EVERYBODY'S BABY

Allen Howland/Reporter-Telegram

'The three of us'

The McClure family was on hand for the press briefing which launched promotion of "Everybody's Baby: The Rescue of Jessica McClure," in Hollywood in early April. Her parents looked on as Jessica charmed the press corps with her disarming smile.

McClures, like others, will watch as family

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

This evening, viewers of "Everybody's Baby: The Rescue of Jessica McClure" will remember where they were and what they were doing when they first heard of a toddler trapped in a well. Ironically the one person who has no memory of the ordeal is the little girl in the heart of the spotlight.

Jessica McClure and her parents, Chip and Cissy, like millions of other Americans, will gather in their living room for a quiet time, "just the three of us," watching the telefilm.

The McClures' expectations of the movie are not too high. Of the clips they have already seen, "Frankly, we're not all that impressed," Chip said Friday.

While the great pains taken to ensure factual accuracy are evident, "the casting is all wrong," he said in a brief telephone interview from the couple's Greenwood home.

Others whose roles in the rescue will be recreated in the movie are more generous in their preview appraisal. And perhaps with good reason.

Paramedic Robert O'Donnell, portrayed by Whip Hubley, is looking forward to seeing the entire film. Hubley's performance was singled out by Associated Press television critic Kathryn Baker as the "most touching" portrayal in the film.

John Kander, co-executive producer of the project, echoed Baker's praise in a telephone interview from Los Angeles this week. "Hubley did a phenomenal job," of bringing O'Donnell's character to life.

Kander's friend Midland oilman Bobby Holt said that despite "a little flair" in some scenes, the production is a "very accurate" recreation of the events in the backyard of 3309 Tanner Drive in mid-October 1987. Holt previewed a copy of the film without titles or full musical score earlier this week, before sending the cassette on to another close friend, President George Bush.

Midland is "immediately identifiable" in the film, said Holt, who was at the rescue site for the final 40 of the 58½ hours that the eyes of the world focused on the Tall City.

Paramedics honored for role in girl's rescue

Recognition continues to be heaped on Midland and its residents as a result of the celebrated October 1987 rescue of Jessica McClure.

Friday, paramedics Steve Forbes and Robert O'Donnell were in Houston to accept the KTRK-TV's annual honorary Jefferson Award for community service on behalf of all the citizens who helped in the rescue.

The regional award, sanctioned by the American Institute for Public Service, has been presented annually since 1973, but the 1989 award marked the first time that KTRK's Gulf Coast area award has gone to anyone outside the Houston area. The AIPS award is named for the third U.S. president, Thomas Jefferson.

Past honorary winners have included television medicine man Dr. Red Duke; Leon Goldstein, founder of the Crime Stoppers program; and Rhoda Tomasco, founder of the Sunshine Kids program for children with cancer.

O'Donnell has been singled out for another honor, serving on the six-member panel which will award the 1989 "G.I. Joe Search for Real American Heroes."

"When I first heard about it, I thought somebody was playing a joke," O'Donnell said.

But after finding out about the award and the others on the selection committee "I feel very honored," he said.

The panel will screen 50 nominations — one from each state — and select 10 young winners who will be invited to the White House.

Masses defy China's martial law initiative

BEIJING (AP) — Soldiers on Sunday set up roadblocks to Beijing's center and occupied its train station, but hundreds of thousands of students defied martial law and remained in Tiananmen Square despite fears of an army crackdown.

A Chinese source said 60,000 to 70,000 troopers moved into the city center by subway and followed connecting tunnels to the walled palace, the history museum and the Great Hall of the People on three sides of the vast plaza. The subway was closed to regular traffic as of noon Saturday.

There was no outward sign of the reported troop presence and it could not be confirmed.

Inside the square in central Beijing, the sun rose on a triumphant but weary and bedraggled crowd of at least 200,000 students, medical workers and ordinary citizens. The students spent the night sitting in rows with gauze wound around their mouths and noses for protection against a possible tear gas attack.

Many people simply lay down on the stone pavement and tried to sleep. Around the square and on roads throughout the city, citizens barricaded the way with buses, trucks and anything available.

Thousands also surrounded tanks and trucks filled with soldiers at several points in the surburbs, immobilizing them.

"The people are strong," an elderly woman marveled as the long night ended peacefully.

But soon after, five army helicopters swooped twice over the square as they did repeatedly Saturday, reminding the protesters the standoff was not over. The students waved and cheered defiantly.

At 4:30 a.m. (3:30 p.m. EDT Saturday) a plane passed overhead, too high to be identified. Commercial planes do not fly over Beijing.

"The danger is not over," said a medical student who was helping care for about 3,000 of the students who weakened by a hunger strike. They ended the strike Saturday, saying they needed their strength if troops came.

They also said the strike had lost its meaning because the government has no conscience.

Chinese studying in Texas picket Houston consulate

HOUSTON (AP) — About 800 Chinese students studying in Texas and other supporters marched in front of the Chinese consulate Saturday to show support for students back home.

Carrying signs in English and Chinese calling for the resignation of Premier Li Peng, the students marched about two miles in 90 degree weather from Hermann Park to the building where Chinese Consul Yao Xian Ni and other Chinese officials live.

Several students were told they could meet with Ni, but when they arrived at the building they were told the consul was not in. The students were demanding to meet with Ni and to fax a letter with their demands to the premier's office.

The demonstration, one of many held throughout the country, included students from Houston universities as well as the University of Texas at Austin and Texas A&M University.

"We're trying to show our solidarity with the students over there," said Fan Lu, who just completed his doctorate in physics at Rice University in Houston. "We support the students' demands for democracy. I'm overwhelmed with what's going on over there. I think those people rose the consciousness of all the Chinese people."

"This is something that really amazes me. The students really want a democratic system. It took really brave people to start it. For so many brave people to show up is overwhelming," said Lu.

Explosion, fire shake refinery

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — An explosion and subsequent fire erupted at the Coastal States Crude Gathering Co. refinery Saturday afternoon sending an undetermined number of people to local hospitals, authorities said.

Karen Mitchell, a spokeswoman for the Corpus Christi Police Department, said the fire was under control.

"The fire apparently is not nearly that bad," Ms. Mitchell said. "They said the wind is blowing the right way so they don't have to evacuate anybody."

Officials from Coastal States could not be reached by telephone for information on the fire.

"In the first call they said a man broke his wrist so we sent an ambulance but said nothing about an explosion," Ms. Mitchell said. "Then they called back a little later and said they had several injuries, about five, and that's the last I heard."

Ms. Mitchell said some of the injured were burned while others suffered broken bones.

A spokesman at Memorial Medical Center said four men were admitted for burn injuries. He said doctors were still assessing the injuries although two appeared to be minor.

Ruben Rodriguez, a spokesman for the Nueces County Sheriff's Department, said they were called about 1:50 p.m. to help control traffic outside the refinery. The refinery is located just outside the city limits north of town near the ship channel.

Refinery Terminal, which contracts with area plants for fire protection, were called to battle the fire, a spokeswoman said. Two Corpus Christi Fire Department units also were sent to the scene, Ms. Mitchell said.

Marcos' condition remains critical

HONOLULU (AP) — Former Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos remained in very critical condition Saturday as he drifted in and out of consciousness from a variety of serious ailments, a hospital administrator said.

Marcos, 71, is suffering from kidney and heart failure, pneumonia and bacterial infections.

"Marcos' physicians indicated he is continuing to rally," said Eugene Tiwanak, assistant administrator at St. Francis Medical Center in a briefing Saturday.

"The doctors stress, however, that his condition remains very critical and the prognosis is poor," he said.

The deposed president was more responsive Saturday than on Friday, Tiwanak said.

"He's alert enough to understand and follow instructions relative to his care," and communicates through hand signals because a tube in his throat prevents him from speaking, he said.

Marcos is hooked up to a kidney dialysis machine and is on a respirator to help him breathe, Tiwanak said.

Flood-related death toll increases to nine

HOUSTON (AP) — Officials Saturday recovered the body of a missing truck driver raising the state death toll from storms and flooding to at least nine.

Liberty County officials found the body of Jimmy Walker, 52, after dragging Reese Creek, north of Dayton, a sheriff's department dispatcher said. Walker, whose body was found about 10:15 a.m., drowned in floodwaters Thursday.

A 20-month-old boy was pronounced dead Friday after being found unconscious in the flooded lower story of his uncle's house in Dayton Lake Estates, near the swollen Trinity River in Liberty County.

Duane Edward Cameron was declared dead at Kersting Hospital in Liberty. Authorities believe he drowned while his uncle, Joseph Hinson, a retired oil-field worker, was upstairs.

Liberty County Sheriff O.J. Stewart said Hinson did not realize his nephew had wandered from the top level, where they had taken refuge from floodwaters.

Rain runoff brought Lake Houston to record levels and spilled into the San Jacinto River, prompting evacuation Friday of residents in Highlands, Banana Bend and other communities south of the lake dam. Waterways that caused most of Thursday's flooding, including Greens and White Oak bayous and Cypress Creek in Harris County, were receding.

The National Weather Service predicted partly cloudy skies for the weekend with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms Sunday.

Lake Houston in Harris County peaked at 49.6 feet Friday morning, the highest on record. The lake reached 49.4 feet after a 1979 flood, according to the Harris County Flood Control District.

Downstream from the lake, the San Jacinto River, on its southerly path to Galveston Bay, rose about 10 feet out of its banks by late Friday.

Liberty County residents along the Trinity River were still contending with the swollen river, said Roy Pruitt, a spokesman for the sheriff's department.

"We're still having flooding problems because it (the river) hasn't crested yet," Pruitt said Saturday. "It's at 29 feet and it's supposed to crest tomorrow afternoon at a little above 30 feet."

The river is not expected to crest until Sunday because floodwater accumulated in the Dallas area earlier in the week is just now making its way downstream, he said.

The Trinity River in Grand Prairie is expected to continue a very slow fall but should remain above the flood stage of 29 feet through the weekend and in Dallas, the river is expected to fall slowly but remain above the 30 feet flood stage through next week, the weather service said Saturday.

Senate approves open container bill

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Senate on Saturday approved a watered-down bill to restrict open containers in cars, as the bill sponsor said the "mamas" face a long effort to toughen laws against drinking while driving in the face of resistance from the "bubbas."

As passed by the Senate on a voice vote, Senate Bill 295, which Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo, sponsored, would make it illegal for a driver who has been convicted of driving while intoxicated or vehicular manslaughter to allow an open container in the passenger compartment.

The bill also would remove the requirement that a police officer see the driver drinking. The Legislature in 1987 made it illegal to drink while driving, but police say the law is hard to enforce since drivers can pass the drink to a passenger.

Zaffirini started with a bill that would prohibit any passengers from having open containers, but it took her seven drafts before she got the votes to get the bill out of the Senate State Affairs Committee.

"What we did was focus on the problem driver — the person convicted of driving while intoxicated or involuntary manslaughter," she said.

The bill goes on to the House, where she hopes the amended version will get a quick committee review and House passage in the week remaining in the session.

"When it's this controversial, every step forward counts and this will be a long and slow process," she said.

"Some people look at legislation from the perspective of Bubba," she said. "I happen to see legislation from the perspective of Mama."

In other action, the Senate approved a bill that would increase the number of pregnant women and children eligible for Medicaid health care.

House Bill 1345 would raise the Medicaid family income cap to 130 percent of the federal poverty level for pregnant women and infants up to age 1 and extends the age of poverty-level children covered by Medicaid from the current 3 years to 4 years in 1990 and 6 years by 1991.

The bill, which goes back to the House with amendments, also would provide a 7.5 percent increase in payments over two years to doctors and hospitals, which Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, the Senate sponsor, said could help financially-strapped rural hospitals.

"We're trying to recover from some of the desperate cuts we had to make when we reduced arbitrarily physicians and hospital services by 10 percent (in 1986)," Brooks said.

House and Senate conferees have budgeted $102.1 million for Medicaid increases.

With another bill the Senate passed Friday that increases the income eligibility cap for Medicaid nursing services, Brooks said the increases constitute "a very significant assistance to providing long-tem services as well as other alternative services."

The Senate also approved a bill that would create a Rural Economic Development Commission to study and make recommendations on ways to revitalize rural areas and expand agribusinesses.

House Bill 438 by Rep. Dick Waterfield, R-Canadian, and Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, would use Texas Department of Commerce staff to review the possibilities for manufacturing, particularly in food and fiber.

"A lot of people have come up with all these wild ideas," Sims said. "It couldn't hurt to have someone who's not too involved in it take a look at it."

The amended bill goes back to the House.

Suspect in Peso scam selling new investment

DALLAS (AP) — Authorities in nine states are investigating an investment offered by a Texas man already indicted in connection with a peso investment program that allegedly bilked customers of as much as $150 million, a newspaper reported Saturday.

William Wayne Gray, who is free on $15,000 bond on a state securities charge, for several weeks has been selling interest in a Palm Desert, Calif.-based silver coin investment called Santa Rosa Sales and Marketing, one of his lawyers told The Dallas Morning News.

"I don't know that much about it, but to me it sounds like a multilevel marketing deal, which is not what he needs to be involved with at this time," said the lawyer, Doug Wilshusen of Arlington. He is representing Gray of suburban Grapevine in several civil lawsuits stemming from the peso investment program.

The program also is under investigation in Utah, Iowa, Georgia, California and Mississippi. In Mississippi, three Santa Rosa brokers were arrested last month on charges of violating state consumer protection laws.

The program is based upon the purchase and recruitment of other buyers for the 1-ounce U.S. Silver Eagle coins sold in lots of three for $80. The program offers resort memberships and car financing plans for buyers who recruit enough new investors and put in enough money.

Meanwhile, investors in the peso deal have complained that cashier's checks sent to Gray's firm, WWG Financial Services Inc., before it ceased operations in February are being cashed in New Jersey, Texas and Jakarta, Indonesia.

They contend the checks should have been returned when the peso program collapsed with the indictments of Gray and his partner, Robert Leslie Johnson of Tulsa, Okla., on charges of failure to register with state securities officials.

The investors say the checks were cashed in April and bear a stamp reading "WWG Investments" and the signature "William W. Gray" and signatures of other individuals.

Gray's criminal defense attorney, Frank Jackson of Dallas, said Gray believes any signature of his name is a forgery and his client knows nothing about the checks.

Federal and state investigators say the peso investment program, which offered returns of up to 12 percent a week, actually was a "Ponzi" scheme in which "earnings" came solely from continual recruitment of new investors.

Investigators from the Texas Securities Commission served subpoenas Friday seeking business records and information on WWG and on Santa Rosa Sales and Marketing at the offices of Go Marketing, an Irving business operated by Gray's associates.

The subpoenas named William H. Haas, Louis Ontibeorz and Phil L. Myers, all former peso brokers.

None of the three could be reached for comment.

Wright supporters fear his days are numbered

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The historic televised hearing of the defense of Jim Wright against charges of ethical improprieties may well be his last stand as speaker of the House.

Wright

With support for Wright in a leadership role rapidly eroding, even his staunchest supporters now concede privately that Wright's days may be numberd after the Tuesday hearing.

A high-profile confrontation between Richard J. Phelan, the committee's special counsel, and the legal luminaries on Wright's five-member defense team, which includes the legendary Clark Clifford and Houston lawyer Stephen D. Susman, is expected.

Some Capitol Hill insiders think the session, scheduled for six to 8 hours, could rival in drama that provided by prosecutor John Keker and defense lawyer Brendan Sullivan in Lt. Col. Oliver North's trial on charges stemming from the Iran-contra affair.

The Wright arguments will take place in the Rayburn House Office Building, site of some of the congressional Iran-contra hearings and the Watergate hearings that helped topple President Nixon.

The hearing room will accomodate up to 200 people, including members of the House Committee on Standards of Official conduct, its staff, Wright's defense team, reporters, television technicians, photographers, and a handful of American citizens.

Wright will not appear at the hearing.

His lawyers will argue for dismissal of charges that Wright accepted $145,000 in illegal gifts from his friend George Mallick, a Fort Worth businessman, and that the speaker evaded House limits on outside income through bulk sales of a paperback book he wrote.

There will be no witnesses and no new evidence allowed to be introduced at the hearing.

Wright's lawyers will have two hours to present their case and to rebut Phelan, who also has been granted two hours to outline the ethics panel's decision to charge Wright with 69 counts of violating House ethics rules.

The 12 members of the panel — 6 Democrats and 6 Republicans — will then have 10 minutes each to question the lawyers on both sides.

One of Wright's lawyer, William C. Oldaker, said Friday that the defense team will meet Monday to decide who will spearhead the defense and to map strategy.

The ethics panel is expected to rule on the motions for dismissal on Wednesday.

Rep. Charles W. Stenholm, D-Tex., a Wright supporter, said the hearing will be crucial to Wright's future as speaker: "It's got to stop raining...(Wright) needs some victories."

The odds are against a clear victory by Wright. Oldaker already has argued against charging Wright before the ethics panel, but could not dissuade it from filing the 69 charges Wright now faces.

If the ethics panel does not dismiss the charges against Wright, the speaker either will call it quits or ask the committee to decide immediately whether Wright is guilty and what punishment it will recommend, according to a senior Wright adviser.

Wright's supporters have launched a drive to raise $1 million to help pay his mounting legal expenses.

Wright's legal team includes Clark Clifford, the former Defense secretary and counselor to Democratic presidents; Stephen Susman, a top civil litigator in Houston; Susman's associate, Neal Manne, a former senior U.S. Senate staffer; Rep. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., and Oldaker.

Clifford is considered Bernard Baruch's successor as this century's most durable adviser to Democratic presidents. Clifford served Harry Truman as a special counsel in the late 1940s. He was John F. Kennedy's attorney. And he provided informal counsel to Lyndon Johnson and Jimmy Carter.

Widely regarded as one of Washington's toughest political strategists, Clifford will operate behind the scene.

At 82, he remains an elegant, courtly fixture in the nation's capital.

Officials withdraw workers comp compromise

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Labor officials upset with the prospect of deductibles on workers compensation policies Saturday withdrew their support from the fragile compromise the Senate advanced a day earlier.

Union leaders thus found themselves working against the same workers compensation reform bill that business leaders oppose for different reasons, but Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said Saturday he was confident the Senate will approve the version that emerged Friday evening on a 16-12 vote of the committee of the whole.

The Senate in committee voted 20-8 to recommend the bill's approval by the full Senate, and Hobby said he expected to get the 21st vote that is needed to bring up the bill for debate Monday.

"I understand labor's concern, however we have a good bill," said Hobby, who took the unusual step Friday evening of listing himself as a sponsor and engaging in the debate.

Joe Gunn, chairman of the United Labor Legislative Committee of the Texas AFL-CIO, said the bill had the support of labor until Hobby agreed to allow policy deductibles, which Gunn said could subject employees to pressure not to file claims.

Gunn said he felt workers had been "double crossed" and said he would ask senators to oppose floor consideration of the substitute.

"I was working the floor for a complete package, with the clear understanding that all the parts would make up an agreed bill, or there is no agreed bill," he said.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, a leader of the late negotiations, said he was undaunted by such charges in the last two weeks of the legislative session. He said the mood in the Senate is to approve a bill so a House and Senate conference committee could at least try to work out the considerable differences between the two versions.

"I understand labor's concern about that particular issue, but we have to keep moving," Montford said. "If we come off track now, I think it would be a bad mistake. We need to get to conference and see what we can get out of conference."

Montford helped rewrite the bill in four days of backroom negotiating sessions after Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, presented a bill that got out of subcommittee on a 4-3 vote.

After Hobby brought in a new team of negotiators to write a bill with a broader base of support, business leaders, in a turnabout, said they could accept Glasgow's version.

"I never saw a bill improve so much so fast," Hobby joked.

Teenager gets 50 years in slaying

RICHMOND (AP) — A 17-year-old, baby-faced killer was sentenced to 50 years in prison after pleading guilty to murder in the slaying last July of a high school football player for the stereo in his pickup truck.

Timothy Acklen, who had transferred to Clements High School last year from Crowley, La., showed no emotion as he pleaded guilty Friday to the July 14 murder of Paul Brandon Elledge, 17.

Acklen and James Garcia, 17, also a classmate of Elledge's, were charged with capital murder after giving statements to the Fort Bend County Sheriff's Department just hours after the crime. Authorities said they detailed a plot to murder the promising Clements athlete in an attempt to steal his $2,400 truck stereo.

Acklen's acceptance of the plea bargain meant a capital murder count against him would be dropped. He will have to serve at least a quarter of his sentence before becoming eligible for parole, however, because of a deadly-weapon finding attached to his guilty plea.

If convicted of capital murder, Acklen would have received an automatic life sentence because he was considered a juvenile at the time of the crime and had been certified to stand trial as an adult.

Authorities said Acklen shot Elledge in the head with a .38-caliber revolver taken from his father's dresser drawer.

Acklen has expressed no remorse for the killing, according to prosecutors and the victim's father, Ben Elledge.

After their son was sentenced, Acklen's parents left State District Judge Charles Dickerson's courtroom in tears.

"I wanted him to be a monster," Ben Elledge said of Acklen's father. "(But) he's a good man. He's a caring and suffering man. He's lost his son maybe in a worse way than I lost mine."

Texas-New Mexico line tough to map out

EL PASO (AP) — The Texas-New Mexico state line is as crooked as a mile is long, say homeowners who live along the boundary, and everyone concerned has a tough time keeping it straight.

Few people know exactly where the state line is — although many mistakenly believe it's the Rio Grande. The state line from Anthony, Texas, to the Mexican border actually follows the course the river flowed in 1850.

But unless you look for the brass markers that lie covered in weeds in cotton fields, or the markers along various roads that cross the line, you may not know if you're standing in Texas or New Mexico.

William Lankford is a self-taught expert on such matters. He lives at 900 Dulcinea, one of the most ambiguous streets in the area, as state-line boundaries go.

It's in an affluent neighborhood west of El Paso Country Club and just east of the Rio Grande levee.

Lankford's house, which has a Texas address, is the only house on his street completely in New Mexico.

An El Paso city monument street marker lies in the middle of the cul-de-sac in front of his driveway, marking where Texas and New Mexico meet.

"It's the most frustrating thing," Lankford said. "On my good days, it's fascinating."

Lankford said it is a fight every year at tax time when he mails in his New Mexico taxes.

"They keep sending back my New Mexico payments for taxes, telling me I don't have to pay them. I tell them I do, and mail them right back to them," Lankford said.

"I realize that one of these years through some computer discovery I could go to jail for not paying back taxes. That's why I insist that they take mine."

Lankford says his address causes more confusion. New Mexico will not issue him a driver's license with a Texas address.

Neighbors tell him to get a Santa Teresa, N.M., post office box.

"It was suggested to me so I could have a New Mexico address. I should have two addresses, so when I sent in my New Mexico taxes, they would be less confused and would not send it back to me," Lankford said.

"You can go to any post office here in town and rent a box, and you can have mail delivered to your home. Many, many businesses do it, but I don't want to go out to Santa Teresa. It's seven or eight miles from my house."

Skeeter Miller, owner of the State Line Restaurant on Sunland Park Drive between the race track and Doniphan, said he had trouble getting water from the city 12 years ago. He took his case to the Texas Supreme Court.

Seventy-five percent of the restaurant property lies in Texas. But the restaurant building is in New Mexico.

The Supreme Court ordered El Paso City Public Service Board in 1978 to supply water to the restaurant, since it had furnished water to customers outside the city limits in the past.

Bennie Wheatley lives on Don Quixote Street in New Mexico, in the same neighborhood as Lankford. She said her biggest problem with living close to the Texas state line came last fall when the local phone companies changed her phone number and service without her consent.

Lou Belmont, spokesman for U.S. West Communications — the regional holding company of Mountain Bell, Northwestern Bell and Pacific Northwestern Bell — said the company converted 6,000 New Mexico residents in November from Southwestern Bell to Mountain Bell.

"The state line became the service boundary. Southwestern Bell doesn't serve customers across the state line anymore," Belmont said.

"That entire New Mexico area of Anthony, Chaparral, Sunland Park and Santa Teresa was assumed by U.S. West Communications."

If your home is near the state line and catches fire, you had better know who to call, or be prepared to watch it burn.

Firefighters on El Paso's west side always carry a map showing where the state line runs.

"If the barn is in (Texas) and the house is out, we'd probably protect the barn," said R.G. Harris, deputy chief fire marshal of the El Paso Fire Department.

The dilemma arises from the rules of liability insurance the department carries on each firefighter, he said.

'Midland Spirit' gets recognition

From Staff Reports

In October 1987, while traveling in Africa, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Cocke of South Padre Island read and were inspired by "Time" magazine's account of the rescue of Jessica McClure.

When they returned home, they initiated an effort to commemorate the event, generously offering the city of Midland $5,000 for that purpose.

The Cockes' offer was referred to the Chamber of Commerce which in turn set up a committee to solicit ideas for a suitable memorial, select one and see it completed.

Among several worthy ideas, two seemed particularly commendable, according to committee member Darlene Gifford: One, a bronze bas-relief celebrating the volunteer spirit exemplified by Jessica's rescue; the other, a "community spirit award" to be conferred annually or biennially by the city to another where volunteer effort and community spirit had been specially manifest in a recent event or program.

The award, originally proposed by Mayor Carroll Thomas, was envisioned to not only encourage volunteerism but would generate recognition and goodwill for Midland throughout the country.

The bronze sculpture commissioned from local artist Mary Griffith was cast and erected on the south wall near the main entrance to Midland Center and unveiled last fall on the first anniversary of the rescue. At the same ceremony, establishment of the Midland Spirit Award was announced by the mayor.

Although virtually all the expense of Mrs. Griffith's work, including casting and mounting, was covered by the Cockes' initial gift and subsequent donations — including $3,000 from the Midland Jaycees — additional funds are still being sought for the final $713 in remaining debts and to finance the installation of a flower bed to enhance the appearance of the display.

In addition, a new task force will be established to seek out financing and administer the Community Spirit award program proposed by Thomas.

Ms. Gifford explained that unless otherwise designated, funds received will first be applied to the remaining debt, second to defray the estimated $2,000 cost of the flower bed and then to fund the Midland Spirit Award.

Renewed attention on Midland and its volunteer spirit as a result of today's airing of "Everybody's Baby: The Rescue of Jessica McClure," are likely to assist in the fund-raising effort.

Contributions should be directed to "Midland Spirit", P.O. Box 1890, Midland, Texas, 79702. Ms. Gifford encourages volunteers interested in donating time to the flower bed project or serving on the awards task force to contact her at 684-1975.

MOVIE

Fire Chief James Roberts, played in the film by veteran character actor Pat Hingle, said he has "not seen the movie in its entirety." He declined to offer a personal review of the movie because he's "too close to it to give an opinion.

"My only concern is that it is good for Midland, Texas," the chief said.

A sampling of national critics' reactions indicates that Roberts need not worry; the positive image of the city's volunteer spirit shines through in all of them.

In Friday's edition, Monica Collins of USA Today wrote "It's also a story of assurance that a community can pull together. In this splintered world, that's comforting to remember."

Ms. Baker of AP said "the real-life folks in Midland-Odessa who are depicted in the film ought to be pretty happy with the results, since they're portrayed as good-hearted, right-thinking people ready to do absolutely anything to save someone else's baby."

"One feels ennobled anew, thanks to the simple grace of a story that was filmed in Hollywood, but with Midland in mind," wrote Dallas Morning News television critic Ed Bark.

Holt, one of the few locals to have seen the whole movie, albeit not a final print — those were delivered to ABC Wednesday — called the picture "very moving" and said it "showed the unity of the community very well."

Chief Roberts' other hope for the movie is that it "finally closes the final chapter" on the whole story.

He's not alone.

Eighty-four percent of those participating in a non-scientific phone-in poll on KTPX-TV (Channel 9, the local NBC affiliate) Thursday agreed that "the media has made too much out of the rescue of Jessica McClure."

While that point remains open to debate, KMID-TV (Channel 2, the local ABC affiliate) will give Midlanders three more hours of coverage tonight, leading into the two-hour made-for-TV movie with an hour-long live info-tainment special.

One venue for the special will be a "celebration for the rescue workers," hosted by Midland police Sgt. Andy Glasscock.

However, many of the principal characters in the re-enactment said this week they have no special plans and will watch at home with family. Included on that list with the McClures are Chief Roberts, paramedics O'Donnell and Steve Forbes and police information officer Cpl. Jim White.

Carolyn Henry, the victim's assistance worker who worked closely with the family during the ordeal and will be portrayed by Oscar-winner Patty Duke, also will "be watching at home with my family."

Police Chief Richard Czech, played by Beau Bridges, has been out of town all week on vacation, unavailable for comment on his viewing plans.

Unlike some in the cast, Ms. Duke and her real-life counterpart have not met nor talked by telephone. "I felt if she wanted additional input she would call. I didn't want to impose on her how to play the role, she's the actress."

The presence of Bridges and Ms. Duke in the cast is one of the problems with casting that Chip McClure pointed out this week. "They were just put in there for their names," he said.

But even worse in McClure's opinion is the actor chosen to recreate his ordeal as the 19-year-old father. He called Will Oldham's portrayal "terrible."

"I know I didn't look the best through the whole thing, but I never looked that scruffy. I've never had sideburns or a beard," Chip said.

At the April 10 Hollywood press conference which kicked off promotion of the movie, Cissy said she "thought the script was excellent" in reflecting the situation.

Chip said Friday that based on the clips they have seen, Roxana Zal "did very well" playing Cissy.

But there is "an over-emphasis on the West Texas drawl" of many of the characters, he said, stretching "y'all" into a three-syllable "yew awll" to make his point.

Ms. Baker of AP also nit-picked over the y'alls in the production. Her complaint is Cissy/Roxana's use of "y'all don't look old enough" to be a grandmother.

Ms. Baker wrote "Y'all ain't singular. It means 'you all,' as in two or more of you."

That's a great textbook description of "y'all" but it doesn't reflect popular usage, in Midland and beyond.

Ms. Baker obviously "ain't never been to West Texas."

By 10 p.m. West Texans will decide if they concur with People magazine's "B-" review, applaud TV Guide's "four-star" award or gauge it by a unique Midland critical measure.

Also on the committee are: Capt. David Cronin, who landed United Airlines flight No. 811 in Honolulu after the cargo bay door blew off over the Pacific Ocean; New York City police officer Steven McDonald, paralyzed in the line of duty, who has become an advocate for wounded officers and other disabled people; Colleen Cooke, a 12-year-old former recipient of the G.I. Nomination deadline for the award, sponsored by Hasbro Toys, is July 15. The panelists will review the nominations and vote by mail before Aug. 4, O'Donnell said.

Temperature breaks 40-year record

From Staff and Wire Reports

Saturday's high temperature of 101 degrees broke a 40-year-old record, according to forecasters with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, who are predicting more of the same conditions through Monday.

Today's high should reach the mid-90s under mostly sunny skies. Winds will be out of the south at 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies, with less than a 20 percent chance of evening thunderstorms and a low in the mid-60s.

On Monday, skies will be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-90s.

Saturday's previous record high of 100 degrees was set on that date in 1939. The low of 62 was 13 degrees warmer than the record of 42, set on that date in 1967.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms lingered over Northeast Texas Saturday, a reminder of the deadly storms that ravaged the state earlier in the week, claiming at least nine lives in flooding and twisters.

Partly to mostly cloudy skies prevailed over the state with clear skies in the Trans-Pecos.

Winds were generally from the south at 10 to 15 mph, except in the Panhandle, which had 15 mph easterly winds. Westerly winds in the Trans-Pecos gusted to 15 mph.

Law officers in Dallas and Houston said water had for the most part subsided from flooding caused by torrential rains that caused creeks and rivers to overflow and forced the closing of streets and highways.

A tornado touched ground south of the Callahan County community of Clyde in West Texas. A police dispatcher said the twister didn't cause any injuries or property damage.

Temperatures at 3 p.m. were mostly in the 80s and 90s across the state, with 70s in the Panhandle. Dalhart had the lowest high reading at 71 degrees. Midland and San Angelo shared Texas' high at 100 degrees.

The National Weather Service said temperatures Sunday should range from the upper 80s to near 100. There was a chance of thunderstorms over the northern half of the state, with some possibly severe.

NATION

Scattered thunderstorms boomed over the South on Saturday with heavy rain, hail as big as golf balls and winds up to 56 mph that uprooted trees in North Carolina.

Scattered showers fell across the Great Lakes region and the central Appalachians, sections of Texas again experienced heat and humidity, and skies were partly cloudy along the East Coast.

Sunny skies and mild temperatures extended from the northern and central Rockies to the northern half of the Great Plains and the upper Mississippi Valley, and dry weather prevailed in the western third of the nation.

In western North Carolina, thunderstorm winds uprooted large trees in Texana and dime-size hail fell in Murphy.

In Memphis, Tenn., a thunderstorm dropped hail as big as golf balls and winds gusted to 56 mph at the Memphis Naval Air Station.

Three to 5 inches of rain fell in east central Oklahoma, and locally heavy rain fell on the Florida Panhandle. A flash flood watch was in effect in southern Oklahoma.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours ending at 2 p.m. EDT included 2.25 inches in Valparaiso, Fla.; more than an inch in Birmingham, Ala.; and more than three-fourths of an inch in Huntsville and Muscle Shoals, Ala.

In south central and southwest Texas, temperatures were in the mid-90s and the relative humidity was around 50 percent. The heat index was 109 in Laredo and 107 in Cotulla and Beeville.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 48 degrees in Yellowstone National Park, Wyo., to 99 degrees at Palm Springs, Calif. The nation's low Saturday morning was 21 degrees in Jackson, Wyo.

The forecast for Sunday called for showers and thunderstorms from the central and southern Plains to the lower half of the Mississippi Valley, the Tennessee Valley, the Gulf Coast states and much of Florida.

CHINA

Some of the students had been on hunger strike in Tiananmen for a week. Their initial demands for ending the strike were a dialogue with the government on reform, to be broadast live, and an apology for an initial official declaration that the student democracy movement was a plot against the party.

But after martial law was declared, most students and their supporters demanded Premier Li Peng resign.

Li on Saturday declared martial law in parts of the capital to put an end to the protests.

The army moved into the Beijing train station early Sunday and blocked the road in front. It apparently was acting to stop the flow of tens of thousands of people to the capital to join the protests.

The army also set up roadblocks around the capital about 12 miles from the city center, said the Chinese source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Student leaders said over a loudspeaker Saturday night that the protesters should not resist if the army came.

"Our principle is peaceful non-resistance," they said.

Students said they were not afraid of an attack. "They have guns, but our power is bigger. I'm absolutely not afraid," said a student from Northern Industrial University.

On Sunday, the student leaders held lengthy, private meetings to discuss their next step. Nothing was immediately announced. Some reportedly favored staying in the square while others wanted to join the citizens in confronting army vehicles.

The only violence reported Saturday was a clash between armed police and students in western Beijing in which students said they were attacked with electric cattle prods. One student injured in the attack said 45 students were hospitalized.

On Sunday, military convoys that appeared on the street were quickly surrounded by crowds who appealed for them to turn back. Many did.

Four truckloads of soldiers tried to enter one street, but a few thousand people swooped upon them, surrounding the trucks and chanting, "Turn back! Turn back!" Onlookers cheered wildly when the trucks left.

Horns blared, student traffic directors waved frantically and young people chanted slogans and waved large red flags.

The widely ignored martial law regulations include bans on marches, class boycotts, distribution of pamphlets, speeches, the spreading of rumors, attacks on party, government or military organs and "any other destructive actions."

Li's hard-line stand toward the students appears to have forced the resignation of the more liberal Communist Party General Secretary Zhao Ziyang.

Chinese sources said Zhao, highly respected for his pioneering work in economic reforms, resigned his post after failing to persuade Li and senior leader Deng Xiaoping to compromise with the students. There has been no official word on Zhao's future.

Li's political victory could be brief, however, if the military refuses to cooperate in the crackdown.

Large demonstrations also were reported in several other cities. In Shanghai, more than 300,000 people rallied on the waterfront of the Huangpu River and another 200,000 gathered in the city's People's Square.

Britain on Saturday urged that the Chinese government and demonstrators use "restraint and moderation" in the crisis. The United States and France recommended that their citizens not travel to the country.

Protesters in Beijing have demanded Deng retire.

Deng, 84, is widely admired for initiating market-oriented reforms in China. But he has come under sharp attack by students for holding onto power too long.

Hundreds expected for church convention

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — More than 600 people from 80 countries are converging on South Texas for the start on Monday of the World Council of Churches' Conference on Mission and Evangelism, which hopes to set a worldwide evangelical and service agenda for the next decade.

The conference, which will be held on the campus of Trinity University at Trinity Baptist Church and other area churches, will follow the theme, "Your Will Be Done: Mission in Christ's Way."

The conference begins with a worship service at 8 p.m. Monday at Trinity Baptist Church.

Emilio Castro, a Methodist minister from Uraguay and head of the World Council of Churches, will give a keynote speech on Tuesday.

The Rev. Buckner Fanning, pastor of Trinity Baptist Church and one of the local organizers, said any agenda set by the group would have to be flexible.

"It's not a big world out there anymore. We need to learn to live with one another, creatively and productively," he said.

"I feel that at this time, and with so many changes taking place in the world — we don't know what is happening in China or Russia — we don't need to be pollyanna or suspicious, but we need to be open about it," he said."But a theme can't be good if it becomes a prison."

The conference will be divided into four sections.

One will focus on conversion, service and struggle with the world and witness among people of other denominations.

Land issues will be a major focus of another section titled "The Earth is the Lord's" and the fourth section will deal with the levels — local, regional and global — at which religious communities need to renew their effort in order to serve.

Pepper in very serious condition

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Claude D. Pepper, D-Fla., was in very serious but stable condition as he struggles to recover from an undisclosed stomach ailment.

Pepper, at 88 the oldest member of Congress, has been hospitalized at Walter Reed Army Medical Center since Monday. He had received treatment at the Johns Hopkins University Hospital in Baltimore before being transferred back to Walter Reed.

"He's pretty weak, but he's not in pain or anything," Bob Smith, a friend and aide to the Florida Democrat, said Friday.

STATE IN BRIEF

Border officials praise drug fight

PHOENIX (AP) — Attorneys general of American states bordering Mexico endorsed anti-drug efforts under Mexico's new president and urged the U.S. Senate to approve a mutual treaty.

"We feel that the efforts that have been taken by the Mexican governments since the (federal) government has been changed have been welcome, that they're promising," said California Attorney General John K. Van De Kamp in proposing a resolution unanimously approved at a conference of Mexican and American attorneys general.

Officials from California, Texas, Arizona and New Mexico also joined Friday with their counterparts from six Mexican states in unanimously approving a resolution calling for U.S. Senate ratification of a mutual legal assistance treaty that Mexico approved nearly a year ago.

On Thursday, Javier Coello Trejo, an assistant attorney general appointed four months ago by President Carlos Salinas de Gortari to head the Permanent Campaign Against Narcotics Trafficking in Mexico, detailed progress to date, including the arrest and indictment of 3,618 people accused of drug trafficking.

He also asked the American legal officials to help sway the Senate to ratify the pact, which would aid the exchange of documents, prisoners, evidence and the appearance of witnesses.

Papers reach agreement

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — DTH Media, owner of the Dallas Times Herald, will begin managing 30 newspapers owned by bankrupt Sutherland Media Inc. of San Antonio, group President Tucker Sutherland confirmed Friday.

The agreement, reached earlier in the week, calls for DTH Media to run the newspapers for an undetermined time while the Sutherland group continues through bankruptcy proceedings.

As part of the change, Sutherland, former San Angelo Standard-Times publisher, will resign as president of the group on May 31 and Sutherland Media will cease to exist.

"We have signed a management agreement with the Times Herald to operate our properties," Sutherland told the San Antonio Express-News Friday.

Sutherland did not know how the change would affect his newspaper employees. "That still has to be worked out. Some of them might end up moving to Dallas, where the management team headed by Ike Massey will operate," he said.

More trade lobbying urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Enormous resources must be devoted to monitoring Europe's transformation to a unified market if the United States wants to improve exports and speak forcefully against unfair trade practices, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee said Saturday.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen is asking Secretary of State James A. Baker III to consider substantially increasing the size of the staff at the U.S. Mission to the European Community in Brussels.

"If the executive branch does not devote adequate resources to this problem, then we could find it difficult to lobby for repeal of objectionable EC legislation," Bentsen told Baker. "No amount of trade suits against the European Community later could equal a good effort at this stage of the EC legislative process."

The Texas Democrat said every $1 billion in sales of American products overseas translates into 30,000 jobs at home.

With Europe breaking down its trade barriers, "we're going to be competing against what will be one of the largest economies in the world — a unified one, a united one with economies of size," Bentsen said. "That means a lot, for good or bad, for us in developing additional trade."

Speaker stresses savings

AUSTIN (AP) — Facing global competition, the United States must increase savings and investment and speed the transfer of technology from labs to markets or face falling into the economic minor leagues, University of Texas graduates were told Saturday.

"There is a serious problem facing our country and everyone in it. Our productivity growth has collapse," Dallas philanthropist Peter O'Donnell Jr. said in a commencement address.

In prepared remarks, O'Donnell noted that at the end of World War II, the United States rescued Western Europe and Japan by giving them American equipment and production know-how. Americans discovered and developed energy sources around the world.

Reporter jailed again for refusing to give up notes

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A television reporter was jailed for the second time in eight days for refusing to hand over his notes or reveal his sources in connection with an interview with a man accused in the murder of a police officer.

State District Judge James Barlow ordered KMOL-TV reporter Brian Karem remanded to Bexar County Jail on Friday after Karem refused to identify the individual who helped set up the interview or surrender any notes that may have names on them.

The controversy centers on Karem's interview aired March 28 in which a man claiming to be Henry David Hernandez, 25, admitted fatally shooting San Antonio Patrolman Gary Lee Williams in self-defense.

Hernandez and his brother, 28-year-old Julian Hernandez, each face capital murder charges in connection with the March 27 shooting.

The judge's order came the same day a Bexar County chief deputy admitted to Barlow that he passed a note from Karem to Henry Hernandez.

Karem was released about 3½ hours later after KMOL attorney Larry Macon obtained a writ of habeas corpus from the Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin.

In seeking the writ, Macon asserted Karem was being held illegally because Karem had a First Amendment right to protect his sources.

Bush: West German missiles proposal too vague

By TERENCE HUNT

NATION

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — The Bush administration said Saturday that West Germany's proposal for resolving a NATO crisis over short-range nuclear missiles is too vague and must be linked more closely with reductions in the Warsaw Pact's superiority in conventional forces.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III said Washington has sent a counterproposal to Bonn and is awaiting a response.

At a news conference, Baker did not rule out eventual East-West negotiations on curbing short-range nuclear weapons, as Germany has urged over opposition from the United States.

"It's the view of our government that negotiations are a mistake unless there are significant conditions with respect thereto," Baker said, apparently reversing himself on flatly rejecting such talks.

Baker commented after President Bush and visiting French President Francois Mitterrand held a round of talks here at Bush's seaside vacation home.

Addressing the crackdown in China against students demonstrating for democracy, Baker said, "I don't think it's in the best interest of the United States for us to see significant instability" in China.

While saying the United States supports freedom of speech and assembly, Baker said, "I don't think we should in any way be seen to be inciting to riot."

The top item on the Bush-Mitterrand agenda was the rift in NATO caused by West Germany's call for East-West missile negotiations.

Amid a wave of disarmament feeling in West Germany, Bonn also is resisting a plan to triple the range and increase the speed of the U.S.-made Lance missiles deployed in West Germany against the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact forces.

The disagreement has clouded plans for a 16-nation NATO summit opening in Brussels on May 29. Bush will leave Washington for Europe on Friday, stopping in Rome for two nights before traveling to Belgium.

Despite the NATO flap, Baker said Bush and Mitterrand had concluded "that the West has seldom been in a stronger position."

He said the two leaders, conferring in Bush's shingle and stone house overlooking the Atlantic Ocean, thought the NATO summit would be "a successful and forward-looking event."

The secretary brushed aside criticism from Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, who accused Bush of responding too timidly to the disarmament initiatives of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

"I suppose we would have to conclude, perhaps, that the honeymoon is over," Baker said.

Baker told reporters it was fair to say that Bonn's proposal calls for negotiations at too early a stage — that is, without significant progress in talks to reduce Warsaw Pact troops, tanks and other conventional forces.

"We think the conditions must be more significant and we think that they must be more clearly expressed and that there must be considerably more progress with respect to the completion and implementation of a conventional forces agreement," the secretary said.

He said Mitterrand was in "complete agreement" on the general outlines of the U.S. position.

Baker said the U.S. counterproposal envisions postponing until 1992 a decision on deployment and production of missiles that have a greater range and are faster than the U.S.-produced Lance missiles stationed in West Germany.

He said the proposal, if accepted, would continue an agreement by the alliance "to keep our forces up to date where necessary and an affirmation by the alliance of the United States' development of a follow-on system to the Lance."

Sources in Germany and the United States had indicated earlier that a compromise was near on the missile argument.

They said the Bush administration, after originally rejecting the idea, had accepted the idea of eventual negotiations.

However, Bonn would have to make clear it does not seek elimination of the missiles, and the talks would be conditional on an unspecified improvement in the East-West balance of conventional arms, according to sources.

Awaiting Mitterrand's arrival, Bush said the two had a friendly, personal relationship and that he was looking forward to "informal, in-depth, wide-ranging conversations."

Bush clapped his hands twice and exclaimed "bienvenue" as he greeted Mitterrand and his wife, Danielle, as they stepped from a helicopter on a warm, sunny day. Mrs. Bush was waiting to greet them nearby at the Bush's shingle and stone house overlooking the Atlantic Ocean.

France is not a part of NATO's integrated military command, and Mitterrand has made public comments straddling the gap between Washington and Bonn.

At a news conference Thursday, Mitterrand said "the time has not come, far from it" when NATO could eliminate all the short-range nuclear missiles in central Europe.

At the same time, Mitterrand said NATO would not have to decide about modernizing the battlefield missiles until 1992.

For their talks, Bush and Mitterrand were accompanied by foreign policy advisers, notetakers, and interpreters.

At lunch, they dined on corn chowder and oriental chicken salad. The dinner menu called for broiled shrimp, steamed Maine lobster and charcoal broiled swordfish.

Later Saturday, Bush went fishing while Mitterrand worked on a speech. Then, the two leaders took a 45-minute walk through the woods near Bush's compuond.

Bush, as he had done earlier, shrugged off questions about the current turmoil in China but appeared eager to talk about the results of his fishing trip, claiming he had caught two fish including what he called, "une mackerel grande."

Mitterrand, asked by reporters who surrounded the two presidents in the woods what he and Bush had been talking about, he said in French "we've been talking about fish and fishing."

To accommodate Mitterrand and his wife as overnight guests, the Bushes borrowed a king-sized bed from for a local furniture store.

Bush and Mitterrand will travel together to Boston on Sunday where they will receive honorary degrees, make speeches"and hold a joint news conference.

Bush's address is supposed to be a major speech on NATO.

He is expected to say the defense of Europe depends on the forward deployment of substantial U.S. conventional and nuclear forces.

At the same time, Bush is expected to say he has a vision of a less militarized Europe and that he looks for a lessened preponderance of Eastern European forces and greater openness.

Soviet leader brings new dimension to historic NATO rift

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Every decade or so the Western world frets over what is perceived as the impending dissolution of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. But Mikhail S. Gorbachev was not around for those earlier episodes.

Like his predecessors, the Soviet leader has thrown fuel on the smoldering fire of NATO discord. Unlike his predecessors, Gorbachev has taken concrete steps toward what he tells the Europeans is his vision of "our common home," a continent undivided and secure.

The 16-nation alliance is moving toward its May 29 meeting in Brussels feeling the heat of disagreement between West Germany on the one hand and the United States and Britain on the other over negotiating with the Soviets on reductions or elimination of short-range nuclear weapons.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, whose coalition faces a tough election next year, is pushing hard for NATO to negotiate but the Bush administration is holding back.

The issue may seem minor in the face of such arms control accomplishments as the 1987 treaty to eliminate intermediate-range nuclear missiles and progress in talks to radically cut the superpower strategic and conventional forces.

But there are fundamental disagreements among the Western allies and the current problem can be blamed in part — but only in part — on skillful exploitation of those differences by the Soviets.

Gorbachev has played the good guy, offering visions of a undivided Europe free of nuclear threat.

His foreign minister, Eduard A. Shevar%nadze, has played the heavy, threatening to halt destruction of SS-23 missiles and thereby violate the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Force Treaty that was the focal point of the U.S.-Soviet summits of December 1987 and June 1988.

Two other major factors are at work in the current NATO discord.

One is the style, or lack thereof, the Bush administration displays in dealing with the Soviets, symbolized by White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater's description of Gorbachev as a "drugstore cowboy."

The other is more substantive: the fundamental difference between the United States and its European allies over NATO nuclear doctrine, specifically the so-called "flexible response" that envisions the first use of atomic weapons by the West to repel an invasion by superior Soviet conventional forces.

"The United States and Western Europe have different strategies," said Paul Warnke, who was arms control negotiator under President Carter. "The United States wants to keep the war in Europe. The Europeans want the United States and the Soviet Union to blow each other up" and keep the nuclear warheads from falling on Europe.

Gorbachev and his aides "often make sweeping promises without conducting a policy review," said Dmitri Simes, an emigre Soviet analyst who works at the Carnegie Endowment for Peace in Washington.

Commander says radar system, staff reduction did not threaten safety

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A new radar system installed in 1984 led the Coast Guard to stop plotting ship movements in the area where the tanker Exxon Valdez ran aground, a Coast Guard commander testified Saturday.

But Cmdr. Steven McCall told federal investigators that the change and a reduction in staff three years later did not compromise tanker safety.

McCall, the Coast Guard commander in Valdez, testified on the fifth and final day of a National Transportation Board hearing on the March 24 accident, which spilled nearly 11 million gallons of oil into Prince William Sound.

The NTSB panel — which has heard testimony from Exxon representatives, members of the tanker's crew, state officials and others — probably will not complete its report on the spill's cause before January, said Chairman Lee Dickinson.

The accident called into question the Coast Guard's ability to monitor traffic in the sound. Tankers pick up North Slope crude oil in Valdez, where the Alaska pipeline ends.

Before 1984, the Coast Guard plotted ship movements on charts using reports from vessels. The new radar system made that practice unnecessary, McCall said.

However, ship traffic controllers have testified that they could not see the Exxon Valdez on radar before it ran aground, and had no indication it was in trouble.

The radar system has a range of up to 20 miles, but that varies with the weather, McCall said.

"It's well within the realm of possibility that (the controller) could have lost a reliable fix" the night of the accident, he said.

The Coast Guard's traffic station in Valdez experienced some staff cuts in 1987, and some staff members were reassigned, but there were no major problems, McCall said.

The commander confirmed that while the Exxon Valdez had Coast Guard permission to cross the oncoming traffic lane, it did not seek or receive permission to leave shipping lanes. Tanker crew members have said they left the lanes to avoid ice, and acknowledged permission had not been requested.

Asked if he thought there was anything the Coast Guard station could have done to prevent the accident, McCall said, "No."

NTSB staff member Lou Colucciello suggested that the accident might have been avoided if the Coast Guard had notified the tanker it was outside shipping lanes.

"Presumably, they already knew that," McCall replied.

Third Mate Gregory Cousins, who was in control of the ship at the time of the accident despite not having proper certification, has said he was aware it was outside shipping lanes.

Arguments have raged over the response to the spill, which stained more than 700 miles of Alaskan shoreline and killed hundreds of animals, especially regarding the use of oil-dispersing chemicals.

McCall said there was no reason for him to take over the effort to deal with the spill soon after it happened because equipment and other resources were not on hand.

The immediate response was handled by Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., an oil industry consortium that manages the pipeline and the Valdez marine terminal.

McCall said using dispersants was discussed soon after the accident early the morning of March 24. Tests of their effectiveness were conducted late that afternoon or early that evening, he said, adding that he didn't think there was unreasonable delay in performing them.

McCall said Alyeska did not have enough dispersant on hand to significantly reduce damage by the spill, and that tests showed no positive effect, possibly because oil on the water "was still pretty thick."

Exxon has said the oil would not have spread as much as it did if state officials had promptly approved use of dispersants. Dennis Kelso, Alaska's top state environmental official, responded that permission had been granted before the spill and that Alyeska didn't have enough dispersant for the job.

During a break in Saturday's proceedings, Kelso attacked oil industry testimony as "revisionist history." The state's representative at the hearings, Bob LeResche, said Friday that oil industry officials lied under oath.

At a news conference Saturday, Kelso said he would issue an order or take other action soon to ensure that the oil industry understands it must comply with its spill contingency plans.

The Alaska Department of Law is reviewing the state's enforcement options, including possibly closing the Alaska pipeline, said Kelso, repeating a threat Gov. Steve Cowper made soon after the spill.

Columbus, Ohio, police officers remove the bodies of four children killed Saturday. Police say the four were shot and killed by a gunman, who then killed himself.

Columbus man kills four children, himself

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — A man shot and killed four children, then used the gun to kill himself at a house on the city's north side this morning, police said.

Police tactical unit officers found the body of John Dubbin, 31, and the bodies of the children, ranging in age from 1 to 7, in the house around 11:20 a.m., said Lt. Dick Morgan, commander of the SWAT unit. The man's wife, who told police he had been acting strangely before the shootings, was unhurt.

The unit was called to the house about four hours earlier.

Morgan said the man's wife told police that Dubbin had been acting paranoid and fired a shotgun in the house around 5 a.m. She said she was sent out to buy cigarettes and called police when she returned and found she had been locked out.

Morgan said officers decided to storm the house after efforts to communicate with the occupants failed.

"We even knocked a window out and threw a phone in there to try to get him to come to the phone," he said.

He said that when there was no answer, he ordered tear gas put into the house. When there was still no response from anyone inside, the SWAT team went in and found men and the children, all shot. A dog inside the house attacked officers when they entered the house and was shot.

20th anniversary of Berkeley clash results in riot

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — A rally marking the 20th anniversary of the People's Park occupation turned into a violent clash with police reminiscent of the riots of the 1960s. Twelve people were arrested.

Fifteen police officers were injured during the riot Friday night and Saturday morning near the University of California at Berkeley, including one who was hit over the head with a bottle, said police spokesman David Anderson. None, however, was hospitalized. Two firefighters also suffered minor injuries.

About 70 Berkeley and 30 university police scuffled with combatants in a crowd of about 1,000 as piles of trash were gathered and torched and looters smashed store windows, then fled with merchandise.

At least 28 businesses were damaged during the violence, but no dollar estimate was immediately available, Anderson said. No other injuries were reported.

Two Berkeley fire department vehicles were overturned and one was set one fire, said Anderson, who estimated the damage at about $40,000. Another fire engine was vandalized while responding to a fire at an intersection in the middle of the riot.

The scene was an eerie replay of the 1969 clashes whose focus was the 2.3-acre university-owned lot that the university had targeted for housing. Activists wanted to turn it into a park, and the dispute came to embody all that the two sides hated about each other during that protest-filled decade.

But this weekend's violence seemed oddly out of context.

"What started here tonight was something that began as a social protest but it quickly degenerated into just plain vandalism," University of California student David Brooks, 19, said Friday night.

The rally starte bout 10 p.m. and broke up about an hour later, but the crowd gathered again and smashed windows and looted about a dozen stores in the nearby business district. Most of the action was about a half-block from the park and some three blocks from the UC campus.

"I thought that People's Park was all about creating peace, but these riots have no place in the peace movement," said Julia Tolley, who stood outside a boutique with her boyfriend, Rusty Pacatte, owner of the store.

The couple said several thousand dollars in merchandise were stolen from the store, which carries expensive household furnishings and clothing.

The same Bank of America branch that became a regular activist target in the 1960s was struck again by an arsonist.

"He lit a paper bag on fire and stuck his hand through a broken window," said 17-year-old Greta Salmonson. "It took a few minutes and then the flames started coming up."

Some of the crowd tried to put out the fire, said 24-year-old political science major Blake Marnell. The bank's carpeting and paneling were scorched before Berkeley firefighters doused the flames.

Streets were littered with broken glass, capsized newspaper racks and burning trash cans. A clothing store was trashed, and two husky students stood guard in front of the store, trying to keep looters from entering.

Seven of those arrested were adults. Five were booked for investigation of possession of stolen property, one for investigation of assault with a deadly weapon and assault on a police officer, and another for investigation of inciting a riot, Anderson said.

Five juveniles were arrested for investigation of possession of stolen property, he said.

People's Park has remained virtually untouched, an encampment for the homeless, since activists occupied it a generation ago after the university drew plans to erect student housing there.

"What started here tonight was something that began as a social protest but it quickly degenerated into just plain vandalism."
— David Brooks, student

During the original occupation, gardens were planted in rolled sod, tents went up and long-haired protesters moved in. The university finally fenced the lot on May 15, 1969.

When protesters tried to cut down the fence, they were met with heavily armed sheriff's deputies, who peppered dozens of protesters with birdshot. One man, James Rector, died a few days later. An artist was blinded and two news reporters were among those who were hurt.

Then-Gov. Ronald Reagan sent 2,000 National Guard troops to occupy the city for 17 days. A nightly curfew was imposed and meetings of more than three people were banned. In the first week after the riot, 1,000 people were arrested.

In 1972, the university agreed to allow limited public access to the still-vacant park.

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending May 19, 1989.

KEY HOUSE VOTE

House OKs $1.17 trillion budget compromise. The House took quick action May 17 and passed a compromise $1.17 trillion spending plan for fiscal 1990 by a vote of 241-185. The measure cleared the Senate the following day and, because it acts as a spending guide for Congress, it does not need President Bush's signature.

The House-Senate compromise budget blueprint conforms broadly to an April 14 deal struck between Congress and the Bush White House. Without mentioning specifics, it calls for a $28 billion package of spending cuts and revenue increases, designed to bring the projected fiscal 1990 deficit down to just below the $100 billion limit set by the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law.

Because the compromise budget failed to resolve major House-Senate differences on spending cuts and revenue-raisers, such decisions will have to be made later this summer. In the meantime, both chambers' Appropriations committees will have different amounts of money to spend, and House and Senate authorizing committees will have differing guidelines to follow in achieving savings, providing for the sale of some federal assets and increasing taxes and user fees.

Supporters of the budget plan compromise claimed the measure showed a new willingness for budget compromise and was the best deal available given Bush's refusal to raise taxes and congressional Democrats' reluctance to make any further domestic-spending cuts. "This is not a bold approach that we need to ultimately implement with regard to deficit reduction, but solving the deficit problem is a marathon," said Leon E. Panetta, D-Calif., "and we have taken the first mile."

Critics of the blueprint called it a very deceptive budget filled with accounting gimmicks and artificial savings to achieve a significant cut in the deficit on paper. "The crux of this issue is whether we voted yes on a mere(ly) acceptable resolution which does not make any real headway toward cutting our budget deficit, or do we ... send it back the conference committee for corrective surgery," said David Dreier, R-Calif.

Voting for the budget resolution compromise: Smith (R), Gonzalez (D).

Voting against: Combest (R), Stenholm (D), Sarpalius (D).

KEY SENATE VOTES

Senate rejects move to kill FS-X fighter deal. The Senate May 16 cleared the way for President Bush's controversial agreement to build the advanced FS-X fighter plane with Japan. By a narrow 47-52 vote, the Senate rejected a legislative move that would have prevented the deal from going through. Senate rejection of disapproval legislation gives the go-ahead for the program, since both houses of Congress had to pass such measures in order to kill the plan.

The joint program was launched by an agreement negotiated by the Reagan administration and the Japanese government in 1988. President Bush submitted his formal notice of the FS-X agreement to Capitol Hill on May 1, giving Congress 30 days to block the deal before it went into effect.

Under the administration plan, a joint effort between American and Japanese industries would modify the American F-16 fighter jet to meet unique Japanese military requirements. Criticism of the original agreement led the president to include guarantees in his revised plan to give the United States 40 percent of production contracts from the program. The revised plan also sought to ensure that sensitive U.S. technology would be protected.

While the president sought to make the plan more palatable to Congress, a bipartisan array of members still expressed lingering bitterness over Japanese trade practices toward the United States and suspicion of what they feel is Japan's intent to exploit U.S.-developed technology. "Are we going to continue to sell and five away the technological achievements that in so many cases, we, the United States, have discovered and literally frittered away?" asked Alfonse M. D'Amato, R-N.Y.

But supporters of the president's plan, including many Democrats, feared the potential damage in rejecting a partnership with an important with an important American ally. "The fact of the matter," warned Bill Bradley, D-N.J., "is this world will not have as much democracy, and will have more poverty if the United States and Japan do not develop a workable relationship for the next decade and beyond."

Voting to reject the U.S.-Japan FS-X fighter plane agreement: None

Voting not to reject the agreement: Bentsen (D), Gramm (R).

Senate votes to hike minimum wage despite veto threat. The Senate continued on a collision course with President Bush May 17, when it approved a conference report to raise the minimum wage from $3.35 to $4.55 an hour over three years. The 63-37 vote was shy of the two-thirds necessary to override the president's anticipated veto.

President Bush has vowed to veto any increase over his proposal to raise the wage to $4.25. The president also want to allow employers to pay a subminimum training wage for six months, rather than 60 days, as passed by Congress. The House passed the conference report last week.

Senators on opposite sides of the issue blamed each other for the inability to strike a compromise and said the differences between the two plans were being overshadowed by political posturing. Democrats said President Bush wanted to look tough and show political will; Republicans contended that Democrats were trying to paint the president as favoring the rich over the poor.

Supporters of the bill contended that the wage hike is long overdue. They noted that the Senate had previously adopted a raise to $4.65 and hour and included a training wage to accommodate President Bush, and complained that the president has not budged from his initial proposal. "Despite these concessions, President Bush has stated hew will veto the bill. He has drawn a line in the sand — and increase to $4.25 per hour with a permanent six-month subminimum wage," said Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio. "No negotiations, no compromise, no discussion."

Opponents maintained that a higher wage hike and shorter training period would cost jobs — especially among the young — and accused Democrats of making political hay of the issue. "Are my colleagues on the other side of the aisle going to throw away 90 cents an hour, throw it away, to win a political point?" questioned Bob Dole, R-Kan. "Are they going to deny the working men and women in this country a 90-cent an hour increase ... because the president did not offer the other 30 cents?"

Voting for the minimum-wage conference report: Bentsen (D).

Voting against: Gramm (R).

Senate approves compromise budget resolution. The Senate May 18 followed the House's lead and overwhelmingly adopted, 63-37, a $1.17 trillion budget plan compromise for fiscal 1990.

While the budget blueprint retained defense and non-defense spending at levels previously agreed to in an April 14 agreement between congressional leaders and White House officials, it failed to solve tough decisions on where to cut spending and how to increase revenues.

Those decisions will now wait until President Bush approves a package of revenue increases andthe House and Senate agree to a compromise reconciliation bill.

Voting against: None.

Cotton Club murder case reveals tale of greed, glitter

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Hollywood murder mystery which has been the subject of movieland gossip for six years is unraveling at last in court, and the characters could have stepped out of a writer's imagination.

In fact, a number of well-known wordsmiths are planning books and articles based on the tale of greed and glitter that led producer Robert Evans to invoke the 5th Amendment when asked to testify about the murder of theatrical producer Roy Radin.

Evans, the former head of production at Paramount Pictures, was only one of the colorful witnesses who drew authors, magazine writers and a cadre of celebrity watchers to the courtroom of Municipal Judge Patti Jo McKay on opening day of a preliminary hearing last week.

Author and magazine writer Dominick Dunne was there for Vanity Fair. So were writers Steve Wicks and Michael Fessier Jr., who plan books on the case. A Hollywood entertainment company announced it had already optioned the story for a TV movie-of-the-week.

The hearing, now entering its second week, will determine whether a woman who was a reputed drug dealer and Evans associate should stand trial along with two former bodyguards of Hustler magazine publisher Larry Flynt in the Cotton Club murder case. A fourth defendant, also a former bodyguard of Flynt's, is fighting extradition from Maryland.

The first witness, who had ties to drugs and Flynt's security network, implicated all of the defendants in the killing of Radin, 33, a corpulent, cocaine-sniffing impresario. Police reports indicate that other witnesses will implicate Evans.

Evans, now working on a sequel to his movie "Chinatown," was called as the first witness last week but refused to testify on grounds that he might incriminate himself. Tanned and tense, Evans sat nervously on the witness stand while his attorney won the battle for him not to testify. Evans refused to say whether he even knew Radin.

The case might have been invented by a Hollywood scenario writer. It has links to the secret deals of movie power brokers, the underworld of Colombian drug dealers and Flynt's lurid porno publishing empire. Key figures in the drama are Evans; actor Demond Wilson, the former star of TV's "Sanford And Son"; and William Ryder, Flynt's former brother-in-law.

The slaying of Radin became wad dubbed The Cotton Club murder because it dates back to 1983 when Evans, a top Hollywood producer, was negotiating with Radin, a flamboyant New Yorker, to raise millions for the movie about a Harlem nightspot of the 1920s and '30s.

A woman known as Elaine "Laynie" Jacobs had introduced the two men. That same woman, said to have ties to the Colombian cocaine network of Carlos Lehder, is really Karen DeLayne Greenberger, now charged in the Radin murder. Charged along with her are Alex Lamota Marti, William Molony Mentzer and Robert Ulmer Lowe, the former Flynt bodyguards. Lowe is fighting extradition.

Analysts predict deficit to be less than expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — The unexpectedly strong income tax payments pouring into the federal Treasury are prompting analysts to predict that the government's budget deficit this year may undershoot official projections.

The Treasury Department reported Friday that the government posted a record $41.45 billion budget surplus in April.

While tax payments always inflate the government's coffers in April, the bulge was much bigger than expected and three times the size of the $13.77 billion surplus registered in April 1988.

For the first seven months of fiscal 1989, which began Oct. 1, the government ran a $86.98 billion deficit, 17.9 percent smaller than the $105.84 billion shortfall at the comparable point in the previous fiscal year.

If the pace were sustained, the shortfall for all of fiscal 1989 would undershoot both the Bush administration's projection of a $163.3 billion deficit and the Congressional Budget Office's estimate of $159 billion. Last year's deficit was $155.1 billion.

"It's a very encouraging number," Louis Crandall, chief economist for R.H. Wrightson & Associates in New York, said of the April surplus. "What we're seeing suggests that the current tax structure...is generating somewhat higher revenues than we thought ahead of time."

Winds postpone launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Strong, shifting winds Saturday night forced the Air Force to postpone the launch of a navigation satellite designed to tell U.S. and allied forces their location within 50 feet anywhere on the globe.

The postponement was announced with the countdown holding at just four minutes before the intended blastoff time, 7:55 p.m.

"The upper level winds are too variable to risk a launch of the Air Force Delta 2 rocket through that environment tonight," said Lt. Col. Ron Rand, the Air Force launch commentator.

The countdown had proceeded perfectly throughout the day while weathermen kept a close watch on the upper altitudewinds. Rand said late weather balloon data indicated the velocities and directions of shifting winds were too high to be safe. Wind velocities were not reported.

A new launch date was scheduled for 7:51 p.m. Sunday.

Packed in the nose of the $30 million, 12-story rocket is a $65 million Navstar Global Positioning System satellite, which will enable military units such as ships, planes, submarines and tanks to determine their location within 50 feet and in some cases to within 10 feet.

Landmark dedicated

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — The founders of Hewlett-Packard Co., the $10 billion computer and electronics giant, returned after 50 years to the garage where they started out for the dedication of the building as a state landmark.

It was in the wooden garage that William R. Hewlett and David Packard in 1938 parlayed $538 in capital and an audio oscillator into one of the world's leading electronics companies.

Their firm, which employs 87,000 people, is headquartered a couple of miles away in Palo Alto.

But after poking around the dark and dingy interior, Hewlett and Packard said they did not accept its billing as "birthplace of Silicon Valley," and were not eager to reminisce.

Although both are billionaires, neither has thought about buying the property at 367 Addison Ave., which has become a favorite photo stop for touring Japanese electronics groups and young Stanford engineers.

Zeus makes statement

NEW YORK (AP) — Metropolitan Museum gods were not amused when a copy of their Zeus statue appeared at another New York museum, adorned with a baseball bat and a futuristic G-string.

An artistic and legal struggle ensued, followed by compromise. The revised version, unveiled at the Whitney Museum Friday, was a plain Zeus — displayed with photos of his former self and signs explaining the controversy.

It all started in 1930, when the Met bought a bronze replica of the Zeus, a famous relic from ancient Greece. Several years ago, the Met loaned the Zeus to the Queens Museum, which in turn loaned it to the Whitney.

Enter Spanish-born artist Francesc Torres, whose work titled "Oikonomos," the Greek word for economical, was commissioned for the Whitney's Biennial Exhibition.

Torres envisioned a Zeus that symbolized "the economic spectrum, the lowest and the highest: from guys who work at the corner of Broadway and Houston cleaning windshields down to Wall Street."

"I wanted to use Zeus because, in Greek mythology, Zeus was the chairman of the board," Torres said.

Assault guns favored

ATLANTA (AP) — While Americans own about 1 million assault guns, about 0.5 percent of the country's 200 million privately owned firearms, those weapons were used in 10 percent of the crimes that resulted in a firearms trace last year, a study shows.

The study was done by the Washington bureau of The Atlanta Journal-Constitution and published in Sunday's editions.

School building bullet barrier

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Gang violence and drug peddling at a housing project behind a junior high school show no signs of going away, so officials are trying to make the campus bulletproof by building a 10-foot high wall.

Faculty and administrators wore T-shirts Friday bearing "The Great Wall of Lindbergh" logo to show their enthusiasm for the $160,000 project at Lindbergh Junior High School. It is scheduled for completion in six weeks.

Judy Wade, a physical education teacher, has said she's seen beer bottles and even bicycle handlebars tossed at students during her 25 years at the school. "Now, it's not what they're throwing, but what they're shooting," she said.

Students were evacuated from the recreation fields twice during one week in April because of gunfire. Two years ago, a student playing basketball after school was hit in the chest by a bullet that whizzed through a chain-link fence.

"They've had trouble there for as long as I can remember," said Principal Max Fraley, referring to the problem housing project that is adjacent to the schoolyard. "It is a very large area where a lot of drug dealers congregate."

The concrete block wall will extend 300 yards along the school's playground, separating the school and 1,200 students from the 713-unit Carmelitos Housing Project, Fraley said.

Funds for the wall came from the city school district and Los Angeles County after teacher Joan Reedy was nearly hit recently by bullets as she walked with students to a softball diamond.

"Shots came through the fence and we heard the whizzing by," Ms. Reedy said. "I was OK at first, but when I got home I was scared. So I went to the Board of Education and said, 'Something needs to be done.'"

Plans call for the wall to be bordered by shrubs and decorated with a large mural, Fraley said.

"We'll use anti-graffiti paint, something that it will be easy to wash the gang graffiti off of," he said.

The mural will include a painting of the Spirit of St. Louis, the airplane aviator Charles Linbergh flew in 1927 in the first solo trans-Atlantic flight, and a large "L" overlapped by a picture of an eagle, the school mascot.

The slogan "Lindbergh Leads the Way" will top the mural painted in school colors of blue and red.

"A 900-foot wall of this sort is significant because it recognizes the problems we face today, and it will make everyone on school grounds feel a lot safer," Fraley said.

Police arrest eight at Klan rally

EPHRATA, Pa. (AP) — Ku Klux Klansmen held a recruitment rally Saturday but drew mostly bottles and cans thrown by protesters. Police arrested eight people.

More than 40 police officers, including state police in riot gear and mounted officers, turned out for the rally by about 25 Klansmen at Ephrata Community Park in this city about 50 miles west of Philadelphia. About 300 people watched from behind police lines

About 10 minutes into the rally, two men threw bottles and cans at Klansmen on the other side of a security fence. The two were arrested.

Fifteen minutes later, about 15 members of the New York City-based International Committee Against Racism arrived with signs and bullhorns, and tried to shout down the robed Klansmen with such slogans as "Death to the Klan." Klansmen made no move toward the counterdemonstrators.

Six people were charged with disorderly conduct, one with resisting arrest and disorderly conduct and one with public drunkenness, said police Sgt. Brian Kurtz.

USDA withdraws plan to cut back inspections

WASHINGTON (AP) — A flood of complaints has forced the government to withdraw a plan to cut back on federal inspections at plants that turn out hot dogs, chicken soup and other processed foods using meat and poultry.

But officials of the Agriculture Department left open the possibility they would revive the proposal later on, and a meat industry spokesman said a consensus might be sought.

Since the proposal was announced in November, there have been many complaints that it would put greater reliance on the plants themselves to meet federal inspection standards.

Lester M. Crawford, head of the department's Food Safety and Inspection Service, said the proposal would have allowed for "varying the intensity of inspection at meat and poultry processing plants according to a plant's ability to consistently produce safe and wholesome product in a sanitary environment."

Crawford said the proposal was withdrawn, at least for the time being, "in direct response" to more than 1,800 comments from the public since it was announced last fall. Most opposed all or parts of the proposal. He said the agency will gather additional information and then determine if a new plan will be drafted.

The withdrawal applied only to the so-called Improved Processing Inspection proposal, which affects processed meat and poultry products. The plan als is known as "discretionary inspection."

A 1986 law authorized overhauling the inspection system and putting in place a "risk-based" program in which processors with good records would require "periodic inspection" rather than the daily supervision previously required.

The most troublesome plants would come under tougher review.

One effect would be to cut in half over time the number of federal inspectors.

Another proposal, called the Streamlined Inspection System for the slaughter of cattle, is still under consideration. A number of consumer groups have rallied against it, alleging that it would increase the chance of tainted beef reaching consumers.

The streamlined cattle inspection program would let federal inspectors in slaughtering operations concentrate on looking for abnormalities such as tumors and abscesses while allowing company employees to check some of the routine tasks to ensure cleanliness.

One of the streamlining effects would be to have carcasses move along the inspection line faster, meaning less time for checking on beef headed for the consumer market.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., the chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, had urged the department to withdraw both the inspection proposals, indicating that Congress would step in if the department didn't reverse itself.

Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., who heads a Government Operations subcommittee in the House, said Friday's announcement reflected the panel's hearings last month which documented the failings of the discretionary inspection program and showed that it should be withdrawn.

But Weiss said he was concerned that USDA was still proceeding with a computer-based system to generate inspectors' schedules and decide how often each plant will be inspected. At the April 11 hearing, he said, USDA acknowledged that the computer system was seriously flawed.

Weiss said the decision to retain the flawed computer program was "dangerous and shortsighted" on the part of the department.

Chinese at U.S. colleges stage coast-to-coast protests

Associated Press

Thousands of Chinese college students staged raucous protests Saturday from San Francisco to New York in support of the pro-democracy uprising in their homeland, chanting slogans and carrying banners reading "Freedom or Death."

"We are all supporting the students in China. They are heros," Lewis Lu, a business student at the University of California in Berkeley, said during a rally in San Francisco that included a meeting with Chinese consular officials.

Demonstrations also were held in Los Angeles, Chicago, St. Paul, Minn.; and Washington, D.C. No arrests were reported.

The protests followed the declaration of martial law for sections of Beijing on Saturday by Chinese Premier Li Peng in response to huge demonstrations there, considered the largest challenge to the nation's communist rule since its founding in 1949.

But hundreds of thousands of people continued to swarm through the streets of China's capital in defiance of martial law and in support of the students who have led the uprising.

The United States is host to an estimated 40,000 students from the People's Republic of China.

One of the largest demonstrations in this country took place in Washington, D.C., where about 3,500 students marched on China's embassy, shouting "Down with martial law!" and "Freedom now!" Some were natives of Taiwan or Hong Kong, but the vfast majority were citizens of mainland China.

In spite of final examinations going on at many schools, students came from Cornell, Princeton, Harvard, Yale, Brandeis, Duke, New York and Johns Hopkins universities and the universities of Virginia, California, Pennsylvania and Pittsburgh, as well as several schools in the Washington area.

"We want to show our support for other people who are fighting for our freedom, and to show our own government that its position is wrong," said Qiao Chun Ming of Shanghai, a student at Pitt.

More than 3,000 students rallied near the Chinese consulate in Chicago, chanting, "Down with Li Peng, up with freedom!"

In downtown Grant Park, they placed a sign reading "Beijing We Hear You. Do You Hear Us" at the feet of a statue of Abraham Lincoln.

Among the demonstrators was Ciping Huang, 26, who drove with about 20 others from the University of Toledo.

"It was an emergency call," she said. "I told my boss I couldn't stay (at work) any longer because my country is in emergency status."

Others flocked to the Chicago demonstration from Purdue, Marquette, Illinois State and Michigan State universities and the universities of Notre Dame, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana and Louisville.

In San Francisco, about 1,000 demonstrators, many wearing white headbands, held a rally at the Chinese consulate, then marched to Chinatown.

They jabbed the air with signs in Chinese and English carrying such messages as "A Billion People, One Press" and "Freedom or Death." One placard compared senior leader Deng Xiaoping to Adolf Hitler.

Administration issues travel alert to China

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — The Bush administration said Saturday it was not in the best interest of the United States to have "significant instability" in China and said Washington did not want to be seen as encouraging student demonstrators to riot.

"What may be happening here is that the economic reforms in China got out a little bit ahead of the political reforms," said Secretary of State James A. Baker III.

Meanwhile, in Washington the State Department issued a travel alert, warning American citizens to avoid travel to China and urging those already there to stay off the streets.

"We recommend that U.S. citizens defer travel to the People's Republic of China for the next 72 hours," said spokesman Adam Shub. "Travelers in Beijing are being advised not to leave their hotels or immediate residential areas."

An administration source, who spoke privately, said it appeared U.S. citizens were not in any danger from the demonstrators, noting some used a replica of the Statue of Liberty in their protests.

"That speaks for itself," the source said. But he said the department had issued the alert to warn citizens against being caught up in the ongoing demonstrations.

Baker spoke at a news conference where he reported on talks between President Bush and visiting French President Francois Mitterrand. He said both presidents, conferring at Bush's vacation home, hoped for restraint in China.

His comments came as hundreds of thousands of students demonstrating for democracy defied a martial law declaration and swarmed into the streets in Beijing.

The Bush administration has refrained from criticizing the Beijing government for its promised crackdown on the demonstrators.

Taking a cautious approach, Baker said, "I don't think it's in the best interest of the United States for us to see significant instability in the Peoples Republic of China just like I don't think it's in the best interest of the United States for us to see significant instability in the Soviet Union.

Asked why the United States was not encouraging the students, Baker said, "I think we should be expressing our support for freedom of speech, for democratization and for freedom of assembly.

"And that's what we're doing," he said. "I do not think that we should in any way be seen to be somehow inciting to riot and I think that we have to be appropriate in our response."

He said a news blackout declared by the government was "regrettable. We wish that that had not been done. We continue to urge restraint in the situation overall."

Baker said it was too premature to conclude that developments in China have strengthened the hand of hardliners led by Premier Li Peng.

"It's a little bit unclear exactly what the situation is as between the hardliners on the one hand and those who profess to support more openness on the other," the secretary said.

"I think we simply have to wait and see," he added. "I do think it's fair to say that the situation is unclear and there is a certain degree of flux."

Asked how the United States would view a harsh crackdown on the students, Baker said, "that's a very hypothetical qeustion...that you can obviously understand why I wouldn't respond to."

President Bush's spokesman Marlin Fitzwater offered words of support for the student-led demonstrations, saying, "The United States stands for freedom of speech and freedom of assembly.

"The demonstrations of the last few days indicate that the hunger for change remains strong," said Fitzwater, with Bush on a trip to his seaside home.

The spokesman said the chief executive had received an update on events in China during his morning intelligence briefing.

In Washington, a State Department monitoring group was keeping tabs on developments in China.

The State Department also expressed concern about the news blackout imposed by Chinese authorities.

"We are concerned over the interruption of the free flow of information from Beijing, which has occurred over the past day. We hope the progress the Chinese have made in recent years will be sustained and further advanced," the agency said.

"The situation remains uncertain," Fitzwater said."

China stops live TV coverage

NEW YORK (AP) — The Chinese government halted live American telecasts from Beijing as troops closed in on hundreds of thousands of protesters in Tiananmen Square.

"In my 20 years of news reporting I've never seen anything like this," CNN anchorman Bernard Shaw said Friday night.

"Goodbye from Beijing," he said, signing off.

Correspondents were able to continue reporting by phone.

Authorities first stopped transmissions from the square, where videotapes showed soldiers hitting protesters with nightsticks, then stopped satellite transmissions altogether.

Networks were reduced to showing maps and photographs of their correspondents, who said they hadn't been personally threatened. It was unclear whether the networks would be able to videotape for later airing.

The blackout occurred at the end of a week of coverage of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's visit and the accompanying protests.

Chinese officials used Gorbachev's departure as justification for the move.

"Mr. Gorbachev China visit is over," a Chinese official said to CNN, translating a written order that had been requested by CNN. "Now I'm here announcing that CNN should stop the movable earth station and its transmitting frequencies right away."

An official at the Atlanta-based Cable News Network said crew members were trying to negotiate with the Chinese government for permission to resume news coverage.

CNN spokesman Steve Haworth said he did not think the CNN crew was being ordered out of the country.

Riot police arrest more than 1,000 South Korean protesters

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Riot police broke up protests and arrested more than 1,000 people Saturday after the government deployed 17,000 troopers to block a rally by dissidents calling for the fall of the president.

Thousands of riot troopers in combat fatigues and black helmets flooded central Seoul, conducting street checks for radical supporters and guarding key government buildings.

Police charged hundreds of protesters who tried to block streets and chant anti-government slogans in the city center. Struggling protesters were taken away on buses. Police said more than 1,000 people were arrested.

"Punish Roh Tae-woo!" and "Drive out the Yankees!" protesters yelled.

About 120 students courted arrest by laying down in one main street with their arms and legs interlocked. Police hauled the students away as other protesters screamed abuse, but there were no clashes.

Riot police also blocked protests in the rural cities of Chonju, Sungnam and Taegu. Small protest marches were allowed in eight other cities after organizers obtained police permission.

The United National Democratic Movement, the nation's main dissident alliance, had called for a major protest in Seoul to push for President Roh's downfall and to mark the anniversary of a May, 1980, uprising in the southern city of Kwangju.

The movement issued a statement denouncing the government for blocking the rally and said police had violated political rights. Even after the rally was blocked, protesters tried to demonstrate in the city center.

Eight radical students armed with iron bars tried to attack the Seoul headquarters of the Joint Investigation Team, which has been spearheading a major crackdown on the dissident movement. Guards stopped the students and seized two of them while the others fled, police said.

Police said four students briefly occupied a government prosecutor's office in Suwon near Seoul before being overpowered and arrested.

Police banned the Seoul rally on grounds it was a threat to public order, and thousands of riot police ringed the street where it was to have been held. They stopped and questioned people who approached the area, taking many into custody.

Troopers in the downtown area also stopped and questioned people, asking to see identity cards and checking bags for weapons and anti-government leaflets. Suspects were bundled onto police buses and taken away for questioning.

Hundreds of riot police guarded key government buildings and the U.S. Embassy.

In other protests, about 500 people marched in Kwangju to call for Roh's fall. The march was blocked by about 2,000 riot police in the city's main square, and the protesters hurled eggs and rocks at troopers.

The Kwangju protest was the smallest since daily protests began May 11 to mark the anniversary's uprising. Crowds estimated at up to 100,000 took part in protests there last week.

Dissidents have mounted a series of violent anti-government protests and labor strikes in recent months to call for the overthrow of the Roh. But the dissidents lack popular support because of their violent tactics and extreme views.

Roh, a former general, won a presidential election in late 1987 and has introduced broad democratic reforms, but dissidents claim he is a front for military rule.

One of the dissidents' demands is expulsion of the 43,000 U.S. troops based in South Korea under a mutual defense treaty. They contend the soldiers hamper reunification with communist North Korea.

The two Koreas have been bitter rivals since the peninsula was divided at the end of World War II. The two sides fought the Korean War in 1950-53.

Suspects in cult slayings say police tortured them

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The body of the man police say was the "godfather" of a cult linked to 15 slayings on the U.S. border left Mexico on its way to relatives in Miami, family members said.

The body of Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, 26, left Mexico on an 11 a.m. commercial flight Friday bound for Miami, news reports said.

Alfred H. Neal, a U.S. consular official, reportedly claimed the body here on behalf of Constanzo's mother, Aurora Gonzales del Valle of Miami.

Neal could not be reached for comment Saturday by The Associated Press.

In Miami, Constanzo's brother Fausto said the body was expected to arrive about 3 a.m. EDT Sunday.

Fausto told Miami radio station WQBA that the family would not disclose details of funeral arrangements for his brother and did not want either the press or public intruding on the family's grief.

"This is going to be a very emotional time for us," Fausto Constanzo said.

The body had remained unclaimed at the Mexico City morgue since Adolfo Constanzo reportedly ordered his own execution May 6. The reports said that Neal was accompanied by another consular official when he appeared at the attorney general's office to claim the body.

An autopsy showed Constanzo had died from multiple gunshot wounds to the head and upper body.

Mexican officials said the body was embalmed before being returned to Miami, and funeral arrangements were pending in Miami.

The process of transporting the body back to the United States was complicated and slowed by the police investigation and red tape associated with transporting a body across international borders, said an attorney general's office spokesman. He added that even though Constanzo's family had made earlier inquiries, they didn't claim the body until this week.

Constanzo has been described as the leader of a sect that authorities blame for 15 killings outside the border city of Matamoros. Sect members have said some slayings were ritual killings while others were drug-related.

Authorities had sought Constanzo and his female companion Sara Aldrete Villarreal, 24, since the discovery of the first of the bodies on a border ranch in April.

Some bodies had been mutilated, with brains and organs removed.

Among the victims was Mark Kilroy, 21, a University of Texas premed student who disappeared from the streets of Matamoros during spring break.

Aldrete and other sect members have said publicly that Constanzo ordered his own execution and the killing of his right-hand man, Martin Quintana Rodriguez, when police moved in on their Mexico City apartment earlier this month.

A spokesman for the attorney general's office said Quintana's brothers claimed his body from the Mexico City morgue earlier this week.

Sect member Alvaro de Leon Valdez confessed earlier this month that he executed the double slayings on Constanzo's orders during a shootout with police.

Aldrete, De Leon and several other sect members remain jailed in Mexico City on various charges stemming from the double slaying and the 1988 killing of a male transvestite in Mexico City.

Five men are in custody in Matamoros in connection with the border slayings. Of those, four have been charged with homicide and one with coverup in the killings.

Unclaimed body of cult leader flown to Miami

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The body of the man police say was the "godfather" of a cult linked to 15 slayings on the U.S. border was transported from Mexico to his hometown of Miami, police officials here said.

A source in the Mexico City Attorney General's Office said the body of Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, 26, left Mexico at 11 a.m. Friday on a commercial flight bound for Miami.

The body had remained unclaimed at the Mexico City morgue since Constanzo reportedly ordered his own execution on May 6, said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

An autopsy earlier showed Constanzo had died from multiple gunshot wounds to the head and upper body.

Constanzo's body was claimed by a U.S. Consulate representative acting on behalf of Constanzo's mother, Aurora Gonzales del Valle of Miami, the attorney general's spokesman said. He said funeral arrangements were pending in Miami, but did not have specifics.

The process of transporting the body back to the United States was complicated and slowed by the police investigation and red tape associated with transporting a body across international borders, said the attorney general's office spokesman. He added that even though Constanzo's family had made earlier inquiries, they didn't claim the body until this week.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Bill Graves said late Friday that he knew U.S. officials were working to return Constanzo's body to his family, but did not know if the body had been returned to the United States on Friday.

Constanzo has been described as the leader of a sect that authorities blame for 15 killings outside the border city of Matamoros. Sect members have said some slayings were ritual killings while others were drug-related.

Authorities had sought Constanzo and his female companion Sara Aldrete Villarreal, 24, since the discovery of the first of the bodies on a border ranch in April.

Some bodies had been mutilated and had their brains and organs removed.

English aristocrat uses name to support 'good causes'

WARRINGTON, England (AP) — "I will use my name," His Grace said. "I will use it ruthlessly."

His name is Gerald Cavendish Grosvenor, the sixth Duke of Westminster and reputedly Britain's richest man, and he said he'll lend it to a good cause.

The 37-year-old aristocrat was standing on what he considered to be a good cause — the site of an industrial estate. He's doing his bit to help the local development corporation attract American investors.

"If you are given a lot, I think you should give a lot back," said the duke, who spends about one-third of his time supporting 150 charities.

He says it springs from a sense of duty: "We still have a lot to do with those who have been left behind in the march toward prosperity."

It's also a sort of insurance against those British radicals who would regard the duke as a child of archaic privilege. In these egalitarian times, it's important for aristocrats, from royalty downward, to be seen working for the common good.

But he is no apologist for the aristocracy.

"There is a class system wherever you go in the world. We just have handles on our names to identify our pecking order better."

In the pecking order he is also the Marquess of Westminster, Earl Grosvenor, Viscount Belgrave, Baron Grosvenor and 15th Baronet of Eaton.

The boyish, energetic duke is tall, medium-built, and for his outing to Warrington he wore a conservative suit and the British aristocracy's obligatory gold pinky ring. His basset-hound eyes are very blue. His eyebrows meet at the bridge of his nose.

Laughing in frequent short bursts, he is casual and friendly, obviously well-practiced at putting the overawed at ease with one-liners.

He speaks with an updated version of the upper-class British accent, laced with occasional Americanisms, like "you guys."

The Grosvenor family fortune is estimated by London's Sunday Times to be worth $5 billion, surpassed only by Queen Elizabeth II's $8.7 billion.

It owns 300 acres of London's elegant Mayfair and Belgravia districts, including the plot on which the U.S. Embassy stands.

Back in 1677, it was all cabbage patch and swamp, the dowry of Mary Davies, the 12-year-old bride of Sir Thomas Grosvenor.

The estate also owns pieces of Scotland, Vancouver in British Columbia and Hawaii, a sheep station near Wagga Wagga, Australia, and extensive property outside Chester in northwest England, where stands the family home, Eaton Hall.

"It's not something I wake up every morning with and say, 'How wonderful to have all this money,'" the duke said. "I am not sitting there on hard cash and it's not going into cars and boats as I see fit."

Does he ever feel guilty about being born so rich?

"No, never have done and never will do," he said.

"I am a curator of what my family does now and of what my family have done in the past and I am a planner of what my family will do in the future.

"I use my wealth in order to create. My wealth is a business and it is a very substantial employer of people."

Gerald Cavendish Grosvenor

A major drawback, he said, is having "too little time to see one's family. I clearly resent that." But he added, "It comes with the territory."

Born in 1951, he was the second of three children. The other two were girls.

He was reared in Northern Ireland, where his father was a member of Parliament and ran a silversmith's business. He has described his childhood as idyllic, isolated and free.

A series of accidents of birth and death brought the title to his father in 1967, and at 16, young Grosvenor was suddenly heir to one of the world's biggest fortunes.

At exclusive Harrow school he was an undistinguished student, and instead of college he roughed it as a cowboy on a British Columbia ranch, learned farm management in New Zealand, and worked for a real estate agent and a nature conservancy agency in Britain.

When he was 21, his father became ill and Grosvenor began to learn the complexities of the family business.

In 1978, he married 19-year-old Natalia Phillips, or "Tally," whose great-grandfather was Grand Duke Michael of Russia. Fittingly, they met at a ball.

At 27, on his father's death, Grosvenor succeeded to the title. He has two daughters and no son, so the heir to the estate is his cousin, the Earl of Wilton.

"Clearly my regret is that my father went when I was very young," he says. "I had to cocoon myself at a very early age."

He had dreamed of an army career, and found it hard to adjust to his responsibilities.

He reached a compromise. During the week he is the businessman commuting to London by helicopter. On weekends, he dons camouflage and joins maneuvers as a major in Britain's territorial army, or volunteer reserve force.

The duke has tried to modernize, restructure and expand the estate, which builds and manages shopping centers, industrial sites and office buildings. It has extensive property interests in the United States.

"My goodness, we weren't quite on the quill pens when I took over but we weren't far from it," he said.

The duke says he has another ambition: not to be the Grosvenor who loses the family fortune. He says he's happy to pay income tax, but his accountants spend a lot of time figuring out how to avoid inheritance taxes.

Some of his tenants complain that his rents are exorbitant, and he has been tagged "Lord Greedy Guts." He is unapologetic.

"I operate on the simple principle of supply and demand. I am not running a charity...for some of the richest people in the world," he said. "Someone can go and live somewhere else if they want to. I have a waiting list from here to Washington."

The duke describes himself as a liberal Whig and his aides advise the uninitiated to address him as "Your Grace."

The first duke was Hugh Lupus, a Master of the Horse, who was awarded the title in 1874 for philanthropic works. The first recorded Hugh Lupus was William the Conqueror's huntsman whose contribution at the Battle of Hastings won him Chester as a gift.

The duke's treasure-filled family home is a 12-bedroom modern glass and white tile structure his father built in 1973 to replace a Victorian palace that was demolished.

In his spare time, Grosvenor enjoys hunting deer and grouse. He likes scuba diving, too: "It's rather peaceful at the bottom of the sea."

It's less peaceful on the Warrington site. News cameras click, questions are asked. Then the duke shakes a few hands, hops behind the wheel of his dark blue Jaguar, and sweeps off.

With two honks and a wave.

Two Palestinians die in retaliation

JERUSALEM (AP) — Pro-PLO leaders of the Palestinian uprising issued a rare call Saturday for retaliatory slayings of Israelis. Two teen-agers shot by soldiers died of their wounds and 16 were reported injured in clashes.

The deaths increased the number of Palestinian fatalities in the 17-month-old uprising to 494. Twenty-two Israelis have been killed.

Also Saturday, Israeli police said they were investigating the death of a 32-year-old Palestinian whose body was found at the Jewish factory in the West Bank where he worked as a night watchman.

The latest deaths came a day after a gun and grenade battle in the West Bank that claimed the lives of an Israeli soldier and three Palestinians.

It was the first gun battle reported during the uprising between Israeli soldiers and Palestinians, who generally have attacked troops with stones and firebombs.

A leaflet issued by underground leaders of the uprising who are linked to the Palestine Liberation Organization said "the enemy should pay an expensive price for its crimes."

"The Unified National Leadership of the Uprising calls on the strike forces to kill a settler or a soldier for every martyr of our sons," said the leaflet, the 40th published in the territories since the start of the anti-Israeli rebellion.

Uprising leaders have made repeated calls for attacks on Israeli targets, but in the past have stopped short of urging retaliatory killings. Most attacks on Israelis during the uprising have been by stonings or firebombs, which have often not been lethal.

The underground leaflet urged Arab countries "to work on liquidating" Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's plan for elections in the occupied territories when they convene for a summit in Morocco this week.

It also supported the killing of Palestinian collaborators with Israel.

PLO chief Yasser Arafat warned that the use of arms may increase if Palestinian deaths continue to climb.

"So far our people refrained from using arms in resisting the occupation forces, but the Israelis should understand that our patience is limited," Arafat told reporters Saturday in Baghdad, Iraq.

The army maintained a curfew on most of the Gaza Strip. Most of the territory's 700,000 residents have been confined indoors for nearly a week.

Mazni Abu Hatla, 13, of the Gaza town of Rafah, died in a hospital Saturday, Arab reports said. He was shot in the chest Friday during a riot, according to the reports.

Ali Abdallah Mohammed Abdallah, 18, of El Khader in the West Bank, also died Saturday. He was shot in the head in a clash May 10, Arab reports said.

Edward Kennedy arrives for Mexico visit

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was greeted by reporters and foreign ministry officials upon arriving here for a four-day unofficial visit to include meetings with President Carlos Salinas de Gortari and peasant workers.

The Democrat from Massachussetts arrived in Mexico City about 2:30 a.m. Saturday on a commercial flight. He was accompanied by his sisters Jean and Eunice and nephews Steve and William.

Kennedy is scheduled to be in Mexico through Tuesday, when he will return to the United States.

"I want to say how honored we are to be in Mexico," Kennedy said upon his arrival at the capital's international airport.

"In the nine years since my last visit here, much has changed in both our countries," he said. "As we approach a new decade, new challenges and new opportunities demand bold, and progressive leadership.

"I know that Mexico has already taken significant steps to meet these challenges, and I commend President Salinas for his courage."

Kennedy is scheduled to meet with Salinas Monday afternoon at the Los Pinos presidential residence in the nation's capital.

He also is to meet with Rosario Ibarra de Piedra, a human rights activist and member of the Revolutionary Workers Party; and former Michoacan state Gov. Cuauhtemoc Cardenas, who in the past has represented a variety of left to center political parties. Ibarra and Cardenas were both unsuccessful presidential candidates against Salinas in the July 1988 election.

Salinas was the candidate of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or the PRI.

Kennedy also is to meet with members of the conservative National Action Party.

Kennedy's schedule for Saturday included meetings with Mexico City Mayor Manuel Camacho Solis and federal Attorney General Enrique Alvarez del Castillo.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviet officer wounded, requests asylum in U.S.

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — A Soviet air force captain was wounded by gunfire as he fled a Soviet airport in a fighter jet Saturday and flew to Turkey, where he requested political asylum in the United States, Turkish officials said.

The Soviets said the officer had been discharged from flying for health reasons and that he shot and wounded a sentry before stealing the MiG-29 and flying it to Turkey. The Soviets asked Turkish officials to return the pilot. The pilot, Capt. Alexander Zuyev, 28, was wounded in the right arm when he was fired o while taking off from a Soviet airport north of the Black Sea City of Batumi, said Turkish Foreign Ministry spokesman Inal Batu.

The pilot underwent surgery and was in good condition at the Black Sea University Medical School Hospital in Trabzon, where he landed, Batu told reporters. Zuyev asked for U.S. asylum while being questioned in Trabzon, said the city's governor, Enver Hizlan.

The request was forwarded to the Interior Ministry.

U.S. Embassy officials in the capital, Ankara, refused to comment on the subject. In Washington, State Department spokesman Adam Shub said only that the United States "understands a Soviet MiG has landed at Trabzon."

He said the United States "has been in touch with the Turkish government" about the incident. When asked if an asylum request had been received, Shub said, "I have nothing for you on that."

6,000 watches crushed

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Police used a steamroller Saturday to crush about 6,000 watches with famous but phony brand names, part of a crackdown on Bangkok's booming market in fake luxury items.

Crushed on the street in front of a riverside police station were watches carrying brand names such as Cartier, Rolex, Gucci, Omega, Longines and Seiko.

The watches are openly sold at numerous street stalls in the Thai capital. A fake Rolex sells for about $35, compared with more than $1,000 for some authentic models.

The United States in particular has complained about Thailand's wholesale piracy of foreign goods, patents, copyrights and trademarks.

7 convicted in toxic oil case

MADRID, Spain (AP) — A court on Saturday convicted seven people on public health, negligence and fraud charges but acquitted them of manslaughter in the sale of counterfeit cooking oil that caused nearly 700 deaths.

Six others were convicted of lesser health violations and fraud charges, and 24 of the original 37 defendants were acquitted.

Hundreds of people affected by the oil shouted "Murderers! We want justice!" as the verdicts were read.

Special riot police were called in to clear the courtroom. Police outside the court fired rubber bullets in the air to disperse hundreds of the afflicted and their families, who broke windows as they tried to get back inside.

Police arrested at least one woman and several people fainted, but no injuries were reported.

Thousands of people are still suffering from the oil, which affected their lungs and nervous systems, and the government has paid more than $400 million for their health care. Although prosecutors had demanded long prison terms for the principal defendants, the maximum penalty was 20 years.

The defendants included importers, commodities dealers and retailers. Prosecutors say they conspired in the spring of 1981 to sell as cheap olive oil rapeseed oil that had been adulterated with aniline dye and intended for industrial use only.

Vendors later sold the oil in plastic jugs at weekly fairs and markets in Spain.

Mudslide deaths total 37

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — A mudslide caused by heavy rain swept down a hillside slum and swallowed a motel, killing seven people and raising to 37 the number of deaths during two days of flooding, officials said.

The latest mudslide occurred in a slum of Salvador, a coastal city 1,055 miles northeast of Rio, said Fire Department Col. Antonio da Silva Carrilho.

The wave of mud blasted through a concrete wall alongside the motel and crushed a row of eight homes at the base of the hill,(he said. The motel was not frequented by tourists.

"The death count will keep rising," he said. "It's still raining hard and flood waters are rising."

More than 3,000 Salvador residents dwellers lost their homes in floods in the past two days and were being sheltered in schools, churches and a soccer stadium, the fire chief said.

Pyramid gets facelift

GIZA PLATEAU, Egypt (AP) — The Great Pyramid of Cheops, the most famous of ancient Egypt's royal tombs, was declared safe for tourists and reopened Saturday for the first time in nine months.

A Dutch woman and an American student were the first of the scores of tourists who waited under the hot Egyptian sun to tour the pyramid.

Since August, workers had been sealing cracks, reinforcing limestone slabs for safety and clearing vermin from the inside of the magnificent structure, which now boasts television monitors.

The restoration project was the first step in a five-year plan to transform the pyramid area, including the Sphinx, into an open-air museum.

Gasping after the 155-foot climb to the King's Chamber, Sophie D'Lang of Rotterdam said she and her husband were spending the last day of a vacation in Egypt.

The Great Pyramid is Egypt's top tourist attraction, and tourist officials protested when it was closed Aug. 15.

Honduran official criticizes scheme

By DORALISA PILARTE

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — U.S. officials who hatched the Iran-Contra arms deal took advantage of the United States' good relations with Honduras, the former head of the Honduran military says.

But retired Gen. Walter Lopez Reyes said he has no knowledge that President Bush was involved in any deal through which Honduras would receive aid in exchange for supporting covert aid to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Lopez was armed forces chief from April 1984 to February 1986, which covered the period during which U.S. officials reputedly sold arms to Iran in exchange for aid to the Nicaraguan Contras.

Lopez was critical of the 1985 U.S. program to give Nicaraguan rebels covert lethal aid and of the man who ran it, Oliver North.

"I always saw how it was going to affect Honduras, because of how it (the plan) was conceived," he said. "It was done behind the back of Congress, behind the back of the general public, lying publicly.

Congress banned military aid to the Contras during part of the time Lopez was in office.

The aid scheme has raised questions about whether Bush, vice president at the time, was involved. North, an ex-National Security Council aide, was convicted May 4 of aiding and abetting an obstruction of Congress, altering and destroying classified documents and accepting an illegal gratuity.

The controversy over the aid and alleged political arrangements has touched not only Bush, but Lopez and Roberto Suazo Cordova, Honduran president from 1982 to 1986.

Lopez, a 46-year-old career officer whose early retirement was considered by some Hondurans to be a result of U.S. pressure, won't name names.

He says he is writing a book in which "everything will come out." He said he also fears retribution, but won't elaborate.

In a recent interview at his modest appliance store, Lopez spoke with some bitterness about what he called the "atrocious policy" in Honduras of "the North group."

He declined to be specific about who was in "the North group," but said, "They came down here like entrepreneurs ... buying favors, buying consciences."

Lopez in October 1985 seized a planeload of war materiel meant for the Contras and returned it to Miami. He apparently was upset that Mario Calero, brother of Contra directorate member Adolfo Calero, showed up in the plane with two television camera crews.

"When I was told of this, I ordered that they should not leave the plane," Lopez said. "Then I told President Suazo that it should be returned to Miami."

Suazo ordered the shipment sent back.

"The (North) group tried to influence us into letting it go," Lopez said. "But that was covert aid, and they wanted us to leave it alone."

The New York Times last week reported a December 1985 memo from North to John M. Poindexter, his then-boss on the National Security Council, who was about to visit Honduras and meet with Lopez.

Panamanian rebels rally despite ban

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — The three top opposition leaders defied a ban on rallies and marched through the streets on Saturday, their first public appearance since they were attacked and beaten 10 days ago.

Presidential candidate Guillermo Endara and vice presidential candidates Ricardo Arias Calderon and Guillermo Ford were assaulted by paramilitary forces supporting Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega on May 10.

That was the day the government, controlled by Noriega, the Defense Forces chief, annulled the May 7 election.

Independent observers say the opposition candidates were leading the Noriega-picked government candidates in the national election when Noriega's troopers seized election ballots.

The government on Saturday prohibited "marches, meetings, public demonstrations or caravans of vehicles" by any political organization until at least June 5.

"The prohibition does not have any meaning to us," Endara said as he wended through an outdoor market on this capital's eastern outskirts. The stop was one of six made by a caravan of about 20 vehicles.

The motorcade briefly blocked traffic on some major arteries leading into the capital. Police watched but took no action.

At one point the candidates met with Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa., who headed a delegation named by President Bush to observe the May 7 election. The delegation claimed Endara won the election.

In a departure statement at the Howard Air Force Base, Murtha said he had returned to Panama Saturday morning to inspect conditions at American bases, confer with U. S. Embassy officials and meet with opposition leaders and Archbishop Marcos McGrath, the Roman Catholic primate of Panama.

TAME gives youths chance to explore

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Almost every little boy has scribbled a far-out rocketship or a sleek, screaming fighter jet with enough machine guns to mow down an entire country in five minutes.

Alamo Junior High School seventh-grader Michael Nunn began drawing his flying machines at the age of 10. But it wasn't until Michael joined the Texas Alliance for Minorities in Engineering chapter in Midland a year ago that he realized his interests could go further than doodlings on a notepad.

Now Michael, 13, wants to be an aerospace engineer.

TAME, a program sponsored by about 20 area oil companies and other technical businesses, encourages junior high and high school students, especially especially members of minority groups, to pursue careers in engineering or other technical fields.

Daniel Sanchez, an alliance adviser and production engineer for Conoco Inc. in Midland, said another TAME goal is to encourage more minority enrollment in college.

Since its resurrection five years ago, Midland's TAME chapter has grown from about 10 to more than 50 students and involves students from every Midland Independent School District junior high and high school, Sanchez said. TAME is not exclusively for minorities, although the group is more than 90 percent minority, Sanchez added.

The alliance, which also has a state chapter, provides its students with field trips, engineering contests and sometimes even tutoring and career guidance, Sanchez said. Some TAME sponsors, he said, employ the students for the summer.

"We feel it's an opportunity for the kids to pursue an occupation that's going to have some monetary rewards," Sanchez said. "Some of our sponsors right now are past TAME students."

TAME advisers also encourage the students to take classes that will help them down the road in their science-related studies.

"You can't really decide you want to be an engineer when you leave high school if you haven't had enough math and science classes," Sanchez said.

The students compete at state contests in events such as the egg drop, bridge building, oil derrick construction and golf-ball catapult. All but one involve creating an engineering marvel able to withstand physical abuse.

For the egg drop, students use certain specifications to design a container that can be dropped from 20 feet in the air without leaving a shattered egg.

Small wooden bridges, made from an assigned kit, must be designed to hold various amounts of weight. In a similar contest, a sturdy oil derrick must be built with wooden toothpicks.

An event sans the destruction of the creation is the golf-ball catapult. For this, students must use a conventional mousetrap to build a catapult that will fling a golf ball that will fly far and straight.

But TAME isn't all bridge-busting, egg-cracking and golf-ball-slinging.

The students also have attended TAME engineering seminars in Arlington and taken trips to places like Carlsbad Caverns in New Mexico to learn about the geology.

Students can't just jump into being a TAME member when they feel like it. Membership is based on a 15-point system.

Those interested in becoming a TAME member gain points by attending meetings and events. Additional points are awarded to contest winners.

Being in TAME has helped Michael Nunn realize that the sky isn't necessarily the limit for his career goals.

"They said nothing can stop you and to go on and do what you want to do," said Michael, who has about 10 classmates involved in TAME. "That's what I'm trying to do. I'd like to build a space ship that goes real far and to different planets.

"I was planning to be a baseball player. When I finish playing baseball, I plan to lay back on aerospace engineering."

Chelsi Childers, 12, enjoys a ride on a specially designed merry-go-round that accommodates children with or without handicaps. This and other play equipment is featured at the new Chris Davidson Opportunity Park which opens today at 3 p.m.

New park will provide unique opportunity

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The late Chris Davidson's degenerative muscular disorder robbed him of fundamental childhood rights such as playing in a sandbox or getting dizzy on a merry-go-round.

But that injustice suffered by Chris and other children with physical handicaps will never again occur in Midland.

Nearly 1½ years and $500,000 later, the Chris Davidson Opportunity Park will open today at a 3 p.m. ceremony open to the public.

Built on 1.3 acres at 800 Ventura Blvd., the park was designed to accommodate children with or without handicaps. Nationally, only two others exist — one in Dallas and the other outside Chicago.

There are ramps instead of steps. There is padded Astroturf instead of grass. The sand is only in boxes and not on the ground. And there is more than one variety of swing set.

But that's where the differences stop.

The playground equipment suits children with handicaps as well as those without. Parents can sit peacefully on one of the park benches and — for the first time — watch all playing together.

It is hoped the park will further the educational endeavors of the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens.

"Mainstreaming" or bringing people with handicaps into settings where there are people without handicaps is the primary mission of the park.

"If they play together they never see a need for separation," explained Ray Unterbrink, MARC executive director.

If it were not for Chris' father, Steve Davidson, the park would not have been built.

Chris was a medical wonder of sorts. Born with a cleft lip and palate Sept. 15, 1980, the blond child suffered from muscular dystrophy, diabetes and expressive aphasia (a learning disorder that prevents speech).

Chris didn't know he was "different," his mother recalled. "And he always made us realize he wasn't different."

Flying home from Dallas in November 1987, Davidson pondered the potential of creating a park in Midland similar to the one he'd just seen outside the hospital where his son Chris was being treated.

The plane landed that November 1987 evening and Davidson got to work.

"Not one person turned us down" as contributions for a park were solicited, remembered Jan Davidson. "We're grateful for all the people who made it possible.

"All our family is touched by it," she said.

MARC directors were also astounded with the community support, added Guy McCrary, president of the MARC board of directors. "This is certainly a lasting testimony to the community's belief in our cause."

Second-grade instructor April teacher of the month

From Staff Reports

Wilma Roberts, a Parker Elementary School second-grade teacher, has been selected by the Midland Chamber of Commerce as teacher of the month for April.

The 22-year veteran of education has spent 14 years in Midland Independent School District, six of them at Parker.

The following are excerpts from the letters of recommendation submitted for her nomination for this honor:

"I love her and I know she loves me," pupil Jennifer Hochman states. "And my mom and dad think she made my writing really improve this year. I think Mrs. Roberts is the best teacher I will ever have."

Pupil Angie Harris stated, "I think Mrs. Roberts should be teacher of the month because she is so nice to us kids and she makes school so fun. I wish that she could always be my teacher."

And, here's what parent Donna Harris said:

"How do you begin to explain how wonderful this lady is as a teacher? She has had such a wonderful effect on my son.

"I am a PTA officer and spend many hours at Quanah Parker and observe many teachers and many situations and never have I seen one handle children as well as Mrs. Roberts.

Veterans gather to remember

Yes sir, that's their baby.

And after 45 years, nine of the 10 original crew members of the U.S. Air Force's flying World War II fortress — Shoo, Shoo Baby — have reunited in Midland to remember her.

The weekend reunion for the aging crew began Friday with a tour of Joe Mabee's collection of restored warbirds and continued Saturday with a visit to the remains (an old hangar and runways) of Rattlesnake Bomber Base at Pyote where the crew trained together.

The old training base had a "very, very deserted look about it," said Larry Sylvester of Pittsburgh, Pa., who navigated Shoo, Shoo Baby. "It just told me very graphically how time does fly. Nobody escapes it."

Oddly enough, Shoo, Shoo Baby remains the last flyable World War II B-17 bomber — with a combat record — in existence today; and her crew also appears to have weathered the years very well.

Permian Basin area sales tax rebates continue their climb

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland and Odessa's one-cent sales tax rebates continued to follow the upward trend during the month of May, according to figures released by the State Comptroller of Public Accounts.

Midland's check totaling $941,422 came in 16.5 percent higher than the comparable payment for the same period in 1988, bringing the city in at $3.5 million for the year to date.

Odessa's sales tax rebates climbed .46 percent in May, with a check totaling $754,380 compared to the $750,904 reported during May 1988. That city's year-to-date payment now stands at $2.9 million.

In releasing the information last week, State Comptroller Bob Bullock described the rising figures as "great" for state and local governments.

"We've watched sales tax rebates across the state grow by more than 11 percent overall this year," Bullock said in a prepared statement. "More money is being pumped into our economy, which is great for the state and for local governments."

May's checks represented sales taxes collected in March by monthly filers and for the first quarter of 1989 by quarterly filers. The deadline for monthly and quarterly taxpayers to file sales tax reports was April 20.

On a statewide basis, the State Comptroller reported checks totaling $117.8 million sent to 1,047 cities that impose local sales tax at either one or one-half percent.

The city of Houston received the largest check, totaling $20.1 million, an increase of 5.7 percent over the city's payment in May 1988.

The state's six metropolitan transit authorities and one city transit department received a combined $54.8 million — up 9.2 percent compared to May 1988.

Houston also grabbed the largest transit authority payment — $21.5 million — which is a 6 percent increase over the same period last year.

Midland County, which began collecting a half-cent sales tax in January 1988, received a $463,632 installment this month, bringing its year-to-date total to $1.8 million — an increase of 108 percent increase over last year's figures.

Other West Texas cities also reaped sales tax increases.

■ Andrews' payment of $68,760 came in 3.5 percent higher than the same reporting period last year, bringing brings that city in at $263,802 for the year-to-date.

■ Big Spring received $185,158 for a sales tax payment — a .83 percent increase over the same period in 1988. To date, the city's total stands at $623,670.

■ Stanton's payment of $8,460 was 7.17 percent more than its check sent in May 1988. So far this year, sales tax rebates to Stanton have totaled $27,438.

Some days make you feel lower than underside of a snake

Have you ever had one of those days when everything goes wrong?

And I mean everything.

We all suffer through minor distractions from time to time, of course, but every once in awhile you get one of those days that can make you feel lower than the underside of a rattlesnake, which, I think you will all agree, is pretty darn low.

Ott

It happened to me the other day.

It was Wednesday.

In a nutshell, this is how things went for poor little old Gary.

It started innocently enough.

At 7:15 a.m. I dropped my car off at the shop for some "minor" work. I figured a thermostat and some brake fluid would do it. Fifty bucks tops.

At 11:45 a.m. my phone rang. It was my friendly mechanic with some delightful news. "If I tell you about your car do you promise not to write about it?"

"Sure," I lied.

He then gave me the gory details. Let's put it this way. A mere $462.75 ought to cover it, thank you very much.

But that wasn't all.

There was another problem. Parts would have to be ordered and, unfortunately, my car was made in France. That means at least a week's delay. Apparently they are going to have to hand-deliver the parts from Paris.

"One more thing," the mechanic, who is a friend mine, added. "You can't drive the car during that time. You might burn up the engine."

So what do you do?

I'll tell you what you do. You call a car rental place. "No problem," the friendly man at the car rental place said. "We can deliver you a car this afternoon. All we need is a $150 deposit, proof of insurance and your driver's license number."

Ahhh, my driver's license. A quick check indicated mine expired last month.

"Well ain't this dandy," I muttered to no one in particular. But not to panic.

I made a quick decision to borrow a friend's car and to head to the DPS office to get the license renewed. That seemed easy enough. But first a phone call had to be made. I asked the officer who answered the phone if it would be OK if I drove to the DPS office with an expired license.

"I can't tell you to do that," the officer said. "Your license is expired."

An awkward silence.

"Yeah, well, what if I get out there without getting caught?" I coyly asked. "Will you give me a ticket then?"

"Naw," he said. "But remember, I'm not advising you to do that."

"Yes sir," I reply.

Fifteen minutes later I pulled up to the DPS office without being ticketed. Let's call that a minor upset victory for the home team.

But my problems weren't over. No, indeed. They were just beginning.

Getting a driver's license renewed is normally a simple endeavor. You fill out a form saying you have never had any of the weird diseases that are listed on a sheet of paper and then you take a "simple" eye test. The entire ordeal should last no more than five minutes.

I passed the disease part with flying colors. So it was on to the eye chart. No sweat, I thought, I have perfect eye sight.

Right?

Wrong.

A very nice woman was administering the test.

"Read the numbers on Line 5," she instructed.

"Sure," I replied. "Let's see. That's a 4, I think, then a 6 ... and a 2..1..3." I looked at her with a hopeful smile.

She shook her head sadly. "You want to try it again?"

No problem, I said, and quickly rattled off five more numbers.

Another sad shake of the head.

This continued for most of the afternoon. Finally, after guessing every number conceivable, I passed.

"That was perfect," she said. I think I detected just a hint of sarcasm in her voice.

But not to worry, I thought. I still had time to make a 4 p.m. meeting back at the office. If I hurried. Which I did.

That turned out to be mistake No. 458 of the day. Flashing lights approached me from behind. I pulled over. Five minutes later I folded the speeding ticket, placed it my wallet and thanked the officer for doing his job so well.

It was then that I took a deep breath and begged God to just end it all right there.

"I give up," I said, looking to the heavens. "Take me away."

He didn't. Instead, He had one more surprise for me.

At 11:30 p.m. I pulled into my apartment complex. I got out of my rent car, looked again to the heavens, said "Why me?" and headed for the door.

Surprise. No key.

For some reason I began to laugh uncontrollably. "This is great," I said aloud while heading for the main office to awaken my landlord. "This is the perfect ending to a beautiful day."

And it was.

Thank God for small miracles.

Besides Sylvester, other members of the original crew included Robert Langford of Dozier, Ala., co-pilot and then pilot; Charles R. Braman of Sequim, Wash., radio operator; Edward Gallagher of Philadelphia, Pa., tail-gunner; and Eldon Hughes of Stockbridge, Ga., waste-gunner.

Also, Harry "Swede" Soderberg of Odessa, flight engineer and top turrett-gunner; George Bogert of Baltimore, Md., ball turrett-gunner; Jim Fletcher of Colorado Springs, Colo., co-pilot; and Chuck Borchert of Odessa, waste-gunner.

Shoo, Shoo Baby (her only other name was B-17G-35-BO42-32076) rolled out of the Boeing-Seattle plant on Jan. 17, 1944, and was delivered to the U.S. Army Air Force on Jan. 21. Its first assigned station was Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio.

On March 1, 1944, the bomber was flown to England, arriving at the Burtonwood Distribution Center, south of Liverpool, on March 2.

And after receiving some equipment and marking updates to suit it for operation in the European Theatre of Operations, it was assigned to the 91st Bombardment Group of the Eighth U.S. Air Force, which was based in Bassingbourn, some 35 miles north of London.

"It was the workhorse and the glamour plane of World War II," said Langford, who flew as co-pilot for six missions and then moved up to pilot the plane.

"Baby" got her name from the popular song, "Shoo, Shoo Baby," written in 1943 by Phil Moore and recorded by the Andrews sisters. Crew members say the song was a favorite of Crew Chief Technical Sergeant Henry Cordes, who picked that name for his plane, and then had the title painted on each side of the nose as per common practice.

Later, Corp. Tony Starcer, an artist who earned extra money by applying artwork to the noses of 91st B.G. planes, added a pinup girl in the style of Alberto Vargas, a popular illustrator for Esquire Magazine.

This particular Eighth Air Force B-17 had a career that was certainly unique; in that it survived 23 combat missions over Europe. Ironically, the plane was interned in Sweden for the duration of the war after that 23rd mission.

Each of the bombing missions over Germany, France and Poland offered some spectacular moments for the crew. But they said nothing could match Gallagher's tale of one particular flight over Germany when his guns jammed just as an ME-109 was approaching his tail.

"There's no way to explain how I felt," he said.

Dodging Nazi fighters and flak over Europe undoubtedly left the crew with a fatalistic attitude on virtually "every flight," said Braman, who now lives in Sequim, Wash.

"At night when you got back to town, you'd go dancing to unwind," he said.

Currently owned by the U.S. Air Force Museum, "Baby" was discovered in 1969 in a field near Creil, France, by Australian aviation writer Steve Birdsall, who brought the discovery to the attention of the 91st Bombardment Group Memorial Association and the U.S.A.F. Museum.

After negotiating the transfer of the plane to the U.S., the the unflyable hulk was shipped piece-by-piece to Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, and later to Dover, Del., where it was restored by 512th Antique Restoration Group.

Costs of the 10-year project were met by fund allocated to the U.S.A.F. Museum, private donations, and the sale of B-17 memorabilia.

The real homecoming for the 91st B.G. straggler came on Oct. 15, 1988, when the plane arrived at its permanent home at Wright-Patterson, the site of the U.S.A.F. Museum.

The ground vehicle that led "Baby" to the reviewing stand at the museum site was a World War II vintage weapons carrier, and was manned by personnel wearing period uniforms. The Air Force band played wartime songs, including, of course, "Shoo, Shoo Baby."

Of the 10 original crew members, Langford noted that five were in attendance for the welcome home party.

When asked how the 91st Bombardment Group felt when they saw the plane after more than 40 years, Sylvester said, "Everybody cried."

TEACHER

"For example, my son injured his leg and was restricted to home because the leg had to be elevated. I went to school to get his work and Mrs. Roberts insisted that I bring him to class, place him on a lawn chair, elevate his leg on pillows and allow him to resume in the classroom.

"He was thrilled! She even went so far as to allow all the boys in the class to bring in a cafeteria tray and eat lunch in the room with him. How much more accommodating can one be?"

Parents Jim and Sheila Gillespie stated:

"It is with great pleasure that we nominate Wilma Roberts, second-grade teacher at Quanah Parker, as teacher of the month. Wilma Roberts is indeed a second-grader's 'best friend.'

"I have been in her classroom to assist on a weekly basis this year. She has a special relationship with her entire class that is a pleasure to watch. She knows how to get her students to give their best.

"She well deserves this honor and will always be our most remembered teacher. The public schools need more like her."

Mrs. Roberts is married to Donald B. Roberts and is the mother of two children, K'Lynn Roberts, an eight-grader at Goddard Junior High School and Wilson Roberts, a fifth-grader at Fannin Elementary School.

Mrs. Roberts has a bachelor of science degree from Howard Payne University and a master of education degree from the University of Texas at El Paso.

TAME

Alamo Principal David Adams said TAME seems to have made a positive difference in Michael and his classmates' lives.

"It's a great program to encourage kids to do something they might think they were excluded from," Adams said. "It teaches them that if you can dream it, you can achieve it."

Lee High School senior Cassandra Riggs, 17, said she joined TAME three years ago because of the interesting challenges it presents, like the bridge building and egg drop.

"It's thinking and doing things that you didn't think you could do," said Miss Riggs, who plans to study either biology or biomedical engineering at the University of Dallas and eventually become an obstetrician.

PARK

Staffers from the city of Midland and the Midland Independent School District assisted Unterbrink and the Davidsons in the planning stages.

Unterbrink recalled flying into Midland several weeks ago and the rainbow-colored park "just jumped up" at him. "It was wonderful. I thought to myself, 'Is this what we've really built?'

"Taking a concept to its fruition is an experience not a lot of people get to go through," the executive director added.

Originally the facility was to be named Opportunity Park. But a somber turn of events changed that.

Chris died Feb. 6, 1989, in Midland of viral pneumonia. Fluid had gathered in his lungs, weakened by muscular dystrophy.

Fifteen days after his death, MARC directors passed a resolution renaming the yet-to-be-built park after Chris, a young man who had touched the hearts of all who knew him.

"Chris had, like so many other kids in our community, a number of handicaps. And yet he was an example of endurance and perserverance throughout his life," recalled McCrary.

"Brubber's park," as toddler Katie Davidson refers to it, will "stand as a beacon of learning and understanding that everyone has value," the father hopes.

"And it is something that will help us as the years go by remember how special Chris was to us."

England had uncorker of bottles

In 1585 England had an official uncorker of ocean bottles because Queen Elizabeth I forbade anyone, on pain of death, to open a drifting bottle containing a message because a letter from Mary Queen of Scots, then a prisoner in the Tower of London, was found in a bottle on the beach at Dover. Addressed to the Duke of Lorraine, it asked him to organize Europe against Elizabeth.

Gentlemen
I am an American and proud of my heritage. I am also very much aware of the part Religious faith has played in the freedom we, as Americans, now enjoy. Pay raise decision should go to voters

Members of both the U.S. Congress and the Texas Legislature have indicated in recent months that they want more money, but that's about where the comparison ends.

The attempt by Congress to raise members' salaries by 51% came to a screeching halt earlier this year when the public, aroused by the excessive increase and no doubt by reports of the unscrupulous antics of some present and former members, said "no" in a flood of mail and telephone calls to Washington, D.C.

But that wasn't the public's only complaint with the congressional plan. A large percentage of those doing the shouting were outraged because the Congress was attempting to pass the increase on the sly — without even having to go on record as voting for or against the bill.

The move by Texas legislators is being handled much differently and should not evoke such outrage. While voters will have to decide whether the increase is justified, the proposal is at least being put to voters in an upfront fashion. If the state Senate approves the bill, by Tyler Democrat David Hudson, it will appear as a proposed constitutional amendment on the November election ballot.

As written, the bill calls for a tripling of legislators' salaries from $7,200 annually to $22,538. A separate proposal would also raise the per-day allowance of legislators from $30 to $81 when the legislature is in session.

Although the question of raising legislators' salaries might appear simple, there's more involved than a mere gut reaction to hiking salaries for legislators. At issue is the very fabric of what Texas government is supposed to be all about. Should Texas continue to have a "citizen legislature" comprised of individuals from all walks of life who are part-time legislators or would a vote for a legislature made up of more professional politicians be better?

The current low salary — lowest of the 50 states — ensures that those elected to the statehouse must be employed in other ways as well. While some will argue that such a system keeps the legislature from becoming the domain of the rich and powerful, it also seems to assure to an extent that only those who have succeeded in business or professional life can afford to serve there.

Will Texans decide to have a legislature made up of farmers, ranchers and ministers, as well as attorneys, doctors and housewives or do we want a more professional governmental crew?

The Senate should pass Hudson's bill and it should be placed before voters in November. What's being discussed could determine the future of state government in Texas and how well it represents the interests of all Texans.

The questions involved are far-reaching and should be debated and pondered in depth. But putting the matter to voters via a proposed amendment, at any rate, is far preferable to what the Congress in Washington, D.C. tried. At least that gives the people paying the bill a say in the decision.

Another View:

Getting out the vote

When the country held the presidential election last November, Americans yawned. Barely half the voting age population voted — the lowest turnout since 1924. Why? The arid campaign didn't help. But neither did America's system of registering voters — a 50-state hodgepodge so daunting that only two-thirds of the voting age population is registered. The House and Senate are now advancing similar proposals that would make it easier for Americans to register and vote in federal elections. The proposals make excellent sense.

One measure would require all states to allow eligible voters to apply for registration by mail rather than appear in person at a municipal office. Astoundingly, only 23 states now permit mail registration.

A second would require states to provide registration forms to eligible citizens when they apply for a driver's license. A third proposal would allow voters to register at public and private agencies, like schools and welfare offices. A fourth would prohibit states from knocking individuals off the rolls just because they didn't vote in the last election.

Would simplified registration improve poor turnouts? Even though the percentage of registered voters who don't vote has declined since 1960 (suggesting broader reasons for low turnout), nearly 8 in 10 of those registered do in fact go to the polls. Thus the more registered voters the better.

The climate for change is favorable. Voter turnout has long been a Democratic cause because of low participation among black and poor voters, who typically support Democrats. Republicans, meanwhile, have argued that easy access invites fraud, and even now they remain adamantly opposed to the same-day registration proposed by the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

But the Republican Party now senses an opportunity to build support among highly mobile young professionals, who, polls suggest, tend to be increasingly Republican.

That may not be the noblest motive for supporting change. But motives aside, the net result could be a bipartisan boost for a nation that prides itself on democracy yet needlessly discourages democratic participation.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, May 21, the 141st day of 1989. There are 224 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 21, 1927, Charles A. Lindbergh landed his "Spirit of St. Louis" near Paris, completing the first solo airplane flight across the Atlantic Ocean. Lindbergh covered a distance of more than 3,600 miles in 33½ hours.

On this date:

In 1542, Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto died while searching for gold along the Mississippi River.

In 1832, the first Democratic National Convention got under way in Baltimore. The delegates would nominate President Andrew Jackson for a second term.

In 1840, New Zealand was declared a British colony.

In 1881, Clara Barton founded the American Red Cross.

In 1904, Jazz musician Fats Waller was born.

In 1919, a proposed federal amendment to give women the right to vote passed the U.S. House of Representatives by a vote of 304 to 89.

In 1924, 14-year-old Bobby Franks was murdered in a "thrill killing" by Nathan Leopold Jr. and Richard Loeb, two students at the University of Chicago.

In 1941, a German U-boat sank the American freighter SS Robin Moore in the South Atlantic.

In 1948, in a message to Congress, President Harry Truman urged statehood for Alaska.

In 1956, the United States exploded the first airborne hydrogen bomb over Bikini Atoll in the Pacific.

In 1959, the musical "Gypsy," inspired by the life of stripper Gypsy Rose Lee, opened on Broadway with Ethel Merman in the role of Gypsy's mother, Rose.

In 1968, the nuclear-powered submarine Scorpion, with 99 men aboard, was last heard from. (The remains of the sub were later found on the ocean floor 400 miles southwest of the Azores.)

Israel leery of Arafat peace musings

JERUSALEM — Yasir Arafat says he wants peace, and that gives people around the world a reason to hope for an end to the endemic violence in the Middle East. But in Israel, Arafat's promises are falling on deaf ears. In this small country, there is little to comfort those who have lost loved ones to terrorist attacks or military service.

Jack Anderson

While Arafat may be sending messages of peace, he doesn't speak for all Palestinians. He doesn't even speak for everyone within his own Palestine Liberation Organization. Some members of the PLO have denounced Arafat for his moderation toward Israel. That moderate stance was coaxed out of him last year by U.S. diplomats, with Sweden as an intermediary. After a few false starts, when Arafat's language wasn't quite precise enough to be convincing, he finally said the words everyone had been waiting for: "We totally and absolutely renounce all forms of terrorism, including individual, group and state terrorism."

With a little prodding, Arafat also recognized Israel's right to exist. Since then, PLO leaders, Palestinians and other Arab leaders have been hedging on Arafat's promises. Even Secretary of State James Baker told Congress last month that Arafat can't be expected to control all the Arab factions.

Israelis can't be blamed for scoffing at Arafat's promises. He may mean what he says, but his organization is fractured and some Arabs would just as soon see him dead. What guarantees can he give a nation of people who fear the worst — annihilation?

The renunciation of terrorism by the PLO has not made life any safer for Israelis. What most Palestinians do not seem to understand is that they, individually and collectively, are a threat to Israelis every day. Forest fires are deliberately set. Old people are stabbed while waiting for the bus. Rocks and fire bombs are thrown at moving cars. All have contributed to the deaths of innocent bystanders at the hands of Palestinians advocating an independent Palestinian state right on the borders of Israel.

This is not a foreign war viewed only through the nightly news. Israelis are literally and figuratively a stone's throw away from their worst enemy.

Our sources tell us that the uprising on the West Bank and Gaza is led by radicals who pose a threat not only to Israel but to Arafat's leadership. They aim to make Israel feel the brunt of an uprising, with their ultimate goal a fully independent Palestinian state. Forget partial autonomy or peaceful coexistence. For some Palestinians, only total dominance will do.

Palestinian leaders on the West Bank and Gaza are not taking orders from the PLO, nor do they fear Israeli reprisals against individuals or villages. Their hope is to erode the rule of law in the occupied territories and make it impossible for Israel to govern there.

They have a radical Israeli counterpart — arch conservatives who say harmony is a pipe dream and Israel must put down the uprising with all the force it can muster. "A symbiosis between Israeli and Arab interests ... is in theory desirable, but in practice impossible. Looking for such a symbiosis is a waste of time," says the Jerusalem Institute for Western Defence. The conservative think tank has drafted a position paper on the uprising and the bottom line is, squash the rebellion.

Israel faces some very tough choices. The debate over how to assure peace and safety for its citizens has not reached anything near a consensus. A recent study by the prestigious Jaffe Institute in Israel indicates that negotiations with the Palestinians are inevitable and that a military solution to the uprising is not possible.

While the debate rages, Israel still has the daily irritation of the intifada, or uprising. Israeli soldiers who have a proud heritage of all-out commando warfare are skirmishing with teenagers.

It doesn't play well in the world headlines, and it is causing fits in Congress. Americans get queasy when they see their allies fighting children and bulldozing houses. But they still draw the line at cozying up to Yasir Arafat, promises or no.

RUSSELL BAKER

It's 'feuilletons' for the 'feuilletonist's sake!

Dear Anna: Yes, it is unjust that the dead Picasso's self-portrait fetches $47.9 million while my own little — let us not call them newspaper columns — feuilletons, rather, bring in scarcely enough to support our occasional weekends at Asbury Park.

Russell Baker

But do not encourage me to self-pity. Of course the feuilleton is art, just as the oil painting, Louis Quinze chair and newly discovered Mozart manuscript are art.

I do not weep because the world fails to see an art that is right under its nose, for the feuilleton's day is coming.

Yes, dearest Anna, one day the feuilleton will be recognized as art. Then manuscripts of my little creations will topple records at auctions peopled by the richest feuilleton collectors Japan and Switzerland can produce.

When that day will come I cannot tell you with any exactitude, my love. I fear it will not be until people learn how to pronounce "feuilleton," for — think, my precious — what person so rich that money is nothing more to him than neat piles of junk wants to be known as a collector of something he cannot pronounce?

Yes, I hear your dulcet voice chiding me for using the masculine pronouns "him" and "he" for referring to the "what person" in my rhetorical question. As I told you that night when you came to the window at Dover Beach, I am, alas, an incurable grammatical sexist, the dreadful result of being born too soon to see the light.

Let me confess, and only to you, my passion, that this mark of the archaic male oppressor's prose brutality is deliberately preserved in my feuilletons to provide art scholars of the future with subject matter for their lectures: "The Feuilletonist's Genius: Rooted in Social Perversity?"

Do not call me cynical, Anna. Is it cynical to make posterity believe, when my art is finally recognized, that my life was more interesting than it really was?

By then, I shall have been long dead. No doubt of that, my dear Anna, my earth's delight, so please, do not sob when I say so.

Take comfort as I take comfort from knowing that long after I am gone my feuilletons will be knocked down at auction for prices that could have bought us islands in the Aegean.

No, Anna, we shall have no Aegean isle to call our own in this life, but we will always have that night at Dover Beach in Delaware, we'll always have Asbury Park.

Did you note, dearest one, that besides the $47.9 million paid for the Picasso somebody paid $24.2 million for a canvas that Gauguin painted in Tahiti?

This, and the fact that $53.9 million was recently paid for a van Gogh, confirms my belief that my surest path to record-toppling postmortem money is to have Irving Stone write a popular best seller about me.

What were Gauguin and van Gogh worth at auction before Stone wrote them up in "Lust for Life"? Peanuts, figuratively speaking.

Then of course, there was the movie version with Kirk Douglas as van Gogh and the movie of Somerset Maugham's "Moon and Sixpence" with George Sanders as Gauguin painting nude girls in Tahiti.

My one regret about the feuilleton's not getting its artistic due until I'm gone is that Burt Lancaster will probably be too old to play me.

Darling Anna, imagine the inadequacy of Tom Hanks as the brilliant feuilletonist, exquisitely cruel lover of the many women he needs to fire his creations of the century's most brilliant feuilletons. The part calls for a young Mastroianni.

For movie purposes, I must live as romantically as arthritis will permit in these final years. This requires great effort, and you could help by not writing so angrily about my taking other women to Asbury Park.

Though I do not love them, I need them to complete the portrait of feuilletonist as rat with women, thus assuring my post-mortem success in fictionalized biography, televised mini-series and big-budget movies, all so vital to my hopes for toppling art-auction records.

If, however, you insist on walking out of my life — a great scene for both book and film, incidentally — would you, because of all we have meant to each other, be good enough to ask some of the women at your office if they would like to figure prominently sometime in art history?

I know you won't mind this letter being printed on computer paper. Original longhand versions of my writings will eventually be terribly precious at auction, and anyway the computer printout is easier to read, isn't it.

Passionately yours, etc.

GEORGE F. WILL

Keep praising Gorbachev until it's curfew

WASHINGTON — President Bush is more emphatic than specific in his reiterated prayers for the "success" of Gorbachev's perestroika. Specificity may not be necessary if one assumes that anything would be better than what the Soviet Union was in its first seven decades. But that assumption may be mistaken. If the Soviet Union is going to be more improved in its efficiency than in its intentions, putting enhanced productivity in the service of old expansionist ends, the assumption is dangerous.

George F. Will

The President's thinking was deployed in his Texas A&M speech declaring "containment" a mission accomplished. Now, he intimated, the task is to tidy up the loose ends left by the unraveling of totalitarianism. The aim is "the integration of the Soviet Union into the community of nations."

The phrase "community of nations" may seem harmless if hackneyed. One risks seeming churlish pointing out that it is a sentimentalism, and almost an oxymoron. Different nations involve different notions of justice. A "community" consists of people held together by a broad, deep consensus about justice under a common sovereignty.

Bush's hope soars beyond community: "Perhaps the world order of the future will truly be a family of nations." But the idea of nations comprising a "family" compounds confusion; it is political sentimentality cubed. Families and political institutions are polar opposites. Families are associations of intimacy and affection. Relations between nations can never be like that.

Radically better relations with the Soviet Union should be a snap if the President is correct that perestroika is moving the Soviet Union toward "democratization." However, perestroika is not glasnost, and glasnost is not democracy until it is carried far beyond its current episodes, and then institutionalized. Democracy is not a yearning or mood, it is a complex, durable system of institutions — political (beginning with competing parties), judicial and journalistic.

Now, it would be misleading to weigh Bush's words more carefully than they were used. But words are all we have to think with; they do reveal habits of mind and they can bewitch our intelligence.

In Texas, Bush marveled, "Who would have imagined a Soviet leader who canvasses the sidewalks of Moscow and also Washington, D.C." The relevant Oxford dictionary definition of "canvass" is "the action of personally soliciting votes before an election."

Bush's licentious use of the language of democracy is tame compared with that of the Columbia University professor who said the following about why Reagan and Gorbachev got on so swimmingly: "Gorbachev and Reagan were both country boys from their Midwest regions, both governors of sorts and both anti-establishment populists determined to restore a mythic golden age. Both stirred up the bureaucracy against them and elicited fervent support and fervent opposition."

Rather a lot of wool is packed into the words "of sorts." Being the elected servant of California's electorate and being the appointed instrument of the Politburo are dissimilar apprenticeships. Strange that the Soviet establishment let loose that "populist." And what was the Soviet "golden age"?

Another former governor, Jimmy Carter, who was recently revived by Bush as a counselor, has declared that Gorbachev is "the most humanitarian of the world's leaders." That is about as batty as the Columbia professor's opinion. But the professor at least does point, in his peculiar way, to the supreme question of contemporary politics: "Who is Gorbachev?"

More precisely, the question is: Given what we know about the socialization — education and political — of the Soviet ruling elite, what is it prudent to suspect about the settled aims of the man who has emerged as supreme over that elite?

It used to be said that the four stages of socialism are utopian, scientific, real and curfew. Now, we are told, there is a fifth stage: "Hey, about the last 70 years? We just changed our minds."

It was natural for Reagan, the sentimentalist and romantic, to think that relations between nations could be reduced to sentiments shared by leaders, and to assume, with the parochial cosmopolitanism of a good American, that anyone not actually pointing a cocked pistol to your head probably has sentiments pretty much like yours. The pace and tonality of Bush's response to Gorbachev suggests greater sobriety, a quality not communicated by his language.

However, as the social ground heaves beneath the governments in the capitals of two burnt-out communist revolutions, the language that matters most is body language. It is the stirring of — virtually the creation of — the body politic in the Soviet Union and China. The result may be that fifth stage of socialism. Or the result may be a curfew.

FLORA LEWIS

Gorbachev's policy has impact on NATO

PARIS — Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze of the Soviet Union evened the score a bit in Bonn with his rash threat to break the 1988 treaty eliminating medium-range nuclear missiles if the U.S. sends new short-range missiles to Germany.

Flora Lewis

Shevardnadze apparently couldn't resist the chance to rub salt in the festering German-American quarrel about NATO plans.

That reminder of the remark by his predecessor, old Andrei Gromyko, that there are iron teeth behind the Gorbachev smile will doubtless boomerang, costing Moscow confidence points.

But one big gaffe doesn't mean the Soviets will resume their previous reliable habit of bolstering Western unity with menacing growls.

The problem within NATO will remain unless there is reversal of Gorbachev's new foreign policy. Even then, other changes are battering on the alliance to define its goals after 40 years of containment, which President Bush said had now achieved success.

There is a new generation with new perceptions in West Germany, a yearning to feel less dependent and more in charge of its own fate now that it has mastered economic power.

Only a few years ago the code word for West Germany's angst was "identity." Now it is "sovereignty." And there is a new impatience in deficit-ridden America with the burden of defending the West.

The alliance still doesn't have its own agenda for the rest of the century, and a sense of where it wants to go if Gorbachev is really prepared to deliver on his talk of "defensive sufficiency" and "mutual security."

At the field command level, NATO officers complain they can't get answers from headquarters to their questions about planning for the future.

I suspect this is the real reason for reluctance to negotiate with Moscow on issues that would oblige significant change in NATO's structure and plans, not the oft-cited fear that Soviet peace talk would bamboozle Western publics into abdicating defense.

Paul Nitze, the veteran and hawkish U.S. arms negotiator, points out correctly that "to enter into a negotiation does not mean that you have to concur in the other side's demands. We have had 20 years of experience in demonstrating the reverse."

He was referring to the German desire for the U.S. to start "early" negotiations with Moscow on nuclear weapons up to the 500-kilometer floor of the medium-range treaty.

He recommended that the U.S. agree if Chancellor Helmut Kohl agreed Bonn would hold out for reductions to equal levels "substantially above zero," and the rest of NATO approved.

Secretary of State James Baker has said, however, that if there is to be compromise on the issue at the NATO summit meeting this month, "it won't come from the U.S. or Britain."

Is he waiting for Luxembourg to lead the alliance out of its shoals?

Even at the Vienna conference on conventional arms in Europe, NATO's stand to bring East and West to equal levels from 5 to 10 percent below current arsenals in certain categories represents only a nod at negotiation. It is deliberately a proposal that would mean minimal change for the West.

Inertia and old reflexes have led to a failure to see the point of negotiations.

The NATO commander, Gen. John Galvin, is prepared to make big unilateral cuts in nuclear artillery if he can get new missiles with about 450-kilometer range.

But he would rather forgo obliging the Soviets to cut their much bigger stocks to an equal low level than accept negotiated constraints. Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney argues that Gorbachev might fall, so the West shouldn't make commitments to him.

That's upside-down reasoning. It is precisely to lock in Soviet disarmament, whoever holds power in Moscow, that the U.S. should seek binding accords and insist on verified compliance.

The possibility of his own failure must be on Mr. Gorbachev's mind.

That is why he is trying to shift his power base from the Communist Party's Central Committee to a parliament and to get himself elected president by a much wider, more representative group than the party hierarchy.

No doubt it helps him in the short term while the economy keeps sagging to have some successes to show in foreign policy.

But agreements with the West also serve to cement the direction of change. That is certainly in Western interests. Most of Continental Europe sees it.

Why can't the U.S. and British governments?

BILL MODISETT

Shock of protests will change China

American author E.B. White, who died four years ago, once wrote a generalization of life which noted that, "The only sense that is common in the long run, is the sense of change — and we all instinctively avoid it."

Modisett

Avoidance isn't always possible, however, as evidenced by the protests being staged in Beijing and other Chinese cities in recent days. Sometimes rather than avoiding change, we get carried away by it and before we realize it are in a "new world."

The protests are peaceful and being conducted in hopes of bringing about democratic reforms. That has been said about other revolutions.

Democracy in China? The shock value of such an out-of-the-ordinary change would be staggering for Westerners were it not for the fact that Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev has already been toying with limited capitalist ventures in the Soviet Union, holding elections offering candidates other than the Communist Party faithful, and the like.

If you're wondering what's bringing on these almost unbelievable changes, and where they will lead, join the club. Revolution typically brings change, but as history attests, major political change is rarely followed by the onset of peace, prosperity, and adherence to the principle of human rights. Witness the French Revolution of the late 1700s which, ironically, introduced democratic ideals to France but did not make that country a democracy.

The greatest revolution to bring about a government based on democratic ideals, in modern times at least, was our own American Revolution, also in the late 1700s. It brought representative government to the colonies, but not pure democracy.

The Revolution of 1848 in Europe was staged by liberals and socialists against undemocratic rulers and, unsurprisingly, resulted in increased emigration to the United States. It helped put Louis Napoleon into the French presidency, toppled a number of rulers in other European countries and eventually spread throughout all the countries of Europe.

While the changes that have been and will continue to be ushered in by Gorbachev and the Chinese students will shape new social and, potentially, governmental directions, it's difficult to say what will result.

Man is prone to hope for the best from any change, but that isn't always the result. History confirms that even those revolts led for the stated purpose of bringing about more democratic government have, on occasion, resulted in less of that and more dictatorial rule. The standard rule of thumb is that any major social or governmental change will result in a new — but not necessarily improved — course.

Robert Kennedy said, "Progress is a nice word. But change is its motivator and change has its enemies."

County recognizes importance of victim

Every minute of every day a crime is committed. Someone you know, or possibly someone you love, has been or will be victimized. Our children and elderly are particularly susceptible to victimization and sometimes seem less protected by the justice system than the accused. Drug-related crimes, nationally and locally, are prevalent, and these crimes indirectly touch us all; however, most of us still believe that it's someone else who becomes the crime victim.

We are extremely fortunate in Midland County because our local law enforcement officials recognize the importance of crime victims to the criminal justice system. The support of the Victim Assistance Program, not only by local law enforcement but also by public-spirited citizens such as Maxine Hannifin and members of Neighbors Against Burglaries and Drugs, has established that victims must be treated with dignity and respect to make our system work.

The services of the Victim Assistance Program are available to all innocent victims of crime in Midland County. Trained staff and volunteers are available 24 hours a day to help victims and witnesses recover from the trauma of crime and alleviate their primary difficulties in the judicial process. This assistance is largely provided through on-scene crisis intervention, a 24-hour Hotline, victim and witness referral and notification procedures and community education.

The Victim Assistance Program has established an Emergency Fund for crime victims who need help replacing locks damaged by burglars or who need assistance with medical bills, utilities, food or clothing because of their victimization.

Also, in an effort to meet the growing needs of victims in Midland County, the Victim Assistance Program is presently recruiting potential volunteers for training in victim assistance procedures.

If you have been a victim or would like to offer assistance to crime victims, please get involved and contact program staff at 688-1273.

Christmas in April gets specials thanks

I wish to publicly thank the Christmas in April group that is in the city. My special thanks to Bobby Trimble and all the fine men and women who volunteer their time to such a worhty cause.

April 29th was truly a Christmas when the group arrived at my home, repaired and replaced the things I needed to make my home safe, secure and more comfortable to live in.

I can see no more worthy cause for all the citizens to donate both time and money to. God bless all of you and I truly thank you from the bottom of my heart.

Editorial spreads 'myth' of gains tax

Your recent reprinting of The New York Times editorial castigating President Bush for advocating a lower capital gains tax perpetuates the myth that this tax is only for the rich. Horsefeathers!

A young entrepreneur starts a business on a shoestring and is successful. Or an independent oil operator scrapes together enough money, personal or invested or borrowed, and strikes oil. Each creates jobs and starts the entrepreneur on a long haul to modest wealth.

But if the enterprising businessman sells out to an investor, he realizes a nice profit on his efforts, investment, and talents. With the lower rates of the capital gains tax, he gets to keep more of his profits. And the history of this tax has shown that most of these entrepreneurs start new businesses or projects, creating more new jobs, and paying more taxes.

The push behind these unfounded attacks on this stepping-stone-to-success, the capital gains tax, comes from the ever-active liberals who do not wish people to succeed and rise above their station in society. They, the proponents of the exponentially graduated income tax, the welfare state, and the reverse income tax (which pays one for not earning anything), use it as another means to accomplish their sought-after goal of the redistribution of wealth.

For years, one of the few ways out of the slum was via prizefighting, and many were the Jews, Irish, and blacks who rose above their meager beginnings in this way. And the capital gains tax is the bootstrap by which many an enterprising businessman achieved greater success than he had ever envisaged.

True, some of the rich may also be able to utilize the advantages of the capital gains tax, too, but essentially it is the poor entrepreneur's path to success. In this land of opportunity, economic justice demands that it be lowered!

Worker compenstation reform is necessary

The economy, the employees, and the employers of Texas stand to lose big if the legislature fails to adequately reform the Texas Worker Compensation system.

House Bill 1 is definitely a step forward even though it may not be a final solution. Hopefully it might retard spiraling costs of workers compensation insurance. The Senate is another story as they have yet to come to a positive solution.

For all those concerned I hope the people of Texas realize the importance of this problem and voice their opinion to their legislators now.

Texas has already lost jobs and stands to lose many more. Consumers are going to pay more for goods and services. Industry has and will continue to shy away from the Texas job market.

There is an old saying "pay me now or pay me later" which will be changed to "we paid too much but we're going to pay more" if we don't see some positive actions.

Theft of two special toys upsets family

My 4-year-old's battery-operated truck was stolen from his front yard (next to the house) along with my 2-year-old's riding toy. The truck was bought by his grandma when he was 6-months-old.

She kept the truck in her front room for almost a year and a half. She really couldn't afford the truck, but this was her first grandchild. The truck was a very big thing for her to give.

She died unexpectedly last year and now someone has stolen the gift. We cannot afford to replace the toy.

I just want whoever took it to know that they've broken a lot of hearts. Maybe they could explain this to my son.

In new world drama, China cast as awakening giant

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — China is experiencing some of the most momentously dramatic events in the history of that vast land of 1.7 billion people on which man first appeared 20,000 years ago.

Hearst

What started about a month ago as a peaceful student revolution to replace communist totalitarian rule by a more democratic system reached the brink of a catastrophic tragedy by late Friday.

Following refusal of the young hunger strikers, students and workers to bow to the communist government's ultimatum to disperse and evacuate the central square in Beijing, troops were moved into the capital to impose martial law and forcibly evict the largest and longest freedom demonstration in the 40-year history of Communist China. Violence seemed inevitable.

Announcing that the "Liberation Army" was entering the capital from outside the city, President Yang Shangkun said the situation was "anarchic and chaotic" and the military forces were being brought in to "protect Beijing society, its people and its future." He claimed that a "handful of persons," seeking to overthrow the government, were using the hunger strikers as hostages to coerce and force the Communist Party and government to yield to their political demands.

Started first by courageous students, some of whom nearly died in hunger strikes, and who were later joined by workers, the popular freedom demonstration that totalled a million people on two days this past week. It was one of the greatest spontaneous People Power movements in the history of any civilized country. Regardless of what now happens, it is bound to have far-reaching political, social and economic consequences for the world's most populous nation. It brings to mind Napoleon's warning that China was a "sleeping giant" that should not be awakened.

The original non-violent revolt of Beijing's youth and workers against the failure of communism to provide them with a decent standard of living created a grave crisis for the Communist Party leadership.

It should, however, have come as no surprise. When I visited China in 1982, not long after Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping, who was then and still remains the top Chinese communist ruler, had started his reform movement and began to open up China to western tourists, it seemed clear to me that when the youth and workers of cities like Beijing, Canton and Shanghai discovered the contrast between their way of life and western prosperity, they would eventually demand a change in the system.

In a three-hour interview which members of my family, Kingsbury Smith, our national editor, and I had with the diminutive leader, he clearly indicated his intention to move China away from Marxist dogma toward a capitalistic incentive system. However, he was unable to move fast enough to overcome the economic failure of communism and the great mass of the people remained poor, underfed and increasingly angry.

When the student demonstrations started in Beijing, the communist leadership handled the problem cautiously. The police, while originally ordered to disburse them, were instructed not to use force. This encouraged other students and, eventually, workers to join the movement at first by the thousands, then the tens and hundreds of thousands.

The police, and later, the troops, appeared sympathetic toward the demonstrators. Both sides refrained from trying to harm one another. At one point, the police started singing patriotic songs, and the students sang back at them.

The Communist Party leadership which at first refused a dialogue with the students sought to compromise with them a few days ago. Zhao Ziyang, the Chinese Communist Party leader, sent them a message urging an end to the hunger strike, promising not to punish them, and affirming "their patriotic spirit in calling for democracy and law, opposing corruption and striving for further reform."

The students called off the hunger strike early Saturday (Chinese time) but the demonstrators refused to leave the central Tiananmen Square. After the announcement that troops were ordered into the city, students resumed a hunger strike. By the time you read this column Sunday, the peaceful revolution may have turned into a violent one.

Before the troops arrived, Zhao Ziyang resigned as head of the world's largest Communist Party rather than support a crackdown on the tremendous mass demonstration for democracy. It was the first known high-level rebellion against Deng Xiaoping who had started the reforms to give more freedom to the Chinese people and move gradually toward a more capitalistic economic system. There was growing speculation that Deng would have to step down. Like the French, the Chinese revolutionary leaders seemed in danger of being devoured by the revolution.

In the midst of all the turbulence, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev turned up in Beijing to hold a summit meeting with the Chinese communist leaders. This was highlighted by Deng's announcement of normalization of Sino-Soviet relations between the two largest communist nations. It ended a 30-year rift that was precipitated when Nikita Khrushchev refused in 1958 to give the Chinese communist regime nuclear weapons it wanted for a planned offensive to "liberate" Taiwan.

Let us hope the freedom movement will not be completely crushed by brutal represssion but will lead eventually to gradual democratization of the political system in China.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Registration process to begin on Monday

By H.A. TUCK

Registration for the Summer I session is Thursday, but students wanting a bit of advantage should come out Monday between 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. to obtain early counseling and a time permit. The time permit assigns a specific period to report for registration. Those who don't have time permits are the last to be registered and may not be able to get classes they want at the most desirable times. Time permits won't be issued after Monday.

Tuck

Hours for registration Thursday in the Physical Education Building are 2-4 p.m. and 6-9 p.m. Those without time permits should come at 6 p.m. and no later than 8 p.m. to be processed and registered.

Classes during the first summer term start Tuesday, May 30 and end July 5.

• • •

Also registering this week will be the grade school students who plan to attend Kids' College at Midland College. Registration for both sessions is being held in the Physical Education Building between 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. Time permits also have been issued for this, which should make the registration process more orderly and less time-consuming than in previous years.

Kids' College is for students who have completed first through sixth grades. There are two sessions, June 19-29 and July 10-20, with each session lasting Monday through Thursday for the two weeks. There are three classes each afternoon and students can enroll in one, two, or three classes for each session.

This week is the men's tennis national championship tournament in Tyler, hosted by Tyler Junior College. The MC Chaparrals are ranked number one in the nation, but will have lots of competition for the NJCAA title.

The NJCAA is going to experiment at this event, holding two separate tournaments. The first is the regular NJCAA championship, with players competing in flights for both singles and doubles. That part is single elimination...a loss and you're out. After that tourney concudes, the top eight teams will compete in a team tournament. Every players continues to play every day in that event as the surviving teams continue to play until there is a single team champion. This is the format used by the NCAA and it's being tried for the first time by the NJCAA as an adjunct to the regular tournament format.

It's possible for the Chaparral men to win two national titles this year, although only one of them will be considered as the official title.

Plans were finalized last week for the Angelique Webb Harrill Scholarship endowment. The gift is being supplemented through the Exxon Foundation Matching Fund.

In order that the scholarship become of significant size, no award will be made for a year. After that time, the endowment will provide one scholarship annually to a single mother seeking a college education at MC.

Through such gifts, Midland College is able to widen its support to deserving students. Many of them aren't typical 18 and 19-year-olds, but people in their late 20s, their 30s, and their 40s who are seeking new directions and skills.

We salute the five students who were named as recipients of Fasken Foundation Scholarships to attend universities next fall. They were announced during graduation ceremonies May 13. Recipients receive $1,500 each per semester for the next two years. Those 1989 recipients include Amy Dawn Franks, Billi Jo Harder, Johnny E. Hewitt, Drenda Lynn Kiser, and Stephen O'Neal.

• • •

All the 1989 seniors at Midland High, Midland Lee, and Greenwood are aware of it, but the general public may not know that the Abell-Hanger Foundation has agreed to continue its scholarship grants for all those seniors wishing to attend Midland College. The Abell-Hanger grants are For tuition and fees, up to $325 per semester. The only requirement for receiving the grant is a 1.5 Grade Point Average. Recipients must pay for their books and incidentals.

This is the fourth year the Abell-Hanger Foundation has made this offer and it has benefited thousands of young people (not to mentionthe parents) since it was begun.

Congratulations to MC golf coach and athletic director Delnor Poss, who was named Region V Golf Coch of the Year after his Chaps won the regional title. Five of the Chaps head for Norfolk, Neb., June 5-8 for the NJCAA championships.

"Due to the tremendous response, we have expanded our course offerings to include more advanced instruction in some classes. We also have added several new topics," said Jan Reed, coordinator for Kids' College. "Kids' College was designed as a summer enrichment program to supplement information learned in school or, in most cases, to provide completely new information and skills appropriate for children of various ages."

There are three classes periods daily, with students studying the same topics each day at the same time. Instructors are drawn from the college faculty-staff and from the community. Class periods are 12:40-2 p.m., 2:10-3:30 p.m., and 3:40-5 p.m.

Cost is $28 per child per class. Additional information about Kids' College may be obtained by calling 685-4518.

BEWARE

Before you invest in a treadmill, ask these questions.

1. Can you walk on it first and try it out?
2. Will they deliver it?
3. Will they assemble it?
4. Do you have to pay extra money for a year warranty? If so, why?
5. Do they have a LOCAL serviceman?
6. Will it start at ZERO m.p.h. (Like you do) or does it force you to start at 1.5 m.p.h.
7. Does it have a full year warranty or a disappointing 90 day warranty?
8. Does it have at least a full one horsepower motor, or an underpowered ½ H.P.?
9. Is it noisy? (it won't get any better)
10. Can they put you on a personalized program to meet your fitness needs?

If the answer to any of these questions is no, BEWARE — A Bargain treadmill today could be an expensive mistake tomorrow.

Teachers to present salary proposals

From Staff Reports

Three Midland schools' teacher groups are slated to present their salary and benefits proposals Tuesday to school board members, who will also review the 1988-89 career ladder levels II and III assignments.

The trustees will review salary and benefits proposals from the Midland Educators Association, the Midland Federation of Teachers and the Classroom Teachers of Midland.

Midland Independent School District administrators are recommending the assignment of 385 teachers to career ladder Level II and 130 to Level III.

Trustees will again give first reading to a proposed boundary change that would affect more than 300 mostly rural elementary school pupils. At a May 9 school board meeting, trustees tabled action on the proposal, saying they would make a decision after a boundary hearing scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Monday at Burnet Elementary School.

The proposal would change some boundaries between Travis, Burnet, Bonham, Long and Houston elementary schools.

In other action, trustees are slated to:

■ Consider approving a 10 cent meal price hike, bringing elementary lunches to $1.10 and secondary lunches to $1.20. It would be the first price hike since 1984.

■ Reorganize the board by electing new officers.

■ Review results from the 1989 Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills test given to third-, fifth-, seventh- and ninth-graders.

■ Discuss, in executive session, an internal investigation of improprieties at an MISD warehouse.

The meeting will begin at 4 p.m. in the Board Room of the MISD Administration Building, 702 N. N St.

MC to conduct first summer registration

From Staff Reports

Registration for Midland College's first summer session is scheduled Thursday in the Physical Education Building. Hours are 2-4 p.m. and 6-9 p.m.

Students who have not had early counseling or obtained time permits may receive them on Monday in the Student Services Office, Administration Building. Hours are 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Time permits assign specific times to report for registration. Those who do not obtain time permits may begin the registration process starting at 6 p.m. Thursday.

Summer I classes start on Tuesday, May 30, and end on July 5.

Another summer session registers on July 6 and begins classes July 10.

"We are seeing lots of interest in summer courses this year because of the impending TASP (Texas Academic Skills Program) exam, which goes into effect this fall," said Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar. "Persons who complete three hours of transferrable college credit prior to Sept. 1 are exempt from the TASP test. Since the TASP exam takes several hours and costs $24, many first-time students see the advantage of enrolling for summer classes this year."

Cates noted that late registration extends through June 5, but cautioned against late registration because of the quick pace of the summer courses.

Classes during the first summer session include: Air Conditioning and Refrigeration, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counseling, Art, Automotive Technology, Biological Science, Business Administration, Chemistry, Computer Information Systems, Dance, Drafting, Drama, Economics, Electronics, Engineering, English, Government, History, Journalism-/Photography, Legal Assistant, Management, Mathematics, Music, Office Education, Physical Education, Physics, Reading, Real Estate, Sociology, Spanish, Speech Communication, and Welding.

The automotive and welding classes last eight weeks, concluding July 20.

Information about Summer I courses may be obtained by visiting the Student Services Office or calling 685-4501.

Aspects of wine country examined in seminar at Petroleum Museum

From Staff Reports

Why are the famous vineyards of France located where they are? Geology dictated the landforms long before agricultural man started planting grapes. The vineyards now grow on rocks of just about every geologic age and type, and the habitat of the vines influence the type of quality of the wine.

"Wine on the Rocks — With a Splash of History" will be the featured topic by noted geologist and author James E. Wilson at the Petroleum Museum Tuesday, May 23. His illustrated talk, beginning at 7 p.m., will relate the geology to the vineyards of France and will "splash some history on the rocks." The lecture and slide presentation is in conjunction with the Museum's current temporary exhibition, "Mining for Oil: The Story of Pechelbronn."

Wilson is past president of both the american Association of Petroleum Geologists and the American Geological Institute. He currently serves as Chairman of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

He is the seventh speaker is the Petroleum Museum's H.B. Fuqua Distinguished Lecture Series. The lecture series is sponsored through a grant awarded by the Sid Richardson Foundation, Fort Worth.

Comedian Gilda Radner, 42, dies after cancer battle

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Gilda Radner, one of the original stars of "Saturday Night Live" and the creator of such memorable characters as Roseanne Roseannadana and Emily Litella, died of cancer Saturday. She was 42.

Radner

Miss Radner died in her sleep about 6:20 a.m. at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, hospital spokesman Ron Wise said. Her husband, actor Gene Wilder, was at her side.

She had been diagnosed with ovarian cancer in 1986 and underwent nine months of chemotherapy, which by 1988 had sent the disease into remission. She had radiation therapy and other treatments, including surgery, as recently as February and re-entered the hospital on Wednesday, Wise said.

Miss Radner had recently completed a book about her battle against the disease. "Cancer is about the most unfunny thing in the world," she told Life magazine in a 1988 interview.

In recent years Miss Radner appeared in several movies but she was best known for her roles on NBC's "Saturday Night Live" for five years ending in 1980, with such stars as Dan Aykroyd, Chevy Chase, Jane Curtin, Laraine Newman, Garrett Morris, Bill Murray and the late John Belushi.

Word of Miss Radner's death "stunned" everyone on the set of "Saturday Night Live," said executive producer Lorne Michaels, who added that the night's show would pay tribute to her.

"She was just incredibly funny. And she was very warm, very generous and had this remarkable spirit, and I think that is what people responded to," Michaels said from NBC's headquarters in New York City.

"She fought (cancer) the way she fought everything else — very strong," he said. "She never complained. She bore what she bore in silence and was very strong. Her husband Gene was incredibly supportive and wonderful."

"I loved her like a sister," Aykroyd said through a spokeswoman. "My thoughts are with Gene and her family."

As the obnoxious, nasal-voiced TV news commentator Roseanne Roseannadana, her catch-phrase was "It's always something," which became the title of her book on cancer.

She also created Baba Wawa, a spoof of news interviewer Barbara Walters, and nerdy teen-ager Lisa Lupner. There also was Emily Litella, the dowdy, bewildered commentator whose misguided news opinion pieces on such topics as "violins on television" always ended with the phrase, "Never mind."

The show brought her an Emmy Award for outstanding performance by an actress in a variety series.

Born on June 28, 1946, in Detroit, Miss Radner attended the University of Michigan. She began her entertainment career in the Toronto company of "Godspell," then became a member of the Toronto branch of the Second City troupe, the improvisational group that gave several "Saturday Night" stars their starts.

SEATTLE (AP) — Former Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, a skilled political insider who served 44 years in Congress, died this morning at his home in Seattle, a family friend said. He was 84.

Magnuson

Gretchen Bakimis, acting as a family spokeswoman, said Magnuson died of congestive heart failure, due to complications from his diabetes.

Magnuson, a Democrat, was elected to the House of Representatives in 1936 and won the first of his six Senate terms in 1944. He eventually rose to the chairmanship of the Appropriations Committee, before being defeated by Republican Slade Gorton in 1980.

Known to his constituents as "Maggie," Magnuson, with his shuffling gait, rumpled appearance and constant malapropisms, belied his reputation as a consummate Senate insider.

As chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Magnuson was never shy about sending billions back home for everything from military installations to cancer research centers.

Warren Grant Magnuson was born April 12, 1905, in Moorhead, Minn., and was orphaned before he was a month old. He was adopted by a Swedish couple and took their name.

At 17, he rode the rails to Seattle. He entered the University of Washington in 1924 and worked his way through school delivering ice. He graduated with a law degree in 1929, and practiced law for a time.

He was elected to the Washington state House in 1932, briefly served as a U.S. attorney in Seattle in 1934 and was King County Prosecuting attorney from 1934 to 1936, when he won his first term in the U.S. House.

DETROIT (AP) — Mayor Coleman Young said the results of blood tests have convinced him he is the father of a 6-year-old boy at the center of a paternity suit, and would negotiate child support payments.

Young

Tests from three separate laboratories showed the 70-year-old mayor almost certainly fathered the son of a former city employee.

"I said when this paternity suit first came into the news that I did not believe that I was the father of Joel Loving," Young said Friday.

"Well, the results of the blood tests have caused me to painfully reappraise my position, and I want everyone to know that I have reappraised that position and I am fully prepared to fulfill my full responsibilities in that regard."

The boy's mother, Annivory Calvert, filed a lawsuit in Wayne County Circuit Court in January asking for child support.

Lakers win tenth straight

By BERNIE WILSON

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — James Worthy scored 32 points and Magic Johnson returned midway through the fourth quarter Saturday, sparking the Los Angeles Lakers past the Phoenix Suns 127-119 in the opener of the NBA Western Conference finals

Johnson left with 4:07 remaining in the third quarter after being called for his fifth foul. He returned with just over seven minutes left in the fourth quarter.

Johnson made a long jumper with 7:03 remaining to put the Lakers ahead for good at 101-100. Johnson then had three assists and made a layup with 3:37 left, giving Los Angeles a 111-106 lead.

He fouled out with just more than minutes left, finishing with 18 points.

Eddie Johnson of Phoenix scored with 2:00 to go, pulling the Suns to within 116-111. But Orlando Woolridge completed a three-point play with 1:35 remaining for an eight-point lead.

■ Related Story, Page 2C

It was the Lakers' 10th consecutive playoff victory over two seasons, an NBA record. Los Angeles is undefeated in eighth games this year and extended their overall streak to 13 games since an April 15 loss to the Los Angeles Clippers.

Phoenix, which lost for the first time in four road playoff games this year, got 27 points and 17 assists from Kevin Johnson and 20 points from Jeff Hornacek.

Game 2 is scheduled for Tuesday night at the Forum.

Byron Scott scored 24 for the Lakers, A.C. Green 18 and Woolridge 13. Tom Chambers and Armon Gilliam scored 15 each for the Suns.

Los Angeles led 91-89 after three quarters but the Suns went ahead for the first time since early in the game at 92-91 when Kevin Johnson made a three-point play nine seconds into the fourth quarter.

Sunday Silence, with jockey Pat Valenzuela aboard, nosed out Easy Goer in Sunday's riding of the Preakness in Baltimore.

Sunday Silence by a nose

By STEVEN CRIST
New York Times News Service

BALTIMORE — Sunday Silence, who raised more questions than he answered by winning the Kentucky Derby two weeks ago, proved himself beyond doubt Saturday by prevailing by a nose in a long stretch duel with Easy Goer to win the 114th Preakness Stakes at Pimlico Race Course.

The winner had to survive a claim of foul by Pat Day, Easy Goer's rider, who alleged interference by Pat Valenzuela through the stretch. After reviewing the films for seven minutes, the stewards let the order of finish stand.

Sunday Silence's victory meant that he now can become racing's first Triple Crown winner since Affirmed in 1978 if he wins the Belmont Stakes at Belmont Park June 10.

A victory would bring him a total of $5 million in purses and bonuses for the three races. The rivalry between Sunday Silence and Easy Goer now seems the most genuine in racing since Affirmed and Alydar hooked up 11 years ago.

Sunday Silence, let off as the second choice in a field of eight, paid $6.20 for $2 to win and ran the mile and three-sixteenths in 1:53 4-5 under Valenzuela over a fast track. It was the third fastest Preakness ever, behind Tank's Prospect's 1:53 2-5 in 1985 and Gate Dancer's 1:53 3-5 in 1984.

Rock Point finished a distant third, with Dansil fourth.

The finish, almost too close to call, capped a race in which both favorites looked as if they would win easily at some point.

Houston made the pace, as he did in the Derby, but heading into the stretch turn, Easy Goer made a dramatic bid for the lead. He appeared ready to draw away and justify his 3-5 favoritism.

Then Sunday Silence, who had been forced to check briefly approaching the turn, came back with his own bid on the outside and seemed ready to swoop to the lead.

When they straightened away in the stretch, though, Easy Goer came back at Sunday Silence from the rail, and the two hooked up while racing head and head for the final furlong. They were in tight quarters, but neither colt appeared to be compromised.

"He crowded me a little bit coming off the turn and crowded me down the lane," Day said of Valenzuela. "It was good race-riding."

Sunday Silence, a son of Halo and the Understanding mare Wishing Well, now has won six of eight career starts and is undefeated in five races this year.

Sunday Silence is owned by Arthur B. Hancock 3rd, Ernest Gaillard and Charlie Whittingham, and trained by Whittingham.

Shug McGaughey, Easy Goer's trainer, said right after the race that his colt would try Sunday Silence a third time in the Belmont.

Sunday Silence scored a 2½-length upset victory over Easy Goer in the Derby, but the Pimlico bettors were ignoring that result and made Easy Goer a heavy favorite again. In early betting through 3 P.M., Easy Goer was the 3-5 favorite with Sunday Silence the second choice at 2-1.

The last time a Derby winner was not favored in the Preakness was in 1986, when Ferdinand was sent off as the third choice behind Badger Land and Snow Chief. Snow Chief, who had been 11th in the Derby, beat Ferdinand by four lengths to win the Preakness.

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — Texas A&M, down 3-0 in the first inning, battled back behind Kirk Thompson's hitting and the mastery of relief pitcher Greg DeLaCruz to defeat Texas 5-4 for the Southwest Conference championship.

The Aggies, 54-5, went through the tournament unbeaten and defeated the Longhorns for the fourth straight time this season. A&M beat Texas 15-6 Friday night for the Longhorns' only other loss in the double-elimination tournament.

Both A&M and Texas, 47-17, will host NCAA regional tournaments next week.

Texas jumped on A&M starter Ronnie Allen for three runs in the first inning. After Lance Jones, David Tollison and Scott Bryant walked to open the game, Arthur Butcher doubled to deep center, scoring two runs. Bryant scored the third run of the inning on Clay King's groundout.

DeLaCruz, 7-1, came in with two outs in the second inning and stymied the Longhorns. He retired the first nine batters he faced and allowed only two hits in the 5-2/3 innings he pitched.

The Aggies cut Texas' lead to 3-2 in the third on a double by Trey Witte and a single by Thompson, who had three hits in the contest.

Jim Neumann led off the fifth inning with a homer that tied the score, and singles by Witte and Thompson allowed the Aggies to bring around two more runs for a 5-3 lead.

Pinch-hitter David Lowery drove in a run for Texas with a two-out single in the eighth, pulling the Longhorns to within 5-4. But two runners were left stranded and the Aggies held on for the victory.

Trent Turner, 1-1 and making his first start since February 19th, was the loser after going four innings.

Texas 9, Arkansas 1

Scott Bryant, pitching for only the third time in his career, shut down Arkansas on three hits as Texas eliminated the Razorbacks.

Fourth-ranked Arkansas, which tied A&M for the regular-season SWC title, dropped to 46-13 with the loss.

Bryant, a junior, was known more this season for his batting. He won the SWC batting title, leads the nation with 104 RBIs, and he had two of Texas' 16 hits against Arkansas.

Jal's Jackson wins Tall Town 10K

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

It's hard to run when you coach three sports and carry a full teaching load, especially when there's really nowhere to run and no one to run with.

But Bob Jackson fought off those obstacles to successfully defend his Tall Town 10,000 meter championship with a relatively slow time of 35:07 Saturday through several north Midland neighborhoods.

Jackson, a former Eastern New Mexico State University runner, hadn't run a step from January to early May. But only three weeks of training was enough to out-distance 124 other competitors, led by Midland's Mike Moylett in 36:17.

Youth was served in the two-mile race, won by 19-year-old Odessa College runner Brad Hawkins in 10:28. Hawkins was followed by 14-year-old Jeremy Stallings and 21-year-old Simon Martinez in second and third, respectively. Four of the top 10 finishers in the two-mile race were teenagers.

Cyndi Simpson won the women's 10-kilometer run in a personal best 41:43, while Megan Pace was top woman in the two-mile with a 12:52.

Midland College makes its second straight trip to the National Junior College Athletic Association golf championships June 6-9 and it's something that could become habit forming.

All of Coach Delnor Poss' players are freshmen, freshmen who are just realizing their potential after living on the verge all season.

The best thing about this year's trip to nationals at Norfolk, Neb., is that the Chaparrals aren't going as an after-thought.

Last year at Scottsdale, Ariz., MC received an invitation, not because it won conference or region, but because it was ranked in the nation's Top 10. That's nothing of which to be ashamed, but it's not automatic.

Lee's Miller all smiles

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee head football coach Earl Miller seems to be singing a different tune in spring training 1989 as his Rebels head into the final week.

A year ago you would have thought Miller was sitting up late at night listening to the somber sounds of Tchaikovsky's morose "Pathetique." You could almost cry listening to him describe his team.

This year Miller must be listening to something laced with thundering symbols and booming drums from the Rebel band of Randy Storie. At the very least, Miller likes what he is seeing so far.

"I'm well pleased with the way the spring has gone," said Miller at the conclusion to two weeks of the spring grind. "We are way ahead of where we were a year ago at this time. However, that doesn't win any ball games for you. We are a long way from where we want to be, but this is the best effort and attitude we've seen."

Lee entered spring training with a lot of question marks. Some of those questions have found answers. Some questions remain, but Miller feels definite progress has been made in virtually every area of concern.

Brandon Rayburn, a starting guard last year, has been moved to center and Miller says, "That has worked out nicely. We also have Matt Wilson back at guard, but Kent Spraglin has stepped in and done a good job at the other guard.

"But the main thing offensively is Justin Perkins and Chad Sheddy at the two tackle positions. Both are 200 pounds and I've really been pleased with their progress."

With proven quarterbacks Vince Henderson and Ty Chambers back with 1,200-yard rusher Farris Strambler, the Lee search in the backfield has centered around fullback and finding another halfback to go with Strambler.

Twins Bush-whack Rangers

Associated Press

Randy Bush tied a team record by driving in eight runs, six on a pair of three-run homers, as the Minnesota Twins routed the Texas Rangers 19-3 Saturday night.

Greg Gagne also had a three-run homer and John Moses added a two-run shot as the Twins matched the major league high for runs this season. Cincinnati scored 19 runs on 21 hits in a victory over Montreal on May 1. The Twins had 20 hits, their biggest total of the season and one short of the Reds' major-league high.

Bush's eight RBIs tied a team record set by Glenn Adams on June 26, 1977.

Twins starter Roy Smith, 3-1, allowed three runs and eight hits over 6 2-3 innings after compiling a 9.64 ERA in two appearances against the Rangers last season. Juan Berenguer and Gary Wayne finished up.

After Bush singled in a run in the first, Gagne's three-run homer off Bobby Witt gave the Twins a 4-0 lead. The homer was Gagne's second of the season and broke a string in which 11 of the Twins' previous 12 homers had been solo shots.

Witt, 3-4, lasted 6 1-3 innings, allowing eight hits, including two homers.

Julio Franco led off the bottom of the second with seventh homer of the season. He has 35 RBIs, tops in the American League. Jeff Kunkel's third homer in as many games, a solo shot in the fifth, cut the Twins' lead to 4-2.

But after Witt retired 11 straight batters, Brian Harper singled with two out in the sixth and Moses followed with his first homer of the season for a 6-2 lead.

Bush had a sacrifice fly and Gaetti added an RBI single in the seventh. Steve Buechele homered for Texas in the bottom of the seventh.

The game was played before a crowd of 40,482, the fourth sellout at Arlington Stadium this season. The Rangers have drawn 522,961 in 19 dates, 98,000 ahead of last year's attendance.

Athletics 6, Red Sox 3

Dave Stewart won his major-league leading eighth game and Mike Gallego and Terry Steinbach homered as the Oakland Athletics beat Boston.

Dave Parker added two run-scoring singles to support Stewart, 8-1, who allowed six hits in 7 2-3 innings. Dennis Eckersley, who gave up a 10th-inning grand slam to Dwight Evans on Friday night, finished for his 13th save.

Oakland has won 10 of its last 11 games at home against Boston, including a sweep in last year's playoffs, and 16 of 18.

Wes Gardner, 1-4, was knocked out after 1 1-3 innings. He allowed five hits and five runs.

Mike Greenwell's RBI single gave Oakland the lead in the first but Boston scored three runs in the bottom of the inning. Dave Parker's RBI single tied it and third baseman Ed Romero's fielding error allowed Stan Javier to score the go-ahead run. Carney Lansford, who has hit in 15 of 16 games, followed with another RBI single.

AL Roundup

Tigers 2, Royals 1

Alan Trammell led off the ninth inning with his second home run of the season, giving the Detroit Tigers a win over the Kansas City Royals.

Mike Henneman, 2-0, allowed one hit in two innings after relieving Frank Tanana. Tom Gordon, 4-2, was the loser.

It was the second straight night the Tigers beat the Royals on a ninth-inning homer. Lou Whitaker's two-run homer Friday night gave the Tigers a 3-2 victory.

Saturday night's victory was Detroit's ninth straight over Kansas City at Tiger Stadium.

The Royals opened the scoring in the third when Willie Wilson walked, went to second on Kevin Seitzer's single, took third on the front end of a double steal and scored on Danny Tartabull's grounder to first.

The Tigers blew a chance to tie it in the fourth, when Chet Lemon was thrown out at third after Jackson's two-base error in left field.

Orioles 5, Indians 1

Jeff Ballard, off to the best start by a Baltimore pitcher since 1976, allowed four hits in 7⅔ innings for his seventh victory as the Orioles beat the Cleveland Indians.

Ballard's 7-1 record is the best start by an Oriole since Wayne Garland won his first eight decisions 13 years ago. Garland's 8-0 mark came in 17 starts, while Ballard has pitched in only eight games this season, all starts.

Ballard, who walked two and struck out two, had a three-hit shutout entering the eighth. Andy Allanson drew a leadoff walk and Jerry Browne doubled him to third with two outs. Reliever Gregg Olson allowed Joe Carter's run-scoring single, but ended the rally by getting Pete O'Brien to ground out.

The Orioles made the most of their five hits off Cleveland's John Farrell, 2-4.

Blue Jays 11, White Sox 1

Ernie Whitt had four hits, including a three-run homer, and drove in four runs and Lloyd Moseby added three RBIs, leading the Toronto Blue Jays past over the Chicago White Sox.

Jimmy Key, 5-2, allowed five hits, struck out two and walked none in eight innings for his third straight victory. Tom Henke pitched the ninth. The White Sox, who entered the contest as baseball's best-hitting team, managed just one run on a fourth-inning solo homer by Ron Kittle, his eighth of the season.

Chicago's Air Jordan seeks revenge against Detroit.

Bulls seek revenge against Pistons

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Coach Chuck Daly is taking nothing for granted as his Detroit Pistons go into the NBA Eastern Conference finals against the Chicago Bulls, starting Sunday.

The Pistons beat the Bulls in six games during the season, and eliminated Chicago 4-1 in the second round of the playoffs last year.

But the Bulls also were 0-6 against Cleveland this season, and they eliminated the Cavaliers in five games in the opening round of the playoffs.

"I don't particularly like the fact that we've beaten them nine straight," Daly said. "It's a great psychological tool. They've got that reverse psychology on us."

DALY IS most concerned about the lack of playing time for his players, who have not been in action since Monday night when Detroit wrapped up its four-game sweep over the Milwaukee Bucks.

"I'm just so happy that we'll be playing Sunday," Daly said. "I don't know if I could have stood three more days of practice without playing a game."

The key to beating the Bulls is containing Michael Jordan, who had 40 points and 10 assists as Chicago defeated the New York Knicks 113-111 Friday night and won their series 4-2.

"I knew he (Jordan) would raise his level," Daly said, "but I didn't know he'd raise it to the level to take them possibly to the Eastern Conference finals. They've surprised me a bit."

DETROIT HAS played seven playoff games and won all seven this year without any player averaging more than 20 points per game. Joe Dumars leads the Pistons with a 16.1 scoring average.

"We don't have the player the Bulls have," Daly said, referring to Jordan. "But we have a lot of good ones."

The Pistons also have the Bad Boy label that has sparked camaraderie on the team. The baddest of the bad — 6-foot-11 Bill Laimbeer and 6-10 Rick Mahorn — have racked up more than five figures in fines each this year for their rough style of play.

"I know Detroit is waiting on us," Jordan said. "We'll be the underdogs again, I'm sure. Hopefully, we'll go up there and play better than we did during the regular season.

Tulsa nips Angels, 2-1

From Staff Reports

TULSA, Okla. — Midland Angel pitcher Kevin Trudeau was a hard luck loser again here Saturday night, dropping a 2-1 Texas League decision to the Tulsa Drillers.

Trudeau, who entered the game with the league's third best ERA of 1.73, gave up two fourth inning runs to the Drillers and it beat him, falling to 3-3 on the year.

Trudeau's mound opponent was Mark Pethavsek, who climbed to 4-2, with eight innings of work and Steve Lankard picked up his fifth save of the year, pitching the ninth.

Pethavsek and Lankard are making a living against the Angels. Pethavsek is now 2-0 against Midland while Lankard has one win and two saves to go with nine shutout innings in relief against Midland. Lankard fanned Midland's Eddie Vargas on a 3-2 count with Everett Graham on second base to end the game.

Midland briefly led 1-0 with a run in the top of the fourth. Jeff Barns singled, moved to third on a double by Chris Cron and scored on a sacrifice fly by Bob Rose.

The lead didn't last long as the Drillers got two runs off of Trudeau. Gary Alexander singled and scored on a triple by Juan Gonzales and then scored the winning run when Gar Millay hit a weak grounder that just got past Trudeau. It wasn't hit hard, but Gonzales scored.

Trudeau lasted 5⅓ innings and Tim Burcham followed with 2⅔ innings of hitless and scoreless relief. Midland outhit Tulsa by a 7-4 margin and had three doubles, but the offense didn't help the pitching in this one. Tulsa has only eight hits in two games against the Angels, but salvaged a victory in this one.

The loss snapped a four-game winning streak by the Angels and evened the current road trip at 1-1. Saturday's game drew 5,740 fans on Chicken Night.

The top two men in the Tulsa batting order have an 0-for-16 streak going against Midland pitching.

In a 2:05 p.m. game today, Midland will send Scott Lewis (3-4) against Tulsa's Felipe Castillo (2-4). The game can be heard locally on KCRS radio.

Mets shutout for third time in '89

Associated Press

In 1969, the New York Mets were shut out 14 times and went on to win the World Series. Their offense is doing a pretty good imitation this year.

Mike Krukow improved to 21-7 lifetime against New York and Will Clark and Kevin Mitchell hit consecutive fourth-inning home runs Saturday, leading the visiting San Francisco Giants past the Mets 3-0. It was third shutout against the Mets this season.

Krukow, 3-1, allowed four hits and struck out four in 5 2-3 innings. Mike LaCoss finished for his fourth save, finishing the combined six-hitter.

"I still feel we are close to breaking out of it," Mets manager Davey Johnson said. "This is as close to the bottom as we can be. It's a sad state of affairs when I had to think about taking the pitcher out in the fifth inning."

Clark led off the fourth with his seventh homer. Mitchell followed with his major league-leading 13th homer.

Bob Ojeda, 1-5, allowed three runs and five hits in five-plus innings. Last season, Krukow was 3-0 against the Mets and beat Ojeda twice.

"I can't explain the success I have against them," Krukow said. "I hope it continues. This park has been very good to me over the years."

Astros 5, Pirates 4

Rafael Ramirez homered in the eighth inning and hit a game-winning RBI single in the 12th after Pittsburgh's Bobby Bonds tied the game with an RBI double in the ninth.

Ken Caminiti led off the 12th with a double. Craig Biggio flied out to left and Billy Hatcher was intentionally walked. Juan Agosto bunted into a fielder's choice and Ramirez singled to right, scoring the winning run.

Agosto, 1-1, pitched two innings and struck out four. Bob Kipper, 0-1, pitched 1 2-3 innings, allowing three of Houston's season-high 17 hits. The Pirates lost for the seventh time in 10 games.

Dodgers 3, Expos 2

Orel Hershiser allowed six hits in nine innings to win for the third time in four starts and Mike Scioscia hit a run-scoring single in the 10th inning.

Hershiser, 6-3, struck out seven and walked three, sending Montral to its fifth consecutive loss. He's won four of his last five starts against the Expos, giving up six runs in 43 innings. Jay Howell pitched a one-hit 10th for his sixth save.

Willie Randolph opened the 10th with a single off Pascual Perez, 0-7, who was making his first relief appearance after 132 straight starts since Sept. 30, 1982, when he relieved for Atlanta against the Dodgers.

NL Roundup

Cubs 7, Reds 3

Former Red Lloyd McClendon drove in three runs with a home run and a single as Chicago beat Cincinnati for its fifth straight victory.

McClendon, who was traded to the Cubs last December for outfielder Rolando Roomes, hit his second homer of the season in the second and a two-run single in the third to give the Cubs a 4-2 lead.

Paul Kilgus, 4-4, pitched 5 2-3 innings allowing three runs on seven hits and Pat Perry threw hitless relief for 3 1-3 for his first save. Perry has allowed only three earned runs in 22 2-3 innings.

Padres 3, Phillies 2

Carmelo Martinez hit a two-run triple and Garry Templeton homered as San Diego defeated Philadelphia for its fifth straight victory.

Dennis Rasmussen, 2-4, who allowed six hits in five innings, won his first game since April 7. He had relief help from Greg Harris, who pitched four hitless innings for his third save. Don Carman, 1-6, took the loss, the Phillies' fourth in a row.

Cardinals 1, Braves 0

Terry Pendleton's run-scoring single with two outs in the 13th inning lifted St. Louis past Atlanta.

Ozzie Smith led off the 13th with a triple to right field off reliever Joe Boever, 2-2. Boever struck out pinch-hitter John Morris and got Tom Brunansky to ground out to shortstop before Pendleton singled sharply to center, scoring Smith.

Ken Dayley, 3-1, pitched two scoreless innings for the victory and Dan Quisenberry got the last three outs for his second save.

Sullivan Saturday's quickest

By MIKE HARRIS

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Danny Sullivan, ignoring the pain and discomfort caused by his broken right forearm, was the fastest of Saturday's early qualifiers for the Indianapolis 500.

The 39-year-old driver turned a 10-mile, four-lap average of 216.027 mph with a fast lap of 216.753.

That was nowhere near the record-smashing performances last Sunday of Penske Racing teammates Rick Mears and Al Unser, who qualified for the May 28 race at the front of the tentative lineup. But Sullivan, the 1985 Indy winner, was satisfied.

"It's a big relief," he said. "It's a big burden off my shoulders. I was concerned if I could go that fast, now I'm just relieved."

Sullivan sustained a mild concussion and the broken arm in a crash during practice May 11. The broken ulna was put back together and held in place with a metal plateand seven screws and Sullivan got back onto the track Thursday with the help of a specially designed brace.

"We're still modifying the seat and steering and Dr. (Terry) Trammel will continue working with me on modifying the brace," Sullivan said. "Hopefully, with eight days more rest, we'll be strong enough to run 500 miles."

Asked if the arm hurt, Sullivan said, "Oh yeah, there's going to be pain for a long time. But when you're out here running around on the speedway the pain seems to go away."

The 1985 Indy winner started with a lap of 214.715 then turned three consecutive laps around the 2½-mile Indianapolis Motor Speedway oval at more than 216 in his new Chevrolet-powered Penske PC18.

"I had messed up in turn two," he said of the first lap. "The wind was blowing across the track. I knew it wasn't a good lap.

"I adjusted something in the cockpit on the backstretch. The car felt comfortable after that. I wasn't particularly surprised by the increase. I was surprised by how much it was."

Despite rain in the forecast for Saturday, the day dawned sunny and warm and there was only a 45-minute delay in waiting for the track to finish drying from overnight wet weather.

There were still seven positions left in the 33-car field when Saturday's trials opened. The first scheduled day of qualifications, May 13, was rained out and 26 cars completed qualifying attempts last Sunday, led by Mears at 223.885 mph.

Cougars advance

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Abilene Cooper, the defending state Class 5A baseball champion, continued its march for another trip to Austin here Saturday by putting an area playoff championship in the hip pocket.

The Cougars bombarded El Paso Austin 15-4, eliminating the Panthers from the playoff scene.

Cooper advances to the region playoffs at 5 p.m. Tuesday with a single game against Fort Worth Southwest in Abilene. The two teams move to Fort Worth for a 7:30 p.m. game Friday. The third game, if needed, will be played in Fort Worth on Saturday at a time still to be decided.

Cooper ran its record to 24-4 for the season while Austin ends its season with a 19-10-1 mark.

The Panthers committed eight errors in the game, paving the way for an easy victory for Cooper. In all, Austin had 12 errors in the two area games with the Cougars. Cooper beat Austin 8-4 on Friday in the first game of the best-of-three series.

Cooper's Kenny Paige had a big day at the plate. Paige had three triples in five at-bats, driving in two runs. No other Cooper batter had more than one RBI. Cooper did have five triples in the game and one double in the 16-hit attack.

Scott Malone, 7-1, picked up the victory in relief.

Midland College men netters favorites to win NJCAA title

From Staff Reports

TYLER — With one of their strongest teams in history, the Midland College men's tennis squad is here on the eve of the NJCAA championship tournament. Tyler Junior College is hosting this year's national tourney.

Ranked No. 1 all season, the Chaps are odds-on favorites to capture their second national title. Their strongest competition is expected to come from host Tyler, McLennan Community College of Waco, and several schools from Georgia, North Carolina, and Florida. Midland College shared a men's tennis title in 1978 with Odessa and New Mexico Military. It has finished in the top five seven times.

While Tyler and other schools have been watching rain fall, the Chaps have conducted twice-daily drills the past two weeks. They left Friday in an effort to get acclimated to the higher humidity of East Texas.

"This is a squad with talent, poise, experience, and a lot of confidence. But they have lost a few matches, so they know what that's like and what it takes to win," said Joe Williams, MC tennis coach.

In match play, the Chaps are 14-1, losing only to the University of Tulsa while missing two of their top players. They ran away with the Region V title, getting 23 points. McLennan and Odessa tied for second with nine points each.

McLennan won a dual match the next day to gain the second spot in the national tournament for Region V.

Williams pointed out this year's tournament is actually two tournaments in one. Because many of the community colleges have opted for non-scholarship squads and formed a second division, the championship draw will be smaller than previous years. Thus the "regular" NJCAA tournament will be completed in three days. After that, the top 16 squads will play team matches to a team championship.

"The second championship is not official," Williams said. "We are trying it because the team format is used by the NCAA. It also keeps every player involved every day, where the flighted format sees half the players going to the sideline every day with losses."

If 20 wins is the benchmark for a good baseball pitcher and a successful basketball team, those 20 wins also indicate a strong singles player or a good doubles team.

Tonny van de Pieterman, a tall lefthander from Holland, is playing No. 1 for the Chaps. He has a 21-4 record and was regional champion.

Mohammed Ridaoui, who came to MC at midterm from Morocco, is 15-3 and is also regional champion at No. 2.

Sophomore Amine Boustani, another Moroccan, is playing three and has a 22-8 mark with a regional title. David Fontaine, a sophomore from France by way of California, will play four. He has a 20-7 record and was the regional runner-up.

Scott Randolph, a sophomore from Abilene Cooper, playing five, won the regional title. His record is 21-9 in singles. Robert Antoun, a sophomore from England with a 26-6 record, plays six. He also won the Region V crown.

Boustani and van de Pieterman, both lefthanders, are the No. 1 doubles team for the Chaps and in the nation's junior colleges. They are 29-2, having won the ITCA Rolex Small College Regional Title, the ITCA national Junior College Indoor, and the Region V crown. They were runners-up in the national ITCA Rolex Small College Championships, losing in the finals to the NAIA champions. Their other loss was to TCU.

Ridaoui and Randolph are No. 2 doubles. They have an 8-2 record and hold the Region V title. Fontaine and Pepe Garcia, a freshmen who came at midterm from Mexico, are the three, and have a 9-1 record and won the regional title.

Tommy Heiting, a sophomore from Odessa Permian, will be the squad reserve. Heiting compiled a nifty 21-6 record this year in singles and was 16-7 in doubles.

Dulaney-Philpy take MCC lead

From Staff Reports

Richard Dulaney and Mark Philpy fired a 56 Saturday to take the first round lead by two strokes in Midland Country Club's annual high-low golf tournament.

Action concludes today with the final 18 holes and Ken Jastrow and L.B. Robbins will take a 58 into the final round in hopes of catching the leaders.

Just one more stroke back at 59 is Ken Sewell and Jim Hall with a 59.

Others still in the hunt include, B.L. Jones-Jack Byrd, 60; Tim Thompson-Marty Miller, 60; David Koch-John Kennedy, 60; John Carey-Lloyd Ugland, 61; and Andy Shapira-Joe O'Neill III, 61.

Baker-Finch faces biggest challenge

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

FORT WORTH — Ian Baker-Finch put a fast finish on a round of 65 that lifted him into a four-shot lead in the third round of the foreign-dominated Colonial National Invitation tournament Saturday.

It gave the Australian at 54 hole score of 200 and put him face-to-face with the greatest challenge on his globe-trotting career.

"It will be the biggest round of golf of my life," he said of Sunday's final round of the chase for a $180,000 first prize.

"So much is riding on it," said Baker-Finch, a 28-year-old rookie on the American PGA Tour but the winner of 10 titles around the world.

At stake, he said, is another step up the ladder of international golf.

"You can't be recognized as a really great player if you don't do it over here, if you don't win on the American Tour," said Baker-Finch who gained his place on the American circuit with a third-place finish in last year's World Series of Golf.

"You can't even be recognized in your own heart if you don't do it over here."

His rivals seemed convinced.

"It could be a one-man race tomorrow," said Nick Price of Zimbabwe, the Australian's closest pursuer.

Baker-Finch, a one-shot leader at the end of the first and second rounds, pulled away with the best score of the muggy day.

Price, a runner-up last year in the British Open, was alone at 204 after a 68.

Japanese veteran Isao Aoki, 48, winner of 53 worldwide tournaments, was next at 206. He had a third round 66.

Clarence Rose, not yet a winner in nine seasons of tour activity, was the leading American at 69-207.

Rose shared the position with South African David Frost, who had a 71.

The group at 208 included South African Fulton Allem and two Americans, Scott and Tim Simpson, who are not related. Allem shot 69. Tim Simpson had a 66. Scott Simpson, a former U.S. Open winner, matched par 70.

TALL TOWN

Not only does Jackson have a busy schedule during the school year, but he faced stiff community opposition when he attempted to train during his free period.

"It wasn't the school district that got after me, but some elderly people in the community," Jackson said. Never mind the fact that many teachers use their planning period to run a variety of errands.

But Jackson thinks he's got a way to beat the system.

"I'll just run early in the morning and late in the evening to keep my training up during the school year," he said. "Neither time is ideal, but I don't have any choice if I want to stay in shape.

"At night, you have to run on the roads in Jal — and all the way around Jal is only about three miles."

Hawkins, who had a so-so track season at sprint-oriented OC, opted for the two-mile despite finishing third in last year's Tall Town 10K.

"I didn't think I could do well in the 10K. I've only been doing about 25 miles a week since my season ended.

RACE NOTES: What a difference a year makes ... Stallings ran a 12:08 in last year's Tall Town two-mile, but lowered that time by more than a minute. Of course, the Stanton eighth-grader looks like he's grown a foot since last year.

Oldest and youngest runners: 64-year-old John Kirwan in the 10K (running, of course, with Van Howbert, 62.) Chad Fouts of Jal, 16, was the youngest 10K runner.

Fouts and Jal teammate Bobby Ramos finished in the top 25 in the 10K despite being the only teens in the field.

In the two-mile, the accent was on youth even in the rear of the field. Four-year-old William Poole followed not far behind Micah Grimes, 5, who in turn wasn't far behind Daniel Covington and Byron Simpson, both 8.

Tops among the pre-teen set, however, were 11-year-old Beau Baker, who averaged 7:13 per mile for his two mile stint — and Darcy Covington, 10, and Laci Jackson, 7, for the girls (at an 8:25 pace).

Yep, that's right, folks. Laci is Bob's daughter. He says she trains by playing in the yard and riding her bike, but who knows...

GOLF

THIS YEAR, the Chaps won the Region V tournament at Denison to earn an automatic berth. The victory lifted some eyebrows because MC had finished third in the final WJCAC tournament at Midland's Green Tree CC only a few days before.

Mark Kochan, the transfer from last year's national JC champion Scottsdale, Ariz., team, said success at Denison was no surprise to the team.

"We lost to NMJC by four and beat OC by six at the WJCAC in Hobbs and lost to NMJC by four and OC by three at Green Tree, but we could see it coming together.

"At regional we had four solid scores instead of the usual two and we beat second place NMJC by four and Odessa College, the third place team, by 20 or 25."

MIDLAND will be without Andrew Coltart and Sean Duffy, who will return home to play in the Scottish Amateur, a commitment made before they enrolled at MC.

Poss admits they'll be missed, but is comforted by the fact that three of the reasons for the Region V championship....Kochan, Brad Wells and Mike Johnson....will be in Norfolk.

Kochan hails from British Columbia while Johnson, Midland, and Wells, Graham, are Lone Star state natives.

One thing this bunch doesn't lack is confidence.

"We know we can win. If we didn't have the ability, we wouldn't be here," asserts Wells.

Looking back at the seasons ups and downs, Kochan claims, "Nothing counts but the nationals."

WITH CLASSES dismissed last week, the Chaps went their separate ways, but will reassemble 10 days before departure. "School is out, so we can concentrate on golf even though we aren't together," Johnson points out.

Kochan wound up at MC after serving as one of the "others" on Scottsdale's national champs of a year ago.

"After coming back from Christmas holidays, we qualified for two positions and those of us from Canada were at a disadvantage because we had been unable to practice or play during the break. I shot a practice 69 and a 77 in the trial."

There were no more qualifying trials the rest of the year. "Here," says Kochan, "You qualify before every tournament."

WELLS wound up at MC through the word-of-mouth recommendation of former Chap golfer Arnie Burtschell, "I was playing golf with Arnie and he asked if I'd like to play at MC."

Brad was the key to victory at Denison, which players referred to as The Goat Ranch.

After an opening round 76, he came back to fire a 67 and his 71 was even more remarkable, considering he was three over after nine.

JOHNSON came to MC directly from Midland High after a third medalist finish in District 4-5A.

Johnson and Wells are both products of the PGA Junior Golf Tour. Johnson played in West Texas and Wells was the North Texas winner and in high school was district champion and a regional runner up.

Kochan started golfing at 12, but he was 16 before he took the game seriously. "I wanted to play pro baseball and I did play football. Golf was just something to keep out of trouble."

Johnson's father and grandfather were influential in developing his intrest in and his golf game at Comanche and then Hogan Park.

Wells' dad and pro Henry James, who taught Rik and Don Massengale, were responsible for honing his game.

NOW that they are here, nationals are the next step.

San Jacinto and Paris, regional opponents,will be there along with OC and NMJC and defending national champion Scottsdale.

OC's Lance Posey, NMJC's Sean Harbershaw and Thomas Byrd and Rusty Brown, Jim Lemon and Gene Jackson from Scottsdale are rated among the top individuals.

It's a formidable task, but the Chaps are taking it more seriously this year than a year ago.

"Last year, we flew out to Scottsdale the day before the tournament and began playing," Poss recalled.

"This year we'll drive up by van, stop to play a round in Kansas and arrive in time for a couple of practice rounds at Norfolk."

If the Chaps don't win this time, there's always next year and the experience of playing in a national for this MC freshman bunch should be valuable."

Charles leads Seniors by fourshots

Associated Press

SCARBOROUGH, N.Y. — Defending champion Bob Charles shot a 5-under-par 65 Saturday and took a four-stroke lead going into the final round of the $300,000 Commemorative Seniors Golf tournament.

Charles, 53, a native of New Zealand, had an eagle and five birdies in his round at the par-70, 6,545-yard Sleepy Hollow Country Club under perfect weather conditions for a 36-hole total of 128, 12-under-par.

Bruce Crampton, who had the day's best round, a 64, was at 132 and tied with Don Bies. Dave Hill was next at 133, followed by Lee Elder at 134. Bies and Hill each shot 67s Saturday, while Elder had a 65.

The left-handed Charles, who has one official tour victory this year and 10 in his career, started slowly, with a bogey at the par-4, 320-yard second hole. But he eagled the par 5, 467-yard fifth and was on his way.

Still, he wasn't satisfied.

"I was fighting the ball off the tee," Charles said. "I'm going out to the driving range for some practice. It's only something mechanical. I think I just have to wait for the shot a little longer."

That's not what his rivals said of Charles, who is the Senior tour's seventh-leading money winner this year after leading the tour in 1988.

"Charles is just playing great," said Bies, who has four wins on the Senior tour, two this year. "I feel he's the best player on the tour. As far as consistency goes, no one can match him."

Crampton, who has 16 wins as a senior, one more than he had on the regular tour, said he adjusted his game after a 68 on Friday and went out confident.

Okamoto draws closer to LPGA win

By RUSTY MILLER

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Ayako Okamoto says no matter how many victories and how much money she wins in the United States, it will take a major championship to fulfill her ambitions.

Okamoto moved a step closer to that goal Saturday in the LPGA Championship as she shot a 3-under-par 69 for a 206 total and a one-stroke lead over an all-star field of contenders heading into the final round.

Patty Sheehan, who won successive LPGA Championships in 1983 and 1984, tied for the lowest score of the day with a 66 and was her closest rival.

Nancy Lopez shot a 68 and moved to within two shots of the lead with Betsy King, who fell back with a 72.

"This tournament is special to me because it is a major," Okamoto said. "I must get a major over here so I can go back to Japan and be proud of myself and all of the Japanese people will be proud of me."

Okamoto, who has finished tied for third in each of the last three LPGA Championships, said she hoped to play well in the final round. In each of the last three LPGA Championships, however, she has shot her worst score of the tournament on the last day.

"I have no idea — no plan — for tomorrow. I'm really exhausted right now," she said. "It is like everybody says, 'Just do it.' I'll just do my best."

Asked if she had felt nervous going into the final round of previous majors, she said, "Perhaps. In the past, nervousness has held me back. But not this time."

Okamoto, 38, is 10th on the LPGA career money-earnings list with more than $1.5 million but has not had a vintage year. Her best finish so far in 1989 has been a tie for 13th at the Al StarCentinela Classic five weeks ago. She currently is 62nd on the 1989 money list.

Okamoto's 69 followed rounds of 69 and 68 on the 6,359-yard, par-72 Jack Nicklaus Sports Center Grizzly Course, leaving her at 10-under-par for the 54 holes.

"I had some fun and put myself in a position to win a tournament for a change," said Sheehan, who has yet to win this year.

SILENCE

Awe Inspiring, who finished third to Sunday Silence and Easy Goer in this year's Derby, was scratched from the Preakness this morning, as expected.

The Slew o' Gold colt was entered only as a second for the Ogden Phipps family in case of heavy rain, which might have prompted the scratch of Easy Goer. Awe Inspiring is owned by Ogden Mills "Dinny" Phipps, whose father, Ogden Phipps, owns Easy Goer. Awe Inspiring is now expected to run in the Jersey Derby at Garden State Park May 29.

The Pimlico track, thoroughly resurfaced last month, has yielded two track records in the last week. Blushing John set a standard of 1:53 1-5 for the Preakness distance of a mile and three-sixteenths while winning the Pimlico Special last Saturday, and Imaginary Lady set a mark of 1:48 1-5 for a mile and an eighth in the Black-Eyed Susan Stakes Friday.

Saturday's track did not seem quite as quick, suggesting that neither Blushing John's track record nor Tank's Prospect's 1985 Preakness record of 1:53 2-5 would be threatened.

Sunday Silence's Preakness status was called into doubt a week ago when the colt's handlers discovered a bruise on his right front foot that forced him to miss the next two days of galloping.

By Tuesday, however, Sunday Silence was able to return to the track and he worked a half-mile in 0:47 1-5 Thursday morning. He was outfitted with protective bar shoes for that workout, but those were removed Friday morning and Whittingham pronounced him "100 percent fit" for the race.

Sunday Silence ran a crooked course through the stretch in the Derby and his final time of 2:05 for the mile and a quarter was the slowest in 31 years.

Easy Goer disappointed legions of racing fans in the Derby. Hailed as a potential Triple Crown winner and sent off as the first odds-on Derby favorite in a decade, the Alydar colt seemed dull throughout the race and never fired despite finishing second.

His baffled handlers could only guess that he disliked the muddy Churchill Downs track, since he suffered a similar defeat over such a surface in the Breeders' Cup Juvenile last fall.

Easy Goer became the first horse to lose the Derby and still be sent off as an odds-on Preakness favorite since Honest Pleasure in 1976. Honest Pleasure finished second in the Derby and fifth in the Preakness.

Arena League returns

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Arena Football will return to Pittsburgh on July 14 when the Pittsburgh Gladiators face Denver at the Civic Arena.

Each of the league's five teams will play one home game and three road games between July 7 and Aug. 5. The Gladiators' other games will be July 22 vs. Chicago in Sacramento, Calif., July 28 vs. Detroit at Cleveland, and Aug. 5 at Washington, D.C.

"Not everything is signed and sealed yet," said Arena Football League founder and commissioner Jim Foster. "We expect to make the formal announcement next Wednesday."

The top four teams will advance to the playoffs, and the two that reach the championship game also will make a three-game swing through Europe after Labor Day.

REBS

Dirk Kubicek, Alandis Chambers and Mantry Dedrich all have cast their names into the fullback fight. "We haven't made a decision there," says Miller, "but all three have worked hard. Reggie Webb, Tony White and Anthony Sims will all probably play for us with that other halfback."

Of course, everyone knows that Strambler, "that other halfback," will be the meat and potatoes of the Lee offense.

Defensively, Lee has a little harder road to travel, but again Miller sees some question marks beginning to find answers.

"The offense is looking a lot better than our defense right now, but we expected that because most of our returning talent is on the offense," said Miller. "Our defensive front has been a problem for us. We know that Steve Ruckman and Farris Strambler can play at defensive end, but we need some players in the middle. We're looking at Mantry Dedrich, Roy Malgoza, Brandon Rayburn, Matt Wilson, Charles Mosley, Chris Kosh, Chad Sheddy and Justin Perkins up front, but, as you can see, we may have to be playing a lot of kids both ways. Still, we have some depth there, so maybe no one will have to go two ways the whole game."

Linebacker was another concern. Bennie Jones is back, but will move into the middle to replace two-time All-District performer Michael Pearson. Jones is set, but Miller's worries have been relieved on the outside with Greg Rich and junior Derrick Turner, who is also a quarterback, having a great spring at the strong side. Ruckman is learning the weak-side position in addition to defensive end while J.J. Johnson and Mike Loftis give some added depth.

The defensive secondary is expected to be much better than last year with Henderson, Chambers, Webb, White, Sims and Randy Brown all coming through in the spring.

Lee will go public at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Memorial Stadium with the annual Maroon-White scrimmage game. It will be here where questions can find answers. It is also the opportunity for Lee fans to learn the words to Miller's new 1989 tune. After a two-week review period, that tune just may be worth whistling through a long hot summer.

Texas took a 1-0 lead in the second inning on Clay King's RBI double, but Arkansas quickly tied the score on Greg D'Alexander's second home run of the year.

But the Longhorns wrapped up things in the third inning, when they sent nine men to the plate for five runs on four hits.

Steve Bethea, Jon Prather and David Tollison had RBI singles in the inning, and Arthur Butcher had a two-run double.

Butcher added a solo home run, his fifth of the year, in the Longhorn's three-run eighth and was 3-for-5 on the afternoon with three RBI's.

Texas also beat Arkansas, 8-3, earlier in the week in the first round of the tournament.

To win the tournament, Texas was faced with beating A&M on Saturday night and again on Sunday, since the Aggies went into Saturday night's game unbeaten in the tournament. A&M beat Texas on Friday night.

ORU coaches rebut allegations

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Reports of allegations of NCAA violations by Oral Roberts University's basketball program are "ridiculous" and a "joke," former and current coaches said Saturday.

Former assistant basketball coach Dave Pritchett told The Tulsa Tribune in Saturday's editions he had not violated NCAA rules and refuted the allegations of former players and assistant coaches quoted by The Dallas Morning News.

The Morning News published a copyright story on Saturday stating that ORU basketball players drove coaching staff cars, billed the university for a $1,200 beer party and that a former player's mother has been living in student housing for the past three years.

"This thing is so ridiculous. It's absurd," Pritchett, an ORU assistant coach since 1985, told the Tribune.

Ken Trickey, head basketball coach and athletic director, defended Pritchett and questioned the motives of those quoted in the Dallas paper.

"They don't like Dave because they are gone and he's still here," Trickey said. "This whole thing is a joke."

Three former assistant coaches, five former players and three former athletic department employees were quoted by the News as saying that between August 1985 and April 1987 players charged $50,000 to university telephone credit cards, received prepaid plane tickets and cash payments from Pritchett.

Pritchett told the Tribune the credit-card incident was overblown, that players did not receive free airline tickets or unwarranted cash gifts and that he had no involvement in securing housing and employment for a player's mother.

He said telephone credit cards were stolen from him and several other coaches and that the numbers were circulated far beyond basketball players. He said the team was not responsible for a large portion of the total charges, which were not even close to $50,000.

Pritchett said calls made by players were reimbursed by players who admitted using the numbers.

"The highest bill I remember for any one player was about $300," he said.

The News stated in its story the players said they never paid the charges.

Pritchett said cash given to players was done so when they were entertaining recruits, which is allowed under NCAA rules. He said the cash amount was within the limits the NCAA allows players to receive when entertaining recruits.

According to an NCAA official, the allegations fall into the category of extra-benefit violations. Entertainment for a recruit cannot be "excessive," the official said, and any special living arrangements made for an athlete's family members must also be available to the general student body.

More than half of the people interviewed by the newspaper said they were questioned by the NCAA, some as early as November 1988. They told the newspaper the investigation centered on former coach Ted Owens and on Pritchett, a current assistant hired by Owens in 1985.

Owens denied the allegations reported by the News, saying, "I ran a heck of a clean program."

He said he heard "rumors" of wrongdoing within the program and made inquiries but could not verify them. "I can't tell you with absolute certainty some things didn't go on," he said.

Bob Nastase, an assistant coach at ORU from July 1986 to July 1987, told the Tribune he was interviewed by NCAA investigators on May 8, six days after the university announced it was immediately withdrawing from the NCAA and applying for membership in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics.

ORU announced May 2 it was dropping its NCAA affiliation immediately in an effort to save between $500,000 and $1 million a year in its athletic program. Evangelist Oral Roberts made the announcement near the end of an $11 million fund raiser to pay past-due bills at the university and the ministry.

The day after the announcement, Trickey acknowledged that NCAA investigators had questioned him about alleged rules violations two weeks earlier.

Nastase said his impression after talking to the NCAA investigator was that the ORU investigation was still underway even though the university dropped its affiliation. He said he told the investigator he was not aware of any specific violations.

"I don't know what the deal is," Pritchett told the Tribune when asked about Nastase's discussion with the NCAA. "They (NCAA investigators) could have been keeping an appointment from before and what they were saying was nothing."

NCAA officials, as a matter of policy, do not comment on investigations of member programs.

Trickey said he planned to discuss reports about the allegations with Roberts and state Sen. Gene Stipe, an attorney described by Trickey as a friend.

"I'm going to conduct my own investigation," Trickey said. He said he would advise Pritchett on how to respond to the attacks, including possible legal recourse.

In 1980, the NCAA placed ORU on probation for paying for players' air travel, giving them cash, allowing televisions to be rented at the university's expense and paying for phone bills and clothing.

Oral Roberts said at the time that if the university were ever placed on probation again he would close the athletic program.

LAKERS

Los Angeles went back ahead on Mychal Thompson's layup and Worthy's dunk.

Phoenix got its last lead at 100-99 on Eddie Johnson's scoop shot from the key.

Magic Johnson then returned for the Lakers and made a 17-footer. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar dunked for a 103-100 lead before Magic Johnson assisted on two baskets by Scott and one by Woolridge for a 109-104 margin.

Los Angeles led 50-34 following Worthy's fast-break layup with 7:28 remaining in the first half.

Phoenix then went on a 16-6 run, capped by Eddie Johnson's baseline shot at 3:48, closing to 56-50. Gilliam scored six points in the run and 10 in the quarter, but also committed three fouls.

Phoenix pulled to 61-55 on Kevin Johnson's three-point play at 2:00 and closed to 61-57 on Mark West's shot off a rebound with 55 seconds left. Thompson scored from the baseline with 14 seconds remaining to give the Lakers a 65-59 halftime lead.

The Suns led 14-12 with 6:07 left in the first quarter following two long shots by Hornacek.

Los Angeles then began a 17-2 run on consecutive baskets by Green and Scott, a free throw apiece by Green and Johnson and a layup from Worthy for a 20-14 lead. The Suns scored on Hornacek's layup.

Phoenix called time and the Lakers continued the spurt with a fast-break layup from Scott and a jump-hook from Green. Johnson made a fallaway jumper from 12 feet and a free throw to complete the three-point play for a 29-16 lead with 3:09 left.

Kevin Johnson, Phoenix's second-leading scorer in the playoffs, then made a layup for his first points. Michael Cooper gave the Lakers their biggest lead, 34-18, with a long jumper followed by a 3-point shot with 1:52 left.

Fewer, but stouter horses up for sale

MILES CITY, Mont. (AP) — An estimated 8,000 people, well above last year's turnout, crowded into Miles City Saturday for the second stanza of the Bucking Horse Sale, which drew significantly fewer steeds than last year, organizers said.

Al Davis, a board member, said that because of a lack of feed resulting from drought conditions in recent years, stockgrowers have liquidated both cows and horses. Davis and Wes Tibbitts, also a board member, said that figured strongly in the fewer number of horses this year — 250 compared with 375 head last year.

However, Davis said those horses that did show were big and strong: "Some of the best horses I've seen in five years."

The sale continues Sunday.

The highest priced horse, a sorrel mare sold by George Anderson of Culbertson, went for $6,750 - far above the record of $4,000 for a paint mare in 1983.

The animal was sold to the Gay Rodeo Company of Mesquite, Texas.

The second highest horse as of Saturday was a sorrel gelding sold to Beutler Brothers of Elk City, Okla., for $5,750. The next highest was a brown gelding which sold for $5,000 to Mike Cervi of Sterling, Colo.

All three buyers are stock contractors for the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association, Tibbetts said.

He said there are 16 rodeo contractors bidding on horses this year, compared with a dozen which usually attend the sale.

Tibbetts said the increase in contractors at the Miles City sale "indicates there's a shortage of good horses in the industry."

There are also five bidders from packing plants, who buy lower quality horses for around $300 each to be used as meat.

A Grand Entrance

A dual staircase and a curved rose wall highlights the entrance hall.

In many instances, first impressions leave lasting impressions. If this is true, then the entrance hall of this week's featured home is unforgetable. A dual staircase and a curved wall painted a vivid rose color — not to mention a matching pink moulding in the ceiling which spans into the second story — helps to welcome friends in a grand way.

The interior of this custom built, two-story home features an exciting blend of traditional charm with contemporary ingenuity. The decorative touches of Candice McPherren can be seen throughout the entire four bedroom home.

Access into the formal living areas can be made from the entrance hall. Both the formal dining, to the left, and the formal living, to the right, feature pale pink walls with 12 foot ceilings. An arched window, complete with a window seat, frames the view of the Green Tree North subdivision.

INSET IN two corners of the formal dining room are lighted, china hutches. These carved cabinets were designed to display, as well as store, fine china and crystal. A teal and rose border accents the pale walls.

One of the reasons the design of this home is so appealing is due to the corridor that separates the entrance hall from the family room. This hall runs the width of the house and opens into the kitchen at one end and the formal living room at the other end.

Stepping into the family room, a visitor will observe the built-in bookshelves on both sides of the large doorway that opens into this lovely room.

FIREPLACES, which have represented the heart of the home and family for many years, can also set the pace for the interior design of a room. With a carved mantle in the same shade of pink that is seen in the entrance hall, this fireplace provides a dramatic contrast in this lightly colored room. A strong hue of teal accents the moulding in the tiered ceiling. Two sets of arched corner windows provide a view of the backyard and the surrounding golf course. A door provides access onto the back patio.

A music room is found next to the formal living room. French doors separate these rooms and provides a quiet place for children to practice their piano lessons.

A guest bath is situated in the corridor by the family room. Shades of green adorn the walls of the bath which has a marble vanity.

THE KITCHEN and breakfast room are located to the left end of the hall and next to the formal dining room. White washed cabinets are complimented by a teal, rose and white wallcovering. A teal moulding that frames the ceiling accents the decor in this room.

An enormous work island that has a Whirlpool gas cooktop is located in the center of the kitchen. Bar stools can be placed around the island for quick meals. The other Whirlpool appliances include a microwave, self-cleaning oven, dishwasher and trash compactor. The other kitchen amenities include a baking center, a built-in desk and a walk-in pantry.

Please see GRAND, Page 3D

This two story home is located in the Green Tree North subdivision.

Regular preventive measures will rid houseplants of pests

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

Houseplant pests are for the most part devilishly clever, well-versed in how to remain out of sight while they reproduce cozily and build up their numbers to the point that they or their effects become all too visible. That's why the best measures against insect infestations on our houseplants are regular preventive and monitoring procedures.

Indulging a plant in a nice refreshing bath every two or three weeks brings acute discomfort and discouragement to any lurking pests. And it's a powerful preventive against pest population buildups. Cleanliness is next to pestlesssness in the indoor as well as the outdoor garden.

The bathing can be done in the shower, at the kitchen sink or laundry tub, by spraying or immersing the plant. Whichever method you use, have the water tepid to warm. I prefer holding a plastic bag firmly over the soil of the smaller plants, turning them upside down and swishing them up and down several times in a bucket of water.

I usually add a few drop of Safer's Insecticidal Soap to the water — not full strength at label rates but something like a little less than a quarter strength. I spray-clean larger plants with the same warm solution — in the bathtub or laundry tub, wetting down all the leaf surfaces and stems abundantly.

It's important to set the plants in a warm, draft-free spot out of the sun while they drip-dry. Usually, I wash a small batch at a time from one location, and while the plants dry I will clean their site well, washing the window, polishing the sill and insinuating a cleaning rag wrung out in a household disinfectant solution into the metal window troughs to eliminate any lurking molds or insects.

I try never to crowd our plants. Good air circulation around them is an important preventive against disease and the territorial expansion of insect pests. And I place any cut flowers from the garden well away from houseplants. To do otherwise is to court enemy invasion.

It does happen, though, that even in the very best of families an insect infestation will occur on indoor plants. Here are three of the most commonly occurring houseplant insect pests:

SPIDER MITES

The sneakiest of the lot, these barely visible stinkers are often not even noticed until a plant is nine-tenths of the way to plant heaven.

Watch for a generally dirty look to the foliage and dusty speckles on either the upper or lower leaf surfaces. By the time webbing appears at stem junctions and on the leaf undersides a plant is thoroughly infested.

Mites are sap-suckers, their feeding causing foliage to become lusterless, bleached looking and dry.

Regular washing, cool temperatures and high humidity levels all discourage spider mites, which thrive and multiply mightily in hot, dry conditions. Wash the plant, then spray or dip in Safer's Insecticidal Soap or Spider Mite Spray at label rates. Repeat this routine three days later and twice after that at weekly intervals.

The multiple treatments are aimed at newly hatched eggs, the eggs being mostly impervious to sprays.

MEALYBUGS

Another common and stubborn pest, mealybugs are small oval insects that appear coated with white meal. Their egg clusters look like white bits of cottony fluff.

Mealybugs, like spider mites, suck plant juices, causing leaves to yellow, wilt and drop. Sticky honeydew, which the insects excrete, appears on the foliage and sometimes on the surface beneath the plant.

As with a spider mite infestation the first thing is to wash the plant thoroughly and follow up the washing with a spray of Safer's. Repeat the wash and spray in three days, and twice more at weekly intervals.

Avoid overwatering and be sure the plants enjoy efficient drainage.

APHIDS

Tiny, pear-shaped, soft-bodied insects, usually green, but sometimes yellow, black or brown, cluster on the undersides of leaves and in new growth, sucking plant juices, and causing leaves to yellow, curl and drop. Honeydew appears as with mealybugs.

Bath time and the same wash-and-spray sequence as for mealybugs will help to eliminate all the eggs lurking within the recesses of the plant.

The utility area is adjacent to the kitchen. A door in the corridor opens into the front yard, providing a second entry for children and their friends. A half-bath and a three car garage with automatic door openers are also situated in this part of the home.

The dual staircase in the entrance hall ascends upstairs to the home's four bedrooms. At the top of the staircase, two doors opens into the master suite. A marble fireplace is framed by a carved mantle and serves as the focal point of this pale blue room. A sitting area can be situated at one end of this bedroom where two windows brighten the entire room.

A raised marble jacuzzi tub is tucked away in a corner of the master bath. A large window is situated next to the tub and a blind provides privacy when bathing.

The lady of the house will enjoy the triangle-shaped make-up area that is framed by three mirrors. A long marble vanity is adjacent to the make-up area and has two marble sinks. The bath also features a built-in shower, two linen closets and a spacious walk-in closet with built-in shelves.

A floral print wallpaper in shades of rose, blue and green brightens this wonderful bath even more.

The hall outside of the master bedroom that leads to the other upstairs rooms is highlighted by two circular shaped display cases. These cases were designed to enhance an exquisite set of cases or favorite art objects.

To the left of the master bedroom, a pink and blue border highlights this sequestered bedroom. This room is well-suited for a child of any age due to the built-in desk with bookshelves and a private bath. The bathroom is divided into two parts with the vanity area opening into the bedroom. This part of the room is decorated with a rose and cream colored wallpaper.

The other two bedrooms are found in the hall to the right of the master bedroom. These two rooms have spacious closets and one room is highlighted by a fabric that has been splatter painted in rose, teal and blue.

A hall bath is located between these rooms. The bath has a marble vanity and a bathtub.

The other amenities of this two-year-old home include an intercom system, many storage closets, ceiling fans, and a sprinkler system.

Midland has been new experience for transferring couple

Greg and Jackie Ashby moved to Midland after Greg was transferred here by his company, Conoco, in November of 1988. However, their journeys here began from locations very different from Midland. In fact, they both originally came from areas that differed greatly from each other.

Greg was born and raised in Newark, New Jersey and still has the big city hustle and bustle in his blood. Greg said, "I am accustomed to the faster-paced life of the big city and the atmosphere of a city always awake."

Jackie, on the other hand, was born and raised in the small farming community of Rose Hill, North Carolina. Their paths would first cross in Greensboro, North Carolina, where they attended North Carolina A & T University. Both were to receive bachelor of science degrees, Greg in mechanical engineering and Jackie in social work.

Immediately following graduation, Greg joined Conoco and went to work for them in Lake Charles, Louisiana as a production engineer. Jackie, on the other hand, went to Richmond, Virginia to begin work on her masters degree at Virginia Commonwealth Univeristy. In 1981, Jackie moved to Lake Charles and began work for Casa De Vimmediate care facility for the mentally retarded.

In 1984, Greg was transferred to Lafayette, Louisiana to the position of drilling engineer. Jackie remained in Lake Charles where she was completing her master's degree in social work at LSU while working with Southwest Louisiana Health Counseling. After graduating in 1985, she accepted a position with Hamilton Medical Center Hospital in Lafayette as director of social services.

Greg and Jackie were joined together in matrimony in April of 1987. And uniquely enough, they were married on board the Vermillion Queen, a paddle wheel steamboat out of Lafeyette. They were to remain in Lafeyette until their transfer to Midland in November of 1988.

Neither of them were familiar at all with Midland, although Greg had made a couple of business trips to Odessa in 1982. One of Greg's coworkers, Farhad Ghassemi, referred them to Kay Sutton, an associate with Don Harvey, Realtors, for their home-finding assistance. They described to Kay what they were looking for in a home by phone so she could prepare for their first visit.

The Ashbys arrived in Midland on a extremely windy day in October and began looking at homes with Kay. The home that they were ultimately to buy on the second day but they continued to look for more days. The only "serious" problem they experienced was finding a house with a shower large enough, and with a shower nozzle high enough, for Greg's tall stature.

Now that Greg and Jackie are settled in, they have learned that Midland is a different type of community from those they have lived in before. It doesn't have the big city 24 hour hustle of Newark, New Jersey or the quiet atmosphere of Rose Hill, North Carolina or the laid-back festival atmosphere characteristic of Lafeyette.

When discussing Midland, Greg said, "We've found the people here to be extremely friendly. And culturally, Midland takes a back seat to no area. For instance, Midland has a large and active community theatre."

Jackie added, "People actually came to our door with packets of information when we first moved in and the newcomers organization was great. They introduced us to various social organizations, medical agencies, churches, etc. to help welcome us and introduce us to much of the community."

Jackie is now employed by Permian Basin Community Centers Mental Health and Mental Retardation where she works with children with developmental disabilities. And when he is not at work, Greg can usually be found watching or participating in some form of sporting event. He is now playing softball and basketball for Conoco's company teams. (Their basketball team won their division this year in the Midland City League which is sponsored by the YMCA.)

And when it comes to making predictions on sporting events, Greg's not shy. In fact, he told us with great certainty that this year the Mets would win the World Series.

Kay Sutton, left, of Don Harvey, Realtors helped Greg and Jackie Ashby find a home in Midland after being transferred here in November.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Great day for open houses

Q. A few weeks ago your firm had 40 or 50 homes open. It was super for my husband and me — we were able to see more than a dozen properties in just one afternoon. Hope you'll plan to do this again. G.H.L.

Langston

A. You are in luck TODAY! We did have so many good omments on our open house gala that we are repeating it this afternoon. Eighteen homes in price ranges from $49,000 to $595,000 will be open from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m. Look for our three column ad in the Open House section for a list of all properties. Please do go by — some of the associates will be serving lemonade — all will have loads of home buying information for you.

Q. Please tell me what the "Big 5" signs means. My Neighbor says it's a five bedroom house, but I told her I thought it was a promotion by Langston Realtors to encourage showings of Langston listed properties. Please — what is it ? D.I.

A. You are right — it is a promotion to encourage the showing — (and SALE we hope!) of properties listed with our firm.

This is the way it works:

Sellers of properties listed with Langston Realtors who enroll in the program deposit $200 in the contest account when their properties sells. The money collected at closing and the name of the Realtor selling the enrolled property is entered in the "Big Five" drawing. When 25 of these properties are sold, one selling agent's name will be drawn to receive $5,000.

We feel this promotion gives Langston listed properties an extra edge for a sale in our highly competitive market. The prize amount and one in 25 odds for winning are so immensely attractive to Realtors, that the showings of enrolled properties have really increasesed.

The opportunity to win $5,000 encourages Realtors to show these homes to every possible prospect; and of course each additional showing increased the percentages for a sale of that property. Homes have to be seen to be sold!

Enrolled properties are indentified in Langston Realtors MRT advertising and in the multiple listing book used by all MLS members. Langston Realtors has assumed costs of promoting and administering the program. A name will be drawn every time 25 "Big 5" properties sell during the term of the promotion. Names will not be held over from one drawing to the next; only the 25 agents who sold applicable Langston listings in the current drawing are eligible.

Sellers Interested in participating in the "Big 5" program should call a Langston Realtors sales associate or the Relocation Department at 6829495 for more information.

Commercial property owners should be informed on valuations

In the soft commercial real estate market in Texas, property owners should pay close attention when they receive their property valuation notices in May.

"The majority of the property valuations in Texas counties are fair and accurate, but with $160 billion in appraised commercial and industrial real estate in Texas, incorrect valuations can occur," said John Brusniak, a partner with the Dallas law firm Vial, Hamilton, Koch & Knox.

Brusnial advises property owners to take the offensive even before the valuation notice arrives in the mail. Owners should get an idea about what the property is worth, by talking to other property owners or to real estate brokers about the valuations and selling prices of similar buildings. "When the valuation notice arrives, you'll be one step ahead in assessing if it is fair."

According to Brusniak, it's important to act quickly if you receive a valuation notice that you consider unfair. "If you wait until the tax bill arrives at the end of the year, it's too late, because you will have missed crucial filing deadlines."

The Property Tax Code of 1982 provides a unified system of standard appraisal techniques for determining property valuations in Texas counties. The valuation, mailed to property owners in May and June, is used to determine local taxes, which are billed at year-end. If a valuation increased but the tax rate is not decreased, then the property owner's overall tax obligation also will increase.

The updated Code requires appraisal districts to re-appraise property values once every four years. "In major Texas cities, where the commercial real estate market is over built and vacancy rates are high, there is a chance that your property — office building, hotel-/motel, or rental property — may be valued at a higher rate than is equitable for the market," explained Brusniak.

According to Brusniak, the appraisal district has three ways to determine the valuation:

■ Fair market value sales approach — compares and considers the selling prices of similar buildings.

■ Construction costs — considers the cost to build the building today, less depreciation.

■ Income approach — views the property and the income it generates as an investment.

"Property owners typically can challenge the appraisal on two levels : excessive appraisal or unequal appraisal," advised Brusniak. "The administrative process involves specific notices and response periods, with critical deadlines at every stage of the process."

What steps can commercial property owners take if they believe that their property valuation is unfair?

Step 1: Notice of Protest — The first step is to file a written notice of protest to the appraisal review board before May 31 or 30 days after the valuation is received, whichever is later. There is a separate appraisal review board for each appraisal district; the protest must be filed in the district in which the property is located.

Step 2: Protest Hearing — The appraisal review board — a citizen panel appointed every year — then is required to give at least 15 days notice of the protest hearing date. "At this stage, property owners should be prepare a concise presentation to support the claim, but they want hard facts."

According to Ken Nolan of the Dallas County Appraisal District, many property owners come unprepared to the hearing. Written data, including income and expense statements, contracts, cost information, rent rolls and proof of comparable sales, is essential. "Commercial property owners even can sit down with the appraisers before the hearing, to review their claim," offered Nolan.

The review board either will grant or deny the request for a lower valuation, sending written notice of the decision by certified mail. "The mistake that most property owners make occurs at this stage of the process," explained Brusniak. "Most owners assume that if the request for a lower valuation is denied, there is no recourse."

Step 3: The "Hidden" Step — Until recently, many property owners were unaware of the appeal process. While the valuation notice outlined the steps for the initial protest, the decision notice made no reference to the appeal process. "The legislature amended the law in 1987 to ensure that this crucial step is detailed clearly on the notice," Brusniak said.

Owners have 15 days to notify the appraisal review board of their intention to appeal the decision to the district court. The petition for review must be filed with the district court within 45 days after the notice of the appraisal board's final decision is received.

"The appeal is a more formal proceeding than the review board hearing, with rigid rules of evidence and no time limit," explained Brusniak. "Property owners should consider hiring counsel who is versed in property taxes — both the current code and the previous code on which many decisions are based.

"But the property owners also should assess the costs and time associated with a case before pursuing this course of action. If the dollar amount is relatively small, it may make more sense to live with the overvaluation than go through a lengthy and costly court trial."

Brusniak pointed out that although property owners may appeal the decision, they remain obligated to pay their taxes. "Although court action may take at least a year to get through the trial stage, property owners must pay the tax due on the amount of the value of the property not in dispute or the amount of tax paid on the property the previous year, whichever is greater. If the owner fail to make this payment, then they forfeit their rights to judicial appeal."

Property owners who bring their case to court can recover some of their attorney's fees from the district, if judgment is found against the district. The statute allows owners to recover a minimum of $5,000 or up to 20 percent of the tax error.

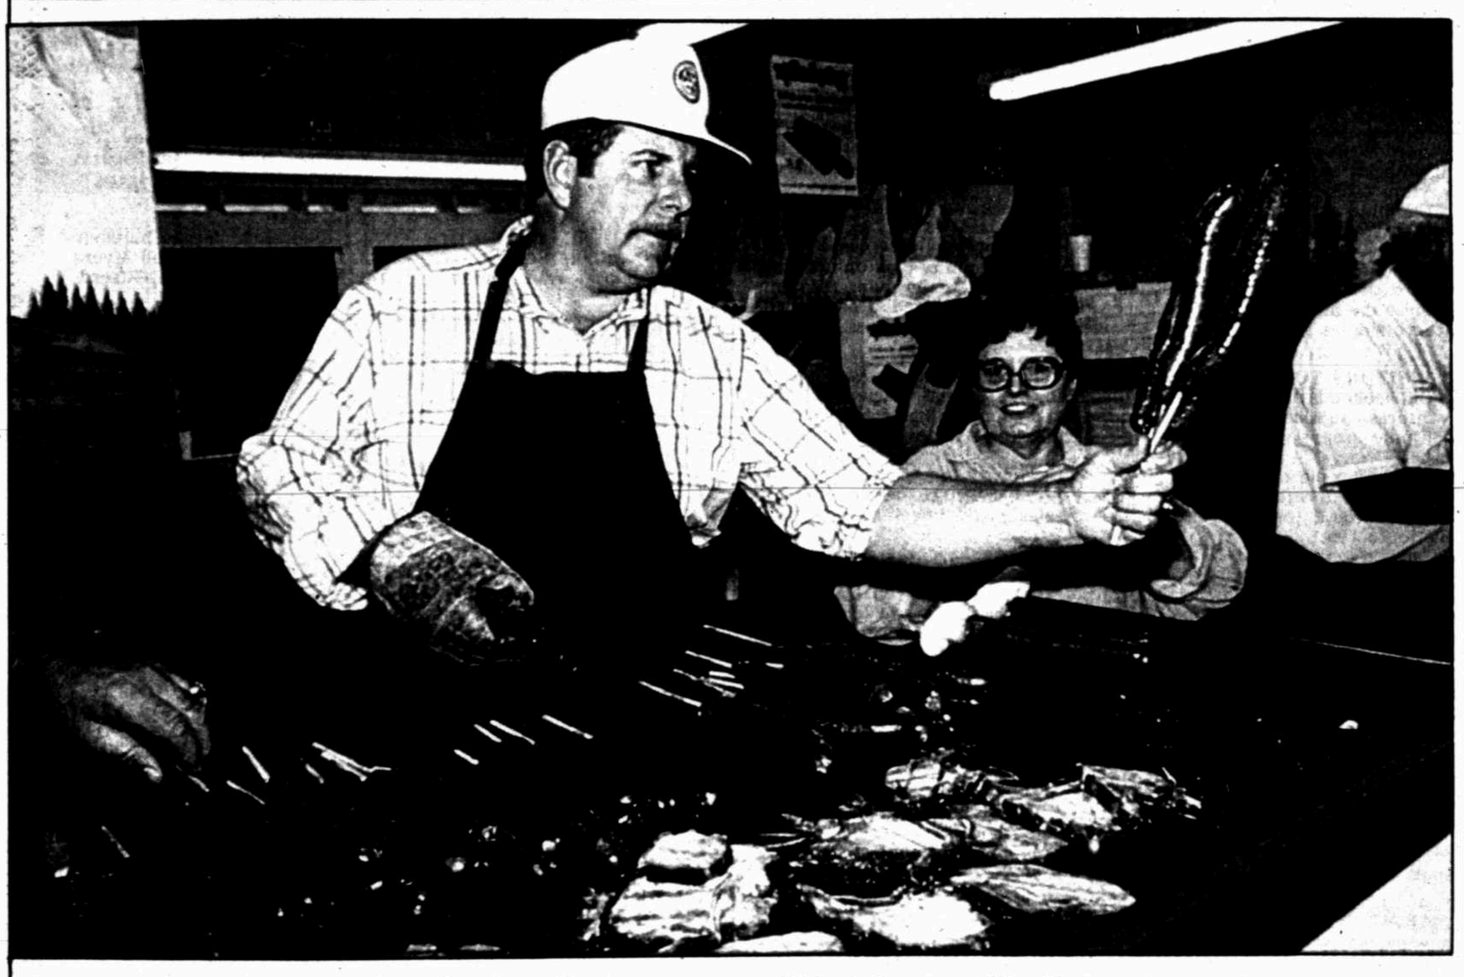
Wurst Little Town in Texas



A vendor serves German sausage-on-a-stick at the annual Wurstfest.

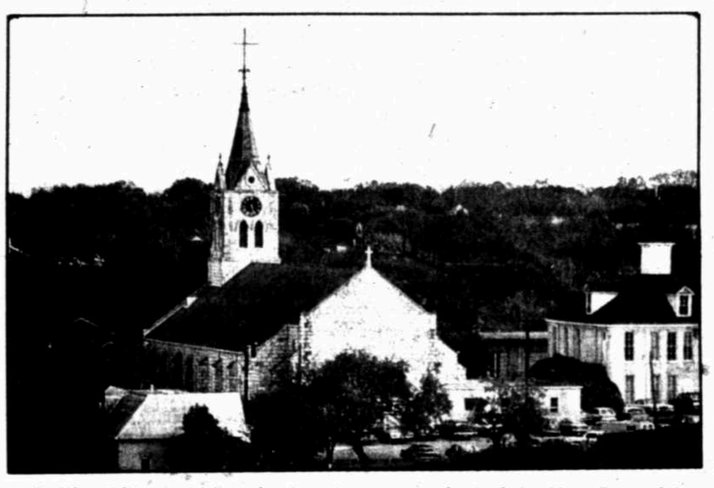
A young celebrant in traditional German dress enjoys Wurstfest fare.

NEW BRAUNFELS — Biergartens (beer gardens), polka music, frosted beer steins, sausage on a stick, men in short pants and suspenders — welcome to Texas, or rather "wilkommen to New Braunfels," the wurst little town in Texas and home of "Wurstfest."

Founded by German royalty, a European legacy permeates the Hill Country town located 30 miles northeast of San Antonio. Outdoor beer gardens featuring imported beers, or as the natives say "German ice water," abound. Meal times are enlivened with the sounds of "oompah" music and the aroma of bratwurst fill the air. The city, population 30,000, is filled with historical buildings, restored log cabins and homes built in the German fachwerk (a method of construction combining wood, stone and mortar, resulting in wood and stucco facades) construction. It's a haven for antique enthusiasts (dubbed the "Antique Capital of Texas"), craft lovers and polka fans.

BUT EVEN BETTER, New Braunfels is appealing for its natural scenic beauty. Thanks to the two rivers which wind through the city, New Braunfels also boasts numerous water parks and water recreation sites which feature boating, skiing, rafting, tubing, sailing, fishing, swimming and — for the brave of heart — rafting white water rapids.

If that weren't enough to keep the entire family busy, there also are two drive-through wildlife parks, the Natural Bridge caverns (Texas largest caverns), an 18-hole golf course and Schlitterbahn (a 40-acre water amusement park recently rated one of the top five most popular water parks — based on attendance — in the country by "USA Today").



Rolling hills and historic churches are typical of the New Braunfels skyline.

Trying to see everything in New Braunfels in one day would be exhausting and disappointing. The pace can vary from languid to harried. Visitors can spend an entire day just "going with the flow" floating down the cool, Comal River, or taking the whirlwind tour over several days visiting the Natural Bridge Caverns, the Natural Bridge Wildlife Ranch, Schlitterbahn, and scootin'-a-boot in the evening at Texas' oldest dance hall in the historic Gruene (pronounced "green") district.

The best way to become totally immersed in the German culture of this Texas town is by visiting the Sophienburg Museum and Archives. Docents of the museum take guests on guided tours which begin with an explanation of the miniature replica of the castle in Braunfels, Germany, (the original home of the founder) and end with turn-of-the-century saloon tables used as props in the television mini-series "Lonesome Dove."

New Braunfels was founded on "a real estate venture gone bad," according to Clyde Blackman, director of the Sophienburg Museum.

The area was settled by a prince from Germany, Prince Carl of Solms-Braunfels. The prince was appointed by the Society for the Protection of German Immigrants in Texas to lead a group of immigrants to a new home in Texas. He also hoped to find his fortune in the Lone Star State. "Prince Carl was the second son of a king, and if you know anything about German culture, you will know that the second son inherits nothing. This keeps the wealth from being dissipated, and only the first son would receive his father's inheritance," Blackman said.

When Prince Carl set out to find the ideal location for his people to settle, he was attracted to the coastal areas of Texas, namely Galveston. However, shorty after arriving in the "promised land," the prince researched areas with proximity to San Antonio.

Captain John Coffee Hays, commander of a Texas Ranger company, told the prince about the "land of fountains," and area with natural springs and rivers, rich soil, good forest timber and water power. Prince Carl followed the ranger's advice and settled his German colonists on a bluff overlooking the Comal River. Although Prince Carl and his followers were disappointed with their real estate deal which included rocky land, Comanches and being a distance of 300 miles from the coast, they stayed and established a heritage which gives New Braunfels its European flavor today.

Please see BRAUNFELS, Page 3E

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Congratulations and best wishes to Paige Black and Leo Grumulaitis, who were united in marriage Saturday evening at St. Ann's Catholic Church.

The 7:30 p.m. ceremony began with contemporary Christian music by pianist Dave Porritt of Dallas.

The reception was held at the Petroleum Club, where guests enjoyed a buffet supper and dancing to the music of Prime Time. Harpist Andra Rodden also provided music.

The club was festively decorated with pearlized pink and white balloons. Incorporating traditions of the Grumulaitis's Lithuanian heritage, a special cake was flown in from Chicago by the groom's family. The bridal cake was designed to resemble an English garden.

Amidst the flurry of wedding plans, the bride graduated magna cum laude from Texas A&M University on May 12. The couple will take a wedding trip to Colorado and at the end of the summer will honeymoon in Australia.

A number of parties preceded their marriage. Wedding week festivities began Thursday with a "Welcome to Texas" dinner hosted by Charlene and Doug Bunnell at their home for the out-of-town relatives.

Of special interest was the arrival of the Petraitis family from Melbourne, Australia. They included Leo's uncle and aunt, George and Nola; his cousins, Yvette, Peter and Steven, along with his wive, Vicki and daughter, Stacy. Paige's grandfather, I.F. Bay of Waco, also was a special guest.

Paige's sister and maid of honor, Amy Black, hosted a bridesmaids luncheon and manicure party Friday at Back Stage. That afternoon, a garden party at the home of Sue (Mrs. Ed) Harris honored Paige's mother-in-law-to-be, Lilija (Mrs. Leo B.) Grumulaitis of Jacksonville Beach, Fla. The other hostesses were Betty (Mrs. William) Sumner, Bonnie (Mrs. Orman) Hubbard and Susie (Mrs. Gary) Burnett.

The groom's parents hosted the rehearsal dinner Friday evening at Midland Country Club.

A luncheon Saturday at Midland Country Club honored Paige and Leo. The hostesses were Lynda (Mrs. Carty) Beal, Nadine (Mrs. Tom) Craddick, Lynne (Mrs. Charles) Ray, Linda (Mrs. Rodney) Satterwhite, Sue (Mrs. Pete) Snelson, Frances (Mrs. Larry) Stapp, Ann (Mrs. Ronnie) Williams and Barbara (Mrs. Jake) Young.

Special guests included Paige's grandparents, Mary Jane and Albert Black of Albuquerque, N.M.

A brunch is being hosted today by the bride's parents, Sarilyn and Bill Black, at their home for more than 100 out-of-town guests.

Additional pre-nuptial parties included a luncheon given by Ann (Mrs. Jerry) Scott and her daughters, Stephanie and Shelly, at their home, and an engagement tea hosted by Sarilyn and Amy Black in their home.

Also a Christian book shower and dessert party given by Sara and Russell Neisig, Gwen and Don Sparks, Mary Margaret and Fred Byrom and Glenda Pearce at the Neisig home and a Mexican Fiesta held at the home of Frances and Larry Stapp and co-hosted by Penny and Jerry Hudgeons, Marjorie and Dan Kozak, Mary and Jack Townzen and Sherry and Jerry Hewett.

KATHLEEN ETHEREDGE has been elected a 1989-90 cheerleader at Angelo State University. She is a 1988 graduate of Lee High School, where she was a varsity cheerleader. She is the daughter of S.E. and Jerry Etheredge.

FARRIE AND LEROY NEITSCH were honored recently by members of Alamo Heights Baptist Church on their 50th wedding anniversary.

Held in the church's Fellowship Hall, the reception was attended by more than 90 friends and relatives. As a special gift for the couple, a video was made of the party.

The Neitschs were married April 29, 1939, in Clovis, N.M. They lived in Lubbock and El Paso before moving to Midland in 1974. Mrs. Neitsch is retired from the State Health Department.

A FORMER MIDLANDER, Mrs. Bess Googins, will be honored this Tuesday by the Women's Civic Club Council of Fort Worth at a banquet at Holiday Inn Midtown. She has been chosen to receive the council's Outstanding Senior Citizen Award for her volunteer service and active participation in various organizations.

At age 88, Mrs. Googins works weekly with Meals on Wheels, has accumulated over 10,000 volunteer hours at All Saints Hospital, serves on the board of directors of both the All Saints Auxiliary and gift shop, and is an active member of Northeast Business and Professional Women's Club and St. Ann's Episcopal Church. In addition, she "adopts" two families every Christmas season and provides them with food and gifts.

Mrs. Googins, the widow of David S. Googins, has continued to be active in the business world. She is a partner in Googins-Eidson Properties.

While residing in Midland from 1933 to 1950, Mrs. Googins was active in Episcopal Chruch of the Holy Trinity and as a volunteer at the Midland Air Force Base during World War II. San Antonian players make their own kind of music on accordion

By JIM BENSON
New York Times News Service

SAN ANTONIO — When Rolling Stone magazine proclaimed the much-maligned accordion the "new" hip musical instrument of 1989, it came as no great surprise to the south Texas city of San Antonio.

The city is, after all, home to some of the greatest accordion players this side of the Rio Grande.

Their music is known as conjunto, a hybrid of the Mexican and German cultures that comprise a large portion of San Antonio's population.

In its most traditional form, conjunto melds the snappy beat of German polkas with melancholy Mexican rancheras — perfect dance music.

Over the years, musicians have added more progressive elements that blend the traditional accordion sounds with blues, jazz and rock.

The San Antonio Light once described conjunto music as "that spicy, throbbing, accordion-based sound that pierces the night air in countless ice houses on the city's west and south sides...A native sound that is at once full of both joy and misery. It's a sound that sets in motion the loose, languid rhythm of San Antonio's streets."

Conjunto music, which originated in south Texas and northern Mexico, is to San Antonio what jazz is to New Orleans.

But not all the natives are fond of the controversial art form.

Although many in the city's large Hispanic community look on conjunto as a treasure that is an expression of hispanic art, some older residents despise the music — which for generations has been played at dance halls where singles go on weekends to meet — and call it low-class.

VISITORS TO San Antonio can draw their own conclusions.

On weekends and most other nights, clubs like Lermas, Hacienda, Halas, Venturas and scores of others along the city's popular St. Mary's strip offer conjunto groups with wide-ranging repertoires that appeal to a variety of tastes.

The best time to hear conjunto music is during the spring, when the Guadalupe Cultural Arts Center in San Antonio brings together the top accordionists in the world and their ensembles for the one-of-a-kind Tejano Conjunto Festival.

Anywhere from 25,000 to 40,000 people attended the eighth annual gathering, which was May 11-14 at San Antonio's Rosedale Park.

The four-day event grows larger every year, with groups from throughout the United States, Australia and Japan attending, according to Juan Tejeda, the center's longtime music director who originated the festival.

Tejeda likes to experiment by adding different musical elements to the event.

One year Los Lobos was invited, another the schedule included a broad range of conjunto groups who played everything from traditional polkas to the more progressive and daring numbers.

This year's show united conjunto with Cajun artists, both of which have the accordion sound at the core of their music.

Unfortunately, during the rest of the year, San Antonio does little to make out-of-towners aware of what is arguably the city's greatest cultural asset.

Although there is reams of literature on the Alamo, Sea World and other major and minor attractions, there is virtually nothing to indicate the best spots for tourists to listen to conjunto music.

ABOUT THE only way to find conjunto music is to check the local newspapers, which list all the musical acts playing around town.

The purveyors of conjunto include such musical giants as Narciso Martinez and Santiago Jimenez, pioneers who forged the style in the 1930s and '40s.

Today, Jimenez's son Flaco is considered the unrivaled leader of San Antonio's conjuntos and a pioneer of the progressive movement.

Since the mid-1970s, progressive artists like Esteban Jordan — often referred to as the Jimi Hendrix of the accordion — Oscar Hernandez and Roberto Pulido have revitalized the music: Pulido by successfully integrating two alto saxophones into an ensemble to create a blended sound; Jordan by incorporating elements from such disparate styles as hard rock, salsa, r&b and jazz into the more traditional conjunto form; and Hernandez by becoming a technical virtuoso, according to conjunto historian Manuel Pena.

Despite the best efforts of the pioneers and the new breed of conjuntos, their efforts have, until now, gone virtually unnoticed outside the Hispanic population.

Major companies like RCA used to record conjunto artists back in the 1930s, but it was a short-lived trend.

During the past 50 years, conjuntos have been limited primarily to the small Latin record labels they started to distribute their music.

But their fortunes are changing since the acceptance of the accordion by such mainstream singers as Paul Simon and John Cougar Mellencamp, and others like Buckwheat Zydeco and Queen Ida.

MAJOR RECORD companies are taking the genre seriously once again, too, with both RCA and CBS recording conjunto acts on a limited basis.

Even advertisers are using the accordion sound in such commercials as some recent ones for Cinemax cable TV and KitKat candy bars.

The music may have received its ultimate acceptance from the record industry during this year's Grammy Awards show, when Linda Ronstadt performed a ballad from her Grammy-winning Mexican-American album "Canciones de Mi Padre."

Ronstadt's conversion from pop to Latin songs could bode well for Jordan, a 50-year-old former Grammy nominee with 35 albums to his credit.

The singer has asked Jordan to appear with her on an upcoming conjunto album and to serve as a technical adviser.

New books on collectibles, collecting are available

By LINDA ROSENKRANTZ
Copley News Service

■ "Warman's Antiques and Their Prices, 23rd Edition" edited by Harry L. Rinker; Warman Publishing Co. Inc.; Willow Grove, Pa.; 700 pages; $12.95.

The 23rd edition of "Warman's Antiques and Their Prices" — that handy smaller-size guide with the distinctive rounded corners — is out, and is as comprehensive as ever, encompassing 500 major categories, which break down into more than 50,000 items, 1,000 of which are illustrated.

Introductions to categories and descriptions of individual items are especially solid in detail and there is an unusually strong (130 pages) section on pattern glass.

■ "Rinker on Collectibles" by Harry L. Rinker, Wallace-Homestead Book Co.; Radnor, Pa.; 178 pages; $14.95.

Speaking of the ubiquitous Rinker (editor of "Warman's Collectibles" as well as "Antiques Price Guide," syndicated columnist and recently appointed consulting editor to Wallace-Homestead Books), he is becoming more and more the conscience of the collectibles world, as well as its No. 1 booster, questioning questionable practices, shedding light on obscure areas, keeping the collector on his toes and on the alert to the subtleties of the marketplace.

In addition, there are entertaining and informative pieces on specific areas (airline memorabilia, compacts, lunch boxes, newspapers) and pragmatic general strategies. The whole book is infused with a passion for and broad-based knowledge of rare, if not unique, collectibles.

■ "The Official Price Guide to Lunch Box Collectibles" by Scott Bruce, House of Collectibles, New York, 286 pages; $9.95.

A most interesting article in Fortune magazine last summer reported the story of Scott Bruce, a man who had deliberately set out three years ago to obtain a marketing monopoly on one collectible, covering all possible bases.

He chose lunch boxes, buying up something like 1,000 of the then moderately priced examples, researching them as thoroughly as possible, then launching a quarterly journal called Hot Boxing.

Before long, there was a handsome "art book" written by Bruce and handsomely illustrated with exquisite color photographs.

And now we have the final step in the progression, Bruce's price guide to lunch box collectibles, showing (surprise!) considerably elevated price levels. He has done a masterful job of accumulating and presenting his information.

For anyone interested in the subject, this book (according to plan) is absolutely indispensable.

This biergarten, on the grounds of the New Braunfels Smokehouse Restaurant, is typical of the outdoor dining found in the area.

The Chicken Dance is a popular polka number with New Braunfels natives.

BRAUNFELS

The museum itself is built on the site on Sophienburg hill, where Prince Carl had planned to build a castle for his fiancee, Lady Sophia (Sophienburg translates to "Sophia's Castle"). However, his bride-to-be refused to leave Germany to come to Texas, and Prince Carl finally returned to his homeland to marry her.

An astounding number of relics are on display in the museum, which Blackman attributes to the German's penchant for being frugal. They tended to save — and re-use — everything. "If the German colonists killed a hog, all they lost was the squeal," Blackman said. Fortunately, the frugal Germans preserved many items from the past, from fabric with intricate beadwork to a frightening array of primitive medical and dental implements.

For history buffs, the Greune district, established in 1872 by Ernst and Antoinette Gruene, is a historic district that should not to be missed. It is located about four miles northeast of New Braunfels on the banks of the Guadalupe River. It includes the Grist Mill Restaurant, cleverly built over the remains of a brick boiler house, which previously served as a cotton gin; Greune's original house; Gruene Hall, a dance house and saloon built in the 1880s; and several other houses and mercantile buildings. New additions to the area include Wimberly Valley Winery, which has wine tasting daily; and several shops with antiques, crafts and collectibles.

Those who want a to really flavor the history of this district may want to take the Walking tour of Historic New Braunfels downtown (maps are available from the Chamber of Commerce).

After touring the historical sites in New Braunfels, visitors may want to check out the shops. New Braunfels has one of the nation's largest single complex of factory stores which includes Lenox, Oneida, American Tourister, Gitano and Bugle Boy, to name a few. Other stores feature German imports and there are so many specialty shops that an entire day could be set aside for shopping. After all, you don't want to be too pooped to polka in the evening.

The place to polka in New Braunfels is at the Bavarian Village Restaurant and Biergarten. The owner, Jerome Nowotny was born in 1914 in the house which serves as the main restaurant of the Bavarian Village. On the restaurant patio is a biergarten surrounded by little shops including one where Nowotny carves coats of arms. Across from the patio is a biergarten with a dance floor designed for large crowds. Polka bands play for diners on the patio, but for serious polka dancing, guests and musicians move to the dance floor. Note: diners will be expected to get out on the dance floor when the music for the traditional "chicken dance" starts up. Fortunately, the movements to this German "Hokie Pokie" type of dance are relatively easy.

Polka music is a New Braunfels staple, and the biggest event of the year, which New Braunfels is nationally known for, is the ten-day Wurstfest which features polka greats and cloggers. The celebration opens with dignitaries biting into a string of sausages (at the "ribbon cutting" ceremony) and climaxes with the annual appearance of Lawrence Welk veteran Myron Floren.

Although Wurstfest isn't until November, wurst can be ordered in restaurants and delis any time. The Wurstfest Association also has another annual event, Wasserfest, a festival in June on the Wurstfest grounds which features water events and live entertainment.

New Braunfels, located in an off-the-beaten-path area in the Hill Country, is just a short drive from Austin or San Antonio. The city is small, but it is chock full of some of the best and wurst Texas has to offer.

Next week, take the plunge with the whirlwind water tour of New Braunfels.

New Braunfels brimming with attractions

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Today is the final day of National Tourism Week — the perfect time to plan summer jaunts. No matter what your taste in destinations — from browsing in shops to white water rafting — New Braunfels is brimming with possibilities.

New Braunfels, the Texas town located 30 miles northeast of San Antonio in the scenic Hill Country, has amusement parks, caverns, wildlife parks and water activities in natural springs and rivers.

Billed as "The Antique Capital of Texas," New Braunfels also offers antiques, German imports and factory outlets for shopping. There is also plenty in the area to please Polka enthusiasts, history buffs and water rafters alike.

Suggested places to view, dine and stay follow:

ATTRACTIONS

■ SCHLITTERBAHN WATER PARK — One of America's largest water parks, is located on 40 acres along the banks of the spring-fed Comal River. Cool spring water is circulated through the park's 17 water slides and seven inner tube shoots. The water park and resort features three swimming pools, three giant hot tubs, an 18-hole miniature golf course, two children's parks, two tennis courts, a fleet of river paddleboats, water volleyball, a gift shop, three restaurants and 14 refreshment centers.

The park is celebrating its tenth anniversary this summer. The newest attraction is a family wave pool and a 500-foot long tube shoot with huge foam lily pads and fanciful amphibians for floating.

The park is open 10 a.m.-8 p.m. daily. All-day passes are $14.25; half-day pass (3:30-8 p.m.) $9.75; children (age 2-5) or spectator's pass (for pools, kiddie parks, hot tubs, miniature golf, paddle boats), $6.50. Group rates, season passes and two-day passes are available. Call (512) 629-3910.

■ NATURAL BRIDGE WILDLIFE RANCH — The ranch features a safari drive through Texas Hill Country ranchland where hundreds of different exotic animals, birds and Texas wildlife roam freely. Visitors traverse 3½ miles of paved road and are allowed to feed pellets to the animals from their vehicle. (The ostrich and zebras are quite bold).

After paying the entrance fee, visitors may drive through as often as they like. The ranch also includes a gazebo area of caged animals, a gift shop and snack bar. It is open daily 9 a.m.-5 p.m.; and 9 a.m.-6:30 p.m. June-August 9. There are special rates for groups of 15 or more. Admission is $5.50 for adults, $3.50 for children 3-11, and children under 3 are free.

For information call (512) 438-7400.

■ NATURAL BRIDGE CAVERNS — A twin attraction near the Natural Bridge Wildlife Ranch is the Natural Bridge Caverns. Both attractions are operated by Ray and Trudy Soechting. The Natural Bridge Caverns, the largest caverns in Texas, were discovered in 1964 by four spelunkers from St. Mary's University in nearby San Antonio.

At the entrance of the caverns is a sinkhole and natural rock bridge. Visitors are taken on 75-minute tours into the labyrinth of massive columns and delicate crystalline formations. When discovered, the land was owned by Clara Heidemann, Trudy Soechting's mother. The attraction, which is still family-owned, was designated as a state historical site in 1967.

Due to discoveries of more caverns in 1967, the attraction will be expanded in several more years.

Wedding rings round out traditions

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Antique engagement and wedding rings have come full circle as they join wedding gowns, services and receptions in a resurgence of tradition.

"The brides and grooms of today are very traditional," says Lynette Proler, owner of Lynette Proler Antique Jewelers here. "We are still seeing a lot of couples waiting until their 30s to marry, but even the young brides enjoy a sense of history with their engagement and wedding jewelry."

Antique and vintage rings also offer quality and workmanship at a reasonable price.

Depending on the size, type and number of stones, older designs span all price levels. Many antique rings come in 18- and 22-karat gold settings and bear the original hallmarks that identify when and where they were made.

The custom of giving an engagement or betrothal ring dates back to ancient Rome, when it represented a public pledge that the marriage contract would be honored. The first rings were plain iron hoops, but gold began to be used in the second century. When Christians adopted the custom, the ring became an integral part of the marriage service.

The combining of the ring, which signifies eternity, with diamonds — which signify fidelity — began in the 15th century. Gemstone rings were the vogue in the 16th century for those who could afford them. It was not until the 1930s in this country, however, that the diamond solitaire started being used for engagements.

Today, the solitaire is recognized as a modern American custom.

Traditional diamond cluster rings similar to the large blue sapphire encircled by diamonds given by Prince Charles to Lady Diana have become one of today's most popular looks. A similar ring set with a ruby circled by diamonds was chosen by Lady Sarah Ferguson.

Serpent and buckle rings for men and women are unusual, but still traditional styles that are also enjoying a comeback. Serpent rings became popular with Queen Victoria.

Chinese brides carried to wedding feast

Copley News Service

Traditionally, the procession to a Chinese wedding feast was a boisterous cavalcade in which the bride would be carried to the groom's house in an appropriately decorated red sedan chair. She was so closely concealed in this airless box that occasionally she would faint from heat and the weight of her thickly embroidered wedding garments.

Lingerie combines elegance, easy care

NEW YORK (AP) — Weddings are back in fashion, and the trend is toward big, formal affairs with all of the traditional accouterments including the romantic honeymoon and a feminine trousseau.

By the end of this year, the '80s will have seen more weddings than any other decade in American history, averaging well over 2 million annually.

According to Modern Bride, the first-marriage bride is better educated and a bit older — 25 years — than in previous decades. The magazine says 80 percent of its readership have a college degree and 85 percent are pursuing careers.

The average combined annual income of the first-marriage couple is $41,000.

None of this is lost on the makers of intimate apparel, who are appealing to the bride with elegant and sensuous designs in a variety of fabrics, colors and patterns, including florals.

New fibers such as Patina nylon combine the elegance of silks and satins with the easy care of nylon. Fashions in these new fabrics range from sumptuous floor-length gowns that look as though they were made for dancing to elegant peignoir sets and seductive baby dolls and teddies.

Antique lace adorns the necklines, and full sleeves end in cascading ruffles. There are a lot of pleats, embroidery, lattice work, appliques, beading, even rhinestone glitter and clip-on flowers. Unusual collar, neckline and sleeve details echo fashion trends of bygone eras.

Accidental Discovery May End Obesity

WASHINGTON - Obesity may be controlled naturally with a new type of pill, discovered by accident, a research scientist confirmed recently.

In studies, scientists noted an unusual side effect. Patients receiving an ingredient in what is now being called FS-1 all lost weight, while body weight in control groups remained constant.

Scientists say the mechanism behind the weight reduction is not clear, but suggest it is partially due to a decrease in the intestinal absorption of calorie-rich dietary fats. Although scientists for some time have known of substances with the capability of producing this effect, the dramatic impact on weight reduction was not known until recently.

The director of research and development at National Dietary Research, an organization committed to the investigation and research of nutritional solutions to world-wide health problems, stated, "The mechanism by which FS-1 works to decrease body weight is actually a more complex and sophisticated process called nutri-bonding. When chewed and swallowed immediately before meals, FS-1 releases nutrients with low calorie content into the body, while high-calorie fats are eliminated, thus providing optimum nutrition and a minimum number of calories."

Studies with FS-1 indicate weight loss results clearly superior to products currently available for the treatment of obesity. In a comparative study by NDR, whose research topics have been the subject of articles published in recent medical and nutritional journals, FS-1 was found to be the most effective treatment for obesity and the most acceptable to patients.

The discovery comes as welcome news to thousands of obesity sufferers waiting years for this type of breakthrough. According to a spokesperson at NDR, "FS-1 can be made available to the public immediately, because it is not a drug and contains only natural ingredients recognized as safe. a drug with essentially the same weight loss capabilities might take as long as eight years to be available, due to lengthy delays encountered in the approval process. "FS-1 is currently available on a limited basis through physicians and pharmacies. An instruction sheet for proper use and optimum results is provided with each bottle of 100 tablets.

Couple's compatibility 'comes out in the wash'

By DAVID GRIMES
New York Times News Service

SARASOTA, Fla. — People who are contemplating marriage are a lot more careful than they used to be, what with prenuptial agreements, AIDS testing and all the rest.

Still, too many couples are tying the knot without giving any consideration to what may be the two touchiest issues in any marriage.

I'm talking, of course, about silk undergarments and T-shirts.

My wife and I, like so many other innocent couples, did not realize how silk undergarment and T-shirt misuse could threaten the stability of our marriage. If we had known, we probably would have revised our wedding vows to read thusly:

Me: "I take this woman to be my lawfully wedded wife and promise, under pain of death by parasitic flatworms, that I will never, ever wash her silk undergarments with my blue jeans."

She: "I take this man to be my lawfully wedded husband and promise that I will never, ever convert his favorite old T-shirt into dust rags without his permission, preferably obtained while he is listening to me and not engrossed in his favorite TV show, 'Lifestyles of the Fat and Indolent.'"

Unfortunately, we did not have the foresight to do this and so, unwittingly, we set ourselves up for a terrible tragedy.

In my defense, I should say that I have never professed any expertise on the subject of laundry. To me, "pre-wash" is the state my clothes are in before I take them to the laundry room. The challenge of doing laundry, to me, is not how clean you can get your clothes but how many baskets of clothing you can cram into the washing machine.

So, it was with these credentials that I attempted to do my wife's and my laundry while she was recovering in the hospital after the birth of our son.

There was not a lot of laundry to be done: some blue jeans, some white socks, a couple of muddy golf towels and, last but not least, a few dainty pairs of my wife's unmentionables.

There was not enough laundry to justify two loads and, besides, "Lifestyles of the Fat and Indolent" was coming on, so I crammed everything into the washer, threw in some detergent and bleach, turned the temperature dial to "parboil" and then gave the machine a couple of days to do its work.

When I opened the machine, I noticed two things: 1) My white socks were now blue (A Good Thing), and 2) My wife's undergarments had disappeared (A Bad Thing).

Actually, they had not disappeared; they had just shrunk slightly and, indeed, would have been perfectly serviceable if my wife drank Slim-Fast until she was the size of a Barbie doll. They also were blue.

I don't think my wife cut my favorite old T-shirt into dust rags to get back at me for ruining her silk undergarments, but she was pretty upset, so I can't say for sure.

All I know is that none of this would have happened if we had sat down together before we got married and talked out our feelings regarding T-shirts and silk undergarments.

We made a mistake. Please don't let it happen to you.

Marriage lore of love differs from reality of marriage law

NEW YORK (AP) — Do law and marriage go together as much as love and marriage?

Yes, because marriage is a contract — not only between two people but between the couple and the larger society, says Cele Lalli.

"It's not unromantic to learn all you can about the laws that affect marriage," says Lalli, editor of Modern Bride magazine. "After all, we love with the head as well as the heart."

The April issue of the magazine highlighted some of the differences between marriage lore and marriage law.

For example, marriage is not an entirely private matter between two people. Marriage is a contract between two people and the government, since the legal status of the union can't be altered without the consent of the state. The landmark Supreme Court decision explains: "It is an institution in whose maintenance and purity the public is deeply interested. For it is the foundation of the family and society, without which there would be neither civilization nor progress."

Don't for a minute believe that a woman has to take her husband's name to ensure the legitimacy of their children. Assuming the husband's name is a custom in the United States, not a law. If a bride retains her maiden name, neither the child's legitimacy nor birth certificate will be affected since the mother's maiden name appears on this in all cases. However, some states may request clarification if the child is not to carry the father's name.

Not everything taken into the marriage becomes joint property. The Married Women's Property Acts assure a woman the right to own property and maintain financial independence without her husband's control. Sole ownership is, of course, relinquished as soon as any assets are placed in a jointly held account.

And, if you think that each partner is responsible for his half of taxes due on a joint return, you're wrong. The law states that each partner is responsible for the entire debt. Each partner also is responsible for the return's accuracy.

So, says Lalli, "discuss all the issues, legal and otherwise, that concern you before you say "I do."

Obesity is called 'disease of appetite'

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Obesity is second only to tooth decay as a major nutritional problem in this country, says a nutrition expert at the University of Rochester's Medical School.

Dr. Gilbert Forbes spent nearly a half-century researching the role food plays in determining whether people grow up lean or fat. He finally grew skeptical of what patients would tell him about their normal eating habits and their ability to gain or lose weight.

So he embarked on a massive study on the effects of overeating in women. Subjects were paid $800 each to live at the University's medical center for a month, eating as much as they could.

They were given three hearty meals a day plus three snacks with milkshakes, peanut butter and crackers, chocolate cookies, pound cake and other high-calorie foods. Toward the end of the month, the women were consuming an average of 1,800 extra calories a day — nearly twice what they said was their normal intake.

The result? The women had gained between 7½ and 11½ pounds.

"Even the two thin women who told us that they had been unable to gain weight in the past gained during the study," says Forbes. "It's just what we expected."

What he learned is that overweight patients tend to underestimate what they eat and underweight people tend to overestimate what they eat.

He also says that under controlled conditions, patients always lose weight when their calorie intake is below a normal maintenance diet — even those who said they couldn't lose weight before.

He adds, however, that genetics may still play a part in people who are "born" to be fat.

Forbes believes that genetic influence plays nearly as powerful a role in the distribution of lean and fat as it does in height, but he will not go so far as to say that some people are genetically "predestined" to gain weight on the same diet that keeps others trim.

"I think of obesity as a disease of appetite," he says. "All the evidence we have accumulated under controlled conditions suggests that obese people do tend to eat more than lean people.

"I think what obese people may inherit is a big appetite."

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Alzheimer's disease devastates families

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

A few years ago, a grandfather played with his grandchildren. Today he can't remember their names. Tomorrow he might not recognize their faces.

The grandfather has Alzheimer's disease, an illness that steals the minds of its victims and breaks the hearts of their families.

Alzheimer's is a neurological disease which slowly degenerates nerve cells in the cerebral cortex. No definitive diagnostic test for the disease currently exists. Patients undergo neurological and physiological testing, biochemical analysis and other tests, but the only way to confirm the diagnosis is by brain tissue biopsy or autopsy. The diagnosis is usually made by a process of elimination.

Alzheimer's disease tends to follow a progressive course, frequently beginning with memory loss and confusion about time and place. Some patients have seizures or become violent in the early stage. Depression is likely as the patient grows aware of the changes. The family may notice abrupt personality changes and an inability to perform routine tasks.

As the disease progresses, many patients become restless, especially at night. Some pack or unpack belongings, pace up and down for hours or wander away from the house.

Difficulty with verbal communication is common. Most patients develop a curious speech habit known as "intrusion," in which they repeat, out of context, a word or phrase used earlier in conversation.

Another sign of the disease is repetitive actions. Unusual chewing movements of the mouth may be noticed. The person may become extremely irritable or walk with an unsteady gait. Many patients lose the ability to write or to perform normal daily tasks.

As the disease worsens, the patient loses control of bowel or bladder functions. Appetite diminishes and some patients may forget to eat. Family members are no longer recognized. The patient may withdraw from all communication. Eventually, he becomes feeble or bedridden.

No consistent effective treatment exists for Alzheimer's disease. Psychotropic drugs may help relieve agitation, restlessness and depression. Other drugs may be prescribed to slow down the degenerative process associated with aging.

Because most patients become totally dependent on families, relatives learn to be caregivers, as they work to maintain the patient's mental and physical functions as long as possible.

In the early stages of the disease, family members should stick to a regular routine and not rearrange furniture or appliances. The day and the date should be posted where the patient can see them. To provide sensory stimulation, caregivers can show the patient family albums or read the newspaper to him. Even the simplest task must be broken down into steps. Something as mundane as brushing teeth must be broken into separate activities.

When family members go out, they should write down where they are going and leave notes reminding the patient of certain activities.

These patients have a short attention span, so conversations should be brief and instructions kept simple. To keep the patient physically healthy as long as possible, daily walks and a balanced diet are recommended.

The stress imposed on the family by Alzheimer's disease is incalculable. Relatives may feel they're on call 24 hours a day. Respite care is extremely important for the family. Schedules should be arranged so caregivers can have time off. A home health aide or neighbor may be able to stay with the patient for short periods. Social service agencies or other health care professionals can help establish other support systems.

Respite care is vital to Alzehimer's caregivers. Though the disease cannot yet be stopped, support for the family and patient can be established. Community resources should be utilized.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Legal protection wise preparation for emergency

NEW YORK (AP) — Take the time now to assess what you have — and what you need — in the way of legal protection.

Here are some tips from Family Circle magazine to keep you and your family legally sound and prepared for any emergency:

■ List Assets: An inventory of possessions which includes descriptions, purchase prices and dates, and item locations will facilitate collection of insurance payments in the case of theft, fire or other damage.

■ Build Up Credit and Savings in Your Own Name: Establish credit records for individual family members. If all records and accounts are in one person's name, or held jointly, serious financial problems could develop in the event of death or divorce.

■ Make a Will: If the deceased does not have a will, the government takes over and divides estates according to a formula, with little reference to survivors. Be sure to store the will in a safe place that can easily be located by your family.

Health program made for women

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Government studies show American women are increasingly using regular blood pressure tests to guard against hypertension, but there is a need for more preventive care against breast and cervical cancers.

Women participants in a preventive medicine program at the NewHealth Centers are given a complete gynecological examination, including mammogram and pap smear, with results of the tests being provided the same day.

The center's evaluation program includes study of an individual's medical history and lifestyle and a series of clinical tests and consultation with a doctor.

Hamburg: West German city-state is pleasure to visit

By JACK REBER
Copley News Service

Hamburg's residents are too friendly and polite to want to appear smug, but if you hint that West Germany is fortunate their city-state consents to being part of that country, they will not argue.

And, if you really want to score points with your hosts, don't call it simply "Hamburg," occasionally refer to the "Free and Hanseatic City of Hamburg."

Hamburg has a right to feel pride in its stature, wealth and long history as a free and independent city.

It was ocean commerce that made all that possible. Hamburg sits on the Elbe, a river carrying trade 700 miles into Central Europe and, in the other direction, 62 miles to the North Sea.

The port celebrated its 800th anniversary on May 7, and organizers spent $28 million to make it a party to remember.

Billed as the biggest festival in Hamburg history, it is expected to draw an estimated 1 million visitors to a long list of activities that will stretch from May through the summer.

One of the high points will be Sail '89, July 12-23, with 250 sailing vessels, including tall ships, participating.

Other special events include hot-air balloons, ballet, theater and musical performances, the Dresden State Opera, sports events and a wide range of affairs both cultural and just plain fun.

THE MOTORIZED Hummelbahn train gives visitors a quick look at Hamburg's most famous landmarks. But, if you agree that a city is best experienced on foot, there is a three-mile walk that covers the same ground.

Sunday begins along the waterfront in Hamburg. It's a tradition.

In olden times, fishermen would spread their catch along this stretch of dock and sell to shoppers anxious to avoid the "middle man" and get the freshest fish possible.

But there was one rule: The fishermen had to pack up and be gone early enough so the shoppers wouldn't be tempted to skip church.

Times have changed. Although this Sunday morning shopping area is still called the Fish Market, if there were any fish there on the cool, sunny Sunday we visited, we caught nary a whiff.

The air was full, nevertheless, with barks of vendors, the happy greetings of friends meeting friends and the frantic calls of parents trying to keep sight of their children as they battled their way through mobs of shoppers coasting along rows of merchandise that seemed to go on forever.

Today the Fish Market is a combination produce market, flea market and swap meet, with all the raucous noise and commotion of a county fair.

The old rules still apply: The selling stops at 9:30 a.m. In the summer, the market opens at 5. In the winter, it's 7.

So much shopping, so little time.

The merchandise includes everything from Vegematics to videotapes and blue jeans to brussels sprouts.

The most popular commodity by far on the day we visited was potted plants — huge ones sold from the back of flat-bed trucks.

GETTING THESE plants from the vendors through the mobs to the parking lot requires a certain amount of patience and stamina. The pots were obviously heavy, and the buyers had trouble seeing where they were going through the foliage.

Other shoppers found it disconcerting, too. When you're trapped elbow-to-elbow in a throng of thousands, it's a shock to see what appears to be a 7-foot shrub wending its way through the mob toward you.

Fruits and vegetables were other big sellers. Only a few stalls offered what might be called "junque." Most all the merchandise is new or fresh, depending on the category.

The Fish Market, by the way, is one of the best places to buy inexpensive souvenirs of Hamburg. The city's downtown area is full of large stores, but you won't find any Hamburg T-shirts there — only ones with American logos and often with misspellings.

To escape for a moment from the tumult of the market, you can head away from the port to any of the pubs that are open — that's another Sunday morning tradition linked to the original Fish Market.

Or, you may explore the covered area closer to the waterfront where penned animals are for sale. The crowds are much thinner here, and the people are outnumbered by the ducks, chickens, rabbits and pigeons.

The 9:30 closing of the Fish Market leaves plenty of time to enjoy Hamburg.

Your hotel is probably near the center of the city, perhaps near the train station, less than two miles away as the crow flies, but we'll meander a bit.

Walk back along the Elbe River, still fighting the crowds, until you pass the last parking lot.

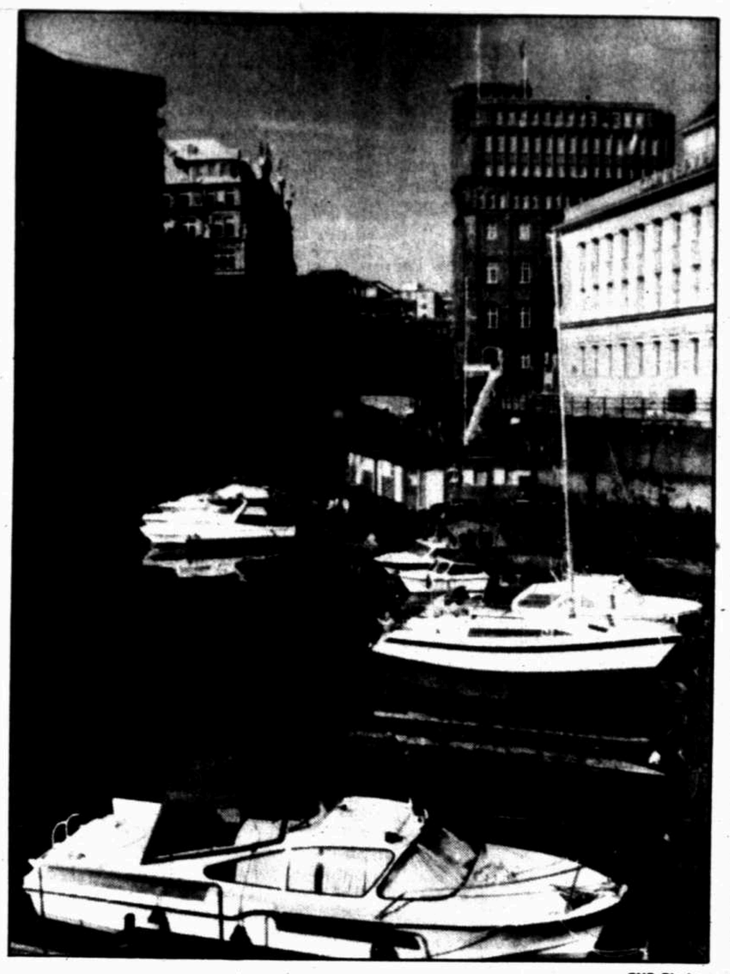
At the St. Pauli Landungsbrucken you'll find a tourist office that can give you directions, and next door is a terminal for boat tours of the harbor.

LET'S LEAVE the boat tour for another day and walk northeast past the skyscraper statue of Chancellor Bismarck and through a broad, green park that even at this hour is populated with people playing with Frisbees or just soaking up sun.

The next stop is the Museum of Hamburg History, which opens at 10 a.m. Perfect timing. The admission is about $1, a bargain. The museum isn't huge, but it's packed with relics of Hamburg's past, and, predictably, a majority of the exhibits deal with the history of the port, the source of Hamburg's wealth and prestige through the centuries.

The numerous models of historic ships are intricate and huge, some longer than 8 feet. Other displays show ship engines with mechanical parts that move.

One wall is covered with a pictorial display showing the damage Hamburg suffered during World War II when 118,000 people were killed and 3,000 vessels were destroyed by bombs.



CNS Photo

Hamburg, a city-state in West Germany, has about 2,300 bridges crisscrossing canals that link the Elbe River and its tributaries.

Other exhibits show how the port has been rebuilt to the point where today Hamburg is again a leader in world commerce, with 3,000 companies involved in international trade, more than any city in the world.

Scattered throughout the museum are paintings which dramatically capture the adventure of the old sailing vessels.

A separate wing of the museum houses the model-train section, and another is home to the office which has Hamburg immigration records. This is the place where you may find information on your ancestors, if they originated in Germany or Eastern Europe.

THERE IS still a long walk before you reach your hotel, but if you don't insist on the most direct route, there is a lot to see before you reach city center.

The Johannes Brahms Memorial is only a couple of blocks from the museum. Farther east is St. Michael's Church. Its tower reaches 507 feet above street level. The 300-year-old church has been destroyed three times — by lightning, fire and bombs — but has been restored beautifully.

Across the street is the Krameramstwohnungen, once a home for widows and now a courtyard ringed by small shops and a tiny museum.

As you leave this area you'll encounter some of the 2,302 bridges that make Hamburg tops in Europe in this category, ahead of even Venice.

Small craft still ply these waters that link the Elbe and the Aussenalster, the large lake that creates a playground in the middle of the city.

On one bridge you may notice the sign that marks it as the oldest canal bridge in Hamburg, erected in 1355 and converted to stone in the 1600s.

Farther east is the 476-foot Nikolai Church Tower, all that is left of the church that was destroyed during the war. The tower serves as a war memorial. Not a glitzy memorial, but a stark one. Weeds grow in the vacant lot where the church once stood, and the brick tower is blackened.

Farther east is the city hall, which somehow escaped serious damage during the war. The huge square in front of the city hall is a favorite gathering place, especially during the week when office workers and shoppers flock here to rest or catch the sun.

BY NOW we've worked up an appetite, and there are numerous restaurants nearby, including a fine one in the basement of the city hall.

Or you may choose outdoor dining at the Alster Pavilion, perhaps Hamburg's most famous restaurant and cafe. The outdoor tables line the canal that forms the edge of the city-hall square.

One out of 10 Hamburg residents is a foreigner, and ethnic restaurants are numerous in endless varieties.

So that's a busy Sunday in Hamburg. What have we forgotten? Church, of course.

Well, you've walked past a number of them, but there's one last chance.

Keep walking east from city hall and you'll come to St. Peter's, which, on the first Sunday in each month, has evening Lutheran services — in English.

There is little about Hamburg that doesn't relate to the port.

So, it's not surprising that even on the little tour train called the Hummelbahn, the piped-in music has a nautical theme — right down to "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean."

In Germany? Well, why not?

The Hummelbahn itself is an unlikely looking little vehicle, although shiny and clean, typical of Hamburg.

Picture a couple of San Francisco cable cars pulled by a tiny steam locomotive fitted with huge snow tires.

On a 90-minute tour, the Hummelbahn covers the major sights of central Hamburg, including a couple of stops for sightseeing on foot, and, if you wish, it connects with a one-hour boat tour of the harbor.

The guides speak both English and German as they point out the sights: the harbor, the seven-story brick warehouses, city hall, various churches, the Bismarck memorial, the Reeperbahn, the lakes and canals, etc.

THE MAIN stop on the tour is at St. Michael's Church, or, as they say in Hamburg, simply "Michael's."

St. Michael's, a Lutheran church, has been destroyed three times in its 300 years, but, although little inside is original, it has been restored to its baroque grandeur.

The interior is 89 feet high, and the church seats 3,000 people. There are three organs, including one with 6,500 pipes.

Our visit coincided with harvest time, and the main aisles and altar were lined with loaves of bread in robust, exotic shapes and flavors, all in celebration of the harvest.

Around the corner and across the street are the Krameramtswohnungen, and the tour takes a short break here to allow visits to the small shops in the two-story buildings that crowd this narrow courtyard.

The half-timbered buildings with their twisted chimneys were built in 1676 as a home for the widows of members of the shopkeepers' guild. A tiny museum on the second floor has been preserved as an example of life in those days.

The oldest building in the group sits at the entrance. The 380-year-old structure houses a wine bar.

The Hummelbahn's second stop is near the entrance to the old Elbe tunnel. You can leave the train here to take the harbor excursion, returning to meet another train, or you can take this break to buy souvenirs or snacks at stands nearby.

Back on the train, the famous sights of Hamburg glide by. One of these is the Reeperbahn. Once the place where fishermen gathered to mend their nets, this is now a world-famous sin street.

The object still is to trap fish, but the bait has changed.

FROM THE train, the Reeperbahn appears anything but romantic. You've seen shops and night clubs like these in every major American city, although not so many jammed so close together.

The shows that go on inside, however, are outlawed in all 50 states, consenting adults or no.

A more restful side of Hamburg appears as the train swings north and veers around the Aussenalster, Hamburg's 400-acre lake near the heart of the city. The shallow lake is virtually surrounded by parks, an excellent spot for running or just restful meandering.

Flat-bottom boats tour the lake, and on one visit we were lucky enough to find a festival in full swing.

Parasailors circled the giant fountain in the middle of the lake, while troops of children waited patiently until it was their turn to put on displays of ballet, karate and other accomplishments.

By the time the Hummelbahn returns to its starting point in front of the main train station, you will have seen a decent sampling of Hamburg's main attractions.

It's guaranteed you will have made a list of places you want to revisit and explore more thoroughly.

The Hummelbahn leaves the main train station at 10 a.m., noon, 2 and 4 p.m. daily from March 15 through October. The rest of the year it runs on Saturdays and Sundays only. Night tours are conducted from mid-May through August.

An adult ticket costs about $8.25, or $13 if you include the harbor excursion. Allow 90 minutes for just the train trip and 2½ hours if you ride the train and boat.

Travel agents help vacationers plan trips

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Americans made 1.2 billion person trips in 1987, according to the U.S. Travel Data Center. A person trip is traveled by one person a distance of 100 miles or more from home.

Whether they traveled for business or pleasure, many depended on a travel agent for help.

Kaye Jones, a vice president of Barnett Travel Tours and Cruises in Greensboro, N.C., has been in the business more than 25 years. She went into the travel field after trying and discarding nursing and banking.

Jean Chipman, co-owner of the Encore Preston II travel agency in Dallas, was divorced and in her 30s when she went to work about 25 years ago for a friend who owned a travel agency.

It was a traditional business for women without specialized training to enter when they wanted something to do after the children were grown, much like real estate, Mrs. Chipman explained in a telephone interview.

But computerization has changed all that, she said, and most travel agencies don't have much time for in-house training these days. To get a job, one needs computer know-how. She also notes that more and more men are entering the field, especially at management level.

Both Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Chipman are certified travel counselors (CTC), meaning they have taken courses offered by the Institute of Certified Travel Agents (ICTA), a non-profit organization headquartered in Wellesley, Mass., devoted to educating travel industry personnel. To earn the initials, an agent must have completed a five-part travel management program, served at least five years in the travel industry and signed a code of ethics.

The ICTA also has started a new program of training in geographical areas that will allow agents who complete the course to use the desination DS, or destination specialist.

A Louis Harris survey for the American Society of Travel Agents (ASTA), showed that the gross dollar volume of all bookings handled by U.S. travel firms in 1987 was $64.2 billion.

And yet, it seems, there is relatively little formal regulation in the field. A spokesman for ASTA's state legislative affairs department says only seven states regulate agents and agencies, with the regulations varying state-to-state. The seven are California, Hawaii, Ohio, Rhode Island, Washington, Illinois and Florida.

Various organizations within the industry itself, including ASTA, have codes of ethics for members. ASTA's covers such things as accuracy of any information an agent gives out, full information to travelers about terms and conditions of any sale, and prompt remittance of any undisputed funds.

The ICTA quotes estimates that there are about 200,000 travel agents across the country waiting to help travelers. Usually, their services are free.

But how many travelers actually follow the advice to "see your travel agent"? Relatively few, according to the Travel Data Center. It estimates that 13 percent of U.S. travelers consulted an agent in 1987.

AT WIT'S END

Spouses, like shoes, are best when broken in

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

There's a good interview with talk-show host Larry King in this month's Lear's magazine, in which he is quoted as saying, "I never think about age. But I could never go to bed with anyone who didn't know who Adlai Stevenson was."

Is he kidding? I could never go to bed with anyone who didn't VOTE for Adlai Stevenson. It's called the comfort factor.

We tend to "hang out" with people who have lived through our own war, wear our same morality and get tired the same time we do. Our bodies fall at the same rate; our ailments are in sync with our age. We want to have our children when our friends are having theirs and deal with the same problems as a group.

When we try to mix the generations, we end up with a family tooling down the highway singing the only song all of them have in common: "Row, row, row your boat, gently down the stream ..."

There are a lot of May-December marriages that work great, but I'm too insecure for that. Where would I find someone who knows that I interchange ACLU and Common Cause? How would I break in someone to realize that I make up statistics from Reader's Digest when I want to win an argument? Only a contemporary would know why I consider "heavy breathing" behind me the principal benefit to jogging.

I cannot imagine being married to someone who would be going out when I was going to bed and coming in when I was leaving for work.

My own history is important to me. And surviving it with someone adds to its dimension. The crying babies my husband and I held in our arms at the social room of the church as they got their first inoculation against dreaded polio. Sobbing together over the assassination of a president and the greatest black leader of our times, and wondering what we had become. Auctioning off my husband's underwear to benefit an ERA rally. (The good news is he wasn't in them at the time.)

It doesn't mean we shut out other generations or don't relate to them. But generations are like high school classes. Each one has its own members, reputation and personality. It's probably why we go to reunions. We go to walk once again with our friends in the world we created that is unique to us.

We bought a house years ago from a widow in her late 70s. She was bright, exciting, alive, and we loved having her around. But she talked a lot about the fact that most of her contemporaries were dead. This created a void, and she was saddened by memories that no one related to.

In her 80s, she surprised everyone by remarrying a man who was the same vintage. Looking back on it, maybe she just yearned to sleep next to someone who knew who Woodrow Wilson was.

Very young patients visit 'shrinks'

Copley News Service

They're a little young to have relationship problems or money woes. But more and more infants are visiting shrinks these days.

According to the National Center for Clinical Infant Programs, 20 times more infants are being seen for emotional problems than were seen 10 years ago.

Director Eleanor Szanton says that's because mental health professionals now know what to look for when spotting basket-case babies.

Infant psychotherapy deals mostly with emotional problems like depression, incessant crying, frantic shaking and lethargy.

But it also focuses heavily on the relationship between parent and child. For example, lonely parents can become excessively dependent on their babies, which stunts the infant's normal independence.

Another common problem involves parents who discipline infants with corporal punishment.

In extreme cases, treatment involves psychotherapists acting as substitute parents.

DEAR ABBY

This fish story isn't just another tall tale

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: We have a goldfish named Spot. Whenever I walk into the room and Spot "sees" me (I assume fish can see), Spot gets very excited and swims rapidly back and forth in the corner of the fishbowl facing me.

In order to test him, I have sneaked into the room quietly to find out if Spot is relying on sound, but apparently he is not because when he sees me, he reacts in an excited manner. You are not going to believe this, Abby, but when I call his name "Spot!" his excitement increases! To reward him, I give him a treat of extra "flakes" — fish food.

Do you think Spot is reacting to the possibility of getting a treat? My family thinks I am totally nuts, but I say that Spot is one smart fish. What do you think? — SPOT WATCHER

DEAR SPOT WATCHER: According to the curator of reptiles at the Los Angeles Zoo, Harvey Fisher (his real name), Spot IS reacting to the possibility of getting a treat. He said: "Fish are easily conditioned. When I was a teenager, I had a pet goldfish that would actually jump out of the water at feeding time."

This may sound fishy, but I'll take Fisher's word for it.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 16-year-old boy with a steady job that pays well. At the end of each week, I have to bring my earnings home and turn them over to my father. He has charge of my money and will give me whatever I ask for whenever I want it, but it bugs me to have to ask him for money I earned.

I have argued that it isn't fair for him to keep my money — I should be able to keep it myself. I even threatened to quit my job unless I could be in charge of my own earnings, but my father says he doesn't care whether I work or not.

These arguments are getting very persistent lately, and I need some advice on how to put a stop to them. It seems to me that a person who is old enough to earn money should be old enough to handle it without any help from his father.

Please answer this letter in your column, Abby. I'm sure I am not the only kid who has this problem. Please don't print my name. My father might not like the publicity. — BROKE IN BROOKLYN

DEAR BROKE: I see a large communication gap between you and your father. Obviously, your father has reasons for insisting on knowing how you spend your money. Has he reason to doubt or mistrust you? Have you ever been in any kind of trouble? (How about your friends?)

Count your blessings. You have a father who cares about you. Believe me, he's on your side.

DEAR ABBY: We own a cottage where we spend most of our weekends. Our problem occurs when our recently divorced son and one or two of our grandsons all show up with their girlfriends.

My wife and I have told them that they are welcome to come, but unless they are engaged to be married, we will not allow them to use our upstairs bedrooms.

They sleep together, fully clothed, on the floor of our large living room in front of an open fireplace. They prefer this arrangement to sleeping in separate beds.

These are not one-night stands, Abby; for the present, they care for each other and are going steady. The grandsons are in high school and college, and they want to finish college before making any commitment.

Do you think we are being too old fashioned and straitlaced? — PITTSBURGHERS

DEAR PITTSBURGHERS: No. If you are "too old-fashioned and straitlaced," then so am I.

AT YOUR LEISURE
By Sue Snelson

An extraordinary amount of preparation is done even before you leave for a trip.

The lighter you can travel, the more you can enjoy your trip. This is one of the subjects I cover in my travel seminars, which are designed to make your next adventure go as smoothly as possible. Here are some of the highlights:

I pack two different ways. If I'm going to be moving every night, I have found that roll packing is best. On the other hand, if I'm just going to unpack once, layered packing works beautifully. With both packing methods, I use a suitcase I can put under the seat.

My travel strategy enables me to be gone up to three weeks in one small suitcase. I take only two colors of clothing, such as navy blue and tan; I wear one pair of shoes and pack two.

When packing, it is imperative to keep in mind your destination. For instance, if I'm going to England, it doesn't matter if I forget toothpaste or shampoo because I can just easily pick those items up when I arrive. However, if I'm traveling in a remote area, such as Russia, China or Tibet, for example, I make sure I have extra film, batteries, toothpaste and shampoo. You just can't take those things for granted everywhere.

If the food will be different where I'm headed, I take granola bars.

In addition to packing correctly, we also recommend some tips for easier traveling. Always go with traveler's checks. Make a copy of all important credit cards and the first two pages of your passport. Leave it at home where someone can locate it if you need account numbers, for example.

At all times, wear a money belt. This allows you the freedom to have very little cash in your purse or pockets.

Don't make the mistake of wearing good jewelry, and certainly do not travel with good jewelry in your suitcase or purse.

In the travel seminars, I also cover such areas as how to sleep on the plane, a jet lag diet and ways to dress on planes, for easier traveling.

Because travel accessories are such an important part of traveling, we have opened a travel boutique at Midland Travel. I used to spend a lot of time advising people where to purchase items and it just became easier to have them on hand for our clients.

Our in-house travel boutique and our travel seminars are designed to make your vacation and business traveling as painless as possible. We love to plan seminars for clubs, church groups, businesses or other groups, and can do one most any time you need. For information on our handy travel boutique, the informative how-to-travel-better seminars or travel information, please call us at Midland Travel or stop by the agency. We are located at 319 N. Colorado, and our phones are 684-7428 or 1-800-356-9435.

Phyllis McDade, owner of the One Plus One dating service, uses a comprehensive four-page questionnaire and personal interviews to help match single Midlanders with potential dates.

Midlander turns mating into profits

'Looking for love' proves low overhead business

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Millions of Americans are deciding that one is the loneliest number, and are doing something about it. And residents of the Permian Basin are no exception.

There are a lot of single people in the Permian Basin who are looking to meet someone, and that means big business for Midlander Phyllis McDade, who has begun One Plus One, a dating service.

While looking around for a business to begin, McDade decided that a dating service would be a viable opportunity both because of its high demand, low overhead and high profits.

People have a great need to make social contacts and making them is not always so easy, explained McDade, who became aware of the social needs of individuals while working as a registered nurse.

In the three months since she opened her service, McDade has signed up between 50 and 60 clients, evenly divided between men and women. Ages range from 27 to 57 years, and come from all different occupations and professions, says McDade.

She observes that her clients "Aren't people who can't get dates. Actually, they're the desirable people — they have good jobs, they're college-educated, busy, active people. They're just not making social contacts."

McDade requires clients to come to her office in the Courtyart at Midland for a confidential and personal interview. There the client fills out a comprehensive four-page questionaire, which details everthing from personal characteristics and family background to education, religion, sporting and social interests, income and dating patterns. The client also describes the type of person he or she would like to meet.

She then takes the questionnaire and studies her other clients for a potential match. She looks for compatability, and takes her time. Making a match can take three to four weeks. Cost is $100 for three months; $175 for six months; and $250 for a year, but McDade is offering a special of six months for $100 during May.

Once a potential match is made, she calls each client and describes the other. If the two are interested, she gives them names and phone numbers and lets them set up a meeting. She says she's had good luck with her matches so far.

Confidentiality is McDade's selling point. "There's no videotaping; I don't give out names and phone numbers without the person's permission. I don't advertise people as my clients."

She notes that there seems to still be an uneeded stigma attached to dating services. She says clients come to her because they feel she can give them information on a potential date that would take them a long time to find out in the normal course of a date.

She says most of her clients are so busy with work they can't make a lot of contacts, "and if you're not into the bar scene, it's difficult to meet people."

The median age is mid-30s, though McDade would like to attract more retired clients. More of her clients are divorced than single or widowed, and her experience as a divorced mother of three has allowed her extra insight into the difficulties of single parents meeting people. "I get a lot of divorced people who have had it with single life and want the stability of marriage again."

She acknowledges that though she feels Midland and Odessa are starting a growth phase, bouncing back from the oil slump, the population base was marginal for a dating service. Still, "there are so many single people here — people who move here through the oil business who don't know anyone, I felt it would be a good business."

Oil editor wins national award

From Staff Reports

Pitts

John Paul Pitts, business/oil editor of the Midland-Reporter Telegram has received the National Royalty Owners Association (NARO) Freedom Bell Award for "outstanding energy coverage by a daily newspaper."

The honor was announced Saturday during the 1989 annual meeting of NARO in Dallas. Nominations for the award are made by the general membership, but final selections are made by a panel of NARO board of governors, members and experts in specialized fields of achievement.

According to NARO Executive Director Jim Stafford, Pitts' selection recognizes "outstanding reporting of oil-related issues during the past year and for valuable contribution in keeping the public informed and aware of problems faced by mineral owners of the nation.

Winners in 1988 for various categories were: Grant Williams, Mary Hargrove and Edward M. Eveld of the Tulsa Tribune; Bob Vandewater of the Oklahoma City, Daily Oklahoman; Ray Westbrook, Lubbock Avalanche Journal; Jack Smith, Fort Worth Star Telegram; Danny Boyd, Amarillo Globe News; Susan Gamboa, Associated Press; Robin Robinson, Oklahoma City Journal Record.

Before joining the Reporter-Telegram in February 1984, Pitts was publisher of the Gunnison Country Times in Gunnison, Colorado for four years, and prior to that he was editor of Drill Bit magazine (Now Southwest Oil World) in Midland. He is also the 1975 recipient of the Frank Kelly Award, presented annually by the American Association of Petroleum Landmen for Excellence in Oil and Gas Journalism. In 1988, he was the first recipient of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association Annual Media Award for excellence in oil and gas coverage.

COMPUTERS

Midland instructors will launch computer column

From Staff Reports

Beginning June 5, two local computer instructors will write a computer column for the Midland Reporter Telegram.

The column, to be entitled "Computer Notes," will be written alternately by Paul Pause and Dennis Sever.

Pause is an oil and gas consultant and president of the Permian Basin Graduate Center, where he occassionally teaches computer classes. Sever is an instructor of computer science at Midland College.

A native of Lubbock, Sever attended Texas Tech University and is currently working on an MBA at the University of Texas Permian Basin. He teaches a number of computer classes each semester including: BASIC, Pascal, "C", Assembly, Computer Organization & Programming and System Analysis.

He has resided in Midland since 1979. He and his wife Nanette have twin daughters, Judith and Julie, 14, and a son, Jason who attends Midland Lee.

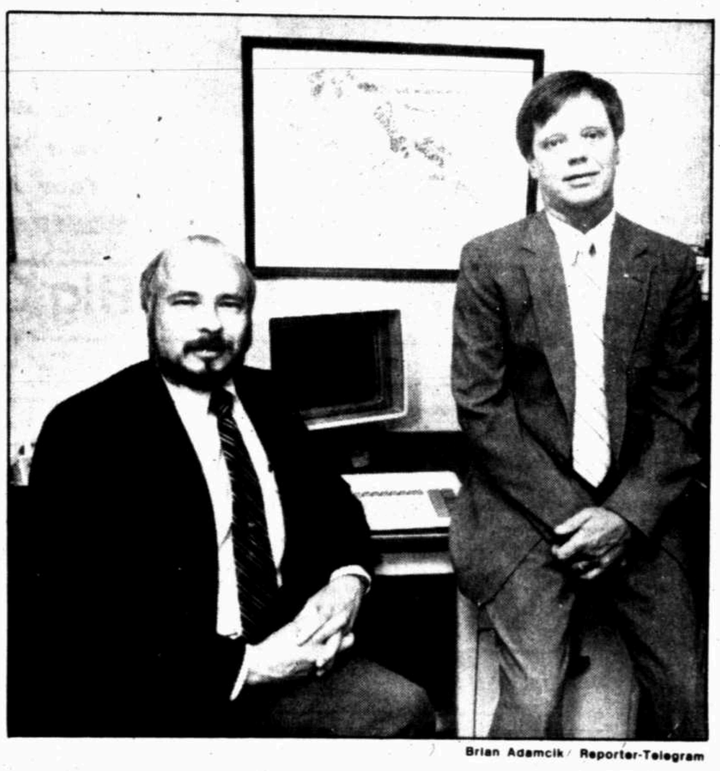
Sever will write a basic question and answer column designed to provide understandable assistance to business computer users from the beginner to the advanced. "Despite all the books," said Sever, "people still need to ask pointed, direct questions about buying and using computers. We will try to provide that information."

Pause will bring another dimension to "Computer Notes." He will examine a variety of computer topics ranging from hardware and new technology to computer software and problems. He will also deal with oilfield computer applications.

"We want to be a resource for the general user to assist him in getting the most out of his computer," said Pause.

Born and raised in California, Pause graduated from the University of California with a degree in geology and took a masters of geology at UCLA. He was employed with ARCO Oil & Gas for five years in Dallas, Lafayette and Midland.

His wife Megan is an associate marketing planner at Midland Memorial Hospital, and they have a daughter who attends fourth grade at Saint Ann's.



Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Paul Pause, seated, and Dennis Sever will launch a new computer column beginning June 5, to run each Monday in the Reporter-Telegram.

HOUSING

Demand spurs new subdivisions

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

A disasterous downturn that smashed the economy just three years made Midland notorious nationwide as a "busted" city. So why all the expensive new home construction?

The city continues to spout development after development of expensive new homes, as evidenced by two new sub-divisions.

An example is Polo Estates, put together by CLR Development Group — Midlanders Dave Clark, Jim Leonard and Doss Rogers. The group is holding an open house at Polo Estates this afternoon from 1 to 6 p.m.

The development is located at the southeast corner of Bluebird and Garfield on 10 acres of land. Seven builders — Dick Hamilton, Kelly Young, Jim Leonard, Kevin Wilton, Bob Friday, Troy Hunt and Bill Woodruff — are building homes in the development, whic is also affiliated with the Polo Park Homeowners Association and gives residents access to Polo Park amenities such as the clubhouse and swimming pool.

According to Dave Clark, the acreage has been divided into 29 home lots with home sizes ranging from 2,500 to 3,200 square feet. Median price is $150,000 for homes, and lots cost $26,000 each. Thirteen homes are under construction or have been completed, and seven of those have been sold.

The trio formed the development group last year and began construction at Polo Estates last fall. But why, considering the inventory of existing homes for sale on the Multiple Listing Service, build new homes?

"We started this development because there's a demand and a market for this quality of home," explains Jim Leonard.

Clark adds that "There's still a good market in Midland, with a lot of people moving up in housing."

Roy Allen, president of Murphy and Rochester, agrees that there is a demand for new housing. His company has developed Briarwood, a housing development located at Midland Drive and Rosewood. Of the 70 lots available on the 34.5-acre tract, 40 lots are under contract and 11 homes are being built or are under construction. Home size averages 2,500 to 2,600 square feet.

"We felt there was a need for this development," he explains. "We're in the land development business, and we've been watching the trends and felt the time was right for Briarwood."

He notes that the buyer who considers Briarwood is either moving up in housing or moving into Midland. In addition, he says, "There's a certain percentage of homebuyers who want a new home, and this is an opportunity for him to find the kind of new home he wants."

Like CLR's Polo Estates, Murphy and Rochester began developing Briarwood a year ago, with construction beginning last fall.

The company owns an additional 60 acres next to the Briarwood development, and Allen says that as that development matures, they will begin development of the second phase.

CLR's Clark attributes the area's growth to its access to downtown and its proximity to Midland College, Santa Rita Elementary and the Colonnade at Polo Park shopping center.

Yet a third development underway in Midland is Trinity West, being developed by Brown & Bates Development Inc., comprised of local builders Bill Brown and Gilbert Bates. The development contains 66 cul-de-sac lots, of which 26 have been sold.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Roy Orbison's hometown braces for fame

Pitts

As Roy Orbison's friend Johnny Cash once sang: "Life ain't easy for a boy named Sue." Now the people of Wink, Texas are finding out that life ain't so easy for a town called "the home of Roy Orbison."

A sleepy oilfield town of 1,500 fairly contented, blue-collar oilfield workers, about the only exciting things to happen in Wink since the Texas Rangers ran the bootleggers out of town during the boom of the thirties has been the random winning streaks in football.

But since the untimely death of favorite son Roy Orbison, Wink's one and only famous person, in December of 1988, the town has come under a siege of sorts. Some of its very ordinary citizens have been subjected to extraordinary media scrutiny. Their claim to fame? They knew Roy Orbison.

Earlier this year, the town of Vernon in North Texas made a stab at trying to claim itself as the "Home of Roy Orbison," because that's where the singer was born. But the folks in Wink only smile at the attempt.

"There's no question about which town is the hometown of Roy Orbison," said Bill Beckham, publisher of the Wink Bulletin. "We know this is his hometown, the world knows Wink is his hometown and so did Roy Orbison, who claimed Wink as his hometown. He may have been born in Vernon, but he blossomed in Wink."

The residents of Wink feel that hometown designation is bound to make the oilpatch hamlet a mecca for Roy Orbison fans around the world, and that Wink could become to Orbison fans what Graceland has become to Elvis, even though the roads to Wink are not yet graced with the traditional signs which proudly proclaim: "Wink, the home of Roy Orbison."

There is a reason for that. As long as Orbison was alive the focus was on the man and his music. But that changed when the 52-year old rock-and-roll great died of an untimely heart attack last December. Since then, a growing cadre of new fans and an army of faithful old fans hungry for any scrap of knowledge about their lyrical hero has caused the media to focus on tiny Wink, Texas.

Anyone in Wink — teachers, neighbors, friends, classmates — who might have known Roy Orbison intimately or even remotely have suddenly become fair game for the press. Radio shows call for interviews, documentary movie producers call with deals, newspaper reporters show up frequently.

The Dallas Morning News has just published a comprehensive photo recollection of Orbison that included snapshots, annual pictures and interviews with those who grew up with him. Included were his date for the senior prom and the oilfield worker who taught him guitar chords.

At least two writers (one authorized by Orbison's widow Barbara and another unauthorized) have prowled Wink researching books on Orbison, causing some trepidation. Some residents are fearful of offending Barbara Orbison by talking to the "wrong" book writer or "cheatin' Roy's kids out of what's comin' to them."

At stake is millions in book and movie rights. Orbison's estate stands to collect from the authorized book and movie, but not the unauthorized.

Basin, U.S. tallies higher

From Staff Reports

Both the U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts moved higher this week.

According to Baker Hughes Inc., the national rig count gained seven to total 771 this week, the second weekly increase.

After remaining stable two weeks, the Permian Basin tally rose two to 97.

Lea County, N.M. remains the most active with 12 rigs, followed by Eddy County with 11 and Andrews County with 10.

Ector and Loving counties saw renewed activity this week, with Ector County gaining five rigs during the week. Schleicher, Terrell and Pecos counties were left without drilling activity this week.

Among major oil producing states, Wyoming had the biggest gain with eight; followed by Louisiana, three; North Dakota, two; and Michigan, Ohio, and Texas, one each.

Oklahoma had the largest decrease — four rigs, while California and New Mexico dropped one each.

Colorado and Pennsylvania remained the same as last week.

Texas rig count

According to Baker Hughes, there were 234 rigs at work in Texas during March, up from 226 in February. The company says the monthly Texas rig count has averaged 235 rigs so far in 1989.

There were 766 rigs at work in the U.S. in March, up from 762 in February. To date, the U.S. rig count has averaged 789 monthly.

Florida also opposes offshore drilling

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush's offshore oil task force expects to face an anti-drilling public at hearings over the next month — not only in California's Humboldt County and San Diego but also in Florida's Key West and Tallahassee.

The dispute over ocean oil exploration has focused national attention on plans to drill off California, the largest state and the home of passionate anti-drilling sentiment ever since the devastating oil-rig blowout off Santa Barbara 20 years ago.

But Bush's task force of political appointees also will be holding hearings and making judgments about the environmental wisdom of drilling off Florida's southwest coast.

Public and political opposition there, though slower to develop and not yet as vocal as in California, appears to have a broad base of support.

"The opposition to offshore development of any sort is pretty universal in both states," said Robert Kallman, executive director of Bush's yearlong task force on drilling.

"I think frankly there's very little difference between the people up in Northern California and the people in Florida," agreed one chagrined oil industry executive.

Along with proposed oil leasing off California's coast, the task force is evaluating whether to permit drilling off the southwest tip of Florida, from Naples to the Florida Keys.

From all shades of the political spectrum, Floridians are horrified by the thought of spilled oil washing up against the gnarly-rooted mangrove trees of the Everglades swamp. Or tarring the white sandy beaches of the island chain that is the Florida Keys. Or damaging the fragile coral of the only living barrier reef in North America.

"The area is a subtropical ecosystem," said Ann Whitfield, the state's leading organizer against offshore drilling.

Just as the 1969 Santa Barbara spill jolted Californians into opposing additional oil exploration, Whitfield said, the Exxon Valdez oil spill off Alaska has dramatically increased opposition to drilling off her state in recent weeks.

Whitfield is the Tallahassee-based executive director of the Florida Public Interest Research Group, an offshoot of one of Ralph Nader's consumer groups. Florida PIRG, as it's known, rallied opposition to offshore oil drilling in Florida before the Sierra Club and other nationally known environmental groups zeroed in on the state.

With anti-drilling sentiment entrenched in California years earlier, she said, "We actually look to California as kind of a role model.

While the anti-drilling rhetoric is the same in both states, there are key differences between the offshore oil battles in Florida and California.

California has a history of drilling in both state and federal waters offshore.

But Florida has no working oil rigs off its coast and no home-state businesses or labor unions to lobby for more drilling. Despite the state's conservatism, opposition to drilling in Florida is not seen as a pet interest of starry-eyed environmentalists.

In California, Republican Governor Deukmejian and a minority of the state's congressional delegation have favored oil drilling. That is not the case in Florida, where Republican Governor Bob Martinez and every representative in Congress oppose drilling.

"There have been some writers in here looking for dirt," said Bill Beckham a member of the Memorial Committee. "But there ain't no dirt. Roy was a clean, decent, good ole boy."

Ronnie Slaughter, who graduated with Orbison and once sang in a quartet with him in high school says he received a ten page legal document from a Hollywood documentary producer. The producer wanted an "exclusive" to his remembrances of Roy Orbison, and in exchange promised to make a sizable contribution to Orbison's memorial. "I'm not going to sign it," said Slaughter, "I'm not going to sign away my right to talk about Roy Orbison. I'll talk to anybody that wants to listen."

As one who grew up in Wink, even this writer has had done his share of PR duty. I was never what you would call a close friend to Roy Orbison. He was into band, I was into football. But in Wink, everyone who wasn't an enemy was a friend to some degree. So I guess that made me a friend.

I grew up one house from Roy when he first came to Wink. Later Orbie and Nadine (his parents) rented a tin, shotgun shack from my grandfather. I played snooker and dominos with Roy at the local pool hall, and never beat him — few did. He was that good.

I graduated from junior high school in Roy Orbison's sport coat, and a year later my little brother graduated in the same coat.

In a town where only a handful of people could tie a necktie there were few sports coats or suits, and what few there were were often swapped around. In the school annual, it was not unusual to see four or five boys photographed with the same coat and necktie.

Roy was born April 23, I was born April 27. And even though he was a year older, we were about the same size. So, everytime there was a coat and tie affair in Wink, my mother went to Nadine Orbison's to borrow "the coat."

The first time I sneaked off to Mexico at the age of 14 (he was 15) to sow some wild oats I was with Roy Orbison. I still remember him on the streets of Ojinaga, Mexico, his head reared back to keep the thick glasses from sliding down his nose, a big jaw-cracking grin on his face.

When he came to Midland for a concert in 1987, I asked if he still remembered that trip. "How could I forget," he said.

Like I said, it was not a close friendship, but since Roy died I have had to recall those memories a number of times for radio stations and publications across the country. All of a sudden, with only a handful of dim memories, I have become a Roy Orbison expert.

"That's the way it is when one of the great ones dies," said Dennis "Wemus" Grubb, a Midland music promoter and friend of Roy Orbison. "The hunger to establish intimacy with the hero intensifies and the legend begins to grow. In the years to come the Roy Orbison legend will grow and grow and he will become bigger in death than he ever was in life."

Grubb, who promoted the Roy Orbison concert at Chaparral Center in 1987 and describes himself as one of the biggest Orbison fans, is donating his time to the City of Wink and the Roy Orbison Memorial Committee to promote a Roy Orbison Memorial Concert in Wink the last weekend in August. He expects to raise enough funds for a Roy Orbison Museum and bronze statue in Wink.

"We are hoping to bring in all the original members of the Wink Westerners, the first band Orbison formed in high school, members of his family and many of his friends in the entertainment industry. If we can get just one of the Traveling Wilburys we will pack out every motel within 50 miles of Wink and build a fine museum," said Grubb, who would like to see an annual Roy Orbison Day in Wink similar to Bob Wills Day in Turkey, Texas. "As the years go by, I think the world will come to realize that Roy Orbison was a one-of-kind talent. There will never be another like him."

"I think we have an obligation not only to Roy, but to his fans to build some sort of museum and memorial," said Maxie Watts, Mayor of Wink and principal of the elementary school. "He was such a great talent." Watts said the sculptor who created the statue of Buddy Holly for Lubbock has already approached the memorial committee and offered his services for $15,000.

The town has already named a street for Orbison but has a difficult time keeping signs because of fans who steal them for souvenirs.

"We have solved the problem to a degree by selling the signs for $15 each," says Maxie Watts, who confesses that he is sometimes hounded by reporters who call him at the school seeking interviews. "We want to accomodate as many of the media as possible," said Watts, "but sometimes it can be disruptive."

Automated stations spread nationwide

N.Y.Times News Service

As gasoline retailers converted to self-service, drivers had to get used to the idea that they might not be able to count on their local service station to make repairs, change tires or even clean their windshields.

Soon they may not even be able to drive in and ask the attendant for directions.

Fully automated stations where customers use credit cards to activate gas pumps are already operating in Texas, where they are known as "ghost stations."

The procedure is comparable to getting cash from an automatic teller machine. Besides the customer, no human being is needed for the transaction.

"Once people learn how to use the system, they seem to prefer it," said G. Randy Nicholson, whose company, AFCO AutoFuel, owns the Texas stations.

"Full automation means not having to wait in a line or deal with an intermediary who handles the money."

It also can mean a higher profit margin. The customer serves as an unpaid employee.

Station owners like to argue that the changes are all for the benefit of the customer. But this emphasis on convenience over service is driven by larger forces: a concentration in the industry that has put an end to the day when there seemed to be a station on every corner.

With a smaller number of larger stations, customers may have to drive farther for the privilege of pumping their own gas.

In Los Angeles, the biggest gasoline market in the world, the number of gasoline stations decreased from 9,000 to 5,300 over the last 15 years, while the number of cars on the city's streets and freeways jumped 39 percent.

Instead of one station for every 767 cars, there is now one for every 1,818 cars, according to the Lundberg Letter, an industry publication.

The number of service bays, the garages where cars can pull in for repairs, dropped from 20,600 to 8,500.

But the number of gasoline nozzles in Los Angeles has dropped only 3,000 to 62,000, reflecting the fact that larger stations, owned by big oil companies, are replacing smaller independent stations.

The average number of nozzles per station in Los Angeles is now 11.7, up from 7.3 in 1974.

The rising costs of real estate, insurance and gasoline have been making it harder for independent owners to succeed. Oil companies have been making efforts to consolidate the industry by controlling their own distribution.

Taking a cue from then supermarket and bookstore chains, they are using discounting to force independent owners from the market.

The oil companies can afford higher land and operating costs, and by running their own stations, the companies can have control over everything from the price of fuel to the cleanliness of the restrooms.

There are other reasons as well for all the changes in the industry. Cars now use less fuel and need repairs less frequently.

Car manufacturers have done away with many mechanical parts that can wear and break, and oil changes are needed less frequently, only once or twice a year.

Today, fewer than half of all service stations have repair bays, compared with 75 percent 10 years ago, and car dealerships and specialty repair stores have picked up the slack.

Not everyone is happily acquiescing to the changes. Motorists who break down on the highway may need more help than can be offered at the nearest gas station.

Some advocacy groups for the elderly and the handicapped say that the difficulty of finding assistance at the pump could threaten their mobility or force them to drive out of their way.

Independent station owners are angry, since they are the ones who profit more from repairing cars than selling gas.

They blame the big oil companies for forcing them to convert to self-service.

The oil companies insist that customers are the ones who are shaping the way service stations operate. "Stations convert because of the demand," said Neil Geary, a spokesman for Amoco. "We don't go out and tell customers what they ought to do."

In their efforts to squeeze more revenue out of each station, the oil companies continue to branch out into selling soft drinks and junk food, a trend that recalls the early days of the automobile when gas pumps were often located in front of general stores.

Of the country's 113,000 gasoline stations, about 25,000 are convenience stores that typically generate more than half their revenues selling products other than gasoline.

Many of today's new stations are impersonal versions of the general store, open 24 hours a day.

And if there might not be anyone working at the station who knows how to adjust a carburetor, gas station operators are quick to advertise other services: faster pumps, improved lighting, canopies to shield customers from the elements and service islands equipped with moist towels, gloves and padded nozzles.

Clayton Williams campaign names advertising agencies

The Clayton Williams for Governor Committee has chosen Midland and Houston advertising firms to provide creative services for Williams' expected Republican gubernatorial race.

Admarc, Inc., of Midland and Media Enterprises of Houston have been retained by the campaign committee, Williams said today.

The Midland oilman-rancher has yet to formally announce his candidacy, but has opened a state headquarters office in Austin, begun hiring a staff and is busy meeting with Republican leaders around Texas.

"We went with the home team," said Williams of his selection of the two agencies that served ClayDesta Communications, the telecommunications company he founded in 1984.

"Both Admarc and Media Enterprises have excellent track records and know Texas extremely well."

Admarc will handle television production and creative design, while Media Enterprises will execute all media buying for the campaign.

Admarc's television spots for ClayDesta, which featured Williams, were awarded local, regional and international awards for creative excellence.

Crash results reported

WASHINGTON (AP) — Drivers who crash in a Dodge Spirit 4-door sedan have the least protection against head injuries among seven vehicles tested so far this year, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration says.

The cars were smashed at 35 mph into a fixed barrier, and the resulting stresses were measured by sensors on human-shaped dummies protected by seat belts or, when sold as standard equipment, air bags.

Stresses on the head were reported as an index referred to as the head injury criterion.

The crash test of the Spirit, which is in the large- and mid-size car category, produced a head-injury criterion of 1,421 in the driver's position, NHTSA said.

The Spirit was the first 1989 model tested to exceed the maximum head-injury criterion of 1,000 allowed by federal regulations in the required 30 mph barrier crash. However, NHTSA's public testing is performed at 35 mph, which produces higher results than the mandatory test.

Other new test results by weight class produced these driver head-injury criteria:

—Subcompact cars: Dodge Daytona 2-door hatchback, 399; Honda Civic CRX 2-door hatchback, 750.

—Large and mid-size cars: Ford Thunderbird 2-door, 541.

NHTSA said the crash tests are the equivalent of a head-on collision between two identical vehicles, each moving at 35 mph, or between one vehicle moving at 70 mph and a parked vehicle.

Small differences in test results shouldn't be considered significant, NHTSA said. Only one vehicle of each type is tested, and slight variations in construction or test conditions could produce differing results in additional tests, the agency said.

Previous test results, by weight class, were:

—Subcompact: Mitsubishi Mirage 4-door sedan, 960.

—Compact: Mitsubishi Galant 4-door sedan, 971.

—Large and mid-size: Eagle Medallion 4-door sedan, 745.

Automakers are required to crash-test their products for safety certification under federal regulation, but the results are rarely made public.

NHTSA began its own assessment program for public release in 1979.

Bank finds success in others' failures

DALLAS (AP) — Deposit Guaranty Bank didn't exist 15 months ago. Now it is a $600 million-asset, privately owned bank built mostly from the ashes of other failures.

Deposit Guaranty is the sole holding of TexOp Bancshares Inc., which still has $30 million left to keep adding to its holdings — enough capital to become a $1.5 billion-asset bank without more financing.

Given the troubles of the Texas financial community, with banks and thrifts failing almost weekly — some in multimillion-dollar federal bailouts — Deposit Guaranty is swimming against the tide.

But Chairman Ron Steinhart and President Terry Kelley figure they have a sound plan to stay afloat.

"The mission is to build a profitable, healthy Texas banking organization and to take advantage of the problems, which are opportunities for somebody," Kelley said in a recent interview.

"There was some management in place in various banks that had no capital, and some capital was available if you could find management," he said.

"We felt like it was a rare opportunity if we could provide the capital and the management at a time when things were as they were," Kelley said.

Timing also was important, he said, because they believed the state was headed back to economic health.

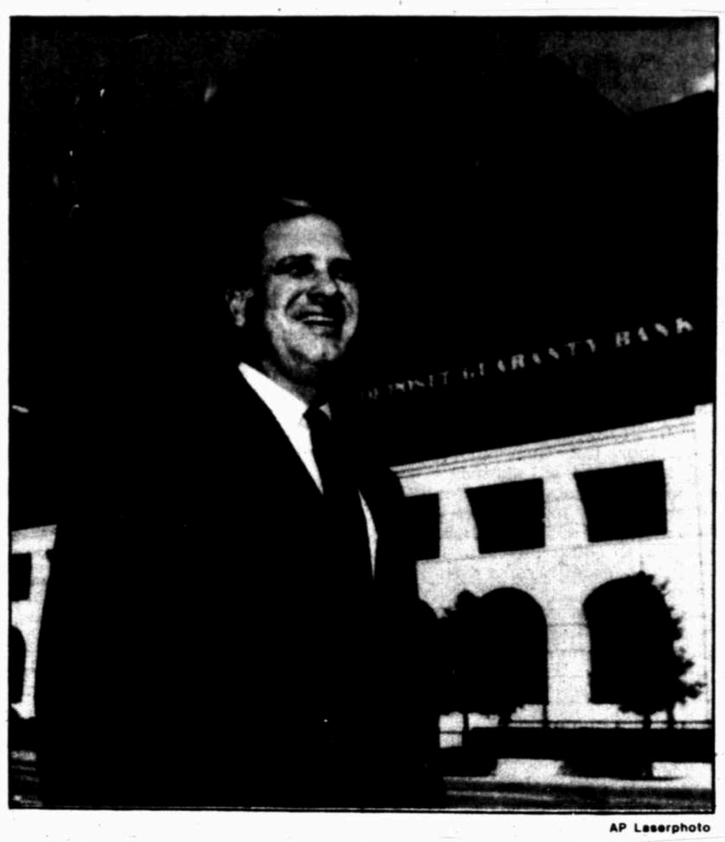
"Five years ago we'd never have tried it," Steinhart said, "and I don't think three years from now we'd try it because the opportunity would have passed."

WHILE THE building blocks so far have generally been small, often one-branch institutions, Deposit Guaranty executives still toy with the idea of going after some of the large Texas banks that remain on the auction block.

Steinhart, a veteran of buying and selling Texas banks, admits to continuing interest in Texas American Bancshares Inc., the largest of the remaining problem banks to be recapitalized.

"On the right basis, we'd have an interest," Steinhart said, suggesting he would be more interested if federal regulators would sell off parts of the Fort Worth-based bank instead of selling each holding company intact, as they have in the past.

And while the company would have to raise more money to get involved in such an acquisition, Steinhart believes it could be done.



AP Laserphoto

Deposit Guaranty Bank chairman and chief executive officer Ronald Steinhart stands outside his bank recently. The bank has grown into a $700 million institution since its charter in February 1988.

Since it was formed on Feb. 8, 1988, Deposit Guaranty has purchased 13 banks — 11 of them in closed-bank, federally assisted transactions that leave it with what Kelley calls "sterilized assets."

The money came from a pool of private capital raised by Goldman, Sachs & Co. — $8.8 million to buy the first bank and then $62 million more to finance other purchases.

In its first 11 months of operation, Deposit Guaranty earned $1.27 million for its investors, the largest of which is the Harvard University Endowment, with Goldman, Sachs and brothers Robert and Richard Strauss as other principals, plus Steinhart and Kelley.

DEPOSIT GUARANTY has the advantage of getting its banks without the encumbrances of past problems and the burdens of Texas old banking laws, which until last year virtually blocked statewide banking.

As a result many banks, even those owned by the same holding company, were operated as separate institutions within each county, leading to high management and real estate costs.

"We can look at what's the most efficient way to operate a bank today and not be encumbered by an existing organization that may be operated in a more traditional basis, which may not be cost effective and efficient in the future," Steinhart said.

But more important is that all 11 of the failed banks have been purchased in closed bank transactions, meaning Deposit Guaranty is left with few of the obligations of the former bank. Even when Deposit Guaranty acquires troubled assets, it is protected from losses by federal regulators.

"We're buying essentially with problems fully reserved, so that the large proportion of our people can direct their energies to building a bank and building a customer base," Steinhart said. "A very small proportion of our people are charged with collections of those remaining assets."

Steinhart and Kelley see a highly competitive future in Texas banking, as problems are solved and the new owners — many of which are aggressive, out-of-state banks — turn their attention to the market.

"INITIALLY THEY'RE sorting out the good loans, the bad loans; who are the key people to keep and who are the key people to get rid of, those kind of things," Kelley said. "One of these days that'll all be history, and they'll be focused on the market."

Steinhart said that new focus means "new products, new bells and whistles ... innovation and creativity that we haven't seen during the past three or four years when everybody's been so busy licking their wounds and fighting for survival."

"The economy in Texas is on the mend," Kelley said, "but the loans on (problem banks') books reflect what has happened over the last two or three years, not what is yet to happen over the next two or three years.

"This is the third most populous state," he said. "Any way you slice it, it's a desirable market to be in; it's going to grow."

Deposit Guaranty's plan is to be part of that growth, first in Dallas, Fort Worth and Houston. Later, the bank may expand into Austin and San Antonio.

"It doesn't take a rocket scientist," Kelley said. "We're looking at banks that are undercapitalized and losing money."

The pool of available banks is expected to hold steady at about 75 to 100 a year, the executives said.

Deposit Guaranty looks for acquisitions in metropolitan areas, generally already established banks in upscale professional and business markets.

CBS Records loses sizzle after Sony buyout

By GERALDINE FABRIKANT
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — For the last decade, CBS Records has turned out a steady stream of hits: Michael Jackson's "Thriller," Bruce Springsteen's "Born in the USA," Barbra Streisand's "The Broadway Album" and many more.

But suddenly CBS Records is, in record industry terms, "cold."

A little more than a year after the Sony Corp. bought the company for $2 billion, its established artists are not producing as many hit records and it is has not come up with enough hot young artists to keep its lead in the industry.

CBS's market share is spiraling downward. According to data compiled by Warner Communications Inc. from Billboard, the industry trade paper, over the last 52 weeks Warner Records has had 41.2 percent of the top 20 albums and CBS has had just 19 percent.

In the first quarter of 1989, Warner's share rose to 56.5 percent while CBS captured 12.7 percent of the market. Polygram came in third with 10 percent.

"In the last year they have beaten us up a little bit," said Walter Yetnikoff, the president of CBS Records Inc., in a recent interview. "Warner has been hot as a pistol."

CBS has been so strong a force in the business for so long that its decline has become the talk of the industry.

It is "astounding and a little bit scary," said Russell Solomon, the chairman of Tower Records, one of the nation's leading record chains.

"For the first three months of 1989, of the major labels, Warner represented 32.8 percent of Tower's wholesale buying and CBS was 15.5 percent," Soloman said. Polygram, now headed by a former president of CBS Records, nipped at CBS's heels with 14.4 percent, he said.

Several industry experts believe that in 1989, Warner Records, a division of Warner Communications Inc. could take as much as 40 percent of the domestic retail sales, leaving CBS with just 17 percent of the market.

It is hard to say whether CBS's problems are deep-rooted or could disappear with a few hit albums. Yetnikoff thinks the problems can be solved by the end of the year, but outsiders are not so sure.

Irving Azoff, chairman of MCA Music Entertainment Group, believes that the trick in the record business is to break in young artists and to sign them early at relatively low cost.

"CBS has just not been doing as much of that as the Warner Group has," Azoff said.

So far, operating income does not seem to have suffered, in part because foreign sales have been strong. Yetnikoff said that in 1988 CBS had a record $300 million in operating income on roughly $2 billion in sales.

A Sony spokesman indicated that the company had been satisfied with the performance of the CBS records operations in the last year and believes Yetnikoff is making the right moves. And he added, "Problems don't happen overnight, and they do not get solved overnight."

At Warner, operating profits have risen steadily since 1983. Warner Records reported $316 million on sales of $2 billion last year.

And in revenues, Warner has caught up to CBS. In 1986, CBS Records Group had $1.489 billion in sales compared with $1.139 billion at Warner.

CBS still has its share of well-known artists but several critics say that CBS concentrated too long on courting and keeping older stars.

Yetnikoff does not agree but acknowledges: "We need more young artists. We did not pick up our share."

When Bruce Springsteen turns 40 in September, he will join a long list of stars at CBS who are 40 or older. Many appear to be past their commercial peaks, judging by their record sales. They include Billy Joel, Neil Diamond, Barbra Steisand, James Taylor, Bob Dylan and the Rolling Stones.

Bruce Springsteen's most recent album, "Tunnel of Love," sold 3 million in the United States, a strong showing but much less than his biggest hit, "Born in the USA," which sold about 10 million.

Billy Joel's sales have dropped to less than 2 million albums from 5 million. The Rolling Stones will release an album this year, but their recent albums only sold about 1 million copies each.

CBS has signed some promising newcomers, including Terence Trent D'arby, New Kids on the Block and Living Colour. The latter two have records on the best-seller charts.

But Warner's roster of new talent is far broader.

Guns 'N Roses first album, "Appetite for Destruction," has sold about 7.8 million copies.

Tracy Chapman's first album, "Tracy Chapman," has sold 3 million and Anita Baker's latest, "Giving You the Best That I Got," has sold 3.2 million albums.

And the latest albums from Madonna and Debbie Gibson are enormous hits.

WPP's purchase of Ogilvy: How cash beat out sentiment

By RANDALL ROTHENBERG
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — David Ogilvy, the patriarch of the Ogilvy Group, told a friend he was "miserable," and Ogilvy employees tearfully hugged one another in the auditorium where the company's shareholders met Tuesday morning at what was probably their last annual meeting.

In the end, cash had triumphed over sentiment.

On Monday night, Ogilvy's board unanimously accepted an offer from the WPP Group to buy Ogilvy for $54 a share, or $864 million. the most ever paid for an advertising company.

Ogilvy accepted the honorary position of WPP chairman. And another American advertising institution was deeded to a British invader.

The acquisition, which is contingent on the tender of at least two-thirds of Ogilvy's shares, will make WPP the world's second-largest marketing communications company, with 21,500 employees in 645 offices in more than 50 countries.

Its operations will include advertising, public relations and product-design firms, as well as promotion and direct marketing concerns.

WPP's holdings will include the J. Walter Thompson ad agency; Research International, the world's largest custom market research company; Hill & Knowlton, the largest public relations agency, and Ogilvy & Mather Direct, the largest direct-marketing company.

In addition to Thompson and Ogilvy & Mather, its ad agencies will include Scali, McCabe, Sloves; Fallon McElligott, and Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein.

AMONG THE more than 5,000 clients are such blue-chip companies as Ford Motor, Unilever and Kraft General Foods, all three of which now use both Ogilvy and Thompson.

With $2 billion in revenues on $13.5 billion of billings, WPP will be only a hair's-breadth smaller than the Saatchi & Saatchi Co. P.L.C.

AN ANALYSIS

More than 5 percent of the $500 billion spent annually on marketing around the world will now be controlled by WPP and Saatchi, putting much of Madison Avenue, American capitalism's street of dreams, firmly in British hands.

Saatchi began the British advertising invasion seven years ago with friendly acquisitions of well-known agencies like Dancer, Fitzgerald, Sample; Compton Communications, and Ted Bates Worldwide.

It was at Saatchi that Martin Sorrell, the founder and group chief executive of WPP, learned about acquisitions, spending 10 years as the company's chief financial officer.

But in his four years of running WPP, Sorrell, 44, perfected a different art, that of the hostile takeover.

His financial expertise and willingness to pay high prices brought him the JWT Group for $566 million in 1987 — the most expensive agency acquisition until this week — and now, Ogilvy.

"As Vince Lombardi said, 'I never lost a game; occasionally, I just ran out of time,' " Kenneth Roman, Ogilvy's chairman, told a room packed with shareholders Tuesday in Manhattan.

BUT SEVERAL executives and financial analysts faulted Ogilvy for not taking early and strong steps to maintain its independence, like creating an employee stock ownership plan.

Roman vigorously took issue with those critics. "We looked at them all — leveraged recapitalizations, stock repurchases, white knights, white squires, leveraged buyouts," he said.

Most analysts agreed that WPP's all-cash offer of $54 a share for Ogilvy's 16 million shares was too attractive to turn down.

"There are defenses against things which are inadequate and unfair," said Alan J. Gottesman, an advertising analyst at Paine Webber Inc. "From the Ogilvy shareholder's point of view, this is neither. This is a significant premium above where the stock has ever, ever traded."

On April 28, two days before Sorrell's first offer of $45 a share was made public, Ogilvy's shares closed at $32 in over-the-counter trading.

WPP said it would finance the acquisition with approximately $500 million in debt and $350 million from an issue of convertible preference shares. Sorrell said he expected this to reduce WPP's earnings per share by 6 to 7 percent in 1990.

Fears that financing the Ogilvy acquisition would dilute earnings have led to steady declines in WPP's share price in London.

This aspect of the takeover also angered some analysts, like Gottesman, who recalled that in November Sorrell maintained that he would never make an acquisition that would hurt earnings.

WHILE REAFFIRMING his belief that Ogilvy, whose operating margins have been below the industry average, was on the road to a financial renewal that would have eventually raise its share price, Roman told shareholders, "I believe this is absolutely the best deal your board could have negotiated on behalf of the shareholders."

If there was a theme to Ogilvy's annual meeting, and to an earlier press conference at which Roman and Sorrell explained the deal, it could be borrowed from Ogilvy & Mather's current campaign for American Express, "Membership has its privileges."

In return for joining WPP, Ogilvy's managers received a contractual agreement that gives them autonomy in running the group as an independent unit within WPP.

By becoming a division of a huge holding company, Ogilvy's managers think they may be able to improve services to clients in areas like market research and media buying.

"Life will be different, but we're betting it's going to be better," said Roman, 58, who appeared rested and in good humor, despite working for what he said was 17 days straight trying to defend his company from the initially unwelcome bid.

In some ways, ad executives and analysts said, life may indeed become better for Ogilvy and WPP.

"My feeling has been that Ogilvy was undermanaged financially," said Greg Ostroff, a vice president at Goldman, Sachs & Co. "From that perspective, this could strengthen the businesses. And stronger, more profitable businesses can reinvest more in giving service to clients."

NEIL R. BLACKLEY, an advertising analyst at James Capel, a London brokerage, estimated that up to $8 million a year could be saved by consolidating Ogilvy's and WPP's back-office operations.

The biggest savings, Blackley said, would come from cutting the time it takes Ogilvy's clients to pay for advertising time and space that Ogilvy purchases on their behalf. Getting Ogilvy's clients to pay as quickly as WPP's could gain an addiitional $25 million a year in interest payments, he said.

But the newly expanded WPP will likely face immediate problems, the most serious being client resignations due to conflicts. British analysts estimated that conflicts could cost WPP $335 million to $400 million in lost billings.

While some Ogilvy clients, like the Polaroid Corp., which competes against the Eastman Kodak Co., a Thompson account, said they were likely to place their accounts in review, most adopted a wait-and-see attitude.

"We're concerned about the conflict between our business and Kodak's battery business represented by Thompson," said James J. Donahue, the director of communications for Duracell Inc.

"A lot is now up to Ogilvy and WPP to demonstrate to us that these businesses will be operated independently of one another."

Tuesday, Sorrell, Roman and Burton J. Manning, the chairman of J. Walter Thompson, took pains to stress that WPP's two networks would be completely separate from each other.

MANNING SAID of Roman, "I welcome him to the family, and I'm looking forward to beating your brains out in the next head-to-head competition we have."

Late Tuesday, Manning issued a statement saying that he and Roman had agreed not to recruit, interview or hire personnel from each other's agency.

Manning and Roman will work together in at least one area, as vice chairman of a new strategic planning committee at WPP that will study areas where the company can combine its resources, like media buying and market research.

Thrifts in west suffering drain on deposits

New York Times News Service

Depositors in California, Arizona and Nevada withdrew $2.6 billion from savings and loans in March, the second highest monthly withdrawal in the past 12 months, according to new statistics.

The Federal Home Loan Bank in San Francisco said March withdrawals from the three states that constitute the bank's 11th District were 63 percent greater than in February and the highest since December 1988, when depositors withdrew $3.9 billion.

The district's deposit outflow in March represented about 30 percent of the $8.6 billion S&L deposit drain nationwide.

During the past year, S&L withdrawals in these three Western states have averaged only about 15 percent of the nationwide total, a relatively low figure considering the 11th district has about 29 percent of the nation's $956 billion in thrift deposits.

Continued withdrawals over the past 12 months worry some observers, who see the flight of the money as a sign that even healthy thrifts cannot remain viable while the industry is in the throes of deep financial problems.

But, despite the high level of withdrawals for the district — $5.9 billion in the first three months of this year, compared with deposit inflows of $5.1 billion for the first quarter of 1988 — federal regulators don't think depositors are spooked.

"The adverse publicity surrounding savings and loans hasn't helped the situation any, but I certainly don't think it's the main story," said Richard Nelson, chief economist of the Federal Home Loan Bank of San Francisco.

He cited two other factors instead.

- One large, thrift, which he would not name, accounted for one-half of the March outflow when it replaced large deposits with funds from other sources.

In December, San Francisco-based First Nationwide Bank, a savings and loan despite its name, replaced about $3 billion with other forms of borrowing.

Thrifts often use other forms of borrowing — notes, reverse repurchase agreements or advances from the Federal Home Loan Bank system — to raise money that they they will then lend on mortgages. A spokeswoman for First Nationwide, a subsidiary of Ford Motor Co., said the S&L had not engaged in that kind of financing action this year.

- The recent troubles at Gibraltar Savings was also a factor in the deposit outflow, although Nelson would not specify the volume of deposits that had left the institution.

Claiming the Beverly Hills, Calif., thrift was "operating in an unsafe and unsound condition," federal regulators in late March seized control of Gibraltar even though the troubled S&L was still solvent.

Thrifts that have been taken over by federal regulators often experience deposit outflows even though deposits up to $100,000 are fully insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.

In a separate announcement on Monday, Gibraltar Financial Corp. blasted what it called the "shocking and irresponsible acts by government regulators" in its handling of the situation.

Gibraltar said federal regulators on Friday had prohibited Gibraltar Savings from paying to its parent, Gibraltar Financial, a $1.2 million interest payment. Regulators also told Gibraltar Financial they would confiscate $11 million of its cash, the company said.

Gibraltar Financial said it believes the government's action is unlawful and "will seriously jeopardize its relationship with its shareholders and creditors."

Federal regulators said Gibraltar Financial had agreed in 1987 to maintain the required regulatory net worth of Gibraltar Savings but had "failed to perform its obligations to contribute the required additional capital."

Video games see rebound in market

Latest grown-up games hooking adult players

New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — Ask parents, and they'll tell you that home video games are back with a vengeance — only this time it's likely that dad and mom are playing them too.

Take Peggy W. McWilliams of Atlanta, whose daughter, Susan, got a Nintendo machine and the "Super Mario Brothers" game from Santa Claus last Christmas.

"With Susan being the only child, I thought it was something she and I could do together," said Mrs. McWilliams.

But she became fascinated with the computer's graphics and the game's scenario: A little round man tries to rescue an imprisoned princess. Now Mrs. McWilliams said her thumb stays sore from making the game's protagonist dodge, jump and climb over obstacles.

"You get reinforcement from the game," she said. "You learn new tricks and you discover how to play better. It brings out the fanatic in you."

That's just what Tokyo-based Nintendo, which holds sway over about 80 percent of the $2 billion market, would like to see. Nintendo has led the resurgence of home video games, and claims that 30 percent of the players of its machines are 18 years old or over.

It is trying to entice more older players.

"The (adult) players want more sophistication than they get from the all-action games," said William B. White Jr., Nintendo's director of advertising.

Tradewest Inc. of Corsicana, Texas, a company that produces games for Nintendo machines, has started selling games for ages 22 and older. It just released "John Elway's Quarterback," a sophisticated game that puts the armchair quarterback into the shoes of the Denver Broncos star and requires a working knowledge of football in order to choose the proper plays.

Another Tradewest release does the same for basketball. Called "Magic Johnson's Fast Break," the game permits slam dunking and other special plays. The player plays against the machine or an opponent.

Tradewest's adult game "Taboo" uses a tarot card metaphor and is especially entertaining at a party, Cook said. Participants answer questions on the screen and see their fortunes displayed. The game even includes a numbers generator for every state lottery.

Other independent companies producing software for Nintendo, such as GameTech, have introduced versions of popular television game shows including "Wheel of Fortune."

For Nintendo and its smaller competitors, such as Sega and Atari, getting adults hooked on games is part of a strategy for long-term survival.

"The video-game companies are trying to broaden appeal," said Andrew L. Beja, an analyst for Advest Inc.

Success in reaching older players will be important in preventing the industry from undergoing another major bust, as in the mid-1980s, analysts said.

Led by Atari, video-game sales ballooned from $464 million in 1980 to $3.2 billion in 1982, but then sank to $100 million in 1985.

Warner Communications Inc., Atari's owner, posted a $336 million operating loss in 1984 from video-game losses. The debacle forced Warner to sell Atari, and it also sent toy makers such as Mattel scurrying from the business.

The bust followed a wave of dull games that lacked technical sophistication, said Byron Cook, president of Tradewest. The industry managed to survive through the efforts of companies producing coin- operated machines, said Cook.

He said those companies, almost all of which are run by Japanese, kept improving their products and drawing people back to the arcades with things like jet fighter simulators that appealed to the Walter Mitty in everybody.

"The product needed to raise to a new level of sophistication that wasn't available when the industry hit the slump a few years ago," Cook said. Home video games didn't look or sound as good as the arcade variety, and kids soon stuffed their Ataris into their closets, he said.

Then came Nintendo in 1986 with a game machine that closely matches the speed, sound and graphics abilities found in the best coin machines.

Video gamesters can expect even more diversity and sophistication in the coming months, said Beja of Advest. At next month's Consumer Electronics Show in Chicago, analysts are expecting to see video games that use more powerful computer chips, allowing greater realism and faster response than current machines.

Graduates warned on finances

NEW YORK (AP) — Graduation Day at the nation's schools and campuses over the next few weeks will mark a rite of financial passage for countless young people.

It can be a big transition, but it needn't be a traumatic one, if students manage their money properly and avoid pitfalls.

Suppose, for instance, you plan to commute by car to a new job. It's important to take all the costs of that car into account — monthly payments, insurance, and maintenance as well as gasoline — if you want to make sure that most of your income doesn't get consumed by the cost of getting to and from your job.

A similar problem can arise with clothing. Many jobs naturally require that you look your best, but don't splurge. An all-out splurge on a new wardrobe can mean that you have to work very hard just to pay for what you wear while you're working.

Start off gradually with skirts or slacks from your current wardrobe and adding a basic suit and a jacket that will coordinate with these, suggests the American Financial Services Association, a trade group representing financial-services firms.

Some other tips suggested by the AFSA:

- Like individual money managers of all ages, you will need to handle credit cards and other borrowing with extreme care. Your capacity for debt may already be stretched by student loans that remain to be paid.
- But that doesn't mean that you should necessarily avoid all credit offerings. One or two judiciously chosen credit cards may help you establish a good credit history that might be useful later on.
- Keep food costs down. Take brown-bag lunches to work and eat at home a lot to save money. "Try to keep your refrigerator and shelves stocked so that you won't be tempted to go out for meals too often," the AFSA advises.
- Another tried-and-true approach to keeping food bills down: Always aim to shop with a list of the items you need (and preferably not when you are famished from a long day of work and exercise).

According to the Howard Marlboro Group, a New York firm that provides marketing information, fewer than one-third of supermarket shoppers enter the store armed with a list.

And more than half of the sales racked up by supermarkets represent "impulse" sales — unplanned purchases ranging heavily to items like magazines, candy and gum, greeting cards and snacks.

Ford names car models to have airbags

New York Times News Service

DETROIT — The Ford Motor Co. named the nine car lines that will carry airbags as standard equipment in the 1990 model year, which begins this fall.

The bags will be standard equipment in the Ford Mustang, Taurus and Crown Victoria, Mercury Sable and Grand Marquis, Merkur Skorpio, and the Lincoln Town Car and Mark VII.

They will be offered as an option in the Ford Tempo and the Mercury Topaz. Ford's Lincoln Continental will continue to be the only American car to provide airbags on the driver's and passenger's sides.

A year ago, the Chrysler Corp. became the first American company to pledge to install airbags in its domestic cars.

Judge moves Spindletop suit to Texas

GREENEVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A federal judge has transferred to Texas a $250 billion lawsuit filed by would-be heirs to the Spindletop oil fortune.

The order from U.S. District Judge Thomas Hull in Greeneville said he has no jurisdiction in the case since the mineral rights sought are in Texas.

Hull on Thursday transferred the suit to the court's Texas eastern district in Tyler.

"Local actions must be prosecuted where the thing on which the suit is founded is situated," Hull's two-page order said.

The suit was filed on behalf of 300 to 500 members of the Humphries Heirs Trust Association, headed by Brown Peregoy of Washington County's Gray community.

The suit filed in February contends those members of the group have traced their kinship to Pelham Humphries, who they say acquired the Spindletop property in 1835.

The suit seeks the oil, gas and other mineral rights from the Texas gusher that came in in 1901.

The suit names as defendants Amoco Oil Co., Mobil Oil Corp., Phillips Petroleum Co., Texaco Inc. and A.E. Development Co.

The suit is only one in a string filed over the years by people who have unsuccessfully tried to lay claim to the oil fortune.

Artist's adventures

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Emily Ulmschneider calls crossing the Florida Straits from Miami to the Bahamas in a Mississippi tug boat an adventure, one of many she's had in her life.

"I was hired by Conrad Gebelein, one of the researchers at the Bermuda Biological Station for Research, to carry on his geochemical research on the carbonate sediments in Bermuda and the Bahamas," Mrs. Ulmschneider says in a recent interview. "I was the chief researcher in charge of his research vessel.

"He had an old vessel. It had two foot of freeboard — two foot of board above the water line. Out on the ocean, it didn't take much of a wave to wash over it. We would open up the doors on one side, and the water would wash out on the other side. We always had to cross at night because the seas were calmer. Crossing was always an adventure."

The experience, which Ms. Ulmschneider repeated four times a year, was "great fun." The purpose of the voyages was to collect water samples, which were first analyzed, then flown back to California where Ms. Ulmschneider would prepare for the next trip.

The experience represented her introduction to geology, which eventually led to her moving to Midland in 1981. Today she is the first Master-in-Residence at the Museum of the Southwest.

The concept of the Master-in-Residence program was developed as a part of the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum scheduled to open June 4. The master studio and activity room will be situated there.

"I think we're doing some exciting things," Ms. Ulmschneider says.

The children's museum will open with "Bubbles in the Ocean" and "My Special World" exhibits. Ms. Ulmschneider, who will be in residency thorough the summer, will be teaching "Earthdays," which will look at and explore West Texas' unique environment.

In addition, her students will take an ocean adventure.

"We're going to have a fun day at the ocean. I'm going to take the children on a trip as if they were oceanographers going on an oceanic cruise."

She first had experience in this type of work when she lived in Bermuda.

"Originally, I was there as a college student taking a semester at the biology station. They asked me to come back for the summer to illustrate a field guide, so I did illustrations for that."

Although the children's museum studio facilities will not be open until June, Ms. Ulmschneider began her residency when the John James Audubon's "The Birds of America: Double Elephant Folio" exhibition opened. In addition to supervising and coordinating undersea research, she has worked as an environmental specialist in teaching bird conservation.

"I was the educational coordinator at the Sibley Nature Center, and I have taken Midge Erskine's bird program into the schools for a couple of years, and I have two children of my own, and it's very important to me that my children learn something about the environment and the problems they are going to face as a result of our previous misuse of the world."

It was while Ms. Ulmschneider was conducting research in the Bahamas and living in California that she decided to go to graduate school. She already had an undergraduate degree from Carleton College in Northfield, Minn.

Her decision took her to Boston where she received master's degrees in biology and geology. She supported herself by doing biological illustrations for for a couple at Harvard University.

She landed a job with City Services, trained in Tulsa, Okla., and moved to Midland, where she met her future husband, Rene. The two have two daughters, Kiri, 3, and Bryne, who will be 2 in June.

The daughter of a physics professor — "one of the few American professors who actually helped start an English college" — Ms. Ulmschneider lived in Oxford when she was around 10 years old. Her father was teaching at the newly formed Linacre, a college of Oxford University.

Her next travel adventure came in 1969-70, when she was an exchange student in New Zealand. There, she learned to spin, to cure sheep skins and to dance. Her New Zealand "father" was head of a sheep research station, located in a "very Maori area." The Maori, who are the natives of New Zealand, taught her to dance.

She was so taken by their culture that she choose to give her oldest daughter a Maori name — Kiri.

Her decision to work for an oil company was based on financial considerations.

"None of the jobs I'd ever had paid very well so I decided I would go work for an oil company," she says. She laughs and adds, "I needed a real job. Actually, I was looking for stability. Commuting four times a year between California and the Bahamas is tiring. I just wanted to live in one place for a while."

When her first daughter was born she quit working and has just returned to work this spring.

"It sort of scares me when I look at kids these days," she says. "I worry that some of our children are losing their sense of wonder. They've lost the ability to be happy in the world — to look around them and figure out something so they won't be bored. Kids don't seem to do. I remember when I was growing up — we grew up in the woods — I was never bored. There was always something new to see and do. We were always puttering around doing things, making things with our hands."

She laughs as she recalls the following incident.

"Mom put up with so much. One time we boiled up maple syrup on the stove until the varnish came off the kitchen cupboard. You have to have an enormous amount of sap to make one pint of syrup. She never said anything."

One of the reasons Ms. Ulmschneider enjoys her current job is the opportunity it provides her to work with young people. She hopes to be able to "make then excited about something," such as spinning and weaving. Although the two are "not exactly lost arts," they are skills they might not see and involve working with their hands.

Parton returns to country music she grew up with

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A year after the failure of her highly touted network TV show, Dolly Parton has returned to her roots: the country music she learned growing up in a two-room Smoky Mountain shack.

Parton

The 43-year-old performer, celebrating her 25th year as an entertainer, has just released her 50th album, "White Limozeen."

Parton, raised in an east Tennessee hollow where she was the fourth of 12 children, says the LP is a departure from her pop music megahit with Kenny Rogers, "Islands in the Stream."

"It's very country," she said in an interview. "It's a good album for me to do at this time. It's very true to what I do best. It captures a lot of the old sound I used to do years and years ago."

It is her second album since "Trio," a Grammy-winning, million-selling collaboration with two partners of vocal purity: Linda Ronstadt and Emmylou Harris.

"The 'Trio' album kind of set up the pace for this one," Parton said. "It's what the public has been wanting me to do for awhile."

Her one-hour ABC variety show, which was not renewed for a second season, didn't deserve to stay on the air, she said. "The show was very confusing. It never found a direction no matter how hard I tried. It never came together, never jelled because it was so disjointed.

"I wanted the show to be something like 'Hee Haw' when it started. But it was more like hem haw; that's all everybody did — hem and haw."

She recently revived her acting career, joining Sally Field, Shirley MacLaine and others in the movie "Steel Magnolias." Based on the Broadway play and due for release in late summer, it's about a group of Southern women.

"It's a fine piece of work, as good as I've done," she said. "We all got along great and made great friends. I like it when it's that way."

It's her first motion picture since "Rhinestone" in 1984 with Sylvester Stallone, a movie savaged by the critics.

"It ('Rhinestone') was a hit with me, but I didn't think it was a great movie," Parton recalled. "It got worse as it went along. It started out kind of slow and tapered off. Stallone had a lot of energy and was very funny, but the movie itself was not great."

With energy matched by ambition, she made two other movies: "9 to 5," with Jane Fonda and Lily Tomlin, and "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," with Burt Reynolds.

"The way I look, being so outrageous...the fact I look phony and am real, has created a bit of a mystery and magic that works."
— Dolly Parton

"'9 to 5' was very cute and very good. It was a timely movie with women's lib going on. It was the best thing I've done.

"'Whorehouse' was a difficult movie to do," she said. "I would say it was average. It made a lot of money but didn't get good reviews. There was a lot of blood on the movie — ill feelings from the Broadway show and the original producers. But I loved Burt and all the people in it."

She and Rogers are seen every December in their sentimental made-for-TV special, "Kenny and Dolly — A Christmas to Remember."

"People can see the warmth and love and sincerity in our friendship," she said about the enduring popularity of the show. "It was family oriented with children and church and special little things in it.

"I'd like for us to do another one now that I've slimmed down a little (50 pounds worth). Every time I see myself in it, I say, 'Look at the Christmas tree.'"

Parton says "Islands in the Stream" remains special among the 47 single records she has released.

"It's the one song in my whole career that I never get tired of hearing or singing. If I hear it on the radio, I turn that song up, and I usually don't do that with my records.

"It's such a pleasant song, easy listening. It's not heavy and it's real positive. It was well written and has a great melody and chord progression. And I think Kenny and me sang great together. Our voices complimented each other."

A sequel to "Trio," she says, is probably not forthcoming.

"It took us 10 years to get that one done. As busy as we all are, it's not likely. We'd all love to see it happen, but the chances are slim. And speaking for myself, you don't want to mess with something good."

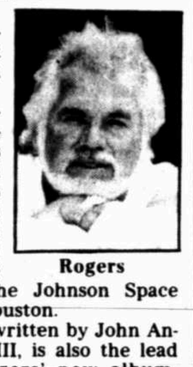
She says gimmicks have enhanced her image which has contributed to her success as one of the nation's best known personalities.

"The way I look, being so outrageous...the fact I look phony and am real, has created a bit of a mystery and magic that works," she said.

"I try to have the gimmick, the big hair and loud clothes and high heels and long fingernails. All of this is born out of a serious place because the hair and heels give me height which I want. But it works somehow. I wouldn't want to look simple. I'd look like a blank wall."

Rogers' song, video have space theme

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor-singer Kenny Rogers believes he's found a theme in the song about cowboys in space, "Planet Texas," that will become as fruitful as his song-turned-movie "The Gambler."



Rogers

His $600,000 video of "Planet Texas," a high-tech Western, debuted Saturday on his TV special that was taped at a concert with Dolly Parton and Willie Nelson at the Johnson Space Center in Houston.

The song, written by John Andrew Parks III, is also the lead tune on Rogers' new album, "Something Inside So Strong." The video, which is loaded with special effects, was directed by Julien Temple, who directed the current movie "Earth Girls Are Easy."

"The Gambler," an earlier Rogers hit song, was expanded into three highly successful television movies.

"It's the most unique piece of music I've heard in 20 years," Rogers said of "Planet Texas." "It may be a new genre. It has to do with space and time travel, but it's also a Western. These alien cowboys pick me up and take me to a planet called Texas.

"We may do this as a movie for NBC, but we're also toying with the idea of trying to attract a Steven Spielberg or George Lucas and making it a feature film. It's such an unusual concept and offers the same limitless possibilities that 'The Gambler' did.

"It's easy to find projects," said Rogers. "It's hard to find projects that allow you do things that are unique and have no comparisons. If I do any kind of acting my acting is questioned. I'm not an actor. If I do something unique people get caught up in it and are less apt to scrutinize my work.

"This is uncharted territory. There's nothing to compare it to. My own philosophy has been that if you give us a little success we'll make it a big deal. We did that with 'Lucille' and we did it with 'The Gambler.' This can be a whole new career move."

He said "Planet Texas" was brought to his attention after Parks was turned down for a record contract by Capitol Records.

"I was offered this terrific song and recorded it," he said. "Then Capitol signed Parks to a contract. The only bad news is that he has his own album coming out and I won't get his new songs. This kid can sing. But it worked out good for him. He never could have gotten a $600,000 video done."

Rogers, his wife, Marianne and son, Christopher, 7, live on a 1,200-acre farm near Atghens, Ga. But, with his own private jet, he makes regular jaunts for concerts, commercials, movies, charity appearances and to look after his many investments. He's building his own 18-hole golf course on the farm.

"I may sell the whole thing," he said. "I'm basically a builder. The fun is creating it, not living in it. I've overbuilt every house I've had. It keeps me creatively busy."

Museum sponsoring trip

As an alternative to spending the hot, dry days of August in West Texas, the Museum of the Southwest suggests a trip to cool, green Ireland.

The museum is co-sponsoring an "Ireland Today" tour with the Thomas Gilcrease Museum of Tulsa, Okla., Aug. 18-27.

Luxury motor coach is the mode of transportation from Shannon through Killarney to Cashell, County Tipperary, to Dublin. Philip Hodges, a senior at Lee High Schoo, has become the first recipient of the Student Recognition Award, initiated by the West Texas Jazz Society.

Hodges

He was awarded the honor at a dinner in the home of Camille and Bill Liefeste this month.

Hodges, who will attend the University of North Texas this fall, has participated in the Berkley School of Music Workshop in Santa Fe, N.M. He hopes to pursue a career in jazz.

The West Texas Jazz Society is a non-profit organization which promotes "America's original art form" — jazz — in West Texas.

For more information call Billie Ross, 685-3902.

Paintings hang at gallery

Works by Gary Bain and Joyce Elizabeth Carr are on display through June 22 at Gallery 1114.

Bain's colorful paintings are non-objective and have an arresting and lively though logical quality about them, says a release from the gallery. Bain attended Texas Tech University, and his work has been exhibited and has won awards in area-wide shows.

Ms. Carr's oil paintings are symphonies of color — sometimes cacophonic and discordant, sometimes harmonious and beautiful, says a release from the gallery. She has a bachelor of arts in applied design from the University of Houston at Clear Lake City and has done course work in Future studies. She currently resides in Kilgore.

Gallery 1114 is a cooperative of contemporary artists located at 1114 N. Big Spring. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday, and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

"Back in the founding of our country, before the Industrial Revolution, all clothes were handmade. You started with the fiber, then you would spin it and then either knit it or weave it. An enormous amount of time would go into making something.

"Kids don't have an appreciation of that time. It's so easy to go to Walmart or Sears or Penny's and pick up something off the rack.

"Every time I sit down and spin a weave, I feel a link with those who have done it in the past. And that's true of any utilitarian art form."

Dissatisfaction is another problem which concerns Ms. Ulmschneider.

"I've lived so many places and done so many things and I've enjoyed everything. People don't know how to be happy where they are. I remember when I was in the Bahamas we were the only people in a large area. You don't go to the convenience store because there isn't one. Yet, those are some of the best days I've ever had."

At the museum, she may be found in the galleries sketching during the Audubon exhibition, which closes today, or spinning and weaving in the Turner mansion. She answers questions from visitors and demonstrates techniques. She also is assisting with tours and developing and teaching Museum School, Earthday and Funday classes.

Currently, she is doing research and assisting with the final content preparation for the two opening exhibitions at the children's museum.

The Master-in-Residence is a short term contract position which will bring to the museum a particular expertise to enhance programming and educational activities. The person holding that position will spend 20 hours each week working with the public, conducting classes and hands-on activities and 20 hours working on his or her work which will be on view to the public.

Masters-in-Residence may be sculptors, painters, inventors or scientists and may be at the museum for a one to a six-month duration.

Now 36 years old, Ms. Ulmschneider's heart's desire is to have her children "grow up having the kinds of opportunities I have had." She feels it is important "to have as many experiences as possible growing up — doing things and using your own powers of observation."

Ms. Ulmschneider has never thought of her life in terms of what she hasn't done, but rather has enjoyed what she was doing at the time. However, recently, she saw a television program which featured a woman who quit working on Wall Street and was farming milk sheep and making her own cheese and yogert.

Ms. Ulmschneider's thought was — "God, that would be neat.

"I would be happy doing something like that. I just like doing things period."

Film lacking despite Wilder, Pryor

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

The comedy team of Gene Wilder and Richard Pryor are back in the new buddy film "See No Evil, Hear No Evil." The duo begin the film as strangers. Wilder's character, (Wally) is deaf and Pryor's character (Dave) is blind. Dave is a former actor who lost his hearing gradually after a bout with scarlet fever. He manages a Manhattan newsstand successfully due to his ability to read lips. Wally meets Dave when the blind man applies for a job at the newsstand, trying to keep his lack of vision a secret.

Salcedo

A murder occurs near the newsstand which Wally partially witnesses and Dave hears. The pair is falsely accused of the murder and they set out, with their handicaps complementing each other, to solve the mystery.

Even though plenty of humor abounds, much of it tasteless, Wilder and Pryor are not in top form as they were in their earliest buddy film "Silver Streak." (The rather lame "Stir Crazy" followed.) This time out the actors have the added potential for humor by playing around their handicaps.

Wally misses conversation whenever he isn't facing someone or they don't enunciate well. When an officer interrogates Wally, asking "Was there or wasn't there a woman present?" Wally thinks he says, "Fuzzy Wuzzy was a woman."

Physical humor is also employed and one of Wilder's best moments involve him goose stepping along a sidewalk. There is also a silly moment when Dave leads a blind man across the street (the blind leading the blind, so to speak).

Although the film tries to go deeper than the surface of the men's handicaps, it doesn't succeed. Wally's biggest fear is that he will appear a fool in front of a crowd of people. His fear — which you expect will come to fruition in a humorous vein — is never confronted.

The script has flaws, even worse is the film's production; it was obviously made cheap. In one scene Dave is at the wheel of a car and Wally (handcuffed) shouts directions. It's obvious as the camera moves back that the car is being operated by stunt drivers in bad wigs. Even worse are fake-looking backdrops, as if many of the car scenes were shot in a studio.

"See No Evil" is not as funny as other buddy films such as "Planes, Trains and Automobiles." It seems designed for a preteen audience, but the constant profanity and sex jokes (which give the film its "R" rating) aren't appropriate for this age group.

The film would be less funny if Wilder and Pryor weren't so endearing. But the comedy pros can't lift the film above the script (which relies on expletives too often), and poor production. This results in scenes which should be seen and not heard and others which should be heard and not seen.

"See No Evil, Hear No Evil," rates 2 rigs.

Kuhn's paintings depict West's 'imaginary history'

A series of paintings by Walt Kuhn called "An Imaginary History of the West" is on exhibit at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through June 11.

Kuhn, 1877-1949, was born and reared in Brooklyn. He read from childhood about "the old West" and collected a substantial library on Western subject matter. The works in this exhibit were painted between 1918 and 1920 and are based on impressions of what he had read. Though Kuhn went West in 1900, what he saw was not the West about which he had read.

"These are not the usual romanticized pictures of cowboys and Indians, but are depictions of barroom fights, horseback ambushes, powwows and portraits of Indians and soldiers done with a variety of approaches described as "almost pure calligraphy to dwarings which resemble paleolinthic cave drawings, to barely outlined color areas," says a release fromt he museum. "These small paintings reflect a vision of a life, now vanished that was a strange mixture of comedy and tragedy."

Kuhn, knowns as "one of the most powerful and original painters of his time," felt the "Imaginary West" series was so important as a total statement that he re-purchased many of the canvases he had sold previously so he could keep them together. Of the 30 works in the exhibit, 24 belong to the Colorado Springs Fine Arts center, which organized the exhibit, and six, including a self-portrait, are from the estate of Kuhn's widow, Vera.

"Kuhn's works shown here reflect a wonderfully subtle, rich and harmonious use of color, and hs vigorous style anticipated the advent of abstract expressionism."

He studied in Paris and Munich, and his most famous works are of showgirls, acrobats and clowns done in a realist style influenced by Cezanne.

The museum is open free to the public Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

Comedians discuss work together

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Talk about odd couples: one is calm, Jewish and deaf, the other is excitable, black and blind.

That's the basis for the new comedy-adventure, "See No Evil, Hear No Evil." Wally, the deaf one, is played by Gene Wilder. Dave, who is blind, is Richard Pryor. It's the third pairing of the two disparate stars, whose careers and personal lives have had a bumpy ride in recent times.

Wilder, born Jerry Silberman in Milwaukee 53 years ago, won an Academy nomination for Mel Brooks' "The Producers," starred in "Blazing Saddles" and "Young Frankenstein," directed himself in "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes' Smarter Brother" and "The World's Greatest Lover." His film appearances have been few in recent times, largely because of the illness of his wife, comedian Gilda Radner, who has been treated for ovarian cancer.

Pryor, 48, who grew up in his grandmother's Peoria, Ill., brothel, has starred in headlines almost as much as movies. His marriages, divorces, paternity suit, near-death and recovery from burns while freebasing have made lively reading. He wrote and directed the autobiographical "Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life Is Calling." His recent films have been overshadowed by the new kid on the block, Eddie Murphy.

Wilder and Pryor co-starred successfully in "Silver Streak" and "Stir Crazy." Before the opening of "See No Evil, Hear No Evil," they sat down for a joint interview.

AP Laserphoto

Gene Wilder, right, and Richard Pryor, join forces again in "See You Evil, Hear No Evil."

Q. Both of you have directed your own films. Was there ever a time during this movie when you wanted to say, "Hey, let's do it this way"?

Pryor: Arthur Hiller directed this picture. To me, it was just amazing how he kept the geometry of the picture in his head. He always knew something that nobody else knew.

Wilder: The only thing I wanted to say was, "Thank you, thank you, thank you, for staying for the rushes until 9:30, for eating your dinner at 11, and getting to the set before anyone else, and answering all those questions about the props and the lights and costumes. Thank you for letting me go off when shooting is over, take my time, take a little stroll."

Q. But you both will direct again, yes?

Pryor: Unfortunately, yes. That's something you don't get over. It's great fun.

Wilder: Yes, I'll direct again. If I write something and I say, "This I will have to direct," I will. If it's personal enough, it might get lost somewhere. Otherwise, I'll let someone else direct.

Q. What is that magic chemistry that seems to work between you two?

Wilder: We've talked about it, believe me. But we've said, "Let's shut up, because we don't know the answer." We might get in trouble if we tried to intellectualize it.

Pryor: I'm just glad it works.

Wilder: It's there, it works: cold fusion. I don't know how or why.

Q. Don't you ever get a little bit exasperated with each other and say, "Hold it, we can do this better"?

Wilder: It's not an exasperation with each other. It's like, we've done (a scene) 10 times and everyone's anxious to get on to the next setup and Richard has a sad face. I know it wasn't right all the way, but I see that sad face, and I say, "What's the matter?" "I don't think it was so good." "I don't think so, either. Arthur, oh Arthur." He doesn't question that we don't think it was there yet.

Q. Gene, how would you analyze Richard's comedy?

Wilder: I don't know if he should hear this. He came up in comedy from a different road, and we seemed to have met somewhere at a similar point, but from very different backgrounds. I don't think it matters much what the path was. I laugh at him, and I make him laugh. Together we're very funny. That's the only thing that counts.

Q. Richard, can you analyze Gene's comedy?

Pryor: I want to listen to him, I know that. I listen to what he's saying, and it triggers something in me. That's one element: listening to him. It's a pleasure.

Wilder: When most actors do a scene 14 times, it will be pretty much the same each time; it's not the nature of the art, but it's the nature of the beast...If we did a scene 14 times, it's going to be different 14 times. Not only do you have to pay attention, you're compelled to pay attention.

Q. There are a lot of laughs in "See No Evil, Hear No Evil," making comic use of deafness and blindness. Are you worried that some people might say you're poking fun at infirmities, just as they criticized "A Fish Called Wanda" for making fun of stuttering.

Wilder: We don't think so. We took great pains for months before the first day of shooting to make sure there would be no fun made, to make sure...that people with seeing and hearing disabilities would be laughing.

Pryor: Gene did a lot of research here at the Braille Institute and went through the script to eliminate anything that might be offensive. He was very aware of it, and so was I. Arthur Hiller, too.

Q. You did some research of your own, Richard?

Pryor: Yes, I went to the Braille Institute and studied to find out what it would be like if you were blind after being sighted most of your life. I wanted to find out what not to do, and the one thing I was told was: "Don't tap your cane." Little things like that were very helpful.

Q. You've had personal trials, Gene, with Gilda's illness. What's the situation now?

Wilder: Gilda's got a book coming out in June called "It's Always Something." Everything you want to know is in the book...I didn't work for 2½ years or three years. When I started working on this picture, it was a great relief. I was back home where I belong.

Q. And you, Richard? You haven't been in the public prints lately.

Pryor: Good! Today I'm a very happy man. I'm thrilled about the work we've done in this film. I was delighted with the work Gene did on the script (he shares credit with four other writers). I liked working with an excellent director and very good actors. We worked hard to make it look like we were not working hard. I'm happy.

Q. What about future projects?

Pryor: I'm working in a film now, "Harlem Nights," with Eddie Murphy.

Wilder: I'm writing. I want to write something that's right for Richard and me.

'Family Ties' helps NBC break record

NEW YORK (AP) — There was weeping on "Family Ties" as the series closed out a seven-year run on NBC Sunday, but the network wasn't crying this week when it broke CBS' quarter-century-old record winning ratings streak.

CBS won 46 weeks in a row in the 1962-63 season. As of Sunday, NBC had been in first place for 47 straight weeks in the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings and added to the honor by taking the top 11 spots in the rankings, the first time a network has done that in 10 years.

NBC prepared a list of nostalgic trivia to illustrate how long a 26-year-old record is. In 1962-63, "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson" premiered, the New York Mets lost 120 games in their first season, Marilyn Monroe died, and there were no such things as VCRs, personal computers, the Super Bowl, remote control, Tylenol or People magazine.

"This record-breaking performance — assuming nobody has made another clerical mistake — really belongs to the talented, writers, producers, directors and actors whose consistently fine work has won the hearts and viewing habits of the American public," said NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff.

His statement referred to NBC's premature declaration a few weeks ago that it had set a record, until CBS pointed out that the record actually ran to 46 weeks.

The special one-hour finale of "Family Ties" was last week's No. 1 show, with a 20.8 rating and 35 share. It was broadcast opposite the final episode of ABC's "Moonlighting," which had lost viewers so dramatically, it had dwindled to third from the bottom in the rankings.

NBC, which has won four seasons in a row, won last week with an average, prime-time rating of 15.7. ABC, whose massive miniseries "War and Remembrance" took up much of the week with mediocre ratings, had an 11.8. CBS had an 11.3.

Each rating point equals 904,000 households with television. The share is a percentage of sets in use.

The rest of the top 10 were all NBC's: "Golden Girls," "The Cosby Show," "Top Gun," "Jackee Special," "Cheers," "In the Heat of the Night," "Unsolved Mysteries," "L.A. Law" and "Hunter." NBC's Sunday movie, "Ferris Bueller's Day Off," ranked 11th. NBC said the last time a network had the top 11 shows was 1979, when ABC had the miniseries "Roots II."

The five-part conclusion of ABC's "War and Remembrance" built audience each night, but after Sunday night's conclusion, which ranked 18th, it wound up with an average rating of 14.8 and a 23.

The first 17½ hours of the "Winds of War" sequel ran in November and had an average rating of 18.6 and a 29 share.

The 10 lowest-rated shows last week were: "Jesse Hawkes," "Murder by Moonlight," "West 57th," "Hard Time on Planet Earth," "North and South, Book Two, Part One," "Kareem Abdul-Jabbar," "Incredible Sunday," "Moonlighting," "A Man Called Hawk" and "The Jim Henson Hour."

In the news ratings, "ABC World News Tonight" won the week with an average rating of 10.2 and a 21 share. The "CBS Evening News" had a 9.4 and 19. "NBC Nightly News" had a 9.0 and 19 share.

Brzezinski's book predicts death of communism

By THOMAS GINSBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — When the history of the 20th century is written, Zbigniew Brzezinski is sure the chapter on communism will read like an obituary — so sure that the former White House policy-maker already has it written.

Brzezinski

"(There) is no doubt that we are all witnesses to an event of fundamental importance," Brzezinski said in a recent interview about his new book, "The Grand Failure: The Birth and Death of Communism in the Twentieth Century."

"This century to all of us, in different ways, was dominated by communism. Communism defined the philosophical debate, communism was the source of the Cold War — the challenge. And that is now fading."

The book by the former national security adviser to President Carter has received good reviews and climbed best-seller lists.

Even President Bush is reading the book, according to Brzezinski. But the Polish-born scholar, who serves on Bush's independent Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, wouldn't say how his views are influencing Bush's long-running foreign policy review.

The book's popularity attests to the audience for a cogent explanation of profound changes sweeping the communist world today.

"When an ideology ceases to motivate people, when it is discredited, when it is no longer a source for policy, it is dying, and that is what is happening. That's a momentous change," he said.

According to Brzezinski, who is credited with helping to normalize U.S.-Chinese relations in the late 1970s, the failure of the communist command economy is at the heart of the ideology's failure.

He concludes that Soviet communism will wither away, leaving the country in a decade-long systemic crisis trying to hold itself together. China, with deeper cultural traditions, will evolve into a non-communist nation whose communist leaders will argue mostly about the pace of change.

Reforms in smaller communist nations will vary in their success, but all will depart from the evidently disastrous socialist path, Brzezinski writes.

"There have been people who've always said (communism) is a failure," he said. But now, the realization is "pervasive among the leaders who profess to (guide) communism."

To save the Soviet economy, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has to redefine the party's role in society, the author says. He is seeking mass support by granting more political and social openness — "glasnost" — and restructuring the government to circumvent conservative leaders. But the reforms are unleashing national ethnic passions among Russians and non-Russians that threaten to tear the country apart.

"Its economic success can only be purchased at the cost of political stablility, while its political stability can only be sustained at the cost of economic failure," Brzezinski writes.

China's reforms have a better chance for success mostly because of pragmatic leadership and deeper cultural traditions that will absorb free market reforms more readily. "Modern China may enter the 21st century still ruled by communists, but it will not be a communized China," he writes.

Brzezinski discounts any retrenchment in Beijing's recent decision to restrict market activities to cool its overheating economy.

"You're going have these zigzags, but it's not a pullback in any way to the original starting point," he said.

"It highlights the fact, ultimately, that there is no halfway house between partial communism and partial free market systems. And communist systems do find it difficult to make that basic transition."

East European countries will seek greater freedom from Moscow, he said. The West should encourage their independence without trying to dismantle the Warsaw Pact and deny Moscow its "legitimate security interests."

Central American radicals may use communism as a rallying point against "Americanism expansionism, American indifference, American clumsiness, and American proximity," Brzezinski said.

"(But) even in Central America, none of the (revolutionary leaders), if you asked them, would say, 'If we win we want to build the system like the one the Soviets have.'"

Communism's demise largely reduces the U.S.-Soviet confrontation to the military dimension, Brzezinski said. "The real danger is that we will confuse the reforms and weakness with disarmament. The former is happening, the latter has not happened yet."

Brzezinski said Moscow has been losing the Cold War. But it has achieved a "tepid armistice" with the United States and could reassert itself after recovering from domestic problems.

"Our job is to translate this armistice into a more lasting and genuine accommodation," Brzezinski said.

Slick writing rescues flaws of 'Ritual'

"Ritual," by William Heffernan. NAL Books. 310 Pages. $18.95.

By FRANK STILLEY
Associated Press

William Heffernan is one slick writer. No doubt about it. He proves it once again in his fourth novel, "Ritual."

A Review

It's a tale of hideous ritual killings in New York City, resembling those of 700 years ago by the Toltecs of Mexico's Yucatan area. Two great museums, the Catholic Church and city politics as far up as the mayor's office soon become entangled in a maddening melange of bigshot power vs. harried police.

Thrust into the hot-seat middle of it all is Det. Lt. Stan Rolk, hard-nosed chief of Manhattan homicide cops. Rolk is, let's say, given to going after murderers on his own and often in extracurricular sorts of ways — to the outrage of everybody, from City Hall on down. He plows right ahead.

There are, most assuredly, many gripping moments in the narrative. But for dedicated murder-mystery fans there also may be one little snag. Some of them probably will nail the killer long before the cops do.

Nevertheless, it's still all quite diverting — because of that slick Heffernan writing.

Novel realistic portrayal of small-town life

"Mosquito Games," by Andrew Jennings. Ticknor & Fields. 206 Pages. $17.95.

By CAROL DEEGAN
Associated Press

You need your steel-toed boots for "Mosquito Games," Dana Andrew Jennings' raw, uncompromising portrayal of life in a small backwoods town in New Hampshire.

A Review

In truth, it isn't a place you'd like to visit. Or call home. Livin' in a shack. Workin' in a factory cleanin' out 55-gallon steel drums. Drums that were filled with acids, paints, oils, solvents — and worse. "You name it; if it could kill you, we probably cleaned it," says Earl Duston, who's worked there since he was a kid.

There's Mallory's Fruit & Real Estate out on Route 49, where they sell produce and postcards — and gravestones out back. There's the woods and the pond and the swamp. And not much more. Just beer, and gettin' drunk every Friday and Saturday night. "Couldn't do nothing without a beer in hand," Earl says. "Nothing."

Earl Duston is trapped; trapped by the heat and the mosquitoes, the steel-drum factory, and the sameness in Granite, N.H. The only one with any hope of improving himself is "Stain" Thistle, who believes he can trade up in life, just like he traded up from a '61 Fairlane to a '62 Falcon.

Earl feels the frustration, but there's nothing he can do about it. He's drivin' down Route 49 with his best friend Denny at 110 mph. On the wrong side of the road. With the headlights off.

"Mosquito Games" is Jennings' first novel, and it is absolutely riveting. You walk into Granite in the summer of 1975 and you walk out, your clothes reeking of factory smells, your body covered with mosquito bites — thankin' your lucky stars it was just a visit, and not a permanent stay.

'YOUNG READER' REVIEW

In Colleen O'Shaughnessy's "Fourth Grade is a Jinx," Collette is a nice little girl with nice friends and a nice teacher, all set to enjoy fourth grade. When the teacher breaks a leg in the classroom, Collette is horrified to discover that her mother is the substitute.

After a week of tears and laughter, mini-mysteries and their solution, Collette changes her mind and encourages her mother to return to teaching. She even shows her willingness to assume a little more responsibility at home. Like many youngsters, though, Collette bounces between exaggerated extremes; sometimes she's babyish, sometimes she's very grown up.

Miss Haversham, the substitute before Collette's mother, was an awful stereotype: unmarried at "70 or 80," she shrieked at the children, frightened them to tears and then walked out, violating every common sense rule of dealing with children.

Although this "witch right out of Grimm" strikes a false note in the minds of adults, she sizzles with drama for students in the third through fifth grades.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, MAY 22, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Artistic accomplishments could bring new public recognition. You are in a position to make bids for both professional and personal success. Frustration awaits those who pin all hopes on a single enterprise. Curb a tendency to take too many risks. Tried-and-true methods are the surest route to the top. Romance sizzles.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress and sculptor Victoria Wyndham, "Sherlock Holmes" author Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, artist Mary Cassatt, actor-director Richard Benjamin, actor Michael Constantine, movie critic Judith Crist, pitcher Tommy John, producer Quinn Martin, pianist Peter Nero, legendary actor Sir Laurence Olivier, corporate raider T. Boone Pickens Jr.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have an opportunity to prevent someone from making a mistake. Come up with the right answers and you can win honors or cash. Your quiet words of wisdom guide a relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your common sense serves you well today. Avoid taking sides in an office struggle. Talk with authority figures in private. The interplay between you and your partner is of interest to others.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Rely on the known right now. Others are unwilling to take risks. Keep a steady hand on the wheel and you will remain in charge. Go through channels when making a special request.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Practical considerations dictate the decisions you make today. You find new vitality in a close relationship. Do not succumb to temptation this evening. Protect your reputation by being discreet.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The early hours are your most productive today. Although you treasure your privacy, you could be thrust into the spotlight by unexpected events. Resist the temptation to throw money around.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Muster all your patience and resist scolding someone who needs your sympathy. A diplomatic approach could work wonders. Avoid lending money or spending it on things you do not need. Save for investment purposes.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Projects you handle personally will bring the best results. Good health depends on your willingness to follow a prescribed regimen. Romance is aglow. Speak from the heart if ready for a commitment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A busy day lies ahead. A close relationship requires greater understanding. You may be willing to shoulder more responsibility than you can handle. Avoid trying to be all things to all people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not allow your co-workers to take advantage of you any longer. Stand up for your rights. An upbeat lunch with an old friend helps you get rid of the blues.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are sometimes too hard on yourself. Forget past mistakes and look to the future. Those who control some of your money try to influence you. Remain true to your high principles.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Those who have a specific plan will be lucky today. Guard children and valuables left in your care. You discover the other side of the coin where love is concerned.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Persevere and you will go far today. You find a way to turn a situation in your favor. Keep your faith strong. Dear ones boost your spirits. Show appreciation for their support.

A MASTER OF TECHNIQUE at card play never seems to desert them. Among the foremost in this country is Norman Kay of Narberth, Pa, who has been among the county's great players for some 40 years. Watch him in action in a major team match.

The auction was routine. Once North could open the bidding and then raise spades, there was no way that Kay was going to stay out of game.

Counting a diamond ruff, declarer had nine tricks. The 10th could come from either the heart suit or else finding the ace of clubs with East.

Declarer won the opening lead in dummy and led the king of spades. East won the ace and, since a club shift did not look at all appetizing with the 10-9 on the board, exited safely with a diamond. After winning the ace, declarer ruffed a diamond on the table and cashed the queen of trumps.

Next came the key play—a heart to the nine! If East had the ten, that would force the queen and declarer would have his game-going trick. And if it lost to the ten, East, the danger hand, would not be on lead to fire a club through the king.

West could do no better than exit with his trump. Declarer won and cashed the ace and king of hearts. When the queen dropped, he had his fulfilling trick. But had the lady not fallen, he would still have been able to lead toward the king of clubs, landing the contract if East held the ace.

From etiquette to expenses, making any wedding work

By SHARON WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Falling in love was so easy. Saying "I do" can be another story.

It's not the nuptials themselves that have many prospective brides and grooms contemplating elopement, but an unending chain of bills, an ever-changing guest list and a host of other minor hassles ranging from etiquette to emotion that nobody ever mentioned before the engagement was official.

It is possible, however, to get married without taking out a major loan, alienating the in-laws or offending every acquaintance who can't be invited to the wedding. Here is a rundown of common wedding dilemmas and some tips for conquering them before they hamper prenuptial bliss:

THE WEDDING DAY TAB

You're giving your hand in marriage but are a bit uncertain about who will foot the bill. Once upon a time, the bride's family paid for just about everything, but changing attitudes toward the nature of marriage have blurred the lines that dictate who pays for what.

For the first time, there's a definite trend toward sharing the wedding expenses, according to the editors of Bride's magazine. The groom's family, and even the bride and groom themselves, are taking on the lion's share, or at least a chunk, of the financial responsibility.

When you consider the average cost of a wedding is at least $2,000, it's easy to understand why the bride's parents can't always be left standing with the bill. And, since today's brides and grooms are older and established in their careers before they are married, they are more likely to plan the wedding of their dreams and then offer the financial support needed to pull it off.

Typical wedding expenses can be broken down into percentages: 30 percent for the reception cost; 30 percent for clothes and gifts; 12 percent miscellaneous, such as hotel accommodations for out-of-town bridesmaids; 11 percent ceremony costs; and 6 percent invitations and other stationery.

When dividing up the costs, many couples settle on specific expenses in advance, rather than splitting the cost of the whole wedding down the middle or into thirds. Another option is to let one family pay for the ceremony, while the other family picks up the tab for the reception.

It is, however, the prerogative of the bride's family to follow tradition and handle the bulk of the bill if they wish.

This still leaves the groom's family with a few expenses such as the rehearsal dinner, the bride's bouquet and going-away corsage, corsages for the mothers and boutonnieres for the men in the wedding party, and hotel accommodations for the groom's attendants who live out of town.

Spare no expense is rarely the case for today's wedding couples who want a memorable celebration without incurring a debt that will keep them and their families in the red until their golden wedding anniversary. To save money without scrimping on quality:

Consider an at-home wedding and reception, or borrow the well-tended garden of a friend as the setting for your vows.

Comparison shop to find the best values offered by caterers, decorators, photographers and florists. Get in writing a list of everything that will be covered by the bid, including gratuities. Check references.

Set priorities. Maybe you want to serve a sit-down dinner at your reception, but don't feel as strongly about hiring an orchestra for dancing afterward. Go with the dinner, and limit the music to a harpist or strolling musicians to cut down on the cost.

YOU'RE INVITED?

You'll have 30 bridesmaids if you include all your friends and sisters in the line, and the guest list is becoming insurmountable because of your all-too-friendly mother-in-law. What's a harried bride to do?

While there's no limit on the number of attendants a bride may have, she doesn't want to wear her guests out with too many introductions before they reach the end of the receiving line, either.

Experts suggest the honored bridesmaid positions should be reserved for close friends and family members. Meanwhile, the couple can seek out creative ways to involve other friends.

A former roommate, for instance, could attend the wedding book, several young cousins could pass out rice bags and a sister-in-law could act as wedding troubleshooter throughout the day.

To eliminate a burgeoning guest list, the bride and groom should establish a feasible number before everyone gets out paper and pens. That number should be based first on the wedding budget, second on the degree of formality. Both sides of the family should be allowed to invite roughly the same number of guests.

PLAY IT AGAIN, SAM

If you're a second-time bride, you're not alone. Nearly 30 percent of all marriages today are remarriages, according to the editors of Bride's magazine.

Traditionally, remarrying couples faced strong pressure to keep their wedding a small, quiet affair. All that has changed, according to Bride's, and the emphasis is now on the importance of sharing a joyful new beginning rather than on time-worn rules.

Second- or third-time brides can borrow from almost any tradition in the book, such as:

Wearing an engagement ring and the dress of their choice. The bride is not banished to a plain cream-colored suit just because she's walking down the aisle again. But she should nix the veil, since it is a long time symbol of youth and purity.

Throwing a gala reception. The party can be complete with a receiving line, first dance and ceremonial toast if the couple wishes. Many choose to greet the guests themselves; leaving parents free to circulate.

Having a prenuptial shower. Prewedding parties always are in order, even for remarrying couples. Many will even involve his or her children.

The only real difference for brides or grooms who have been married before is that they, not their parents, do the inviting.

MY MOTHER'S HUSBAND

A wedding can be a joyful time for everybody — including the divorced parents of the bride or groom.

Of course, it may not be easy. No matter how friendly the divorce or how many years have gone by, the situation may still be awkward and uncomfortable for both parties.

To handle the situation with tact and compassion, the bride and groom must become diplomats of sorts. It's best to begin by discussing the upcoming event with both parents and finding out what they need in order to enjoy themselves at the wedding, suggests Bridal Guide magazine.

Each parent should be given an important role in the wedding, whether it be to escort the bride down the aisle or to preside over the rehearsal dinner.

If the current spouse of either parent is to be involved, make sure everyone knows his or her role so there are no angry feelings festering on the wedding day.

As far as tradition goes, it is customary for both parents of the bride, divorced or not, to announce the wedding on the invitation.

During the ceremony, the mother of either the bride or groom sits on the front pew with her new husband or children, and the father sits on the second pew with his current wife.

For grooms: Traditional tux is tops in wedding wear

By LISA LEBOWITZ
Copley News Service

Much is made of bridal party attire: What kind of dress will the bride wear? Will the bridesmaids be able to recycle their outfits?

Has the bride, for superstition's sake, kept her dress closeted away where her groom-to-be won't be able to peek?

All of this fuss, ritual and tradition draw attention away from what the men are wearing. But if this season is any indication, the eclipse is over.

Menswear for weddings is emerging with quiet elegance. The well-groomed groom is looking to textural interest to make traditional shapes more modern and more dashing than ever.

According to Kenneth Hall, vice president of After Six, there are four traditional types of formal wear:

For semiformal, daytime weddings, the "stroller," a gray, regular-length jacket worn with gray-striped trousers, a pearl-gray vest and four-in-hand gray-striped tie. This is the attire of choice when the bride opts for a dress without a train.

When the wedding is more formal, but again during the day, the traditional cutaway, sporting an ascot and pearl-gray vest, is the most popular choice, but only before 6 in the evening.

After 6, the classic tuxedo is top sartorial choice, superceded only when the event is ultraformal — in which case "full dress," or white tie and tails is the order of the evening.

"By definition, marriage is a very formal thing" explains Hall, "and traditional occasions call for traditional tuxes."

But even the most time-honored silhouette can be improved upon.

"What we're seeing now are changes in styling that are consistent with general menswear trends," comments Monroe Weinstock, president and head of Raffinati formal wear division. "Jackets are slightly wider with higher shoulders, the button-positioning is a bit lower at the waist. Jackets are non-vented, and pleated trousers are a must."

There's also a greater variety of lapel choices to select from. The classic shawl collar is still important, as is notch-lapel styling.

The trend that currently is gaining popularity? The peak lapel, where the bottom part of the lapel protrudes and wings upward.

The biggest news to date, however, is in fabrication, and there's nothing like textural interest to add punch to familiar shapes.

"Look for tone-on-tone and texture," says Barbara Tober, editor-in-chief of Bride's magazine. "The shadow stripe, diamond patterns, jacquard or brocade ideas that evoke 'Le Smoking' — the great old smoking jackets, these are strong trends now."

Tober adds that some interesting colors are entering the market. In addition to traditional black and gray, Bride's just photographed a purple tux for a future issue. Midnight blue is also out and about, and white is always classic for summer weddings or affairs in the South and Southwest.

That perennial dilemma, to choose a double- or single-breasted style, is in part, pragmatically solved.

"Ninety percent of wedding tuxedos are rented," says Weinstock. "Single-breasted styles are easier to fit, so the majority of wedding rentals are single-breasted."

But there is a growing trend toward buying. Hall reports that in the last four years, retail sales have grown from 10 percent to 30 percent of After Six's total business.

"And with so many men buying tuxes," says Hall, "it's become important to individualize them — a feat that's accomplished with the savvy use of accessories."

Enter paisley cummerbunds and ties, art deco and baroque vests, bow ties that glitter with threads of silver lame or colorful suspenders that don't even match the bridesmaids' dresses.

These days, there are more occasions to dress up, and if a man is going to wear his tux six times a year, he's going to find a way to make it interesting," comments Hall.

But unless his wedding is hip and fashion-forward, the more traditional tuxes head for the altar, while the high-fashion accoutrements wait at home for another evening.

Frequently, the only difference between the groom's attire and the rest of his wedding party is the flower worn in his lapel. Grooms may wear a sprig from the bride's bouquet, while the best man, ushers and fathers of the bride and groom, sport a flower similar to those the bridesmaids are carrying.

"But boutonnieres have more style, too," says Tober. "These days it's not unusual to catch sight of delphinium, freesia and lily of the valley in place of roses and carnations."

What are the two most egregious errors a groom can make — short of not showing up?

Shirts and shoes!

On the definite don't list are formal-wear shirts with ruffles. Also on the outs are tired-looking tops in sappy pastels.

If you do want to create visual interest, choose a white shirt with a natty wing collar. The best fabrics to go with are silk or 100 percent cotton, fibers that breathe.

And to step out in style, make sure your shoes are high-sheen patent rather than workaday matte.

"They don't have to be traditional evening slippers in shape," says Hall, "but they really should be high-gloss black, and preferably a black patent leather shoe."

Today's grooms are a dapper set, sporting suits of crisp elegance. This groom is wearing a formal tail coat paired with front pleated trousers and a wing collar shirt.

With proper planning, honeymoon can be trouble-free trip

By DEBRA COOPER
Copley News Service

You want a fabulous honeymoon — and you can have it, if you do a little pretrip planning.

First, find a good travel agent.

"Travel has become so complex," advises Bride's magazine, "you need an expert to get you to that deserted beach or Paris cafe in one piece, for the best price."

Agents don't charge for their services. They earn a living from commissions, a small percentage of the hotel charges and airline tickets that they book. Their research, patience and friendliness are free.

Help your travel agent by preparing a list of possible destinations (the Caribbean? Colorado?). Ask married friends for honeymoon highlights, and browse through travel books and magazines. Visit your video retailer for exciting travelogues.

Whatever they may be, make sure your dreams mesh. Even if he has his heart set on surfing and all you want to do is shop, there are honeymoon destinations that will suit you.

Next, determine your finances and your time. Your travel agent will need to know how much you can spend and exactly when you'll be going.

Be sure to budget for transportation (air fare, train, bus, ship, rental car, taxis, car insurance, gas, tolls, parking); food for two (restaurants, snacks, cocktails); accommodations (daily rate or package price, room service, tips, laundry); entertainment and recreation (movies, theater, concerts, museums, sporting events, nightclubs, lessons, tours); shopping (personal items, gifts) and miscellany (postage, postcards, telephone calls, camera film).

The earlier you confirm your plans, the more money you'll save on airline tickets. You'll also be able to reserve the best rooms at hotels.

Have your travel agent search out charters, too — those extra seats that may leave Tuesday instead of Sunday but cost a great deal less.

If you're traveling in the off-season (for example, summer in Florida or winter in England), you may qualify for lower rates at many hotels.

And be sure the hotel knows you're a bridal couple. You may be eligible for special prices, treats and attention.

Will you want to rent a car? Many airlines offer fly/drive packages. Otherwise, go with an independent company, but be sure to shop around. Rates can vary enormously.

A reputable rental car company will include basic automobile liability and comprehensive insurance at no charge. Ask if they have personal accident insurance, including medical and life. Your personal automobile insurance may include collision damage, but unless you know it covers a rental car, it makes sense to include it.

You'll want to visit your bank to buy traveler's checks. There's usually a small charge, but it's worth it — look at it as an investment in peace of mind.

It's a good idea to include luggage on your bridal registry. Select luggage that looks great, holds wardrobe extras and can stand up to hard knocks. Decide if you want molded hard-side luggage (it's more durable) or soft-side (it's lighter weight and easier to store). Pockets are handy, as are wheels, security straps, buckles, shoulder straps and ID tags.

Good packers are good planners. Take garments that can lead double lives — a simple sheath dress that can go dressy with the right accessories, for example.

Simplify your choices with a palette of no more than three colors — a neutral such as white, black or gray, teamed with two brights (red, cobalt blue or yellow) or with two pales (light blue, pink, aqua).

Bring the basics to life with accessories — scarves, jewelry, belts and hats. Select easy-care fabrics that pack better and cut down on ironing.

Visit a store that specializes in travel items to stock up on such space-savers as folding travel irons, clothes steamers, plastic containers for toiletries and an all-purpose fold-and-stuff nylon tote with expandable compartments.

Before you go, ask your travel agent for guidance on tipping at your destination. Some posh resorts automatically add to your bill a daily charge for service, which means you shouldn't tip (unless you want to reward exceptional service).

In restaurants, the rule of thumb is 15 percent to 20 percent for waiters; $3 to $5 for captains. Leave $1 a day in an envelope for your chambermaid at the end of your stay. The bellhop gets $1 as does the doorman who fetches your taxi.

Take at least one credit card so you don't have to worry about having enough cash. If you don't already have a major credit card, be sure to apply for one several months prior to the wedding. Check with the card's issuing bank to find out what special services they make available to travelers.

Should you buy travel insurance? First check you other coverage to determine whether individual coverage or a special traveler's package is best for you.

Ask your travel agent if you'll need a passport. If so, visit a photographer to obtain two duplicate photos of each of you. Applications are available at major post offices, county clerk's offices and passport agencies.

Choice of menu, caterer important for success of wedding reception

By ELIZABETH WITTY
Copley News Service

Your wedding reception may be the biggest and most expensive party you or your parents will ever give.

Fortunately, the rules for wedding receptions are much more flexible than they once were. A reception can be as simple or as lavish as your budget will allow.

It can be a gathering of a few close friends at your home, a gala banquet aboard a yacht or anything in-between. You can hire a caterer or serve cocktails and hors d'oeuvres in the back yard, or go all out and serve a six-course dinner at a waterfront hotel or country inn. Anything short of takeout pizza or frozen egg rolls is acceptable.

The first step in planning a reception is assessing your budget. The average cost of a reception these days is about $6,000, although it's possible to host an informal luncheon for about half that price or go as high as $20,000 for a sit-down dinner at an elegant hotel.

Wedding consultants hesitate to quote prices because costs vary, depending on the location of your reception, the type of food offered, the number of guests and whether alcohol is served.

A formal sit-down dinner generally is the most expensive type of reception you can hold, regardless of whether you choose a hotel, restaurant or private caterer.

Breakfasts, luncheons and buffets usually are less expensive, although in some instances they can cost as much as sit-down service.

The most economical way to go is to offer hors d'oeuvres. Here again, you can go with a simple fare of finger sandwiches and fresh fruit or go all out and offer caviar and truffles.

Jon Jividen, executive chef for Ridgewells Caterer in Philadelphia, says the trend these days is toward "down-home cooking." Unpretentious foods such as veal chops, fried chicken, home-grown vegetables and pork pie have replaced foie gras and pheasant as the "in" foods.

There also is renewed interest in whole-grain breads and pasta. Tortellini, ravioli, rigatoni and fettucine have become standard fare for receptions.

For those with a more adventurous palate and a thicker wallet, there is wild game — elk, reindeer, rattlesnake, buffalo, venison and even hippopotamus. International cuisine from Africa, Morocco, India and the Caribbean also is gaining popularity.

Unless your budget is unlimited, it is advisable to stick to traditional fare.

"Simple is best," says Alfred Mayer, executive chef for The Manor in West Orange, N.J. "Don't worry about being gourmet. After all, very complicated dishes often require guests to sit still, to concentrate on the food, instead of you, the party."

If your wedding is held during the early afternoon, a buffet or tea may be the most appropriate reception. It is an especially good way to entertain if your funds are limited.

"One of the best ways to do a wedding reception without going broke is to have it in the midafternoon," says Andrew Spurgin, catering director for the French Gourmet in La Jolla, Calif.

That way your guests won't be expecting a lavish spread.

A typical afternoon tea or buffet might include finger sandwiches, canapes, assorted cheeses and crackers, scones, pates and fresh fruit, along with champagne and wedding cake.

A late afternoon or evening wedding usually is followed by a hot buffet or sit-down dinner.

Despite popular belief, buffet service is not necessarily cheaper than a sit-down meal. Because a buffet requires a greater variety and must be served for a longer duration, the difference in price sometimes may only be slight.

Among the most popular dinner entrees are prime rib, roast duck, baked salmon, beef tenderloin tips, chicken Parmesan and rack of lamb. Entrees usually are served with an appetizer, rice, potatoes or pasta, seasonal vegetables and rolls and butter.

A reception that is becoming increasingly popular is the breakfast or brunch. Not only is food less expensive, but you don't have to bear the cost of setting up a bar. Champagne served from the bottle or punch bowl is elegant and less costly than stocking an open bar.

Breakfast can be either sit-down or buffet-style. A standard breakfast includes fresh fruit, shirred eggs, hot sausages, hashed browns or scalloped potatoes and muffins. Buffets are more elaborate and include a variety of salads, entrees and breads, in addition to the usual sausage and eggs.

If you can afford it, you may want to offer your guests wine or cocktails, although it's not required.

If your budget is tight, you might consider going to a no-host bar, letting your guests pay for their own drinks. Another alternative is to serve a champagne punch, which is considerably less expensive than mixed drinks.

Most hotels and restaurants prohibit patrons from bringing in their own alcohol. Establishments that do permit wine or champagne to be brought in usually charge a $4 to $5 corkage fee for each bottle.

Unless you're planning a home reception, you need to choose a site as soon as possible. June, August and December are especially popular months for weddings, and restaurants, clubs, hotels and private halls frequently are booked a year in advance.

In deciding where to hold the reception, you need to take into account the time of day the wedding is scheduled, the number of guests, the type of food you want to offer and, of course, your budget.

Restaurants are ideal choices for small, informal weddings. Although some establishments can accommodate several hundred guests comfortably, the majority have private party rooms for groups of 50 or less.

Generally, it's best to order the meal ahead of time to avoid any complications with the bill. Restaurants usually don't have the facilities or the staff for a lengthy cocktail hour or dancing.

Hotels are another popular choice for wedding receptions. Hotels offer a greater variety of meal plans than restaurants and have the facilities to accommodate both small and large wedding parties. They can offer intimate banquet rooms, as well as grand ballrooms.

Most hotels have a professional catering staff that will work with you in developing a customized menu. Banquet managers recommend that you book at least six months in advance.

If hosting a reception at a hotel or restaurant seems prohibitive, or if you like the idea of a reception at home, you might want to consider hiring an independent caterer. The advantage of using a caterer is that you will wind up with a more personalized reception.

Some caterers specialize in lavish gourmet spreads, while others concentrate on simple hors d'oeuvres and finger sandwiches. As a result, costs vary tremendously.

Caterers generally provide all the necessary accessories and equipment (linens, silverware, etc.), and some even take care of decorations, music, flowers and liquor.

As always, personal recommendations and individual interviews are your best guide in choosing a caterer. And don't sign a contract for a menu that you haven't first tasted.

If you are looking for a reception site that is out-of-the-ordinary, you might want to refer to the nationwide directory, "Places." It lists more than 2,000 sites throughout the country, from the New York Botanical Garden to John Wayne's yacht. You also can contact your local chamber of commerce, historical society or National Register of Historic Trusts.

Lingerie, perfume set romantic mood

By DEBRA COOPER
Copley News Service

The bridal trousseau is back.

Years ago, it included all the personal possessions a new bride brought to the marriage — a year's wardrobe, all of her accesories, linens and housewares. Her father supplied it as part of her dowry.

Today, the trousseau is usually the bride's honeymoon wardrobe, primarily the clothes that make her feel especially beautiful: silky smooth, lacy, libido-unleashing sleepwear. The trousseau is also her linens and those bed and bath accessories that are most conducive to romance.

The Hollywood vamp of the '30s has returned to the fashion scene — especially in the lingerie and lougewear department.

The queens of the silver screen — Harlow, Lombard, Dietrich, to name a few — have inspired a new wave of slinky, sexy, ultra-feminine designs made of soft, shimmery fabrics that drape beautifully and make any figure fabulous.

The good news is that these retro lovelies are easy to care for. Many are made of lustrous nylons that imitate silk and satin in every way except how they're washed. They're not only easy to care for (a quick swish in sudsy water, then you hang them to dry), they're wrinkle resistant.

Fashions in the new nylons range from dramatic palazzo pants to sumptuous floor-length gowns with rich theater folds that look as though they're made for dancing. Peignoir sets are elegant, baby dolls seductive and teddies lavished with lace.

Overall, the feeling is pure opulence and sybaritic luxury, designed to turn even hard-bitten businesswomen into purring kittens in the privacy of their own boudoirs.

Luxurious detailing is everywhere. Antique lace adorns necklines, full sleeves drip with cascading ruffles, bodices are richly embroidered. Trims are lattice work, applique, beaded — and include glittery rhinestones and clip-on flowers.

Delicate, rippled, pleated, ruffled and feathered edgings lend a feeling of motion. Unusual collar, neckline and sleeve details echo fashion trends of bygone eras.

You'll want to vary your look depending on your mood. A full-length gown in white or pale pastel is sublty sexy, perfect for your opening night.

As your honeymoon progresses, go with a more daring look — perhaps a camisole top with tap pants or a gown with a plunging neckline and provocative slit.

If you're traveling in a cold climate, bring along a lovely snuggly robe of quilted satin and demure lace-trimmed pajamas for comfortable lounging.

Gorgeous lingerie, pretty nightgowns and sumptuous boudoir linens have a place in any trousseau.

Treat him to a pair of silk charmeuse boxer shorts — they're so luxuriously comfortable, you may find yourself borrowing them!

You'll also want to wrap him in a warm velvet (or velour) bathrobe and present him with a pair of fur-lined leather slippers.

"Smell is linked to sensuality," says Judith Jackson, author of "Sentual Touch," (Fawcett Columbine). "It goes directly to the hypothalamus, which causes the pituitary gland to send a message to sexual hormones, saying, 'Let's go!'"

Chances are, you and your fiance feel passionately attracted to each other's scent. If you don't have your own signature scent, now's the time to find one. Select one that describes you best: passionate, feminine, daring, romantic, playful and more.

The best way to find the scents that appeal to each of you is to visit your local department store and go on a sniffing spree. You may want to wear the fragrances for several hours before making your final decision, or buy several ones for different moods and occasions.

Keep your nose in mind, too, whenever the mood is romantic. You'll want to luxuriate in perfumed bubble baths, eat dinner by scented candlelight and indulge yourselves in rubdowns with aromatic oils.

Although "linens" are rarely made of linen cloth anymore, the name remains — especially in stores. This is the department in which you'll find sheets and other bedding, towels and tablecloths.

The fabrics are likely to be mixtures of easy-care fibers, but they're trimmed with lace, embroidery and ruffles that resemble the handiwork of long ago. Comforters and quilts are cozy reminders of the past, and they function as colorful, warm bed coverings.

Different sizes and shapes of pillows fancied up with ruffles add romance to any bedroom. Look for them covered in layers of lace, perhaps with pockets of scented potpourri.

What's hot, what's not in attire for summer weddings

WHAT'S HOT?

■ Bridal gowns that are simple, elegant, have alluring silhouettes....Look for raised waists, peplums, jackets over strapless gowns, off-the-shoulder necklines, cape collars, and low, plunging backs. Detachable veils are practical for reception action.

■ Sheer, fluid fabrics (chiffon, organza) that soften, shape the body. Laces explode with sculpted details, ribbon, metallic trims.

■ Bridesmaids' dresses that bloom with floral prints....Look for a garden of roses, tulips, daisies and lilacs. Colors are strong, bright. Hemlines are up — knee-skimming lengths are the height of maids' fashion. Many bridesmaids are wearing gloves for an elegant finishing touch.

■ Accessories that draw on ready-to-wear trends....Handbags appear in eye-catching shapes — geometrics, canteens and candy boxes. Traditional "bridal" materials (rosettes) form large, bold earrings. In removable shoe clips — bows, rhinestones, ribbons — brides and maids step out in style.

■ Grooms who flaunt their own sense of style....They're choosing colorful, witty suspenders and vests (not based solely on the color of bridesmaids' dresses). Their boutonnieres have more style, too — flowers such as delphinium, freesia and lily of the valley instead of roses, carnations.

WHAT'S NOT!

■ Bridal gowns or headpieces that don't flatter you, are inappropriate for your shape, height, physical appearance. Are you tall, thin, petite, buxom? Ask a bridal consultant for suggestions.

■ Bridal jewelry that's barely noticeable....the strand of tiny pearls is out; try on larger ones!

Bridal gowns this year are very simple, yet elegant. The off-the-shoulder neckline is a very popular style for this season.

The right flowers add to the romance of any wedding. The bride is wearing lilies of the valley in her hair, which are repeated in her cascade bouquet of stephanotis, gardenias, star of Bethlehem and lilies.

Organza and chiffon are fabrics that soften and shape the body. This gown has appliques of hand-beaded lace.

Today's wedding gowns make brides more beautiful

Gowns are feminine, yet elegant

By LISA LEBOWITZ
Copley News Service

If there was ever any doubt that weddings are romantic, those doubts were put to rest with the debut of this year's gowns.

"Wedding gowns today are more romantic than ever before," says Bride's magazine editor-in-chief Barbara Tober. "I think the most important thing to remember is that they're very, very feminine."

This season's silhouettes are simpler and more elegant than a year ago. Whereas last year the skirts of many bridal gowns cascaded with lace and overflowed with pearls, this year, skirts are simplified.

"Many of the skirts are totally plain without any embellishments at all," explains Holly McMunn, director of public relations for Bridal Originals. "In fact, trains and skirts have unadorned fabric with just a touch of lace. The emphasis has really gone to the bodice of the gown."

Look for lavish hand beading and the use of appliques on both the front and back. Or, hand beading appears on sheer lace that covers flesh-tone organza, creating the illusion of a show-through look.

Some gowns appear lingerie-inspired, mixing lace and embroidery for a feel borrowed from intimate apparel.

Necklines receive new emphasis, and this year, there are innovative alternatives to traditional high-neck styling. The portrait collars, capelets, fichus and scarf-tied looks that appear in ready-to-wear also influence bridal clothes.

"Also important this season are wonderful decolletage — off-the-shoulder looks," says Tober, "and unusual necklines that billow into sheer bishop sleeves."

When shoulders are bared, look for bows or fabric rosettes that draw attention to the shoulders.

There also is significant back interest this season: Keyhole cutouts, V-designs filled in with pearls and ruffled bustles keep eyes trained on the bride as she glides down the aisle.

Peplums are another point of interest — they're more prominent and architectural than they have been the last few seasons.

Waistlines are slightly higher, and in more fashion-forward gowns may even be Empire.

"The sheath is another gown shape that's enjoying a resurgence," adds McMunn.

And if skirts are full at the hip, they may be pegged at the ankle, creating a dome shape that looks fresh now.

Another strong trend this year is the use of color in bridal gowns. Blush pink and icy gray-blue show up in trims and overskirts, providing options to the classic ecru, ivory and white.

The traditional fabrics are still popular — silks, satins, taffetas — but they are joined by fluid fabrics such as chiffon and georgette, and iridescent fibers that create a frosted look.

Bridesmaids, too, are more colorful and florid than before. This is the year of the cabbage rose. While the silhouette of bridesmaid dresses, like bridal gowns, is simpler, more ladylike, the fabrics burst into bloom with floral chintzes. Tulips and daisies also appear, as do polka dots.

Off-the-shoulder looks, ornamented with a simple ruffle at the neckline or a bow at the waist complete the English country feel.

As in ready-to-wear, the more classic single- or duo-tone attendant dresses are brighter than last year. Pastels are punched up. Look for brighter colors, such as mint and lemon ice, orchid, coral, turquoise blue and jade green.

These brighter growns may have mini-ruffles on the skirt that create a tiered effect or an insert of matching lace on the bodice or at the bustline to enhance the design.

While the floral bridesmaids' gowns frequently are cotton or silk this year, the single-color dresses appear in classic taffeta and satin.

And what about the mother of the bride?

"They're in better shape and looking younger than ever," comments Tober. "We love to see them in chiffon dresses and beautiful, floating evening looks."

The perfect dress for the mother of the bride is one that reflects her personality. And there currently are many flattering options in late-day and evening silhouettes.

"What they want to avoid are dresses that look mousey and don't have the presence of glamour," adds Tober.

If you can't find a look that suits you in the stores, join the 38 percent of brides who either sew or have their gowns made each year. And as patterns become more sophisticated, that means up-to-the-minute styles are available in pattern books the same season they appear in the stores.

As in store-bought gowns, says Cindy Rose, fashion director for Vogue/Butterick, this year's bridal patterns reflect a new interest in the neckline.

"Vogue and Butterick feature bare-shoulder looks, sweetheart necklines, and big bow detailing with bows at the shoulders and at the waist."

Also new from Butterick, look for fitted gowns that hug the body to the knee, and then flare out at the bottom.

Hallmarks of the most current bridal gowns: A fitted, beaded bodice with a peplum waist and a cascade of mermaid ruffles. For a headpiece, try a simple garland with tulle netting.

Brides need to note differences in wide variety of fabrics, lace

Copley News Service

It's helpful to know the differences in fabrics and lace when you are shopping for your gown and attendants' dresses.

■ Charmeuse. Classic charmeuse is made of silk. Polyester blends are also available. It is a soft, lightweight cloth that drapes beautifully.

■ Crepe de chine. Silk or blended fabric with a floating quality.

■ Faille. A full-bodied pure silk or polyester fabric often used for autumn or wintertime gowns.

■ Organza. Crisp sheer silk, often accented with appliques.

■ Taffeta. That silk or silk-blend fabric known best for its rustle — just like Mammy's red silk taffeta petticoat in "Gone With the Wind."

■ Tulle. Looks like veiling, and many brides use it on their headpieces. Also nice in layers on a dress.

■ Alencon lace. An expensive lace from France. Beloved for its delicate leaf and floral patterns.

■ Brussels lace. Rare, delicate lace with subtle designs. Imported from Belgium. Used on the finest gowns.

■ Chantilly lace. Also from France, it is known for its delicate spider's web pattern. Authentic Chantilly is identified by its soft feel.

■ Schiffli embroidery. Made in the United States, it comes in delicate patterns resembling more expensive laces. It is embroidered on the gown.

Attendant attire is equally important

By KAREN CALDWELL
Copley News Service

The bride is center stage, but what the attendants wear is equally important — the colors, styles and formality of their attire create the backdrop of a picture-perfect occasion.

Happily, manufacturers of attendants' attire supply a huge selection of gowns at moderate prices. You can find cocktail dresses with discreet cover-ups, tiered skirts that can be worn short or long, camisoles and tunics.

While it's hard to please everyone, a smart bride will try this approach: At first, take only your maid or matron of honor with you shopping and narrow down the choices to three or so styles.

Pick a style that will flatter your attendants' varied figures. For instance, blouson tops and full skirts look good on almost anyone. The styles your maids will most likely be able to wear again are two piece and shorter (rather than floor length).

Chances are you'll be able to purchase one style in whatever color you desire, or find your favorite color in many styles. Ask, too, if there is a youthful rendition of the same outfit for your junior bridesmaids and flower girls.

Once you've made your preliminary selections, schedule a time when the rest of the maids can visit the bridal shop to vote on the final decision.

Wedding attendants are looking lovelier than ever. No longer are bridesmaids' dresses frumpy, garish and destined to post-ceremony oblivion. The new look is feminine, fashionable and versatile.

Usually, lighter colors are worn in spring and summer, more vibrant colors in fall and winter.

You might want to go with a monochromatic scheme of differing hues of the same color. The overall look is not only wedding-album lovely, it also offers shade variations suitable for every person.

Following the fashion of today's bridal gowns, the shoulders of bridesmaid dresses are bare.

Necklines are scoop or sweetheart and are best accessorized with one or several strands of pearls.

Sleeves are lacy or made of soft, sheer fabric, often gathered or shirred.

Depending on the formality of the wedding, skirt length can be anywhere from knee to ankle. Super-short is out.

Fabrics include satin, silk, taffeta and velvet. Look for new economical fabrics that mimic silk so well that even the wearer can't tell the difference. The big news is prints — chintzlike florals are blooming (with matching broad-brimmed hats), and the look is soft and old-fashioned.

Waists are tapered and have graceful peplums or wide sashes. Fabric forms soft rosettes and graceful bows.

Gloves are everywhere. They're lacy and delicate, made of fine netting and decorated with wrist ruffles and tiny satin rosettes.

As a courtesy to the parents of your flower girl, select a dress for her that is lovely and lacy but not wedding-gown fancy. She should be able to wear it to one or two other dressy occasions, including church, before she outgrows it.

It's nice, (but not mandatory) to distinguish your maid or matron of honor. You can do this with flowers and accessories or with a different shade of dress — for example, light blue for the maid of honor, deeper blue for the other maids.

It used to be that the bride's mother selected her outfit for the big day first. Then she informed the mother of the groom so the latter could make a suitable selection as to the color and length.

Today the rules are more relaxed. Bridal experts advise the mothers should agree on the degree of formality, but each should have her own prerogative as to style and color.

Besides, according to Joyce Cohen, fashion and beauty director of Bride's magazine, matching isn't unthinkable anymore. She says she likes to see "an overall feeling of harmony in the colors of the wedding — say, the bridesmaids in pink, the mothers in dove gray."

In the 1950s, the typical mother of the bride wore a dress in a muddy pastel color or a print that looked like a combination of upholstery and window curtains. Dusty blue brocade seen through floaty panels of blue lace, for example. Or whooshy ashes-of-roses chiffon with butterfly sleeves and an underskirt of paler satin.

No more. Today's mothers of the bride refuse to dress like grandmas-in-waiting. They're not satisfied with less than something from Carolina Herrera, Oscar de la Renta or Bill Blass.

The key is elegance and mature beauty — as long as Mom doesn't steal the show from her daughter.

Registry rites: Tips for getting, giving great gifts

By ALISON ASHTON
Copley News Service

You're engaged. Everyone wishes you well, people throw parties in your honor, you start planning the big day.

Best of all, it's time to register for gifts.

Traditionally, bridal registries are a wonderful wish-list of china, silver, crystal, kitchen, bathroom and bedroom items — all the goodies you and your beloved need to set up house.

With smart planning and the help of a good in-store bridal consultant, you just might end up with a host of useful, beautiful gifts that you will cherish for years to come.

"The bridal registry also avoids the possibilities of many gift duplications and assures the couple of receiving things they want, in their taste," writes Letitia Baldrige in "The Amy Vanderbilt Complete Book of Etiquette" (Doubleday).

"Most people like to have suggestions on what to buy as a wedding gift, and appreciate the chance to purchase something they know the bride and groom actually want and will use," she continues.

If the world of bone china, sterling silver and fancy kitchen gizmos is a mystery, turn to the pages of Geryl Kramer's "Bridal Registry Guide" (Turnbull & Willoughby).

Kramer not only explains the whole process of registering, but also offers a crash course on what all this stuff is (there really is a difference between bone china and earthenware).

She contends that registering is not as complicated as it seems. In fact, she says, the process can be broken down into seven simple steps:

Determine your lifestyle. Are you a busy two-career couple who will value time-saving devices? Do you plan to entertain a lot? In what kind of style?

Determine your taste. Shop around, read magazines, learn what each other likes. Her preference for whimsical contemporary table settings can mesh quite nicely with his love of the traditional.

Pick a general color scheme for your home. This will give it a unified look.

Coordinate your lifestyle, tastes and color preferences with those of your fiance. For some couples this is easy, for others it takes some negotiating.

Research and understand products carefully before making a selection. Learn the hallmarks of quality. Don't always assume that the most expensive or best-known brands are the best for you.

Register at locations best suited to your needs. If your family and friends live in the same town, registering with local jewelers and specialty stores will do fine.

If you have a big family and wide circle of friends living far away, consider a department store with many branches and a computerized, interstore bridal registry.

Work closely with a bridal consultant or store manager to make your selections.

The other wonderful thing about bridal registries is that the services of a bridal consultant usually come with it. Look for one who will make an appointment with you — registering can take several hours.

Once you have made your choices, simply leave it to friends and family to spread the word of where you are registered.

Selecting tabletop treasurers — china, silver and crystal patterns — is perhaps the most fun. You are starting your own family traditions.

Register for quality items that will have a place in your home for a long time. Mix ornate with simple, traditional with contemporary to create an eclectic, unique look.

The prices and styles of china vary widely. Heirloom-quality imported china, such as Hutschenreuther from Germany or Wedgwood from England, tend to be more expensive.

Beyond that, patterns run the gamut from stately traditional floral and golden-edged dishes by Royal Doulton, Wedgwood and Lenox (very popular right now) to highly innovative and contemporary patterns from Swid Powell and Dansk.

You can register for both fine and everyday china, although most bridal consultants will encourage you to use your fine china as often as you like.

Next, select a silver pattern. Here again, the patterns run from very ornate baroque to simple and stately.

Some of the names in silver to look for: French-designed Christofle, American-made Wallace sterling and Oneida. You'll see that many patterns incorporate a touch of gold for visual texture.

Complete your tabletop with crystal. Orrefors makes a line of sleekly beautiful glasses and decanters, while Waterford, Baccarat and Lenox are known for their intricate detailing. Don't forget to register for bar glasses and decanters.

When registering for tabletop items, also look at accessories such as serving bowls, coffee urns, salt and pepper shakers, candlesticks and serving utensils. This is where having a bridal consultant actually sets a table for you comes in handy.

The kitchen is where useful everyday items come into play. But useful doesn't translate as "boring."

This also is the ideal area to balance out the costlier tabletop items, allowing guests of every budget to use your registry.

If this is your first marriage and you're both just starting out, chances are you will need to register for everything.

Think about colors for the kitchen. Everything from pots and pans to mixing bowls to gadgets and gizmos comes in a rainbow of colors, including bright red, high-tech black, blue and basic white.

When registering for cookware, ask about the different surfaces. Cooking surfaces range from copper to stainless steel; some are excellent heat conductors but require a lot of care.

Some of the top names in cookware include Chantal, which is available in gorgeous accent colors, Revereware, a traditional favorite, and Calphalon.

Other items to include on your nuptial wish-list are blenders (Osterizer is a bridal favorite), beaters (either hand-held or freestanding), choppers (Cuisinart is best known, but other manufacturers make good ones, too), and every conceivable kitchen utensil, bowl and cup.

Don't forget a toaster or toaster oven. Cutlery is another must-have; look for a brand with a reputation for lasting.

Krups and Braun are popular manufacturers of coffee makers and coffee bean grinders. Real coffee connoisseurs will want an espresso-/cappuccino machine. Tea drinkers should register for a sturdy kettle.

Also consider space-saving designs for a small kitchen. Look for toaster ovens, can openers and other items that can be mounted on a wall or under a cabinet.

The bed and boudoir is known as the household trousseau. You register for all the bedding and linens, including napkins and tablecloths, that you will need.

For the bedroom, create a wonderful fantasy with gorgeous sheets, bedspreads, accent pillows and dust ruffles.

All the top manufacturers — Springmaid, Wamsutta, Cannon, Martex — have fully coordinated sets.

Create a princess-bride storybook bedroom of pink linen and lace-edged sheets or sleep on a bower of flowers. For something more sophisticated, look at the many richly colored intricate patterns now available.

For a touch of signature luxury, look at the ultrafeminine bedding designed by Laura Ashley or the highly traditional creations by Ralph Lauren.

Gift ideas for attendants

By ALLISON ASHTON
Copley News Service

Attendants and ushers do a lot for you before and during the wedding. They help run errands, coordinate parties and offer much-needed support.

It is nice to thank them with a keepsake.

Shop for gifts for attendants and ushers when you are registering.

The maid or matron of honor and the best man usually get something a little more extravagant to recognize the special duties and support they give.

The bride should give all the bridesmaids identical gifts, and the groom should do the same for ushers. Engraving is a nice touch (make sure to allow enough time for this).

Gifts traditionally are given at the rehearsal dinner.

Some ideas for bridesmaids' gifts culled from "The Tiffany Wedding" (Doubleday) include silver or gold earrings or pins, a silver powder compact or picture frame, a cut-crystal powder box or perfume atomizer and a hand-painted porcelain box.

Other ideas include heart-shaped key rings and bookmarks.

The groom might give his ushers cuff links, a tie bar, belt buckle or money clip. Other favorites include an elegant pocket flask, a paperweight, pens, silver bar knives or a decanter.

Marriage experts offer relationship tips for pre-marriage equanimity

By SHARON WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

As a bride-to-be, you are most likely caught up in the heady rush of romance. But in the back of your mind, you are wondering what life with your new spouse will be like once the honeymoon is over.

Maybe you have already experienced a few prenuptial spats concerning matters such as whether his old girlfriend should receive a wedding invitation, or whether the honeymoon should be set against the sand or the snow.

Soon, you realize, the issues at hand will be those that carry more weight in your relationship, such as money, when to begin a family and husband/wife roles. The dilemma of the proper way to squeeze the toothpaste tube pales in comparison.

If you two can't handle the little things now, is this the best time to bail out?

Not in most situations, say marriage experts. Sweaty palms, sleepless nights, butterflies and an occasional second thought about the wedding all reflect the importance of the commitment you both are about to make. It's not the worries themselves, but the way that you as a couple handle them that is of the most concern.

Following is a checklist of ways to gear up for the problems linked to marriage before you say, "I do."

Marriage 101 — Who says couples can learn about the downside of marriage only by fighting their way through them? Many brides and grooms find that discussing problems and fears with one another before marriage may be all that's needed to banish them for good.

It might be a matter of your future spouse simply not being aware of your feelings, or discovering that you both are worried about the same thing. Maybe you just need to hear each other's views on the issues and values that will determine your relationship as husband and wife.

Self-disclosure and open communication can take place in an intimate tete-a-tete between bride and groom. But sometimes a third unbiased party, such as a religious leader or counselor, can help a couple uncover potential relationship-busters and inspire ways to relieve them.

Weekend retreats are popular with many couples who find getting away from it all is the first step in combating friction in a union. Removed from the pressures of wedding preparations, couples are free to discuss important issues, goals and values such as their expectations for the marriage and financial wishes.

Hers, his, ours — A union of souls doesn't always mean a union of the checking accounts. There's nothing romantic about financial portfolios, insurance policies and retirement benefits, but couples who discuss what's his, hers and theirs before the vows are said usually are better off than those who squirrel away funds in their respective piggy banks.

Topics to mull over during your next candlelight dinner include what credit cards you would like to hold as individuals and as a couple, how you want to file tax returns, whether you want to keep your money in joint or separate accounts, what insurance you will both need and your savings and retirement goals, both as individuals and together.

Some couples turn to financial consultants for advice on the best ways to combine or separate their earnings for maximum results.

The consultant can assess the situation without bringing emotion into the game, then help the couple work toward a solid financial portfolio.

To some, prenuptial agreements may seem like preparing for divorce before marriage. But these contracts appeal to many of today's brides and grooms — especially those with lucrative careers or inheritances or who are remarrying — who choose to protect themselves and their belongings. These agreements determine how financial matters will be handled throughout the marriage and how assets will be divided should the marriage not work out.

You will come up with the best contract when you, your fiance and your attorneys are willing to disclose all assets. The agreement must be consistent with legal rights and state laws. Above all, it should be signed voluntarily.

Where's the romance? — A fulfilling sexual relationship doesn't come easy, even in these days of open discussion about the birds and the bees.

First, there's the matter of family planning, best tackled at the onset of your sexual relationship since an unplanned pregnancy can wreak havoc with the happiest of couples.

Your physician can provide facts and figures on the pill and various barrier methods if a baby doesn't fit into the picture right away, or help you take the steps to becoming pregnant as soon as possible if you are both ready to start a family.

And, although it's not a pleasant subject, partners should be open from the start about contact with AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases, and follow up with the best tests and treatments available.

As for sexual satisfaction, most experts warn newlyweds not to expect fireworks night after night. Many couples find sexual expectations often clash with reality in the beginning, and that they tend to take these mishaps too seriously or personally.

Good relationships depend on good verbal communication, even when the subject is sex.

"People should take time out of their busy lives to sit down and talk about sex," recommends Dr. Ruth Westheimer in a Bride's magazine interview.

Documenting wedding has become package deal for today's couples

By ORLANDO RAMIREZ
Copley News Service

To tape or not to tape? That is the question confronting brides in this age of personal electronics.

In the past you hired a reputable photographer, he told you where to stand and when to smile, and when you got back from the honeymoon, there were proof sheets ready for your inspection.

These days documenting your wedding has become a package deal. The options open to the bride and groom include a selection of posed and candid photographs by a professional as well as video tapes, whether provided by the church, compiled by professionals or shot by Uncle Harry with his personal camcorder.

Nonetheless, videotaping is still seen as secondary to the traditional wedding album, and most couples choose to invest in color photos.

It may seem like just one more bothersome detail to take care of before the wedding, but hiring a photographer is important because this will be the only record of an event that has required quite an investment, both emotional and financial.

The first decision is choosing who will take the photographs — friend or pro?

Oftentimes a shutterbug friend or relative will offer his services for the cost of film and processing. But unless this person is a professional photographer with the right equipment, the results can be disastrous.

Remember, this friend is also a guest. He or she will want to take part in the festivities, but things can get a little out of focus after too many trips to the champagne fountain. Also, having to work is a chore for your friend, and if he suffers a mechanical failure, he may not have the right backup equipment.

Choosing a professional, whether to videotape or photograph your wedding, requires a little shopping.

You'll want to see samples and discuss figures. Most professionals require a deposit and that a guaranteed number of photos be bought. Ask if he sells a certain package, say a mix of formal poses and candids, and then decide what coverage is within your means.

The photographer will be integral to every ceremonial event, such as cutting the cake or tossing the garter, so it is important that your personalities mesh. If he is aggressive or bossy and you find this obnoxious, then find someone who is of a gentler nature.

Another thing to ascertain is whether the studio's owner or assistant will be shooting your wedding. During a busy season, studios may overbook, and the photographer may send a substitute or may be in a rush to get to another ceremony.

It is important that you negotiate these details before the contract is signed. Also, it doesn't hurt to ask the photographer to appear in suitable attire. Bermuda shorts at a formal affair are, well, declasse.

Most couples choose a mix of formal poses and candids. With the formal poses, it is wise to decide when these shots will be taken.

Many brides arrange to take these photos a few days before the ceremony. This way their hair and makeup can be done to perfection, and the photographer has a variety of lighting techniques at his disposal, such as double exposures or soft-focus.

However, this can be a problem if travel arrangements preclude having the attendants or family members included in the photo session. In that case, most formal photographs are taken right after the ceremony when everyone is in the same place at the same time.

In these situations, it is best to work out arrangements with the church or chapel beforehand so that there will be no last-minute hitches. Remember, time is of the essence — your guests are waiting for your exit so they can follow you to the reception.

Besides documenting the ceremonial events, candid photos are intended to include those people who are special to you but who are not members of the wedding party.

Most photographers will offer a list of candids so you can check off which ones you want, but it's wise to draw up your own list as well.

Maybe there is an old custom in your family or some other special event you want documented. It doesn't hurt to have the photographer work with a close friend or relative during the reception so he can get the shots precious to you.

This may also be the best time for your shutterbug friend or relative. He may be more sensitive to the personalities at your wedding than the pro. He will get the picture of you doing the twist with your favorite Uncle Harry whereas the the pro may just see one more dance with one more guy in a loud suit.

This may also be a good time to break out the video camera. Since the reception is a more relaxed situation than the ceremony, most people won't be bothered by a roaming cameraman.

However, video cameras must be used judiciously. At a recent wedding, the groom's brother left a video camera running on a tripod while he went off in search of refreshment. The microphone inadvertently recorded the groom's mother and some cohorts making injudicious comments about the bride's mother and her apparel. Needless to say, it caused unneeded embarrassment for the newlyweds when it was screened the following day.

Selecting a professional to videotape your wedding can avoid such problems, but that decision can create other problems.

One of the main complaints about videotaping weddings, especially regarding the exchange of vows, is that the camera intrudes on what is supposed to be a sacred event.

Too often, the ceremony takes second place to the taping, and it's not unheard of for the bride and groom to repeat their vows so the cameraman can get a better angle.

In response, some churches have installed their own taping equipment in the choir loft or other unobtrusive places and offer the tape to the newlyweds for a reasonable fee.

If this option is unavailable, your best bet is to confer with your clergyman about what rules apply during the ceremony. Many churches and chapels request that the cameras and their operators remain stationary during the service.

Most professional taping services, which range in price from $150 to $1,000, depending on the number of cameras and amount of editing, have experience in dealing with the ceremonial aspects of the production and will respect the wishes of your clergyman. However, it is not a bad idea to discuss this important aspect before the day of the wedding so that all parties know the restrictions.

However, if a friend or a relative is taping the ceremony, his or her inexperience can cause problems. Many couples invite the videographer to the rehearsal so he can block out shots and adjust lights and settings before the ceremony and avoid the retakes that can disrupt the mood of this joyous occasion.

As with the still photographer, it is best to discuss what shots you want.

Ask how he plans to cover each event. Will the ceremony be covered from the back of the church using a zoom lens?

Also, will the videographer "interview" the guests and ask them their reactions to the wedding or if they care to offer their best wishes to the happy couple? If the latter is chosen, be sure the person doing the interviewing is discreet and doesn't hound guests who may be shy before the cameras.

These days it seems you can't get married without a camera somewhere.

Love at First Sight

Carrie Makowsky and Christopher Bone say it was love at first sight, and they began making plans to marry just a few short months after they met. "I thought he was adorable," said Carrie. "I had heard all about him because he was popular in high school."

"I felt like I already knew him," she recalled of their first meeting. The couple also commented that people often notice that they look like twins.

Interestingly, Carrie and Christopher were introduced to each other by Christopher's girlfriend. "The first time she walked in the door, I knew it was real," Christopher added.

"I was skeptical about marriage at first because I thought we were too young," said Carrie, "and I thought my parents wouldn't agree. But they were very impressed when Chris came over and asked their permission."

The couple will be married June 10 at Memorial Christian Church. A large wedding is planned, with four attendants for each. Carrie's colors are teal and peach.

Carrie is the daughter of Judy Makowsky, the granddaughter of Jack and Mary Jo Rustamier and the great granddaughter of Pearl Bradshaw. She is a 1987 graduate of Midland High School, and is employed by Dillard's.

Christopher is the son of Gerry and Sherry Lemley and the grandson of Wilburn and Majol Lemley. He is a 1987 graduate of Robert E. Lee High School.

After a honeymoon trip to San Antonio, the couple plans to live in Midland. Both will pursue career studies. Carrie will study journalism at Midland College and Christopher will attend the Midland Police Department academy. He hopes to be employed in law enforcement within six months.

Christopher and Carrie share many mutual interests, including going to the movies four or five times a week, bowling, eating out and miniature golfing. In his spare time, Christopher enjoys tennis and soccer. Carrie's outside interests include writing, basketball and sharing activities with her future husband's sister, Amber.

The couple is filled with dreams for their future. "We want to go to Greece for one of our wedding anniversaries," explained Carrie. She dreams of becoming a writer for a major magazine or a television news anchor. Said Christopher, "All I have ever wanted to do was be a policeman, have a wife and a family."

"We've been looking forward to this for a long time," Carrie said.
