"I think the added visibility of having an officer present provides some extra assurance to us that our kids are safe," Porter said. "After all, nothing is more important to us as teachers and administrators than the safety or the kids."

Porter went on to thank Sheriff Doran for his willingness to pursue the program. "We couldn't have done this without Sheriff Doran allowing Eddie to work in uniform," Porter stated. at about 9:30 p.m. Pat Green took the stage and wowed the crowd with his mix of Texas-based country music.

While estimates of the crowd varied, Mark Marshall noted that 600 tickets were sold. Marshall credited the work of the Eldorado High School REAL (Rural Education through Action Learning) students who sponsored the event. "They really got out and hustled," Marshall said. "The whole point of this was for it to be a learning experience for the students...I think they learned a lot."

Marshall extended his thanks to everyone who assisted with the day-long event. "If I tried to name everyone, I'm sure I'd leave someone out," he said. "But we had lots of help from many people and really appreciate everyone's efforts."
