hearts would give declarer a crucial ruff and discard, East elected to shift to a spade. Suddenly declarer's problems had evaporated.

Actor 'Hurt' by lawyer's line

NEW YORK (AP) — An irate William Hurt refused to answer questions after the actor accused his former lover's lawyer of insulting him and his 6-year-old son during a courtroom shouting match.

After the exchange, Sandra Jennings testified that the 39-year-old Oscar-winning actor introduced her to several people as his wife; Hurt testified Monday and Tuesday that he never did so.

Ms. Jennings, trying to prove that their three-year relationship constituted a common-law marriage, is suing for half of what Hurt earned during the time they lived together.

The trial was scheduled to resume this afternoon.

The confrontation Tuesday arose while plaintiff attorney A. Richard Golub questioned Hurt about his relationship with Jennings, the mother of the actor's son, Alexander.

Golub, exasperated by Hurt's answers and by frequent objections by defense lawyer Martin Shelton, complained to state Justice Jacqueline Silbermann that Shelton was "interrupting my rhythm, and rhythm is everything."

As Golub tried to resume questioning after a spate of Shelton's objections, Hurt — who had been combative and evasive in 1½ days of testimony, quipped to the lawyer, "Get your rhythm right."

Golub replied: "You had yours right, pal, when you had Alex, didn't you?"

Hurt asked the judge, "You can permit that?"

The judge, hearing the case without a jury, said, "Objection sustained!" and told Golub to stick to the issues. Golub tried to resume questioning.

"I'm blocked," Hurt told the lawyer. "What you just said is an insult to me, you understand? OK? I can't hear anything else!"

The judge ordered a 10-minute recess.

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Holy Harvey Wallbanger, Batman! A bartender won your Batmobile.

Patrick McLynn, who is paying his way through Virginia Commonwealth University by tending bar part time, has won the hottest car in Gotham City as part of the nationwide hoopla surrounding the opening of the movie "Batman."

There's just one problem: The Caped Crusader's vehicle doesn't have a motor.

Greg Drebin, a publicist for MTV, which gave away the car, explained the empty space under the hood.

"It simply was not streetworthy," Drebin said. "The car was the real prop used in the picture. But its motor was too heavy, the ratio wasn't according to regulations. It has only been driven by stunt men."

Luckily for McLynn, the prize also includes $25,000 for bat-gas. He said he will invest the money in certificates of deposit and use the interest to buy a motorcycle.

McLynn, an engineering student whose goal is to become a toy designer, will collect his prize Friday at the Ridge Cinema from "Batman" co-star Robert Wuhl. He said he's not sure what he will do with the car.

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Actress Jane Fonda was unharmed after becoming separated from companions in Sequoia National Park and spending the night alone on a mountain, her spokesman said.

Fonda didn't panic when she realized she was lost Sunday, said her publicist, Steve Rivers. She wrapped herself in an insulated blanket and ate a sandwich while she awaited help, he said.

Fonda hiked ahead of her six companions and apparently took a wrong turn, said Bill Tweed, a spokesman for the park 40 miles east of Fresno.

Her companions notified park officials when she failed to show up at Moose Lake, their destination, or at their Pear Lake base camp, Tweed said.

Jackson

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Freddie Jackson says he almost didn't take a chance on a singing career because he had a secure job as a word processor.

In 1982, Jackson's friend, songwriter Paul Laurence, suggested he meet Melba Moore and try for a job as a background singer.

"I told him I think I should stay here and be the greatest word processor in the world," Jackson said.

Jackson went on to sing background for Moore; Lilo Thomas, Angela Bofill and others on studio cuts and tours. Ms. Moore helped him secure a contract with Columbia Records, which produced his 1985 debut album "Rock Me Tonight."

The album and single "Rock Me Tonight," both reached No. 1 on Billboard's black charts. Jackson's follow-up, "Just Like the First Time," also was No. 1 on black charts with the hit singles, "I Don't Want to Lose Your Love," "Look Around", and "Tasty Love."

"I'm going to stop singing when I'm not happy doing it anymore," said Jackson. "Right now, my ballads are things you want when you want to dance romantically with someone, not pop songs. Ballads live on and on."

Greenwood

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music entertainer Lee Greenwood will perform five shows for U.S. troops in Panama next week.

Greenwood's USO tour Monday through June 29 includes performances at Howard Air Base, Fort Clayton and Fort Espinar, World USO President Chuck Hagel said Tuesday.

"Morale may be at a low point now in Panama since the U.S. government sent families back to the States and moved the military troops to the base," Greenwood said. "So, when the USO asked me to go to Panama and give the military community there a little taste of home, I didn't hesitate."

Accord reached on decontrol bill

By BILL MINTZ
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — House and Senate conferees agreed Tuesday to compromise on the natural gas price decontrol bill by removing price ceilings on newly drilled wells on May 15, 1991.

House conferees generally supported immediate decontrol for new wells. But Sens. Wendell H. Ford, D-Ky., and Pete Domenici, R-N.M., pushed for later decontrol to help independent producers active in fields with federal price ceilings above the prevailing market prices for natural gas.

With the final sticking point on the bill resolved, Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., chairman of the Senate Energy & Natural Resources Committee, predicted early action on the conference committee report.

The House version of the bill removed controls for all wells started after March 23, the date the bill was marked up in committee.

The Senate bill treated new wells no differently from other gas wells: Price controls would be removed when producers renegotiate contracts with their customers, but no later than Jan. 1, 1993.

Supporters of the bill, long an important goal for the natural gas industry, say only about 6 percent of the 17 trillion cubic feet of gas sold in the United States in 1988 was sold at a price that was constrained by the price control system. Controls were removed from most gas prices in 1983.

Negotiators on both sides said their respective positions would encourage more drilling.

FDIC may want more S&L control

Seidman

WASHINGTON (AP) — L. William Seidman, who would become the new deposit insurance czar under legislation moving through Congress, is conferring with the Bush administration about an idea that would enhance his power over the savings and loan bailout.

Under the plan, Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., would have greater authority than originally envisioned by the administration within the Resolution Trust Corp., a new agency being created to oversee the closing or sale of insolvent thrift institutions and of real estate repossessed by the S&Ls.

Under bills passed by the House and Senate, the RTC will be run by a board headed by the treasury secretary. It would have an oversight staff, headed by an executive director. But, as the administration envisions the structure, most of the work would be contracted out, presumably to the FDIC.

According to an industry official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, Seidman wants the FDIC to report directly to the RTC oversight board rather than through a staff working for the board.

Ultimate authority would still rest with the RTC board, but without the separate staff there would be less opportunity for administration second-guessing of Seidman's agency. Also, the FDIC — not the RTC board — in practice would choose which private firms are hired for the lucrative job of assisting the government in the huge undertaking.

Seidman, in a telephone interview Tuesday, declined to say his agency is advocating the idea, but he described it as "worth exploring" and "feasible."

"It's not our idea. It came from a suggestion that the GAO (the congressional General Accounting Office) made," he said.

MARKETS

Future prices vary; posted stable

From Staff Reports

August barrels opened at $19 today up 12 cents from Tuesday. Meanwhile, July barrels plunged more than $1 a barrel in thin trading, concluding a $2.28 swing, while other petroleum products ended mixed.

Despite lower future prices, posted prices are stable and are expected to remain firm for the remainder of the week.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the July contract for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of crude oil, finished $1.33 lower at $19.53 a barrel, after gaining 91 cents on Monday. Other contract months were mixed.

Peter Beutel, an energy analyst with Elders Futures Inc., attributed the sell-off in crude to the fact that the near-month contract was set to expire on Tuesday.

He noted that prices started out sharply higher, with the July contract up as much as $21.30 a barrel, but that they plunged later in the session as demand fizzled.

"There really were no fundamental reasons" for the decline, Beutel said.

The drop in crude helped pull down heating oil. The July contract for wholesale No. 2 heating oil slipped 0.37 cent to 45.69 cents a gallon, after settling 0.86 cent higher on Monday.

Among other refined petroleum products, unleaded gasoline for July delivery rose 0.17 cent to 59.17 cents a gallon. The contract was up 0.86 cent the previous session.

Shootings reported as coal strike continues

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Strike-related shootings were reported in two states as a wildcat strike by 28,000 miners in Appalachia and the Midwest showed no sign of easing despite the release of three jailed union leaders.

Meantime, CSX Transportation Inc. reported that the railroad's coal loadings were down about 1,000 cars per day because of the strike, putting 300 workers at least temporarily off the job.

"If the strike continues and spreads, the jobs of as many as 2,500 employees could be affected," said John W. Snow, president and chief executive officer of CSX Transportation, headquartered in Jacksonville, Fla.

CSX spokeswoman Suzanne Walston estimated the miners' strike has reduced by by 15 percent the number of cars loaded daily by the company.

Some union and industry officials had predicted an end to the walkouts with the release of the union leaders jailed in Virginia for their actions in a strike against the Lebanon, Va.,-based Pittston Coal Group Inc.

The three were released Monday night. On Tuesday, they promised a federal judge they would abide by his order banning sit-down demonstrations to block coal trucks at Pittston's processing plants.

Nearly 1,700 United Mine Workers members walked off their Pittston jobs in Virginia and West Virginia on April 5 after working more than 14 months without a contract. The strike spread to Pittston's Kentucky operations Monday, idling 200 more UMW members.

Pittston had dropped out of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association to negotiate independently.

The unauthorized walkouts began June 12 after a UMW rally in Charleston to protest Pittston's action and to protest the fines and jail terms assessed union members in Virginia.

Shootings were reported Tuesday in Alabama and West Virginia.

Coal strike separates neighbors

KELLY, W.Va. (AP) — As the sun rises over Kelly Mountain, mine superintendent Ronnie Gibson drives past union pickets at the crest of the hill and takes his place amid machinery idled by a wildcat strike.

When his neighbor, Junie Dials, tries to reach the same Island Creek Corp. mine at the start of his evening shift, he gets no further than the pickets and retreats to Buddy's Carryout in nearby Accoville.

It's a script they expect to follow as long as wildcat strikes in 10 states continue against coal companies, including the Island Creek mine here in southern West Virginia about 50 miles south of Charleston.

"I have to make an attempt to go," Dials said, sneaking a cigarette at the Buddy's lunch counter Tuesday. "Our contract says we have to go to work." A union contract, however, doesn't mean much these days in the coal fields. Despite a no-strike clause

Dollar trading mixed; Gold down

LONDON (AP) — The dollar ebbed and flowed in a narrow range this morning, gaining against European currencies.

Gold was down.

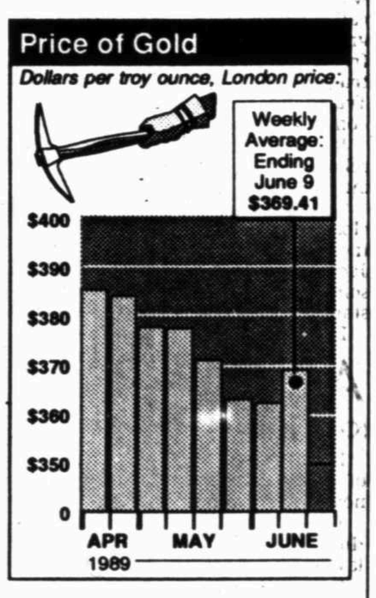
Traders in Italy said the dollar's significant movements in the past few days had taken part in Asian trading, while European trading was calm.

One dealer in London said the pound may have been hurt by strikes that shut down rail, subway and bus service in the capital. "If one's got to hitchhike to work, it doesn't put sterling in good grace," the dealer said.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before the European markets open, the dollar closed at 144.95, up 1.15 yen from Tuesday's close.

Other late rates for the dollar in Europe compared with Monday's late rates:

- 1.9915 West German marks, up from 1.9775
- 1.7278 Swiss francs, up from 1.7110
- 6.7530 French francs, up from 6.7025
- 2.2446 Dutch guilders, up from 2.2255
- 1,443.00 Italian lire, up from 1.431.75
- 1.1977 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2000
- 1.5320 British pound, down from $1.5553.



Gold opened in London at $364.75, down from Tuesday's closing price of $366.50. At mid-morning, the city's five major gold dealers fixed a recommended price of $365.70.

Earlier in Hong Kong gold closed at $366.57, down from $366.95 late Tuesday.

Silver bullion traded late in London at $5.26 bid a troy ounce, from $5.34.

Sea World parks put up for sale

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Buried in more than $2.6 billion in debts from a hostile takeover battle, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich has decided to unload its Sea World theme parks and appeared ready to jettison its top executive.

The Orlando-based publishing and entertainment giant's surprise announcement Tuesday placed on the market its four Sea World parks in four states and two other Florida attractions, plus all of its land holdings.

Estimates of the worth of the overall package ranged from $1.5 billion to $2.5 billion.

"We know most every employee in the parks," HBJ's longtime chairman, William Jovanovich, told reporters Tuesday. "And it hurts a little bit to think that you're going to say goodbye to part of your family. But we're not going to do it unless it's done rightly."

Graduation held for Eastern pilots

MIAMI (AP) — Texas Air Corp. Chairman Frank Lorenzo personally assured Eastern Airlines' new pilots of his commitment to see the carrier succeed, despite a crippling 3-month-old strike.

"Every day that goes by, you see more and more realization of what we're doing," Lorenzo told reporters Tuesday following graduation ceremonies for a group of Eastern recruits.

"An airline can be rebuilt, particularly an airline like Eastern, because of the tremendous strengths and the tremendous assets that the company has. I've been very encouraged by what I've seen."

While Eastern, a unit of Texas Air, is selling assets to reduce its debt, Lorenzo said the carrier is moving ahead with rebuilding and has begun discussions with aircraft manufacturers on buying new aircraft for the 1990s.

Lorenzo said he thought the federal bankruptcy court overseeing Eastern's reorganization will approve the airline's plan to rebuild at two-thirds its pre-strike size.

He called the plan "very, very reasonable ... a much more practical solution" than the unions' call for a new owner or the leanings of some creditors toward liquidation.

Dull trading sends stocks lower

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market finished lower Tuesday in dull trading. What little action there was came from stocks of companies involved in takeovers.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 7.01 points to 2,472.88 after hovering in a narrow range through most of the trading session.

Declining issues edged out advancing ones by about 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 774 down, 657 up and 539 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board totaled 167.65 million shares, up from 130.72 million in Monday's session, which had been the slowest pace in more than two months.

Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 201.39 million shares.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $5.16 billion, or 0.16 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks slipped 0.30 to 179.49.

Standard & Poor's industrial index declined 0.75 to 367.37, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down 0.64 at 321.25.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market fell 0.66 to 194.00. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 361.72, down 0.67.

Midlander Nancy Lundy Weir is hoping to build a business on two symptoms of modern life: The lack of time and the need for service.

She has started ERRANDS UNLIMITED, aimed at both the individual who's busy or unable to get around easily, such as the elderly or disabled, and at businesses. She can be reached by calling 694-1671.

She delivers items such as dry cleaning or medicine and she can shop for groceries or a gift.

She also works for businesses, offering services ranging from making bank deposits to delivering packages. "I had one man who needed some checks taken over to Odessa," she recounts. She's also a notary public should anyone need papers notarized.

She charges a flat fee plus the cost of any purchases.

Hoping to establish itself as a thriving business is FASHIONS UNIQUE, owned by Orchid Mitchell.

The company offers custom tailoring for men, women and children, everything from swimsuits to evening wear. Mitchell also makes custom accessories. Mitchell can be contacted by calling 682-3455.

Just completing its grand opening in its new location is ANTIQUES ETC.

The collection of little shops relocated to the former Knorr's location in Plaza Center, and, according to Yvonne Tighe, response has been fantastic. The move was made because the new store is more visible and offers more parking.

Currently 39 merchants have shops in Antiques Etc., selling everything from antique furniture to dolls.

Also on the move is Jack Rice Insurance, which moved from 1017 N. Midkiff to 1011 N. Midkiff.

Rice, an independent insurance agent, says he moved because he had the opportunity to purchase the building, which is the former Original C.O.K.E. House.

He adds that, once some repairs and renovations have been made, he will be looking for some tenants to occupy the rest of the building.

in their pact, 28,000 United Mine Workers members have walked off the job in sympathy with striking Pittston Coal Group Inc. workers in Virginia, West Virgina and Kentucky.

As Tuesday wound down, Gibson and Dials returned to their homes 15 miles away in Man — Gibson to his tan, wooden home on Burgess Street; Dials to the big white house just around the corner on Main Street. They got together later at Gibson's house to talk about the day.

"I have no idea when I'll be back at work," Dials said. "I'd be tickled to death to go back to work. I want to work."

Each day, the 40-year-old Dials has driven to the top of Kelly Mountain and, each day, a half-dozen union pickets with bandannas covering their faces tell him to turn back. Gibson, 48, said he has had no trouble with the strikers after telling them he is a supervisor. Beyond that, he has been instructed not to talk.

"I can't even tell you my name is Ronnie Gibson," he said in the quiet office of the Island Creek mine.

At Accoville, where he grew up with Gibson, Dials looks exasperated when he leans on Buddy's shining lunch counter.

"I see the ayatollah released our three men down in Virginia today," Dials said, referring to a federal judge. "I was tickled to death about it. I thought they were going to let me go back to work."

The three union leaders in Virginia were jailed after U.S. District Judge Glen Williams found them guilty of contempt of court for violating his ban on attempts to block coal trucks at Pittston's processing plants in Virginia.

They were freed by Williams after promising during a private hearing Tuesday to abide by his order.

In its dispute with the UMW, the Lebanon, Va.,-based Pittston is seeking a contract separate from one covering most of the nation's coal companies. Pittson is seeking mandatory overtime, Sunday work and reduced medical benefits for retirees.

About 1,600 Pittston miners in Virginia and West Virginia walked off their jobs April 5 after working more than 14 months without a contract. Kentucky's 200 Pittston miners joined the walkout Monday.

There's been little sympathy for Pittston in West Virginia's Logan County since 1972 when a 200-foot-high Pittston coal refuse dam broke, wiping the sides of the Buffalo Creek Valley black and taking 125 people to their deaths.

ors its contracts and provides the creditors what they're due."

He called the union-backed buyout effort by Chicago commodities trader Joseph Ritchie "a joke" and said there were no legitimate buyers for Eastern as a whole.

Earlier, Lorenzo, Eastern President Phil Bakes and other executives were all smiles as they handed out diplomas and congratulations to 18 pilot recruits who completed training.

Company spokesman Robin Matell said Eastern has graduated 108 new pilots since it began seeking recruits about a month after the strike began March 4. He said 259 pilots crossed picket lines and 17 more veteran pilots have told the company in the past week they wish to return to work. There are 527 recruits in training, he said.

Matell said Eastern is well on track toward having enough pilots to carry out the airline's planned summer expansion. Eastern now operates 79 daily flights, and plans to fly five times as many by Aug. 1. Eastern operated 1,040 flights daily before the strike.

A spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association disputed Matell's claim.

"We're not contradicting the statement in itself," said the spokesman, who spoke on the condition of anonymity. "But by numbers and by their own information, they are going to be able to fly the first days of the schedule, but they're not going to be able to continue to fly it" because of a lack of pilots.

In Sumiton, Ala., Assistant Police Chief Steve Jacks said a coal truck was hit by five bullets. He said the driver, whom he refused to identify, was not struck by any of the .22-caliber rounds, but did complain of grittiness in his eyes, possibly caused from the broken windshield. The truck belongs to Black and Gold Trucking, an independent Sumiton company.

Jacks said the shooting was strike-related and police were investigating, but no arrests had been made.

"At this time, we are working closely with some union people to try to get some tempers down," Jacks said. "I think we are making some gain and can come to a neutral standoff."

In West Virginia, where almost two-thirds of the wildcat strikers are located, strike-related gunshots were reported in Mingo County, but no arrests were made and no one was reported injured.

Wildcat strikers also headed to southwest Virginia coal fields to try to slow Pittston coal shipments.

"They've just got the place saturated with people; it's pretty well blocked up," said Virginia state police Lt. C.F. Eaton.

One of the freed union leaders, Marty Hudson, field commander, said he's optimistic miners can beat Pittston. Hudson said the wildcat strikers fear a Pittston victory could set a precedent.

"They see what Pittston is doing as a threat to their unions," Hudson said. "If Pittston is successful, it will directly affect their lives.

Rep. W. J. "Billy" Tauzin, D-La., a leader of the producing state members of the House Energy & Commerce Committee, said delaying decontrol of new wells "would delay the good effects of this bill."

Domenici said delaying the decontrol date was important to protect producers who have made contracts or investment decisions based on current law.

The House conferees agreed to the May 15, 1991, date after Ford threatened to delay final action on the bill until the Senate returns from its two week July 4 recess.

Marian Burros stirs fresh ideas into fast food

By MAUREEN CLANCY
Copley News Service

She doesn't look like Flo-Jo. She doesn't even own a Lycra body stocking. And she never considered joining her college track team.

But with her new book, "20 Minute Menus," Marian Burros is sprinting toward a new culinary goal and wants to take busy home cooks with her.

"It's possible to create a complete, good-tasting dinner in less than 20 minutes," said the energetic Burros. "I do it myself all the time."

Burros, a food writer for The New York Times, is known for her hard-hitting nutrition reporting in the weekly column "Eating Well." She has also written or co-written nine cookbooks including "Elegant but Easy" and "Keep It Simple: 30 Minute Meals From Scratch."

Her newest work grew out of recent New York Times studies of what really is happening in the kitchens and dining rooms of American families.

"The Times survey confirmed what I had always felt, that despite the fact the majority of women are working outside the home, about 90 percent of them still do all the cooking and shopping," said Burros. "And they're tired when they get home. I'm tired when I get home."

"20 Minute Menus" contains 100 meals (an entree and at least one side dish for each meal) that can be on the table in 20 minutes or less — including the time for boiling pasta water, preheating the oven and scraping the carrots.

"It does not include setting the table," she said with mock exasperation. "Anyone in the house between 3 and 90 knows how to set a table."

NOR DOES it allow for telephone calls, reading the mail, helping with the kids' homework or feeding the dog and cat.

The menus do not include dessert. In the book's introduction, Burros suggests fresh fruit, ice cream or something from the local bakery for those who want to cap the meal with a sweet.

Other than canned tomato sauce and a few bottled Oriental condiments, no pre-prepared foods are required. Instead, Burros relies on an efficient "game plan" — quick techniques such as broiling, sauteing and steaming; and "ready-cut" raw ingredients.

"Though I'm a little hesitant to serve raw stuff from the supermarket salad bar, I do use things that are going to be cooked," Burros said. "Oh boy, that really saves the drudgery — all the chopping and peeling — and the time."

IN ADDITION, most supermarkets now carry ready-cut vegetables, such as broccoli, cauliflower and carrots, in small plastic bags in the produce section.

"20 Minute Menus" is not just for fast-track yuppies and working couples, Burros said. "It's also for families and for people with children after the children have gone. Basically, it appeals to the modern person."

Burros cooked all 100 menus several times, in her Washington, D.C., country kitchen and her tiny New York galley kitchen ("The timing is much faster in the small kitchen").

One caveat: The recipes tend to be timidly seasoned. Burros adds no salt to any dish. I found that most dishes tasted better with a few pinches of Kosher salt and an increase in the seasonings called for in each recipe.

Here are some recipes developed by Marian Burros to be prepared in 20 minutes or less.

CURRIED LENTILS AND VEGETABLES

8 ounces (1 heaping cup) red lentils
8 ounces whole onion or 7 ounces sliced (ready-cut) (1 and two-thirds cups)
1 teaspoon minced garlic in oil
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 teaspoon ground coriander
1 teaspoon ground cumin
1 teaspoon turmeric
½ teaspoon mild to hot chili powder, depending on degree of hotness desired
¼ teaspoon ground cardamom
⅛ teaspoon ground cloves
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
1 small to medium head cauliflower or 12 ounces flowerettes (ready-cut) (4½ cups)
1 cup chicken stock
3 ounces tomato paste (½ of 6-ounce can)
½ cup unsalted, roasted cashews
½ cup plain low-fat or non-fat yogurt

Yields 2 servings.

In covered pot, bring lentils to boil in plenty of water to cover. Cook about 10 minutes, until soft. Coarsely chop whole onion. Saute onion and garlic in hot oil until soft. Reduce heat and add coriander, cumin, turmeric, chili powder, cardamom, cloves and cinnamon. Stir well.

Add flowerettes, chicken stock and tomato paste to onion mixture. Stir well to mix. Cover and cook until cauliflower is tender, about 8 to 10 minutes.

Drain and stir in lentils, adding some liquid from the pot to thin the sauce if necessary. Stir in cashews and serve with yogurt on the side.

RICE

½ cup long-grain rice
1 cup water

Yields 2 servings.

Place rice and water in heavy-bottomed pot; bring to boil. Reduce heat, cover and cook for a total of 17 minutes, until water has been absorbed and rice is tender.

Shopping List: 8 ounces whole onion or 7 ounces sliced (ready-cut); 1 small to medium head cauliflower or 12 ounces flowerets (ready-cut); Unsalted,roasted cashews (½ cup)

LINGUINE WITH SALMON IN TOMATO SAUCE

3 quarts water
½ cup chopped fresh cilantro
1 tablespoon olive oil
1½ teaspoons minced garlic in oil
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 cups canned or fresh tomato sauce
16 ounces salmon fillets
8 ounces fresh or dried linguine
¼ cup French, Italian or Greek pitted black olives, packed in brine or oil

Yields 3 servings.

Boil water for linguine in covered pot. Chop cilantro and saute in hot oil with garlic for about 30 seconds over low heat. Stir in lemon juice and tomato sauce and cook another 3 to 4 minutes over low heat.

Wash, skin and cut salmon fillets into bite-size chunks. Add to tomato sauce and cook about 5 minutes, until fish has lost its opaqueness but is still moist.

Cook fresh linguine for about 1 minute; cook dried linguine according to package directions. Drain linguine.

Pit olives; add to sauce just before serving. Stir linguine into tomato sauce.

BROCCOLI WITH MUSTARD DRESSING

28 ounces whole broccoli or 16 ounces broccoli flowerettes (ready-cut) (6 to 7 cups)
1½ tablespoons olive oil
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon balsamic vinegar
1 teaspoon grainy mustard

Yields 3 servings.

Cut off flowerettes from whole broccoli and wash. Steam flowerettes for 5 to 7 minutes, until tender but firm.

Meanwhile, in serving dish whisk remaining ingredients for dressing. When broccoli is cooked, drain and stir into dish, coating thoroughly.

Shopping List: 8 ounces fresh linguine; Fresh cilantro (½ cup); 16 ounces salmon fillets; 28 ounces whole broccoli or 16 ounces broccoli flowerets (ready-cut).

CHICKEN IN MUSTARD 'CREAM' SAUCE

12 ounces chicken breasts, skinless and boneless
2 tablespoons flour
1 to 2 tablespoons olive oil
½ cup chicken stock
½ to 1 teaspoon dry mustard
1 teaspoon cornstarch
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
2 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley
3 tablespoons dry sherry
⅓ cup low-fat ricotta
⅓ cup plain low- or non-fat yogurt

Yields 2 servings.

Wash and dry chicken breasts and cut in half. Dredge in flour. Heat oil in heavy pan and brown chicken on both sides, 7 to 10 minutes. Stir a little chicken stock into dry mustard and cornstarch to make a paste. Then stir in rest of chicken stock; add pepper. Set aside.

Chop parsley; set aside.

When chicken breasts are browned, remove and keep warm; deglaze pan with sherry. Add mustard mixture, return chicken to pan and cook until mixture thickens.

Process ricotta with yogurt until smooth.

Remove chicken when cooked; turn heat to very low and quickly stir in ricotta mixture. Do not boil.

Serve sauce over chicken, sprinkled with parsley.

PEPPER-RICE SALAD

½ cup long-grain rice
1 cup water
4 tablespoons chopped red onion (about 2 ounces)
7 ounces whole green bell pepper or 6 ounces sliced (ready-cut)
7 ounces whole red bell pepper or 6 ounces sliced (ready-cut)
1 tablespoon sesame seeds
1 teaspoon sugar
4 tablespoons balsamic vinegar

Yields 2 servings.

Bring rice and water to boil. Reduce heat, cover and cook about 17 minutes over medium heat, until rice is tender and water has been absorbed.

Chop onion finely. Slice green and red peppers into strips with fine slicing blade in food processor; drain. Spoon into serving bowl with onion.

Toast sesame seeds. Stir sugar and vinegar into serving bowl; add sesame seeds.

When rice is cooked, stir into dressing mixture.

Shopping List: 12 ounces chicken breasts, skinless and boneless; Fresh parsley (2 tablespoons); Low-fat ricotta; 2 ounces chopped red onion (4 tablespoons); 7 ounces whole green bell pepper or 6 ounces sliced (ready-cut); 7 ounces whole red bell pepper or 6 ounces sliced (ready-cut).

This "veal" is really turkey, but you can't tell the difference in this lovely orange sauce.

'VEAL' IN CREAMY ORANGE SAUCE

12 ounces turkey breast, skinless and boneless
1 to 2 tablespoons olive oil
½ cup fresh orange juice
1 teaspoon cornstarch
1 cup plain low- or non-fat yogurt
¼ cup low- or non-fat cottage cheese
Freshly ground black pepper

Yields 2 servings.

Wash and dry turkey breast and cut into pieces about 2 by 3 inches.

Heat oil in skillet and brown turkey pieces on both sides for about 5 or 6 minutes.

Mix a little orange juice with cornstarch to make a paste; then stir the paste into remaining juice. When turkey is brown, reduce heat add orange juice mixture. Simmer about 2 minutes to thicken and finish cooking turkey.

Blend yogurt and cottage cheese in food processor until smooth. Reduce heat. Carefully stir into turkey mixture but do not boil. Season with pepper.

COUSCOUS SALAD

½ cup couscous, precooked
2 tablespoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons olive oil
⅛ teaspoon cinnamon
1 stalk chopped celery (ready-cut) (½ cup)
2 scallions
1 tablespoon chopped fresh parsley
3 tablespoons raisins
1 tablespoon pine nuts or 2 tablespoons dry-roasted unsalted peanuts
Freshly ground black pepper to taste

Yields 2 servings.

Following the directions on couscous package, bring water to boil in small covered pan. Stir in couscous; remove from heat and cover. Allow to sit for 3 to 5 minutes, until water has been absorbed.

In serving bowl mix lemon juice and olive oil with cinnamon. Wash celery, scallions and parsley and chop in food processor. Add to bowl with raisins and pine nuts.

Stir in couscous and season with pepper.

ASPARAGUS

12 to 14 asparagus spears

Yields 2 servings.

Bring water to boil in steamer. Break off tough ends from asparagus and wash. Steam asparagus about 7 minutes, until tender but firm.

Weekend mornings are great time for breakfast treats

Associated Press

Weekend mornings are the best times of the week. You can sleep late or be up at the crack of dawn — it's your choice. And you can enjoy breakfast in ways there's no time for during the week. Try these ideas for great weekend a.m. dining.

PREPARING THE MEAL

■ Get your whole family to help. Kids can mix fruit and pour fruit juice, prepare cocoa, make toast and pour pancakes.

■ Do as much as you can the night before: Prepare fruit, fix omelet fillings, stir up refrigerator muffin batter.

■ Hike or bike to the park for breakfast. Make sandwiches with thinly sliced deli meats on homemade biscuits. Add fresh fruit and beverages.

■ How about cooking breakfast on the grill? Try breakfast sausages or a ham slice. Cook potatoes or eggs in a skillet over the coals. Wrap bread in foil and heat over the coals. Grill wedges of fresh pineapple.

EASY BREAKFAST IDEAS

■ Flash Fruit: Chill one 20-ounce can peeled, cored, whole pineapple; cut lengthwise into quarters. Top with pina colada yogurt and sprinkle with a little toasted coconut.

■ Strawberry Pancake Shortcakes: Layer pancakes with lightly sugared sliced strawberries and dollop with whipped topping.

■ Cook's Choice Pancakes: Prepare pancakes as usual, except, when undersides of cakes are nicely brown, lightly sprinkle about 1 tablespoon mixed dried fruit bits, raisins, coarsely chopped pecans or drained blueberries evenly over each pancake. Turn and brown other side.

■ Signature Pancakes: Prepare pancake batter as usual, except thin with enough water to make of proper consistency to squirt through a plastic squeeze-top bottle or to pour from a small pitcher. Squeeze or pour batter onto greased griddle to form letters for names. (Be sure to write each letter backward on the griddle so the pancakes will read correctly when flipped.)

■ For a brunch crowd, bake omelets in the oven: Melt 2 tablespoons margarine or butter in a 15x10x1-inch baking pan in 400 degree oven. Combine 12 eggs, ¼ cup water, ½ teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper; beat with fork or rotary beater until combined but not frothy. Tilt hot margarine in pan to thoroughly coat pan. Place pan on oven rack; carefully pour egg mixture into pan. Bake in 400 degree oven about 7 minutes or until eggs are set but still glossy. Cut omelet into 6 squares. Spoon desired filling over half the square; fold other half over filling.

DEAR ABBY

Teen wants control of money earned

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I was very disappointed in your answer to "Broke in Brooklyn," the 16-year-old boy who complained because his father insisted on taking over the money he had earned and doling out whatever he asked for — to be sure he wasn't misusing his earnings.

Abby, teen-agers can gain valuable experience by keeping their own bank accounts balanced and budgeting their own money. They learn by making their own mistakes while they are still at home, where they can be counseled by their parents. They also learn by suffering the consequences of their own poor judgment.

It is highly unlikely that a 16-year-old boy who can hold a steady job and keep up with his school and social demands will be using his money for drugs, booze or handouts.

A pox on your answer! — LAKEWOOD (CALIF.) FATHER OF THREE

DEAR FATHER: A single pox is hardly enough for that answer. Several hundred readers wrote to tell me I was wrong, wrong, wrong! And they were right.

Let's hear it from the mother of two teen-agers:

DEAR ABBY: You blew it! I refer to your response to "Broke in Brooklyn," the 16-year-old boy who objected to his father's insisting that he turn over his entire paycheck — then making it necessary for him to ask his father for money whenever he needed it.

Instead of congratulating the boy for earning money while going to school, you gave him a lecture, telling him to "count his blessings — he was lucky to have a father who cares about him," and blah, blah, blah ...

Well, I think the teen-ager should be able to keep the money he earned. Of course, if there is a tough financial situation at home, the boy may need to contribute a part of his earnings to the household. If not, I think it's the father — not the 16-year-old — who needs the lecture. Parents aren't always right. — DEBORAH R. ISHIDA, M.D., BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Regarding "Broke in Brooklyn": My mother always used to say that when it came to money, Dad had no sense of "the bottom of the barrel" because when he was a boy, he had to turn over his entire paycheck to his mother, and when he needed money he'd just ask for some without even knowing how much was left in the sugar bowl.

Consequently, as a parent with family obligations, Dad always spent the last nickel in his pocket without knowing how much (if anything) was left.

My mother had a hard time dealing with this, and told us that if we were going to make mistakes or run out of money, to do it while we were young enough to learn, and didn't have any family obligations. — NEVER BROKE

DEAR ABBY: Abby, ol' girl, that was bum advice you gave "Broke in Brooklyn."

Just when is the kid going to learn how to handle money? Will Daddy always be around to tell Junior how to spend and how to save? Give him a break, Abby. If he's mature enough to hold down a job, he should be mature enough to selectively save and spend his earnings.

I suspect that Dad is on a power trip and isn't ready to give up the control he has always had on his son. — MINNESOTA MOM

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "Dorthea Redwine," whose husband is a banker in Fayetteville, Ga. He told her that folded and creased checks play havoc with the high-speed equipment used in processing checks.

This has been discussed in our office frequently. We aren't supposed to fold checks, but what should we do when businesses send bills accompanied by addressed return envelopes that are too short for a regular company check?

Thanks for letting me have my say. And tell Mrs. Redwine I love her last name! — LISA RICHWINE, PASCO, WASH.

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Alliums add potent flavor

New York Times News Service

The Alliums are the First Family of Flavor in the United States and most other countries. Onions, garlic, leeks and shallots, while short on nutrients, are long on flavor. Think of the humdrum that would result if we removed all that potent, pungent chemistry.

Many of us grew up with onions sauteed in oil, then mounded on top of a piece of meat.

Liver springs to mind. First you fry two thick pieces of bacon; then you slice an onion and throw the rings into the hot fat. The liver might already have been sauteed in that fat or separately. Lay the two strips of bacon crosswise on top of the liver, spoon the onions over everything and you're off to the races.

Well, this is almost the last decade of the 20th century, and we know we shouldn't do that anymore.

Recipe for New Age Liver: Sear the meat quickly in a nonstick pan with a little olive oil, crumble a strip of thoroughly cooked, thoroughly blotted bacon over the meat (or sprinkle it with bacon subsitute), and top it with sweated onions.

Sweating is one of several ways to cook onions without introducing a lot of fat.

Cook the onions in a covered pan with a little oil over low heat. If you need to brown them beyond the gold-amber stage, start them at high heat, stirring constantly; then reduce the flame and cover.

(This technique serves as the base for one of the great onion soup recipes: onions, water, salt and pepper. One must stand over the stove stirring a lot of onions over moderate heat until they are very brown. They will collapse into a nearly mushy state, at which point they may be baked at about 350 degrees until very dark, to caramelize the last bit of sugar remaining in the onions.

(Simmering the cooked onions with water, salt, a lot of freshly ground pepper and maybe a bit of wine will result in a great soup. Stock may be used in place of water, but you may find you like the water-only version best.)

Whole onions may be hollowed and filled with any number of meat or vegetable stuffings, then baked with, for example, a tomato sauce.

Those crisp, little onion strings used to garnish dishes in restaurants can be simulated at home. They are generally just very thinly sliced onion, floured and deep-fried, and one can simulate them by sauteeing unfloured, thinly sliced onions over moderately high heat, tossing frequently.

These are some other members of the Allium family:

■ Garlic. What can be said that hasn't been about this wondrous bulb? The recent spate of recipes involving whole cloves of garlic (chicken with a million cloves et al.) has expanded the range of possibilities.

Another possibility: bake a couple of heads of elephant garlic at 250 to 300 degrees for about 40 minutes, until soft, and squeeze out the paste that forms. Mix with sesame paste, lemon juice, and chopped jalapeno or serrano pepper. Use the resulting condiment to top grilled chicken or fish, or even a plain baked potato. The flavor is thrilling.

■ Leeks. They can be used in soups or as a garnish. Or separate them into sheets, blanch them for a second and use the sheets to wrap other foods.

Make a no-fat or low-fat vichyssoise by boiling leeks and potatoes together in light chicken broth and pureeing the result. If you can't stand its leanness, add a little milk or half-and-half.

■ Shallots. Generally regarded as a milder, less caustic substitute for onions, shallots are used in fish cookery and other applications in which onion would overwhelm. Sometimes they can be substituted directly for onion.

Fresh scallops, sauteed onions make warm-weather treat

New York Times News Service

Scallops and onions make a delightful warm-weather treat. You don't need Vidalia, Maui or other sweet onions if you have the patience to cook ordinary red onions very slowly with a bit of sugar.

SCALLOPS ON A BED OF RED ONIONS

1½ pounds red onions
1 tablespoon olive oil
½ cup water
2 teaspoons sugar
2 teaspoons lemon juice
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1 pound bay or calico scallops
1 clove garlic, chopped, or ½ teaspoon minced garlic in oil
2 tablespoons dry vermouth

Peel and slice onions very thin.

Saute onions in nonstick pan in hot oil over medium-high heat until they soften, 10 to 12 minutes.

Add water and sugar. Cover and cook over low heat until water evaporates, about 12 to 15 minutes longer. Sprinkle with lemon juice and pepper.

Wash and drain scallops. Add scallops and garlic to onions and cook for 2 or 3 minutes, depending on size of scallops.

Stir in vermouth; raise heat and cook quickly for 30 seconds.

HERBED POTATOES

1 tablespoon unsalted butter
1 tablespoon flour
¾ cup plus 2 tablespoons chicken stock
¼ teaspoon dried rosemary
¼ teaspoon dried thyme
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
2 tablespoons coarsely grated Parmesan cheese
½ cup plain low- or nonfat yogurt
1 pound cooked, unpeeled tiny new potatoes

Melt butter in small saucepan; stir in flour and cook about one minute, stirring. Remove from heat and stir in stock with rosemary, thyme and pepper. Return to heat and continue cooking until mixture thickens.

Remove from heat and stir in cheese and yogurt.

Cut hot potatotes in quarters or halves and stir in sauce.

Shopping for bananas not just monkey business

By GLORIA SCHWARTZ
Copley News Service

Even small children can point out bananas, though they may stumble on pronouncing all those syllables.

But these days, with the proliferation of varieties, seasoned shoppers have to look twice to see if what they're buying is really a banana or one of its exotic cousins.

Among the varieties you're likely to find in your supermarket's produce section are red bananas, plantains and manzano bananas.

There are differences, as you might expect.

As with apples, some varieties are better cooked or baked, while others are best enjoyed out-of-hand.

The banana was called musa paradisiaca or "fruit of paradise," until it became better-known by its familiar African name.

According to the "Cooks' Encyclopedia," the banana is one of the first fruits to have been brought into cultivation. The Europeans first called them banana figs and, in some instances, the name fig is still attached to the term banana.

The banana has a lot going for it. It's high in potassium and a good source of fiber. It has no cholesterol, very little fat and no saturated fat. It also contains folic acid and vitamin C.

THE ORDINARY banana we all know and love is the yellow cavendish banana. Bitter when green, it is ready to eat when it is yellow and full of brown spots. If it turns mushy before developing brown spots, it is bruised but can still be used for baking.

To ripen, allow bananas to stand at room temperature. Some sources say you can refrigerate them after they are ripe, but the taste is not the same.

Among the varieties of bananas finding their way into supermarket produce sections are red bananas.

Jim Groves, a produce manager, recommends that red bananas be used for cooking only. "When it is ripe and starting to turn just a bit black, it is right for cooking," says Groves.

Groves says he has tried the red banana raw, and "it has no taste."

However, Frieda Kaplan, whose produce company supplies exotic fruits and vegetables all over the country, says that ripe red bananas have a flavor akin to raspberries.

Red bananas take a long time to ripen, sometimes two to three weeks after purchasing. If you want them to ripen quicker, place them in a brown bag with another fruit, such as an apple.

Red bananas should be soft and easy to peel when ripe. The flavor is slightly sweeter, heartier and more intense than yellow bananas. The price is more intense, too — almost three times the price of the average banana.

Manzano bananas, or finger bananas, are tiny, the size of your finger. They look like midget versions of the traditional yellow variety. They are generally used in cooking.

THE BURRO, also called chunky, banana is short, "the size of three fingers put together," says Groves. They are cooking bananas, used while green.

The plantain, also a cooking banana, is a staple of Latin American and Central American cooking. It has been around a long time, but until recently was found only in Latin American neighborhoods.

According to "Uncommon Fruits and Vegetables" by Elizabeth Schneider, plantains can be eaten at every stage of development. The interior color of the fruit will remain creamy, yellowish or lightly pink, but its flavor will change as it ripens.

When the plantain's peel is green to yellow, the flavor of the flesh is bland and its texture simply starchy. The uses are similar to those of a potato.

"As the peel changes from yellow-brown through black," says Schneider, "plantain plays the role of both fruit and vegetable, having a sweetness and banana aroma."

Jackie Moch of Springfield, Ill., is originally from Guatemala, where plantains are an integral part of the cooking, she says.

"Plantains can't be eaten raw," she says. Instead, they should be eaten like a starch. "One can't substitute regular bananas for plantains," she says.

"Plaintains should be used when they are very dark," says Moch.

Plantains are delicious fried, she says. "Slice them into quarter-inch slices. Fry them in oil. When they are brown, remove from the oil and drain them well. Serve with sour cream."

One of the easiest ways to eat a plantain is the way we prepare and eat a baked potato, baked right in the skin.

BAKED PLANTAINS

Rinse and dry as many plantains as needed, usually figuring 1 medium-size plantain per person. Trim off tips. Cut lengthwise slit in each fruit. Set slit-side up in a foil-lined pan and bake at 375 degrees until creamy tender, about 40 minutes.

When baked, plantains can be peeled and served whole, or separated into lengthwise strips along natural seed divisions, or sliced crosswise in rounds or diagonals.

BAKED BANANAS MOCH

4 firm bananas (yellow variety)
4 tablespoons lemon juice
8 tablespoons brown sugar
Whipping cream (optional)

Peel bananas. Bake on baking pan at 350 degrees for 15 minutes. Drizzle with lemon juice and sprinkle on brown sugar. Serve warm with whipped cream on side.

The following dessert is beautiful to serve and relatively easy to prepare. What makes this especially wonderful is the use of freshly ground nutmeg and cloves. You will notice the difference immediately. This recipe uses those bananas on your counter that are about to go bad.

BANANA UPSIDE-DOWN CAKE

1 stick (½ cup) unsalted butter, softened
¾ cup sugar
3 cups thinly sliced ripe bananas (about 3 bananas)
1 large egg, beaten lightly
1 teaspoon real vanilla
¾ teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
¼ teaspoon ground cloves (freshly grated)
1½ cups all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons double-acting baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup milk
⅓ cup apricot preserves, strained
Sweetened, whipped heavy cream as an accompaniment, if desired

Butter 9-inch-round or 9-inch-square cake pan, 1½ inches deep, with 2 tablespoons of the butter. Sprinkle with ¼ cup of the sugar (this step is necessary to sweeten bananas).

Arrange banana slices overlapping in concentric circle if pan is round, or in rows if baking pan is square.

In large bowl, cream remaining 6 tablespoons butter, add remaining ½ cup sugar, a little at a time, beating mixture until it is light and fluffy. Beat in egg, vanilla, cinnamon, nutmeg and cloves.

In separate bowl, sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Stir dry mixture into butter mixture, ½ cup at a time, alternately with milk. Stir batter until just combined.

Pour batter carefully over banana slices, making sure you do not upset pattern.

Smooth top of batter and bake cake on baking sheet in middle of preheated 350 degree oven for about 40 minutes, or until cake has pulled away from sides of pan. Let cake cool in pan on rack for 20 minutes. Run thin knife around sides of pan, invert cake onto serving plate.

In small saucepan melt preserves over low heat, stirring, and brush over cake. Serve cake with whipped cream, if desired.

The following hors d'oeuvre is a bit different, yet very easy to make. The combination of Dijon mustard, bacon and bananas works deliciously together. The other nice thing about this recipe is that it can be put together easily with common ingredients.

BACON AND BANANA KEBABS

2 tablespoons fresh lemon or lime juice
1 tablespoon Dijon-style mustard
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
2 large, firm-ripe bananas
8 slices lean bacon

Yields 8 servings as an hors d'oeuvre.

Let 16 (5-inch) bamboo skewers soak in water for 30 minutes (or use metal ones). This step is necessary if using wood so that the wood doesn't burn while cooking.

In bowl, whisk together lemon juice, mustard, salt and pepper to taste. Add bananas, each cut crosswise diagonally into 8 pieces; stir them gently to coat with marinade.

Let bananas marinate, turning occasionally, for 15 minutes or a bit longer.

Meanwhile cook bacon in large skillet over moderate heat, turning it until cooked but still limp. Do not overcook bacon or you will not be able to wrap the pieces around bananas. Drain bacon on paper towels.

Wrap each piece of banana with piece of bacon and thread 1 bacon-and-banana piece onto each skewer. Broil kebabs on rack of broiler pan about 4 inches from heat, turning once, for 6 to 8 minutes or until bacon is crisp.

The following is a Thai recipe from "From Eight Items or Less" by Ann Lovejoy.

THAI BANANA CHICKEN

1 chicken breast, skinned and boned (2 pieces)
1 tablespoon butter
½ cup chicken stock or boullion
½ teaspoon nutmeg
2 red bananas, halved lengthwise
1 to 3 fresh Thai chilies or jalapenos, seeded and chopped
4 ti leaves (or 1 bunch spinach or cabbage leaves)

Yields 2 servings.

In frying pan, melt 2 teaspoons butter over medium-high heat. Add chicken and brown on all sides. Add stock and nutmeg and simmer, covered, for 10 minutes.

Line individual casseroles with 2 ti leaves in each, crisscrossed, or with overlapping spinach leaves. Add 1 piece of chicken to each casserole and spoon 2 tablespoons of stock into each. Scatter half of chopped chilies over each.

Briefly saute bananas in remaining butter. Crisscross bananas over chicken. Fold leaves tightly over all and bake in 350 degree oven for 30 minutes.

Sometimes unusual combinations of food are used for variety's sake.

BANANAS AND FLOUNDER MEUNIERE

2 bananas, halved lengthwise and halved
1 stick (½ cup) unsalted butter
4 (6-ounce) skinned flounder fillets
Seasoned flour for dredging (flour and salt and pepper to taste)
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
Minced parsley leaves
2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice

Yields 4 servings.

In large skillet saute bananas in 3 tablespoons butter for 1 minute on each side, or until golden. Transfer with slotted spatula to plate and keep warm, covered.

Dredge fillets in seasoned flour, shaking off excess.

Add oil and 2 more tablespoons butter to skillet. Cook flounder over moderately high heat for 1 to 2 minutes on each side or until it just flakes when tested with fork.

Transfer flounder with slotted spatula to heated platter and top with bananas. Wipe out skillet and melt remaining 3 tablespoons butter over moderately high heat, stirring until browned lightly.

Pour butter over dish and sprinkle with dash of parsley and lemon juice.

Try this recipe instead of your usual sweet potato recipe. It is especially good with pork or game.

SWEET POTATO AND BANANA PUREE

8 cups peeled, diced sweet potatoes
3 ripe bananas
6 tablespoons (¾ stick) unsalted butter
2 tablespoons rum
1 tablespoon brown sugar
¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg (freshly ground, if possible)
Salt, to taste
1 cup toasted sliced almonds

Yields 8 servings.

Place sweet potatoes in medium-size saucepan and add water to cover. Cook, covered, until very tender; drain. Cut bananas into 1-inch pieces and puree in food processor.

Add hot sweet potaotes, 4 tablespoons butter, rum and brown sugar. Process until smooth. Add nutmeg and salt, to taste. Process just to blend. Keep warm.

Melt remaining 2 tablespoons butter in small skillet. Add almonds and saute until lightly browned. Sprinkle with a little salt. Top each serving of sweet potato puree with generous amount of toasted almonds.

Bananas are baby's favorite fruit, but these days you have to look twice to see if you're buying the old standby yellow cavendish or one of its exotic cousins.

Fresh fruits sweetened with dessert liquers

By MARIAN BURROS
New York Times News Service

The stores are filled up with the fruits that make serving dessert so simple in the summer.

There are blueberries, strawberries, raspberries, nectarines, peaches, plums and cherries, especially those stunning white or cream-colored Queen Anne cherries that make the Bings seem tame.

For a fruit salad, any combination of these fruits works. If the plums are not ripe something else can be used in their place. If the raspberries are expensive, use just a few or replace them with strawberries.

If the fruit needs a little sweetening, try a liqueur instead of sugar — but remember that a little goes a long way.

When just one fruit is in order for dessert, the recipes below are short and sweet and, with the exception of the sour-cream version of the sauce for nectarines, low in fat.

One of my favorites doesn't even need proportions. Simply layer a glass bowl with green and-or red seedless grapes, plain yogurt and brown sugar, using as many layers as you need to feed the guests. The amount of sugar depends on the sweetness of the grapes.

BLUEBERRY KIR SAUCE

1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon cornstarch
¼ cup cr'eme de cassis
¾ cup dry white wine
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1½ cups fresh blueberries

Melt butter in saucepan.

Combine cornstarch and cassis to make a smooth mixture.

Gradually stir cassis mixture into melted butter. Add wine and lemon juice and cook, stirring, until mixture is thick.

Stir in berries and cook until they begin to burst.

Chill, and serve over lemon sorbet or vanilla ice cream.

Yield: 5 servings.

SAUCE FOR NECTARINES

1½ cups sour cream or plain, low-fat yogurt or a mixture of sour cream and yogurt
4½ tablespoons cr'eme de cacao
4½ tablespoons Seville orange marmalade

Combine ingredients.

Serve with chilled, sliced nectarines or peaches.

Yield: About 2 cups, enough for 10 to 12 pieces of fruit.

PEACHES IN ORANGE LIQUEUR

2 pounds peaches
¼ cup butter
½ to 1 cup sugar
½ cup orange liqueur
¼ cup lemon juice
½ cup slivered almonds

Preheat oven to 375 degrees.

Wash, halve and pit peaches. Arrange them with cut side down, one layer deep, in a shallow baking pan.

Cream together butter and sugar.

Stir in orange liqueur and lemon juice.

Spoon mixture over peaches, and refrigerate if desired.

To serve, return to room temperature and sprinkle with almonds.

Bake 35 to 40 minutes, until peaches are soft. Baste with juices once or twice. Serve warm, not hot.

Yield: 6 servings.

RED PLUM COMPOTE

⅔ cup sugar
1 cup dry white wine
1 cup water
4 whole cloves
1 3-inch stick cinnamon
Zest of ½ lemon
18 firm, ripe, red plums, stemmed and rinsed

Combine sugar, wine, water, cloves, cinnamon and lemon zest in saucepan large enough to hold plums.

Bring ingredients to boil and cook, uncovered, for 5 minutes.

Add plums and bring mixture to boil; lower heat and simmer 10 to 20 minutes, until plums are tender but still hold their shape.

Remove the plums individually as they become ready.

When all are cooked, return the plums to the syrup and chill.

Serve to dieters plain; otherwise, serve over vanilla ice cream.

Yield: 6 servings.

MATCHING FRUITS AND SPIRITS

Peaches — orange liqueurs.
Raspberries — framboise.
Italian plums — plum brandy.
Strawberries and raspberries — orange liqueurs, kirsch.
Blueberries, blackberries, raspberries — cassis.
Pears — pear brandy.

House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt speaks to reporters outside the Chinese Embassy in Washington Tuesday. A delegation of congressmen placed a wreath in memory of the fallen Chinese students before entering the embassy to talk with officials. Other congressmen to the right of Gephardt are Rep. Bush adds to China sanctions

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President Bush is tightening diplomatic and financial pressure on China, trying to block at least $1.4 billion in development loans while the country is gripped by an "atmosphere of suspicion and reprisal."

The latest sanctions were announced Tuesday amid demands from Congress for tougher action to retaliate against China's bloody crackdown and widespread arrests of leaders of pro-democracy protests.

Hours after the U.S. actions were announced, Chinese authorities in Shanghai ignored American pleas for clemency and shot to death three men convicted of setting a train on fire, the first reported executions since the crackdown.

The three were executed at a public gathering a day after Shanghai's highest court rejected their appeals of the death penalty, a spokesman at the Shanghai Foreign Affairs Office said.

On Bush's orders, the United States will try to postpone consideration of new loans to China by international financial institutions.

One administration source said the action could freeze $1.4 billion during the next six months from the World Bank and International Development Bank. Other estimates indicated the figure could be even higher.

Bush also curtailed contacts by U.S. officials with their Chinese counterparts, ordering a suspension of all high-level exchanges of government officials with Beijing.

While not affecting embassy-to-embassy contacts, it will force Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher to scrap a trip to China next month, Secretary of State James A. Baker III said.

"This action is being taken in response to the wave of violence and reprisals by the Chinese authorities against those who have called for democracy," White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said.

"The U.S. hopes that the current tragedy in China can be brought to a peaceful end and that dialogue will replace the atmosphere of suspicion and reprisal," Fitzwater said. "China is an important state with which we hope to continue productive relations."

The latest action follows earlier orders for a freeze on military sales to China and a suspension of contacts by military leaders.

With the repression in China, Bush has been prodded by conservative and liberal members of Congress alike to take tougher action, such as withdrawing most-favored-nation trading privileges from Beijing.

The administration has argued that China is impervious to pressure from the United States, and Bush has said he wants to refrain from commercial sanctions that would hurt the Chinese people.

Congressional Delegate Walter Fauntroy, D-D.C., said at a House Banking subcommittee hearing prior to Bush's action that China has $4.7 billion in loans "pending or in the pipeline" at the World Bank and $1.1 billion being processed by the Asian Development Bank. The White House statement said Bush's action was aimed at new loans to China, so it was unclear how much money was involved.

Prior to the announcement of new sanctions, Bush's administration came under fresh criticism on Capitol Hill.

Republican Sens. Frank Murkowski of Alaska and Gordon Humphrey of New Hampshire told Baker at a Senate hearing that the U.S. policy has been too tame.

Murkowski said the Bush administration is "tip-toeing through the tulip bed with China" while Humphrey called the U.S. reaction to suppression "pathetically weak."

Humphrey said the United States looked "awfully unprincipled" in maintaining business ties with China "in view of the magnitude of the atrocity and the callousness" of Chinese officials.

Earlier Tuesday, the administration made a public plea to Chinese leaders to grant clemency to protesters sentenced to death and to pardon people arrested in pro-democracy demonstrations.

Fitzwater said the death sentences, if carried out, "could only deepen the wounds of the past few weeks."

Eleven demonstrators, denounced as "counterrevolutionaries," have been sentenced to death, the three in Shanghai and eight in Beijing. More than 1,600 other people have been arrested, many of them students and young workers, as a result of pro-democracy demonstrations.

"We urge the leaders of the Peoples Republic of China to show clemency to use their powers to pardon those who were arrested in the demonstration for democracy," Fitzwater said.

The plea, registered by lawmakers as well, appeared to fall on deaf ears.

China's ambassador to the United States, in a heated meeting with members of Congress, said the turmoil in China is an internal matter and that foreign countries should not meddle, according to participants.

More than a dozen members of Congress went to the Chinese Embassy and asked that executions be blocked and that judicial decisions be reviewed.

House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., said they had "a very frank exchange of views" with the ambassador and "conveyed the outrage and the deep sense of disappointment that exists among all the American people about what has transpired in China in the last few days."

Shanghai authorities today executed three men convicted of setting a train on fire June 6, in the first executions stemming from the nationwide student-led protests. 3 Houston council members will honor students' request

HOUSTON (AP) — Three city council members say they will honor a request by local Chinese students to boycott a farewell reception for the Chinese consul in Houston.

Chinese students who participated in local demonstrations to show support for fellow students in Beijing sent letters to civic leaders and foreign consuls asking them not to attend tonight's reception for Gen. Ni Yaoli at the Chinese consulate, said Fan Lu, a Rice University research associate.

Many students angry about the government crackdown in China also plan to protest outside the reception, Lu said. Ni is returning to China after completing his three-year term in Houston as consul general.

Although some local officials plan to attend, council members Frank Mancuso, Ben Reyes and Rodney Ellis said they will not go the reception.

"This is my way of protesting the slaughter of students over there (in Beijing)," Mancuso said Tuesday.

"For me to go now to the official house of that government would, I believe, be sanctioning what is going on in that country," Reyes said.

And Ellis said he could not, "in good conscience," attend the party.

About 121 letters were mailed over the weekend to the mayor, City Council members and various foreign consuls "urging them not to go" to the reception, Lu said. The letters also asked them to express disapproval of the recent attack on pro-democracy students and other citizens in Beijing.

But council members Jim Greenwood and Eleanor Tinsley and representatives of the British and Mexican consulates in Houston said they planned to attend. Several council members said they will not attend because of prior commitments.

"For me to go now to the official house of that government would, I believe, be sanctioning what is going on in that country."

— Houston City Council member Ben Reyes

Greenwood said he was going to the party "because I have respect for Consul General Ni, and I have enjoyed a good reception with him during his stay and service here in Houston."

But Greenwood added he would tell Ni "the strong negative feelings I have about the way the Deng Xiaoping government has repressed the students' efforts at democratization of China."

Ms. Tinsley said she didn't believe boycotting the reception would solve any problems.

Helen Mann, a spokeswoman for the British consulate, said a local representative will attend the reception as a "normal courtesy."

And Mexico's local consul general, Ramon Xilotl-Ramirez, plans to attend the party to "thank him personally for the excellent job he has done as the consul general," a spokeswoman said.

Repression killing tourist industry

By FRANK VIVIANO
New York Times News Service

HONG KONG — When a United Airlines flight arrived in Beijing recently without a single passenger, its empty seats dramatized the catastrophic impact of repression on China's key tourism industry.

"It will be years before we recover," a Chinese hotel manager in a southern province said recently. "This is a disaster."

The consequences go far beyond the leisure plans of travelers or the money they spend.

Tourism has become a critical instrument of national policy in China during the 1980s, with wide-ranging implications for the regime that presides over its collapse.

Nothing has been more responsible for the updating of China's decrepit infrastructure than the tourist boom.

Backed by foreign expertise and financing, hundreds of hotels have gone up in a few short years, from Tibet to Tianjin.

Following the successful lead of the Unison Group, which negotiated the joint venture behind Beijing's Great Wall Sheraton, all of the major international chains — Hilton, Nikko, the Peninsula Group, Holiday Inn — have invested heavily in this boom.

In the process, they introduced state-of-the-art communications technology and management techniques, and began the difficult task of training thousands of Chinese citizens in the skills necessary to maintain a modern economy.

"But the training is only in its infancy," said a North American businessman in a major Chinese city, "and if we are forced by economic conditions to shut down, that's where it will end."

Many of the hotel and other infrastructural improvements spawned by the tourist boom have been paid for with loans secured abroad.

The Chinese government insisted on such loans, rather than outright foreign investment, to ensure it would have the majority interest in significant projects.

But the loans, which amount to nearly $40 billion, will come due eventually, and analysts here say the economic losses sustained already will make it very difficult for China to keep up interest payments.

The loss of tourism, a prime source of foreign currency, could bring Beijing to the brink of bankruptcy.

The tourist industry has become an important vehicle of China's foreign policy. The point is most obvious in the case of Taiwan, from which more than 500,000 tourists — nearly 3 percent of the island's population — came to China in 1988 alone.

Each was treated as a potential supporter of reunification with the mainland by Beijing, which set up special welcome centers and travel programs all over the country to make "Taiwan compatriots" feel at home.

By Tuesday, 80 percent of the Taiwan citizens who booked tours to China through Hong Kong this summer had canceled.

The discovery of tourism's power to influence foreign opinion has also affected China's own investments abroad.

Chengdu, in Sichuan Province, has opened restaurants in Washington, New York and the Fiji Islands, with the express intention of promoting other ties.

Spinoffs from the tourist industry have defused dangerous social tensions.

Millions of the "Red Guard generation" — middle-aged Chinese whose educations were prematurely terminated by the disruptions of the Cultural Revolution — would be unemployed drifters today without the small business opportunities generated by waves of tourists.

Rejected as political undesirables by state industries, former Red Guards are the backbone of an enormous structure of private restaurants, souvenir stalls, crafts shops, taxi companies and minibuses that ply roads all over tourist China.

Younger people, fresh out of language institutes, often act as guides and interpreters in the government-run tourist sector.

People from both generations are certain to be increasingly alienated from the Li Peng regime as their livelihoods disappear with the foreign visitors.

"How will I feed my family?" asked a souvenir vendor in the inland city of Xian, voicing a common anxiety.

In major China tourist destinations, entire urban development plans hinge on the expensive rehabilitation of areas that draw foreign visitors.

Freelance journalist for Dallas paper ordered out of China

DALLAS (AP) — A freelance journalist covering the turmoil in Beijing has been ordered out of the country on charges he talked to peasants on forbidden land and "fabricated rumors that he saw many people who were killed by soldiers in Tiananmen Square."

Joseph Kahn, 24, became the sixth news correspondent to be expelled by the Chinese government since soldiers reclaimed the square from pro-democracy demonstrators two weeks ago.

Kahn, a graduate student at Harvard University, entered China on May 30 to report part-time for The Dallas Morning News on the pro-democracy movement and China's economic situation and to study the Mandarin language.

But the Chinese government Monday revoked his tourist visa and ordered him to leave the country within 72 hours, claiming he had talked to Chinese citizens about the June 4 crackdown in the square, a violation of martial law imposed in the Beijing area.

"We ... are extremely disappointed in the Chinese government's action in revoking Kahn's visa," said William W. Evans, managing editor of The Morning News. "He's done an outstanding and thoroughly professional job there."

On June 12, Kahn traveled 12 miles south of Beijing to Daxing County, a rural area where he presumed he could legally talk to citizens about the bloodshed in Tiananmen Square, the newspaper said.

Hundreds of civilians, and perhaps thousands, were killed in the attack on the square, according to Western diplomats, witnesses and China's Red Cross.

The Chinese government, however, contends not a single life was lost at the hands of the army in Tiananmen Square.

China's official Xinhua News Agency said Monday that Kahn identified himself in Daxing as a British journalist and "fabricated rumors that he saw many people who were killed by soldiers in Tiananmen Square."

Kahn denied the accusations, telling a fellow Morning News reporter: "I have been asked repeatedly by Chinese I have interviewed about what I saw or knew of what happened at the square, and I have routinely declined to answer them. You can't tell who you're talking to."

The visa revocation stemmed from Chinese authorities' detention of Kahn for four hours on June 12.

"He went there thinking he was not violating the martial law," Evans said of Kahn's visit to Daxing. "He really was talking to some people there, trying to get some usual interviews."

In Daxing, Kahn was detained by authorities who questioned him, read him the martial law and asked him to sign a self-criticism statement. He refused, Evans said, adding that Kahn was not physically harmed during the detention.

After four hours, the Daxing police confiscated his U.S. passport and released him.

Kahn previously had applied for a visa that would allow him to work as a journalist and be a student in China, but the government did not respond to the request.

He accepted a tourist visa to visit the country, as many journalists do, Evans said.

Kahn worked on the metropolitan staff of The Morning News for about a year, from June 1987 to May 1988.

He had been to China before, for 2½ weeks in May 1988, Evans said.

Kahn, a Boston native, has completed the first year of his two-year graduate program. As an undergraduate at Harvard, he was editor of the student newspaper, the Harvard Crimson. He earned a bachelor's degree in American history in June 1987.

18 Chinese 'boat people' flee turmoil, arrive in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Eighteen Chinese refugees arrived by boat in the Philippines last week after fleeing the political turmoil in their country, a U.N. official said Tuesday.

Karola Paul, deputy representative of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, said the 16 men and two women arrived June 13 aboard a wooden boat in Batanes province, 410 miles north of Manila.

She said the agency told its regional offices last week that Chinese might try to flee because of the suppression of dissent following the June 4 killing of hundreds of unarmed pro-democracy protesters by troops in Beijing.

Miss Paul said she did not know where the Chinese boat people came from but would ask Philippine authorities to grant custody to her agency.

The Chinese, who did not have travel papers, were taken to army headquarters in Manila and were to be interviewed by immigration officials, she said.

"To me, they are asylum-seekers," Miss Paul said. "We have been alerted of an outflow from China since the turmoil. But it would be very difficult to say if there will be more."

Also today, two Manila newspapers reported that the Philippine Embassy in Beijing had received queries from Chinese students seeking asylum but discouraged them for fear of offending the Beijing government.

Malaya and The Manila Chronicle quoted an unidentified source in the Department of Foreign Affairs as saying the decision to put off applicants was taken on the recommendation of Philippine diplomats in the Chinese capital.

"It would not be favorable for the Philippines because we do not have the muscle to do what the U.S. is doing," the newspapers quoted the source as saying. "We don't have a bargaining chip with China."

China has sharply criticized the United States for sheltering Chinese dissident Fang Lizhi and his wife in the U.S. Embassy in Beijing.

President Corazon Aquino has deplored the violence in Beijing but stopped short of criticizing China's leadership.

Last year, she visited China and received assurances from senior leader Deng Xiaoping that Beijing would not support Filipino Communist rebels seeking to establish a Marxist state in this country.

Western and Filipino sources say there is no evidence China is supporting the insurgents.
