For Housekeepers

Next to the dark green reed furniture, the brown is most satisfactory, in combination with all colors. It is of a warm mahogany shade.

Rugs, mats, or carpets can be cleaned thoroughly by generously sprinkling on them yellow cornmeal that has been well dampened in clean soapsuds or weak ammonia water. Sweep off in a few minutes.

In fanciful French shapes is furniture in enameled wood, white and a soft gray, only a little off the white, and upholstered in gayly colored creonnes in pinks and blues on a white ground. They are on the Pompadour order.

Curtains of soft China silk in a pale cream or ecru tint are among the daintiest of the latest offerings. These are something bordered with lace, or again the lace forms part of the curtain itself. Three narrow waving or serpentine insertions, spaced apart, set in, down the front and across the bottom, with an edge to match, is a favorite design.

The illuminated screens of pegamoid are something entirely new. The green and brown shades, in which they are usually developed, make an specially attractive background for the gold figure. The figure is often heraldic design, about eight inches high and almost as broad. One figure is placed in each panel, and, far from seeming bare, the surrounding plain space sets off the illuminated design and forms an effective background.

One on Pattison

Governor-elect Robert E. Pattison is driven from his Overbrook home to the station by an Englishman who was at one time in the British army, saw service in the Crimea, and is still intensely patriotic with regard to the "tight little island." Mr. Pattison frequently takes a rise out of James by poking fun at Tommy Atkins, but himself tells of an encounter where he felt just a little bit pale at the end. As he stepped from the house into the carriage, James said:

"Mornin', Guv'nor! His there hanything hinterestin' in the papers?"

"Well," replied Mr. Pattison, "I'm sorry to tell you, James, that the Boers have won another battle. The British soldiers seem to be no good at all!"

A flush crept over James' face; and, seeing it, the tormentor went on at some length, winding up with:

"It's laughable to see these half civilized Boers keep Great Britain so busy—and no end yet in sight! Too bad!"

James said nothing more until the station was reached. Then, as the train pulled in, he asked:

"Guv'nor, when do you think your soldiers will get through in the Philippines.—Philadelphia Ledger

THE Spanish Concert company played to a small audience at the Tabernacle last Monday night. Being artists of the right caliber, this did not interfere with them giving a pro- not interfere with their giving a probeen heard here previously a number of times, twice as an octette and once as a concert company. This time, in addition, however, they presented a young lady soloist in Miss Estelle Burns, whose home is in Tyler, Texas. Miss Burns has an extremely fine mezzo soprano voice or rather a soprano proper, but having considerable contralto quality which gives her a scope for all styles of composition. In one of the selections, her tones were free and pure from all effects of mannerisms, her interpertation being that of an artist. She undoubtedly has a great future if properly guided, musically.

Jose Rocabruna, the violinist, is an artist who knows the absolute necessity of how to produce artistic violin playing—that is, tone. His technique is firm and harmoniques are beautiful. He gave two hackneyed numbers in the Musin Mazurka and the Swan of Saint-Saens, which are anything but interesting as violin literature.

Juan Roure, the pianist, played List Rhapsodic No. 12, but being handicapped in many ways, it was well given nevertheless. The 'cellist is said to be quite ill, therefore being unable to appear.

A fine uplift can be given to musiculture if, in every school and college throughout the country, the executive authorities will see to it that a forward step, even if it be small, is taken in the work of the music department. Let the work be less for display on the stage, for entertainment, and more for permanent benefit to the pupils; let it instill ideas that shall remain through life, so that in all after-days good music shall be a part of the employment of the hours of leisure from routine work. This will require that the teachers put more of themselves and their own life and enthusiasm into the work of educating and developing their pupils. But it is worth while for them to do so. Enthusiasm begets enthusiasm, and there fails not the reciprocal result that what the teacher gives to the pupil does not impoverish him, but returns in many ways. Let us have a little uplift all along the line.

How Conductor Sousa was taken to task by General Schofield for his lack of discipline is told by the San Francisco Chronicle:

"The last echo of one of Sousa's overtures was just dying away over the sand hills south of the fair grounds when General Schofield stepped in front of the band and saluted the distinguished leader. Sousa returned the salute and sent one of his men to escort the General up into the band stand.

"'That music was beautiful—beautiful,' exclaimed the General, as he shook Sousa's hand warmly. 'I'm astonished, sir, that you get such results with so little discipline.'

"There is nothing that Sousa prides himself more on than being one of the strictest of disciplinarians, and he was naturally nettled at the General's criticism.

"'Why, General, my men are under perfect control. I'm sure they are thoroughly drilled, and I can hardly believe there is any lack of discipline. I have never noticed it.'

"'No, that's just it; you don't see it,' persisted the General. 'I saw it, though. Do you know that as soon as you turn your back on one side of your band to shake your baton at the other, those fellows all quit playing. Of course you don't see it, for as soon as you turn around they begin again.'"

When Paul Veronese was a student, Maitre Badile, his uncle, said to him one day:

"One has never done well when it is possible to do better! One has never learned enough when it is possible to learn more."

There is no wiser precept than this in all the wisdom of art; no weapon that fights more certainly than archfiend of the great and the noble in all branches of art—self-conceit. Of the hundreds, I might almost say thousands, of pianists I have known, says Alexander McArthur, the two greatest have been the two humblest—Rubinstein and Paderewski.

Fifth and tenth-rate artists only go about holding their noses in the air, boasting of their exploits and of their superiority over their colleagues. The great artist is great because, in the words of Socrates, "he knows that he knows nothing."

"I don't need to practice Op. 53, (Beethoven); I know it thoroughly. It is only a waste of time to practice it more," said a pupil once to Rubinstein.

One of his saddest expressions came over Rubinstein's face, for there was never a master that lived as he did in the work of his pupils.

"Don't you," he said slowly. "Well, you are 18 and I am 60. I have been half a century practicing that sonata, and I need still to practice it. I congratulate you."

From that time on Rubinstein took no further interest in that pupil, for to disappoint Rubinstein once in an art truth was to disappoint him forever.

THE MYSTERY OF GRASLOV

By Ashley Towne

Copyright, 1901, by Charles B. Etherington

Prince Neslerov wants to marry Frances Gordon, the charming daughter of an American who is building the Trans-Siberian railroad. Frances is interested in the fortunes of Vladimir Paulpoff, a stalwart Russian blacksmith. She asks Neslerov to use his influence for Vladimir. Neslerov goes to Vladimir's hut. The blacksmith has talent and shows Neslerov a picture he has painted. It is the portrait of a woman of rank copied from a miniature. The prince is excited and asks for the original. Vladimir's father says it has been lost. To Vladimir old Paulpoff confesses that he lied to Neslerov and still has the miniature.

Neslerov has the Paulpoffs sent to Siberia as nihilists.

Frances Gordon goes to the forge with books for Vladimir. At the door of the lonely hut she encounters Neslerov. The prince presses his suit violently and Frances stuns him with a pistol shot in the head. Gordon wishes his daughter to marry Jack Denton, an American bridge engineer. Frances demands that her father intercede with the governor for Vladimir. They start for Obi. Neslerov boards the same train which breaks in two, and Neslerov has Frances alone in his power.

Denton nearly kills Neslerov in a duel.

Jack promises Frances to save the blacksmith. He repairs a disabled engine and hauls a car containing the wounded prince and Frances toward Obi. On the road they meet Gordon, returning with a special car for his daughter. Frances will not expose Neslerov's baseness.

Neslerov sends his creature Jansky, chief of police, to the Siberian mines to recover the original of Vladimir's picture from the Paulpoffs; also to put Denton out of the way, secretly.

"The lash! Twice!" ordered Jansky.

A white line and a red one marked the blows of the whip. Mamma Paulpoff screamed in her awful torture. Her limbs grew weaker, and she hung by the cords tied to her thumbs. The thumbs were black.

"You will learn!" said Jansky. "The officers of the czar must take these steps to protect his empire. With the lesson you have had, tell the truth. What brought the American here?"

"I know not!" answered the woman.

"Hell's furies upon her!" said Jansky, almost beside himself. "The lash! Three times!"

"Your arm is weak," said the police officer who had done no whipping "Let me try."

A smile of horrible cruelty crossed his face as he stepped by the side of the woman. His whip whistled in the air. It fell—once—twice—thrice, and with a scream, her head fell back. Her eyes glazed.

"Hold! Quick! Release her and restore her to consciousness!" ordered Jansky. "She is unconscious and cannot feel our punishment."

Groans came from her as they worked.

"God, take me from this awful pain!" she murmured.

"She feels again!" said Jansky in savage glee. "String her up!"

Again she was raised and the cords were fastened to her thumbs.

"Now, hag, tell me why the American came here? Was it to kill the governor or to kill the czar?"

"No, I do not know."

"You lie. The charge against him and Vladimir is that they are conspiring to kill both. The American and Vladimir will be taken to the prison at Tomsk and shot. Tell the truth. It will save them and you."

"I know nothing!" said the old woman, remembering her husband's warnings.

"The lash, both of you! Kill the old beast!" yelled Jansky.

Her weakness had come too late. Both whips coiled round her shrunken breasts. The withered skin was cut as with a knife. One scream came from her writhing lips, and she was still.

"Cut her down. Leave her," was Jansky's curt remark. He watched them lay the still form upon the floor and then led the way to their horses.

"It was a picture," he muttered. "Then Neslerov was right, and the American is on the trail. Both he and Vladimir must die!"

That night Vladimir came home from the mine with Papa Paulpoff. He was the first to step across the threshold.

"My God!" he said. "Who has been here?"

Papa Paulpoff stood stupefied, looking at the upturned face of his wife—dead—bruised—her breast covered with blood.

"The police!" wailed the old man, wringing his hands pitifully. "They have killed Mamma Paulpoff! They will kill you—and me!"

Vladimir's gentle, placid face became distorted with leonine rage. He stooped over the dead body of his mother,

"If this is Neslerov or the order of the czar," he thundered into the ears of the terror stricken old man, "I will rend them all! From this moment I live for vengeance!"

He brought his clinched fist down on a wooden table and wrecked it completely.

"So will I crush them who have done this thing!" he cried. "So will I smash their hearts!"

While he raged Papa Paulpoff sank by the side of Mamma Paulpoff and wept.

CHAPTER XI.

THE PRINCESS OLGA.

THE train from Moscow came snorting and screaming into the station, and among the passengers, mostly officers and convicts or men connected with the railway, were two women. One of these was about fifty years of age, thin and subdued in appearance, and her face bore the marks of suppressed anxiety. The other was scarcely more than a girl—twenty at most—but her carriage was noble, and her entire appearance that of one born to command. Her lovely face and well shaped head rose above a collar of ermine, although it was not winter.

"To the palace of Neslerov, governor of Tomsk," she said to a drosky driver, and she and her companion were soon on the way.

Neslerov was at dinner when a servant announced the Princess Olga.

"What about the Princess Olga?" he asked.

"The princess is here—she has asked to see your excellency."

"Here! Olga Neslerov, here!" rising from the table. He had improved much in the last few days, and his face wore a calm look that had not been there since his meeting with Denton.

"Princess Olga!" he exclaimed, kissing her hand. "Fair cousin, what happy circumstance brought you here! And why have you come unannounced and unattended?"

"I saw no reason to herald my approach," she answered, "and I am not unattended. This is my attendant."

The woman courtesied and looked uncomfortable, but Neslerov paid her not the least attention.

"Well, since you are here, I am pleased to see you," said the governor. "Your branch of the Neslerov family and mine have not been too friendly. I am glad that at last one of you has had the grace to begin a reconciliation."

Princess Olga smiled.

"Whatever feeling my branch of the family may have for yours could scarcely be said to interest me," she said. "Remember, I have spent much of my time out of Russia, and—it happened twenty years ago."

Neslerov turned to the door and then stopped.

"You refer to the unfortunate mystery of Graslov," he said soberly. "It was that, I fear, that ruptured the former friendships. Yet I have insisted and proved that our family was not to blame. It was either an accident or was done by our enemies. Pardon me! I was so glad to see you that I forgot that you must be weary after your journey. Let me have you shown your rooms, and I will order dinner for you when you wish."

"Thank you. We are both hungry. I will join you in ten minutes, and Therese will be ready to go to the servants' dining room in that time."

"You have become a regular cosmopolitan," laughed Neslerov. "Your visits to America and London have almost taken away the traces of our Russian habits."

"Some of them could be well dispensed with," she answered.

In response to his summons a servant appeared and conducted the women to their rooms.

"Now, what devilish luck could have brought her here at this time?" said Neslerov to himself. "I must be cautious. But it is so long—she was not born—she can know nothing. But I must be discreet."

"Well, we are here," said the princess to her companion when they were alone. "Now, obey me; let me do the planning. Neslerov must not suspect us. It would ruin all, and there is no telling what he might do. The governor of a province in Siberia is almost supreme."

Her attendant shuddered.

"I lived in dread of Siberia for twenty years!" she said, with a shudder. "And now you have brought me here."

"But not as a convict—as a friend, a woman, like myself, resolved to right a wrong."

"I have just been thinking, Olga," he said, his face wreathed with smiles, "that it is at least three years since we met. Your face has not changed much, but you are now a woman and were then a little girl. You are one of the most beautiful women in Russia."

"Thank you."

"And, I might say, the richest."

"Nearly so. But the wealth brings its responsibilities. It is difficult in Russia to do those things that are just and proper with our wealth."

"I never found it so," said the governor, with a laugh.

"Perhaps," said Olga, "you are not interested in the question. To me it is a burning one. Our nobles have too much wealth and our lower classes have too little opportunity to rise. It is not so in England, France or America."

"You had better leave those questions for older heads, princess. You will become involved with the government before you know. You were not born to waste your beauty and talents in such matters. You were born to be admired, to enjoy your wealth."

"I do enjoy my wealth and do what good a girl can do with it. As to being admired, I meet few from whom admiration seems to come with sincerity."

"Oh, as to that, you cannot expect to find the courtiers at beauty's court all as gruff and outspoken as a drosky driver."

"I have met some who were," she said, laughing pleasantly.

They ate slowly, chatting the while.

"You have not quenched my thirst for knowledge," said the governor. "If I were in St. Petersburg and you did me the honor to ask me to visit you, it would even then surprise me. But that you have come to Tomsk, more than half way across Siberia, to visit me is, to say the least, amazing."

The princess gave her silvery laugh again.

"You are as conceited at any other nobleman I have met. I did not come to see you. I came, first, to ride on the new railway; second, to study the conditions existing in this part of the empire, and, third, to look into this new proposition of the czar to induce peasants to settle in Siberia along the line of the railway. It is a very good idea, if the country will support settlers."

"It will under proper help from the government at the start," replied Neslerov. "I am glad you came to me. We shall have a fine time making our investigations."

"I notice that you do not seem to have the free use of your arm," said Olga. "Have you been ill or injured?"

"A slight injury. I fell from an unruly horse."

"You must be more cautious. It must have been a wild beast. You have the name of being an excellent horseman."

When their meal was finished, they strolled together through the rooms of the palace.

"I am quite interested in your palace," said the princess. "It is not the finest I have seen, but it is excellent.

"My cousin, whom I have never seen!" she exclaimed.

There are some barbarisms, but I presume you get accustomed to them—in Siberia."

"Yes, in Siberia one gets accustomed to almost anything," he answered.

She continued her inspection with interest and suddenly came to a stop before a painting. Neslerov's face became a shade paler.

"My cousin, whom I have never seen!" she exclaimed, clasping her hands and gazing raptly at the picture Vladimir had painted. "Surely, Nicholas, that must be Princess Alexandra, who married your elder brother."

"I think you are mistaken," said Neslerov. "You surely must have seen Alexandra."

"Yes, when a mere infant. It is only from other portraits that I recognize her. She was very beautiful. Oh, what a terrible sorrow to her! To lose her child, heir to a fine estate and princely title, and then lose her own life, so young, with the horrible mystery still unsolved as to whether she died of grief and a broken heart or by the hand of an enemy. Oh, that mystery of Graslov! Will it ever be solved?"

"I fear not," said Neslerov solemnly.

"I did not know you had this picture," said Olga. "It is much finer than any we have at home. It was done by a master hand."

"It was," assented Neslerov.

The painting had saddened Olga, and she passed on, making no more of her laughing criticisms.

She soon returned to her rooms, where her attendant was awaiting her. The woman's face was pale, and she seemed to be struggling with emotion. Olga stood before her, with a peculiar light in her eyes.

"Therese," she said, "an oil painting of my unfortunate cousin, Princess Alexandra, hangs in Neslerov's own room."

"What!" gasped the woman, starting up. Then, as some strange terror overcame her, she shuddered, and with the whispered cry "We are lost!" she fell to the floor unconscious.

Heard and Seen On and Off the Stage

THE past week has been devoted to the Braunig Stock company and to Herrman, at Greenwall's. Herrman was here Friday afternoon and evening, and while he did not fill the popular play house at either performance, he gave the usual satisfaction to those who did attend. The Braunig company has been giving splendid performances and the repertoire of plays presented has been above the average of the kind played by one week standers. The company is pretty evenly balanced and has added to its already well established reputation in Fort Worth. "Buckskin Bill' was here, too, during the week, and from general reports it seems to have been a really and truly bucking-up against a skin game. There are, however, a certain class of people who are pleased with a performance of this kind, be it good or bad, and to them the tame performance of Friday night was just as satisfactory as the real thing, Buffalo Bill, would be: If the week has been anything devoid of splendid attractions there has been no dearth of announcements made for coming things. The bill boards of the towns have been plastered with Buffalo Bill's pictures and the date of his appearance here, October 10 street cars and show windows have been deluged with the announcements of the coming of the great spectacular show of Pain's "The Last Days of Pompeii," for a week commencing September 29. Then, too, Ringling's advance men were in town, making his contracts for the appearance of the big shows here on October 13. With the fall festival coming on also, and the appearance at Greenwall's about this time of the higher class of theater attractions, it looks as though the season's opening will not be a dearth so far as good and attractive amusements are concerned.

THE MYSTICAL HERRMAN.

Favorite Entertainer Pleases an Audience at Greenwall's.

Herrman, the magician, was at Greenwall's Friday afternoon and night. The audiences that greeted him were not as large as the merit of the performance ought to have brought out. There is no discounting the entertainment that Herrman gives. He is a marvelous personage, with a marvelous display of digital dexterity. He seems to set aside all laws of nature and he carries hils audience with him from start to finish. There is no use trying to detect the tricks of his work. He is too quick, too smooth to allow that. There's no matter, anyway, how he does things. It is simply enough that he does them and in doing them gives pleasure. "The Aerial Mystery" in which Marie Herrman is made to rise in the air without apparent support may be an optical illusion, or a clever performance with mirrors: whatever it is it causes wonder and bewilderment. The same may be said of the "Voyage Instantaneous," in which a lightning change of men is made inside a couple of trunks, locked and strapped. The performance is meritorious throughout. An additional zest is given to the magical work in the musical act of the Goldmans, in which popular and classical music is played on divers and sundry instruments. The two Goolmans had to respond to long and continuous applause.

A WORTHY ATTRACTION.

Coming to Fort Worth of Pain's "Last Days of Pompeii."

The coming of Pain's splendid spectacle of "The Last Days of Pompeii," will be hailed with delight by all our merchants, in whatever line, quite as much as by the masses who look only to an enjoyment of its many attractions. There is absolutely nothing in the way of amusements or attractions that possesses such enormous drawing power as the big outdoor spectacle, particularly at the present season of the year, when everybody has had a dearth of indoor social and dramatic amusement. When the tremendous drawing power and popularity of a big fireworks display is added to all the other features of the colossal modern spectacle, with its army of gaily-costumed performers, ballets, specialties, music and elaborate scenic display, the magnet of attraction would seem to be simply irresistible. And when such an exhibition is of the high character and importance as to command the special attention of the railroads to the extent of securing unusual low rates and accommodations for outsiders who desire to visit the city, offering such an attraction, thousands of strangers are bound to be drawn within our gates. Thus, if for no other reason, Pain's splendid Pompeiian fete is welcomed to our city, with the assurance that its well-known merits and attractions will receive the substantial support they deserve.

THE BIG CIRCUS IS COMING

Ringling Bros.' Internationally Famous Show to Exhibit Here

Ringling Brothers World's Greatest Shows will exhibit in Fort Worth Monday, October 13. Of all the great amusement enterprises that America has produced, this is the greatest, and a visit from this splendid amusement institution is always looked forward to with eager anticipation. And this is not surprising in view of all the facts. Ringling Brothers' circus is not a circus of ephemeral growth. It represents the best thought and the most untiring energy of its proprietors and originators during a period of over fifteen years. It began its career as a small overland circus, grew so rapidly that in a few years its transportation by rail became imperatively necessary, and has continued to develop until today it is not only the largest show in the world, but it is also the largest circus that ever traveled. It began with one clear and settled policy—fair and honest treatment of the public. This policy has never been deviated from, and, as a result, the Ringling name is universally recognized as a positive guarantee of all that is high-class, novel and colossal in the amusement world. People who go to Ringling Brothers' circus expect to see a great show—and they are never disappointed.

From beginning to end the performance this year is new—there are new acts, new spectacular displays, new arenic features of all kinds; while in the beauty and magnificence of its paraphernalia, in the completeness of its world-gathered zoological collection, which embraces the only giraffe on earth, and in the thrilling realism of its hippodrome displays, it sets a standard that is entirely its own and which no other show could possibly hope to reach. This year's fine street parade is especially remarkable for magnitude and brilliancy.

BUFFALO BILL IS COMING.

Noted Scout and Show To Be in Fort Worth October 10.

The gratifying announcement is made that on Friday, October 10, Buffalo Bill's great Wild West is to appear here. It has been shorn of none of its fair proportions, but comes in its entirety, the biggest, as it is unquestionably the best, aggregation traveling for public entertainment today. Great service it has rendered in making known to the East and the Old World the real men of the West, both the white and the red, how they fought, worked and played, the showing being intensely realistic from the fact that it was made by the real men themselves. And we will be glad to see the splendid object lesson they present and to recognize its breezy, earnest verity. But there is more than that in the Wild West. It is equally faithful to reality in presenting its "Congress of the Rough Riders of the World," which includes typical representatives of the horsemen of the English, German, French, Russian and Trukish armies, with our own American cavalry and artillery. And a feature worthy of special mention is the exhibit of the United States government coast guard life savers, showing how they have been accustomed to rescue shipwrecked mariners. Altogether it is, in every way, a wonderful and unrivalled entertainment.

CLIMAX OF A BORDER DRAMA

Robert Edeson, the actor, tells this story of the stage.

"I've seen and heard a good many funny things in the way of plays and play actors in my time, but the greatest thing I ever saw or heard was in Milwaukee. This was several months ago. It was in one of the museums there. The museum had a stock company in its theater, and its great specialty was border drama. Every week they gave a new drama of the wild and wooly West. This play that I saw was a blood-curdler of that character, and at the time I dropped in at the theater the stage was pitch dark and two men were fighting a duel. I could hear the knives clash together and hear the men stumble around the stage, but I could only faintly distinguish the forms of the actors. After a while there was a thump on the floor, and the villain (I knew it was the villain by his accent) hissed, Ah, ha! Rudolph Tegherington, I have you now, and no one nigh to see me do the deed!' Then the drummer hit the bass drum a belt and the calcium man turned on the light, and away up on a rocky pass a woman (the heroine) was seen standing. 'Coward!' she shouted, 'me and heaven is here!'"

"Robert Emmet" a Striking Success

"Robert Emmett" is one of the sea son's greatest dramatic successes. As may be gathered from the above production of flashlight, the play is prolific of stirring scenes and dainty humor. The author is the son of a Fenian, the supposed "Number One," in fact.

PLAYS :: COMING :: HERE

It is a well known fact that the Arnold Stock company has always presented the best specialties between acts of any repertoire company on the road, and this season Manager Arnold is unusually proud of this portion of the company, which is probably the best he has ever carried. Ernest and Burt, two of the best singing and talking comedians in the profession, will be seen, also Walter Lacy, the clever eccentric monologist; Clayton Macklem, the famous baritone, late of Primrose & Dockstadter's minstrels, and "That Mysterious Team" Latimore and Leigh. The Arnold Stock company comes to Greenwall's opera house for a week's engagement commencing Monday night, September 22. Matinees daily rfom Tuesday. The opening bill Monday night will be "Struggles of Life." on which occasion ladies will be admitted free if accompanied by one paid 30c ticket if purchased before 6 p. m., Monday.

The amalgamation of the Marguerita Sylva Opera company and Geo. W. Lederer's presentation of Englander & Smith's "The Strollers" is now an actuality, and this amusing and tuneful musical play will take on renewed vigor by the coalition. Both organizations are the financial ventures of Nixon & Zimmerman, who are responsible for such successes as the "Circus Girl," "The Toreador," "Chinese Honeymoon," and, in fact, all the good musical hits of recent years.

In "Old Innocence," Mr. Tim Murphy is again demonstrating that he has a play of positive merit and that the theater goers in the cities that he has visited like it. The enthusiastic welcome that is being accorded Mr. Murphy this season leaves no doubt of the popularity of this charming little comedy and its star, and of the rare enjoyment experienced by those who witness the performance.

* * *

"At the Old Cross Roads," a story of life in the sunny South, will have its first presentation of the play in this city, as it is one of the season's new productions; however, both play and company have scored an unqualified artistic triumph in other cities, and will no doubt duplicate that success here. The company is composed of the following well known players: Estha Williams, Jane Corcoran, Mary Rose, Mrs. Charles G. Craig, Louise Vallentine, Edwin Walter, J. J. Pierson, Thomas Ince, F. Mostyn Kelly, Maurice Hedges and several others of equal note.

* * *

Charles H. Yale offers quite an original as well as novel effect in this year's production of the now aptly termed "Everlasting Devil's Auction." It is called "The Dance to the Moon" and is without doubt the daintiest and most effective arrangement of ballet, sumptuous costuming, brilliant scenic surroundings and pretty music yet presented. It has scored the strongest kind of success, and it is generally conceded to be about the only real novelty of the season so far.

* * *

There are many good things in "King Dodo," one of Fort Worth's coming attractions. There is a plot built for comedy situations, several catchy songs, a chorus effect that is as pretty as anything of its kind seen in New York this season, and an ample chorus that knows how to sing. The music is bright throughout and the dialogue often of finest wit.

* * *

"Human Hearts," like "Shore Acres" and "The Old Homestead" appeals to general public tastes. It is coming to Fort Worth. It deals with life among the sun-kissed hills of Arkansas, where the scene is laid. There is no claptrap, or artificial elements in the play, but a mirror of human nature that is graphically pictured. Being a melodrama, of course, there are exciting incidents, villainy and pathetic scenes, but they are relieved by wholesome comedy. So the play possesses light and shadow in various forms. The company is a large and competent one and the scenery new and picturesque.

* * *

What would "McFadden's Row of Flats" be without Mrs. Murphy? A dark alley. For Mrs. Murphy is a sort of theatrical searchlight showing up the humorous spots in many nooks and corners of the "Flats." Gus Hill knew this when he took Mae Donohue to fill the part, and well she should do so if she be true to her previous record as a character comedienne, possessed of splendid dialectic idiosyncracies besides many other excellent qualities.

* * *

The largest musical organization that ever came to Fort Worth will be the "Foxy Quiller" opera company, presenting DeKoven & Smith's comic opera, "Foxy Quiller." The company includes such notable persons as Richard Golden, Miss Marion Field and the lilliputian comedian, Adolph Zink. No opera in years has created the furore that "Foxy Quiller" has, by reason of its superiority over similar works. Its uninterrupted and unbounded success wherever it has played, has amply justified its proprietor in the lavishness of his expenditures. Richard Golden's "Foxy Quiller" is one of the very few great creations of comic opera.

F. Lawrence Walker has partially completed the company for Charles B. Hansford's tour in "The Taming of the Shrew" and "Much Ado About Nothing." A number of the players who made distinct successes with the Hanford organization last season will be retained. The company will include: Miss Marie Drofnah, Miss Violet Pierson, Miss Mary F. Blount, P. J. Duggan, L. W. Browning, Paul Anderson, Stuart Beebe, Irving Knight, John W. Rankin, George W. Hoffman.

A LEADING LADY'S HARD WORK

Victory Bateman Memorized 140,000 Words in One Season

Miss Victory Bateman, the actress, and Miss Ada Patterson have just published a book called "By the Stage Door." It is an interesting volume. Miss Bateman lays bare some of the ins and outs of an actresses life. Of her own experiences in stock companies she says:

"Do you know how many words a leading woman in a stock company has to memorize in a season? Take a season of twenty weeks. I have saved the memoranda of one average season. Here are the parts I played and the number of words in each:

Gossip

Philadelphia Ledger: That Willie Collier was not wholly at his ease Thursday evening last on the occasion of his debut with the Weberfields was the opinion of several of the reviewers, one of whom laid the comedian's nervousness to an impromptu remark of Lillian Russell's. In a scene-a-deux for her and Collier, the latter unconsciously cleared his throat while she was speaking. She stopped, looked squarely at him, and said: "Mr. Collier, if you must cough please do so in your own lines." The rebuke, although in keeping with the general manner of the Weber and Field's drollery, is said to have upset the debutant for the balance of the performance.

The beauty of Mr. Mansfield's soul seems to grow with the passing of the days. He returned from Europe on the steamer with Viola Allen, and was asked on his arrival if he knew her. He replied that he did not, and that he could not understand why one actor should be supposed, as a matter of course, to know another simply because they happened to be members of the same profession. His tone in expressing this was testy. Then, to illustrate his theory in the matter, he told of meeting the postmaster of a small French town, who asked him if he knew Frank Daniels. "He seemed greatly surprised when I told him that I did not, and was utterly oblivious to the fact that I was sarcastic when I asked him if he knew the postmaster of an interior New England village where I once happened to play." It is good to know that the true greatness of this wonderful man will never lack appreciation so long as he is spared to his present acute consciousness of his own identity.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS, SEPTEMBER, 21, 1902.

SPACE VALUE.

The buying of space is not so easy a matter as it may seem on the surface. There are those whose promises are golden, but whose fulfillment is iron. Longfellow's line, "Things are not what they seem," applies as well to advertising as to other things.

Circulation, while of prime importance, is by no means al there is of it. The geographical position of subscribers, their ability to buy and their need for the goods offered—these and many more things are to be considered in the matter of publicity.

He who most intelligently and understandingly places his advertising, all other things being equal, will be he who wins out best in the world of trade.—Printers' Ink.

Boost. Don't knock.

Pave Houston street and pave it quickly.

Herrmann certainly did something to that red water.

If you get tired of talking about the sermon today, talk up Fort Worth.

Now then, decide the question of paving Houston street quickly and have done with it.

Come to Texas for versatility. Fort Worth has a man who preaches, swears, and sells beer.

It is rumored the tobacco trusts of America and Great Britain will combine. Just as they chewse.

'Tis said Hearst wants to start a paper in Texas. All right, just so he don't bring Ella Wheeler Wilcox along.

Having invited Admiral Schley once, Fort Worth is going to invite him some more. Keep on inviting till he gets here.

A little girl in North Fort Worth wants to know if the last days of "Pompeii" are anything like the death of Uncle Tom in Uncle Tom's Cabin.

The Rock Island is to give several prizes for the best "experience letters" about places on the route. Are the words "limited" and "express' barred.

The latest evening amusement game is to guess what the high water mark price of anthracite coal is going to be. But there's no particular joke in the answer.

It is presumed that the negro who battled so furiously with deputy sheriffs at Hackensack, N. J., when they came to take him to the gallows, didn't want to be hanged.

Will those people who own property on Houston street who have any objections to asphalt or to brick or to neither please speak out so that they can be heard by the council.

Denison is making arrangements to celebrate its thirtieth birthday, September 23. The Denison Herald says the people will have to spread themselves in order to do justice to the occasion. Does it mean that the population is so small?

A FABLE IN SLANG.

ONCE upon a time a retired Pater had two lovely daughters whose christening gifts were Alice and Jane. Jane got her name from an aunt who had more Atchison preferred, than Beauty. After The Aunt died, Jane came out in new Togs and was known as Jayn by the new Friends she made.

Alice had been waltzing under Alys for several Seasons before this took place. The Pater of Alys and Jayn was retired, but he was retired by the Firm he worked for, when he got to be Sixty, because he was ausgespielt. His chief assets after his retirement were Alys and Jayn, who despite their jaundiced Names, were fair Lookers.

It was up to the Old Man to increase his assets in a more substantial Way than merely Alys and Jayn. So he looked about for some eligible Sucker who would take one of his assets and also some of his Liabilities. He got next to a real nice boy named Archie, who hadn't learned to spell his name two ways, and after treating him nicely when they met down Town, asked him up to the house to see the "girls."

Archie was a nice Boy, and he came right along. He didn't know that Jayn's Atchison preferred was so tied up she only got $500 per Annum out of it, and he didn't know that Aly's winning Smile was imported from Dallas. He didn't care. He sat on a Sofa with his legs crossed, and wallowed in Rapture.

When the pater saw things were coming all right, he went out and treated himself. It was the easiest game he had ever played. It was better than a full House or a Chinaman's sleeve. Archie had a Couple Hundred Thousand per, and the more He thought about it, the gladder the old Man got.

One night when the Persimmons were about to fall, Archie started out to see the girls. He didn't know which one he wanted, but he didn't care. He thought to hmself, "If Jayn comes to the door and takes my hat, it'll be Jayne and if Alys comes over across the room and sits down beside me, It'll be Alys. I'm going to do it tonight or untie my Necktie."

It turned out that his Coachman was sick, his favorite Horse was lame, and it was too near Nine to wait till a cab could come, so feeling very weak about the Chops and generally rosy about the Region under his upper Vest pocket, Archie set out on the street car.

He felt all right till the first change at the Square, where he got on the Bumpety-bump to cross over to Daggett street. Then he began to feel queer. The Bumpety-bump had a flat wheel and by the time they swung the first curve, Archie's white tie had bidden Farewell to his collar button and was crawling up his Giraffe neck. Just before they got to the Railroad tracks, the Trolley jumped, and they started to run over the Rails while a Switch engine was coming at Right angles and Full speed ahead on the same track. Archie got the scare of his Life and was pale about the Gills when the car slid over in front of the Engine which was one foot three inches away. He was feeling sick, and as the car started to pound the tracks he got sicker. His heart shook loose till it was down near his Watch pocket, and he felt as if his Digestive organs were in his Head. He felt worse than the first time he tried to chew Tobacco.

When he finally did get out to the Pater's residence he was feeling very clammy and the rosy feeling was all gone.

Alys opened the door. When she saw him, she put out both arms, but he staggered weakly against the door-post and then fainted. They wanted to keep him all night, but when he came to, he said words Alys and Jayn had never heard before, and made the Pater split to two seams, as he doubled up with Laughter.

But he never doubled again for Archie never came back.

Alys and Jayn both sued him for Breach of Promise, The Pater had him arrested for using Insulting language, Archie sued the street car Company, the street car company sued the City for not having the Viaduct finished, the City sued the Steel Trust and the Steel Trust sued J. P. Morgan for ever promoting it. And that's where it now hangs.

Moral—Many a romance has been spoiled because the viaduct isn't finished.

"GLAD to see that article in Friday night's Telegram, copied from the Kansas City Journal which quoted Mr. Platter's talk up there to a newspaper man. Some more of that kind of stuff is just what we want here."

This was the remark of a Fort Worth man to The Telegram Saturday evening.

The printing of that special piece of reading matter by The Telegram reflected no particular credit on The Telegram other than that its exchange editor is watchfgul.

It is to Mr. Platter that the credit for that item belongs. Mr. Platter is to be credited with getting a quarter of a column of good advertising in a big Kansas City newspaper without any cost.

Publicity of that kind is what Fort Worth wants.

Publicity for its great railroad system; publicity of its unsurpassed location for jobbing and wholesale houses; publicity for the big packing plants that are being erected in the city; publicity of its unexcelled climate; publicity for its fine and healthy artesian water supply; publicity for the great future of the town.

Let every Fort Worth man, who goes back to his old home town, to visit distant relatives, to transact business of any kind and any place, get into print if it is at all possible. Tell the outside newspaper men all about Fort Worth and the great Southwest. They will print it.

If you don't want to court publicity for your own self remember your town need it. A newspaper can talk to thousands every evening or morning. An individual couldn't talk to a hundred people in the same way, in a ten days time.

Pull for Fort Worth.

FOR "SENSITIVE PEOPLE.

AND there are very many in the world. You've often heard some one say, "Tom is an awful good fellow, if he wasn't so sensitive about things. You can't say anything without hurting his feelings."

And you assent. Did you ever think that the person who tells you the trouble with his friend, has the same peculiarity himself? That the fellow who tries to excuse, or condemn, or even make light of the sensitiveness in others, has himself probably the same qualities and maybe to a greater degree?

And aren't you sensitive yourself? Aren't their little things that happen, which worry you, which knock the smooth course of your thoughts a little to one side, which act as irritants too slight to be bothered, yet large enough to be bothersome?

O, it's true we all have the faults we condemn in other people, but being "sensitive" maybe isn't so much a fault as a misfortune. Every one doesn't laugh at the same jokes that please you. There are funny things in the world which make you stare solemnly in wonder at the amusement of others.

Yes, you know everybody is not alike. It takes all kinds to make up the world. And what is all this talk about?

Just to tell you to take a more charitable view. A good-natured happy, sunshiny, generous view of everybody and everything. Optimists is too stilted and awkward a word. Just be kind.

Somehow, when you're kind, other people aren't so sensitive and you really don't notice the little things so much, yourself. It isn't always easy, but it pays.

A Masterpiece of Logical Argument

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit.

For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh.

That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit.

For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace.

Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

So then they that are in flesh cannot please God.

But ye are not in flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness.

But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh.

For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

For as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God.

For ye have not received the spirit of bondage, again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.

And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may also be glorified together.

For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifastation of the sons of God.

For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hatn subjected the same in hope.

Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

For we know that the whole creation groaneth and traveleth in pain together until now.

And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption to-wit, the redemption of our body.

For we are saved by hope; but hope that is not seen is not hope; for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?

But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it. —Romans viii., 1-2,

A FEW STORIES

Joseph Jefferson one day boarded a rain for Philadelphia. There were no seats in the "plush cars," so the actor took a cross seat from two young men in one of the "regulars." They finally engaged in a theatrical conversation into which Mr. Jefferson was drawn. His name finally came up, and one of the young men remarked:

"I never knew how Jefferson got his reputation. I think he's the worst actor on the American stage."

"That's the first sensible thing you've said today," put in the other.

"I thought that myself," was the smiling rejoinder of the actor.

The conversation continued in this vein until Philadelphia was reached. Then the two young men passed the stranger their cards and asked in return for his. The climax is easily guessed.—New York Times.

One of the stories Dr. John Hall used to relate with keen enjoyment referred to an experience while sojourning in a suburb of London. He sauntered out one morning for his usual constitutional. Coming upon a half dozen or so of sturdy little country lads attired in corduroys and checked aprons, in the act of constructing a church of stones and mud, he asked, in his pleasant, cheery way:

"What are you building boys?"

"A church, Sir," responded one.

"And where is your minister?" he queried, with a quizzical smile.

"We aven't any dirt left," was the quick rejoinder.—New York Times.

Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., very early in life evinced some of the leading traits of his ancestry. A friend of the family says that when he was but a boy of seven years he was thrown into a state of great excitement by a proposed trip in the care of his mother. The night before he started his father said:

That night the child undressed himself without any help from his nurse, and when he knelt at his mother's knee he prayed:

"Please, God, take good care of papa, but I'm going with mamma myself."—New York Times.

John B. Stanchfield told this story at the Hoffman house the other night:

"The most remarkable dog I know," he said, "belongs to a neighbor of mine. Some time ago the dog was taught to go to a butcher's shop for a certain cut of beef that my neighbor liked. The butcher was instructed to send 75 cents' worth each time, and so the dog was given a dollar bill, which he took in his mouth and started away on his errand. Invariably the butcher would give the dog the meat and 30 cents in change and the dog would jog back home contentedly.

"One day the butcher thought he would fool the dog, and so he gave him 20 cents instead of the correct change. As the dog took the money in his mouth he seemed somewhat mystified. He went off, but it was ten minutes before he returned, fololwed by a policeman."—New York Times.

PACKING HOUSE PARAGRAPHS

H. M. Taylor, in the Strawn News, has this packing house story:

The Fort Worth packing houses will utilize all by-products from the livestock they slaughter, except the squeal of the hog, which will enable them to pay more for stock than small butchers can possibly afford to do, owing to their want of facilities for converting, into useful articles of commerce, material they throw away as valueless, which the packing plants profitably market. "A penny saved is a penny earned." The little savings accomplished by the skillful, economic methods of the packers in the aggregate amount yearly to immense sums of money.

* * * *

Refrigeration is carried on by the packers to such perfection that meats and food products that would otherwise spoil quickly are kept in a perfect state of preservation until needed for use by the public. While meat deteriorates by direct contact with ice, it is greatly benefitted and can be kept sweet and wholesome for a long time in a proportionately constructed chill room having an even temperature, above the freezing point. Palatable roasts and succulent steaks from the quarters shipped to distributing points by our packing houses are eaten with relish by discriminating people in the United States and England.

The Fort Worth packing houses will purchase the poultry and eggs the farmers' wives have for sale at market prices which will certainly exceed the prices paid by dealers who do not have the cold storage facilities so successfully employed by the packers to keep these perishable products from spoiling until they can be sold at a profit owing to scarcity. A stable market the year round will be created at Fort Worth for barn-yard products, which will be of great benefit to the families of the small farmers in the territory tributary to Fort Worth. All classes of people from the wealthiest to the poorest will be benefitted by the operations of the Fort Worth packeries and a healthy stimulus given to all southwestern industries which will share in the prosperity of this section of the country.

"Straws show which way the wind blows" and the wind is blowing strongly for the Fort Worth live stock market. John K. Rosson, livestock agent of the M. K. & T. Ry., states in a recent issue of the Texas Stockman and Farmer that on Nov. 1 he will engage in the livestock commission business at the Fort Worth Live Stock yards. Mr. Rosson says that the big Fort Worth packeries will be of incalculable benefit to Texas and they will do a large business from the start. The shrinkage on live stock shipments from Texas to northern markets can be saved by marketing stock at Fort Worth and the bruised carcasses resulting from long hauls avoided. The packers can get their products to eastern markets via Galveston much cheaper than is done by the present routes of shipments.

The demand for fat cattle to meet the large requirements of the big Fort Worth packing plants is giving a great impetus to the business of cattle feeding in the southwest. F. S. Hasting, formerly with Armour Packing Co., has been employed by Swenson Bros. as manager of their cattle ranch and feeding operations at Stamford, Texas. The Swensons are arranging to fatten large numbers of cattle on ascientific ration consisting of cottonseed meal, hay and molasses, which it is claimed will produce the best results in the economical production of beef. From all parts of the country tributary to the Fort Worth market comes reports of extensive feeding operations during the coming winter.

* * * *

The Canadian country, as the writer knows from experience, is a dangerous field to winter cattle in without ample preparations in the matter of shelter and feed. Locations can be secured where hay can be cut to advantage and stockmen with small bunches of cattle can do well there, but to winter large numbers of southwestern cattle there on the open range will result disastrously and the Texas cattlement who have been quoted in the papers as contemplating moving their large herds to that section will doubtless, on reflection keep their cattle in the territory tributary to the Fort Worth market.—H. M. Taylor.

A Certain Cure for Dysentery and Diarrhoea

"Some years ago I was one of a party that intended making a long bicycle trip," says F. L. Taylor, of New Albany, Bradford county, Pa. "I was taken suddenly with diarrhoea, and was about to give up the trip, when editor Ward of the Laceyville Messenger, suggested that I take a dose of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I purchased a bottle and took two doses, one before starting and one on the route. I made the trip successfully and never felt any ill effect. Again last summer I was almost completely run down with an attack of dysentery. I bought a bottle of this same remedy and this time one dose cured me." Sold by N. E. Grammer.

PARIS DINNER GOWNS OF LACE ENRICHED BY EMBROIDERY

In the way of dress trimmings, the winter may be heralded as a period in which laces and embroideries are to reign supreme. Every dinner gown that has been turned out so far is a mass of rich crochet, cluny, Venice or some other fashionable lace, or else it is a beautifully embroidered creation in dull gold or silver upon a ground of filmiest tulle.

Black and white sound the very highest note of modishness, though soft, delicate colors are always lovely enough to find a sufficient number of advocates among the fair.

Of all the fruit novelties that were introduced a season ago by way of trimmings, the only survival is the grape, and even this has lost its ripe, luscious coloring. The idea now seems to be to have the softly padded disks wrought in paler tints, and further enhanced by means of silver or gold embroidery. One exquisite bit of imported dress ornamentation represented a leaf and vine effect in cream mousseline, outlined with embroidery done in silver. At regular intervals there depended from this wavy band great full bunches of pale lavender, pink, blue and white tinted grapes. The fruit was worked in a covering stitch, with bebe ribbon, and each separate grape had an outline of dull silver threads.

Armand offers a suggestion for the use of trimming after this fashion in the dinner gown made of square meshed lace in pale ecru upon a silk foundation of the same shade.

The allover lace has tiny dots to form squares, and the entire skirt and corsage are incrusted with great bunches of beautifully made grapes. The fruit is in varying shades of pale purple, while instead of silver or gold embroidered vines each cluster hangs from graceful sprays of tiny twigs and leaves made of black Chantilly lace. Reaching from belt to hem are two rich bands of Irish crochet lace, the center one extending in a straight line and those at the side branching at the knees.

A full frill of the net finishes the extreme bottom of the gown, and this is decorated with three graduated rows of black velvet ribbon. The same number of black velvet bands outline the square cut throat of the simple corsage, and a pointed arrangement droops over the sleeves. These latter are thoroughly in keeping with the simple grace of the whole gown, and display neither frills nor applied ornamentation, except just over the curve of the shoulder. Bands of Irish crochet lace are laid over the lace corsage to simulate a slightly rounded bolero.

Though Irish lace has had a vogue for several successive seasons, there promises to be no abatement in its popularity. The newest pieces in this exquisite trimming somewhat suggest the painting of the lily, for the graceful leaves and wheels are elaborately embroidered in colored crewels to represent trailing vines and clusters of purple grapes.

Wide collars, capes, boleros and short, fancy jackets, as well as bands, are wonderfully pretty and effective in this style, though it requires a little familiarity with the idea to thoroughly appreciate the possibilities in the use of dull-hued crewels upon delicate, hand-wrought lace meshes.

Fresh butter color will be one of the novelties for dinner dresses this winter, and Cambon gives us today a handsome demi-toilet that combines embroidered linon in this pale tint with a gaily flowered Louis Seize jacket.

The front of the slightly trained skirt has two flounces of this daintily wrought linon, the upper one overlapping the other to within a foot of the bottom. Both flounces are tucked vertically in thick clusters, and by this means there is secured a sufficient fulness about the feet without having a clumsy effect at the waist and hips.

The Louis jacket is of rich moire silk, stamped with deep pink roses upon a butter colored ground. There are plaited lapels falling over the bust, which are separated by a dainty vest of pale butter colored mousseline. Where the silk is cut away, each side of the front to show the vest, there is a row of tiny silk and mousseline rosettes in lieu of the customary jeweled buttons.

The sleeves fit closely to the upper part of the arms, and where they are cut off at the elbow there is a finish composed of several overlapping frills of fine lace. At the back of the corsage there starts a long sash of the flowered silk, having one streamer caught a short distance down with a pretty rosette, and then both ends falling over the skirt train.

The Paquin dinner model is a handsome conception, carried out in embroidered tulle.

The coronation festivities introduced a number of evening and demitoilettes of this style. Upon a foundation of ecru taffeta, in an extremely delicate shade, there is hung a soft full overdress of ecru tulle embroidered in dull gold and silver. The embroidery is slightly raised, and over it there is a scattering of pinkish pearl paillettes and tiny silver spangles that make it look as if it were powdered with snowflakes. The combination of the ecru, dull gold and silver and the slightly pinkish tingle of the pearl trimming is highly effective, and the skirt is cut in graceful sweeping lines that show the embroidery to the greatest advantage.

A bertha of the raised embroidery on tulle falls prettily from the cut out neck and droops over the elaborate sleeves, which consist of unusually full puffs of mousseline, vertically run with frills of the same soft fabric, the whole drawn into a wristband of embroidered tulle. Fancy dress for dinners serves to break the monotony of regulation styles, and for the woman whose figure will permit her to wear it there is nothing prettier, more becoming or more effective than the Watteau design.

Treklin offers us a quaint model in pompadour silk, with overdress and front panel of the same fabric, but separated by a band of plisse mousseline ribbon in a delicate pastel shade to match the prevailing color of the silk.

The bodice of silk is interrupted by a vest of gathered mousseline which has an ornamentation, almost concealing it, of ribbon bows in graduated sizes. The plisse ribbon extends down each side of the vest and outlines the square neck. The sleeves are of a much-favored fashion, tight to the elbow and finished with several flounces of handsome lace.

SQUARE MESHED LACE ROBE, WIT H GRAPE ORNAMENTS.

Novelties In Braids And Collars.

Never have lace and braid trimmings been as elaborate and popular as now. There has been a tendency, especially on the part of French designers, to combine lace with braid, and this is shown in all classes of trimmings and made-up articles for feminine adornment. Lace robes show the new styles of braid upon lace to a great extent. Some are full suits, consisting of waists and skirts of lace net in ecru, champagne and ivory shades, with elaborate designs formed of rich silk braid in widths of one-eighth to a quarter of an inch wide all over the net. Some of the robes have the designs carried out in a narrow silk braid, with little loops along the edges. The German robes, although in the same shades of net, are quite different, and although more artistic in design, are less sought after. These are of the airiest net and have several rows of deep lace designs set in the net around the robe in an apron-front effect. The lace is rich in quality and beautiful in design, and is made in detachable pieces so that similar lace may be purchased by the yard for any elaboration of the robe desired.

Into the material are set medallions in pointed or wreath styles, often in an outer medallion of filet net. The contrast of the filet net with the Brussels is charming, and the idea is carried out upon the bodice and sleeves of the robes. These robes range in price from $36 up. Net robes, sown with pearls in three sizes and with black, cup-shaped spangles, are smart. The repousse effect is beautifully carried out in one robe of Brussels net by an elaborate design of vine leaves all over the robe, with large clusters of lace grapes. Flounces for the sleeves come in the same lace.

Leading Styles in Lace.

There are indications that Plauen, point de Venise and the varieties of heavy-darned lace will lead all the lace styles this fall and winter. Plauen is in the lead, with point de Venise a close second in point of favor; while for light and airy effects nothing is more fashionable than point d'Alencon, especially in repousse effects, the new Roman lace, point Paraguay designs and Chantilly, an old favorite.

Some novelties in lace which promise to have great prominence this winter are the "tailor-made costume" lace and the darned filet net designs, with heavy raised lace outlines. One style runs to the repousse, or "punched" effects, as manufacturers call them, and the other to the very heavy raised designs. Point d'Alencon is the best example of the one, and Plauen lace of the other. English Nottingham and point de Venise and the rich silk Calais laces have the raised effect, combined with open meshes under the designs, and carry out the new Watteau patterns, which are mingled with detachable medallions of roses, often having overlapping leaves and punched in centers. Roses, oak leaves in natural sizes, bunches of grapes and clover leaves vie with one another for favor, and the rose appears in all the new fine laces, while the other designs appear only in certain styles. Guimpes of tiny oak leaves and little bunches of grapes are desirable, while quantities of the Watteau patterns are being sold to exclusive customers who like their unique beauty. These laces come in widths varying from half an inch to 9 and 10 inches in width in appliques, and in 18-inch lengths for flounces. Appliques in new laces are of irregular outline. The idea seems to be to give a pointed effect, without an actual point, and in most cases to combine a sort of zigzag effect with the points. Laces are made in deep, irregular points, with at least a foot between the upper and lower points.

Skirt pieces come ready to apply to the skirts, formed of pearls, of black spangles and of lace in heavy varieties. The points come far up the skirt and sink into scallops near the bottom, with a deep and elaborate scalloped border, which has fancy edges of any desired style. These skirt pieces are supplemented by smaller pieces for the bodice and sleeves of the gown. Rich braid designs are shown for these purposes, and the home dressmaker need not be at a loss for skirt pieces, since they are easily formed with the many varieties of handsome braids at her command.

Novel Frame Effects.

Frame effects formed of oval or round wreaths of flowers in lace, solid silk embroidery, silk Calais lace and braid effects come in all sizes by the yard or in single frames, some of which are large enough to hold a photograph of ordinary size. Strings of colored silk flowers are made especially to cut apart and form in bunches in these frames, so that women may obtain any color effect they desire. White or black flowers and ornaments also come ready to put in these frames.

Although, with the exception of a glint of gold here and there and a few turquoise nailheads, there will be no colors in spangles, this promises to be a season of strong colors in other lines of trimming. Pompadour effects are popular, and dainty creations in silk applique come with clusters of delicately tinted flowers of nearly natural size, in which pink, gold, lavender and light green are mingled in the same bunch.

Silk passementeries, where the flowers have raised, overlapping leaves and punched centers, come in nickel gray, sometimes combined with white and sometimes with a paler shade of gray. Nickel gray is one of the fashionable colors for fall wear.

King Henry's cornflowers are leading favorites in England and abroad and will be popular here. The flowers are rich and varied in color and often combine several colors, of which yellow is a favorite, in orange and reddish, as well as pale shades. The cornflowers do not come in sizes larger than the natural flower and are of solid silk embroidery, with stems and leaves of shaded green, or are embroidered upon bands of black taffeta or white mousseline de sole. Where the flowers come on taffeta the ground design is sprinkled over with tiny dots of pale green or gold and the taffeta has a very narrow fancy border of gold or gilt thread. One of the new designs of the season is an applique of eidelweiss in white and pale green upon white mousseline de soie, and another is an allover of the new bolting cloth, with elaborate designs carried out in three sizes of small pearls. Pearl ornaments and fourageres for sleeves, bodice and skirt match these allovers.

An odd fancy is that of crossing the tops of flower petals made of silk embroidery with loose threads of silk of a contrasting color. The effect produced appears to throw the design upon which the flower is laid in perspective. Punching little square holes in the centers of flowers adds much to their beauty. Watteau patterns, alternating with sprays of colored flowers in pompadour effects, are, as often as not, of lace mingled with silk.

Deep Hued Collars.

For collars the Arabian, ecru and champagne shades are much more popular than the ivory and white, although Irish lace in ivory shades continues in favor. Many of the new collars have irregular outlines and pointed or tab effects in the front. Often rounding lace collars, with pointed ends, are worn over the front of the bodice instead of as a collar. Dress loops, as they are called, are made of lace of varying sizes, so that as many as three loop pieces may be worn across the front of a bodice. Where single pieces are worn a collar of point de Venise, Irish point, Plauen and Roman lace is good. For wool and silk dresses for some occasions rich and elaborate collars are made of several varieties of silk braid, mingled in floral designs, with an open lace mesh of silk as a ground for the whole. Pieces of moire, taffeta and velvet are set in the points or squared corners of these collars and are very effective. One has pieces of mouse colored velvet elaborately outlined with rich braid and lace designs. Moire and velvet insertings are used in these collars, all of which have that irregularity of outline sought after in the new styles and long tabs or points in the front, often finished at the upper edge with large rosettes of braid and cord, from which hang silk olive pendants upon knotted cords.

[illegible] braids used in [illegible] but plain and fancy braids of all descriptions will be worn.

Wide braids are shown in diamond and basket weaves and flat braids in navy weave, with points and scallops combined in the design. What are known as scythe braids are smart. Jasper and jackdaw mixtures are fashionable in all lines of trimmings, and many handsome varieties of braids are made in these comminglings of black and white. Arrow designs are stylish in all trimmings, especially in braid designs, for braid lends itself so readily to the introduction of shaded and fancy designs in the arrowhead. Narrow arrowhead braid is much used by modistes in fashioning designs upon garments, and they use for the same purpose a silk pyramid braid. This is black, with the pyramid outlined with black or white hair lines. The dressmakers lay these pyramids together and produce fanciful squares, diamonds and other attractive patterns. They also manipulate the silk puff and "ball button" braids to form frame and floral effects with a few twists and turns of the light and pliable braids. Brilliant silk braids in scythe, zigzag and serpentine effects will be the rage in the trimming line for sometime to come.

AN EFFECTIVE DRESS FOR A COSTUME [illegible]

For Brides Who Want To Be Lucky.

At a recent wedding the bride wore a pair of blue silk stockings which were loaned to her by Mrs. Charles Freeman, better known as Miss Mary E. Wilkins, thus complying with the conditions of the old superstition compelling a bride, if she wished for luck, to wear

Something old and something new,
Something borrowed and something blue.

These particular stockings possessed a history dealing entirely with the old adage, to which brides invariably give heed, notwithstanding the severity of their frowns at childish superstitions upon other and less momentous occasions. The hose were originally presented by Miss Abby Turner to Miss Mary E. Wales, with the understanding that she should wear them when married. But as the wedding of Miss Wilkins, who is a friend of Miss Wales, occurred before the owner of the stockings had a chance to wear them herself, she turned them over to the bride to use upon the happy occasion. Then Miss Wilkins passed them on to this bride, who will in course of time present them to some other bride, doubly lucky in donning stockings twice blessed.

Few brides care to go to the altar without complying with the old adage. "Something old" is frequently the wedding veil itself, which, if of good lace, is handed down as an heirloom to be worn by all the brides of a family. "Something new" is hard to get away from, as the garments of a bride are usually of self-evident freshness. "Something borrowed" is easily complied with—a pin, ring or hairpin answering every purpose. "Something blue" is often a pair of silk garters, or a knot of ribbon tucked away amid the laces of the lingerie.

A sure talisman against spinsterhood is said to be the wearing of yellow garters, which have an especial value, the wise ones say, if presented to maidens on Easter Sunday. But should a bride present one of her yellow garters—which have served their purpose in her own case—to a friend, then it is ordained that that lucky individual might as well begin preparations for her own wedding, for it is sure to follow in short order.

A superstitious bride will never entirely don her wedding costume until the time for the ceremony, as to do so is supposed to bring bad luck.

Neither will she allow her prospective husband to see her in bridal array until he meets her at the altar, or as near to that time as can be conveniently managed.

In dressing herself for her wedding the bride must remember to put on her right shoe first if she wishes to have a happy married life.

The wedding ring must be a circlet of gold, signifying endless devotion, and it must not be tried on before the ceremony nor taken from the finger afterward.

No girl will be a happy bride who has not at least in some little particular assisted in the making of her wedding gown or the mixing of her bridal cake.

There is an ancient rhyme running in this wise:

Married in white,
You have chosen all right.
Married in gray,
You will go far away.
Married in black,
You will wish yourself back.
Married in red,
You'd better be dead.
Married in green,
Ashamed to be seen.
Married in blue,
You'll always be true.
Married in pearl,
You'll live in a whirl.
Married in yellow,
Ashamed of the fellow.
Married in brown,
You'll live out of town.
Married in pink,
Your spirits will sink.

If a bride be very thoughtful and also superstitious she carries a rabbit's foot somewhere about her when married.

May used to be regarded as a desperately unlucky month for weddings, but as it comes at the loveliest season of the year custom and convenience have banished superstition and now the evil ban is said to be removed.

In the selection of a day it is interesting to remember the old rhyme which says:

Monday for health,
Tuesday for wealth,
Wednesday the best day of all!
Thursday for crosses,
Friday for losses,
Saturday no luck at all.

It is considered unlucky to change the date of a wedding after it once has been determined upon, and for that reason many ceremonies are performed under adverse circumstances sooner than suffer an alteration of the plans.

All brides rejoice when the wedding day is a bright one, for they remember the oft-quoted line, "Happy is the bride that the sun shines on." If the maiden to be wed can squeeze out a few tears on her wedding day—and this is not usually difficult—it is said to insure her future happiness.

The bridesmaid who catches the bride's bouquet will be the first one of the guests to be married. It must be remembered, though, that "thrice a bridesmaid, never a bride."

It is also said that no maiden who desires to be wed ever should sit upon a table, as this unconventional resting-place will prove a bar to matrimony.

"Waken, Lords and Ladies Gay,
On the Mountain Dawns the Day." —Scott.

The sleeping-car that leaves Fort Worth on our night train is ready to receive passengers at NINE o'clock, each evening, and this car is set out at Colorado Springs for guests to vacate at their leisure. The place where the car waits is only about six miles from the mountains, and a beatiful sight greets the wakers from that long, refreshing Colorado sleep—under blankets.

This night train also has a sleeper that goes into Denver, reaching there at a comfortable rising time.

Both of our daily THRU TRAINS have those sleepers with "Large, Ladies' Dressing rooms," also meals served in our own Cafe Dining cars,—a la carte service, 25c and up per individual. These special features of distinguishing excellence are among the characteristics that have, now for some time, made appropriate the "Only-One-Road" — and "You-Don't-Have-to-Apologize" verdict of persons who are capable of appreciating good service and making distinctions.

WANT TO GO TO CLOUDCROFT?
Well, we have the best and shortest line there, too.
Just call up phone 561, or drop into our office at the Hotel Worth.

WORRY DIMS WOMAN'S CROWNING GLORY

A beautiful head of hair is so important an element of woman's perfect beauty that it is the desire of every woman and girl to possess it, yet as many mistakes are made in the efforts to attain it as in the care of the complexion.

The hair is almost invariably an index of the physical health, its vigor and abundance depending upon the strength and integrity of the whole system, and no feminine charm suffers more disastrously from disease and sickness. It is seldom that the nervous, irritable woman has fine hair, and overwork and worry, everything that exhausts the vitality or depresses one, quickly impairs the health of the hair, causing it to change in color and quality and to fall out.

But mere abundance does not make beautiful hair. Some characteristics, as gloss, suppleness and a certain liveliness of color, no matter what its shade, are the result of fastidious care and cultivation. In nothing is personal neglect so manifest as in untempt hair, and some modes of hairdressing in recent years have made these "touselly" mops flagrantly offensive.

Absolute cleanliness is as necessary for the health and beauty of the hair as for that of the skin, but there is such a "disagreement of doctors" as to what is required to insure this that the lay mind is naturally befogged, and many a fine chevelure has been sacrificed to a method of treatment proclaimed so authoritatively as to invite confidence, yet which was iniquitous in practice and based upon entire ignorance of the structure of the hair, which is extremely delicate and will bear no harsh measures nor any form of irritation. Then, too, constitutional peculiarities make it imperative that the wisest, most hygienic rules be accepted merely as guides to be adapted or modified according to individual idiosyncrasies.

Don't Overshampoo.

It is easy to carry shampooing to the point of harmful excess, but, perhaps, no other regimen ever did so much harm as that fiorum launched upon the credulous which prescribed 100 strokes of the brush, night and morning, as a sovereign remedy for vanity, dry or falling locks. When these strokes were administered with a wire hairbrush it became a destroying rake, pulling out the hair and setting up an inflammation in the hair follicles fatal to their health. But these 100 strokes, even when given with bristle brushes, if applied with the searching strength commonly commended, so as to penetrate to the scalp, are detrimental to the integrity of the hair structure.

Fortunately, the practice of massage, which stimulates by gentle, firm pressure, without irritation, is generally taking the place of overbrushing and the use of the brush is being restored to its legitimate office, which is that of a polisher, to spread over the hair natural oil exuding upon the scalp, giving it a satin gloss and also to cleanse it of the atmospheric dirt and dust.

If you will wipe your hair with a clean towel after it has been exposed to the grime of a railway journey, or even to the atmosphere of Manhattan's streets during this soft coal summer, you will see how much soil can be removed from the hair itself by gentle strokes with a brush of only medium stiffness.

The brush should be adapted to the thickness of the hair, a stiffer one being required for one head of hair than another, and it is poor economy to buy cheap brushes. If expense must be considered, put the value in the bristles, not in the back. The best combs are ivory or shell, but the indispensable qualities of all should be smoothness and regularity of well-rounded teeth. A single rough or broken tooth can inflict serious injury by splitting and breaking the hair. Use as few hairpins as possible, and only those of shell or celluloid, to fasten the weight of hair. The tiny invisible wire ones do no harm when employed merely to fasten a wayward, stray lock.

How to Treat Oily Hair.

The frequency of shampooing must be regulated by the exposure of the hair to dirt and by the characteristics of the hair as well. Where the secretion of oil is scanty there is usually, also, but slight perspiration, and the hair is very dry. The atmospheric soil is, therefore, not held by it, as is the case with oily hair, and a monthly shampoo is usually all that is required or beneficial. In a pure atmosphere six weeks might answer. Oily hair, however, may require a fortnightly cleansing, with a special shampoo when exposed to more than usual soil.

The color of the hair should be considered in selecting a shampoo, because of the effect of certain chemicals upon the color. Ammonia and soda brighten blond hair, but have a tendency to whiten brown hair, and, as they are drying in their nature, they should be used infrequently and with care, observing the effect closely, as what agrees with one may not with another. Light-colored hair is also brightened by a shampoo made of two ounces each of rhubarb stalks and honey steeped in six ounces of white wine. Let it stand for 24 hours, then strain; put in a bottle with a drop stopper; use as a lotion, wetting the entire hair, massaging, wiping and leaving to dry in.

For brunettes a cup of red wine, having an egg and a saltspoonful of soda beaten up in it, is pronounced an admirable shampoo, the tannin in the wine, as also the egg, having a tonic effect upon the scalp and the hair follicles.

A most agreeable shampoo for all hair, and as beneficial as any, is prepared by beating up an egg in three tablespoonfuls of warm water—not hot, that would cook the egg—adding to it a teaspoonful of diluted glycerine preferably with violet water) and a pinch of chlorate of potash. Besides its thorough cleansing properties, this shampoo is tonic in its effect and strengthens the hair structure. The iron and sulphur of the yolk are nature foods for it, while the white, being a mild alkali, mingles congenially with the oil from the sebaceous glands, forming a saponaceous lather.

In all shampooing, and especially when the cleansing agent is tonic as well, the scalp should be thoroughly massaged. This is done with the tips of the fingers moving in a rotary motion, and pressing the scalp firmly, but gently, so you feel it move under them. Begin in front over the forehead and go back to the crown, then forward to the temples and back and forth till the fingers of the [illegible] meet at the nape of the neck. Finish by long, caressing strokes down the sides of the head from the crown to the neck to stimulate the venal circulation.

Massage for Baby.

Massage is also very beneficial to the baby's scalp, to which no comb and only the softest brush should be touched during the first year of life. The fingers themselves impart a vitality and electricity for which there is no substitute, tending to stimulate the healthful secretions of all the glands. Indeed, massage may be said to do for the scalp what physical culture does for the body; it not only promotes the growth of the hair through healthful activity of all the cellular structure, but prevents the relaxing of the muscular layers forming the scalp and by promoting the circulation stimulates the secretion and distribution of coloring pigment.

Massage is also a remedy against that condition of the scalp which causes dandruff, which in itself is not a disease, only a mark of neglect; but which is hazardous to the health of the scalp and may encourage annoying disorders. There are certain conditions of the scalp following acute disease, as typhoid fever, when the hair-growing structure is so disordered that the hair falls out in handfuls, and the rubbing of the gentlest massage loosens so much hair that it is better to substitute a light tapping movement for the rubbing. This is done with the finger tips of both hands and a loose or pianist's wrist. Begin at the crown and strike with alternating hands the finger tips held so close together that they strike nearly in the same place. Work forward and downward from the crown till you have gone over the entire scalp.

Braiding the Hair.

It helps to keep long hair from tangling when shampooing it if it be braided in two or more loose braids, according to its thickness. These braids are then easily gathered up in coils on top of the head where they can be well lathered. When using a tonic shampoo it is best to allow the lather to remain for ten or fifteen minutes before rinsing. This last operation must be very thorough, in several warm waters; then, if preferred, in cool but not cold enough to shock. If for this the head can be held under running water, or sprayed with a douche, all the better. Warm towels are an aid in drying the hair, and in warm weather the task is accelerated in the open air and sunlight.

Immediately after the shampoo, when the hair is perfectly dry, is the time to apply food or tonic, according to the needs of the scalp. Very dry hair may require some bland oil, as olive, almond or cocoanut, and the following mixture is both nourishing and stimulating:

ROSEMARY UNGUENT.

Oil of rosemary	1 ounce
Oil of sweet almonds	3 ounces
Oil of mace	35 drops

When oil is needed liquid substances are best. Hard pomatums, containing wax and spermaceti, are to be avoided. Care must be exercised to put the oil only on the scalp where it is required, not on the hair. It is, of course, easier for a second person to do this than to do it for one's self. The following is an excellent tonic for falling hair, either for acute conditions following illness or when it is chronic:

JABORANDI HAIR TONIC.

Extract of jaborandi	2 drachms
Tincture of cantharides	2 drachms
Sublimed sulphur	2 drachms
Deodorized alcohol	1 ounce
Glycerin	1 ounce
Sulphate of quinine	20 grains
Bay rum	6 ounces
Elderflower water	3 ounces

Dissolve the quinine in the alcoholic liquids, then add the other ingredients. Shake before using, and apply every night from a drop-stoppered bottle, wetting the scalp thoroughly, and massaging for five or ten minutes.

For a relaxed condition of the scalp, accompanied by excessive secretions from the glands and loss of hair, this herb lotion has proved remarkably effective:

HERB TEA LOTION.

Garden sage (freshly dried)	2 ounces
Green tea	2 ounces

Put in an iron pot that can be closely covered, and pour over the herbs three quarts of boiling water—preferably soft; let simmer till reduced one-third; then set one side, to stand in the pot 24 hours; strain and bottle; keep in cool place. Wet the whole head very thoroughly every night and massage the scalp for 10 minutes night and morning. This tonic has quickly arrested falling hair, and greatly stimulated the growth of new; in some cases it has also restored the color. It has, however, the inconvenience of staining the pillow unless the hair be dry before retiring.

TAPPING GENTLY WITH THE FINGER TIPS

the BRUSH as a POLISHER.

The Breezy Summer Girl.

Now is the time the summer maid
  Prepares for her campaign.
And sallies forth, all unafraid,
  New victories to gain.
With all her war paint fresh and bright,
  New graces learned and charms,
She scents afar the coming fight
  And yearns to test her arms.

She fills her trunks (all 17)
  With weapons for the chase—
Garments galore of silken sheen
  And miles of filmy lace;
The sweetest of embroidered hose,
  Chapeaux of various styles;
And muses on the string of beaux
  Who'll fall beneath her wiles.

And when a proper place she's found
  Where men do congregate,
Convenient, near some golfing ground
  Or yacht club, situate.
Then is she ready for the fray
  And starts with all her might
To golf and sail or wheel all day,
  And dance—and flirt—at night.

Her chaperon will stand aghast,
  Nor will it ease her mind
To hear "If I am going too fast,
  Why, you can stay behind."
With many an inward qualm she waits,
  But needs not be afraid;
In these affairs propitious fates
  Will always guard the maid.

When time has flown on rapid wing,
  And summer days are o'er,
The scalps which at her girdle swing
  Are counted by the score.
'Tis hers the joyful task will be
  The news afar to spread
"Engagements had I twenty-three,
  And still I am not wed."

HELEN COMBES.

Her Kid Glove Pillow.

A utilitarian girl has devised a pretty pillow, and a sensible one as well. She uses the wrists and part of the backs of discarded kid gloves for her purpose, as every woman well knows that when a glove is worn out its wrists are still "as good as new."

Every woman, too, acquires sooner or later a lot of wrinkled wrists of everything, from party to walking gloves, and she wonders, if she thinks about it at all, what they are good for.

But the girl who makes everything do duty in some way has made the coolest, smoothest, nerve soothing pillow in the world.

She cut her glove wrists into triangles and squares and whatever shapes she could to employ all of the clean parts to the best advantage. These she basted down upon a canvas lining, and then worked them with "cat stitch" in yellow floss. The effect was charming, with the warm autumnal shades and the soft grays and ivories. To judge by the looks of it after a good deal of hard and thoughtless wear, it will outlast any silk or damask one that was ever made.

When One Comes Back To Town.

After a pleasant summer's outing, free from sickness, many wonder why they get ill just as soon as they return to town and empty their houses, which have been closed during the warm months. They throw open the windows to admit all the sunshine possible, and think that air and light will make their homes "sweet and fresh," as they express it. They forget that their grandmothers did not have to take plumbing into consideration, and it requires more than open windows to undo the mischief that the most modern variety may have accomplished while the waste pipes were enjoying a dangerous holiday during the family's absence from town.

Even if the exposed parts of these be nickel plated, every pipe should be flushed the moment the house is unlocked, and not for a few minutes only, but for at least half an hour. In addition to this washing out of pipes, some sulphate of iron, a solution of carbolic acid or some other good germicide should be poured down each one, and the drains in the yard and cellar treated in a similar way. Do not trust their use to an inexperienced person, however.

After the waste pipes have received attention the rooms to be used at once, pending the regular housecleaning, should be thoroughly swept and dusted. Where there are bare floors or matting sprinkle them with some disinfectant, otherwise place saucers of it around the rooms.

This accomplished, the pillows, bolsters and mattresses to be used the first night should be laid across the clotheslines in the yard or placed near the windows, where not a ray of sun or a breath of air shall escape them. They should be beaten well with a carpet beater while taking their sunning.

Attention should next be given to the bedsteads and springs, which, after being thoroughly dusted, should be washed with cold water. In a couple of hours the beds can then be prepared for the night, and will be fresh and sweet smelling. Of course, no housekeeper would think of using bed linen which has been packed away all summer without airing it in the sun for a few hours, which should also be done to the blankets and spreads.

Use Ammonia in China Closets.

In the china closet dishes are apt to have a coating of dust, which may yield to a "wiping off," but only with danger to those who will use them. Every dish, glass, knife, fork and spoon should be thoroughly washed in hot suds and rinsed afterward in hot water, and every pot, kettle and pan in the kitchen also. While all these are being cleaned the closet shelves should receive a good scrubbing with hot suds and ammonia.

The kitchen tables next call for attention, and the butler's pantry and the icebox should not be neglected. If possible, it should be placed in the yard, where it can be aired. If it is stationary and has its drain pipe connected with the waste pipe it should receive as much attention as the wash basins up stairs and, like them, should be flushed and disinfected. The inside of the box should then be thoroughly washed with hot water and ammonia, the racks and shelves treated to a similar operation and all afterward rinsed with cold water. Place a small piece of charcoal on a saucer in one corner of the box before it is used; in fact, no icebox should ever be without a lump of it. As it absorbs impurities, it should frequently be renewed and the old charcoal burned.

Now the house may be occupied with safety while the housewife prepares for the fall cleaning. If this is done methodically it need not be looked upon with dread.

First have the furniture covers washed. They should be soaked in cold water to remove the dust from them, then well washed, rough dried and packed away unstarched. One room should be cleaned at a time and not the whole house upset, and if the following hints are followed they will simplify the work:

Painted walls should be washed with lukewarm water and pure white soap. A sponge or a flannel cloth should be used, never a brush. As each place is washed it should be rinsed off with clean water and dried with a clean piece of flannel.

Where roaches or other insects are suspected sulphur should be burned. Of course there should be no fire in the room during that process. Every crack and crevice should be stopped up with cotton or old rags, the keyhole filled with cotton, the windows closed and everything made as airtight as possible. Make a foundation for the sulphur pit by placing a few bricks on the floor, upon which a dishpan with a little water is placed. Into this put a small iron kettle with the sulphur candles, light them and leave the room for three or four hours.

Where it is possible at the end of that time to open the windows from the outside it is better to do so, but otherwise hold a wet towel over the mouth and nose, run into the room and throw open the windows as quickly as possible and retire from it without delay, closing the door again. After an hour or two all the sulphur fumes, which, it should be remembered, are deadly if inhaled too much, will have escaped.

Sulphur tarnishes gilt picture frames and metal, so all pictures should be removed and the chandeliers tightly covered with a thick blanket, which may be securely fastened over them.

Light velvet and Moquette carpets are greatly improved by a dry cleaning with cornmeal. Five or six pounds of the coarse, yellow variety will not be too much for a good-sized room. Remove as much of the furniture as possible and have the carpet well covered with the dry cornmeal. Let this remain on it over night, and the next morning have it swept off with a clean, new broom. You will be surprised at the dirt the meal will gather up and the grease it will absorb. Now take some clean meal, and with a new, stiff scrubbing brush give the carpet a dry scrubbing, after which it should be swept again. Should there be any spots left, unless of ink, they will usually yield to a little scrubbing soap scraped and rubbed into the carpet with a small wet brush. Rinse these spots off by scrubbing them with the brush dipped into clean warm water.

Dark carpets should be swept well with a clean broom and plenty of salt. Afterward scrub them with warm water and soap. Do not use too much water, not enough to soak through. Afterward wipe the carpet off with a cloth dipped in hot water, with a little good ammonia in it. This will brighten and bring out the colors.

Kitchen tins may be brightened without resorting to the old time method of scouring with sand. Boil them in strong borax water, rinse in hot water and dry, and unless they are very old and have been neglected they will look like silver. Pots and pans which have no solder about them may be boiled in a solution of lye. This cleans them as nothing else will do, and removes the accumulations of grease and black crust which untidy cooks occasionally leave in dripping pans. A large, strong skimmer should be used in removing these pots and pans from the lye, which is very caustic and eats the skin. As each article is taken out of the lye kettle it should be dropped into a pan of hot water to rinse it off, fished out from that with the skimmer and scoured with sand or scouring soap. Lye lessens the luster of tinware, but this can be in a large measure restored by boiling it again in borax.

Tea and Coffee for Curtains.

Ecru lace curtains may be laundered at home and their deep tint preserved if the starch is made with tea or coffee instead of water. Save the tea leaves or coffee grounds for several days, stew them in water and strain. Boil this infusion and make the starch with it. If a very deep shade is desired for the curtains use a good deal, but if not, less will do. The best way is to dip bits of muslin in the starch and try the color on them until the desired shade has been obtained.

Curtain dryers are great labor savers, but if not at hand lace curtains may be dried just as well by pinning them down on the floor. Sweep the carpet well, stretch old sheets over it, and upon these pin the curtains. Two people should do the pinning, in order to stretch the curtains well, and get them nice and even and into shape.

Select a cool, windy day for washing blankets, and do not be sparing with either soap or water. Soap should never be rubbed on the blankets, or, in fact, on any woolen material. Half fill a tub with warm water, not too hot, and make good suds, preferably with a pure white soap. Into this put a blanket and with a clean new wooden potato masher, which should be kept from year to year for the purpose, pound it as you would potatoes. Pound and pound, and turn, but do not rub. When the water is dirty remove the blanket to another tub of suds and repeat the same process until it is clean. Rinse several times in tepid water, but do not wring out, as this crushes the nap. Without wringing hang the blanket across several clean clothes lines in the yard, so that while it is dripping the wind will blow through and dry it

Dainty Oyster Dishes.

Remove the oysters from their liquor and rinse. Strain the juice and put them together into a saucepan. For a quart of oysters add a tablespoonful of butter, four tablespoonfuls of rolled cracker crumbs, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper and a cupful of cold water. Boil for two minutes and remove from the fire. Just before serving stir in four tablespoonfuls of cream or milk.

For a milk stew scald two cupfuls of milk. Have ready a quart of oysters, rinsed and strained. Add to the oysters a tablespoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of cracker crumbs and a level teaspoonful of salt. Boil for two minutes and add the hot milk.

Coldslaw or cabbage salad and crackers are served with the stew.

Pigs in a Blanket.

Rinse large oysters and season with salt and pepper. Wrap each oyster in a thin slice of bacon and pin it securely with a toothpick. Have a hot frying pan ready and fry until the bacon is crisp. It adds to the flavor if the oysters are first cooked in butter and lemon juice.

Escalloped Oysters.

Butter a baking dish. Have at hand oysters that have been rinsed and juice that has been strained. Put a layer of oysters in the bottom of the dish. Cover with rolled crumbs, dot with bits of butter and season with salt and pepper. Continue in this way with alternate layers of oysters and crumbs until all are used. Turn over the dish enough oyster liquor or milk to moisten the mixture. Cover the top of the dish with buttered crumbs and bake until brown. It will take about 20 minutes. Serve in the baking dish. The escallop may also be baked in shells or individual casseroles or ramekins. If the small dishes are used, send each to the table on a folded napkin placed on an individual plate.

Oysters au Gratin.

Prepare a quart of oysters. Put them in a saucepan, but reserve part of their liquor. Add a heaping tablespoonful of butter. Cook until the oysters plump. Then turn in a cupful of Madeira wine, a dash of black pepper and another of paprika. Peel and wash a quarter of a pound of fresh mushrooms, chop and squeeze them dry in a towel. Stir them into the oysters and cook two or three minutes longer. Then strain out the mushrooms and oysters and arrange them in baking shells. Keep the broth hot and to it add the yolks of two eggs, with a tablespoonful of butter. Cook for a minute, stirring well, and then pour it over the contents of the shells. Sprinkle each with fresh bread crumbs and bake quickly in a hot oven.

A CARESSING STROKE.

Oysters en Brochette.

Plump large oysters in butter and lemon juice or in their own liquor. Fold over each oyster a very thin slice of bacon, transfix it with a skewer, and continue until all are thus used. There should be four oysters threaded on each skewer. Place the skewers on a double broiler and broil about two minutes on each side.

Oyster Fritters.

Drain and chop a pint of oysters. Mix with them the oyster liquor, adding enough water to make about one and seven-eighths cupfuls. Mix into batter, with two cupfuls of flour and a heaping teaspoonful of salt. When it is smooth stir in a tablespoonful of olive oil and two eggs. Drop by small spoonfuls into hot fat and fry until delicately browned. Drain on paper and serve hot.

CHAPTER VI.

AN ACCOUNT OF CERTAIN WEDDINGS.

Once in the street in which Uglythorne's castle stood, the Princes, Studimuch and the raven scampered along as fast as they could, but were at last obliged to pause for breath. The first signs of early day were lighting the eastern skies, but there seemed to be astir no one of whom they could ask the way to the home of the Countess of Mulready. As they stood wondering what to do next they were thrown into a state of great fear to see the tall guard whom they thought to have escaped. So rapidly did he draw near that they despaired of avoiding him by flight. But, to their surprise, when the huge man came up to them, instead of offering to make them prisoners, he seemed more than friendly. Laying down his big sword, he knelt at the feet of the Princes and asked them to take him as a servant and guard.

The Princes thought his actions very strange, indeed, until the guard told them his eyes had been filled with the magical powder, but that it had been washed away by the palm oil that spilled out of the ewer when Altramentale flung it in his face. He at once became aware of all the wickedness and ugliness that had surrounded him for years, and now wished to reform. Of course, the Princes and Studimuch forgave him the fright he had caused them, and on the spot he was made chief of the Princes' bodyguard—that is, he was to be chief of the bodyguard when they should have one.

"What is your name?" asked Prince Salalee, as the guard arose to his feet and took up his great sword.

"I was called Wickedheart," he answered, "but, as I shall do only that which is right in the future, I should like to be known as Goodheart."

"That is right," said the Schoolmaster, "and hereafter you shall be known only by the name you have chosen."

"And now," said Prince Flitwick, "take us to see the Countess of Mulready and her three daughters."

"With all my heart," returned Goodheart, as we must now call him. "Follow me."

They passed through the silent streets until they came to the fine palace of which Fantico had spoken the day before.

"Here we are," exclaimed Goodheart, stepping up to the door and giving the knocker a smart rap with his heavy hand. A pleasant-looking servant answered the knock and stood before them rubbing his eyes and yawning, for he was still sleepy. But when he learned who such early visitors were he smiled and bowed politely, took them into a beautiful room and went to tell the Countess of their coming.

Shortly afterward he returned with a fine breakfast, and you may know it was eaten with a relish, for all were hungry after the adventures of the night. After this they were taken to another beautiful room filled with cozy couches, on which they enjoyed a short nap before presenting themselves to the Countess and her daughters, the Viscountesses Olga, Frida and Elma, who received them in a third beautiful room, and were very kind in their welcome.

Gracious! how the Princes did stare at the three lovely, golden-haired maidens, who permitted them to sit at their side, while Studimuch told of all the strange happenings in their short journey and also told of the long years spent in the tower! And how sorry were the three viscountesses for the three princes, and how indignant that such fine, manly young fellows should have been shut up in a prison like thieves. In return they told the Princes the stories of their own pleasant lives, which did not take very long, nor had they had any strange adventures, like the royal brothers, but the Princes listened eagerly and were charmed.

For several hours they talked together and felt in the end as if they had known one another for many years, so winning are bright and pure natures that every one must feel contented and rejoiced in their presence. Indeed, the brothers felt that they should never be happy unless they spent the rest of their lives near the three lovely sisters.

"We thought the Witch's daughters were the most beautiful maidens in the world while the magical powder was in our eyes," said the artless Prince Fantico to Viscountess Olga, near whom he sat, "but, surely, you and your sisters are the loveliest maidens ever born."

At this praise the three viscountesses blushed prettily and were greatly pleased. Then the schoolmaster, not to be outdone by Prince Fantico, said something very like it to the Countess, and asked her on the spot to marry him, if she had time.

A most delightful day was spent, and as night came on the Princes went to the Countess in a body and asked her to consent to their marriage with her daughters, which consent she readily gave, as she could see what splendid fellows they were, aside from being mere princes. Nor did the viscountesses object, for they thought the princes the most handsome and the best of all the princes they had ever seen.

Would you believe it, there was so much lovemaking going on that Atramentale, who felt that he ought to join in, first made eyes at the Countess' green parrot, then asked her to take a walk, which she did.

"What is your name?" asked the raven, as they strolled over the Countess' rose beds, where they went to look for fat grub worms.

"Why, Pretty Polly, of course," replied the parrot. "Did you ever hear of a parrot of a different name?" she concluded, surprised at his question.

"And what is your fortune?" went on Atramentale, paying no heed to Polly's retort.

"Well, at present I have a large fortune in crackers," said the parrot. "May I ask as to the purpose of your inquiries?"

"I am a man of few words," returned the raven, sprucing up his shining black coat. "Will you marry me?"

"No," said the parrot; "I'd rather not, if you will excuse me. Black is not suited to my complexion."

"Very well, then, madam," replied Atramentale, with great dignity. "I will remain a bachelor, and so wish you good day," and with that he ruffled his feathers proudly and strolled out of the garden in grand state.

In the palace of the Countess of Mulready that night, everything being happily settled, there were a number of rosy little dream gods hovering about a number of soft pillows with young heads on them. Nor were the dream gods the only ones stirring. All through the palace could be heard quiet sounds and hushed voices, as a small army of servants busied themselves making ready for the weddings and receptions that were to take place on the morrow. For the Princes wished to be married as soon as they could, that they might start at once with their brides for their father's kingdom.

And certainly some very fine weddings did take place the next morning in the pretty church opposite the Countess' palace, where the great receptions were held afterward. First came Fantico and Viscountess Olga, then Prince Flitwick and Viscountess Frida, then Prince Saladee and Viscountess Elma, and last of all, Studimuch and the Countess.

But I almost forgot Goodheart, who, finding that his new and royal masters were about to marry, hied himself to the kitchen, where pretty Griddletta, the cook, was making dozens of sweet cakes for the wedding breakfast. He introduced himself and told her his history and of all the many good things he wished to do in future, and asked her if she would marry him. Griddletta thought for a moment, and then answered that she didn't care if she did, as it was Thursday and her evening outing, anyway. So into a church they went, and after the Princes and the schoolmaster and their brides had left the altar, why up they popped and were married, just like royal folk.

HE ASKED HER TO TAKE A WALK.

GRACIOUS! HOW THE PRINCES DID STARE.

SOME VERY FINE WEDDINGS DID TAKE PLACE THE NEXT MORNING.

Hydroids and Jellyfishes.

BY W. S. WALLACE.

In the time of Hercules, "the very strong man"—and that was a long time ago—there existed, so the stories say, a huge monster who had a body like a tree trunk and no less than 50 heads. As soon as a head was cut off a new head grew out in its place. This creature lived in a swamp and was called Hydra. One of the nine labors or tasks of the giant Hercules was to kill this monster, which he did by cutting off all its heads at a single blow.

No one has ever seen Hydra since, but in the sea we find some very small animals which strongly resemble him, and are therefore called hydroids.

When you are picking up shells and other objects on the seashore you sometimes find them covered with a mosslike, hairy coat. At times this is merely a seaweed, which is a plant; but often this moss is a colony of dead hydroids. Even the shells of crabs sometimes bear this covering. Now, if you could find this crab alive or deep in the water, or the shell lying on the sea floor, the hydroids would all be as alive as can be.

We may, however, seek these animals in a better place than on shells and stones, and that is on the logs which form the parts of wharves and docks that lie under water at high tides, or upon the flat rocks placed beneath the wharves to act as weights.

Let us have a look into this quiet, shaded spot. We find a place where two logs are wide apart and peer into its still, clear water. What a splendid sight greets our eyes! A veritable flower garden hidden under the old wharf. Near us, on the inside of the logs, is a mazy wilderness of beautiful hydroids of a yellowish white color, reminding us of fields of yellow and white daisies—only, of course, very small and delicate. The expanded heads wave their many arms or tentacles about, seeking to capture the myriad little creatures swimming around them.

But it is on the flat stones which form the floor of this "log cabin in the sea" that we discover the garden. The others were merely a border. Every rock is covered with great red clusters of hydroids with heads as large as the centers of the oxeye daisy. The stalks on which these flowerlike creatures rise are two or three inches long, and as the hydroids seek their prey with their tentacles these stalks bend this way and that with a graceful motion. In and out among them move hundreds of sea snails; limpets cling to the logs between, and the smallest of fishes, the sticklebacks and silver-sided friars, move like streaks of silver and gold above the waving hydroids.

And now let us look closer at these pretty animals. Certainly no one who did not know it would ever take them for anything else than sea daisies. But what daisy ever had a mouth and a stomach? The head of the hydroid we have selected to describe is very much like a cup, with a fringe of delicate, threadlike arms and the edge of the cup beautifully scalloped.

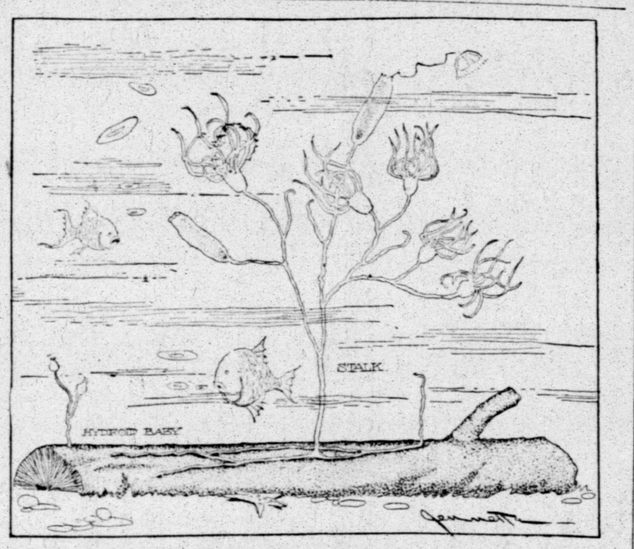
Many a poor little creature no bigger than a pin point has gone into that beautiful cup and never been heard of afterward.

There have been stories told of divers who, in their suits of rubber and glass, have been hunting on the sea bottom for pearls, and who have suddenly become entangled in one of these gigantic jellies while coming up through the water to their boat again. Certain it is that among the divers of the West Indian islands, who wear no suit, it is not an uncommon accident for them to get entangled in the tentacles of a discophore, which is the largest of the jellyfishes. Then, indeed, they should give up all hope, for the tentacles of all jellyfish have the power of numbing the flesh and muscles. The diver, unable to swim, dies by drowning and is lost. Even the little jellies which are only a foot across the top have enough of this power to make you wince if you happen to handle one in the water while it is alive.

The manner in which these great jellyfishes grow is sometimes very wonderful. For instance, the little egglike creature which is born in the eggsack of the great Pacific jelly which I spoke of before, and which is called discophorus, is remarkable, because it settles down on a rock and splits up into a number of pieces, like a raw onion does. These pieces float away, each piece turning into a complete new jellyfish. What a great number of these there should be in the sea if each egg makes eight or nine new jellies!

There are often seen at sea processions of jellyfishes miles in length, and so close together are the broad disks that, if it were safe, one might walk across the sea on their backs.

So keep your eyes open when you are at the seashore.

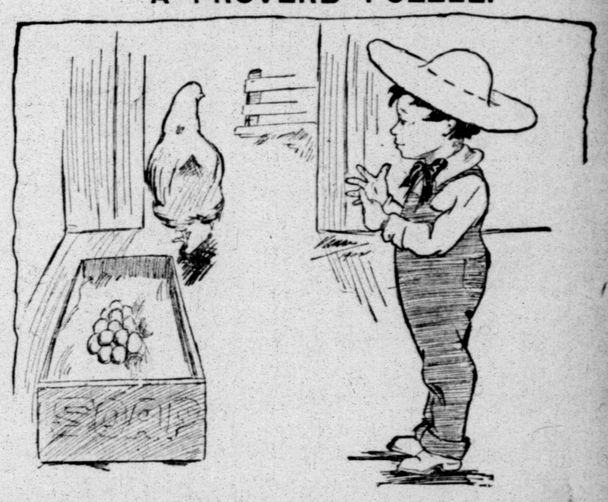


A HYDROID COLONY.

There is a very curious thing happens when one of the little hydroid babies is born.

The frail creature, instead of resembling its parents, turns into a very different sort of animal—a jellyfish! This, however, is not all! The young jellyfish floats or swims away where its parents cannot follow, being fastened to the logs. But the jellyfish is destined to have a queer baby also. For these young jellyfish see their children turn into hydroids, thus "taking after" their grandparents instead of their parents. The hydroid baby changes into a jellyfish, the latter's baby in turn becomes a hydroid, completing their circles of changes. Of course, these are merely different stages of growth in the same animal.

A PROVERB PUZZLE.



THE HEN HAS JUST LEFT HER NEST AND THE LITTLE FARMER IS DOING SOMETHING VERY UNWISE. THERE'S A PROVERB THAT WILL TELL YOU WHAT IT IS.

How Scarecrow Changed His Name.

BY FRANK H. SWEET.

Scarecrow was hired boy on Silas Tefft's milk farm. Of course, Scarecrow was not his name, but when he applied to old Silas for work, and said that his name was John, and nothing else, he was told that he must have a double name. There were half a dozen Johns on the place already. So when one of the men suggested Scarecrow, in derision of his haggard and grotesque appearance, it was adopted with acclamation, and the boy's indignant protests were received with loud guffaws of laughter. That was two years ago. No one knew where he came from. He was very reticent about his antecedents, but by putting one thing and another together they had a strong suspicion that he had run away from some town poor farm. The words "overseer," "pauper" and "selectmen" always filled him with terror, and caused him to look around apprehensively, as though he was fearful of being pursued.

Silas Tefft's farm was a hard place, so the men declared—long hours, hard work and poor pay. But Scarecrow seemed to think it a very Eden of comfort and luxury. He was up with the earliest of the hired men and always intensely anxious to make himself useful. Hardships and discomforts and slights were accepted as a mater of course, but when he was spoken to kindly or favored in any way his wondering pleasure and gratitude knew no bounds.

And however exacting Silas Tefft might be in the matter of hours and wages, his table was always generous. At first the boy ate doubtfully, as though he was afraid of being watched and ordered away from the table. But when he found that instead of allowancing them, Silas Tefft always urged them to eat more, he began, apparently for the first time in his life, to fully satisfy the cravings of his hunger. As the days and weeks went by, his starved, lank figure began to fill out, and color to creep into his cheeks and laughter into his queer little cracked voice. And, in spite of their pranks and good-humored raillery, everybody about the place soon grew to like the grotesque little fellow, who was so eager to please them. After a while one of them gave him a hat, and another a pair of shoes, and another an old jacket; but the name still stuck.

One Sunday morning when the family and the men had gone to church, Scarecrow was left to look after things. He took his primer and went out on the porch to study. It was early autumn, and on the hillsides across the valley the maples and beeches were beginning to assume glowing tints. Hundreds of bees were hovering about the honeysuckles, which covered the porch, and through the openings in the vines he could see the cows grazing contentedly in the broad fields below the barn. Across the stubble quail whistled cheerily to one another, and from somewhere down in the garden he could hear a robin calling to his mate.

It was hard to steel his senses against all these outside attractions. But Scarecrow had plenty of determination stowed somewhere in his neglected mind, and he bent resolutely over his book, and placed both hands upon his ears. Even the house dog, who wagged his tail enticingly and gazed up wistfully into his face, could not arouse him. But at last his head was brought up suddenly by a "Hey, there, boy! Folks to home?"

Two ragged, disreputable-looking tramps stood before him. One held a short, knobby bundle tied in a red handkerchief. Scarecrow looked them over apprehensively.

"What d'ye want?" he asked.

"Oh, nothin' pertic'ler," answered the man with the stick, as he stepped unconcernedly on the porch and sat down on the bench beside the boy. "Jes' called to pass a howdy-do. So ye say they've all gone to meetin', hey?"

"I didn't say nothin' about it."

"Didn't? Well, never mind; I must a-heard it somewhere. Mighty fine place you've got here."

The boy was silent.

"Yes'day was the fust day o' the month," the man went on, reflectively. "I s'pose the boss took in stacks o' money when he went round collectin'?"

"Come, quit this foolin'!" growled the other man, angrily. "Tell the boy what you want an' be done with it."

"Easy, Jake, easy! Nothin' ain't done right in a hurry. Folks won't be back from meetin' in less'n two hours." Then, turning suddenly to Scarecrow, he added, with a wicked gleam in his small eyes, "Now, sonny, s'pose ye show us where the money's hid."

Scarecrow's face had grown white and he trembled violently as he rose slowly to his feet. "I don't know nothin' about any money," he faltered.

"No? Well, ye knows where old Tefft sleeps, an' where he's likely to keep his papers an' vallybles. You jest show us to his room an' help all you kin, an' we'll give ye a pile o' money. We're good-natured folks, we air. Only ye mus' step lively."

But into Scarecrow's eyes a new expression had come. His face was still white and his knees trembled as violently as ever, but his voice did not hesitate. "I won't! You'n beat me, an' kill me if you want to, but I won't help you—one—bit—to rob Mr. Tefft. He's been good to me. If you try to rob him I'll fight, an' holler, an' do everything I kin to hender you," his voice rising in passionate protest.

"Here, give me that rope, Bill!" cried the man called Jake; "I'll fix him!" And in spite of the boy's resistance he was quickly bound and gagged and thrown violently into one corner of the porch; the man gave him a brutal kick and followed his companion into the house. Scarecrow heard them tramping noisily from room to room and opening drawers and boxes.

In his haste the man had not bound him very securely; moreover, Scarecrow's hands were small. At the end of 10 minutes he found that he could slip one hand from the rope. After that it was a comparatively easy matter to free himself.

The tramps were now in the pantry, helping themselves to Mrs. Tefft's Sunday dinner.

Moving softly from the porch, Scarecrow hurried down the lane to the barn, keeping behind the trees as much as possible. But when he reached the barn he found that all the horses excepting Old Nick had been let out to pasture. Old Nick was what the men called a "wicked horse" and was never trusted to any of the new hands. Scarecrow admired him excessively, he was so strong and masterful and had such an independent way of shaking his head. Lately the boy had been trying to propitiate him by offerings of apples and corn; but so far had never dared to approach him from behind or to try to gain his back.

But he never thought of these things now. There was no time to lose if he wished to save his employer's money. In a few moments he had bridled Old Nick and was leading him from the stable. And apparently the horse was too much astonished by the suddenness of the movement to make any resistance. Once outside, Scarecrow led him cautiously along a hedge of willow and hazel bushes until they were at quite a distance from the house. Then, finding a convenient stone, he climbed nimbly upon his back.

At first Old Nick had been so pleased at leaving the barn that he walked along quietly, but finding the boy did not remove the bridle he soon began to shake his head impatiently. When he felt the slight form upon his back he sprang forward with a snort of anger.

But Scarecrow had not ridden the animals to water for two years for nothing. As the horse flew along the country road he only clung the closer, and instead of trying to stop him he struck him again and again with his open hand to make him go faster.

Silas Tefft was seated near the open window of the little country church when he heard the wild clatter of Old Nick's feet coming down the hill. One amazed look and he was hurrying to the door, knowing intuitively that something was wrong. Several of his men followed him, and strong hands grasped Old Nick's bridle.

There were a few hurried questions and answers, and then a dozen men ran for their horses and were soon speeding away toward the farm. Scarecrow followed them as rapidly as possible on foot. When he arrived at the farm he found that the robbers had been captured and were being led away to the county jail.

Silas Tefft rarely commended one of his hands, but that evening he glanced across the table at Scarecrow and said approvingly: "Ye done fust rate, Scarecrow." Then something else seemed to occur to him, for he rose slowly to his feet and looked down the table at the two long rows of faces turned toward him.

"Look here, men," he said, interrogatively, "Scarecrow don't seem jest the right sort o' name for that boy; what d'ye think?"

Scarecrow never rose from that table. After supper it was John Fearless, by unanimous consent, who went round shaking hands with the men and receiving their congratulations.

The Dog Won Verdict.

M. Huguet, a resident of Paris, rented apartments in the Boulevard Malesherbes sometime ago, and took with him to his new home his favorite little dog, Niquette.

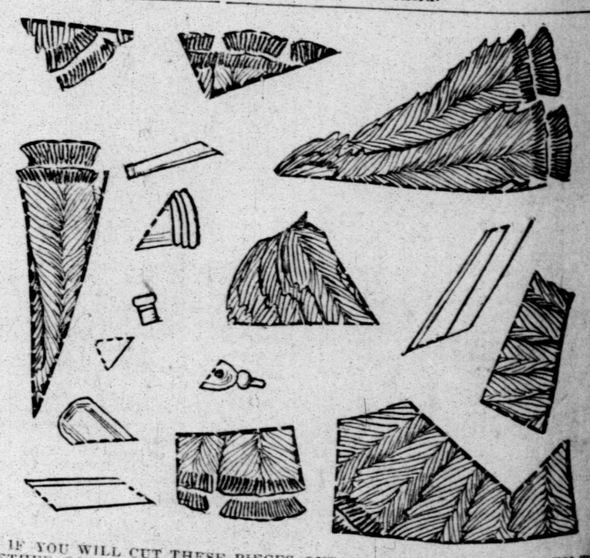
A few weeks later the landlord called on him and said that Niquette would not be allowed to remain in the apartments. He then pointed out that the lease which M. Huguet had signed contained the following clause: "No dog, cat, parrot or any other animal which might prove disagreeable or injurious to the other tenants shall be allowed to remain on the premises."

"I saw that clause before I signed the lease," said M. Huguet, "but I took no notice of it, for it only applies to disagreeable or injurious animals, and my dog is neither."

"You are mistaken," replied the landlord. "The clause says: 'A dog (comma) or any other animal.' Therefore, your dog must go."

M. Huguet refused to send Niquette away and the case was brought into court. A verdict was promptly given in favor of the landlord, but M. Huguet appealed, and as a result the former verdict has been reversed and M. Huguet has been informed that he may keep Niquette in his apartments so long as she does not prove either disagreeable or injurious to the other tenants.

Answer to last week's illustrated proverb puzzle: "Spare the rod and spoil the child."



IF YOU WILL CUT THESE PIECES OUT CAREFULLY AND PUT THEM TOGETHER CORRECTLY YOU WILL FIND A PICTURE OF SOMETHING WHICH IS IMPORTANT IN THE HOUSEHOLD AND IS OFTEN USED ON THE TABLE.

STILL HUNTING HOOPER YOUNG

POLICE HAVE NO CLUE OF THE ALLEGED MURDERER

He Was Well Known Throughout the West Where He Has Enjoyed a Varied Career

(By Associated Press)

Portland, Ore., Sept. 22.—Hooper Young, alleged murderer of Mrs. Annie Pulitzer in New York City, was well known in Portland and other points on the coast about two years ago. For a time a newspaper man in San Francisco, later in the employ of one of the leading business houses of this city, he finally went to Seattle and started a newspaper known as the Saturday Court News, which was suppressed by the officers on account of the obscene publications.

While in Portland he was a very studious fellow and carried a bible with him all the time. He was very fond of discussing religious topics and when he was not at work was found reading biblical literature.

The New York police are still engaged in their search for Young, but have so far no clew to his whereabouts.

FINISHES LONG TROLLEY RIDE

Robert Darragh Completes 900 Mile Trip by Electric Roads

(By Associated Press)

New York, Sept. 22.—Robert H. Darragh has just finished the longest continuous trolley trip on record, says a Boston dispatch to the Tribune. He covered the distance between Flint, Mich., and Boston, with the exception of a few breaks in Ohio and New York, traveling 900 miles by trolley. Darragh took the trip by easy stages, occupying four weeks, and says that within two years it will be possible to make the entire journey without material break.

VENEZUELA OBJECTS TO THE BRITISH FLAG

PROTESTS TO FLAG RAISING ON GROUNDS THAT ISLAND IS ITS OWN

(By Associated Press)

New York, Sept. 22.—The Venezuelan government has protested against the action of Great Britain in raising the British flag on the Island of Patos, on the ground that the sovereignty is vested in Venezuela and not in the British government.

The controversy over the island is old, similar protests having been made in 1859 and 1867. Great Britain claims the island by virtue of the treaty of Amiens, signed in 1802, according to which Trinidad was ceded to England. The British consider that the Island of Patos is tributary to Trinidad.

Venezuela contends that the island was not mentioned in that treaty.

REPORT OF WEEK IN FORT WORTH SCHOOLS

SUPERINTENDENT HOGG SHOWS ATTENDANCE AND OTHER INTERESTING FIGURES COMPILED

Following is the report of Alexander Hogg, superintendent of Fort Worth's public schools, for the week ending Friday.

The number of "average enrollment" is very much below the actual number asking admission. Of these pupils not enrolled, some were refused on account of vaccination, some a lack of books, some in the midst of their examinations, and quite a number awaiting transfers. The latter have been dropped from the rolls of their respective buildings, hence the number for which room capacity is needed will be greater than previously figured. There will be over 500 who should be accommodated in the High school building after the transfers from it have been located.

"It is hoped," said Professor Hogg to The Telegram, "that parents intending to send to these schools will do so at once, so the management—the school board—may know definitely what is needed."

The report is as follows:

ARMOUR IS BUILDING CARS

New Venture at Kansas City Has Proven a Success

(By Associated Press)

Kansas City, Sept. 22.—Three hundred refrigerator cars, the first ever built in Kansas City, have just been turned out of the car shops of the Armour Packing company. For years cars of all kinds have been rebuilt in the Kansas City shops, but this is the first time that a brand new car was ever constructed by Kansas City workmen.

The Armour company was for years a patron of the American Car and Foundry company, but when the car building companies merged prices were advanced and the packing company decided to build its own cars. The recent work in the Kansas City shops was in the nature of an experiment, and it was a successful one.

Two hundred men were given employment, and, with the exception of the patented appliances, such as air brakes, etc., the material used was all secured in Kansas City. Refrigerator cars are valued at about $1,000 each, so the first output of the Armour shops in Kansas City represents an expenditure of about $300,000.

There is no immediate demand for new refrigerator cars on the Armour company at this time, but it is announced that the building of refrigerator and other kinds of rolling stock will be a permanent feature of the Kansas City shops in the future.

EPISCOPALIANS FOUND AN ARMY

START AN ORGANIZATION, CALLED THE "CHURCH MILITANT"

Is Based on Ideas Which Have Been Successful in England—Former Attempt Here a Failure

(By Associated Press)

New York, Sept. 22.—There has just been incorporated under the auspices of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the New York diocese, an organization called the Church Militant Army. Its purposes are to assist churches, missions, and societies and to engage in evangelistic work. It will be, generally speaking, patterned after the successful church army of England.

The establishment of a church army in the United States was tried a few years ago but its existence was of short duration.

EXPEL THE NOBLE RED MAN

Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows Repeals Amendment Admitting Him

(By Associated Press)

Des Moines, Sept. 22.—The Sovereign Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., by a vote of 146 to 36, repealed the amendment to the constitution adopted at Indianapolis in 1901, admitting members of mixed Indian and white blood. The debate was spirited and the amendment was supported in a vigorous manner by the Indian Territory delegates, who originally secured its adoption on the ground that many men of high character have Indian blood in their veins. The delegates who opposed the amendment, especially those from the Southern jurisdiction, expressed the fear that, if adopted, it would prove the opening wedge which might eventually result in admitting the negro to membership.

Quarrel Between King Leopold and Daughter Revived Yesterday

(By Associated Press)

Brussels, Sept. 22.—There is considerable scandal arising from the revival of a family quarrel between King Leopold and his Daughter Princess Stephanie (Countess of Lonyay) beside the bier of the late Queen Marie Henrietta at Spa yesterday. Popular sympathy on all sides is expressed for the princess, who, although deeply affected by the incident, makes no complaint.

The number of dogs in Belgium used for drawing loads is probably under 50,000.

COAL GOTTEN FROM ANTHRACITE MINES

DESPITE THE STRIKE THOUSANDS OF TONS ARE BEING MINED DAILY

(By Associated Press)

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 22.—The steady gains made in the number of workings, both mines and washeries, and the increased daily production are weakening the strikers, and although they claim that no progress is being made there is every indication that the operators are gaining. With the new operations today they now have 28 mines and 29 washeries working, and it is estimated that these produced today about 28,000 tons of coal, including the amount used at the collieries.

The leaders of the strikers declare that the figures are preposterous, and that of the 28 mines reported to be working only two are making any progress. They are now preparing figures to show just how much coal is taken from the breakers, having had pickets surrounding each one for the last week or more. When these will be ready is not stated. The operators in the meantime go on increasing the number of workings, and state that their force of workers is also increasing.

STATE MAY NEED NEW SENATOR

CALIFORNIA LIKELY TO NEED NEW SENATOR

(Special to the Telegram)

New York, Sept. 22.—Although Senator Bard has passed the critical stage of his illness and is recovering from typhoid pneumonia that for one week has kept him in the shadow of death, it is feared by his friends, says a Tribune dispatch from San Francisco that he may be forced to resign, as the physicians, will, it is believed, try to dissuade him from taking up his duties at Washington, during the winter.

Congress meets more than a month before the California legislature and it would be necessary for the governor to appoint a senator for this interim.

THE SONS HELD MEETING

An Effort to Have Them Take 200 Shares in the Confederate Park Association at $5 Per Share

The meeting of R. E. Lee camp, United Confederate Veterans was well attended yesterday. Commander Gillespie, member of the directory of the Confederate Park association, submitted a proposition to the Sons to take, individually, 200 of the 800 shares undisposed of belonging to the association. He said the directory held a meeting on Friday afternoon and decided to so dispose of 200 shares at $5 per share. The directory is to hold another meeting this afternoon at 4 o'clock at the office of Major-General VanZandt, at which Comrades Gillespie, Booth, Smith, Nicholson and McAdams will represent the Sons and have further explained to them the proposition that they may place it before the camp.

Comrade I. J. Mayfield was appointed on the investigating committee.

Several comrades made remarks for the good of the order, following which the body adjourned.

Commander Gillespie explained that the directors had decided to go ahead with the proposed improvements of the park, and now that the packing houses excavations were made, teams, scrapers, shovels, etc., could be had for the work of constructing the big dam to make the lake.

It was decided to hold a popular election at the camp next Sunday to name an active working committee to solicit among the Sons for this subscription to shares in the association, the committee to be compensated for its work.

It was further decided to have a standing program committee to arrange a program for each Sunday's meeting, something that will interest and draw a crowd. This committee is composed of Comrades Nicholson, Snyder and McAdams.

Miss Mattie Melton, secretary of the Daughters of the Confederacy, extended an invitation to the Sons and their families to attend an entertainment to be given on next Friday night at Lee camp headquarters in honor of the fifth anniversary of the local order. The invitation was accepted.

DANIEL W. MEAD IS HERE

Says He Is Ready to Make Preliminary Water Test

Daniel W. Mead, contractor, who is putting in the new artesian water system for Fort Worth, accompanied by A. E. Rutledge of Chicago, arrived today on a delayed Rock Island train.

Mr. Mead visited the plant, and found everything working satisfactorily.

Asked when the preliminary test would be made, he replied that he was ready, and it was now up to the city, and would probably be made this week. This refers simply to the preliminary test, the final test, of course, can not be made until all the wells are connected up and the necessary machinery put in position. He says he can at this stage show over a 3,000,000 gallon supply—which amount covers that feature of the contract.

With reference to the excitement occasioned last week by tapping one of the wells, Mr. Mead smiled, saying "those things we are always looking for, and excites the public more than it does us."

Mr. Mead says a steady fall of rain followed them over the Rock Island into Fort Worth, the fall commencing about 9 o'clock last night.

MINNIE STRAUSS NOW ON TRIAL

A NOTORIOUS NEGRESS, CHARGED WITH CRIME OF MURDER

SHE SHOT JACK SNOW

She Herself Was Shot at the Time, but Recovered From the Wound—Charge of Theft From Person Pending

Flushed with the successes of last week's convictions in the Seventeenth district court, County Attorney Lattimore and Assistant Buck started this week this morning by putting on trial the notorious negress, Minnie Strauss, charged with killing a negro man known as Jack Snow. The entire morning hour was devoted to securing nine jurors and the work of selecting the other three was taken up at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon.

It will be recalled that a few months ago Snow was shot by this woman in a fight between the two in a room they occupied near the negro resort known as the Shamrock. In this fracas the woman was also shot in the breast, she claiming that Snow shot her, and that she shot Snow, if she did it, by accident, or that Snow shot himself during the scuffle. The woman's wound soon healed up and she was released on bond. Snow died.

The woman is a notorious character, both in city and county official circles. She has been arrested a number of times on charges of theft from person, and a case is now pending on a charge of this kind, committed since her release from jail.

In the County Court.

There was little doing in the county court today of interest to any one not connected with the cases on the docket. The entire day's setting, however, was disposed of at the morning session of the court, consisting mostly of dismissals for want of prosecution, passed or reset, in some cases juries being asked for and granted, this being non-jury civil week.

C. S. Battle vs. W. P. Binyon, Hamilton Paint and Glass Co. vs. George Mulkey, et al.; Eureka Elastic Paint Co. vs. J. J. Langever; The Cable Co. vs. W. M. Hale; the State National Loan and Trust Co. vs. R. F. and B. McGintey, et al.; American National Bank of Fort Worth. vs. Darnell Lumber Co., garnishee; American National Bank of Fort Worth vs. John R. Darnell, garnishee; International and Great Northern Railway Co. vs. May H. Swayne, et al.; International and Great Northern Railway Co. vs. Harry G. Hendricks, et al.; B. T. Lowry vs. M. J. Archinard et al.; Rogers, McKnight & Co. vs. J. S. Clark; W. A. Kelly vs. C. R. I. & T. Railway Co., et al.; Carter-Battle Grocer Co. vs. M. E. Mellown; Scoville & Sayers vs. J. H. Ebert, et ux.; Freeman Bryan vs. International and Great Northern Railway Co.; International and Great Northern Railway Co. vs. J. H. Hicks et al.; J. M. Logan vs. Texas and Pacific Railway Co.

Jailed on Theft Charge.

On Saturday night last, Officers Clark and Compton arrested a boy named Will Sweeney, aged about 12 years, on a charge of being implicated with another boy named Will Davis, in the theft of some buggy wheels on last Friday night. The Sweeney boy was kept in jail until this morning, when the Davis boy was arrested and the two turned over to the county attorney. Both were then placed in jail pending an investigation. The Sweeny boy has on former occasions been arrested on theft charges, and the officers pronounce him a hard proposition. The Davis boy is a son of a country doctor living a few miles east, and owns a pair of donkeys and a small wagon, and followed buying and selling junk and such stuff. Both claim the wheels were bought, but the owners claim no. The boys admit having been out until 3 o'clock Friday night, and were equipped with a dark lantern outfit. The Sweeney boy entered school at the University last week.

Some New Suits Filed.

In the district clerk's office this morning two suits were filed. One styled ex-parte Fay Dodd, to remove the disabilities of a minor; the other, S. C. Moore et al. vs. Ed Otto, to rescind contract.

It Was a Mexican, Not a German

It was a Mexican, and not a German, arrested on the North Side on Saturday night last charged with an assault upon his wife. He was arrested by Special Deputy Steve Potts, and by him turned over to Sheriff Clark's deputy and sent to jail. It is said the Mexican knocked his wife down and dragged her about 40 yards, and that the woman was pretty badly used up.

GENERAL RAINS HAVE FALLEN

WIDE TERRITORY COVERED LAST NIGHT AND THIS MORNING

One Inch of Water Fell in Fort Worth During Morning Shower—Northern Part of State Receives Drenching

The rain that fell this morning laid the dust and washed much of the dirt off of the paved strets. The gutters along Main street were soon raging torrents that in some places interfered with pedestrianism. Mr. Reeder of the government weather bureau reports a fall of exactly one inch. The city waterworks station registered .93 of an inch. Mr. Reeder also predicts more rain to the south and east tonight, while it will be clear and cold to the northward. Fair weather conditions is the forecast for tomorrow.

It appears to have been a general rain last night and today, covering a wide extent of territory. Good rains are reported along the Denver as far as Memphis, with showers from there up to Hartley.

Good rains are reported by the Frisco as far as Sherman, together with showers to the southward along the Rio Grande division. Word from the Territory along this line shows that heavy rains fell on the other side of the Red River.

Along the line of the Transcontinental division of the Texas and Pacific heavy rains also fell from Fort Worth to Clarksville.

EXACT NUMBER OF KILLED IN RECENT BIRMINGHAM ACCIDENT IS UNKNOWN

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 22.—There were but few new developments today in the panic of Friday night at Shiloh Baptist church, colored, where over 100 negroes were killed.

A CAT'S INTELLIGENCE

Dumb Animal Can Scent Danger

A cat will refuse to drink coffee but will drink and thrive on Postum Food Coffee.

Mrs. Alice Gould of Maywood, Ill., says "Coffee drinking made me very much run down, thin and nervous and I thought I should have to give up my work.

I was induced to try Postum by a friend who suffered four years from severe headaches lasting for several days at a time, who said that since using Postum Coffee she had been entirely free from an attack. I found that by making Postum according to directions it was equal to coffee in flavor.

It is now six months since I began drinking Postum and I have gained 18 pounds in weight. It has built me up and I feel like a new person.

We all drink it now, even to the cat, who is the pet of the family and it is funny to see him drink his bowl of Postum Food Coffee every morning. We often try to get him to drink coffee but he has the good sense to refuse it."

CHOLERA'S DIRE HAVOC

Death Rate In the Philippines Over 350 Per Day.

MORGUE DRIVERS OVERWORKED.

Natives Stricken With the Disease Crawl to Isolated Places, and Their Bodies Are Often Found Floating In the Pasig—Superstitious Views of Filipinos Concerning the Scourge.

The daily advices of the war department of the progress of the cholera epidemic in Manila and the Philippines continue to indicate that there is no hope of checking the disease until the typhoon season is well on, says a special dispatch from Washington to the New York Times.

The health service of the city government is overwhelmed with the work that has fallen upon it, and the health officials in all the interior towns are in the same plight.

The epidemic is not confined to the low country towns, but has been under headway in Dagupan and the mountain towns north of there for a month. An efficient system of reports has been maintained, and the authorities know what they have to contend with.

The number of deaths in the provinces ranges from 350 to 450 daily. The beginning of the rainy season makes the danger greater, as the streams carry the cholera germs everywhere and spread the disease.

There are on an average from fifty to seventy new cases daily in Manila and nearly as many deaths. There are many cases on the ships in the bay, and this is an increased cause of danger, as the quarantine authorities cannot get at them, and violations of the health regulations are constantly occurring.

The worst occurrence is the death of natives who have crawled off uncared for and have died in out of the way places. It is a common thing to find bodies of victims of cholera floating in Pasig river, and in one day recently six such bodies were fished out.

The disease has in a number of cases broken out on ships that have been in close quarantine for several days. It is said that this is due to using the water of the bay, which is very impure. The ships have condensers, but few distill the water and so remove all danger of infection.

The morgue wagon drivers are overworked night and day. The hospitals are filled, and temporary ones have been provided.

Part of the difficulty arises from the superstitious idea of the natives, who believe the disease is a visitation from heaven and not to be resisted. It has several times happened that bodies of men and women who have died of cholera have been concealed by the natives for several days before the health authorities have found them.

Official reports credit much of the difficulty to contending with the epidemic to the inefficiency of the Filipino doctors. When working under Americans, they are useful, but independently they soon fail. They will not carry out instructions and connive with the natives to conceal new cases.

FLAG FOR ALL POSTOFFICES

Plan to Have Old Glory In Evidence on Many Buildings.

When Chairman Cannon of the house appropriations committee was in Washington a few days ago, he expressed the belief that public buildings would grow in numbers until the people would never be out of sight of the flag floating over them. He was speaking of the popular demand there was for postoffice buildings to be owned by the United States and the patriotic feeling inspired by the sight of Old Glory flying from the flagstaffs of these buildings, says a Washington dispatch to the Philadelphia Press. His remarks have suggested that even if Uncle Sam does not own all the buildings in which are located postoffices the national flag should fly over them just the same.

The public agitation that has raised the stars and stripes above every schoolhouse in the land is now advocated by public spirited and patriotic people in favor of the flag over every postoffice.

FINE GRAIN OUTLOOK.

James J. Hill Says This Year's Crop Beats All He Has Seen.

"This year's crop is the greatest grain crop we ever have had in the northwest," said James J. Hill to an American reporter in New York the other day. "Its extent is inconceivable to eastern people. I traveled for hundreds of miles through wheatfields last month (July), and now that the corn is ripening there will not be cars enough on any western road to carry the crops to market. I have seen some big crops, but this beats them all.

"Minnesota and the two Dakotas will send more than 180,000,000 bushels of corn, oats, wheat, barley and flaxseed to market. But the remarkable thing is that money is plentiful everywhere in the northwest before these crops are delivered. Not a sign of stringency, and the rates for lending money asked by the banks are not extortionate, as they have sometimes been."

HENDERSON IS STILL FIRM

STILL MAINTAINS HIS POSITION IN REGARD TO RESIGNATION

Says He Has Spent 20 Years Fighting for Tariff and Will Not Now Go Back on His Principles

(By Associated Press)

Chicago, Sept. 22.—David B. Henderson, speaker of the house of representatives, passed through Chicago Sunday on his way to Atlantic, where he will join Mrs. Henderson. Before leaving for the east, Speaker Henderson reiterated his decision to retire from the congressional race in Iowa denied any intention of "abdicating" his present position until his term of office shall have expired, and declared himself in perfect accord with the tariff views of President Roosevelt as enunciated in his Cincinnati speech.

"I have spent twenty years of my life fighting for protection for American industries and American labor, and I shall not be a party to any juggling at this late day," the speaker said. "President Roosevelt's tariff views set forth in his Cincinnati speech coincide with my own. There is no difference in our belief. His speech was a strong one, and it has my hearty endorsement."

"The differences are confined to your own state?" was asked.

"Yes, largely. Let the new lights shine."

The speaker smiled broadly as he used this phrase.

"Is there any chance of your friends prevailing on you to reconsider your action?"

"Absolutely none. I cannot see my way clear to gratify their wishes. It grieves me to remain firm with them, but it is a matter of principle. The pressure brought to bear on me has been strong. Senator Allison and a host of my old friends came to the station this morning to make a final assault on me. I had to say 'No.'"

Warning to Government Officials.

"Washington, Sept. 21.—On the Choctaw-Chickasaw supplemental agreement, the department of justice in cooperation with the department of the interior will deal summarily with any government official attempting to in any way interfere, directly or indirectly, in the matter of the pending agreement except for the preservation of public order in accordance with specific departmental instructions, and you will give notice accordingly."

Skeleton of Children Found.

Brenham, Tex., Sept. 22.—A negro man, while engaged in cleaning out a cistern on a place near the old fair grounds, made a grewsome find. In one corner of the cistern the skeletons of two children were found. While the bones were disunited, they were well preserved. These skeletons had evidently been in the cistern for several years. It was impossible to tell whether they were those of white or black children. For what purpose, by whom, when or how these children were thus destroyed there is not the slightest clew.

Kingstown, St. Vincent, Sept. 22.—There was an eruption of La Soufriere at midnight Thursday night, but no loss of life. THE ROSTER OF THE DEAD

SUNDAY WAS SPENT BUSILY BURYING DEAD

Sunday Was Day of Mourning in City Where More Than 100 Negroes Were Killed in Stampede

(By Associated Press)

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 22.—Sunday was a day of funerals in Birmingham and th eremains of 38 of the 110 victims of the panic in Shiloh church were interred in the various cemeteries for negroes around the city. All of the negro churches were crowded and the naturally excitable nature of the southern negro was wrought to a high pitch by the eulogistic sermons over the dead bodies at the various churches. From all of the churches wails of the grief stricken negroes could be heard and great throngs of mourners followed the hearses to the cemeteries.

The death list now is known to number 105 and 100 of these have been identified. The police assert that at least five bodies have been taken to private houses that have not been reported. This would swell the number to 110.

In nearly all of the churches for whites sums were raised to assist the negroes who are unable to give their dead proper burial, and with amounts contributed by wealthy citizens, a burial fund aggregating $500 has been accumulated.

J. H. Ballou, who is in jail charged with precipitating the stampede at Shiloh church, says he does not feel responsible for the accident. His statement follows:

"I was seated in the front row of the rear platform of the rostrum in company with Major R. R. Wright, president of the Industrial School of Georgia. The president of the convention was arranging for seats for the prominent delegates in close proximity to Booker T. Washington, but evidently was having some trouble. In the same row with us were other delegates whom the president of the convention had requested to give up their seats, but he said nothing to Major Wright or myself, and I, of course, being in company with Major Wright, thought that as he was to retain his seat I would also. Mr. Hicks came to us and said we must give up those seats, and used abusive language. We paid no attention to him. All of the above was before the arrival of Washington.

"The whole trouble, which resulted in a stampede, was reported as being caused by Hicks and myself, but such is not the case. There were at least half of those present who came to hear Washington, and immediately after he closed his address they left their seats and started for the door, not only from the first floor, but from the gallery as well.

"About this time Hicks again approached Major Wright and myself and ordered us to move, and I as spokesman, refused, he then catching me on the lapel of the coat, reaching in his hip pocket. While were scuffling the stampede occurred. Every one in the church was uneasy owing to the fact that the chairman had given instructions that no one else be admitted as the building would not be safe.

"I do not feel responsible for the stampede, nor do I think Hicks is responsible because the stampede occurred at the door during our affray.

"I am no stranger in Birmingham and fear no harm. I could give bond, but my friends advise me to stay in prison for my own safety."

PRESIDENT IS AT DETROIT

ROOSEVELT HAS ANOTHER BUSY SUNDAY SEEING SIGHTS

Calls on Spanish War Veteran Who Is Dying of Consumption—Makes Address to Convention of Vet-

(By Associated Press)

Detroit, [illegible] the second time in its history Detroit is entertaining the chief executive of the nation President Roosevelt arrived at 8 o'clock Sunday morning over the Michigan Central Railroad and found Detroit awaiting his arrival in gala attire. Flags were flying, the city was bright with bunting and pictures of President Roosevelt greeted the eye at every turn. Throughout the day crowds lined the streets about the Hotel Cadillac, anxious for a glimpse at the chief magistrate and his appearance was always the signal for enthusiastic cheering. The weather was all that could be desired, being bright and warm with a pleasant breeze stirring.

It was a restful day for the president, although his time was completely occupied by the program mapped out for him by the local arrangement committee. Immediately on his arrival he was driven to his apartments in the Hotel Cadillac. At 10:30 o'clock he attended services at the Fort Street Presbyterian church, driving from there to General R. A. Alger's residence, where he was entertained at luncheon. He returned to the Cadillac soon after 3 o'clock, only to leave again in a short time for a drive about the city. During the drive he called at St. Mary's hospital on St. Antone street, where Thomas H. Doherty, a local veteran of the Spanish war, is dying of consumption.

To-day was a busy day for the president. He addressed the convention of Spanish war veterans at 10 a. m.; at 11 o'clock he took a steamboat ride on the Detroit river, returning at 3 o'clock; at 4 he reviewed the parade of veterans and militia, a unique feature of which was the presence of the Twenty-first regiment of Essex fusiliers from Canada. At 8 p. m. he will attend the banquet of the veterans in Light Guard armory, where he will make the address of the evening.

Search for Young Continues.

New York, Sept. 22.—The search for William Hooper Young, the man wanted for the murder of Mrs. Joseph Pulitzer, whose mutilated body was found floating in the abandoned Morris canal near Jersey City Thursday morning last, has been unavailing. The police forces of this and the surrounding boroughs have been bending all energies and running down all clews which come to them to locate Young.

Arrested for Young.

Dorby, Conn., Sept. 22.—The police have in custody here a man who answers the description of William Hooper Young of New York, who is wanted in that city for the murder of Mrs. Annie Pulitzer. The man vigorously resisted arrest, and when brought to headquarters refused to give his name or account of his presence in this vicinity.

Monsignor Guidi Consecrated.

Rome, Sept. 22.—The consecration of Monsignor Guidi, apostolic delegate in the Philippines, as archbishop, which occurred in the church of Santa Maria in Aquiro, assumed considerable importance as it was conducted by Cardinal Rampolla, who, after the pope is the highest pontifical personage in the Vatican. Cardinal Rampolla was assisted by Monsignor Constantini, the papal almoner, and Monsignor Gaspardi, secretary extraordinary of ecclesiastical affairs, and who also acted as secretary to the commission of cardinals which treated with Governor Taft of the Philippines in his negotiations with the Vatican concerning the disposition of the friars property in the islands.

Son Kills His Father.

Woosocket, R. I., Sept. 22.—Because he desired to protect his mother from violent treatment at the hands of her husband ,and fearing also that his own life was in danger, William C. Bonin, aged 20 years, shot and killed his father, John B. Bonin, aged 42 years, Sunday afternoon. After the shooting Young Bonin went to his room, put on his best clothes and waited until the officers came for him. He said it was better for his father to be dead than to be guilty of the crime of killing his wife and then himself, as he had often threatened to do.

Artist Collins Dead.

New York, Sept. 22.—J. Charles Collins, at one time a highly successful artist, was found dead here in his room at his boarding house. The coroner's verdict is that death was due to the accidental turning of a gas jet. Mr. Collins was 70 years of age. Two of his paintings, "Look-out" and "Spring," brought him much fame years ago. Failure of his eyesight had forced him to abandon the finer work of his profession and his later years were passed in comparative poverty.

CANCEROUS ULCERS

Are in many respects like other ulcers or sores, and this resemblance often proves fatal. Valuable time is lost in fruitless efforts to heal the sore with washes and salves, because the germs of Cancer that are multiplying in the blood and the new Cancer cells which are constantly developing keep up the irritation and discharge, and at last sharp shooting pains announce the approach of the eating and sloughing stage, and a hideous, sickening cancerous sore begins its destructive work.

No ulcer or sore can exist without some predisposing internal cause that has poisoned the blood, and the open discharging ulcer, or the festering sore on the lip, cheek or other part of the body will continue to spread and eat deeper into the flesh unless the blood is purified and the Cancer germs or morbid matter eliminated from the circulation.

In February, 1899, I noticed a small lump on my lower lip. The doctor cauterized it but another came and broke out into an open sore. I began to take S. S. S. and after I had taken seven bottles the place healed entirely and no signs of the disease have been seen since. W. P. Brown, Hollands, S. C.

S. S. S. cleanses the blood of all decaying effete matter. It has great antidotal and purifying properties that soon destroy the germs and poisons and restore the blood to its natural condition. And when pure blood is carried to the ulcer or sore the healing process begins, the discharge ceases and the place heals over and new skin forms. S. S. S. is a strictly vegetable blood purifier containing no mercury or minerals of any description.

FORT WORTH, TEX., SEPT. 22, 1902

The newspaper for the advertiser is the one which brings him in returns. Everything sinks into insignificance before this. The burning question is not how many people may read an advertisement, but how many can be prevailed upon to respond with cash to its invitation to step forward and buy.

Keep in mind Schley Day of the Free Fall Festival.

'Tis natural the city council should have a red hot session while disposing of the fire limit question.

Had you noticed that lately stock is coming to Fort Worth stock yards for disposal instead of merely coming for transfer to some other market.

There is not enough coal in Brooklyn, N. Y., to keep the public schools warm more than a week. Fort Worth school children should be glad they live in sunny Texas.

Waco can not furnish a House of Delegates equal to that of St. Louis, but she is doing her best to hold up Texas' reputation by trying to impeach her mayor.

Millionaire Stratton left his son $50,000 and nearly $14,000,000 to charity. It wasn't so foolish as it looks. Maybe charity will have to support the son after awhile.

Such is the varied course of life. Millionaires make money while they sleep, but a poor Houston farmer lost $11 while lying dreaming in a saloon. Fortune always is against the poor man.

The government does well to closely guard our interests on the isthmus. Think what would happen were a terrible war to break out and make it impossible to import Panama hats in time for next season.

The people of Northwest New Mexico want a railroad which will give them an outlet to the Gulf. Incidentally they want direct connections with Fort Worth. The latter is as important as the former.

The cry of "quiet" at the Colored Baptist convention in Birmingham caused a stampede in which over 100 were killed. Quiet seems to have been an unknown word to the delegates. The speaker should have shouted "shet up."

In every interview the dispatches always quote the visiting foreigner as saying: "You Americans are very ingenious." Admiral Beresford is the latest. Couldn't the correspondents vary a little once in awhile and quote the visitor as saying: "You Americans are hot stuff?"

Fifty thousand sacks of rice was the modest purchase of a Houston firm Saturday. The same day Swift & Co.'s local office gave a little order for 10,000 tons of salt. Up north such deals would consume a great deal of newspaper space, but they're used to doing big things in Texas.

The Queen of Belgium is dead. During her life, little was heard of her. Dead, she will be forgotten by most of the world's busy people. But the memory of her piety and good deeds will be a benediction on the people of the nation, over which with King Leopold, she shared the rule.

Mr. McVeigh deserves the public thanks for his practical and timely gift. It was several dozen garbage cans conveniently placed so that the public has no excuse for throwing trash in the streets. The people of Main street and of the town should co-operate and "help keep the city clean."

Christ Explains the Mystery of New Birth

Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter the kingdom of God.

That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.

Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again.

The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.

Nicodemus answered and said unto Him, How can these things be?

Jesus answered and said unto him, Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness.

If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe, if I tell you of heavenly things?

And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven.

And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up:

That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.

For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved.

But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God. John iii., 5-21.

THE HENDERSON BOLT

COLONEL DAVID B. HENDERson of Iowa, speaker of the House of Representatives, has bolted. That is the only name for his action.

The growing volcano of dissatisfaction that has been rumbling within the fiery Colonel, has broken out in an eruption that has shaken not only the Third congressional district of Iowa, but the whole Republican party of the country as well.

The continued "let-sleeping-dogs-lie" attitude of President Roosevelt towards the tariff has irritated the speaker, who is a staunch protectionist, till in a pique he threw down his glove and declared he would not be a candidate for renomination.

Some time ago, despatches told that Dolliver and other good Iowa Republicans, were dissatisfied with the Iowa platform. Henderson seems to have been more than dissatisfied, he was indignant. There is too much Scotch-Irish in his make-up to let him stand by as Dolliver has done, while his sincere convictions were ruthlessly being trampled on.

The shock of his resignation, according to the telegraphic reports, seriously disturbed President Roosevelt and his executive council. Not because Henderson is such a great man, or because his words carry so much force in Republican councils, but because of his representative position and his blunt, outspoken words.

The resulting Republican confusion is not regretted in Democratic ranks. There have been a good many interesting political facts which have developed but recently. One of them is that the Republican party is approaching what is known as a "split." It will be more serious to the Republicans than was the gold and silver controversy among Democrats, because the Republicans are in power and the loss of an instant's harmony means much. The Democrats are not worrying because of the facts, but before the campaign is over, either the Republican party will have enjoyed the widest breach in its history, or else Henderson and his followers will have been repudiated and the tariff that protects the trusts will have been cast into outer darkness.

There was a time, mayhap, when a protective tariff was good for this country. That time is not now. President Roosevelt's cautious attitude regarding the tariff, his gradual edging toward the place where the Republicans and the protective tariff must part, indicate that he is not asleep to the disturbances in his party. He realizes that the tariff must go, but how to get rid of it without disturbing men of the Henderson class is the problem. It is much like cutting off a corn, without taking off one's shoe.

Already Henderson has been aroused. More Republicans will follow him. It behooves the Democratic party to strengthen its ranks as never before. The Republicans will make "strenuous" efforts to heal the breach which they cannot conceal.

The chances for Democratic victory are enough to arouse the best efforts of every loyal partisan. Let the strongest fight in the last two decades be the battle of the Democrats at the next general election and victory will be theirs.

The Fort Worth Telegram has been much improved of late, and is to undergo further improvement. Another Mergenthaler has been ordered and the old ones now in use are to be made as good as new, in addition to other equipment that will be added.—Terrell Transcript.

SETTLE IT AT ONCE.

An article in the Sunday Telegram regarding a woman of this city who is said to have enticed two little girls into a room over a saloon, and there forced them to drink beer, should stir up citizens of Fort Worth regarding conditions that demand immediate treatment.

That an officer discovered what was going on in time to prevent more serious wrong, is a matter of credit, and speaks well for the efficiency of the Fort Worth police force.

While the city council is debating and arguing regarding the fire limit and the situation of disreputable resorts, this more important question demands an answer.

It has been shown that the police are not lacking in endeavor to do their duty. What they should have, is the authority from the city council to shut up every wine room in Fort Worth. To hunt the seducers, who are ruining the lives of young girls, till they are driven beyond the bounds of Tarrant county.

Settle other evils as quickly as possible, but this is one that should be wiped out as fast as the forces of law and order can get to work.

Every mother, every father, every good citizen demands that this danger to the young children of the city, be removed and that it be removed at once.

By the way, North Fort Worth is booming. Remember it when mentioning Fort Worth to your friends.

Admiral Beresford says our navy is all right. He has never seen any of the battle ships run aground?

A Fort Worth carriage painter has just fallen into $14,000 worth of luck. He didn't make it on Beaumont oil.

Ambassador White says he will retire after having done some literary work. Many men who have done "some literary work" have not retired. They have merely sunk into oblivion.

The Fort Worth Telegram is now an up-to-date evening paper, having installed three linotype machines and improved the plant some $5,000 worth. The way the trains now run, Clarendon people can get one day's news next morning in the Telegram.—Clarendon Industrial World.

Fort Worth is reported to be after the state fair. A special to the Fort Worth Telegram says Fort Worth will put up $250,000 to secure the fair. If it is true that Fort Worth wants it, she will likely get it as she seldom fails to get what she wants.—Quanah Observer.

Influential citizens of the Danish West Indies have petitioned their home government to allow them to be annexed to the United States. They aren't going at it right. They should get the home government to oppress them and then let the g. o. p. of this country step in and do the "suffering humanity" act.

The railroads propose to reduce the freight rates on household goods shipped in to the southwest by homeseekers. It is a good investment. Every dollar they may lose now on reduced tariffs, will be paid back a hundred fold within five years. Now it is a few carloads of household goods. Then it will be trainloads of produce and merchandise.

Ex-Governor Hogg says he will be a candidate for attorney-general two years hence and predicts that he will be elected. He promises war on the trusts, particularly the tentacle of the octupus that holds the Beaumont oil wells. In the two years' interim before Mr. Hogg's election, the trusts will tremble and continue to make money.

THE MYSTERY OF GRASLOV

By Ashley Towne

Copyright, 1901, by Charles B. Etherington

Prince Neslerov wants to marry Frances Gordon, the charming daughter of an American who is building the Trans-Siberian railroad. Frances is interested in the fortunes of Vladimir Paulpoff, a stalwart Russian blacksmith. She asks Neslerov to use his influence for Vladimir. Neslerov goes to Vladimir's hut. The blacksmith has talent and shows Neslerov a picture he has painted. It is the portrait of a woman of rank copied from a miniature. The prince is excited and asks for the original. Vladimir's father says it has been lost. To Vladimir old Paulpoff confesses that he lied to Neslerov and still has the miniature.

Neslerov has the Paulpoffs sent to Siberia as nihilists.

Frances Gordon goes to the forge with books for Vladimir. At the door of the lonely hut she encounters Neslerov. The prince presses his suit violently and Frances stuns him with a pistol shot in the head. Gordon wishes his daughter to marry Jack Denton, an American bridge engineer. Frances demands that her father intercede with the governor for Vladimir. They start for Obi. Neslerov boards the same train which breaks in two, and Neslerov has Frances alone in his power.

Denton nearly kills Nesleroy in a duel.

Jack promises Frances to save the blacksmith. He repairs a disabled engine and hauls a car containing the wounded prince and Frances toward Obi. On the road they meet Gordon, returning with a special car for his daughter. Frances will not expose Neslerov's baseness.

Neslerov sends his creature Jansky, chief of police, to the Siberian mines to recover the original of Vladimir's picture from the Paulpoffs; also to put Denton out of the way, secretly.

CHAPTER XII.

PRINCESS OLGA BEGINS TO ACT.

"NOW, Therese, tell me what you have learned. Why did the fact that the picture of Alexandra hangs upon the wall of Neslerov's room make you faint? You have learned something. Tell me."

Therese was sitting in a chair, her face white and drawn, and in her eyes was a bewildered look.

"It was not so much what I heard, princess, as what I knew and suspected," she answered.

"I know what you know. I suspect what you suspect. Tell me what you heard," she said sternly.

"It was in the serfs' hall," she said in reply to the princess. "I was eating; no one seemed to ask who I was, and they talked as servants do. Vladimir Paulpoff is in danger of his life."

"Go on," she said. "Tell me all."

"It seems there is an American—I do not remember what they called him—but he is an American who builds bridges over the rivers for the new railway. He knows Vladimir Paulpoff. He is also a friend of that American girl—you remember—we met at the fair in Moscow?"

"Frances Gordon? I remember her. She gave liberally to the charities. Well?"

"It would seem from what I heard that the governor is in love with her, and that she rejected him. These things are well known among the servants. It seems the American and Neslerov had a fight and Neslerov was injured."

"He told me he fell from a horse. Go on."

"It is believed among the servants that Vladimir is also in love with the American girl and that she is in love with him. And the American—I don't know—but he may be in love with her also."

"Three lovers! She is fortunate—no, I would say most unfortunate. With one true and honorable lover any woman is fortunate, but with three—and one like Neslerov! It is too much."

"Do you mean the oil painting of my cousin, the Princess Alexandra?"

"I mean it. You say it hangs on the wall of Neslerov's room. It is undoubtedly the one painted by Vladimir."

"And when Vladimir and his parents were sent to Siberia Neslerov took the painting?"

"Yes. Vladimir is talented, as you know—at least as I have told you."

"Then Vladimir must be near this place."

Therese shuddered again.

"He is—he is in the dungeons under this palace," she whispered in terror.

A sudden change came over the princess. She walked in agitation to and fro across the room.

"Then Neslerov must suspect that Vladimir holds the key to the mystery of Graslov," she said, stopping again before Therese.

"I do not know what he thinks. The American also is here under a charge of conspiring against the czar."

"Oh, then it becomes clearer. These Americans are shrewd. This one, perhaps, in order to gratify his love of truth, has set himself the task of discovering the truth about Graslov."

"Who knows?" asked Therese. "But how would he know anything about the mystery of Graslov?"

"True, but you say Vladimir and the American girl are in love. Vladimir may have discovered something and told the girl. She may have told the American, who may not be a lover, but a friend. She may have enlisted his efforts in the task of unraveling the mystery."

"It is possible."

"What else did you hear?"

"Nothing; that is all. The American was arrested as he was about to leave for Perm. Vladimir was brought from Tivoloffsky, a small village near here."

"By the orders of Neslerov?"

"And that is all you heard?"

"All—everything."

"It is enough to place me upon the right scent. You must not, however, give way to these fits of unconsciousness. Be stronger, be brave."

"It is all very well, princess; but if you had lived for twenty years with the horror of that crime overshadowing you, with a constant fear of the Siberian mines weighing upon you, you would not be calm."

"Poor woman! I appreciate your feelings in the matter. But try to maintain your composure, for one mistake now, the slightest suspicion on the part of Neslerov, may destroy the efforts we have made during the last two years."

"Six months, princess."

"For you, since your husband died. I have been working upon this mystery since I returned from Paris two years ago. If God spares my life, I will avenge the crime that was committed against our branch of the Neslerovs."

That evening the princess met Neslerov in the dining room with no show of emotion. Her smile was as winning and her wit as sharp as ever.

"I have not seen you during the afternoon, fair cousin," said Neslerov. "But I have not forgotten you. I have been gathering the resources of Tomsk to give you a fitting welcome to our city. Tomorrow night there will be a reception and fete here in your honor."

"Tomorrow night? That is quickly done."

"It does not take long to arrange such a thing here. We have so few social pleasures that when the opportunity occurs we grasp it greedily. The officers of the garrison and the head officials, with their families, will attend. You must not expect to see the grandeur of a fete in St. Petersburg or Paris."

"It would weary me," said Olga.

The perfecting arrangements for the fete made Neslerov hurry away, and Olga was soon left to herself. She had resolved upon certain plans, but the activity of the palace in the preparations for the coming festivities seemed destined to balk her. She roamed through the great rooms alone, scanning the faces of those she met, speaking to few, but watchful for the opportunity she craved.

It was nearly midnight when she became discouraged and went to her room. The servants of the palace were still at work arranging the rooms for the dance.

But the princess did not retire. She sat down near a window and waited.

From the ballroom windows the glare of lights spread out upon the surrounding trees and buildings. From below came voices of those who were making ready for the reception.

"Not yet, Therese," said the princess wearily. "I shall not retire."

"You will make yourself ill," said Therese nervously.

"Do not fear—I shall not be ill. But I am not ready for bed. I must wait—and act."

"You will learn nothing tonight."

"It is a night to learn. Leave me alone."

Therese stood a moment watching the princess with a wistful, loving glance, and then she went to her own room.

The princess sat with scarcely a motion for more than two hours. An observer might easily have supposed she had gone to sleep. But suddenly the glare of the lights from the ballroom died away, and the princess rose to her feet.

"It is finished," she said, "and they are weary. Tomorrow night will be a severe one, and they will retire at once. Some one must be on guard—and gold is powerful. Tonight I must learn something."

Still she waited and soon all was silent in the palace.

"I wonder if Neslerov is asleep," she said. "Neslerov! I could almost hate the name, though it is my own. How so cruel and heartless a man became a member of our family I cannot conceive. Even though the relationship is remote, some cousinships removed, I believe, yet I regret that any should exist. No—not now—I am glad; for were he not sufficient relation to warrant my presence in his detestable palace I could not have this opportunity to learn the truth. Oh, Neslerov! Vengeance will be mine—and it will be sweet."

She had incased her feet in light Parisian slippers, and in these she stepped noiselessly from the room. The great bare corridor was dimly lighted and no person could be seen.

While caution was necessary, it was not because Olga feared. She was too powerful herself to fear injury in the palace of Neslerov. If the governor suspected the purpose of her visit, she would be no longer welcome, and the solution she had so long sought would be delayed.

Silently she crept down the great winding stairs into the main hall. This was a wide, high apartment, and from it opened many doors into other apartments. On one side were the offices of the government of the province, on the other the living rooms of the governor's household.

The doors upon the left, leading to the reception room, the governor's room, the great ballroom and the dining room, were closed. Two of those on the right were open. In one room there was a light, and from it came the subdued voices of two men and the odor of tobacco. The other room was dark.

The princess remembered these rooms. She had seen them in her inspection of the palace. That from which came the voices and in which a light was burning was the office of the superintendent of police. The one next to it was a smaller room, connected with the other by a door, which was locked. This small room had been intended for an office, but was now used for the purpose of storing books, records, police material and desks. It was part of the suit allotted to the superintendent of police.

Olga stood in the hall and listened. She heard the name of Paulpoff. With a fluttering heart she darted into the darkened room and took up her position near the closed door between that and the office.

The two speakers sat near that door, with a round table between them, and upon the table was a supply of liquor and cigars.

The work of preparing the palace for the festivities on the following night did not come under the supervision of the police, but all connected with the palace were interested, and these two were the last to retire.

The speakers in that other room were Jansky, superintendent of police, and Inspector Unsgethon.

What is the use of dragging through existence only half alive to its opportunities and enjoyments? Why do many of you do it? Is it because you think there is no cure? There you are very much mistaken. Women are made much alike—all are subject to or liable to the same ailments, pains, aches and nervousness. These ills come to many—may come to all.

G. F. P. has cured thousands of them, will cure the others if given a chance to do so.

"I had suffered for a year and three bottles have restored my health entirely. Physicians and the many female remedies used had no effect upon me whatever, but to G. F. P. I owe my life. You have my permission to publish this letter that other suffering women may know of this wonderful remedy and be cured."—Mrs. Carrie Richardson, Grace, Miss.

One of the nicest facts about G. F. P. is that it cures women's special ills in the privacy of the home without offensive examinations or expensive treatment—there is no offended modesty and no wasted money.

G. F. P.—Gerstle's Female Panacea

is the best remedy in the world for the cure of all the diseases to which the female sex is peculiarly subject. It is not a new remedy, but on the contrary it is a very old one, being the prescription of a famous German physician who used it many years ago with such marvelous success that its formula has been sacredly preserved and handed down to the present generation as a female tonic that has stood the test of time and trial without a single failure being recorded against it.

This medicine is sold by nearly all medicine dealers at the uniform price of $1.00 a bottle or six bottles for $5.00, but in case you cannot get it from your dealer it will be sent to you at the above prices, all charges prepaid, if you send the money to

MUCH ABOUT THE LONE STAR

NEW ORLEANS PROGRESSIVE UNION SHAKES HANDS WITH US

A MAGNIFICENT TRIP

Told in a Souvenir Booklet Sent Over the Country—Much About New Orleans and Much More About Texas

In a neatly gotten up booklet of thirty-one pages sent out from New Orleans, a souvenir of New Orleans Merchants' Texas Excursion, May, 1902, much is said about New Orleans and much more complimentary to Texas and her people, telling of how the Crescent City merchants were greeted in the Lone Star state—a record of the magnificent trip planned and carried through by the New Orleans Progressive Union.

Speaking of the trip and the results the booklet says:

Sunday morning May 18, 1902, one of the handsomest trains which ever left New Orleans pulled out over the Southern Pacific railroad for Texas. Its passengers comprised more than two score of the leading business men of the city, and representatives of the daily press.

Individualism had been buried before the train pulled out. Business rivalries were forgotten before a wheel was turned. The men comprising the party had a higher end in view than the booking of orders. Their slogan was 'New Orleans and Texas.'

'The first and most important benefit derived from the excursion was the creation of friendships which have now passed the experimental stage. Texans were enabled to size up the calibre of New Orleans men for themselves, and while the New Orleans men were being sized up, they had an opportunity to judge of the vastness of Texas and her resources and the splendid energy and genuineness of her people.

"It is to be hoped that the impressions which Texans retain of their visitors are as satisfactory as the memories which the New Orleans delegation brought home with them. The men who made the trip were big men, representative men and well posted men. As a matter of course they were informed, in a general way, to the wealth of Texas, the magnitude of her boundaries and the limitless future which looms bright before her. There was not a man among them, however, whose most daring imaginings had even approximated the truth. The vista of agricultural wealth and mineral resource which was spread before their wondering eyes was richer than they had ever dreamed of, and every man of them came home singing the praises of the great state, through whose limits they had skimmed, and the wonderfully congenial people by whom they had been welcomed and entertained. They are still singing.

"The proposition voiced by the expounders of the excursion's motive at every stop was simple and direct. 'You have a great state,' they said. 'We have a great city. When we get together and pull the same way, there will be no stopping us. We are allies naturally. What helps Texas, helps New Orleans, and New Orleans cannot grow without aiding in the growth of Texas. We are willing to meet you half way in working out the glorious destiny which is our birthright...Support us by your trade and let us aid in your development.'

"The thought appealed to Texans. The days in which New Orleans did all the business of their state were recalled with pleasure at every stopping place, and now the renaissance of commercial New Orleans is eagerly awaited. The Merchants' Special convinced the people of Texas that New Orleans is wide awake again.

"And there can be no denying that the New Orleans delegation returned to their respective avocations imbued with a greater spirit of enterprise, which had been drilled into them during their stay within the boundaries of the Lone Star State, where every stop was made at 'the garden spot of the greatest commonwealth in the American Union, and the place that everybody measured their distances from.' Every village and hamlet was to be a metropolis in the very near future according to the firm convictions of her citizens, and every man was a prospective millionaire. There was nothing blatant in the talk of the Texans, either. They evidently meant what they said and their monumental confidence was of the genus which breeds success. There was no doubting"

Their Visit to Fort Worth

Of the seventh day out the booklet thus speaks:

"Corsicana, Ennis, Fort Worth and Dallas were the stops made the seventh day out. In Corsicana there was a reception at the Corsicana Commercial club, which had been arranged by a committee headed by President Stephen Smith.

"At Fort Worth the following committee extended greetings and drove the merchants through the city and to the Texas brewery, where an informal reception was held. William Brice F. S. Boulware, E. R. THE ROCK ISLAND NOT COMPLETED

EVIDENT THAT THE SYSTEM STILL LACKS IMPORTANT LINKS

Road Now Has Two Outlets on the Pacific Coast and Is Planning to Strengthen It's System in the Southwest

(Special to the Telegram)

New York, Sept. 22.—The following will appear in the Wall Street Journal, regarding Rock Island development in the southwest. It may be considered official.

There is excellent authority for the statement that Rock Island system is not yet completed. Two links at least are actually under consideration at present time, one between St. Louis and Chicago and the other between St. Louis and some point on Choctaw. We are told that the purchase of St. Louis, Kansas City and Southern by Rock Island was not merely for the establishment of a new Kansas City, St. Louis route, nor was it due to a desire to enter St. Louis without any other objective point in view. The intention of the management to build or buy a line between St. Louis and Chicago is declared by President Leeds, who states that there is every probability that the line will be built on a new right of way. This will be part of the main line of Rock Island and the old main line will constitute a Central division.

Link for Choctaw Line

Predicting the statement that Rock Island will not be content to link the parts of its system together by means of traffic agreements and alliances the necessity of the second link becomes obvious. Choctaw is at present a more or less isolated division of Rock island having no connection with the present main line over Rock Island rails other than the roundabout route via the Fort Worth division. The whole eastern end of the line, upon which the rich lumber and coal traffic of the line originates has no direct connection with the best market for its products except by this roundabout route. It is obvious that the lumber and coal billed from this region must be carried in competition with the direct route via Iron Mountain or the allied lines of Frisco, both of which afford direct lines to St. Louis and Chicago. Either Choctaw must lose a great deal of the benefit that should accrue to it from the possession of these resources or else there must be a link constructed by which these staples may find their way over Rock Island tracks to the markets of the middle west. To turn over Choctaw freight at Little Rock to Iron Mountain or to St. Louis, Memphis and Southeastern at Memphis would not be characteristic of the management of Rock Island. Here is the basis of the argument upon which the policy of Rock Island with regard to the Choctaw situation is founded. Rock Island has now a short spur running from Brinkley to Jacksonport, just across Iron mountain, and this may be utilized as the southern end of the link between the main line and Choctaw. The country at this point and westerly is not the most favorable for trunk lines, affording steep grades and difficult cuttings and having no great richness of local traffic to offset these disadvantages. It would, however, furnish to a new line considerable trade in lumber and, it may be, coal. It would therefore be a not inappropriate region to be pierced by a branch of the only essentially coal and lumber road of the southwest.

May Compete With Gould

Rock Island, we learn, may choose to construct the link down the valley of the Mississippi itself, entering the field now well covered by the Gould lines and the new ventures of Frisco. In such a case the lines would be less expensive to build and would probably establish for themselves in time a fair position as competing lines in this territory, although the prospects for invading lines in the valley are not supposed to be promising, owing to the well established dominancy of the Gould lines now reinforced by the new River Line of Missouri Pacific.

Has Two Pacific Ports.

A Rock Island official points out that one of the salient features of the New Rock Island, as its management are fond of calling it, has been unnoticed. This is that it now practically possesses, by traffic agreements two Pacific ports, both of which are certain to be lucrative in their returns. Within the present year the trains of Rock Island will enter San Francisco over Southern Pacific tracks. The rolling stock for these trains is now in preparation, and it is said that they will be in every way up to the standard of trunk line efficiency in the Eastern field. It is surmised by people who know Rock Island affairs better than others that this agreement is purely temporary in nature and will end when the link between the El Paso division of the Rock Island and Albuquerque is completed. Albuquerque will henceforth be the gateway through which Rock Island traffic will find its way to the coast. The Southern Pacific route is very roundabout as compared with Atchison and the admitedly friendly relation between Atchison and Rock Island will also conduce to a thoroughly satisfactory working agreement for a Pacific route via Atchison for Rock Island trains.

Outlet in Mexico.

The second Pacific terminus is at Acapulco, an excellent harbor on the Mexican coast, to which point the lines of the Mexican Central are to be pushed through as rapidly as is possible. Grades on the last 50 miles of this line are difficult, but every resource is to be used to make them feasible for heavy trains. Rock Island has signed a traffic agreement by which trains will run through to this point. The business of Mexico is itself growing in importance, but the trade of South America will be of infinitely greater importance. Acapulco, as an inlet for the coastwise trade of South America, is therefore of measurable importance. It is the nearest and most convenient port to South America and will, therefore, attract a good deal of the coasting traffic which has hitherto found its way to the ports farther north, both up the coast and across the isthmus to the ports of the gulf. The aggressive policy of the Southern Pacific bidding for this trade has been paralleled by Rock Island through the traffic alliance with Mexican Central. The possibilities of the development of this traffic and of the propinquity of the port to the proposed Isthmian canal are good subjects of careful consideration, but are too distant to seriously affect the actual situation at present.

BAD DIGESTION

Imperfect digestion is more serious and far-reaching in its effect than is generally understood. This state of health is like an open gateway to disease because germs that may be in the air we breathe at once seize such an opportunity to attack the vital organs. They slowly undermine the strength and energy, and a collapse comes—usually at a time when a strong healthy body is most needed.

PRICKLY ASH BITTERS

Is a fine regulating tonic which filters through the body, casting out injurious matter, stimulating the digestion and nourishing and strengthening every weakened part. It also purifies the blood, sharpens the appetite and creates energy. In this way it restores the system to perfect order.

For irregular bowel movements, chronic constipation, flatulence, belching, foul breath, and other troubles due to indigestion or obstruction in the bowels, Prickly Ash Bitters is a speedy cure.

THE CHICAGO CAPITALISTS

WILL VISIT FORT WORTH EARLY IN NOVEMBER

Business Advantages of Texas to be Their Study--Cities of the State to Prepare for Their Reception

The business men of Fort Worth will have an opportunity to do some patriotic work for the good of the city when the delegation of business men of Chicago visit Fort Worth in the early part of November.

This party of Chicago capitalists proposes to tour the state of Texas and visit its most prominent cities with a view to investing capital here and promoting its industrial and manufacting interests. Fort Worth business men should not only give these gentlemen a hospitable welcome, for that is their simple duty as hosts, but should be prepared to convince them with substantial business reasons of the superior facilities and advantages presented by Fort Worth for commercial investments. Chicago people already have an eye on Fort Worth and exhibit a kindly feeling for this city. Chicago capital is building up North Fort Worth today, and the work has but just begun, therefore these visitors have a peculiar interest in the city and will expect a reception much beyond the ordinary, and our Fort Worth people can be depended upon for doing the right thing. The city is not only glad to welcome the business enterprises that have already been begun here but are anxious to see more such capital come in. And more enterprises will come if this party is convinced that Fort Worth is IT, THE city of North Texas.

Governor Sayers has called a meeting of representatives of various cities and boards of trade of the state to be held in Dallas for the purpose of perfecting an organization for the proper entertainment of the party while in the state. Dr. J. L. Cooper has been selected to go as the representative of the Board of Trade, and President Waples and Secretary Paddock may also attend.

A tenative itinerary, which is not final but may be changed, has been submitted which makes the date of the proposed visit to Fort Worth on November 8, the party arriving here at 2:30 p.m. and remaining practically twenty-four hours. The party will remain in the state about two weeks, from November 4 to November 16.

YOUNG MAN DROWNED IN POOL

Jim Gee of Greenville Sinks in Sight of Companions

Greenville, Tex., Sept. 22.—Jim Gee, aged 31 years, was drowned last evening, about 7:30 o'clock, in a pool near the Cotton Belt and Midland depots. Gee was in company with several other young men and went in bathing. After other boys had come out he got strangled and sank before they realized his danger. He was the son of the late T. J. Gee, a member of the Fifth regiment band and accounted one of the best trombone players in the state.

IN MEMORIAM.

"Bring flowers, pale flowers, o'er the bier to sned
"A crown for the brow of the early dead
"For this through its leaves hath the white rose burst;
"For this in the woods was the violet nursed
"Though they smile in vain for what once was ours
"They are love's last gift, bring ye flowers, pale flowers."

Amidst the floral offerings of her many friends, the mortal remains of the beautiful maiden who was borne to her last resting-place, to sleep where sweet magnolias can bloom above her grave, and the mocking-bird chant her requiem. Sadie Taylor died at the early age of eighteen. Possessed of a loving disposition, generous, bright and beautiful. She was loved by all her comrades and friends. But the summons came, she was wanted by the angels. Without fear and with a firm reliance on her Savior, she bade a loving adieu to the dear ones, and the angels opened the portals and welcomed her home. Methinks I behold her now striking the golden harp, and with the sweet voice we loved, singing songs of the redeemed.

Parents, sisters and friends, weep not. She is free from all pain and sorrow. In a few years you too will follow, and if like her you have lived a pure life, all will be well.

From the church she loved, she was borne by loving hands, and all of the mortal was laid to rest while the beloved father commanded her to the God who gave her.

Look up loving parents and friends. There is no death, she will come to you and bring comfort. A few short years and all will be reunited in a home not made with hands, but with kindness and loving deeds done in earth life:

"As a bird to it's sheltering nest
"When the storm on the hills is abroad
"So the spirit has flown from this world of unrest
"To repose on the bosom of God."

"Waken, Lords and Ladies Gay,
On the Mountain Dawns the Day." —Scott.

The sleeping-car that leaves Fort Worth on our night train is ready to receive passengers at NINE o'clock, each evening, and this car is set out at Colorado Springs for guests to vacate at their leisure. The place where the car waits is only about six miles from the mountains, and a beatiful sight greets the wakers from that long, refreshing Colorado sleep—under blankets.

This night train also has a sleeper that goes into Denver, reaching there at a comfortable rising time.

Both of our daily THRU TRAINS have those sleepers with "Large, Ladies' Dressing rooms," also meals served in our own Cafe Dining cars,—a la carte service, 25c and up per individual. These special features of distinguishing excellence are among the characteristics that have, now for some time, made appropriate the "Only-One-Road" — and "You-Don't-Have-to-Apologize" verdict of persons who are capable of appreciating good service and making distinctions.

WANT TO GO TO CLOUDCROFT?
Well, we have the best and shortest line there, too.
Just call up phone 561, or drop into our office at the Hotel Worth.

"The Denver Road."
(No other railroad has any thru trains at all.)

TO HAVE A MONUMENT

IN NATURE OF A HUGE BUILDING FOR CONFEDERATE VETERANS

TO BE INCORPORATED

Captain Sam Evans Submits a Resolution and Proposition for the Work—Sons of Confederate Veterans

Two weeks ago Captain Sam Evans, a member of the R. E. camp of United Confederate Veteran camp of this city announced that he would at an early date introduce a resolution before the camp to incorporate the organization under the laws of Texas, one of the purposes being to erect a monument in the nature of an extensive building, a home for confederate veterans. At that time Captain Evans spoke to his proposed resolution, and the idea met with approval from the first. Yesterday Captain Evans presented the promised resolution and it was adopted. He again spoke to the proposition, explaining in detail its purposes, and enlarged upon the benefits to accrue therefrom. Following is the full text of the resolution:

"Whereas, this camp, in wisdom, has been organized for social and charitable purposes, and for the further purpose of honoring the name of R. E. Lee, the greatest military genius the world has ever produced: the man who, with less than 600,000 unarmed men, without money, without a navy, without recognition as a government by the world, without discipline, united in a common cause for the purpose of maintaining the supremacy of the white man, and for the further purpose of maintaining an institution that was born with the government—the constitutional institution, upheld by the high courts of the country.

"With these grand and noble patriots this great military genius battled and maintained himself against 2,700,000 troops, commanded by generals second to none but R. E. Lee, for four long years.

"Now we, therefore, believe it is meet and proper to incorporate this camp under the laws of the state of Texas, with all the privileges and immunities that a corporation may be entitled to; that we resolve here and now that this camp be so incorporated and that a committee of three, lawyers and members of this camp, be selected by this camp to perfect, according to the laws of Texas, this corporation.

"The purpose of this corporation being to erect a monument, a breathing, a living, a historical an educational and a productive monument that will live and breathe forever in the interest of the white man; that it may live and breathe to the honor of him for whom this camp was named; that it may live and breathe the intelligence and patriotism of those who fought for the supremacy of the white man and their constitutional rights for four long years, and are continuing to do so; that it may be a monument to the intelligence of Lee camp forever."

"A monument expressive of the struggle and hardships of those who were bold and patriotic enough to contend for their just rights against millions; a monument that will be a home for the homeless; a perpetual school for the posterity of those who fought for the supremacy of the white man; a commercial monument, a mechanical monument, a scientific monument—a monument with eyes and ears and mind to see and hear and know and feel for the producer, for the distressed and unsympathetic condition of this government; a monument that, with its combined intelligence, can see far enough into the future to maintain the civilization and perpetuity of this great and grand nation, and to preserve virtues and morals and encourage patriotism; a monument that will unite the Caucasion race North, South, East and West in brotherly love and a language that can be spoken and understood from pole to pole; a monument without prejudice, sparkling with bright gems of integrity, justice, equality and love of humanity. Yes, a monument that the combined vices of the world could not assault in vain."

Captain Evans suggested a committee of three to carry out the provisions of the resolution, but on motion the number was raised to seven and Lieutenant Commander Joe C. Terrell, acting in the absence of Commander Taylor, appointed seven members as follows: Captain Sam Evans as chairman, Judge R. E. Beckham, Captain Joe C. Terrell, Colonel R. M. Wynne, Judge O. O. Cummings, Judge S. P. Greene, Judge J. Y. Hoggsett.

Captain Evans' idea is to erect a large hotel, covering a half or whole block, three, four or even five stories high, with stores on first floor, and the hotel to be operated by and under the direction of the camp, aided by the daughters and women of the confederacy, and thus provide, in addition to the business proposition, a home for the homeless young and old, of the Southern cause—to really be a monument to the camp and cause in every particular.

Routine Proceedings

A committee was appointed to draft resolutions upon the death of Comrade Robinson, who was killed a week ago. This committee is composed of: Comrades W. T. Shaw, Thomas Burt and E. P. Lingenfelder.

Comrade J. H. Murphy was reported to be quite ill. A committee of seven was appointed to attend the sick man during the week.

The secretary of the Daughters of the Confederacy, Miss Mattie Melton, extended an invitation to the members of the camp to attend a free entertainment to be given in honor of the fifth anniversary of local chapter on next Friday night at R. E. Lee camp headquarters. The program will consist of musical and literary numbers, refreshments and a social hour. The invitation was accepted by a rising vote.

Upon the death of Comrade Sam J. Darcy, the committee reported as follows:

Of death can touch a true philosopher.
Death sets the soul at liberty to fly,
Which while imprisoned in the body here,
She cannot learn; a true philosopher
Makes death his common practice, while he lives,
And every day by contemplation, strives
To separate the soul, far as he can,
From off the body.

In general order No. 35, the major-general commanding announced the death of Comrade Major Sam J. Darcy, aid-de-camp on the division staff. It occurred here on the evening of September 9. He was born in Tennessee and came to Texas when eight years of age. He came to Fort Worth in 1857. In 1859 he served in M. T. Johnson's regiment against the Comanche Indians and in 1861 enlisted in the Confederate army, being a member of the Thirty-second Texas. Served with gallantry in the army of Tennessee and lost an arm at the battle of Murfreesboro. He never married, but labored faithfully to comfort loved kindred. He was a devout Christian, a true friend and zealous member of R. E. Lee Camp, 158, U. C. V. He was a modest man and of far more than ordinary intelligence, and was respected by all who knew him. Therefore,

Be it resolved, that in the death of Major Sam J. Darcy, R. E. Lee Camp, as well as the community has suffered a great loss, and we deeply sympathize with his relatives and friends because of his death.

J. C. TERRELL,

DIED OF HEMORRHAGE

Tom Hogan, a Rounder, Passes Over the Great Divide

Tom Hogan was the name of a man who died from hemorrhage at the saloon on the southwest corner of Twelfth and Rusk streets, Saturday afternoon about 5 o'clock. He was a man that had no family or relatives here, but had been about that locality for some time, and lived a life that had no purpose other than to eke out an existence. Those about the locality where he died made up a burial fund and turned the remains over to Undertaker Gause for interment. Deceased was about 63 years old.

A LITTLE CHILD IS LAID TO REST

TOUCHING FUNERAL OF JAMES FRANKLIN PROSSER, JR.

Services Conducted by Rev. C. L. Altfather—Rev. I. Z. T. Morris Also Adds a Pathetic Recital. Many Friends Present.

The funeral of little James Franklin Prosser, Jr., whose death was due to the bite of a pet puppy, was held at the residence yesterday afternoon. A large concourse of sympathizing friends gathered to testify to their sorrow with that of the heart-broken parents, among them being a large number of Knights of Pythias, of which order Mr. Prosser is a member. But few were able to enter the bereaved home to hear the words of hope and consolation offered by Rev. C. L. Altfather, as he asked heaven to bless this sore affliction to the spiritual good of those who mourn.

Rev. I. Z. T. Morris told of its sweet home with those who loved it with the strongest ties of human affection. The last sad rites were concluded beside the little grave in Oakwood cemetery.

OWNER OF THE DOG DENIES STATEMENTS

SAYS DOG WAS NOT OUTSIDE FENCE—HORSE STUMBLED WHILE RUNNING

S. T. Johnson, living at 808 South Rusk street, and owner of the bull dog alleged to have caused the death of the fine horse on Friday afternoon, called at The Telegram office this morning to correct statements made through the papers and on the streets with reference to the accident.

Mr. Johnson is emphatic in his assertion that the dog never left the front gallery of his house; that the dog was resting in a rocker, as is his custom, on the front gallery, when the horses came running past the gate. Mr. Johnson says there are two reputable men and a neighbor lady who will testify that the dog did not leave the gallery, and that the horse simply stumbled and fell. He further says there were no marks on the horse's nose or jaw to indicate that the dog had fastened its teeth there, the only abrasion being the ground and gravel marks made by the horse striking his nose on the street when he fell.

Mr. Johnson admits that the dog is excitable when the fire horses pass, but pays no attention to other animals running. The dog has learned this, he says, from the clanging of the gong when a run is made, and in this way knows the horses. He further claims the dog is not vicious, but delights to play with children, and never bothers people who are accustomed to pass in and out the yard—the waterman, grocer, butcher and Telegram throwers coming and going at will.

Mr. Johnson regrets the accident, but feels that, inasmuch as his dog was in no way to blame, that to kill the dog would be wrong. He prefers to send the dog away—but declares emphatically that it must not be molested.

The dog, he says, is too fat and clumsy to jump his yard fence and that the gate was shut. He has three reputable witnesses who will, he declares, testify to this fact.

DEATH BY HIS OWN HANDS

STRANGER IN THE CITY USES A PISTOL TO END ALL

UNSATISFACTORY LIFE

Had Money, Clothes and Valuable Articles, but Was Tired of Living, and Disheartened Because He Was Ill

Disheartened, heart-weary and tired of life, John M. McCauley decided to and did end it all yesterday by sending a leaden messenger of death crashing through his brain, and his body is now held at Gause's morgue awaiting responses to inquiries sent out in an effort to locate friends and relatives—an inquiry as to what disposition to make of the remains.

It was about 8:30 o'clock yesterday morning when McCauley committed the deed that ended his life—a life that to him was very unsatisfactory because of ill health and an ungovernable appetite for drink.

Came From San Antonio.

McCauley is supposed to have come here from San Antonio about ten days ago, though a trunk and a bicycle were shipped from Denver. On last Monday night at 3:30 a. m. he was found by Officers Dodd and Bilderbeck on the streets in a drunk-and-down condition. They took him to the city hall and there he was kept until he sobered up. He had some money, a postoffice money order and a gold watch. The watch was held as surety for his fine, the money returned to him to get his trunk and wheel from the express office. He got these and rented a room on the third floor over the saloon at Third and Houston. It was in this room that he shot himself, and was found an hour later dead. He had told the proprietor about 8 o'clock that he wanted his trunk sent to his room that he might "clean up," and the trunk was sent as requested. The shot was heard, but was so indistinct that a young man rooming next door failed to locate it. When found McCauley was on the bed, the pistol in his hand, and the body was lying full length, feet against the footboard and crossed. The pillow was powder burned and blood and brains were spattered about the pillow and bedding. His trunk had in it a quantity of good clothing, some money, a bank check and a money order. Quite a lot of correspondence showed that he had traveled extensively, and that he had been engaged in some sort of soliciting business.

No Identification.

Deceased was about 33 years of age. Several letters in his trunk indicated that he had been in many states, Colorado evidently being the last one. A postoffice money order for $20, issued from the office at Oakland, Cal., and a New York draft for $20 issued at San Antonio, were found in his pocket.

A letter written by E. McGilton, a lawyer of Clay City, Ill., was also found. The contents of this letter indicated McCauley formerly lived in that place.

Among the many letters and p found among the effects of the man were several certificates of [illegible]mont oil stock which showed he had been in that place recently.

Up to noon Mr. Gause had received no replies to his telegrams.

On the morning following his arrest he told Police Clerk Newby that he had often contemplated suicide, and exhibited a number of newspaper clippings showing various modes men had adopted in ending their lives by suicide, the greater number of them being men who ended a spree.

FAMOUS FEATHERWEIGHTS WILL FIGHT TO A FINISH

Greater interest was never manifested in a prize fight than is being centered in the championship contest between Terry McGovern and Young Corbett that is scheduled to take place at Louisville, Ky., before the Southern Athletic club tonight. In the first place the personality of the principals counts for a great deal. There is probably no more widely known pugilist in the United States than "Terry the Terror." His determination to wrest the championship laurels from the youngster who defeated him when they last met, adds human interest to the event. Both men are training hard and show themselves to be perfectly prepared for the struggle which means so much to both. James J. Corbett will referee the contest.
