A. P. I. Warned Demand For Oil To Be Lower Next Six Months

DAN MORGAN OF CONTINENTAL HEADS REFINERY STATISTICS COMMITTEE SUBMITTING PREDICTIONS TO MEETING IN TULSA

TULSA, Okla.—Inaugurating an important change of policy, the directors of the American Petroleum Institute Wednesday elected Axtell J. Byles of New York, executive of the Tidewater associated group of oil companies, as president to serve until December 31, 1934.

Byles succeeded C. B. Amos, who resigned to become chairman of the board of the Texas company. He will receive $75,000 annual salary.

At the same meeting, the A. P. I. directors heard a warning from their statistical experts that the industry must prepare for a further decrease in crude oil and motor fuel consumption during the six months period ending September 30.

Fuel 54 Uck. Down
The committee on refinery statistics and economics, headed by Dan J. Morgan of Eonaca City, president of Continental Oil company, forecast a decrease of 5.6 per cent in total motor fuel demand, and of 2.5 per cent in crude oil demand. Motor fuel demand was estimated at 211,800,000 barrels, which compares with an actual consumption for the same six months in 1932 of 226,487,000 barrels. Domestic motor fuel demand is expected to be 198,000,000 barrels, a decrease of 3.4 per cent, while export demand will drop 28.9 per cent to 13,800,000 barrels the report said.

Crude Demand
Total crude oil demand, estimated at 431,020,000 barrels is split into three divisions, domestic use 417,000,000 barrels; export, 14,000,000, and imports 15,000,000, which leaves a contemplated gross domestic production of slightly less than 2,280,000 barrels a day.

The committee urged that production in the United States be held at least 100,000 barrels daily under this figure, however and that approximately 18,000,000 barrels be withdrawn from storage.

"This report sounds a definite warning and is worthy of serious study, not only by the industry but in any program for the industry by the state and federal governments," said Moran's letter that accompanied the report.

Home Town Talk

Post-mortem of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention now are the principal division hereabouts.

It is universally conceded here and elsewhere that it was a successful convention for the West Texas Chamber of Commerce and the city of Big Spring.

Big Spring people are responsible for this success. Acting through their local Chamber of Commerce, which is operated for the purpose of providing proper organization of civic and community projects, the people of Big Spring have done a good job.

In staging a convention to which people of all classes, all professions and occupations, all beliefs and standards, are expected to come, a town is confronted with a task unlike that created when it must entertain a convention of people of one class or profession or belief.

Because all classes and kinds and professions are represented at a West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention, a convention program of varied nature is demanded. That is why there were business sessions, group conferences on public problems, as well as entertainment at the auditorium and in the hotel ballrooms.

Because people of all classes and beliefs attend these conventions those of some groups and beliefs naturally disagree with some phases of the program. In putting on a convention of this kind it is not a question of what this individual or that one would like or dislike. It is a question of providing for as many different people as possible.

Undoubtedly a great portion of men and women who did personal work in preparing and staging the program of the convention did not like some things included in it.

The convention was of benefit to Big Spring from several angles.

First, the thousands of visitors spent tens of thousands of dollars here. New money for local circulation.

Second, Big Spring was automatically added to the list of towns capable of handling "big" conventions. It has belonged in that classification some time. It was the knowledge that entertaining the West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention would definitely show the public of the southwest that

Economics

The prospects for this London Economic Conference are not so warm as you have heard.

Those who are going there for us have been told confidentially that their personal affairs so nothing will interfere during June, July and August. They have been told also that their services will probably be required abroad until November.

That means those at the top are figuring on a six months conference.

The reasons for this pessimism inside are the same as those which have gummed all international conferences in the past.

The tariff question was shown in Mr. Roosevelt's recent conference to be almost as difficult as disarmament. Every nation wants tariff reduction, ours not theirs. As a matter of international general policy they seek our reductions would be a good thing.

The one underlying thing which may make this conference different is Mr. Roosevelt's determination. He has said privately his men stay in London until they get something to increase world commodity prices.

His determination is not shared by the Europeans. Their trusted agent here yawns when you mention the matter. They say they are glad the conference will be in London so they can save traveling expenses.

The reason for all this hemming and hawing about Mr. Roosevelt going to the London Conference is that he has not been able to make up his mind.

He knows the Conference needs all the push he can give it. He would like to dash over and open it up. Two days there would be enough. He could dash back and be in the White House within 12 days after his departure.

The trouble with that is the political hazard involved. It is generally recognized by all politicians that Mr. Wilson made a political error in his European trips. Such ventures always arouse nationalistic elements at home.

CHAPTER XIV

The wind whipped little ringlets of bronze hair into Monnie's eyes. It was as if they were flying alone in the summer night.

"What a wild goose chase," she said, as if to herself. "Waynesboro—Miss Anstie had said that Kay was on the way to Waynesboro but wasn't it quite possible that the man had thrown that question out at the filling station merely as a joke? Wasn't it just as reasonable that Kay was, at this moment, speeding westward instead of taking the easterly road Charles Eustace's car was traveling?"

Poor Kay, foolish little Kay! She ought to have known what was going on—ought to have watched her more closely. She had been, Monnie reproached herself, foolishly absorbed in her own affairs to see where Kay, in her impatience and discontent, was drifting.

"It's my fault!" she broke out, rather incoherently, to the silent man beside her.

"That's nonsense." His dark profile was grim in the faint light of the instrument board. "And anyhow, nothing's happened yet. We'll have her safe and sound in an hour or two." Eustace spoke with a confidence he was far from feeling.

Monnie sat tense, every nerve tingling with the excitement of the chase. High Falls—a scattering of lights—and then the open road again. White arrows pointing the way at the crossroad—turn for Waynesboro—that was all right—they had taken the right turn.

Charles slowed each time they passed a car and Monnie stared eagerly, expectantly, into the faces of the occupants. The vehicles were fewer now and farther between. The main road forked at the Waynesboro turn. This was a virtual detour, rutty and narrow.

It was madness—madness—the girl told herself to thrash about in this way. What they should have done—at once—was to have given Kay's description to the local police. They had a system of radio alarm that was wonderful, she had heard. But no—no—that would mean that Kay's adventures would be broadcast to the waiting world.

"I couldn't do that to her," Monnie groaned inwardly.

They plunged through Newton Center, a hamlet of some half dozen scattered houses. Charles lighted a cigaret without taking his eyes from the road. Monnie straining her gaze ahead, was conscious of a sudden spurt of energy in the motor.

"That car ahead," Charles told her. "I've had its tail light ever since the Falls. It's turning into a lane. Suppose we stop and take a look."

"It's probably some farmer's dooryard," Monnie said despairingly.

The twinkling red light disappeared—for an instant, reappeared again. Charles was slowing his engine now, its powerful roar muffled so that the sounds of insects, of whirring crickets and croaking tree frogs could be heard.

Monnie realized the car they were trailing had stopped. Before she could speak the man beside her had put on the brakes, was sliding out of the seat.

"You stay here," he said in a reassuring whisper. "I'll do the talking."

Monnie was trembling with nervousness now. She had to grit her teeth together to keep them from chattering. She watched Charles' tall figure striding purposefully away from her. In the car ahead she could just see the outline of two heads. A woman's, shawled. A man's.

She wanted to call out to Charles to come back—to hurry. They must be on their way. It was folly to waste even a few minutes trailing some surely farmer who would, like or not, resist with blows their interest in him. In the blurry mist the headlights made she could see Charles draping himself casually over the fender of the car. She could not hear what he said but presently he came back, looking rather disgusted.

"Some idiot of a drunken yokel," he said disgustedly. "His wife's asleep. I couldn't get anything out of her. What luck! My hunch was a rotten one."

Monnie was sick with disappointment. She hadn't really expected anything of this chance crew. They were searching for a needle in a haystack, she reminded herself. She must keep up her courage.

"Tell you what we'll do," Charles said in a hearty tone. "We'll push on to Waynesboro and inquire at the hotel there. If they're stopping any place tonight it will be there. It's the only decent place for miles around—"

"They wouldn't—Kay wouldn't—"

"Monnie stammered.

"Kay's going to be all right! Don't you worry about that," the quiet voice told her. The young man beside her started his engine, which purred dutifully, and the car began to slew about on the slippery road. There had been heavy rains the night before. The wheels whirled uselessly for a moment in the mud and the brakes groaned.

"Nasty place!"

The engine killed, sickeningly. Monnie felt her palms wet and her cheeks hot. This was awful—awful—they were losing precious time. In the split second of silence after the roar of the motor a girl's clear voice came to them.

"I want to go back—oh, I do!" Kay's voice.

Monnie was out upon that muddy road before she knew what she was doing, actually. Her frantic feet were straying toward the red light. She could hear the pounding heels of her escort beside her.

She flung herself against the door of the little red sedan. "Kay! Kay! It's Monnie! I'm here, dear. Don't be afraid!"

Kay, with some kind of black silk scarf wound around her bright locks, Kay with a face stained with tears. A sullen, young-old man at the wheel.

"Aw, let her go. She's a quitter, that's what she is. She wanted to come with me. It's a racket, that's what."

Monnie caught the sickening fumes of bad gin as she helped the sobbing girl out.

"Back here, dear, Charles' car. You're all right. Don't cry any more."

"He—he said I'd better wrap up in that thing so folks wouldn't know me," Kay was saying between gasps. "He put on a dirty old coat so that he would look different. He began to drink from a flask he had. I—I got scared. He was only going to drive me to Waynesboro and then put me on the train there. He said he'd give me the fare to New York. What's that?" she interrupted herself, putting her hands to her ears.

"I think," said Monnie soberly and with satisfaction, "that Charles Eustace is giving that man a beating."

"Tea."

"Much, much later that night, when Kay was in bed and Monnie lay, very wide-awake and troubled, in the cot beside her, a voice came softly through the darkness.

"Monnie? You awake?"

"Monnie. I feel—just terrible about all this. You're sure Mother needn't know? I—honestly didn't mean to do anything wrong, only sometimes things just get so terrible. School—and being so poor—and everything."

"I know," Monnie's voice was very quiet. "Don't you suppose I have my moments of feeling it, too?"

Kay turned on the bedside light. "I can't stand flunking again. I can't stand going back with a younger class. What shall I do? It seems to me there's nothing ahead for any of us. He—Charles said maybe I could do something on the stage. I think I might."

Her voice, usually so sure and

Means Facing 2 Years And Heavy Fine

Found Guilty In $35,000 Fraud Connected With Lindy Kidnaping

WASHINGTON—Gaston B. Means and Norman T. Whitaker Tuesday were found guilty by a jury in the District of Columbia Supreme Court of conspiring to defraud Mrs. Evelyn Walsh McLean of $35,000 in a Lindbergh ransom hoax.

The crime is punishable by a maximum of two years' imprisonment and $10,000 fine.

The jury was out two hours and 20 minutes.

The jury retired with instructions from Justice O'Donoghue that both Means and Whitaker must be found either guilty or not guilty and that one of the defendants may not be found guilty and the other not guilty.

The jury was told by the court that the failure of Whitaker to take the witness stand in his own defense must not be counted against him.

Means during almost two days of testimony related a lurid tale of dealings with four men who he said arrogant, faltered. She looked very young, very small and frightened.

Monnie went over and took her hand. "Look, Kay, we have a job to do, both of us. We can't be quitters. We're O'Dares. That used to mean something in these parts. We've got Mother to think of. We've got our whole lives ahead of us. You're young. Some day you're going to look back on all this trouble and discontent and wonder why you weren't more patient. Because life is going to be wonderful for you, Kay. Wait and see."

"Do you really think so?" Her eyes were wide and brilliant.

"I'm going to try to help all I can," Monnie promised. Long after the younger sister fell asleep, she lay, stark awake, worrying, planning. This much was certain—she would have to find a way out for Kay.

More Taxes Asked By Mrs. Ferguson

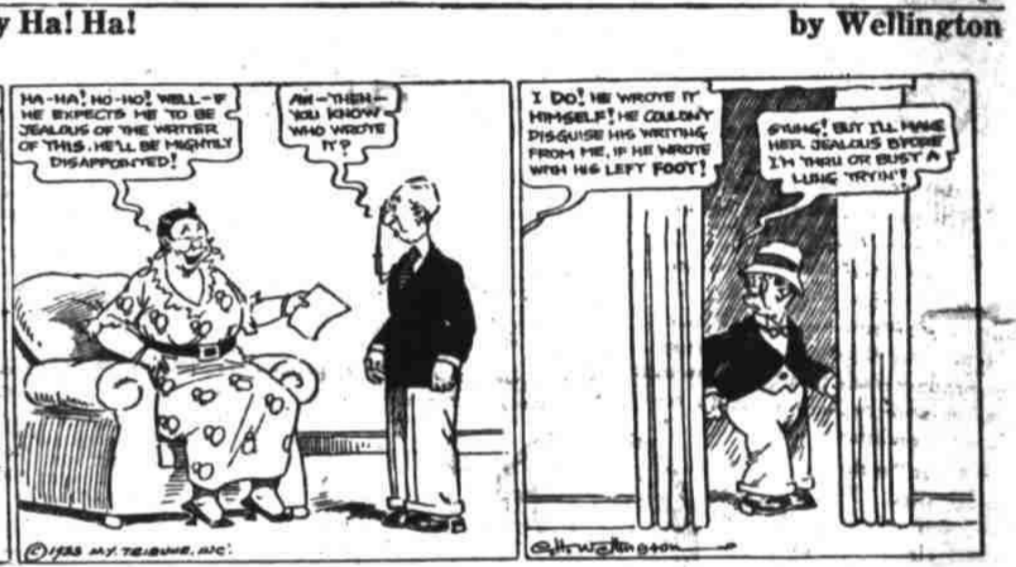

AUSTIN (AP)—Governor Ferguson Wednesday sent a message to the legislature suggesting it remain in session until sufficient revenue has been provided to meet obligations of the state and "balance the budget."

The governor stated "after we have collected all other taxes there will have to be collected on homes, farms and other real estate in counties and cities the sum of $30,000,000."

Bill Re-Appropriating Gas Tax To Retire Bonds Of Counties Is Signed

AUSTIN (AP)—Governor Ferguson Wednesday signed a bill to reappropriate one cent of the state gasoline tax during the next biennium to assume indebtedness of counties and road districts on state highways.

PITTSBURGH, (AP)—The Pittsburgh Pirates cut loose with their powerhouse attack in the early innings and then with Hal Smith, rookie right-hander pitching effective relief ball, defeated the Phillies, 6 to 4, to strengthen their hold on first place in the National league.

The Pirates scored three runs in the first inning off John Berry and although the Phillies took the lead with a four-run rally in the third, the Corsairs came back with two runs in their half of the frame and never were headed as Smith, who relieved French in the fourth held the Phils to two hits, both in the ninth.

The Phillies also lost the services of Bery during their big third inning. The young hurler fractured his right leg, when his spikes caught in the bag as he was crossing the home plate. He was carried from the field.

AUSTIN—Stricter enforcement of its own rules is fast becoming a pressing necessity in the Texas house of representatives.

Numerous rules, drawn for the purpose of expediting business and conducting proceedings in an orderly manner are daily broken, without protest.

No curb is placed upon what a member says. The constitution gives a member immunity for anything said on the floor in debate but that immunity only says that he may not be questioned "in any other place" for words spoken in debate. He could be reprimanded by the house itself.

The lie has been passed, motives of members supporting or opposing bills have been questioned and open inquiries about "trading out" have been voiced on the floor. Twice remarks have reached a stage that sent members at others with brandished fists.

The rule that members shall vote from their seats is so universally disregarded that it is impossible to tell the result of a vote from the flashing of red and blue lights on the electric voting machine. Members absent from their seats call out: "Vote me aye" or "Vote me no." Those oral votes have to be added to the machine totals before the result is determined. So usual has this confusing form of voting become that signals are used for it: "aye" vote. Two fingers mean "no."

It is only on a close bill when some member demands "enforcement of the rule" that members are forced to vote on the machine from their desks.

The democratic dropping of formal address and reference to fellow members by their first names, cordial enough at first, soon progressed to jocular adjectives, then more bitter ones.

Maintenance of order has become a sore problem for the presiding officer in the senate. Repeatedly speakers halt in the midst of an address to ask for order. The disorder is not hilarious, but small groups of senators gather about some other senators' desks and converse. The sergeant-at-arms has been kept busy in the waning days of the session.

Senators are supposed to be more sedate than house members, and senators take pride in that supposition. During warm days house members go without coats. Not so the senators.

The senate, however, has refused to put a curb on the length of debate. Some members, who openly expressed impatience at listening to the "long-winded members," tried to put a 10-minute rule into effect. Although the majority of the senate agreed with them they could not get a necessary two-thirds vote to put on the gag.

His Strange Vow
 A curious story, illustrating a strong man's capacity for self-sacrificing devotion to an ideal, came out of Wilmington, Del., a day or two ago.
 It concerns Melvin Train and his strange vow. Eleven years ago Train and a partner went into business, using funds loaned by friends and relatives. The partner abandoned, they committed suicide.

 Melvin Train made a secret vow to himself—that he would never speak a word until he was repaid every penny to the lenders.
 Recently Train mailed a letter containing a check for the last penny of the lost funds. Then he walked into a group of friends and spoke for the first time in eleven years. The friends were astonished. Many had thought he was a mute, never suspecting that he was silent by choice.
 "After the first year or so it wasn't so hard," Train said. "I just kept quiet and worked hard."
 This heroic method is not recommended for general use. Few men are qualified to fulfill such a vow. Besides, if everybody were as conscientious in discharging his obligations as Melvin Train, this would be a silent world.
 Train's policy of keeping quiet and working hard, however, is suitable for general adoption by the human family. Most of us talk too much and work too little.

TODAY and TOMORROW
 On Interpretation of Policy

Three months ago almost every one in Washington was too much talk and too little action. Today there is increasing restlessness because there has been so much action and so little talk to explain it. While the people of this country are still generally disposed to trust the President and to give his Administration the benefit of the doubt, they would like a fairer and clearer understanding of how his vast powers are to be used and how the various parts of the complex program fit together. The enlightenment of public opinion has not kept step with the evolution of policy. For there have been too few authoritative explanations of what the policy is. The Administration has been relying in too great degree upon its popularity, and in the rush of public business has neglected the task of building up an instructed public opinion.

The immediate consequences are perhaps most readily visible in relatively small things. There are, for example, the comments of some of the Washington interpretive writers who, finding themselves without a clear conception of the direction of policy, have fallen back upon an attempt to read the minds of the famous Brain Trust. Thus the country is being told what it must hope or fear on the basis of sentences extracted from Mr. Taggart's latest book or somebody's account what somebody heard Mr. Mealy or Mr. Berle say at dinner. And then there are the comments of many of the most reputable financial writers who have examined the farm bill or the inflation amendment and find that these measures contain powers which, if used by a lunatic, could wreck the country. This is to be sure, an extraordinarily naive way of interpreting a grant of powers for it must be obvious to every one that, even without these new laws, the powers of any President are ample to wreck the country if he used them in a lunatic way. Nevertheless, the new measures contain much that is unfamiliar and much, therefore, that needs to be explained. The education of which were operating at that time."

 Slattery, 46, is a bachelor. His greatest hobby is deep sea fishing, which he believes to be more strenuous than football.
 Coming back into the interior department, Slattery moved into a large office which he shares with an administrative assistant. He still enjoys talking about Theodore Roosevelt, with whom he was closely associated.
 Despite testimonials of friends and others who have followed his career, Slattery remains modest and retiring. He has difficulty as he talks with a "k" of hair which keeps falling down in his forehead.

MEXICAN BAND

Were Armed

Bassa, with a large band of well-armed followers has been operating in the sparsely settled region south of the border for some eight or nine years. It was reported he had considerable authority at Ocampo, a village about 150 miles below the border, where the cattlemen were believed to have been taken.

Telegrams signed by county officers and the American Legion here were sent today to Congressman R. E. Thomson in Washington, advising him of the seriousness of the tlemen's plight.

Washington Advised

Thomson advised that the state department had taken up the matter with American consular officers at Piedras Negras and Saitillo, 200 miles southeast of Ocampo and with Mexico City.

Information as to the whereabouts of the captives was received by the father from a Mexican judge at Boquilla. C. L. Hannold planned to organize a group of cattlemen from the Big Bend country to enter Mexico and try to rescue his son and Rollins, who was employed on the Hannold ranch.

Reports Delayed

Hannold and Rollins are widely known in the San Vicente section of the rugged Big Bend country.

NEW YORK

By James McMillan

Mortgage Companies—

The State Insurance Superintendent has protected New York mortgage companies from going on the rocks June 1. His ruling that these companies can only pay out what they receive—which abolishes the guarantee feature on their bonds—has averted several striking collapses.

The banks are all for the system because mortgage company bankruptcies would smash the value of their own real estate holdings. But bond holders are being told by their lawyers that the move was unconstitutional. The constitution forbids any state to take action which results in the abrogation of contracts.

A test case is being considered by a large philanthropic organization whose income has suffered severely since the ruling took effect.

The organization is expected to win a more favorable hearing than an individual with nothing at stake but his own money.

Gold— A mining company in the middle west digs up about ten thousand dollars' worth of gold a week as a by-product.

The president of the company has written the Treasury to say that he has no intention of turning the gold over to the government. So far the Treasury hasn't replied.

The company is planning a test by buying goods abroad and offering the gold in payment. The foreign seller would then have title to the gold and the Treasury would have an awkward decision to make as to whether he would be allowed to export it.

This gold hoarding business is apt to stir up more trouble for the government than anything it has tried yet. There are several gentlemen in New York who intend to make themselves as much of a nuisance as possible. They can only be discouraged from meddling with the machinery by an unmistakable sock on the jaw.

Financing—

The government has quietly added a billion dollars to its total debt since the first of the year by issuing more notes and bills than maturities called for.

Nobody seems to be worried about it except the banks. They will stop viewing with alarm in a hurry as soon as the Federal Reserve starts taking governments off their hands.

New York is still able to peddle ideas to the Treasury Department. The original plan for a public works bond issue made no provision for taxes to pay interest and amortization. Then the banks got busy passing the word about what might happen to government credit unless specific provision for retirement was made. The tax idea started from there.

Public Works—

Steel companies are worried by reports that road-building will get the lion's share of public works appropriations. They don't cut in much in that pie. They are set for an aggressive private campaign on behalf of building construction.

Textiles—

Sign of the times: Textile manufacturers are feeling so chipper these days that the Federation of Jewish charities is going to tackle them this month for contributions to next Fall's campaign.

Motors—

A lot of the heavy buying of General Motors stock has been one by Du Pont interests. They are aiming to get in a position where they won't have to argue with anybody to find out who is boss.

Corporations which buy fleets of cars have helped influence Ford to try out a new model. Several of them swung to his competitors because the present Ford cost too much to run. The new one won't.

South America—

Powerful New York interests are working on plans to meet the British challenge in South America. There are important elements in Argentina who don't like the British.

If we would agree to purchase one per cent of our annual total consumption from them we could get a reciprocal trade agreement which would cut the ground from under the British effort at monopoly.

We could also counter-attack effectively in Brazil. The United States consumes about 80 per cent of the Brazilian coffee crop and that could easily be used as a lever to compel the Brazilians to purchase from us. In that case Brazil could be built into a useful buffer against Argentine domination over the rest of South America.

Health Of Calles

ENSENADA, Baja Cal., Mexico (UP)—Former President Plutarco Elias Calles is in good health despite rumors he was critically ill, his secretary said.

Rumors of Calles' poor health were heard after it became known Dr. Gaston Melo had been called back to Ensenada.

"The general likes Dr. Melo's company," the secretary said.

Mrs. R. L. Carpenter has returned from San Angelo where she underwent an operation. She is doing nicely.

Administration Virtually Gives Up Hope Of Federal Legislation Governing Nation's Oil Industry

WASHINGTON (UP)—Hope for enactment of legislation to aid the oil and coal industries at this session of congress virtually was abandoned Wednesday by administration officials.

Interior department officials explained the rush of legislative business appeared certain to smother all efforts to obtain passage of separate coal and oil aid bills.

After lengthy consideration, the secretary has become convinced the so-called industry control bill will not meet the needs of the oil industry.

He believes conditions in the oil industry require immediate and drastic attention if waste and price wars are to be halted.

Most of the benefits from a Chamber of Commerce are intangible. In other words, they are of such nature that you cannot immediately put your finger on a specific sum of money its work has brought you. Every person benefits directly or indirectly from its work, whether every individual is to know exactly how such benefits are created or not.

For instance, the Chamber of Commerce is the organization here which set up the relief committee that had to be organized before one cent of federal relief funds could be used in the county for relief of unemployed men. Those men who have been provided work from the federal relief funds would, therefore, certainly not "fight" the Chamber of Commerce.

It hasn't been four months since we heard individuals among our business and professional men say that we ought to "turn back" the convention to the W.T.C.C. and let it be held at some other place "because we can't handle it." Most of those men themselves worked hard on the convention before it was over, and now are glad they did.

That goes to show that we do not know what we can do until we try. There are a lot of things that might be done, even with cotton and oil worth practically nothing, that would be of genuine benefit to the people of the town.

Big Spring often has been accused by her neighbors of being a town whose people cannot get together and work together, that we are continually at odds among ourselves. This convention ought to purge the minds of everybody of that erroneous opinion.

Another thing the convention showed was that it is vitally necessary for a town to have a Chamber of Commerce well enough supported to handle such community jobs. Our Chamber of Commerce has been kicked and cuffed, maligned and slandered, and it has, of course, made mistakes.

But we ought to think of this: a Chamber of Commerce is worth to a town what it puts into it. The fewer members it has providing financial support the lower is its value to the community. The fewer members it has the less representative it is of the entire community. The more members it has the more useful and powerful it can be and the more representative it is of all the people.

Ninety-nine out of 100 persons of open mind would support the objectives of the average Chamber of Commerce provided they are properly informed as to what those objectives are.

HOME TOWN—

Big Spring is capable of entertaining large conventions that prompted The Herald and a number of citizens to work so hard last year to get a showing in Sweetwater sufficient to bring the 1933 convention here.

Third, Big Spring has been in the press of the country more in the past three months than any other town in the country. As often said in this column, datelines in newspapers do not alone build towns or improve conditions within them. They are of no value nowadays and should not be used for the purpose of getting "prospectors" to locate here and go in business or seek to earn a living. We've got more people now, just like other towns have, than can make a living satisfactorily. But the kind of publicity received because we entertained the convention is of value in forming in the public mind a more definite idea of the importance of Big Spring, and the real position that the city should occupy among the cities of Texas.

Fourth: when we staged this convention in such efficient manner, in a way that has brought and continues to bring scores of commitments from men and women throughout West Texas, we showed just what can be done when the town gets together on a project.

Henry Ford Dearborn, Mich.

May 15, 1933

Time and again I am told—by my own organization and by others—that I penalize myself by quality.

Friendly critics protest our putting into the Ford V-8 what they call "twenty-year steel." They say such quality is not necessary; the public does not expect it; and that the public does not know the difference anyway.

But I know the difference. I know that the car a man sees is not the car he drives—he drives the car which the engineer sees. The car which is seen, comprises beauty of design, color and attractive accessories—all desirable, of course. The best evidence that we think so is that they are all found on the Ford V-8.

But these are not the car. The car proper, which is the basis of all the rest, is the type of engine and its reliability; the structure of chassis and body, ruggedly durable; the long thought and experiment given to safety factors; the steady development of comfort, convenience and economy. These make the car.

A car can be built that will last two or three years. But we have never built one. We want the basic material of our car to be as dependable the day it is discarded as the day it is bought. Ford cars built 15 years ago are still on the road. It costs more to build a durable car—but two items we do not skip are cost and conscience. A great many things could "get by"—the public would never know the difference. But we would know.

The new Ford V-8 is a car that I endorse without any hesitancy. I know what is in it. I trust our whole thirty years' reputation with it. It is even better than our previous V-8. It is larger, more rugged and mechanically a better job all round.

I readily say this in an advertisement because I know the car will back it up.

Widow Contents Mate Killed Unnecessarily, By Officers, Files Suit
HOUSTON (UP)—Mrs. Floyd E. Sawyer, whose husband was slain six months ago by police called to the house in which he had barricaded himself, asked the city council to pay her $25,000 for the shell-shocked war veteran's death.

Officers were called after Sawyer attacked several persons with a butcher knife. The petition charged the officers with using more force than was necessary in that they failed to resort to the use of tear gas bombs to dislodge him before shooting him to death.
