NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS: The National Whirligig Written by a group of the best informed newspapermen of Washington and New York. Opinions expressed are those of the writers and should not be interpreted as reflecting the editorial policy of this newspaper.

Rackets—Suppression of the racket in all its vicious phases appears to be the topic of the moment. You'll be interested in the measured opinion of a man who heads one of the outstanding Federal intelligence agencies as to how long it will take to stamp the crime wave out.

At a spacious desk piled high with agents' reports from every section of the country he reasoned out his theory. The line of thought was about as follows: With the dry laws came the individual bootlegger groping his way. The cleverer prospered. Inevitable combinations of racketeering followed.

After preying on each other for some time a natural outgrowth was the turning of this outlaw force against honest citizenry. Whiskey overlords, safeguarded by political setups of their own making, branched out into the racket. Tribute was levied on almost every business.

This big Federal chief says the horde that has lived by the gun will survive in sufficient numbers to influence many of the general election just stepping into maturity. He looks for a deadly battle with gangland for the next few years following repeal. He thinks the forces of law and order will be able to bat it down but only as fast as it grew.

Consolidation—There has been much talk of an American "Scotland Yard" which would be super-imposed over the Nation's policing forces. Although Prof. Ray Moley has only just started his survey of racketeering for President Roosevelt those on the inside are predicting that a coordination of existing Federal agencies under a single head will be a more likely outcome of the White House drive on gangland.

Monday Coffee returned the undisturbed bags to the owner. A blanket, taken with the cases, was not found.

BUSINESS DEPRESSION CAN'T CURE ITSELF

The American people are being given the chance this summer to make one of the most colossal mistakes imaginable. Business is reviving more rapidly than we had thought possible. Factory chimneys are smoking again, trains are moving, men are going back to work; and the very speed with which all of this is happening carries with it a danger which is very real even if it is not obvious.

Our chance to make a mistake lies simply in this: because things are picking up so rapidly, we may conclude that the alterations which have been outlined for our immediate economic framework are unnecessary.

We may, in other words, desire ourselves into thinking that the "normal processes" of business recovery will put people back to work, restore buying power and bring back prosperity unaided.

According to the classical theories of economics, that is precisely what ought to happen. But already it is becoming evident that unless our industrial machine is held under strict and intelligent control, we shall merely be gathering momentum for a new plunge into the ditch.

The successful working of our traditional system depends entirely on the impetus supplied by the profit motive. In the last few weeks the profit motive has impelled industry to adopt certain tactics which must inevitably betray any recovery which is made.

Retail prices are rising faster than wages. Production is outstripping employment. Manufacturers are hurrying to pile up surplus stores of goods before higher wages go into effect.

enormous circle of readers. Anthony Hope, in case you have forgotten, wrote "The Prisoner of Zenda." He was the writer who discovered that an especial kind of romance, decked out with tinsel and invested with an enchanting aura of neverness, could be thrown over those small kingdoms, and principalities of central and eastern Europe. In a day when men were finding it hard to take the pretensions of dying monarchy seriously, he transplanted the whole business to a make-believe land and revived its glamour.

SHIFTING THE IDLE TO FARMS.

The government's effort to place unemployed city workers on farms where they can support themselves and their families constitutes one of the most interesting experiments in the entire recovery program. Interior Secretary Ickes, under presidential order, will have $25,000,000 to spend on the endeavor.

Obviously, direct relief, which is now such a heavy burden on taxpayers, will not permanently solve the problem. It is necessary and desirable in the present emergency, but cannot be adopted as a permanent method of providing food and shelter for large numbers of the population.

These and other difficulties, however, do not seem insurmountable. The farms on which workers will be placed presumably will be subsistence homesteads which would not materially add to the glut of farm products.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Perry entertained a group of friends at the City Park Monday night with a steak barbecue honoring Mrs. Laut Hardy of Tyler. Her son, Robert, was also a guest.

After the delicious supper the guests went to the home of Mrs. Bert Martin and spent the remainder of the evening at bridge.

Those enjoying the outing were: Messrs. E. Blalock, J. T. Allen, Archie Lucas; Mrs. Hardy, Mrs. Bert Martin, Mrs. F. B. Blalock; Misses Letha Whitmore, Allyn Junker, Frankie Martin and Helen Purdy; Robert Hardy and Billy Pat Blalock.

Crowds Grow For Revival

The Three Great Religions' M. J. Wise's Subject Tonight

Another large crowd attended the revival services last night, now being conducted by the Church of Christ, at Fourth and Johnson streets, one for baptism and one for restoration. Melvin J. Wise, the local minister, is doing the preaching. He will speak tonight on "The Three Great Religions."

"I take it that you are a honest, sensible people who have no desire to suffer the second death. Since these people mentioned in our text were doomed to the second death because they knew God and glorified him not as God; then it follows that if we know what to do to glorify God, and do that, we will escape the wrath of God and be saved in Heaven."

"We cannot glorify God without being in His family—which is His church. The thing that your child does reflects upon your family, not mine. There is a theory abroad that one can be saved out of the church as well as in the church. But this is untrue. Jesus says, 'I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.' God has no children outside His family—His church.

Mrs. N. W. McCleskey had as overnight guests Monday her sisters, Mrs. Charles E. Saigling of Plover and Mrs. John J. Roberts of Dallas, who are enroute to the West Coast for an extended visit. Caroline McCleskey accompanied them from Big Spring.

Mrs. W. D. McDonald said that in June there were 85 visits made, in July 44 visits, 40 garments made for babies, 3 dresses for adults, 5 families furnished with clothing, $14.29 in groceries given away. She also stated that they were continuing the jail services.

The next meeting will be a social meeting held Monday morning commencing at 10:30 and closing with a covered dish luncheon at noon. Every woman of the church is invited to attend and bring a dish for the luncheon.

NATIONAL RECOVERY

Is Wholly Dependent Upon An Increased Volume Of Business!

ADVERTISING

Is The Only Way To Get Your Share Of The Increased Buying Power Made Possible By Higher Wages and Increased Employment!

The Blanket Code, Road Building, Industrial Control and the cotton and wheat bonus will put billions of dollars into the pockets of millions of people. However, the success of all these reconstruction measures depends on the INCREASED CONSUMPTION OF MERCHANDISE.

To get people to spend that money intelligently, to get them to put it back into circulation and to keep it circulating will mean the complete success of the program and the restoration of our nation to prosperity and happiness.

Already, in Big Spring and the rest of the nation, there is a marked improvement in wholesale and retail business. Everyone is enthused and hopeful. But the real success depends upon a continuance of this improvement..... and only adequate advertising can supply the needed stimulus to keep it improving.

The Big Spring merchant and manufacturer is more interested and dependent upon the improvement of business in this territory. Therefore he should plan his advertising with the thought in mind of getting the most returns possible per dollar invested.

The Big Spring Daily Herald offers the local merchant and manufacturer the maximum of coverage and results at a minimum cost. A consistent advertising schedule of appropriate space in The Daily Herald will not only solve his individual selling problems, but will add substantially in the general upturn of business.

CHAPTER 35
"I'VE BEEN gone quite a while," Frasier said, finally. "Did you miss me, Mary?"

"Of course, but not so much. You see, I am dreadfully busy all the time." In the same instant, she remembered how much she had missed Dick, every minute of her busy hours. Whether or not Martin had been away for long, it seemed to her that a lifetime had passed. At any rate, her whole life had been changed during that period. She had expected that it would change radically, even before Frasier had gone away. But what a different change it had been! She stared into the glowing fire, from which the flames had ceased to leap upward, with tragic eyes that her compassion could not see.

"Well, I missed you—more than you can know. But I made a wonderful discovery that was worth all the loneliness," Martin continued.

"She glanced up questioningly. "You ran across some old friend in Havana?"

"No," he replied slowly, thoughtfully; then bent forward and met her eyes solemnly. "I discovered that I love you, Mary."

"Her eyes stared at him with startled surprise. She didn't quite believe him—yet, his face was so serious that she was almost ashamed to doubt him.

"You are no more surprised than I was—and still am. I have loved you all the time, dear and didn't know it. You see, I thought I was—hamuna. I didn't know all these months that the reason I wanted you so persistently was because I loved you."

"She thought, furtively, on the defensive against him. "So this is his line—with a girl like me. He would be clever, I should have known that."

"You haven't answered me," he prompted.

"What is there to say? I didn't know that you had asked me a question."

"That's right," he said gently. "But I am going to ask one now. Will you marry me, darling? I am almost afraid to ask you, for fear you will say 'no.' Please don't. If you can't say 'yes,' wait for awhile to give me your answer." He was holding her hands now, very close to his. She could feel the warmth of the nearness, felt stifled, a little frightened—not much. She was too surprised.

"You—can't be really serious," she tried to smile.

"But I am. I never was so serious in all my life. Believe me, darling, this is still a surprise to me. I'll confess that when I first—oh, well—you are no simple kid—when I suggested taking you south—it was only half in jest. I knew, of course, that you wouldn't—and I wouldn't have taken you. I hated myself for suggesting it. Please forgive me, understand me, dear."

Mary insisted to herself that she did not believe a word he was saying. He just wanted her to believe his line, to release her doubts and accept him. He had planned that by just such strategy she would submit to him. She sat rigidly, half trying to draw her hands away from his, her whole mind a whisper, muted with the "rings of this experience. It was very different from her expectations, surely.

"Of course, I forgive you. Why not? I am no Gibson girl." But I can't love you."

"Don't say that," he pleaded. "Perhaps you don't love me now, but don't say you can't. Will you try? Give me a chance, Mary—a sporting chance. I want you more than anything in my whole life. I can make you so happy, too. We can go to Havana every month if you wish—anywhere where happiness is. No, we won't need to seek happiness, we shall take it with us wherever we go."

"No, Martin, please don't hope for me. I'm sure now," she said, "I'm sure now, my dear. You don't know me—not as the man who loves you." His hand creased her arm, with fingers that trembled a little. "You make me crazy, Martin. I would marry you tomorrow, tonight, this minute. But to show you how much I love you, I won't even as much as take you in my arms until you want me to. Is that fair?"

"Her relief was obvious and she smiled kindly. "Thank you, Martin. You are a good sport, better than I thought," triumphantly. "I told you that you didn't know me—the man who loves you. In such a situation as this—if I didn't love you, well, Mary, I am only a man, after all. Will you let me kiss you?"

"She drew away from him. "There is no use, Martin."

"With a final quick pressure of her hands, he stood up, suddenly. "All right. Then, let's go. I can't endure this—this sweet agony—another minute. Love is a powerful thing, but even it has its limitations."

Martin was the most surprising human being that Mary ever had known. Here was a new type of man to her. Without another word, he held her coat and put on his own while she consulted the mirror over the mantel to adjust her little felt hat. He opened the door and they left the room where Mary had passed one of the strangest experiences of her life. She was puzzled over Martin. Was he angry, disgusted, bored or—as he had said—so in love with her that he could not endure being alone with her indifference? He had not spoken a word until he stood in the hotel foyer awaiting his car.

"You won't need to drive me over to New Jersey tonight," she told him, striving for a natural tone. "I'm living in New York, now."

"Not really?" he was agreeably surprised. "When, why and where? That's fine. Not that I object to the drive—but there are always places to go for a drive."

"I've been living down in the village with some friends of mine for about two weeks. I had to work late so much and there were several reasons why I decided to try staying in town for awhile. I live on Washington Square now, but I may take a place for myself soon."

"Better think about making it your place, dear. You will consider what I told you, won't you? Make me happy, ma chere."

The long, luxurious car swept into the swift, gleaming current of Fifth Avenue traffic, toward the south.

Mary reflected upon the absurdity of her situation. Three men had proposed to her within twelve or fifteen weeks. One had twice forgotten his love and was engaged to another. The second made no pretense of loving her, yet he offered her luxury, protection and honor for all her life. The third was a man from whom she least would have expected love, and he had offered her the same luxury, protection and honor with added love and devotion. What a triumvirate to be sure!

The first had offered her almost nothing—and had taken that little away—yet she loved him better than anything and everything in the whole world. The second had offered her everything but love—and she liked him. The third had offered everything in the world, and love besides—and she liked him almost not at all! What an aberration, to be sure!

"May I bring the new car around to show you tomorrow evening, Mary?" Martin interrupted her bewildered thoughts. "How about a drive up the river, dinner somewhere, and a long drive back? Wouldn't that be restful for you? A dance or two. You look tired. I don't want to impose upon you. I want to take care of you—always."

"It isn't right to let you go on like this, Martin. If you are sincere, about loving me—I can't let you hope."

"Mary!" There was real pain in his voice. "Don't deny me that much. There is nothing else for me now. Next to having your love—I need you for a pal—give me that much now, and I'll try to be patient. I only came back to New York to be with you."

She thought, "What if I were engaged to Dick? What then? But I'm not engaged to Dick and never shall be. So—" she said, "if you feel that way about it, of course, I have nothing more pleasant to do than being with you."

"Now that is worth something. It will do for a starter. Watch me show you that being with me will become more than a pleasure. He helped her out of the car at her door, opened it with her key and pressed her hand with affectionate emphasis.

Mary let herself into the Duchon apartment and stood for a paralyzed moment at what she saw there. Dick was sitting with Willis and Ramon before the fire.

first broached in the Hoover administration. Mr. Hoover rounded up the heads of all agencies for a conference. Nothing came of it for one big reason—each chief had a more or less valid reason why his bureau should be exempted from the combine.

It even developed that those charged with enforcing a certain law were using law violators who came under other categories as informers.

Angles—

Those who have followed Prof. Moley's studies of criminology (he has long been regarded as an expert) are betting he will recommend against any attempted consolidation.

Rather the insiders think he will suggest an exchange of files and reports between all agencies. Most of the big racketeers are now operating in many fields. Such an exchange would give one or more agents valuable information on a suspect which has been worked up by another government man shooting at him from a different angle. And they predict this information would pass through a clearing house over which would preside a man with authority to give orders to the heads of all agencies every time the chance was seen to draw a net tight from half a dozen angles.

notes. Then you would see some real fun.

OWNERSHIP—

Many Wall Street firms—for reasons of their own—register some of the securities and properties they buy in the names of confidential employees. The employees are obliged to sign iron-clad agreements to the effect that they will not take their technical ownership seriously. Just a foresighted precaution against awkward misunderstanding.

Public Works—

Inside New York hears that Professors Warren and Rogers have a still bigger job on hand than figuring the possibilities of dollar revaluation. They are trying to find a way to put three million men in jobs through the public works program. That runs to a thousand dollars per man and appears to be a maximum objective.

Nearly five billion dollars was spent on construction in 1929 with 800,000 men employed. All the professors have to worry about is how to employ four times as many men on about half the amount.

Contracts—

Some lively legal battles are brewing over the revision of contracts due to increased costs because of NRA. In theory suppliers are allowed to add enough to the price to cover additional labor charges. The purchaser is supposed to pay the difference and like it regardless of written agreements. But cases have already arisen where sellers have tried to tack a modest hundred per cent extra on to contract prices under the shelter of the Blue Eagle's wing. The buyers are preparing to object with bricks.

Advice—

Lots of small business houses in New York are asking the advice of their banks as to whether they should climb on the NRA bandwagon regardless of their individual cost problems. In almost every case the banks are saying, "Yes, it's the only thing to do."

Race—

A New York expert says NRA success will be gauged by the difference between volume and price. If volume wins, OK. If price wins it may be just too bad.

amounts due the government from farmers accepting federal loans must be deducted before the check can be given the farmer. Such action would take approximately half of what is due farmers throughout the south.

Secretary Wallace and others have appealed to President Roosevelt to see what can be done to have this statute declared null and void so that farmers may receive their full deserts.

Doubt exists that even President Roosevelt, with all his delegated power, can ruthlessly abrogate laws.

Perhaps there are multiple complications yet unmentioned. Each is another gray hair to the farmer, distributing agent, and the official.

Why talk about the matter? On with the game.

World Consumption Of Cotton Highest Since '30

NEW YORK (UP)—World consumption of all growths of cotton during the past season was the largest since the 1929-30 season, the New York Cotton Exchange said.

"During the 12 months period from Aug. 1, 1932, to July 31, 1933," the service continued, "world spinners used approximately 24,725,000 bales of all kinds of cotton as against 23,007,000 in the previous season, 24,826,000 in 1929-30 and 25,803,000 in the 1928-29 season.

"The increase of 1,718,000 bales in consumption was almost entirely due to the large increase in the use of American 'uple, which rose from 12,500,000 bales in 1931-32 to 14,132,000 in the 1932-33 season, a gain of 1,632,000 bales.

"The world carryover of all kinds of cotton on July 31 was approximately 15,530,000 bales, on the basis of preliminary returns, as against 17,412,000 a year ago.

Yankees Rally In Ninth Innings To Beat Washington Twice

NEW YORK—Two ninth inning rallies, with Ben Chapman and Joe Sewell swinging the deciding blows, Monday sent the New York Yankees bounding forward within one game of a tie for the American single leadership as they twice turned back the Washington Senators in a doubleheader before a crowd of 45,000. The scores were 6 to 5 and 5 to 4.

Chapman's all-important blow, one of the two hits he got in the two games, came in the first game. With two out and second and third occupied, he slashed a single through Joe Cronin, sending Earl Combs and Sam Byrd, running for Babe Ruth, across the plate with the tying and winning runs.

The score was tied at four-all with two out in the eighth, when Sewell drove his single into right field, scoring Frank Crosetti with the run that gave the world champions their seventh victory in 16 games played with the league leaders this year.

Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig made possible Sewell's feat with home runs. The Babe connected with his 25th of the season in the eighth to send the Yanks into a temporary one-run lead while Gehrig cracked out his 20th in the initial inning.

Hundreds Are Added To Payrolls In Merrimack Valley Textile Mills

Editor's Note: The United Press sent Sidney R. Whipple of its New York staff to New England to find out what the Roosevelt code is doing for the big textile industries and their workers in the Merrimack valley, first industrial center to see the experiment into effect. His report follows:

MANCHESTER, N. H. (UP)—The mill bells of the Amoskeag Corporation called 9,000 operatives to its clattering spindles Monday.

A year ago, at the depth of the depression, it employed 4,100 workers. Twenty years ago, before world markets had been upset, and before artificial silk challenged the reign of King Cotton, 15,500 spinners and weavers passed through the gates every day.

Tex Garnered Four Runs In First And Three In Second Off His Innings

At one time Forsan pounded the ball until the score stood only 7-4 against the Oilers.

The Cowboy, playing here, gave Coahoma a country licking, but not until after the Bulldogs had caused many a worry.

Potter, pitching for the Cowboys, gained a victory over Bud Mahoney, a Coahoma chummer.

Coshamo tallied five times in the third on mealey hits and timely errors, principally by First Sacker Denn.

However, the Cowhands took life in the sixth with a six run rally added to their lead constantly.

Baber, Madison, and Pap Payne looked good for the Big Spring team, while little Woodson slapped the ball hard for Coshamo, getting the only four-py knock of the game.

Tigers and Stanton will make up their game Thursday.

Armed Gang Hunted In North Texas

DALLAS (UP)—Four armed bandits who worked with machine-like precision while looting the P. Word Transfer company here of $1,000 worth of drugs and merchandise and then abducted the watchman, were sought in North Texas.

The bandits broke into the building without arousing E. C. Haggard, 40, who works for the company by day and sleeps in the building at night. He was trussed with wire and gagged.

The men loaded a motor truck with 22 cartons of drugs consigned to local pharmacists. Merchandise consisted of hardware.

Haggard was loaded in the truck and taken to the outskirts of the city where the men left him in a field. He freed himself before dawn, aroused a farmer and called his employer.

The abandoned motor truck was found by police who theorized the bandits transferred their loot to a faster machine and drove off, either to return to Dallas by a round-about way or to a nearby city. Radio bulletins were broadcast to all officers in North Texas.

Haggard, blinded by the searchlight rays which were kept in his eyes, was able to furnish only meager descriptions of the men.
