WASHINGTON— Alarmed by the "brutality and viciousness" of juvenile crime, the House overwhelmingly passed a get-tough bill Thursday ordering adult trials for violent Americans barely into their teens. The McVeigh trial

Witness testifies he saw defendant driving Ryder truck

By Michael Fleeman
Associated Press

DENVER — Timothy McVeigh was behind the wheel of a yellow Ryder rental truck just days before the same kind of truck loaded with a bomb blew up outside the Oklahoma City federal building, a witness testified Thursday.

"He was backing up a Ryder truck next to our pool," said Eric McGown, a desk worker at the Dreamland Motel in Junction City, Kan., placing the timing between April 14 and April 17, 1995. The bomb went off two days later.

But under a grueling cross-examination, McGown acknowledged he couldn't be sure when he saw the truck and that it could have been on the day before prosecutors say McVeigh rented it from a Junction City body shop.

His voice wavering under lawyer Stephen Jones' questioning, McGown insisted he always said he was estimating the time of the truck sighting and was never sure.

"I was under extreme stress at the time," said McGown, referring to his car troubles and school workload. "I don't know exact times or dates. I know incidents."

He recalled telling McVeigh to move the Ryder truck because it was blocking the door of a "grouchy" guest. "He was really polite about it and said, 'yes,' and moved it right away."

McGown took the stand at the end of a day in which prosecutors sought to show McVeigh had the tools and the anger to detonate a bomb that killed 168 people and injured more than 500.

"My whole mind-set has shifted from intellectual to animal," says a letter that prosecutors say was written by McVeigh just months before the blast.

Dated Feb. 10, 1995, the rambling, handwritten letter also had and apparent expression of McVeigh's new, violent philosophy, which he summed up as: "Rip the bastards' heads off ... I'll show you how with a simple pocket knife."

The letter was shown to the jury during the testimony of Kevin Nicholas, a McVeigh friend from Michigan. It was sent to Gwen Strider, one of Nicholas' in-laws, but he said he didn't read it until after the bombing — at Strider's request.

McVeigh's attorneys had tried to block the intro-

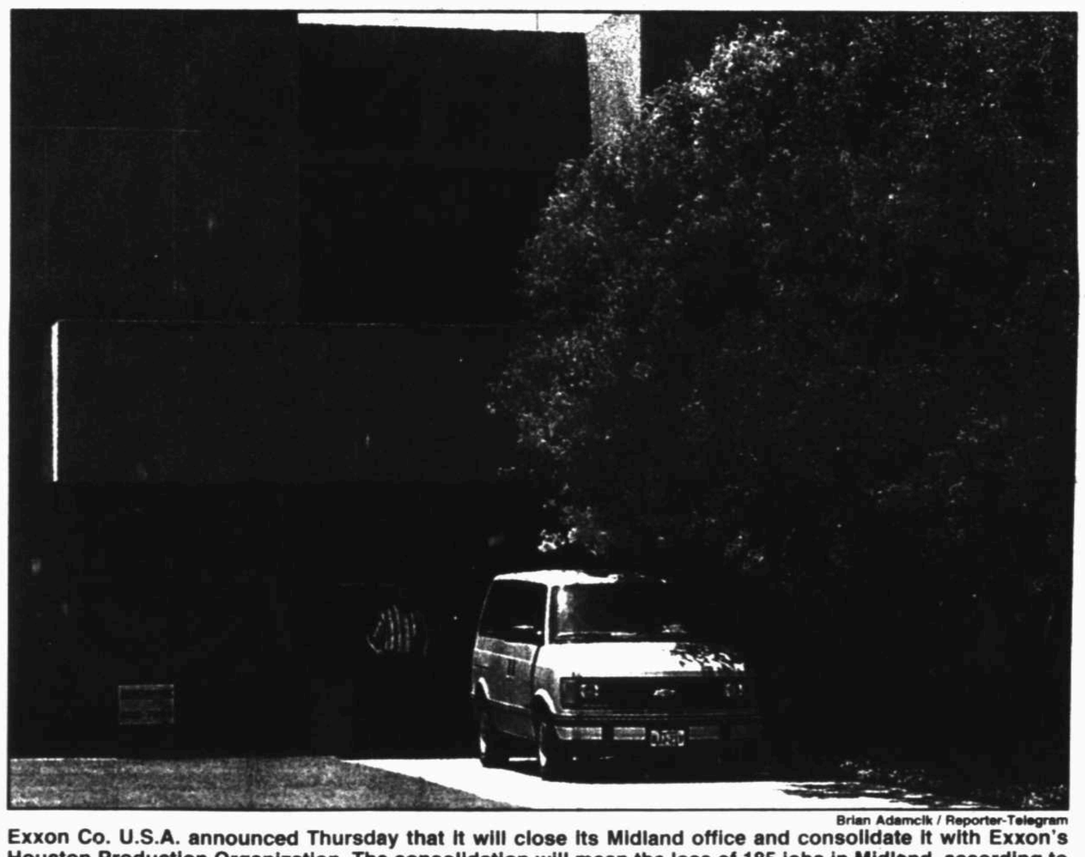
Exxon to close Midland office



Brian Adamcik / Reporter-Telegram

Exxon Co. U.S.A. announced Thursday that it will close its Midland office and consolidate it with Exxon's Houston Production Organization. The consolidation will mean the loss of 185 jobs in Midland, according to an Exxon spokesman.

■ One of Midland's first major oil companies will consolidate local office with Houston Production Organization, spokesman says.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Exxon Co. U.S.A. announced Thursday that it will close its Midland office and consolidate it with Exxon's Houston Production Organization.

The consolidation will mean the loss of 185 jobs in Midland. Midland employees, however, will be offered similar or equivalent jobs in Houston or other Exxon operations.

"This is not a layoff, this is a consolidation," said Exxon spokesman Bob Davis.

Davis said the move was being made in order to create a more efficient and flexible Exxon organization. "Houston is headquarters for Exxon and we have a number of Exxon companies located there. The Houston production office will be flexible in that it will be able to utilize employees on projects in other areas."

Davis said approximately 350 Exxon field employees, 60 of whom reside in Midland, would remain in the Permian Basin. He said Midland employees would be offered jobs in Houston or other areas and that the employees would decide for themselves whether or not to take employment elsewhere with Exxon.

"We expect to close the office by August 1997, and I am sure a lot of employees will be making up their minds during that time. They will be looking at the housing market and other factors, but we hope they would all elect to stay with Exxon."

Several Exxon employees were contacted, but none of them would talk about the consolidation or their employment plans.

Marvin Wynn, president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, said the loss of Exxon would be a blow to the Midland economy, but one that the city would survive. "It always hurts a city when you lose 185 families the economic caliber of Exxon employees, but we are now in better shape to take this kind of hit than we were in past years."

He called the move a reality lesson that demonstrated the need for a strong diversified economy.

Since Exxon has offered no severance package, it is likely that a large number of the Exxon employees will elect to move to Houston.

"Exxon does not have a surplus of employees; we want and need these employees and hope they will give the reassignment serious consideration."

He did note that the company was offering an enhanced relocation package that includes a house-hunting trip, moving expenses and buy-out of their present home.

Filling the 120,000 square feet that Exxon occupies at 23 Desta Drive will also leave a hole in the commercial real estate market. Mitch Malouf, vice president of leasing for ClayDesta Corp., which manages the three-building complex for a Las Vegas firm, said he was hopeful the space could be filled.

"We have been talking to several large telemarketing companies about moving to Midland; hopefully one of them will

Extra houses pose no problems, Realtors say

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

The relocation of 185 Exxon Co. U.S.A. employees from Midland could place as many as 135 additional homes on the local real estate market, according to area Realtors.

Fortunately, the number of homes for sale in Midland is the lowest that is has been since perhaps the very early 1980s, according to Joanne Langston, president of Langston Realtors, who has more than 30 years of experience in the local market.

Other Midland companies, especially in the medical field, are bringing people into the city, so demand should mediate the affects of a sudden increase of housing on the market, she said.

"Other companies are bringing in quite a few transferees," she said.

The homes being vacated by relocating Exxon employees are expected to be a cross section of the full range of houses, including homes at the upper end of the price range.

The demand for these higher-priced homes, however, is the greatest of all, and Realtors should have little trouble finding buyers, Ms. Langston explained.

Lee Culver, president of the Midland Board of Realtors, agreed, saying the market is sufficient to absorb the new homes without any major effect on area property values.

"I don't think it's a detriment at all," Culver said of the homes to be sold as Exxon employees leave the

Law enforcement personnel did first-rate job, Holt says

Editor's note: This is the second of a two-part series on key law-enforcement figures during the Fort Davis standoff.

Midland rancher Bobby Holt, a member of the Texas Public Safety Commission that oversees the Department of Public Safety, praised the lawmen involved in last week's standoff against Republic of Texas separatist leader Richard McLaren.

"I have never seen such a committed group in my life in law-enforcement. They are very committed."

Texas Ranger Capt. Barry Caver, the negotiator who commanded the operation to a peaceful conclusion, did a "great job," Holt said, as did Texas Ranger Jess Malone, who assisted in the negotiations with McLaren, 43, and his wife, Evelyn.

McLaren, a native Missourian, claims that Texas was illegally annexed in 1845 and is a land foreign to the United States. He, his wife and six fellow ROT members holed up in his trailer-house "embassy" at the Davis Mountains Resort beginning April 27.

The standoff began after an ROT trio kidnapped resort residents Joe and M.A. Rowe, apparently to avenge the arrest of another ROT member.

Caver's role was to "get the hostages released, take control of the 'embassy' area, and negotiate a surrender and serve warrants with no bloodshed," Holt said. "How he was going to accomplish became a day-to-day situation. That was accomplished."

His mission was accomplished Saturday when Mrs. McLaren, having developed trust with Caver and Malone, acquiesced to the pleading of her daughters and grandson.

In conforming to the DPS-Texas Ranger motto of "courtesy, service, protection,"

Mobutu agrees not to run for re-election

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — President Mobutu Sese Seko abandoned plans to run for re-election and called on his military Thursday to prepare Zaire for a vote. Still, he clung to his presidency and angrily rejected suggestions he was would not return to Zaire.

Mobutu made the pledge in a statement he and five other African leaders issued from neighboring Gabon.

Western diplomats, meanwhile, pushed for a peace settlement between Mobutu and rebel leader Laurent Kabila, with some expressing doubts that the ailing Zairian dictator would ever return to Zaire as he has promised.

"The next few days are critical for peace in Zaire," U.S. envoy Bill Richardson said in Paris. He briefed French diplomats after his nine-day shuttle diplomacy, which included several meetings with Kabila and Mobutu.

Richardson, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, refused to say whether Mobutu would go into exile, though he all but acknowledged the dictator's nearly 32-year reign was coming to an end.

"The ultimate solution will involve a transitional government — there's going to be a change in Zaire," Richardson said.

In a statement, the leaders of five regional Zairian allies called on the Zairian Armed Forces to prepare for elections and said Mobutu was too ill to contest the vote. Mobutu signed the statement, along with the presidents of Gabon, Congo, Equatorial Guinea, Central African Republic, Chad and the foreign minister of Cameroon.

The document, read aloud at a news conference, made no mention of Mobutu resigning or giving power to a transitional authority that would include Kabila, as the rebel chief has demanded.

When Mobutu was asked if he intended to return to Kinshasa this weekend, he replied angrily, "Why not?"

Zaire's information minister, Kin-Kiey Mulumba, dismissed speculation that Mobutu had used the sudden trip to Gabon to go into exile. He threatened to expel foreign media who had suggested as much.

South African government spokesman Parks Mankahlana also said claims Mobutu would not return to Kinshasa had been "largely exaggerated."

But Western diplomats and military observers said some high-ranking Zairian military officers close to Mobutu had already left the country or sent their families out, apparently fearing Mobutu's imminent fall. The latest to leave was Gen. Kpama Baramoto, former army chief of staff, according to officials speaking on condition of anonymity.

Another general, Etienne Nzimbi Ngbale, who commands Mobutu's presidential guard, has sent his family out of Zaire, they said.

Meanwhile, in the city of Kenge, about 115 miles east of the capital, aid agencies reported Wednesday that 300 people may have been killed in fighting there. There was no independent verification of the claim. The Red Cross said 10 of its local workers in Kenge were among the dead.

The rebels acknowledged Wednesday they were facing stiff resistance from government soldiers in Kenge, whose airport could serve as a staging ground for flying troops into Kinshasa to secure the international airport.

The government insists it remains in control of the area and denies rebel allegations that mercenaries from Angola's former rebel movement are assisting Mobutu, who backed the guerrillas during Angola's 20-year civil war.

South Africa, which hosted the first face-to-face meeting between Mobutu and Kabila on a South African ship off the Congolese coast on Sunday, sought to arrange another round of talks for Wednesday, despite speculation the rebels would be in control of Kinshasa by then.

Trial of Rwandan genocide suspects adjourned

ARUSHA, Tanzania (AP) — The trial of two Rwandan Hutus suspected in the genocide of more than a half-million Tutsis in 1994 was adjourned indefinitely Thursday.

The decision to adjourn the trial of Clement Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana was reached in a closed session of the U.N. International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda. Reasons for the delay were not disclosed.

The tribunal said the joint trial will resume on a date to be agreed by the prosecution and defense.

Kayishema, a former Hutu mayor of Kibuye in western Rwanda, and Ruzindana, a Hutu businessman in the same town, are charged with genocide and crimes against humanity.

Prior to the adjournment, a witness identified only as L to protect his identity testified that when Kayishema visited a stadium in Kibuye where Tutsis had sought refuge from the slaughter, he ordered a white man to stop giving them food.

Kayishema then ordered military police to shoot the Tutsis in the stadium, the witness said.

The shooting occurred six days after President Juvenal Habyarimana died when his plane was shot down over Kigali. It is not known who was responsible for the attack.

Fourteen witnesses have testified so far, but none against Ruzindana.

The tribunal has indicted 21 people, 13 of whom are in custody — 11 in the northern Tanzania town of Arusha, one in Switzerland and one in the United States.

Pope travels to land of war, religious diversity

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The image will be familiar: A frail Pope John Paul II celebrating Mass amid the rubble of battle.

After visiting Sarajevo last month, the pontiff travels this weekend to Beirut — another war-ravaged city that became a symbol of mindless strife.

His visit to Lebanon has an added dimension. Nearly half of the city's 3.2 million population is Christian, making it an outpost for the religion in the mostly Muslim Middle East.

John Paul has long has been trying to get there.

As early as 1982, he expressed a desire to go to Lebanon, "the center of so much suffering." But the country's 1975-90 civil war kept him away for years, and a planned 1994 trip was canceled because of a terrorist bombing of a church.

Vatican officials say the specific purpose of the visit this Saturday and Sunday is to deliver a formal message to Lebanese Catholics in response to the conclusions of a Lebanese bishops' meeting in 1995.

But the pontiff — who turns 77 on May 18 — also hopes to turn a symbol of warfare into one of religious harmony.

John Paul is going to Lebanon "to heal the wounds that can reopen, to move Lebanon toward what it was before, a symbol of religious co-habitation," papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said.

It will not be an easy task in a country of 18 separate confessions, where political power is distributed on the basis of faith, where a fifteen-year war fueled by religious rivalry left 150,000 people dead.

Bringing religions closer together has become one of the pope's principal goals in the waning years of the millennium. He has issued encyclicals on the issue, presided over conferences and met frequently with the leaders of other faiths.

John Paul also wants to send a strong signal of support to the Mideast region's declining Christian minority, now barely 1.6 percent, according to the Vatican.

The Christians in Lebanon, dominated by Maronite Catholics, have dipped from a slight pre-war majority to roughly 45 percent of the population. But they maintain the balance of political power according to a decades-old formula that divides control among the country's main religious groups.

It is unlikely that John Paul will explicitly respond to a demand by the Lebanese bishops for Israeli and Syrian troops to withdraw from Lebanese soil. Vatican officials say the pope privately has long been pushing for a withdrawal.

But a call for "national sovereignty" is likely, and that will hearten many Lebanese who resent the troops' presence.

Israeli forces control about 15 percent of southern Lebanon and 40,000 troops on Lebanese territory make Syria the real power in the country.

Lebanese authorities say 20,000 soldiers and police, about a third of the country's armed forces, will provide security as the pope holds an audience with 12,000 youth in the Christian heartland just north of Beirut and an outdoor Mass for 300,000 people in the city's downtown. He also plans meetings with the country's various religious leaders.

Seoul asks thrift campaign not to target imports

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Bowing to American and European pressure, South Korea agreed Thursday to intervene in a civilian-led, buy-local "austerity campaign" critics say is aimed at slowing foreign imports.

Civic groups denounced the government for giving in to foreign pressure and vowed to step up their campaign against foreign-made cars, whiskey and other imports.

The campaign — led by about 40 consumer and religious groups known for their anti-government views — targets the "extravagant spending" organizers blame for South Korea's record $22.7 billion trade deficit last year, and has received wide media support.

Until now, the government had also defended the campaign, denying U.S. and European contentions that it was using it and other invisible trade barriers to slow imports.

The government criticism came a day after U.S. Trade Representative Charlene Barshefsky expressed concern to South Korean Trade Minister Im Chang-ryol during talks in Washington.

The European Union is threatening to take its complaints to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. South Korea joined the Paris-based club of industrialized countries last year.

"The civic groups' campaign has deviated from its proper goal. They should not target imported goods," said Kim Sung-bae of Seoul's Finance and Economy Ministry.

He said the government would warn trade officials against bureaucratic delays and customs-clearance snags, which foreign trade partners claim are hampering their operations in South Korea.

Australian lawmaker rallies support, raises controversy with attacks

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — A former fish-and-chips shop owner has become Australia's most talked-about politician — particularly by journalists who ridicule her anti-Asian and anti-Aborigine rhetoric and critics who compare her to Hitler and the Ku Klux Klan.

Independent lawmaker Pauline Hanson, who maintains Asian immigrants steal jobs and refuse to assimilate, says she merely voices the secret wish of many white Australians: an end to Asian immigration and privileges for Australia's indigenous people, the Aborigines.

Hanson appeals to some middle-class Australians who blame immigrants for tough economic times, including relatively high 8.7 percent unemployment that reaches 30 percent in some rural areas where Hanson-mania flourishes.

Others, however, say her views threaten progress toward multiculturalism in a country that only in 1973 repealed a 100-year-old law effectively blocking Asian immigrants in favor of Europeans.

"She has given voice to the most strident views that have not had a mouthpiece up till this time. She is taking us back to the '50s," political analyst David Millikan said.

Hanson's maiden speech to Parliament in September — a call to keep out immigrants — attracted world attention. She claimed Australia will be swamped with Asians by 2040.

In her April book, "Pauline Hanson: The Truth," she warned that Australia's president in 2050 will be "Poona Li Hung," a "lesbian of Indian and Chinese background ... a part machine ... produced by a joint Korean-Indian-Chinese research team."

She also alleged Aborigines ate their babies and elderly like livestock, a claim that outraged aboriginal groups and that top Australian historians debunked. Aborigines, Hanson said, didn't deserve sympathy for their poor status in Australian society.

She recently sold her fish-and-chips shop to launch a political party, "Pauline Hanson's One Nation," which claims 40,000 members.

Australia eliminated its White Australia Policy in 1973, in part to find an economic and political home in Asia. White Australia today is a taboo concept, for many a shameful relic of the past. But Hanson, who declined an Associated Press interview request, is urging Australians to shed the guilt.

"I am fed up with political correctness," she said on Australian television. "People are in fear of opening their mouths for fear of being called racist."

Hanson's views, even if representing a minority, worry the government.

"Jeopardizing our $46 billion export trade with Asia is ripping up our bread ticket for the next century and ... that is dumb," Trade Minister Tim Fischer said.

Prime Minister John Howard, often criticized for not flat-out rebuking Hanson's views, did so Thursday.

"She is wrong when she suggests that Aboriginals are not disadvantaged. She is wrong when she says that Australia is in danger of being swamped by Asians," he said in a speech to the Australia-Asia Society.

"She is wrong to seek scapegoats for society's problems ... She is wrong when she claims that Australia is headed for civil war" between ethnic groups.

Others have been even more direct. After her book came out, Aboriginal lawyer Kevin Williams likened Hanson to Adolf Hitler. "It's the same insidious thing," he said.

In a radio debate, Les Malezer of the Foundation of Aboriginal and Islander Research Action said Hanson's group doesn't call itself the KKK, "but for all intents and purposes acts in the same way."

Australia has seen other extreme right-wingers but none so successful as Hanson. The 42-year-old divorcee is seen as the guileless woman-next-door who speaks from the heart. Hanson fumbles and her voice quivers with tension when she speaks before TV cameras.

Most of Australia's nearly 18 million people are white; about 1 million are Asian and 300,000 are Aborigine.

Reports of racial attacks on Asians more than doubled after Hanson's September speech, said Zita Antonios, head of Australia's race discrimination watchdog. Complaints in Sydney alone jumped from 10 to 15 a month to between 40 and 50, Antonios said.

Howard said Hanson's appeal lies in her ability to echo "concerns about the pace of change and the pressures that parts of our community are under."

Many whites, he said, feel threatened by increased ties with Asia and by Aborigines' efforts to regain their land and reassert their identity.

Envoy presses for more aid to Afghanistan

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The United Nations is working to get more food aid to Afghanistan, where millions of people face malnutrition because fighting has disrupted the spring harvest, a U.N. envoy said Thursday.

Fighting has raged on three fronts in northern, western and eastern Afghanistan between the Taliban Islamic militia and a northern-based coalition led by two warlords.

The fighting and late spring rains have disrupted the harvest, prompting fears that millions of people could soon face severe malnutrition, said the chief U.N. envoy to Afghanistan, Norbert Holl.

"I have asked the U.N. to take action on the food shortage in Afghanistan," Holl said after meeting with the Taliban leadership in Kabul. "It is wrong to think the world is closing its heart. Actually it is the opposite and that is what I told the Afghans."

The World Food Program already feeds more than 1 million people daily across Afghanistan, mostly through food-for-work programs, and Holl did not say how much more food aid he wanted to bring in.

During his meetings with Taliban leaders, Holl said he expressed concern over the strict Taliban policies that have banished women from the workplace and girls from the classroom.

"We have to keep telling the Taliban this is a big issue," he said. "... As I can see there is a certain flexibility among Taliban leaders."

MOVE: Local Exxon office to close by August locate here."

The closing of the Midland office brings to an end a 70-year relationship between the city of Midland and Exxon, which was one of the first major oil companies to locate an office in Midland. The company currently produces 63,000 barrels of liquids and 350 million cubic feet of gas from fields in West Texas, New Mexico, North Dakota, Wyoming and onshore California every day.

When the consolidation is complete there will be three production organizations in Houston, New Orleans and Thousand Oaks, Calif., which handles offshore California.

The consolidated Houston Production Organization will manage 150,000 barrels of oil and 900 million cubic feet of natural gas daily.

HOMES: Realtors say property values should hold city.

"I don't think we'll see any wild fluctuation in values," Ms. Langston agreed.

"We sure will miss the payroll," Culver added.

As of 4 p.m. Thursday, Ms. Langston's real estate office, among others, had already received calls from these relocating citizens, wanting to put their homes up for sale.

There could be some increase in the number of days it takes for a given home to sell, Ms. Langston said. But this also depends upon the competitiveness of the listing, she added.

Those homes that are more competitive, in better condition and offered at a lower price, will move faster than others, she said.

But overall values should remain relatively constant, and the lag time in sales should dissipate over time.

"The market always corrects itself," she said.

LAW: Holt compliments officers' performance

both Caver and Malone greeted her with their hats off, said Holt, who, as a DPS commissioner, witnessed the standoff and surrender.

"Caver took his hat off. (Malone) took his hat off, and they (Malone and Mrs. McLaren) kind of hugged," Holt recalled Thursday in his Midland office. "She gave (attorney, Terence O'Rourke) a hug. She looked very calm."

Holt noted that the negotiations had fallen "apart many times," especially at mid-week, but that Caver persisted despite McLaren's "ramblings."

Holt noted that Caver and Malone had "talked to Evelyn (McLaren) a lot. She was very strong, very sincere. She finally gave herself up" under conditions of an agreement, which apparently included that she and the others, especially McLaren, would be treated with dignity while in custody.

Holt noted the urgency of keeping up the rhetoric during the standoff. "That rhetoric was communicating to them. We started building trust between Jess (Malone) and Evelyn (McLaren). Rick (McLaren) would hang the phone up.

"It began to look like things were going to be serious when communications broke off," Holt said of the mid-week crisis. "When we couldn't communicate by that means, we couldn't negotiate. When we couldn't negotiate, that meant other options, forcible options. We didn't want to give up on the negotiations."

Following Mrs. McLaren's surrender, the others, except for two ROT militants, surrendered.

McLaren signed a "cease-fire" agreement with the Texas Rangers. He had asked for United Nations sanctions and a neutral-nations intervention.

"They call themselves 'prisoners of war,'" Holt said. "They were standing on their 'own soil' in a 'separate country.'"

Of the two ROT members who bolted and fled into the rugged and steep terrain, one — Mike Matson — was killed by a tracking Texas Department of Criminal Justice guard after the cornered fugitive killed a tracking hound-dog and fired at a hovering DPS helicopter.

"He was supposed to be Rick's bodyguard," Holt said. "He should have followed Rick out (in surrendering)."

The other fugitive, Richard Keys III, is still at large. "You can survive (in the wilds) if you know what you are doing," said Holt, who, as a rancher, is familiar with the Davis Mountains terrain, wildlife — from rattlesnakes to mountain lions — and its cattle country.

The group had at least 10 hunting rifles with hundreds of rounds and had booby-trapped the "embassy" and environs. Before the surrender and inventory of the "embassy" and its grounds, "we had no idea of their (warring) capabilities" or their manpower, Holt said.

"We started getting people on peaks so they could observe (with telescopes) and could almost see the color of (their) eyes from 1,800 yards from the actual compound."

"I am real proud of all of them," Holt said of the Texas lawmen. They are "capable, trained people."

Holt cited "the professionalism and the support" that Caver elicited from his "Rangers (30 of the DPS' hundred-plus Rangers participated in the operation) and from the DPS troopers and speciality people to contain and take control of the area."

Among lawmen whom Holt cited for carrying out their assignments were the SWAT (Special Weapons Assault Team) units from the Midland County Sheriff's Office and from the DPS. They were on the front-line with weapons and armament.

All of the law-enforcement agencies with their specialized assets "worked in unity (and) every one of them were experts in some field" — from helicopter pilots and SWAT members to barricade guards and negotiators, Holt said.

He also cited the residents of the Davis Mountains Resort who supported lawmen in carrying out their duty. "We are appreciative to them for cooperating and helping us."

ROT president Johnson wants vote for independence

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

ODESSA — As the eyes of the nation watched self-styled Republic of Texas chief "ambassador" Richard McLaren engage in a standoff with law enforcement officials in Fort Davis, other members watched their organization's credibility fade.

Johnson

"In some areas of the state, we have a lot of work to do," said David Johnson, president of the separatist movement that maintains Texas was never legally annexed by the United States and is a separate nation. "They still think we're a bunch of redneck good old boys who like to drink beer and shoot guns and not have any laws."

He emphasized that McLaren had been impeached, removed from office and had no official standing with the Republic of Texas and neither does Archie Lowe of Rice, another Republic of Texas member who claims to be president of the republic.

Johnson told media gathered at his Big J mobile home dealership that his is the legitimate Republic of Texas because the council members are the original core members who helped found the council when the movement began in 1995.

He denied the group is involved in the militia movement and vowed that his efforts to make Texas an independent nation would be political, without the liens, lawsuits and threats McLaren used in Fort Davis.

"I'll never be part of anything violent," he said. "As my father always said, two wrongs don't make a right."

And if any republic citizen decides to perform unlawful acts, Johnson said, "we'll try them in court and revoke their citizenship."

His goal, he said, is to build a statewide grassroots movement of Texans who want to see the question of independence put to a public vote in the next two years.

If, in two years, a vote is held and the movement is defeated, he said, "we'll go away. I didn't want to be president of the Republic of Texas. I want to play golf. I have a business to run, I have grandchildren, I have a life like you do."

But, he said, "I'm trying to do my small part to get the freedoms back that we used to have."

He plans to build this grassroots movement through contact with media and business people throughout the state. Already, he said, he has been asked to speak before a group of 150 influential Corpus Christi businessmen next week.

If officials refuse to hold a state referendum on the issue, he said, "The people have to force the government to make that happen. If they refuse, will we see another Tiananmen Square?"

Because they will be obeying the law — Johnson said he has a state driver's license, state inspection stickers and license tags — Attorney General Dan Morales' office won't have any reason to arrest him.

Morales' office Wednesday sued Republic member Carolyn Carney of Bulverde for failing to pay $32,000 in sales tax.

Dallas authorities arrested member Mark A. Hernandez Wednesday in connection with a federal indictment and charged him with conspiracy, mail fraud and aiding and abetting in connection to alleged attempts by McLaren to pass $1.8 billion in bogus financial instruments.

Donald Varnell was arrested earlier this week on two counts of contempt of court and is a defendant in Morales' civil lawsuit against the Republic of Texas and 25 members.

He has been found in contempt for issuing bogus documents to state financial institutions requesting they turn over state assets to the Republic's treasury and disobeying an order to appear in court to answer the initial contempt charge.

Johnson said his group will seek Varnell's release in state court.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Phony liens bill heads for governor's desk

Associated Press

AUSTIN — A bill designed to end the "paper terrorism" of groups such as the Republic of Texas is headed to Gov. George W. Bush.

The Texas House gave final approval Thursday to the bill that would make it illegal to file phony property liens. If signed into law by Bush, the measure also would give those victimized by such fake documents an easier method of fighting them.

Lawmakers were careful not to single out the so-called Republic of Texas, but they made clear they want to put an end to the use of the fraudulent liens that have been a popular weapon of the separatist organization.

Property liens, real or not, can make it difficult for owners to sell their property or list it as an asset. The liens claim that money is owed to a third party who could take possession of the property if not repaid.

Members of the Republic group, which contends the state should be an independent nation, are accused of filing hundreds of phony liens against government officials, Texas businesses and residents.

Attorney General Dan Morales has been fighting a long-running legal battle with the group over the documents, and a state district judge last year ordered the organization to stop filing fraudulent court papers.

Property liens, real or not, can make it difficult for owners to sell their property or list it as an asset.

Leaders of the group have said they don't recognize the judge's actions.

Under the bill sponsored by Rep. Allen Hightower, D-Huntsville, bill, filing a false lien would be a crime punishable by up to two years in state jail and a $10,000 fine. The bill also would make it a Class A misdemeanor to issue a false court complaint, judgment or summons.

The bill also would allow private citizens to sue in civil court if such documents were fraudulently placed on their property.

The phony liens bill is HB1185.

duction of the letter, which makes a passing criticism of the FBI's shooting of a white separatist's family in Ruby Ridge, Idaho. It also makes reference to McVeigh being on a "secret list in Brussels" and lauds the courage of the patriots who signed the Declaration of Independence.

The letter says McVeigh expected his health to start deteriorating in a year or two — there was no explanation why — and says: 'I might as well do some good when I can be 100 percent effective."

"Hell, you only live once," it says. "I know and you know it's better to burn out than rot away in some nursing home."

This was the second letter McVeigh was said to have sent shortly before the bombing that spoke of his changing attitude. Jennifer McVeigh testified that her brother wrote that his anti-government fervor had moved beyond the propaganda stage and "was now in the action stage."

The latest letter is signed "the desert rat," and it makes reference to a "desert wind" making it difficult to write. Prosecutors say McVeigh, a Gulf War veteran, was in Arizona at the time.

The letter appeared to be a response to an earlier letter or conversation with Strider. Contacted at her home in Caro, Mich., Strider said she couldn't comment because she has been subpoenaed to testify.

Also unclear was who "the bastards" were. Prosecutors contend McVeigh was driven to bomb the federal building by rage over the government sieges on Waco and Ruby Ridge.

McVeigh, 29, could get the death penalty if convicted of murder and conspiracy in the truck bombing, the deadliest act of terrorism on U.S. soil.

Nicholas, a factory worker and apartment landlord from Vassar, Mich., testified he met McVeigh in 1992 while working on a farm owned by the family of co-defendant Terry Nichols.

U.S. envoy Ross sets stage for peace talks

JERUSALEM (AP) — U.S. envoy Dennis Ross shuttled between Jerusalem and Gaza on Thursday, trying to defuse tensions preventing the resumption of Israeli-Palestinian peace talks. He came away saying "difficult problems" kept the two sides apart.

Ross spoke after meeting separately with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

A spokesman for Arafat, Marwan Kanafani, said Palestinians were sticking to the condition that Israel must change its settlement policy before talks could resume.

"Nothing can progress while settlements still continue, because this issue has not only caused a crisis in the talks but will be the reason for the destruction of the peace process in its entirety," Kanafani said.

The Palestinians are insisting that Israel halt construction of the new Jewish neighborhood in Jerusalem whose ground-breaking led to the breakdown of the negotiations in March. The 6,500-home housing complex, Har Homa, is in a sector of Jerusalem claimed by the Palestinians as a future capital.

Palestinians said the construction violated peace accords by changing the situation in Jerusalem before the city's final status was settled in negotiations.

In several weeks of violence that followed, eight Palestinians died in clashes and three Israeli women were killed in a suicide bombing in Tel Aviv.

Israel insists Palestinians crack down on the Islamic militants blamed for the bombing and for two other failed attacks, and also resume full security cooperation.

On Tuesday, Israeli President Ezer Weizman met Arafat and announced afterward that they agree to reestablish full security ties — an important step forward.

However, a meeting scheduled for Thursday night between Israel's Shin Bet security chief Ami Ayalon and Palestinian intelligence chief Mohammed Dahlan was postponed until Friday. No reason was given for the delay.

Before meeting with Ross for the second time Thursday, Netanyahu said the test of the security meeting would be "whether it would lead to direct cooperation between the two sides and fighting terror."

Ross was expected to try to persuade the two sides to agree to tradeoffs such as an Israeli freeze on settlement construction in return for Arafat resuming the intelligence sharing.

Ross said he first needed to clear the tense atmosphere.

"We are looking to see what can be done to begin to restore confidence. That is really critical," Ross told reporters. "There are difficult problems that we have to overcome."

Arafat said "all matters" were still under discussion and stressed that all security meetings would be under U.S. auspices.

"It is not bilateral cooperation, it is trilateral, with the coordination of the United States," Arafat said.

Yeltsin: NATO dispute most serious since Cuba

MOSCOW (AP) — Boris Yeltsin warned Thursday that NATO expansion into Eastern Europe presents the most serious American challenge to Russia since the Cuban missile crisis.

Some Russian nationalists said the Russian leader should threaten the West with nuclear missiles — as Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev did during the 1962 crisis.

Russia bitterly opposes plans to include former Soviet satellites in the alliance, but tacitly acknowledges it cannot stop the move. Yeltsin, under tough criticism from nationalist and communist opponents at home, has been trying to limit the NATO expansion.

"Since Khrushchev's Cuban crisis, there hasn't been such a sharp issue in relations between Russia and the United States, which concerns Russia's interests to the degree that everyone should think about it, including Americans and Europeans," Yeltsin said.

The 1962 crisis was triggered by the deployment of Soviet nuclear weapons on Cuba. Both sides considered the possibility of a nuclear confrontation, but eventually the missiles were removed.

NATO wants an agreement with Russia before its July 8-9 summit in Madrid, where it plans to name its first new members from Central and Eastern Europe. Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic are believed to be the leading candidates.

"It's essential for us to take part in all NATO's decision-making ... They also mustn't deploy weapons and military hardware, especially nuclear, in newly-accepted NATO members," Yeltsin said Thursday.

Negotiators have agreed to create a new Russia-NATO council that will allow Moscow to have a direct voice — but not a vote — in decisions made by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

But differences still remain on military aspects of the agreement. NATO says it has no plans to move nuclear weapons or combat troops to the territories of new members, but will not rule out such a move in the future.

NATO also won't promise not to build military infrastructure on these territories, including airfields, communications and air defense installations.

Yeltsin said if Russian conditions are met, he will go to Paris on May 27 to sign an agreement with NATO.

At the latest round of talks this week between Russian Foreign Minister Yevgeny Primakov and NATO Secretary-General Javier Solana, the two sides reported progress but acknowledged problems. The negotiations will resume Tuesday in Moscow.

House passes bill ordering adult trial for teens accused of violent crimes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alarmed by the "brutality and viciousness" of juvenile crime, the House overwhelmingly passed a get-tough bill Thursday ordering adult trials for violent Americans barely into their teens.

The bill, if enacted, would bring about a sweeping change in federal handling of juvenile crime, ending the notion that violent offenders of 15, 14 or even 13 should be treated as youngsters and their offenses considered childhood misdeeds.

The vote was 286-132, with 77 Democrats joining 209 Republicans in supporting the crackdown. Voting against it were 122 Democrats, nine Republicans and one independent.

Americans are "shocked by the brutality and viciousness of crimes that are being committed by 13- and 14- and 15-year-olds, and they're equally shocked when they see a system that treats these juveniles as something less than the predators they seem to be," said Rep. George Gekas, R-Pa.

Both the Clinton administration and the Republican-led Congress wanted to impose severe treatment on some juvenile offenders. But the administration did not support this measure, largely because it did not include money for crime prevention and did not require that child safety locks be provided with firearm purchases.

The issue now goes to the Senate, where the Judiciary Committee is preparing to work on a bill by Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, that also envisions more adult trials of juvenile offenders.

The House bill concerns federal crimes. But it also tries to persuade states to transform their own juvenile justice systems by offering $1.5 billion in incentive grants over three years.

To be eligible for the money, states would have to, among other things, try 15-year-olds as adults for serious violent crimes, require that open criminal records be established for minors after a second offense and ensure there are escalating penalties for every juvenile crime.

"The essence of what we're doing today is to try to fix a juvenile justice system so the very bad are removed from society because they commit the most heinous of crimes that we have here," said Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., the bill's chief author. "We need to be tough with them."

Rep. Sue Myrick, R-N.C., said that as mayor of Charlotte, N.C., "I attended more funerals of 13-, 14- and 15-year-old children than I care to remember. Senseless murders. And young people who did these things that I would talk to afterwards had absolutely no remorse for their actions. This bill helps our system deal with these problems."

Even many Democrats who criticized the legislation because it contained no money for prevention or intervention efforts supported the bill. Rep. Bob Etheridge, D-N.C., said: "I'm all for locking up violent criminals."

Under the bill, adult trials of youths as young as 14 would become routine for federal crimes including murder, rape, aggravated assault, armed robbery and major drug offenses — and conspiracy to commit those crimes. To keep such a case in juvenile court, the attorney general would have to certify that public safety interests would be best served by doing so.

Thirteen-year-olds could also be transferred to adult federal court if the attorney general approved the move.

The administration had sought legislation to clear away legal roadblocks to trying juveniles as adults, but it wanted more flexibility in letting prosecutors decide.

While the Clinton administration's proposed bill and McCollum's bill had much in common, the administration opposed the GOP legislation in part because it lacked money for prevention and intervention.

Republicans said that would be handled in other legislation, and the House defeated, 224-200, a Democratic substitute that would have devoted 60 percent of the $1.5 billion to prevention.

Many Democrats joined with Republicans to overwhelmingly defeat other Democratic amendments that would have weakened the bill's focus on tough enforcement.

North Korea says U.S. soldier alive

WASHINGTON (AP) — An American reported to have deserted his Army post in South Korea in 1965 is alive and well in the communist North, North Korean officials have told his sister.

"I have to believe them. Yes, I believe them," said Pat Harrell, of Roanoke Rapids, N.C. Her brother, Charles Robert Jenkins, is among four U.S. soldiers reported to have defected to North Korea in the 1960s and thought still to be alive.

The Pentagon disclosed in January 1996 that it believed the four were living in North Korea, but the Korean government had not confirmed it until now.

Ms. Harrell said she and an American television reporter met Wednesday with North Korean government officials in New York, and they assured her that her brother is in good health. She was told he has a North Korean wife and is a citizen of that country.

"They said he has children at the university there," she said in a telephone interview Thursday. There has been no word from Jenkins since he was reported absent without leave from his Army unit in South Korea on Jan. 5, 1965, Ms. Harrell said.

The Army filed court-martial charges against Jenkins after determining he participated in North Korean propaganda broadcasts in the 1960s in which he said he enjoyed life in the North and urged U.S. soldiers in the South to desert.

An internal Defense Department report made public last year said a North Korean defector reported having met Jenkins in a coffee shop in the capital, Pyongyang, and that Jenkins said "he is now ready to return to America."

The North Korean officials Ms. Harrell saw are attending meetings in New York this week with Defense Department officials on American efforts to account for servicemen missing from the Korean War. Ms. Harrell's meeting was separate from the official agenda and was arranged by Delores Alfond, president of the National Alliance of Families.

Working moms happy but think theirs did better

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saundra Watson is a successful professional who has raised a well-adjusted 18-year-old son.

"We really have a lot of juggling to do and unfortunately ... our children suffer somewhat because of what we have to do ... to maintain a living," said Watson, 42, an accounting manager. "We're doing a worse job than our mothers did."

Watson is not alone in thinking that way. According to a study released Thursday, ahead of Mother's Day weekend, 56 percent of the women surveyed think their mothers were better parents than they are.

But on a more cheerful note, most mothers said they were mostly or very satisfied with the job they're doing raising their children.

The study by the Pew Research Center questioned 1,101 women, 74 percent of them mothers. Of the total sample, 42 percent were employed full time, 15 percent part time, 21 percent retired and 22 percent not employed outside the home. The study has a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

The researchers found that the problems and challenges faced by 1990s moms are related to changes in the lives of women and the evolution of the American family.

According to the survey, a large proportion of the women favored more-traditional family settings.

Only 17 percent said most divorced couples who split custody of their children can do a good job of parenting and fewer than 30 percent said most single mothers, stepmothers and couples in which both parents work full time can do a good job.

Despite the guilt, the self-recrimination and the worry, Watson says, being a mother "is definitely worth it."

GOP returns foreign donations

WASHINGTON (AP) — After months of railing against Democrats for taking foreign money, the Republican Party returned overseas contributions of its own — $122,400 that a Hong Kong company funneled through a Florida subsidiary.

In announcing the decision Thursday, Republican National Committee Chairman Jim Nicholson said party fund-raisers believed the donations in 1991, 1992 and 1993 were from an independent U.S. company until news stories raised questions about Young Brothers Development USA. Attorneys then confirmed that the money donated came from abroad, he said.

Nicholson stressed that the amount paled in comparison to the $3 million in tainted contributions the Democratic National Committee has pledged to return.

Still, Democrats were quick to crow over the turnabout.

"For months, the Republican Party has attacked the DNC while it concealed its own receipt of foreign money," Democratic co-chairman Roy Romer said. "It is clearer now than ever before that Republican fund-raising efforts targeted foreign money."

The refunded money included $10,000 from Young Brothers routed to the Republicans' Senate campaign division, which has capitalized on the Democrats' woes with a fund-raising letter declaring the Clinton White House was "sold for illegal foreign cash" from "Red China."

The GOP's House fund-raising committee also said it would return $10,000 raised at the 1994 congressional dinner. House committee spokesman Rich Galen said Thursday the contribution would be investigated in "due time" but within hours boasted that his committee was returning the questionable money "instantly, unlike the Democrats."

Democratic Party leaders said the Republicans should also clear the books of a $2.2 million loan guarantee the same Coral Gables, Fla., subsidiary of Young Brothers provided to a nonprofit group set up and largely financed by the Republican Party.

The National Policy Forum used the bank loan to repay some of its debts to the party just before the 1994 election. The forum then defaulted on $500,000 of the loan, leaving Young Brothers to pay the bank the rest.

Recently departed RNC Chairman Haley Barbour, who also founded the policy forum, continued to defend the deal Thursday after the Republican Party conceded that Young Brothers' donations came from Hong Kong.

In a letter to the forum's former board members, Barbour noted that the group operated as a tax-exempt nonprofit, which could legally accept foreign money.

A spokesman said Barbour had been advised by his attorneys not to comment further because the forum's documents have been subpoenaed by congressional investigators.

A group of House Democrats wrote Attorney General Janet Reno on Thursday, asking her to add to the Justice Department's fund-raising investigation the Young Brothers donations to the Republican Party and to the tax-exempt group, to see whether election or tax laws were violated.

Sen. Fred Thompson, R-Tenn., chairman of the committee investigating fund-raising abuses, said he would approve new subpoenas for Young Brothers documents to explore the company's relationship with the policy forum.

Thompson also said his committee planned to issue a similar subpoena to the AFL-CIO to investigate its 1996 election activities. The labor federation spent $35 million on ads targeting congressional races.

Nicholson rejected comparison to the Democratic problems, saying Democrats were only trying "to spread the blame for their own fund-raising scandal by claiming 'everybody does it.'"

Arkansas chemical plant blast kills 3, injures 16

WEST HELENA, Ark. (AP) — An explosion rocked a chemical packaging plant near the Mississippi River on Thursday and three firefighters were killed battling a pesticide-fueled blaze that followed.

Sixteen people were injured in the explosion at BPS Inc., which packages agricultural pesticides and herbicides, state police spokesman Wayne Jordan said. The area of the explosion was inaccessible hours after the fire and Jordan said the number of casualties could rise.

A smoldering bag of pesticide caught fire and triggered the explosion shortly after 1 p.m., the state Office of Emergency Services said.

The chemicals involved were azinphosmethyl, methyomyl and thiophante, all considered poisonous, according to Becky Allison, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Pollution Control and Ecology.

Doctors were giving firefighters and local residents atropine, an antidote to ward off the effects of the poisons, said Dr. David Bourne of the state Department of Health. The shots would be required every half-hour as long as exposure to the fumes continued, he said.

Smoke billowed above the plant, forced the evacuation of a hospital about a mile away and drifted southeast across the river into Mississippi 60 miles south of Memphis, Tenn.

Some 44 patients and 150 employees were taken from the Helena Regional Medical Center to a community college campus in town and others were heading to a hospital in Clarksdale, Miss., a half-hour away.

The industrial park where the plant is located also was evacuated and others in Helena and West Helena, with populations totaling about 18,000, were told to stay inside and shut their windows and doors.

Taxation's march merits concern

Breathe a sigh of relief — a temporary sigh of relief, that is.

Today is "Tax Freedom Day," according to the Tax Foundation, the day of this year on which the average American has earned enough money to pay all the taxes he owes to the local, state and federal governments. All those accumulated earnings in 1997 have gone to fuel the machinery of government.

OK, a taxpayer may say, but we need all these governmental services. So what's the problem?

The problem is that "Tax Freedom Day" keeps getting later with each passing year. In other words, it takes a taxpayer longer each year to pay his taxes. What's more, with the United States' progressive federal income tax system, the more income Americans make, the more of it the government takes. A person doesn't get ahead by working longer or harder; the government just takes a larger bite of what he makes.

In fact, taxation's march was halted and actually pushed back during the late 1980s and early 1990s, says the Tax Foundation, reflecting the success of the tax cut of 1986. But along came President Clinton's controversial 1993 budget with the largest single tax increase in history, and taxation resumed its strident march.

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, who represents a segment of Midland in the Congress, addressed the tax burden recently, saying, "Federal overspending has reached the point where 'Tax Freedom Day' would move forward an additional six days this year alone if the federal government raised taxes enough to pay all its bills without borrowing in 1997.

"I support a modified flat tax proposal that would make the tax system fairer, while preserving tax deductions for home mortgages and charitable contributions."

Is the forward march of taxation a reason for concern? Well, consider that the more of your income that goes for taxation, the less you have to spend of your own free will. Are you giving up a portion of your freedom by allowing government to control so much of your money?

Obviously taxes are important; they are the way in which we finance operation of our government. But too much taxation — and particularly progressive taxation — can be a dangerous to the nation's economic health.

Smith says the answer to the continuing advance of "Tax Freedom Day" is that Congress must reduce taxes and balance the federal budget.

We agree.

Odd bedfellows oppose 'volunteer' bill

WASHINGTON — It's not often that one finds liberal Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr., D-Ill., aligned with right-wing talkmeister Oliver North. But GOP leaders have managed to do just that with a housing bill that perverts the spirit of volunteerism that echoed from Philadelphia last week.

Anderson

The bill, which is being debated this week, includes a provision to force residents of public housing to "volunteer" at least eight hours per month in return for their rent subsidies or else face eviction.

This provoked outrage from some Democrats, including Jackson, who wonders why the poorest of the poor are the only ones being forced to work for free in exchange for their government handouts. Comparing the provision to "slavery," Jackson tried in vain to get it eliminated from the bill.

"I want to clear up a couple of assumptions," Jackson later told us. "First, public housing is not free housing, but affordable housing. They pay rent. ... (yet it) requires mandatory volunteerism in ways that we don't require of anyone else who receives a federal subsidy."

Rep. Rick Lazio, R-N.Y., the moderate, third-term Republican who's managing the bill, says it's hardly a burden to require able-bodied residents of public housing to give a couple of hours each week to their communities. It's hardly slavery, after all, when recipients get a rent subsidy in return. With waiting lists for public housing getting longer every year, surely there are thousands of people out there who wouldn't mind scrubbing graffiti in exchange for an affordable place to live.

We agree. But why stop there? After all, most of those who are on the government dole can hardly be considered poor. Uncle Sam subsidizes everything from farmers in Iowa to McDonald's executives who want to peddle hamburgers overseas.

Peanut farmers, for example, have feasted at the public's expense for decades. In a cartel system that would make any mafioso green with envy, the government grants a domestic monopoly to a lucky few "quota" holders, who are then allowed to sell their peanuts in America at a guaranteed price that is more than twice the world market rate.

Should these farmers fail to find buyers, the government buys the peanuts, again at twice the market price. Not surprisingly, more than two-thirds of the quota holders have opted out of the actual peanut business, choosing instead to sell their quotas to farmers at a steep markup.

Thus, America is left with hundreds of idle "peanut farmers," who sit at home reaping the benefits of a federal subsidy they work diligently to protect every year. Why not put them to work in the inner cities, or at least make them trim the greens at their country clubs?

THE MOUTH THAT ROARS — Our nomination for hypocrite of the month (if not the year): Ed Rollins.

The chubby political consultant and power broker, who is now a television blabbermouth, was heard recently on CNBC opining on the never-ending series of White House scandals and the failure of Attorney General Janet Reno to appoint a special prosecutor.

"I'm convinced before this thing is over she'll be back to wrestling, or she'll name a special prosecutor," Rollins offered. "I think when Janet Reno leaves office, she's going to be unemployable. I think she's damaged any integrity and credibility she might have had."

Let's consider the source of this lecture on "integrity" and "credibility." Rollins is the same man who boasted that he helped secure the 1993 election victory of New Jersey Gov. Christine Todd Whitman by spending $500,000 in "walking around money" to bribe black ministers into keeping their flocks away from the polls (he later apologized, and claimed he "fabricated" those accounts). He's also the same man who abandoned his Republican roots in favor of Ross Perot in 1992 — only to savage the tiny Texan when the relationship soured after a few weeks.

Of course, Rollins' ethical transgressions rendered him far from unemployable. Months after the Whitman debacle, Rollins was earning fat fees as a consultant for several GOP politicians, including dim-witted California millionaire Michael Huffington, who spent $28 million of his own money in a losing effort against Democratic senator Dianne Feinstein.

All of which goes to prove that in the ethical swamp that is Washington, there is no such thing as "unemployable" — a fact Rollins knows better than most.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

McLaren should have approached EEOC

Now if Richard McLaren, the biggest nut in three counties, maybe four, had only applied to the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission for relief!

Murchison

Might not the commission have listened with interest as he outlined his grievances?

"So, Mr. McLaren, you say Texas is persecuting you? Ummhmmm. Won't let you have your own, independent Republic of Texas, is that it? Won't put up with your filing false liens against other people's property? Ummm-hmmmm ... "

The poor jerk may have created trouble aplenty for the various victims of his illegal property liens. Still, all this may not exceed in aggregate the trouble the EEOC is inflicting with its new rules on mental illness: rules that the McLaren affair serves oddly enough to highlight.

Pursuant to the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990, the EEOC is telling employers — in flagrant detail — how and when they must accommodate employees with mental problems.

To satirize the EEOC's directive would be cheap and easy. No, thanks. Mental illness isn't funny. But a federal agency telling employers how to deal with it? That's not funny either. What it is, is authoritarian, unconstitutional, out of line — and a positive inspiration to folks like friend McLaren who look at such goings-on and observe, not unreasonably, lemme out of here! How, um, mentally challenged must one be in order to wish government stripped of the power to specify that a cashier with dry mouth, owing to psychiatric medication, be permitted a reconfiguration of his break schedule?

I mean, maybe he should be. But how in the name of James Madison did we get to this point — the federal government prescribing the frequency of work breaks for cashiers?

Do you see — kinda see — how people like friend McLaren can — possibly, sometimes — be driven to the extraordinary assertion of the right to be left alone?

Why, glory be, I think I've just touched on a likely defense for friend McLaren. Not guilty, your honor: It wasn't my fault; the government drove me to it.

Cashiers-with-dry-mouth? There's more. A reckless chauffeur with bipolar disorder is entitled to consideration, the EEOC says. Though — wait! — his employer is entitled to make "disability-related inquiries," thanks to "a reasonable belief, based on objective evidence, that the employee will pose a direct threat to himself or others. ... " Oh, thank you, thank you, esteemed commissioners — an employer, without trampling on the Constitution, may actually inquire into whether one of his employees threatens life and limb?

Supposedly, as our nation's chief magistrate memorably said, "The era of big government is over." Oh, yeah? What about such astounding feats of regulation as the foregoing? What about the rest of the Americans With Disabilities Act, which prescribes (among much else) the kind of restrooms new public buildings must contain? What about the Family Leave Act, detailing time-off policies for new mothers?

If the era of big government is over, how odd that government looks bigger than ever. There still exists, apparently, a sizable demand for government to do Good Things, constitutional niceties be goshdurned.

Observe: All these Good Things are too costly for a government striving to balance the budget. Rooseveltian "We'll-Do-It-All-For-You" hubris is out of fashion. In fashion is off-loading duties onto the private sector, saying to businessmen, here, you do it. And pay for it, naturally. Better a dry-mouth cashier than another welfare client.

Volunteerism, Internet links for high schools — Bill Clinton bombards us with teeny-weeny ideas for improving life. He doesn't tell us what they cost. Nor does the trail end on Clinton's doorstep. What president promoted and signed the Americans With Disabilities Act? George Bush.

In both political parties, over and over, the lust to run other people's lives trumps common sense. If some day a Republic of Texas, or of anything else, gets established, you suppose they'll be wanting immigrants?

ANOTHER VIEW

Green-minded Zedillo needs trust, respect

President Clinton visits Mexico this week to discuss evergreen topics — drugs, immigration and trade. Though Mexico has been high on the Clinton administration agenda, it took the second term for the U.S. president to visit the Mexican capital where his welcome is sure to be at once warm and wary.

Though the geographic separation between the two countries is minimal, there is a history of suspicion and mistrust that is positively but slowly yielding as a trade relationship continues to grow. Nonetheless, the relationship between the Mexicano and the Yankee has a way to go before it is fully evolved.

Some Americans see Mexico as a subservient source of cheap vacations and even cheaper labor. Others see Mexico as a source of social ills bred by illegal immigration and an endless flow of illegal drugs. Some Mexicans see the United States as a hypocritical bully — denouncing illegal immigration while immigrants clean North American pools and pick North American crops, decrying drug trafficking while eagerly snorting, smoking, ingesting and injecting narcotics. ...

The thorniest issues are environmental. The Clinton administration is the greenest in recent history, and Mexican President Ernesto Zedillo said last week that "at heart, I am a very green president."

Good. Because measurable progress needs to be made in cleaning up the border areas. It is not a matter of aesthetics, it is a matter of health. Air and water pollution do not respect boundaries. ...

The two presidents have plenty to talk about when they meet this week. It is heartening that Zedillo and Clinton are building on a platform of mutual respect. But their challenge is to lay a solid enough foundation that the respect can be built upon by the presidents who succeed them.

— Austin American-Statesman

CHARLEY REESE

Community formed on self-reliance, not volunteerism

The Presidents' Summit for America's Future was an orgy of collectivism, as far removed from the American spirit and tradition as a convention of Marxists.

Reese

It's awkward to criticize a photo opportunity buried under so much sugary do-good-ism, but nevertheless, you should be clear as to what the real message of that summit is.

Underneath all that rhetorical goo is the collectivist message that the people who cause problems are not responsible for the problems they cause — you are. Quite explicitly, the message is that in addition to taking responsibility for your life and your family, you must also assume responsibility for everyone else's life. That's in the tradition of the collectivist philosophy.

On the other hand, the American tradition is that everyone assumes responsibility for himself and for his own family. Then there aren't any social problems. But was any word uttered at the summit, chiding the irresponsible for being irresponsible? Oh, no the responsible were chided for not being responsible for the irresponsible.

"People of all ages and from all walks of life must claim society's problems as their own," said the summit's declaration. What that means is, you don't win. No matter how hard you work, no matter how responsible you are, no matter how much taxes you pay you will be considered a failure and a shirker because of someone else's failure. That's about as airtight a no-win deal as you will find.

Let us all gather, the summiteers were in effect saying, and lay one gigantic guilt trip on the hard-working, responsible, tax-paying Americans by making them responsible for all the people who don't work, who are irresponsible and who live off other people's taxes.

They talked about volunteerism, but just wait; you'll see that what they mean is compulsory volunteerism. In the inverted, perverted world of collectivism, they talk about what novelist George Orwell dubbed "newsspeak."

This perverted form of collectivist-liberalism refuses to acknowledge virtue. The good people in this country who stay in school, who work their buns off, who don't commit crimes and don't draw welfare, accomplish all they accomplish by expending huge amounts of time and energy.

Implicit in the summit's message, however, is the belief that the good people are just sitting around with oodles of time and money on their hands being selfish. So why aren't they out there solving the social problems the collectivist-liberals have failed to solve with trillions of tax dollars?

The good people pay taxes to build schools and hire teachers to teach children to read. Now they are being told that, in addition to that, they must also tutor the children who won't learn in the classroom and whose parents don't give a flip.

In fact, of course, the really good people in America don't have any surplus time or money, thanks to the burden of government taxes, government regulations, government-induced inflation and government trade policies that destroy their jobs and drive down their wages. And what spare time and money they do have, they are already contributing to their neighborhoods and communities.

A real American summit of people dedicated to liberty would have preached the message of self-reliance. That is how a true community is formed. Self-reliant people cooperate and help each other out of respect and affection. They don't do it because the government tells them they have to do it.

If either of the Clintons has ever spoken of self-reliance, or mentioned the values of liberty and a free market, I'm sorry. I must have missed it. They are as close to socialists as I ever wish to see in the White House, and no president has been more contemptuous of the Bill of Rights than Clinton.

I can hardly wait until Clinton has rejoined the private sector and is free to volunteer on a full-time basis.

American Jews think twice about Israel donations

NEW YORK (AP) — Many American Jews are thinking twice about giving money to Israel because of a growing assertiveness by Orthodox groups over the question of who is a Jew.

Reform and Conservative rabbis are asking constituents to send a message with their checkbooks. Liberal and apolitical Jewish charities are getting more donations than ever before. And traditional conduits for Jewish philanthropy — like the United Jewish Appeal, which finances social services regardless of religious affiliation — are hearing from donors who don't want their dollars going to anything with Orthodox ties.

One beneficiary of this trend has been the New Israel Fund, which supports civil rights groups, battered women's shelters, environmental activism and even burial grounds for non-Orthodox Jews in Israel.

Ninety percent of U.S. Jews are Reform and Conservative, and many of them, like Ms. Greenwald, are infuriated by the rise of the right in Israel. The peace process has slowed, legislation is pending that would invalidate non-Orthodox conversions, and some ultra-Orthodox groups are rejecting the legitimacy of other branches of Judaism.

Last month, the titular head of the Conservative movement in America, Rabbi Ismar Schorsch, issued a call to arms, saying there should be "no more contributions to people who privately treat our religious beliefs with disdain and derision."

"Religious pluralism has to be elevated as a top priority," Schorsch, chancellor of the Jewish Theological Seminary, added in an interview. "Otherwise the state of Israel is going to end up not as a Jewish state but as an Orthodox one."

Schorsch would like the UJA to take a stand too, but spokesman Bernie Moscovitz said the organization could never make it a rule to help "a poor kid as long as they're not ultra-Orthodox."

The Jewish Federation of Greater San Jose, the UJA's regional fund-raising group in Silicon Valley, recently adopted a policy under which donors can designate their gifts for groups that support religious pluralism and Jewish-Arab coexistence.

David Landau, an influential Orthodox columnist for the Israeli newspaper Ha'aretz, castigated Schorsch's demands as "bald threats of extortion."

It remains to be seen whether it will have a big financial impact. New Israel Fund's $13 million a year and the $50,000 that the San Jose UJA hopes to put towards pluralism are small compared to the $300 million a year sent overseas by the UJA. Moscovitz says there is no evidence of any large-scale drop-off in donations.

Also saying they are unaffected are the Lubavitchers, an ultra-Orthodox group whose outreach to less observant Jews draws financial support from Conservative and Reform donors.

Since Zionism's early days, Israeli Jews have counted on cash from Jews in the United States and elsewhere to help pay for economic development, social services and military endeavors. Currently, between $500 million and $1 billion a year is donated annually by U.S. Jews to Israeli charities.

Some of these charities remain outside the debate over Orthodox influence.

"The political climate in Israel has very little to do with our fund raising," said Maureen Schulman of Haddassah, which raises $87 million a year in the United States for medical care in Israel.

Tel Aviv University, Hebrew University and the Israel Institute of Technology all say their U.S. fund raising is up; the three now raise roughly $120 million a year here.

The reason, says Susan Leader of the American Friends for Hebrew University, is simple: "We are apolitical."

Bombs, lawsuits find way to junk e-mail company

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Plagued by lawsuits and shut down for 20 hours by Internet hackers, Cyber Promotions President Sanford Wallace admits this was a rough week for his junk e-mail business.

But he refuses to log off.

"There are people who dedicate their lives to trying to put Cyber Promotions out of business," said Wallace, whose bulk e-mail service and Internet provider — the first in the nation — sends nearly 4 million e-mail ads daily.

Just this week alone:

■ Monday was declared "Cinco de Mayo Cyberpromo Mailbomb Day" by an Internet newsgroup that opposes unsolicited e-mail messages, known as spam.

■ A federal judge ruled Tuesday that Cyber Promotions' bulk e-mail constituted trespassing on the computers of Earthlink, an Internet provider in California, and issued a temporary restraining order.

■ Also Tuesday, Wallace's company agreed to pay $65,000 to CompuServe to settle a federal lawsuit, and stop sending unsolicited e-mail to its 5 million subscribers. The settlement is similar to an agreement reached with America Online earlier this year.

■ A 20-hour "reverse spam" attack shut down Cyber Promotions' computers until noon Wednesday.

'It is affecting business. But ... we're still showing a profit at the end of each month.'

— Sanford Wallace, president of junk e-mail company

The Philadelphia-based Internet advertising service has faced nothing but hassles since it started in 1994. In three years, the company has fought seven lawsuits, resulting in settlements with America Online, Prodigy and, most recently, CompuServe.

Wallace always has received a handful of anti-spam messages daily, but serious hacker attacks began in March, when he launched the first Internet service in the nation that's friendly to bulk e-mail. Most Internet services prohibit clients from sending mass commercial messages.

The "reverse spam" assault, which started Tuesday, flooded Wallace's computer system with millions of requests for hardware identification numbers. The barrage ended when technicians blocked messages from 50 individuals, a solution that mimics anti-spammers' response to Wallace's e-mails.

Two other serious attacks in the past three months were cyber break-ins, meaning hackers infiltrated the computer system's password. The burglars stole the list of companies that pay Cyber Promotions to send bulk e-mail and posted it on the Internet, leading to harassment by other anti-spammers.

Wallace said the mail-bomb day was annoying but caused few delays.

"It is affecting business," he said Thursday. "But even with all the stuff we've been going through, we're still showing a profit at the end of each month. That's got to tell you something."

He wouldn't disclose his financial records.

Bob Bulmash of the anti-junk mail group Private Citizen agreed anti-spam attacks probably are more therapeutic than harmful.

"They allow people to vent their frustration at this industry, at their inability to control their own computer. It's an opportunity to strike back," Bulmash said. "It might shut them down for about an hour. Then they're right back at it."

You Can Soar! World Wide Flight '97 Update

Plane location: Darwin, Australia

Latitude: 12 degrees 25.05 minutes S

Longitude: 130 degrees 52.80 minutes E

Darwin weather conditions: 79 degrees, partly cloudy

Linda Finch is now officially two-thirds of the way around the world on her flight. Thursday's flight took about nine hours to complete. Rain delayed her take-off from Indonesia for about an hour. They were plagued by mosquitos for the three hours it took to fuel the plane. Also, because of the heat, humidity and lack of circulation inside the plane the Electra's cockpit felt more like a sauna. In Jakarta, she was greeted by women pilots, children and dancers. They had specially prepared tacos for her since they read in her pilot log that she was craving them. Related curriculum and story on Page 3D.

Sherman saluted for efforts with MC auto school

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Veteran Midland automobile dealer Jack Sherman has been honored by the Permian Basin Tech Prep Consortium and Midland College for his efforts in the MC School of Automotive Technology.

Sherman

Sherman — who helped MC receive a contract with General Motors to provide industry training for MC students and who hires students with this GM training — has received the Tech Prep Exemplary Partnership Award.

Sherman was presented the award for the leadership he has shown in the Tech Prep alliance, explained Kurt Shedeck, one of MC's automotive technology instructors.

"His efforts have helped fuel our program into the 21st century," Shedeck said.

Sherman said he was pleased to be recognized by the Tech Prep partners and praised the work being done at MC, which provides an avenue to a productive, successful future for students who may not be interested in a traditional college education. The training provides students with marketable skills in the automotive repair industry.

"Not every student is an academian," Sherman said. The "state-of-the-art" facility and curriculum at MC, through the association with local high schools, is even salvaging some students who might otherwise drop out of school, he said.

The technical training provided at MC, in all of the Tech Prep programs, produces graduates with skills that are in great demand in today's workplace, Sherman explained.

The Tech Prep program is a process that provides a linkage between secondary schools and community colleges with the goal of improving the technical development of students as they prepare for the workplace.

"The program is very beneficial to the Permian Basin," Sherman said.

According to the mission statement, the Permian Basin Tech Prep is designed to improve career opportunities for area students by establishing a part-

Many lakes fuller, but drought not over everywhere

DEL RIO, Texas (AP) — The bright, white limestone banks of Lake Amistad aren't quite as bare as they were heading into last summer.

Like other reservoirs that suffered amid the severe drought, Lake Amistad is fuller now. The deep lake remains 36 feet below normal, but it had dipped to an all-time low of 51 feet below normal in August.

"So we've come up about 14½ or 15 feet since then," said Kate Hammond, spokesman for Amistad National Recreation Area. "The boating is great. There's plenty of water."

At Lake Tawakoni east of Dallas, the picture is even rosier.

"Much, much, much improved," said Judy Mince of the Sabine River Authority, which oversees the lake.

Though the drought isn't over everywhere, many reservoirs in Texas are on the rebound, thanks to significant rainfall in the autumn and spring.

And lake users are thrilled.

Susan Zito, who works at Lake Tawakoni RV Center near the reservoir, described the reservoir this way:

"It's high. It's good. Everybody's fishing in it and catching fish," she said. "My mother-in-law has got water in her boat house for the first time in about a year!"

The lake is more than a half-foot above normal, while last year at this time it was nearly 5 feet below normal. It reached its lowest point — 8.7 feet below normal — in October.

In Central Texas, Lake Buchanan and Lake Travis also have rebounded.

"Both lakes are full. In fact, Travis is a little bit over full," said Bill McCann, spokesman for the Lower Colorado River Authority.

Lake Buchanan is about 5 feet above its usual May average, and Lake Travis is more than 11 feet above its May average, McCann said.

Country boy hell-bent to live for serving of cornbread and sweet milk

Of all things that make a Southern fellow a perennial "country boy" from the time he has got his own chair at the supper table until death's call, one is surely savoring "cornbread and sweet milk."

Todd

And that is traditionally done out of an old Garrett's snuff glass or a tall iced-tea mug.

That is country and country living, folks.

One evening at the cafeteria in town, old Ed Todd decided to doubly enjoy his meal, which he did, despite an aghast dining mate who declared something akin to "You are not going to do that here, are you?" or "You can't do that! What will people think?"

Honestly, these old bones never thought that anyone would mind if a fellow crumbled up sticks or slices of cornbread into a glass, compacted the mess with a generous spoon and then poured on the sweet milk.

The ideal is to make the delightful treat — actually, a staple — about the consistency of breakfast's oatmeal and mush.

There is nothing better at suppertime. But there are some rivals: juicy and spiced-up red beans on a plate of cornbread and a generous order of mashed potatoes and greens.

That is country living, folks.

Amen and amen.

Gracious.

This old country boy would not die for a glass of cornbread and sweet milk. But, you'd better know that he would be hell-bent to live for another serving.

Thank you, Lord, for this fellow's country heritage and for his forebears and those wonderful times at the supping table and those other memorial places, people, critters, and dreams.

Ah, who would dare to discount the joy of a family gathering, once the day's work or a season's toil is done, around the domino — especially the game 42 — table in the living room, or quietly listening to the radio, or telling tales?

And the life is made all so much better and is certainly graced by the sure delight of relishing that country staple, cornbread and sweet milk.

Gracious alive! It is good, good, good.

At approximately midnight Wednesday, police were called to 3214 Mariana Drive on a report of shots being fired. When officers arrived and interviewed witnesses, they learned that a white car drove slowly by the residence and fired several shots toward the house and then sped away. No injuries were reported at the scene.

Interviews with witnesses led officers to the three men, who were arrested at the Trellis Apartments, 3212 W. Wadley Ave.

The investigation is continuing and more arrests could be made.

Sexual assault

ODESSA — Police continue to hunt for a suspect in the sexual assault of a 9-year-old girl that occurred Sunday on the playground at Pease Elementary School in Odessa.

The victim and a 10-year-old female playmate were approached by a white male, approximately 30 years old, who asked them to help find a lost ball, police said. He sent the 10-year-old to another area and when she left the immediate area, assaulted the victim, striking her several times as she tried to escape, causing minor injuries, police said.

He fled the scene when the playmate returned.

Officers plan to distribute in the neighborhood a flier with a composite drawing of the suspect and the vehicle he is believed to have been driving.

DROUGHT: Little difference since last year in West Texas

(From 1B)

But in West Texas, those who oversee water-supply reservoirs near Big Spring and Snyder haven't noticed much difference since last summer.

"We're still in a critical drought up here," said John Grant, general manager of the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

Lake J.B. Thomas was 5.6 percent full last year at this time, and now it's 6.4 percent full. E.V. Spence Reservoir was 28.6 percent full this time last year. Currently it is 25.5 percent full.

Farther downstream, Lake O.H. Ivie is 89 percent full, down from 93 percent this time last year.

The drought also persists in the Rio Grande Valley, where farmers and cities rely on water from Amistad and Falcon Lake.

That supply is at 40 percent of capacity, up from 37.5 percent of capacity this time last year, said Julian Perales, river operations manager with the Rio Grande Watermaster office in McAllen.

Spring is peak irrigation time, but rainfall on farm land has reduced demand for irrigation water from the reservoirs, Perales said.

"Though we're not out of the drought by any means down here, we've made up some ground because we've had some rain," he said.

Few in severely drought-stricken areas are willing to guess what the rest of the spring and the summer hold in store. They're braced for more dry weather. They're hoping for adequate precipitation.

"Ask the rain god," said Ms. Hammond at Lake Amistad.

John Grant at the water district in Big Spring said, "I've been out here long enough to know that I don't predict the weather."

Reflections Of Mother

Marion Ed Lobaugh wrote, "There's a garden that grows in the hearts of us all, where memories bring gentle tears, I love to go there and stay for a while, for there I can roll back the years..."

O how I miss that mother of mine! Strong and courageous when I was but a lad as she, widowed and alone, shouldered the needs of four children. And such faith, when times would be rough and things a bit sparse, as though tomorrow and God would bring it all to pass. But humble yet proud, when we all found our place as servants and workers in life. And, through the years, always she was in love, with an earthly father who died when I was so young but whom I knew through her sweet memories, and a heavenly Father, whom she taught me to know so well. She died a rich mother...rich in faith and love that she shared.

May this Mother's Day of 1997 take you to that garden of memories also with sweet reflections. God said, "Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praises her..." Proverbs 31:28.

Bill headed for Senate cuts property taxes $2.5 billion

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans could see their local school taxes cut by about 17 cents per $100 in property value under a bill headed to the full Senate.

A Senate committee voted 10-1 in favor of the plan Wednesday. It could be before the full Senate on Friday.

The cuts would mean that a person with a $100,000 home, taxed for schools at the average rate of $1.40 per $100 in value, would see school tax bills drop from $1,400 a year to $1,230. That's a cut of $170, or 12 percent.

The bill is vastly different from an already-approved House plan.

The Senate plan would pay for its $2.5 billion in property tax cuts, which would be spread over two years, by expanding the state franchise tax on business to all companies except sole proprietorships. It also depends on more state funding for schools and other state tax increases to make up the difference.

Texas currently pays for about 47 percent of all school costs. That would go up to 53 percent under the Senate proposal.

Sen. Rodney Ellis, D-Houston, cast the lone no vote. He said $1 billion in additional state funds in the bill could be better used on other services.

Other Democrats on the committee, including Sens. Gonzalo Barrientos of Austin, and Gregory Luna of San Antonio, also expressed concerns. They said they voted for the bill in hopes of making it better for poorer and middle class Texans in the full Senate or in a conference committee with House lawmakers.

The committee this week pared down the proposed franchise tax expansion to make it less burdensome to partnerships, which currently don't pay the tax.

The change exempts from the calculation of the tax more money than the House plan would exempt.

That and other differences between the House and Senate proposals are likely to be worked out in a conference committee. Any compromise plan would have to pass the House and Senate before the end of the legislative session, June 2.

The House plan would cut property taxes by about $5 billion every two years. It would pay for the cuts with an expanded business tax, more state education funds, some tax increases and an expansion of the state sales tax to cover more goods and services not currently taxed.

It would amount to a cut of at least 60 cents per $100 in property value from the current average school property tax of about $1.40 per $100. The cuts could increase because of other provisions in the plan, but those cuts have not been estimated.

That means school bills for a $100,000 home taxed at the average $1.40 rate would fall from $1,400 to about $800.

Sen. Ken Armbrister, D-Victoria, said each plan should be looked at from the bottom line.

"You have to look at the net effect," said Armbrister, chairman of the Senate committee.

He said the House plan does have more tax cuts, but also has more tax increases to pay for it. He added that even though the Senate property tax cuts would be smaller, the plan is more fair.

The House plan also would change the way business property is taxed. Under current law, local districts tax residential and business property the same for school operation and for school debt.

Under the House plan, the state would tax business property for school operation. Local districts would continue to tax residential property for school operation and all property for debt.

The Senate plan maintains the current property tax system.

Senators have said the House plan is too expensive and makes too many changes.

House lawmakers have criticized the Senate proposal as not providing long-term property tax cuts.

The tax bill is HB4. An accompanying constitutional amendment is HJR4.

Bill aims to diversify university enrollment despite ruling

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill aimed at diversifying enrollment at public universities in the wake of an anti-affirmative action court ruling was sent to Gov. George W. Bush Thursday.

The Senate, on a voice vote, gave final approval to the measure and forwarded it to Bush for consideration.

Supporters said the measure would ensure that all students, regardless of race or ethnicity, are granted the opportunity to attend college.

Opponents have called the legislation a back-door approach to restoring race-based preferences akin to those struck down last year by a federal appeals court.

"We hope to increase the number of minority admissions that had plummeted after Hopwood," said Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, referring to the lawsuit in which four white students argued that the University of Texas law school's admissions policy unfairly favored minorities.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed, and state Attorney General Dan Morales has since directed all public universities to adopt race-neutral policies for admissions, financial aid and scholarships.

The bill, sponsored in the Senate by Barrientos and in the House by Rep. Irma Rangel, D-Kingsville, has been endorsed by Morales.

The measure establishes uniform admission procedures under which universities would be required to admit applicants who graduated in either the top 10 or 25 percent of their classes.

After filling those slots, universities would have to consider, in addition to academic performance, race-neutral factors such as economic status and family background.

Education board gives preliminary go-ahead to curriculum rewrite

AUSTIN (AP) — A massive rewrite of what Texas students are expected to learn in English, math, science, health and social studies got a preliminary go-ahead Thursday from the State Board of Education.

The move overcame a push from Republican board members backed by religious conservatives to delay the package, part of the first wholesale overhaul of Texas' curriculum in more than a decade.

Those seeking a delay cited concerns about the content and structure of the proposed curriculum, particularly in the areas of English and social studies.

Those who wanted to move forward noted that the rewrite is subject to revisions until final action in July, which Democratic board member Will Davis of Austin called "the vote that will really count."

"All that's attempting to be done here is to delay the process and to get us off our schedule," he said.

Davis advised his colleagues that state lawmakers who ordered the curriculum rewrite are closely watching the board, which has been given to divisive wrangling. He noted that proposals are advancing in the Legislature that would limit the board to four meetings annually.

"They (lawmakers) are going to read about this meeting tomorrow," Davis said. "I would encourage you not to encourage them to pass those two pieces of legislation."

Davis added, however, that he also wants to see changes in the English curriculum rewrite.

Critics said the proposed English curriculum doesn't specifically set out what students are expected to learn in each grade and doesn't make recommendations for literary texts, perhaps allowing "Charlotte's Web" to be taught three years in a row.

Airlines haven't installed smoke detectors

Associated Press

DALLAS — A year after ValuJet Flight 592 crashed into the Everglades killing everyone aboard, no airline has yet installed smoke detectors in cargo holds.

The Dallas Morning News reported Thursday that although the heads of 15 airlines announced in December they would voluntarily install the devices, none have done so yet.

The need to design a system that works and a reluctance to get too far ahead of federal regulations have delayed installation of the devices until October or November, industry officials said.

"The last thing the industry wants to do is to develop and install a system, then find out that we might have to take it out in two years for something that meets a regulation we haven't seen yet," said Mike Rioux, senior vice president for operations and safety at the Air Transport Association.

National Transportation Safety Board officials criticized the delay and said airlines are "making excuses" because they don't want to spend the money. It will cost about $200 million to install the devices on more than 3,700 planes.

"It's not rocket science," said Dr. Bernard Loeb, director of the NTSB's Office of Aviation Safety.

Loeb said the safety board first called for smoke detectors and fire extinguishers in cargo holds after a nonfatal 1988 fire aboard an American Airlines jet. Afterward, the industry convinced the FAA that their cost far outweighed the benefits.

Airline officials said they no longer could defend that position after a raging fire in the front cargo hold brought down the ValuJet DC-9 on May 11, 1996, killing all 110 aboard.

The pilots, who didn't know about the fire until they heard passengers screaming, tried to return to Miami before crashing.

Critics said a smoke detector in the hold could have alerted the crew to the problem before the plane took off.

Ice cream vending banned in Dallas suburb

UNIVERSITY PARK (AP) — After this summer, children in this upper class Dallas suburb will no longer be able to run down the street chasing after the ice cream man.

Fearing injury, the University Park City Council has banned the sales effective Sept. 1.

University Park is the first city in the area with such a ban, said Hoss Rafaty, owner of Yumi Ice Cream Co. His vendors sell his name-brand products in more than 30 Dallas-Fort Worth area cities.

University Park Mayor Pete Goldman said Wednesday that the council made the change because of a March accident that seriously injured a 6-year-old boy near Southern Methodist University. The child was struck by a passing car while buying ice cream from a street vendor.

Goldman said the council did not want to risk having another child injured or killed to protect an icon of summer life. The council voted Tuesday night.

"That's a chance I'm not willing to take to preserve an American tradition," he said.

Some health care professionals agree.

Banning ice cream vendors from city streets is long overdue, said Sandra Holdcraft, pediatric trauma care manager at Children's Medical Center of Dallas.

Since May 1995 the hospital has treated 29 children either injured or killed after buying ice cream from a street vendor, Ms. Holdcraft said.

"They were either going to it or coming from it," she said.

Goldman, who estimated that 50 residents asked him to support a ban, said ice cream is available throughout the community from other sources.

Harrelson legal team accuses defense attorney of shooting

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A defense lawyer is denying allegations by a legal team representing Charles Harrelson that he and some of his clients might have been responsible for the 1979 shooting death of a federal judge.

"The whole thing is an absolute lie," attorney Alan Brown was quoted as saying in Thursday's San Antonio Express-News.

Brown denied the allegation Wednesday after U.S. District Judge Fred Biery unsealed a motion for a new trial filed by attorneys for Harrelson.

Harrelson, the father of actor Woody Harrelson, is serving a life prison sentence for the May 29, 1979, killing of federal Judge John H. Wood, who was gunned down outside his San Antonio home.

Harvard law professor Alan Dershowitz, San Francisco lawyer David Michael and Corpus Christi attorney Bill May filed the motion on Harrelson's behalf April 23 and asked that it remained secret from the public until a hearing on the matter.

Biery refused to seal the motion, though Brown also wanted it sealed.

The judge has not yet ruled whether to hold a hearing for a new trial.

Brown said Harrelson isn't the first person convicted of a federal offense to file court documents afterward purporting to identify someone else as being responsible for the crime.

Brown said allegations he was involved in any way with Wood's death or with the attempt on the life of Wood's prosecutor and friend, Jim Kerr, are false, and were proven false by an intensive FBI investigation.

Kerr was an assistant U.S. attorney who prosecuted cases in Wood's court.

"There is nothing new in these allegations. They were all made long before Harrelson's trial and were found to be groundless long before then," Brown said.

"The FBI looked at me and came to the conclusion I didn't do it. Now, these lawyers who are supposed to be protectors of civil liberties are releasing all this after they know good and well I have been cleared," Brown added.

It also is untrue he acted as an attorney for Harrelson while he himself was the target of an FBI probe in the Wood death, Brown said.

"Alan Brown was never an attorney on this case," Tom Sharpe, who was Harrelson's attorney, said Wednesday. Sharpe said he will be filing a motion to intervene in the case soon.

The defense team's brief cites allegations that convicted murderer Robert Riojas gave statements to authorities implicating Brown and others in a plot to kill Wood and Kerr.

The brief also notes that while the FBI and others involved in the investigation did not believe Riojas, then-U.S. Attorney Jamie Boyd did place credence in his story and investigated Riojas' claims.

Boyd was later removed from his office in part because he took a different view than the FBI, the brief states.

Cheek bone 'program' wins science contest

By Julian Guthrie
San Francisco Examiner

SAN FRANCISCO — When Lars Felton's friends heard he'd won a $1,000 savings bond for a radio segment he'd written and narrated about how primate cheekbones evolved, they offered one piece of advice: take the money and buy a car.

"I'm a little too young to drive," said Lars, an 8-year-old third-grader at Dr. Charles R. Drew Alternative Elementary School. "I plan to use the money for college."

Lars, who wants to be a physical anthropologist when he grows up "and maybe a basketball player, too," is the grand-prize winner in the third-annual "Young Producers Contest," sponsored by the National Science Foundation and Earth & Sky Radio and intended to increase students' interest in science.

Lars' 90-second feature, which beat out 1,800 entries from students in kindergarten through 12th grade, began airing this week on more than 850 public and commercial stations around the country.

The segment, with Lars narrating, begins: "I was at a place called the Institute of Human Origins in Berkeley when I was looking at some early human skulls and I noticed they had an oval shaped bone in their cheeks. I learned that these cheekbones grew so muscles could attach to them. That would allow them to break open the shells of nuts."

At this point, the cracking of nuts was heard — courtesy of his mom.

"Primates had these cheekbones about 3 million years ago during the Pliocene era," Lars continued, in a confident tone. "After about 500,000 years, they discovered that it would be a lot easier if they used stone tools to crack open the shells of nuts."

In the background, the clanking of rocks was heard.

"Since they did not need such big cheekbones for so many strong muscles, cheekbones evolved into the shape they have now."

Sitting in his classroom Wednesday, Lars said the whole taping process was "pretty stressful."

He had to write the script, which took several days. His mom borrowed a friend's tape recorder and bought a cassette tape. His 13-year-old brother, Peter, was recruited to help with sound effects. They had to find the walnuts and rocks. When they finally sat down on the living room floor to do the taping, the recorder broke.

"Lars was freaking out," said his mother, Susan Kennedy, a music and movement specialist at Lars' school. "I told him to take a break. He's a real perfectionist."

Fortunately, Kennedy laughs, it was a low-budget production — "about $2."

Deborah Byrd, the producer at Texas-based Earth & Sky Radio and a contest judge, said Lars' entry was outstanding because of the accuracy of his story and the way it was presented.

"It was scientifically accurate, and Lars paid attention to the way it sounded and the timing. It sounded like real radio," Byrd said.

Lars' father, Keith Felton, who showed up at school to take photos of his young producer son, said Lars has always been interested in the physical world. "He wants to know how everything works and why. He's the most curious human being I've ever met."

Lars said: "My biggest question is how the world came to be. Unfortunately, I don't get to study this in school. My mom says it's not taught because it's controversial. Some people believe in Jesus Christ and Adam and Eve. Others, like myself, believe in evolution."

Lars says he loves studying physical anthropology and learning about how our ancestors evolved. "I think it teaches us a lot about ourselves," he says.

In his free time, Lars devours books on evolution — and basketball.

His two role models, he says, are Dr. Donald Johanson, the world's best known paleoanthropologist who discovered the "Lucy" fossil in Africa and founded the Institute of Human Origins in Berkeley, and basketball legend Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

"I just read a biography on Kareem," Lars said. "You know, when he was my age, he was 5-foot-4. I'm 4-foot-5. You certainly have to wonder how his bones evolved."

Gingrich announces revamped agenda

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Newt Gingrich announced new political objectives Thursday, saying the focus on drugs, education and teen pregnancy will be even more important than balancing the budget.

Gingrich, R-Ga., said his goal was to achieve a drug-free America by Jan. 1, 2001, following a "national crusade fully as intensive as the effort to balance the budget."

Gingrich was addressing the National Religious Broadcasters about where he and the Republican Party are going after reaching agreement with the White House on the GOP's longtime goal of balancing the budget by 2002.

On the budget side, he said the $5.5 trillion national debt could be eliminated by 2024 if spending were held at 1 percent below revenues every year after 2002.

But he outlined his main goals as eliminating drugs, improving education and reducing teen pregnancy by the start of the new millennium in 2001.

On drugs, he said those caught crossing borders or producing commercial quantities of drugs should get mandatory life sentences on first conviction, and the death sentence for second convictions.

"If you sell it we're going to kill you," he said.

He suggested using the Air Force to help track traffickers and recommended religion-based drug rehabilitation programs.

He said schools today are "often no more than holding pens for our children," and said he would push for a system in which children who attend poor schools should be given vouchers to "go to a school that actually cares."

'If you sell it we're going to kill you.'
— House Speaker Newt Gingrich's proposed position on drugs and drug dealers

He said he would promote private efforts to prevent single teenage girls from having children. He said half of girls under 18 who have children out of wedlock will be long-term welfare recipients, and 70 percent of juveniles in state reform institutions were raised in fatherless homes.

Gingrich told the religious broadcasters that it was "vital that we reassert the centrality of faith in the definition of America."

He endorsed a proposed constitutional amendment on school prayer, saying a society divorced from religion is a "hopeless, empty desert of despair."

Gingrich later joined a news conference by the House education committee to release a letter to President Clinton questioning whether federal education dollars were being spent wisely.

Energy agency under fire by GOP sponsors

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even though the new balanced budget agreement preserves the Energy Department, some congressional Republicans said Thursday they'll try again to abolish the agency.

Rep. Todd Tiahrt, R-Kan., and Sen. Rod Grams, R-Minn., said lawmakers who have been reluctant to take such a bold step might give their bill a second look because eliminating Energy would save more than $20 billion over five years.

"This budget deal is largely unwritten," Tiahrt said. "There's a lot to be attained to reach a balanced budget by 2002. This is still very feasible."

Grams said 85 percent of the agency's budget has little to do with safeguarding the nation's energy supply, the ostensible reason for creating a separate department during the 1977 energy crisis.

"The American taxpayer can't afford it any more," he said.

Tiahrt and Grams introduced the bill Thursday with help from former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who said the agency's nuclear weapons stockpile and waste cleanup duties — roughly three-quarters of its $16.2 billion budget — could be transferred easily to the Defense Department.

The bill would transfer the nuclear weapons and cleanup functions to a new civilian agency within the Defense Department that would report directly to the defense secretary, also a civilian.

House Republicans were unsuccessful in efforts to abolish Energy and three other departments two years ago. Energy Department officials expressed skepticism Thursday that the measure will gain sufficient support this year.

Agency spokeswoman Carmen MacDougall suggested the bill's sponsors are unable to back up their cost-savings figures, and Tiahrt acknowledged they lack a line-by-line accounting of it.

Book portrays N. Korea's Kim as princely

WASHINGTON (AP) — For those armies of intelligence analysts starved for insights into the world of Kim Jong Il, communist North Korea's reclusive leader, his loyalists have served up a literary feast of fact and fiction.

Kim was a "baby giant" when he was born — in a log cabin — and grew up to be an astounding shot with a gun and a master of all things military. Unpretentious, he prefers cotton blossoms to rose petals and likes wearing patched clothing.

These things and more we learn in "Kim Jong Il: The Lodestar of the 21st Century," a two-volume "biography" of the 55-year-old leader of a desperate, backward nation whose million-man army stands toe-to-toe with American and South Korean troops.

The book is advertised in The New York Times and appears at a moment of growing concern that North Korea, facing severe food shortages, could either restart the Korean War or collapse in chaos. Some doubt Kim's grip on power, but many predict he will assume the title of president this summer.

In this boastful book you will find a personal portrait that tries to debunk the conventional Western view of Kim as a ruthless terrorist, a spoiled playboy, an eccentric loon with perhaps a nuclear bomb.

The "real" Kim, his biographers insist, is a model for modern man, an inspiration to the world. He is peace-loving but fearless, modest but revered by his people. He is an intellectual giant. In fact, the book says, he works miracles. And no, the authors insist, Kim has no nuclear bomb.

A sampling of exploits and insights:

■ He is a heck of a writer. With more than 890 major "pieces of writing" to his credit over the past 30 years, the speed and quantity of his writing is "unparalleled in history." One piece alone contained "all the truths of the world."

"'Cotton plants open their flowers humbly ... they do not know how to show themselves off," Kim is said to have remarked ...'

— From 'Kim Jong Il: Lodestar of the 21st Century"

■ A Kim quotation: "Where there is love, there is hate."

■ He can shoot pretty straight. At a rifle range he was said to have hit five of 10 bottles on a tree branch from 50 yards "without aiming very carefully." He then grabbed a revolver in his left hand and gunned down the other five.

■ He likes cotton blossoms better than roses. "Cotton plants open their flowers humbly ... and do not know how to show themselves off," Kim is said to have remarked when a woman asked if it were true he had a special fondness for cotton.

■ Among books he read as a youth: "Future Wars," "The Attack on Pearl Harbor."

■ He smiles a lot, but "when something sad happens, he sheds tears like a child."

■ His goal is to "arm all the people and fortify the entire country" to survive even a nuclear attack by the United States. With fortified tunnels hiding soldiers and weapons, North Korea is "like a hedgehog," prepared to react like a "fierce animal driven into a tight corner."

Even his birth was special. In a log cabin at a secret "anti-Japanese" guerrilla camp at Mt. Paekdu on Feb. 16, 1942, the cry of a "baby giant" pierced the stillness. It was Kim. At the moment of his birth, the book says, the sound of ice cracking on a nearby lake resounded throughout the mountains — "as if the great fortune of Korea was gushing out from the bottom of Lake Chonji."

By Western accounts, Kim was born in the Soviet Union, where his father, Kim Il Sung, was serving in the Soviet Red Army. The father returned to North Korea at the end of World War II and ran the country as the "Great Leader" until his death in July 1994.

The Kim "biography" was published by a North Korean outfit in Tokyo called Kwang Myong Sa. Its spokesman, Pak Bong Song, said in a telephone interview the book aims to educate Americans about Kim as he prepares to assume his late father's titles of president and general secretary of the Korean Worker's Party. Kim has been supreme commander of the Korean People's Army since 1991.

"The three-year mourning period is over and the transition ... has begun, so it is important to show the world what kind of a person Kim Jong Il is," Pak said. "There have been a lot of untruths spread about him, and we wanted to correct that."

The West's demonic image of Kim is based in part on suspicions that he masterminded a 1983 terrorist bombing in Rangoon that killed 17 South Korean officials and the 1987 bombing of a South Korean airliner that killed the 115 people aboard.

As for the fear often mentioned in the West that Kim will try to reunite the Koreas by force, the book leaves quite a different impression: The "unification" Kim has in mind would leave intact a capitalist system in the South and a communist system in the North — "one state, two systems, two governments."

Thus, Kim the "Lodestar" could remain the star of the North into the 21st century.

Residents of flooded Grand Forks return to soggy nightmare

By Sheryl Oring
San Francisco Chronicle

Editor's note: Sheryl Oring grew up in Grand Forks, graduating from Central High in 1983. She returned for the first time since 1991 to cover the flood.

GRAND FORKS, N.D. — Most of the snow has melted, meadowlarks and red-winged blackbirds are back for the spring and the fields past the Grand Forks city limits are waiting to be plowed. Things appear deceptively normal on the way into town. But on the west side of the interstate just past the potato research center and the mall, there is a lot full of camouflaged trucks, humvees, tractors and boats. Cars getting off at one of the city's three exits find that not all traffic lights are working. Building after building is ringed with sandbag necklaces. And the berms are loaded with ever-growing piles of trash.

Nearly three weeks after most of Grand Forks was evacuated because of record flooding on the Red River, many of its 50,000 residents are returning. And they're finding that things are worse than they had imagined in this prairie town where the phone book has three pages of Johnsons and where Starbucks has yet to open a cafe.

Many phone lines are still not working. Water is being restored, but it could be weeks before it is potable — in the meantime residents are relying on bottled water. Electricity is spotty, and many will have to rewire their homes. Sewers don't work, so one of the first things people do after returning home is figure out where the closest Porta Potti is.

And then there are the houses.

The floodwaters ripped through many homes with a mighty force. Clothes, furniture, china and other belongings were strewn about as if a tornado had passed through, and the filthy mixture of mud and sewage left a powerful stench and a public health hazard.

"Our basement is full, and there must have been about two inches of water on the main floor — and it's a mess," said 85-year-old Mildred Koth after returning for the first time to the two-story house she's lived in since 1954. "Of course, the carpeting in the living room is all wet and squishy. It's just awful.

"In our yard, there's a tall wooden ladder that floated in — I'd never seen it before. It looks terrible," said Koth, who like thousands of other Grand Forks residents is staying in Fargo and most days is making the three-hour round-trip to clean.

No one knows how long they'll be exiled. It could be a week. It could be a month. No one expects anything resembling normalcy for months, maybe years.

For now, there are government forms to fill out, tetanus shots to get, friends and family to find. And applications to fill out for the $2,000 grants pledged by an anonymous donor. No one knows who the woman called "Angel" is, but everyone has a theory. Liz Taylor is a favorite. Or could it be Oprah Winfrey?

GRAND FORKS and East Grand Forks, a town of nearly 9,000 across the river in Minnesota, are towns full of basements. Basements with family rooms, basements with laundry rooms, basements with bedrooms, basements where years' worth of mementos were stored. Almost all of them were flooded. Health officials are telling residents to wear rubber boots and rubber gloves while cleaning and to throw out anything touched by floodwater that can't be sterilized. Many people are tossing everything.

'I was trying to assure the kids we wouldn't go back there in the flood. In their voices you could hear them quiver. They were scared.'
— Grand Forks, N.D. resident Ronald Stewart

Koth, a retired secretary who is active in her church and well known in her neighborhood, hadn't been down in her basement yet because the water had not been pumped out. Cleaning it will be a big job — she has 43 years' worth of papers, knickknacks and antique china she's collected and two freezers full of food. But she doesn't want anyone going down there to clean up for her.

"Everything that got wet in my house isn't getting thrown out," she said. "I have to die one way or another. If it's from this, well, I've lived my life."

Outside her neatly kept brick house, there are already signs of rebirth. The lilac bush is still growing, and in a few weeks she'll have fragrant blooms to help mask whatever flood smells remain. On the north side of the house, the familiar green shoots of lilies of the valley are poking out of the ground.

Across the river in one of the most badly flooded neighborhoods in East Grand Forks, Daniel Sandahl stood at the top of his basement stairs and looked down at the cesspool created by the flood. At the flood's peak, several feet of water covered the first floor of the two-story home he lovingly restored after moving in 15 years ago.

Floating somewhere in the basement were a roughed grouse he was planning to have mounted and the better part of four deer from last fall, said Sandahl, a 40-year-old truck driver and avid hunter. He was working hard to pump the water so the cleanup could begin.

"The biggest problem now is figuring out where I'm going to move all my stuff while I figure out where I'm going to live," said Sandahl, who was still waiting for word on whether he and his family could ever move back into their home.

But one thing is clear: Sandahl is staying in town.

"I wouldn't leave town, and I would never move to another state, for sure. I've always lived in Minnesota, and I do all my hunting and fishing here and all my relatives are nearby. Grand Forks and East Grand Forks have just about everything you need."

The flood of 1997 was unprecedented in local history, brought on in part by the eight blizzards that buried the area in a record snowfall of more than 100 inches this winter. "It got to be a weekly thing for a while," said Sandahl. "Blowing snow, shoveling snow every day." The last blizzard, a vicious ice storm that left thousands without power, some for nearly a week, arrived in early April.

Residents began sandbagging in preparation for what everyone knew would be a big flood — the National Weather Service predicted the river would crest at 49 feet, the same level the river reached in 1979.

But the weather warmed up, snow melted fast and forecasters kept upping their flood estimates. The river ultimately reached 54 feet, 26 feet above flood stage.

Days before the river crested, most of the area was under a mandatory evacuation order. By April 19, three days before the river crested, the town was almost empty.

Many went to friends and relatives in neighboring towns, some went as far away as California and Florida. Others stayed on cots in emergency shelters set up in gyms, fire stations and other public buildings around the region.

When their neighborhood was evacuated, the Stewart family — 50-year-old Lydia, her 57-year-old husband, Ronald, their 7-year-old daughter, Dorothy, and 14-year-old grandson, Chris — joined several thousand others in a shelter at the Grand Forks Air Force Base west of town. "My grandson and my daughter, they were so sad," said Stewart. "I was trying to assure the kids we wouldn't go back there in the flood. In their voices you could hear them quiver. They were scared."

Stewart's grandson is a diabetic, and his blood sugar levels got dangerously high, so she arranged for him to stay with his father in Montana.

Both kids are still reconciling the loss of almost all their belongings. For her grandson, it was the CD player an uncle brought him in the hospital after the illness he was suffering was diagnosed as diabetes. For her daughter, it was more.

"My daughter started counting. She said, 'I lost the teddy bear Lori gave me, I lost my laptop computer that teaches me to spell' and she got to five and then she says 'That's it, I don't want to think of no more.'" Stewart said. "And then she started crying and crying. I didn't know what to do. She cried for about two hours and then that was it. She seemed to be OK after that."

Still, as Stewart stuffed flood-soaked belongings into black trash bags at her two-bedroom apartment, which had water up to its ceiling, she took extra care to make sure Dorothy didn't see some of the things that were being thrown away. Especially not the swollen pink case filled with Barbie clothes.

NEARLY A QUARTER of Grand Forks' residents went south to Fargo when the evacuation orders were made, filling up that city's motel rooms in a flash. The Salvation Army center quickly

Poll: Home is where the danger is, for children 14 and younger

By Marcia Stepanek
Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — American kids, listen up: The homes you live in may be hazardous to your health, according to a new national survey.

The poll of 1,560 parents, released Thursday, showed:

■ While 98 percent said they have smoke detectors in the home, only 29 percent checked the batteries regularly.

■ Nearly half, 48 percent, said they should practice a fire-escape route with their children from time to time, but only 18 percent said they do.

■ Fifty-six percent with youngsters aged 5 to 14 said they don't always make sure their children wear proper safety gear — helmets, knee guards, elbow guards — while roller-blade skating, and 24 percent of all parents said their kids don't wear the gear at all.

■ Only 42 percent of parents with children aged 4 and under have safety gates for stairways in the home.

The poll was commissioned by the National Safe Kids Campaign, a non-profit organization affiliated with Children's National Medical Center here.

Pollster Peter D. Hart, whose firm conducted the survey said parents "don't know enough about the basics of household safety." His survey, conducted in February, asked parents what they do to protect their children from common injuries. Overall, he said, those surveyed did best in the area of "good intentions." He added, "Parents know they should act and don't. Follow-up in many cases is missing."

Accidental injuries are the leading killer of children aged 14 years and younger, according to the National Center for Health Statistics, a division of the National Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. About 40 percent of such injuries occur around the home, with the rest in motor vehicles, on playgrounds and in schools. Among children aged 1 to 4, fire is the leading cause of accidental death.

In 1993, more than 6,900 children aged 14 and younger died from accidental injuries and more than 50,000 were permanently disabled, CDC figures show. More than 14 million children aged 14 and younger, one fourth of the youngsters in that age group, sustain injuries that are serious enough to require medical attention each year, the CDC said.

Hart said that in some safety areas, parents were doing well. Besides buying smoke detectors, most lock up medicines and vitamins to keep them out of the reach of children. Three-fourths of parents put safety latches on drawers and cabinets, the survey showed.

But failing to check smoke-detector batteries can have fatal consequences. Ninety percent of child fire-related deaths occur in homes without working smoke detectors, the National Safe Kids Campaign said.

The survey also found that fewer than one in three parents of children aged 4 and younger have installed window guards to prevent falls and that despite recent widespread publicity about the need for young children to ride in the back seat of cars, only 48 percent of parents said they instruct their children to sit in the back seat.

In the poll, 27 percent of parents said they have a carbon monoxide detector and another 38 percent said they believe they should have one but don't. In 1994, nearly 1,900 carbon monoxide poisoning cases among children aged 5 and younger were reported, the CDC said.

The National Safe Kids Campaign honored 24 youngsters from around the country for helping to prevent unintentional injuries to children in the last two years.

One was 10-year-old Jeremy Daniel Thompson of East Palo Alto, Calif. In an interview here Wednesday, Jeremy recalled that on Jan. 10 he "smelled smoke at his elementary school, the Green Oaks Academy. He said he asked his teacher if he could use the bathroom "so I could sneak outside and check it out."

The fourth-grader added: "I saw smoke coming out of the top of the school building and then ran back to tell my teacher and yelled 'Fire.' She believed me and helped get everybody out." The fire destroyed seven classrooms and the school library.

FLOOD: Residents return to soggy nightmare became a gathering place for evacuees. Sometimes they left with a find — a sweater that fit just right and reminded them of one they had left behind. Other times they took what they could get — jeans that were much too long but necessary for cleaning up the mess at home. They all left with cleaning supplies: rubber gloves, bleach, bottled water, mops and brooms.

But perhaps it was the food that stood out most in their minds. "They serve all kinds of good food," said Koth, who has been staying in a hotel with friends Alan and Erma Meldrum. "Here, people are bringing in the very best bakery you can imagine. All kinds of cakes and cookies. It won't be that way in Grand Forks because there's nobody there to bake."

Indeed, food is a precious commodity in Grand Forks. The Red Cross set up two drive-through meal sites and was immediately swamped, with people waiting more than an hour for a lunch of string beans and ham, canned peaches, a hamburger bun, juice and snacks.

ON THE DRIER south and west sides of town, stores and restaurants have started to open. But downtown, which suffered a double whammy of flooding and a fire that destroyed nine buildings including the local paper, is just digging out. Many of the town's established businesses are promising to rebuild if the city lets them. Seventy-seven-year-old George Widman is one of them. His family has been making candy in the area since about 1905. His grandfather was a candymaker, his father was a candymaker, he's a candymaker and three of his six children have joined the family trade.

Locals know Widman's for its chocolate-covered potato chips, handmade ribbon candy and its more than 150 other varieties that include a number of items inspired both by the family and area residents.

Pigs are popular, said Widman, so he created a chocolate pig and a line of swine products like pork and beans (jelly beans in a wicker tray with a chocolate pig), swine and dine (chocolate pig and various utensils) and swine coolers (a champagne glass with jelly beans and a chocolate pig).

Other novelties include Uff Das (potato chips, caramel and marshmallow creme dipped in chocolate) and cow pies (pecans, caramel and marshmallow creme dipped in chocolate).

("Uff da" is an expression that might best be characterized as the Scandinavian equivalent of "oy vey." There are a lot of uff das going around Grand Forks these days).

Widman is going back and forth between his flooded home and his flooded store. But he's dreaming of what his downtown store will look like when it reopens — maybe by the fall.

"It's going to be all completely new," he said. "Everything brand new from the ground up. We're not very good carpenters, but we're darned fast. ... When you come back, you're going to see a real pretty store."

Thoughts of a shiny new store keep Widman and his family going. But he said some aspects of the disaster have yet to sink in.

While downtown cleans out, businesses across town have started to reopen. J.C. Penny was one of the first, but business has been slow.

"People are buying socks, underwear, basic jeans and shampoo. And we're taking returns on jewelry like crazy," said the men's department manager, 24-year-old Dana Sande. "Three diamonds were returned yesterday for about $6,000. I can understand it. That'd pay for a furnace."

The Dairy Queen on the north side of town was still closed, though, just weeks after opening for the year. In this part of the country, most Dairy Queens are open only from March to October.

Seventy-five miles away in Fargo, there were a dozen people lined up at a Dairy Queen on the last night of April. The temperature was hovering around freezing, and the wind was its usual fierce self. But the snow was mostly melted, so teenagers and adults alike insisted on observing this annual rite of spring.

RELIGION IS the cornerstone of life for many in Grand Forks — three-quarters of the people identify themselves as Catholics or Lutherans, and most of the rest belong to various other Protestant churches. On Sunday, the first time in two weeks that most churches met in the city, the congregation from United Lutheran Church gathered in a funeral home owned by one of its members. Their church was still being pumped out.

Before the service started, people traded flood stories, relayed news of friends and family who could not make it, consoled one another and looked at pictures of their flooded church.

Tim Johnson, the senior pastor, was wearing a jacket and tie for the first time in two weeks, but many were still in clean jeans and work shoes. "We have discovered, haven't we, that appearances count for absolutely nothing," said Johnson addressing the gathering of about 150.

Up front, there were a several remnants from the swamped church: a baptismal font taken the night the evacuation order was given, a sterling challis and paten atop a makeshift communion table covered with a quilt made by one of the members, and a rainbow banner that had hung in the church during Lent. The rainbow, Johnson said, is from the Noah story, a reminder to God of his promise never to flood the Earth again.

Where does Grand Forks go from here? Most people seem determined to stay, but hundreds of houses are still underwater and will almost certainly be condemned. Meanwhile, local officials are considering a dike to protect the city from future floods, and planners are re-evaluating zoning laws. New houses are likely to go up on the far west and south sides of town — the driest sides.

"What I've heard is most people are staying," said Dennis Eggebraaten, a 48-year-old police lieutenant who is normally in charge of investigations but lately has been working almost non-stop for the Emergency Operations Center. "There's not going to be a great exodus from Grand Forks."

FDA considers drug that could aid victims of Lou Gehrig's disease

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Partially paralyzed patients sobbed as they pleaded with the government Thursday to approve a drug that promises to modestly slow the Lou Gehrig's disease that is killing them.

But scientific advisers to the Food and Drug Administration questioned if the drug, Myotrophin, would do these patients any good — because while one study suggested it could postpone worsening paralysis by three months and eventually increase life by an equal time, a second study showed no benefit.

Those three months are vital, tearful patients said, and one mother accused the FDA of whittling away her son's life by debating the drug for a year.

"If Myotrophin had been cleared ... when you evaluated it last year, he might still be able to eat, he might still be able to breathe," Diane Whitaker of San Francisco said of her 35-year-old son, Douglas, who needs a feeding tube and oxygen after being diagnosed with Lou Gehrig's disease last summer.

Myotrophin offers "a gift of hope that a cure can be found in those months," Janice Dorfman of Long Island sobbed, her voice paralyzed and her statement read by a computer translator.

Some 30,000 Americans suffer Lou Gehrig's disease, formally known as amyotrophic lateral sclerosis or ALS. It kills nerve cells in the brain and spinal cord, causing creeping paralysis that eventually leaves every victim unable to eat or even breathe.

Patients' life expectancy — just three to five years — has changed little since the disease killed Yankees first baseman Lou Gehrig in 1941.

Only one drug, Rilutek, is sold for ALS. It prolongs some patients' lives by a few months but has not been proved to slow the worsening symptoms.

Myotrophin, however, is a genetically engineered growth factor called IGF-1 that promised to improve patients' quality of life by slowing that paralysis. It is thought to promote the survival of nerve cells and help them rebound after injury.

But tests by partners Cephalon and Chiron Inc. found Myotrophin's effects modest at best. One study in North America found Myotrophin slowed patients' muscle deterioration by 26 percent — buying them about three months of better health before their paralysis increased.

Then a second study in Europe found no effect from Myotrophin. FDA doctors couldn't agree which study was more believable, so they asked an outside panel of neurologists for help.

Last June, that same panel wrestled with the question but agreed to let Myotrophin be given for free to desperate patients while Cephalon and Chiron got an answer. Thursday, the companies revealed the North American patients had lived about three months longer than those given a dummy pill, data they argued supported FDA approval of the drug without performing a tie-breaking study.

The companies argued the future of ALS treatment may be in combining Rilutek and Myotrophin — much as diseases like AIDS and cancer are treated with drug combinations — and they plan to study that question once Myotrophin is allowed for sale.

Documents detail tobacco executives' roles

N.Y. Times News Service

'It's not so simple as smokers just accepting the risk. These documents seem to show the tobacco companies were controlling nicotine in the cigarettes to maintain dependence.'

— Gregory Connolly
director of Massachusetts Tobacco Control Program

The tobacco industry may have dodged a bullet with its big win Monday in a Florida court case, but cigarette makers still face a slew of damaging disclosures about their conduct — including startling new documents filed in the Massachusetts attorney general's lawsuit against the industry.

The documents, unearthed by lawyers for Attorney General Scott Harshbarger, show that top tobacco executives from British American Tobacco and Brown & Williamson were intricately involved with efforts to dampen public concern about smoking's harm while at the same time adjusting nicotine levels in cigarettes to keep smokers hooked.

The papers also reveal a climate of intense secrecy in all of those efforts, with tobacco executives using code names for nicotine-boosting ingredients such as ammonia, and giving special initiatives such cloak-and-dagger names as "Project Greendot" and "Project Ghost."

The significance of the documents, said Gregory Connolly, director of the Massachusetts Tobacco Control Program, is that while the industry has long argued that all smokers accept the risk of smoking and still choose to smoke, it was in fact engaged in behind-the-scenes efforts to keep people smoking, in ways that consumers could not be aware of.

"It's not so simple as smokers just accepting the risk," Connolly said. "These documents seem to show the tobacco companies were controlling nicotine in the cigarettes to maintain dependence."

Officials from BAT and Brown & Williamson did not return calls seeking comment.

Earlier this week, a Florida jury in the case of Jean Connor vs. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. essentially agreed with the argument that individual smokers accept the risk, and that consumers have all the information they need about the product.

The verdict was hailed as a big victory for the tobacco industry, and gave cigarette makers considerable new leverage in ongoing talks with attorneys general, plaintiff lawyers and public health advocates for an all-encompassing settlement.

But lawsuits filed by Harshbarger and 25 other attorneys general across the country are still a significant threat, precisely because they will contain new disclosures about the industry's behind-the-scenes conduct, tobacco opponents say.

Thus as negotiators wrapped up another day of talks Wednesday in Dallas, the tobacco industry and its foes are engaged in a game of high-stakes chicken, each side claiming to be able to sway juries. Fear of losing court cases is pushing both sides toward a settlement, observers say.

"They still have us to worry about," said Harshbarger.

The papers from the Massachusetts lawsuit were originally part of thousands of pages of documents on file in the Texas attorney general's lawsuit, which preceded this state's.

What the Harshbarger team found was revealing: minutes from meetings from 1988 to 1990 of a top-secret group called the Tobacco Strategy Review Team, made up of Sir Patrick Sheehy, chairman of BAT, R.J. Pritchard, the chief executive of BAT's top subsidiary, Kentucky-based Brown & Williamson, and several other top executives.

The purpose of the team was to mount a "coherent strategic thrust" and a "unified approach on smoking issues," the minutes say.

Among the topics covered in the minutes:

■ How to best use a Brazilian tobacco known as Y-1, genetically engineered to contain twice the nicotine of regular tobacco. The goal was to incorporate Y-1 into low-tar cigarettes, such as a trial introduction of the Barclay brand in Norway.

■ An initiative known as Project Greendot to create "a cigarette with very low tar content but normal nicotine delivery." The minutes note that "there was little demand for a cigarette with very low nicotine ... added flavor might make some difference but ... it would not provide the satisfaction the consumer sought." Said Connolly: "All along, the tobacco companies said that when they lowered tar, they lowered nicotine. It's been an entirely different picture. Because they know if they drop the nicotine too much they'll lose smokers."

■ The use of ammonia to increase the amount of nicotine absorbed by the smoker. Minutes from a 1990 session say, "it was noted that ammonia treatment was now being used increasingly widely. For security reasons, it was suggested that, in the future, the treatment should be referred to by a code name."

■ A discussion of what Harshbarger's team alleges was a "disinformation campaign," on "scientific papers demonstrating the anomalies and inconsistencies in the published work on epidemiology relating to the alleged effects of smoking on health."

■ Strategies to engage in the debate on second-hand smoke or environmental smoke, including the use of a University of Kentucky study on "sick buildings" that identified radon and air-conditioning systems, not cigarette smoke, as chief health hazards.

In addition, documents filed in the Massachusetts case reveal an initiative named "Project Ghost," where worldwide strategies were tightly controlled by top BAT executives. The Harshbarger team alleges the project was so named so the top-down control "could be felt but not seen," according to court briefs.

Two Rice University students cite confusion of having same name

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice University senior Vivek Rao graduates on Saturday, ending two years of bewilderment for officials and others on the 4,100-student who have confused him with Rice sophomore Vivek Rao.

The two do not believe they are related.

Rao is a common name in India like Smith or Jones is in the United States. However, Vivek is not a common name like John.

"My parents gave me this name because our last name is so common," says the 22-year-old Rao, who is graduating this year. "This makes you appreciate what every John Smith has to go through."

He is getting a bachelor's degree in biochemistry and plans to attend medical school. His coincidental namesake, the 19-year-old Rao, is studying electrical engineering.

The younger Rao got his first inkling of name confusion when Rice officials mailed a school newspaper to him in 1995 in his native New Dehli, India.

He had already been admitted to the Houston college. He and his parents thought it was "some kind of joke" when they saw that the newspaper identified a Vivek Rao as the editor.

The U.S.-born Rao, who is of Indian descent but raised in West Texas, learned of the other Rao through freshman orientation organizers.

"I was hoping a bit that he wasn't coming because of all the problems we could have," he said.

But he did and the pair soon met. They try to limit any confusion by using their middle initials, which differ, but still end up at times with the other's e-mail, phone call or letter.

Since the older Rao is a high-profile student leader, the other mistakenly has gotten invitations to events with Rice administrators.

The younger Rao was thrilled about an invitation to dinner from university President Malcolm Gillis. But when the letter talked about other student leaders, he knew where to forward it.

"I guess my life will be a little less exciting with Vivek leaving," the younger Rao said.

Dogs, handlers mourn canine killed in line of duty

By Marty Sabota
Associated Press

FORT DAVIS — Sugar Ray was given a quiet burial Wednesday at the Fort Stockton unit where he served, two days after a bullet fired by a separatist he was tracking tore through his body.

The veteran prison dog from the Lynaugh canine unit was shot in a confrontation in the rugged Davis Mountains that also left his killer, Republic of Texas movement member Mike Matson, dead.

"The other dogs howled all night long because they knew one of their partners was missing," said Sgt. Ralph Hager of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

Their mournful cries were so loud that another TDCJ dog, missing for more than two days and feared dead, was able to make his way home to the command post. He was tired and hungry, but otherwise unhurt.

Hager also was taking the loss of the 8-year-old Black and Tan crimefighter hard.

"He was a great dog," the dog handler said. "He wouldn't have been here if he hadn't been."

The corrections officer said the dog died in the line of duty for which he was born and bred.

"That's what they live for, to run men," Hager said.

Veterinarian Janet Greathouse said authorities told her when Sugar Ray was brought back from the brush country in the same helicopter as Matson's body, the officers showed respect.

'These are some of the luckiest dogs in the world. They have a purpose.'

— Ralph Hager
Texas Department of Criminal Justice

"The pilot carried the dog out gently cradled in his arms," Greathouse said. "Everybody stopped and paid a silent tribute."

A necropsy at Fort Davis Veterinary Services showed a small-caliber bullet went through the dog's lungs, aorta, diaphragm and liver and lodged in his intestines.

"They said the guy was up in a tree and fired almost point blank," she said. "The dog died instantly."

Sugar Ray wasn't the only four-legged victim of the two men who fled when their leader, Richard McLaren, and four other secessionists surrendered Saturday after a seven-day standoff with police at the Davis Mountains Resort.

Susie and Jane were shot Monday morning, just minutes after they and 14 other trackers were sent to pursue the fugitives whose camp had been found the night before about a mile from the Republic of Texas movement's enclave.

The shots struck Susie in the chest and Jane in the left foreleg. Jane was stitched up. Susie was more seriously injured and had difficulty breathing due to the bullet that entered her right side, went through her chest and exited her left side. Greathouse used a pressure bandage to aid the ailing animal.

On the day their comrade was buried, Susie and Jane were released from the veterinary clinic. Hager came to get them.

"Where are my girls?" Hager asked the minute he walked in.

He patted 3-year-old Susie - under his tutelage since she was 4 months old - saying, "You're my sweetheart. You know that?"

Although shy about personal publicity, Hager was eager to talk about his hounds.

"Texas dogs are some of the best in the world (due to) years and years of breeding," he said. "These dogs are everything to us."

Hager said he hopes to put both dogs back to work after they recuperate, helping law agencies with tracking, for which they are trained three to 10 hours daily.

"These are some of the luckiest dogs in the world," he said. "They have a purpose."

Since Susie and Jane's plight was publicized, Hager said they've fielded numerous calls from people wanting to adopt the animals if they retire.

The kennel sergeant said that wouldn't happen: "They're not pets. We're going to try and keep them on the job."

The two hounds were big hits at the town's only animal clinic, which handles everything from bobcats to javelinas.

Technician Jesse Schneider admitted treating their special guests to rawhide chews and biscuits, saying, "They work hard, you know."

Susie was the mellow one. "Her nose just goes and goes. She's nose before legs,"Greathouse said.

"Jane is like a rambunctious puppy. She never stops. She bounces off the walls and she loves to have her belly rubbed."

Not only did the staff appreciate their winning personalities, the canines have the respect of attending veterinarian David Taylor.

"They give their all and sometimes they give their life," he said.

80-year-old grandmother gets her GED

By Cathy Gillentine
Associated Press

TEXAS CITY — An 80-year-old grandmother who will receive her GED this week followed the custom of many in her generation — she quit school many years ago to get married.

But after five children, several grandchildren and great grandchildren, Tiny Ellen Honn is ready to walk across the stage at College of the Mainland and join the ranks of those progeny.

She spent a good part of her lifetime raising children. "My oldest was 21 when my youngest was born," she said.

"All of my kids were good students," she said. "Everyone finished high school and some also have college degrees." One of her grandsons will be getting his GED (General Equivalency Diploma) with her.

But it wasn't until she moved to Texas City about a year ago to help her youngest son and his wife with a daycare business that she was pushed back into a classroom, if only briefly.

"They said I had to get my GED in order to be more help at the daycare. And I love working with the children, so I told them if I came close to passing, then I would go ahead and study for it."

She went to the college, took the tests and surprised herself. She also astonished her kids.

"I passed every test but one and I only missed it by one point," she said. "I had to go back and take the science (section) again.

"There were some words that I had never seen in print, but I knew enough to pass," she added.

She attributes her success to all those years of child rearing. "I had kids in school all my life. I helped them, and I guess I kept up."

She also had a hobby, sewing, which also helped bring in money for the family for a good many years. She had alterations shops in various places where they lived, and where her husband — 86 and finally retired — worked as a barber.

All the kids also worked "carrying papers, jerking sodas and baby sitting" to help out the family, she explained.

"We all worked hard and it has been good for us," she said. "My heart breaks for kids who have never been taught the value of work."

She and her husband moved to Texas a little over a year ago to be closer to their children. "We were getting older," she said. They have been married 63 years, but they don't look it.

She likes Texas City and loves the children. "They all call me 'grandma," even the adults," she said.

"I try to do daily exercises. It seems impossible that I am 80 years old. I'm still doing what people do when they are 40," she said.

She's got three sewing machines and "something going all the time," she says.

"I've had a real wonderful life. I've never been rich. The debts kept us working. But I am just not able to sit down and do nothing," she said.

She applauds College of the Mainland. "They are so eager to help people get in."

And she applauds the kids who pushed her along.

"They are proud of me, and they love me so much it makes me cry," she said.

Andrews put off

SEMINOLE — The first step toward a state crown for the Andrews High baseball team has been pushed back a day because of the weather.

Andrews took a 2-0 lead over Lubbock Estacado Thursday night at Seminole High in a Region I-4A area playoff game which was postponed after three innings because of rain. The game is tentatively scheduled to resume today at 1 p.m. in Seminole.

The Mustangs definitely had the upper hand in what little action there was. Left-hander Cody Klein retired the first nine hitters he faced and Andrews (25-3) scored twice in the bottom of the second for the game's only runs.

Midland Christian

BELTON — The Midland Christian Lady Mustang softball team faces Concordia Lutheran at 11 a.m. today in the Class 4A Texas Association of Private and Parochial Schools semifinals at Mary-Hardin Baylor University.

Midland Christian comes into the game with a 16-12 record after defeating Fort Worth Christian, 8-4, in the regional finals on Tuesday to reach the Class 4A TAPPS Final Four for the third straight time. The win for the Lady Mustangs was especially gratifying for the seniors, who had to miss their senior trip in order to play.

Concordia Lutheran comes into the contest with an 18-12 record. C.L. beat San Antonio Christian, 8-0 to get to the semifinals.

The winner of today's game meets either Lutheran (18-3) or Pasadena Harvest (21-7) in Saturday's 3 p.m. championship game.

Carlesimo fired

PORTLAND, Ore. — The long-rumored firing of Portland coach P.J. Carlesimo became a reality Thursday, with Trail Blazers president Bob Whitsitt saying the team needs a playing style that meshes with its quick young talent.

Carlesimo, who will be paid slightly over $3 million for the remaining two years of his five-year contract, appeared for the news conference that announced his firing. He said he was disappointed and disagreed with Whitsitt's opinion, but refused to criticize the Blazers' president.

"I believed coming in it was the best organization in professional sports and I still believe that, so that hurts," Carlesimo said. "I wanted to keep doing this. But that's not something you have control over."

Red Raider tandem applies for NBA draft

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK — Juniors Tony Battie and Cory Carr, who formed one of the most imposing inside-outside tandems in college basketball, announced Thursday that they've applied for the NBA draft.

Whether both actually leave remains to be seen.

Battie, a 6-11 center who's a near-lock as a top 10 draftee, seemed confident he'll move on. Carr, the Big 12's leading scorer at guard, wouldn't confirm whether he'd follow through.

"I'd like to thank coach (James) Dickey for standing by my side and giving me all the information that I needed," said Battie, who added that he based his decision on his family, coaches and prayer.

Carr followed Battie at a morning news conference with the same declaration, though the 6-5 guard was more adamant that he could complete his eligibility.

"If things don't work out the way I'd like them to ... I'll definitely return for my senior season," Carr said.

Both players said the lottery draft order might determine whether they turn pro. The players have until June 18 to finalize their decision. The draft is June 25.

As sophomores, the players were instrumental in leading Tech to the Sweet 16 round of the NCAA Tournament two years ago. They took over last season after four key seniors departed, with Battie averaging 19 points and 12 rebounds and Carr leading the Big 12 with 23 points per game.

With them, Dickey envisioned his 1997-98 team as a national title contender. He admits the Red Raiders won't be as good without them, but their loss wouldn't necessarily be catastrophic.

"I expect to win," Dickey said. "I don't expect to be as good, but I think we can be outstanding on the perimeter."

Asked how quickly his group of inexperienced frontcourt players must develop to fill Battie's void, Dickey responded, "Yesterday."

Battie said he'd discussed his decision with dozens of people. Some of the most important advice came from his brother, Derrick, a former starter for Tem-

Lee stands 3rd behind Churchill

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

AUSTIN — For Midland Lee golf fans, the first day of the UIL State Golf Championships can be summed up easily.

The Lady Rebels shot their season-best total, but the best by far on the par-71 Roy Kizer Course was San Antonio Churchill.

Midland Lee had its best round of the year on Thursday with a team-total of 314, good for third after the first day of the two-day tournament, but the Churchill team brought the course to its knees with a 286.

The defending Class 5A champions hold a commanding 17-stroke lead over The Woodlands and left the field in awe of their accomplishments.

"We broke our team record," Lee's Kelly Feavel said. "All we can do is play our best. We can't do anything about the other teams, especially when Churchill shoots (two-over-par) 286. That is amazing. I haven't seen a guys' team do that."

How dominant was Churchill on this day? Well, they put up the best two individual scores (Sal Mussani's 68 and Randi Meadows' 70) and added two scores of 74. And since only the top four scores count towards the team total, one score from the five players is left out. Churchill's fifth-best score was a Jackie Ey's 75, which was good enough to tie her for eighth place in the individual race.

Even the newest of Lady Rebels, freshman Amy Roach couldn't help but pass a compliment their way. When asked what surprised her about her first experience at state she simply said, "Churchill's scores. They are a great team."

Churchill's performance was impressive, but for the Rebels, it didn't take away from a solid and interesting first day for the Rebels. The Rebels shot their season's best score at the state's top tournament. Coach Phyllis Sutton, who has taken either a team or individual to state in five of her nine years at Lee, expected that type of performance from Feavel, Roach, Sandi Talley, Krystal Mehaffey and Amber Meyers.

"I thought we could shoot at this level, and we will shoot better," said Sutton, who coached the team that won the state title in 1993. "This team is competitive, and this is what gets us to state. The competition is the best I have seen here, and we are in the race. We can catch up for second. We probably will not catch Churchill unless they fall apart."

Karin Tjelmeland of San Antonio Churchill High School hits from a fairway bunker on the fifth hole during the girls' Class 5A state UIL golf tournament Thursday at Roy Kizer Course in Austin.

Sutton's golfers were led by their senior twosome. Feavel shot 75 to put her in tie for eighth while Talley stands at 77 and is tied for 13th. Both had their moments, but they still said they can do more.

"I thought I played good" said Feavel, who had three birdies, four bogeys and one double bogey. "I was a little disappointed that I finished third in my group behind a 68 and 74. There was no stopping that one girl (Mussani)."

Talley's day was solid but her chances of posting a top-five score were beached with two trips to greenside bunkers at No. 9 and No. 16. Both resulted in double bogeys. Her double on No. 16 happened as she was 1-under on the back side, and it was a result of her taking a big chance on the 222-yard 4-par, which is surrounded by a deep bunker in front and deep canyon in the back.

"I drove the green with a 5-wood yesterday (in the practice round) and that's why I didn't lay up. I will not be doing that again," said Talley, who also had one

HAWLEY — Instant replay has arrived in the Class 5A state softball playoffs.

At least that's the way Lee head softball coach Perry Young sees today's 5 p.m. Region I final matchup here just north of Abilene with Keller.

"It's going to be instant replay," Young said this week as his team was setting sights on a state tournament berth for the second time in three years. "I expect the game to be just the same as it was last year when we played them in the playoffs. Pitching is again going to be the key."

And pitching is also an instant replay as Lee's Chrystal Smith goes against Keller's Tracey Dean, the same matchup as was seen last year when Keller eliminated Lee from the state playoffs with a 2-1 victory in the region semifinals in a game played in Brownwood.

In last year's meeting, Smith tossed a three-hitter and lost. Dean tossed a two-hitter at Lee and Keller scored two unearned runs in the bottom of the sixth to take the win. Lee had taken a 1-0 lead in the top of the sixth when Kim Murphy doubled home pinch runner Jessica Welborn.

In the bottom of the sixth, however, Keller's Melanie Oswalt singled with two outs and the bases loaded to produce the win off of Smith. Smith almost got out of that inning, but Lee shortstop Jessica Garcia made an error to load the bases with two outs.

Garcia, one of the finest shortstops in District 4-5A, is back and has a chance to rectify that one mistake. And Smith is pitching like a machine as the rematch

■ Lee baseball team opens three-game series against Socorro today in Carlsbad.

The Region I-5A baseball playoffs are only one round old, but Midland Lee has already established a pattern which has led to victory: Find a small opening, and make the most of it in a hurry.

That was what the Rebels needed to do last Saturday against Amarillo High in the bi-district round when they had to win twice for their season to continue. In the first game, Lee took advantage of an error to lead off the third inning, which resulted in a total of five runs on the way to a 13-6 win. The next game, the Rebels scored in every inning on the way to winning 12-7 and advancing.

Quite simply, Lee took advantage of each situation that went its way.

"Momentum is the big aspect of the whole thing," Lee coach Jesse Benavidez said. "We knew if we could just get that first game going in our favor (Amarillo High) would get down. What I liked about it was that (the Rebels) never gave up."

Lee moves on to the area round against District 2-5A champion El Paso Socorro. The first game of a best-of-three series starts at 8:15 p.m. CDT today in Carlsbad, N.M.. The two teams will meet in the second game at 11 a.m. CDT Saturday, with a third game to follow if necessary.

The 25 runs scored in the last two games against Amarillo High are indicative of how consistent the Rebels have been offensively over the last nine games. Lee also got some help from the pitching-thin Sandies Saturday, drawing 19 walks in the two games.

"I feel like we're being a little bit more selective at the plate as far as taking more pitches," Benavidez said. "We had

Bird takes offer to be Pacers' coach

By Hank Lowenkron
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Larry Bird, who did just about everything a player can do on a basketball court, will try his hand at something new in his own back yard: coaching.

Bird, who led the Boston Celtics to three NBA championships and had been an adviser for the team since retiring in 1992, has agreed to coach the Indiana Pacers.

"I'm very excited about this opportunity to go back home and coach the Indiana Pacers," Bird said Thursday in a statement. "Indiana is the only team I wanted to coach, and I am excited about this new challenge and new career."

Terms of the deal were not released, although earlier reports said it was worth at least $4 million a year for the native of French Lick, the southern Indiana town about two hours from Indianapolis.

It will be the first coaching job on any level for the 40-year-old Bird, who led Indiana State to the NCAA championship game in 1979. The Pacers will formally introduce him as the coach at a news conference Monday at Market Square Arena.

Pacers president Donnie Walsh, who contacted Bird about the position even before Larry Brown resigned as coach of the Pacers, isn't worried about

UMass stripped of '96 Final Four

By Jeff Donn
Associated Press Writer

AMHERST, Mass. — The NCAA stripped Massachusetts of its 1996 Final Four finish — the school's best ever — on Thursday because former star Marcus Camby accepted gifts from a sports agent.

The NCAA's executive committee, meeting in Pebble Beach, Calif., also determined that Massachusetts must return $151,000 in tournament money.

Camby, a 6-foot-11 center now playing with the Toronto Raptors, led a team coached by John Calipari to a 35-2 season that ended with a loss to Kentucky in the national semifinals. That trophy must now be returned, and the title will be stripped from the record books with an asterisk.

This marks the sixth time a Final Four result has been vacated. The others involved St. Joseph's (1961), Villanova and Western Kentucky (1971), UCLA (1980) and Memphis (1985).

UMass chancellor David Scott said he felt a

Travs get by Angels in 10th inning

Staff Report

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The Midland Angels had to keep coming back Thursday night, but they never got a chance to do so at the end.

After Bret Hemphill tied the game with a solo home run to lead off the ninth inning, he had his dramatics stolen in the 10th inning by Arkansas' Jason LaRiviere and the Angels dropped a 7-6 decision.

Hemphill had a chance to be a hero in the top of the 10th with two runners on base when he launched a shot deep toward the right-center field wall which appeared destined to give the Angels (17-16) the lead but was snagged by LaRiviere to end the inning.

At the bottom of the inning, the Travelers put runners on base with a bloop double by Scarborough Green, who was sacrificed to second off Midland loser Anthony Chavez. LaRiviere singled to left field to drive in the game-winning run.

Midland overcame a 4-1 deficit to briefly take the lead. Derrick White and Jamie Burke each drove in runs with base hits in the third while Danny Buxbaum gave the Angels a 5-4 lead in the sixth with a double.

Arkansas took the lead in the seventh when Chavez walked Green to force home a run, setting the stage for Hemphill's homer off Curtis King on the first pitch of the ninth.

"great sense of loss for the university and its supporters."

Added athletic director Bob Marcum: "It's a shame so many people who were not involved in any wrongdoing have to share in the loss." He said the university will not challenge the decision.

The executive committee also stripped Connecticut of its run in the 1996 tournament and ordered it to return $90,970 of its postseason money because players accepted plane tickets from an agent.

Both cases are reportedly at least partly linked to John Lounsbury, who became a certified agent in 1994 before getting out of the business earlier this year and filing for bankruptcy protection. The Boston Globe reported this week that Camby secretly repaid $28,000 to Lounsbury after Lounsbury claimed his life was in danger from loan sharks.

ple now playing overseas.

"He told me, 'Do what you got to do and don't look back,' " Battie said.

Battie blossomed last season, evolving as a defensive specialist who could rebound into an all-around player with a soft shooting touch.

"He's the real deal. Tony Battie is the best center in this league, hands down," Baylor coach Harry Miller said after the season. "When you get past (Wake Forest's) Tim Duncan, I don't know that there's anybody in the country any better. He's quick, agile and can run."

Carr is projected in the late first round or second round. Second-round picks aren't guaranteed contracts, and Carr and Dickey said that could influence his decision in the coming month.

birdie and three bogeys. "I have trouble in the sand when there is trouble over the green. That is when I get 8s.

"All around, I feel I did well."

She did, as did Mehaffey. The junior, was the third Lady Rebel to break 80, posting a 79. She had eight bogeys and one birdie and was taken by the level of play at the state level.

"There is a lot of competition and I didn't expect that," Mehaffey said. "It made me focus. My concentration helped me get up and down. I know I can play with them. Our team can handle it. We are OK."

Roach, the team's freshman, fired an 84 with back-to-back 42s. The tournament finally brought out some nervous feelings in the unusually confident freshman. Roach said that it is now time to raise the level of her game to that of her comrades.

"I'm tired of the low 80s," Roach said. "Today, I wanted to go in the lower 80s and I did that. Now, I want to go lower. Our team goal is to win and we are doing that."

Meyers shot a 94 but had one of the more memorable first-time performances in Austin. She plays No. 4 for the Rebels, and her group was one to behold, but according to Meyers, not one to be behind. When asked about her round, she said, "The course is nice," but she couldn't help but express her opinion about her group's play.

"The girls in my group were not the most pleasant things," said Meyers in a matter-of-fact voice. "Everything they do was so slow. At one point, we were two holes behind and we probably ended up three holes behind. I was already not doing well, and I did not want to get a stroke penalty for something that I didn't do. They are sitting around the green looking at their putts five times and telling me to back up from my ball. I thought 'You are not a pro. We are playing No. 4.'"

Meyers did have a legitimate excuse about her group's slow play, but she found out the hard way that this is state. That means a great deal to many. For Lee and the rest of the field, it means having fun while playing for second. For Churchill, it means doing everything possible to finish its round, because if that happens, they will repeat at state.

KIZER COMMENTS: Mark one up for gender equity. The Churchill girls posted the best score at the tournament with their 286. The first-place Rockwall boys shot a 292. One reason for that was the difference in course yardage... Twice Talley's group was hit into by the Duncanville's Lori Sutherland, who played in the group behind her. No warnings were given to the Pantherette... The Abilene High girls shot 327 while the Central boys are fifth after a 305... Today's rounds begin at 7 a.m. with the girls at No. 10 and boys at No. 1...

BASEBALL: Rebels take on Socorro

quite a few bases on balls in (Saturday's games)."

In the deciding game against Amarillo High, Benavidez made something of a roll of the dice with his lineup, starting Dusty Crowe at first base over John Purves and hitting Crowe sixth in the order. Benavidez made this move out of what he called instinct despite the fact that Crowe had only one hit in 19 at-bats in District 4-5A play. Crowe rewarded this hunch by getting two hits, including a two-run single in the first inning which put Lee on the board.

When the Rebels take the field today, Benavidez isn't giving away who is going to be in the lineup, but he said the bottom of the lineup will be a key. It certainly was in the third game against Amarillo High as No. 8 hitter Stacy Jones drew three walks and scored twice while No. 9 hitter Matt Watson (who had only one hit during the regular season) had a pair of hits against the Sandies, scored twice and drove in three runs.

"I'm going to use people down there who will put the ball in play," Benavidez said.

That could be a challenge against Socorro, at least when Nick Alvarez is on the mound. Alvarez was Socorro's ace this season, posting a 7-1 record with a 2.33 ERA while striking out 60 in 57 innings. He would seem a natural to start game one, although coach Chris Forbes wouldn't confirm it.

What Forbes does know is that his team will face Lee's Mike Hale, who won the first game Saturday against Amarillo High. Hale, who has won three playoff decisions in four outings, beat the Sandies more on grit than power, surrendering 11 hits in pitching a complete game.

Unlike the Rebels, Socorro hasn't faced much playoff pressure. The Bulldogs rely heavily on two players, Alvarez and Albert Montez. Alvarez hit .424 with five home runs and 27 RBIs, playing first base when not pitching, while Montez posted a 5-1 record as the No. 2 pitcher and hit .463 and drove in 20 runs as a third baseman.

Forbes, who scouted Lee last weekend, knows what his team is up against.

"We're going to have to go out and play some defense," Forbes said. "It's going to be a matter of us stopping some of the things (the Rebels) can do well."

SOFTBALL: Lady Rebs face Keller again approaches.

Smith has hurled three consecutive two-hitters in the playoffs and had a no-hitter through six innings in a 4-0 win over Hurst L.D. Bell in the region semifinals last Saturday in Abilene. She has back-to-back shutouts to her credit.

Dean, too, is again in top form. She defeated Abilene High with a two-hitter Saturday in Stephenville to eliminate the Lady Eagles. AHS' Kelly Armbruster tossed a three-hitter and lost.

If history holds to form, one of the pitchers will have to allow less than three hits.

Against Lee last year, Dean threw only 47 pitches at Lee in the first five innings and only 14 of them were balls. She walked one and KOed seven Lady Rebels on strikes.

"Dean is tough," Young said, "but I really feel our team will hit better this year. I think without question that we have been a better hitting team this year. At least, I hope that is the case. Keller is just a mentally tough team and it will take a great effort to beat them."

Smith has given up only two earned runs (both against El Paso Bel Air in the rain) in 20 playoff innings for a 0.90 ERA.

Lee carries a 23-4 season record into the game while Keller is 28-7. The winner moves on to the Final Four state tournament next week in Austin. Lee made the state tournament in 1995, it's first season in UIL competition under coach J.C. Gotcher. Now Young hopes to join that state tournament coaching list.

A year ago, after that loss to Keller, Young promised that his team would be back. That promise is now complete, and the instant replay is set.

Smith offered Kentucky job

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Kentucky has offered its coaching job to Tubby Smith, a former Rick Pitino assistant who led Georgia to consecutive 20-win seasons, Georgia athletic director Vince Dooley said Thursday.

Dooley, speaking to reporters at the Georgia athletic building, said Smith flew to Lexington, Ky., on Wednesday night to meet with Wildcats athletic director C.M. Newton.

"I do know that they would like to have him in Kentucky," Dooley said. "He was offered the job. It's his job to either take or turn down. More than likely, knowing the situation, he would probably take the job."

Dooley said Smith was meeting with his family and friends before deciding whether to accept the Kentucky offer.

Pierce beats Seles in Italy

ROME (AP) — Until Thursday, Mary Pierce never had won a set against Monica Seles. This time, she took two straight and ousted the No. 1 seed from the Italian Open.

In a fiercely contested match that was delayed for hours by rain, Pierce downed Seles 7-6 (8-6), 7-6 (8-6) to reach the quarterfinals of the women's clay court tournament.

Seles wasted three set points in the first set and five in the second.

In the first set, Seles climbed back from 3-0 and 4-2 deficits, but at the decisive point it was Pierce who scrambled at the baseline to save three set points in the tie-breaker, then win on a deftly placed drop volley.

Seles served for the second set at 6-5, failed to close on two set points and went into another tie-breaker.

"I just kept fighting for every point," Pierce said. "I wasn't going to worry about the outcome."

Pierce had been a pushover for Seles in their three previous meeetings, all before Seles missed 27 months of the tour after being stabbed during a tournament in Germany in 1993.

Pierce, the 10th seed, has yet to win a tournament this year, reaching two final, including the Australian Open, the Grand Slam she won in 1995.

Seles also has reached two finals, losing each to the new No. 1 player, Martina Hingis, in the only tournaments she played before the Italian Open.

Arantxa Sanchez Vicario and Conchita Martinez, top-ranked Spanish rivals who are without a tournament victory for months, reached the quarterfinals with straight-set wins.

No. 3 Martinez, bidding for her fifth consecutive Italian title, beat 12th-seeded Elena Likhovtseva of Russia 6-2, 6-1. No. 2 Sanchez Vicario defeated 13th-seeded Sabine Appelmans of Belgium 6-3, 6-4.

Hawks dispel Bulls' invincibility

By Mike Nadel
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — For the first time in two seasons, the Chicago Bulls look beatable. And the Atlanta Hawks are only too happy to do the beating.

"Nothing comes better than this. Nothing comes better than this!" an elated Dikembe Mutombo said Thursday night after Atlanta pulled even in the Eastern Conference semifinals with a 103-95 victory. "We had the confidence going into the game that we were going to win."

Steve Smith scored 27 points and Mookie Blaylock added 26, including eight backbreaking 3-pointers, as Atlanta became the first visiting team in two years to win a playoff game at the United Center.

Games 3 and 4 of the best-of-7 series are at Atlanta on Saturday and Sunday, and "unless we do the things we did all season to get 69 wins," Chicago's Scottie Pippen said, "we're not going to pull another win out of this series."

The Bulls toyed with the entire league in winning a record 72 games and rolling to the NBA championship last season. Then they won 69 more this season. But they ended the year in a 1-3 slump and have played poorly throughout the playoffs despite being able to pull out their first four postseason games.

"We've been living on the edge the last four games and this time we got stung," said Michael Jordan, who had 27 points and 16 rebounds. "But that doesn't mean we can't turn this around."

Chicago went 39-2 at home each of the last two seasons and was 13-0 at the United Center in the playoffs over that span — a combined 91-4 — before losing to the young, aggressive Hawks.

"I'm not ready to push the panic button yet. I'd advise you guys not to do that, either," Jordan said. "In all the years we won championships, we lost games."

But the Bulls haven't had a stretch of poor play like this in a long time. Washington often outplayed Chicago in the first round despite being swept, and Atlanta seemed ready to pull out a win in this series' opener before the Bulls rallied on Jordan's 20 third-quarter points and Pippen's late 3-pointer.

'We stayed aggressive. We were going to the basket," said Blaylock, whose team was 36-5 at home this season. "The other night, we got timid and stopped looking at the basket."

Blaylock, who was 8-for-9 from 3-point range, said the Bulls had trouble with the Hawks' screen-and-roll.

"They're really not handling it well," he said. "They're leaving me open and giving me wide open looks."

Pippen ripped Chicago's forwards and centers for their poor defensive help. He especially tore into Dennis Rodman, who had only five rebounds before fouling out and picked up his seventh technical foul in the five playoff games.

"We've got to have a big effort from Dennis," Pippen said. "He's got to avoid the technical fouls. He's just got to play the game.

"There's a lot of other things that Dennis can do on the court. If he's not going to lead us in rebounding, don't lead us in technical fouls, because we don't need those."

Atlanta trailed 68-67 with three minutes left in the third quarter before it used a 19-3 run to take the lead for good at 86-71.

Christian Laettner opened the spurt with four of his 18 points and Mutombo followed with five of his 19. Blaylock then made his eighth 3-pointer as the shot clock expired, Smith and Mutombo scored, and Smith capped the run with a 3-pointer.

The Bulls again tried to rally behind Jordan and Pippen. But after they made it 93-86, Laettner scored on a drive and Smith hit two free throws to put the Hawks comfortably in front with 1:26 left.

Oilers deal may let team go to Tennessee this fall

HOUSTON — After 14 hours of negotiations, Houston Oilers owner Bud Adams and Astrodome manager Drayton McLane Jr. reached a deal Thursday that likely will allow the football team to play in Tennessee this fall.

Adams and McLane worked for two days with a court-appointed mediator to resolve disputes over a canceled preseason game in 1995 and the remaining year of the Oilers' lease at the Astrodome.

Neither side would discuss details of the settlement and the mediator said both sides have agreed the discussions will remain confidential.

Adams, however, said he planned to have the Oilers train at Tennessee State in Nashville this summer. The team's new permanent practice facility isn't supposed to be ready until Aug. 15.

"The settlement includes the termination of the Oilers lease and the resolution of the lawsuit over the 1995 game," Alice Oliver-Parrott, the mediator, said. "The settlement, however, has a number of conditions which will take time to be satisfied."

Although the Oilers' new stadium in Nashville won't be finished until 1999, Adams fought to get out of his lease at the Astrodome early because he didn't see any point to keeping them in Houston as a lame-duck team.

He broke ground on the new facility last weekend. The Oilers will play at the Liberty Bowl in Memphis while their 67,000-seat, taxpayer-funded arena is being built.

"It's a win-win situation," Adams said after emerging from the federal courthouse in downtown Houston. "We're not going to discuss the terms right now."

He added: "It's all been settled. It is a matter of getting the paperwork done now. ... We're looking forward to getting the show on the road."

"I'm glad we got a conclusion that's fair for everybody," McLane, who owns baseball's Houston Astros and whose company manages the Harris County-owned dome, said. "I feel it's fair when you take all the things into consideration. We have certainly struggled to get there."

Any settlement still must be approved by Houston Mayor Bob Lanier, who said he had not heard all the details and only had indirect contact Thursday with Adams and McLane.

"I think 'are gone' probably overstates it but I think the likelihood that they will play in Houston is very low," Lanier said.

"If the Astros are satisfied ... if the county feels they're getting what's coming to them ... I'm satisfied."

In February, Harris County commissioners approved a $5.25 million buyout offer from the team that removed any county objections to the Oilers leaving Houston a year early.

Lanier said his main goal was for the city to recover an estimated $2 million in legal fees it incurred when the Oilers sued the city, Harris County and Astrodome USA in 1995.

BIRD: Larry Legend takes Pacers' job

(From 1C)

Bird's lack of experience.

"He looks at the game from more of a coach's mind than a player's mind," Walsh said. "He's a very bright guy and a very honest guy, as well as a very tough guy. All those qualities add up. He'd be very successful anywhere he went.

"In the case of a Larry Bird, simplicity may be the best form of an announcement: He's back home again in Indiana," Walsh said.

Pacers co-owner Herb Simon also wasn't concerned about Bird's lack of coaching experience.

"I'm not a basketball man and I depended very heavily on club president Donnie Walsh on the hiring of Larry," Simon said. "Walsh is very impressed with Larry's potential. Bird was motivational as a player, his basketball intelligence is unquestioned.

"It's always a risk when you hire a new coach, but I'm very comfortable with the decision to hire Larry."

Bird's major responsibility for the Celtics had been scouting, but he was the one who first talked to Rick Pitino about leaving Kentucky to become Boston's new coach.

At a news conference in Boston on Thursday, Pitino said he wanted Bird to stay with the Celtics and act as a general manager who would also scout and help out in practice.

"We'd love Larry Bird to be a part of the Celtics," Pitino said before the Pacers made their announcement. "Larry Bird epitomizes Celtics pride. Whatever title he wants, he can have."

But the lure of being a coach was apparently too strong for Bird, who earned the nickname "Larry Legend" in Boston.

"It's a career decision for him of whether he wants to be in the front office or whether he wants to be out there coaching calling timeouts," Pitino said. "If he wants to coach, then that is something we'll wish him well on."

Red Auerbach, who announced his resignation as president of the Celtics on Thursday, agreed.

"He'll do well at anything because he's bright and he's very motivated. When he has a purpose to do something, he does it," said Auerbach, whose decision to select Bird as an undergraduate when he intended to stay in college for his senior year proved to be one of the best of his career.

Bird's rise to stardom is legendary in Indiana, where basketball is revered like no other sport.

He was a state high school all-star before enrolling at Indiana in 1974 to play for Bob Knight. But he dropped out of school even before practice began and sat out a year. He worked part-time on a garbage truck and then enrolled at Indiana State in Terre Haute.

Bird was a two-time All-American at Indiana State. He was the college player of the year as a senior, when he led the Sycamores to the No. 1 ranking and an undefeated season until a loss in the NCAA title game against Michigan State and Magic Johnson.

"I thought if he coached, it would be the Celtics. I never thought it would be anywhere else," Johnson said Thursday night.

Nevertheless, he said, "Boston would have been unbearable. They would have expected a championship next year. I think it worked out for the best both ways. Pitino can build a program, I think Larry will get the most out of his players in Indiana."

Richter shuts out Devils, 3-0

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Richter, playing like he did when the Rangers won the Stanley Cup three years ago, stopped 35 shots Thursday night for his third shutout of the playoffs, a 3-0 victory that gave New York a 3-1 series lead over New Jersey.

Wayne Gretzky, playing like he always seems to in big games, scored a goal and overcame a frightening crash into the boards in leading the Rangers within a victory of the Eastern Conference finals.

New Jersey, scuttled by a disallowed tying goal for the third game in a row, will be at home for Game 5 on Sunday, trying to avoid being eliminated by the Rangers for the third time in six seasons.

The hard-fought game ended with a shoving match that resulted in penalties to all 10 skaters on the ice, including a game misconduct to the Devils' Reid Simpson. The second period also ended with a group shoving match that sent three Devils and two Rangers to the penalty box.

CART, IRL could reach reconciliation next year

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The door is open, if only slightly, for a reconciliation next year between competing Indy-car factions at the Indianapolis 500.

With the speedway-backed Indy Racing League preparing to run its second 500 on May 25, and Championship Auto Racing Teams getting ready to race Sunday in Brazil, IRL officials said Thursday that their 1998 rules will be divulged May 15.

There has been rampant speculation that the changes will enable CART teams to enter the race they contested prior to 1996. CART pulled out when the Indianapolis Motor Speedway announced that 25 of 33 starting positions last year would go to regulars of the fledgling IRL.

CART, which has established stars such as two-time Indy 500 champion Al Unser Jr. and Michael Andretti, will run its own Memorial Day weekend event for the second year in a row. This time, it will be in the debut of a new track just outside St. Louis on May 24.

"A number of manufacturers have requested, not specifications of the cars as much as what the supply rules will be," said Leo Mehl, executive director of the IRL.

He concedes there are many questions to be answered.

Prices climb

Gasoline futures rose for the biggest one-day gain in almost two months Thursday, strengthened by Gulf of Mexico refinery problems and predictions of booming demand when summer driving season starts.

Unplanned outages forced three Gulf of Mexico refineries to stop production at plants that put out 240,000 barrels of gasoline a day. Amoco, Citgo and Conoco predict their refineries will be working soon, but the problems do not bode well for a busy summer, said analyst Bill O'Grady at A.G. Edwards & Sons in St. Louis.

The 240,000-barrel output is a fraction of what U.S. consumers use in one day, but it comes at a time when American inventories are about 10 percent lower than normal and refineries are operating at almost full capacity.

Refineries must be in optimum shape to provide gasoline for what is expected to be a very busy summer driving season that traditionally begins Memorial Day, O'Grady said.

June crude rose 72 cents to $20.34 a barrel.

June natural gas fell 8 cents to $2.273 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Dollar retreats

NEW YORK — The dollar fell for the fourth straight day against the yen Thursday in a broad selloff after remarks by Japan's top foreign-exchange policymaker suggested it could fall as low as 103 yen by yearend.

The impact of his comments pushed the dollar to the lowest level in more than a month against the yen and left it sharply weaker against European currencies.

In New York, the dollar cost 123.77 yen, down from 125.13 yen Wednesday and the lowest since April 3. The decline left the dollar down 2.80 yen or 2.2 percent this week.

Against the mark, the dollar dropped to 1.7083 marks, down from 1.7212 Thursday and down 2.1 pfennigs or 1.2 percent this week. The pound strengthened to $1.6200 from $1.6113.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with Wednesday: 1.4460 Swiss francs, down from 1.4610; 5.7610 French francs, down from 5.7965; 1,689.00 Italian lire, down from 1,701.25; 1.3847 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3820.

Stocks rebound

NEW YORK — Stocks bounced back Thursday as the previous day's pangs about inflation and interest rates vanished almost as quickly as they appeared.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 50.97 to 7,136.62, led by a big gain from IBM. During the afternoon, the Dow was up nearly 130 points, nearly erasing Wednesday's 140-point plunge.

Broader stock indicators also pulled back before the close, but still managed to wipe out a sizable portion of Wednesday's losses.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by a 9-to-7 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume totaled 534.11 million shares.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock list rose 4.66 to 820.28, and the NYSE's composite index rose 1.95 to 426.90.

The Nasdaq composite index rose 7.89 to 1,330.80, and the American Stock Exchange composite index rose 0.45 to 570.95.

Weather chills retailers' sales in April

■ Cool weather last month discouraged spring shoppers and resulted in lower-than-expected sales for many stores.

Associated Press

Cool weather through much of the country last month discouraged shoppers from buying spring dresses and lawn mowers, resulting in lower-than-expected sales at many of the nation's biggest retailers.

"Cooler weather hurt seasonal categories," said Joseph Ronning, a retail analyst at Brown Brothers Harriman. "That left sales for the month generally disappointing for many retailers."

April's figures were also depressed without the benefit of Easter sales during the month. Easter fell in April last year, while the holiday fell in March this year for most U.S. Christians.

Among the weaker performers were Gap Inc. and Kmart Corp.

"We did experience a broad decline in traffic beginning in the second week in April, which affected primarily weather-sensitive items such as horticulture and selected apparel areas," said Floyd Hall, Kmart chairman and chief executive.

For many stores, sales have been lagging for the last year. Despite the high levels of consumer confidence, many shoppers still watch their spending.

But April wasn't bad for everyone: Discounters and moderately priced department stores posted the strongest gains in April as consumers placed value above everything else. Sears, Roebuck and Co., J.C. Penney Co. and Wal-Mart Stores Inc. reported healthy sales for the month.

The Salomon Brothers retail index, the investment firm's barometer of sales performance, rose 3.6 percent last month after a 4.4 percent gain in March.

Wal-Mart, the nation's largest retailer, said its sales from stores open at least a year rose 6.1 percent from a year earlier, while total sales rose 11.7 percent.

Sales from stores open at least a year, known as same-store sales, are considered the most accurate measure of a retailer's strength. They exclude sales from stores that have been closed and from new stores, which often have disproportionately strong sales.

No. 2 Sears said its same-store sales rose 3.4 percent, while total sales rose 7.9 percent. Kmart's same-store sales fell 0.8 percent, while total sales were off 2.2 percent.

Dayton Hudson Corp. said same-store sales increased 2.9 percent and total sales rose 8.4 percent. Comparable-store sales at Target rose 6.7 percent and total sales rose 15.6 percent, while sales continued to be weak at its Mervyn's clothing stores and its three department store chains.

J.C. Penney said its same-store sales rose 5.7 percent and total gains were up 45.1 percent, including sales figures from Eckerd drugstores, which it acquired last year.

Federated Department Stores Inc. said its same-store sales rose 6.2 percent and total sales gained 7.2 percent. May Department Stores Co. said its same-store sales rose 3 percent and total sales were up 8.7 percent.

Gap said its same-store sales fell 6 percent compared with a year ago, while total business was up 9 percent.

These figures are narrower than retail sales numbers released by the Commerce Department, which also reflect sales of restaurants and auto dealers. The government's retail sales figure will be released May 13.

Ford to cut costs over $1 billion

■ Ford CEO says cost cuts will be substantially higher than stated goal of $1 billion.

N.Y. Times News Service

Windsor, Ontario — Ford Motor Co. Chief Executive Alex Trotman said the company will post cost cuts in 1997 that are "substantially" more than its often-stated goal of $1 billion.

"I think we're going to be substantially north of $1 billion," Trotman told shareholders Thursday at Ford's annual meeting, which was held in Windsor, Ontario. The automaker cut $800 million in the first quarter but said other quarterly reductions would be smaller.

Trotman also said he expects Dearborn, Michigan-based company to be profitable in Europe this year. The automaker lost money in Europe last year and has struggled there with overcapacity, fierce competition and slow-selling models.

"There's a slugfest going on in Europe," Trotman said. Industry profit margins are narrowing "and I don't know a solution to it other than to trim our own capacity when we can."

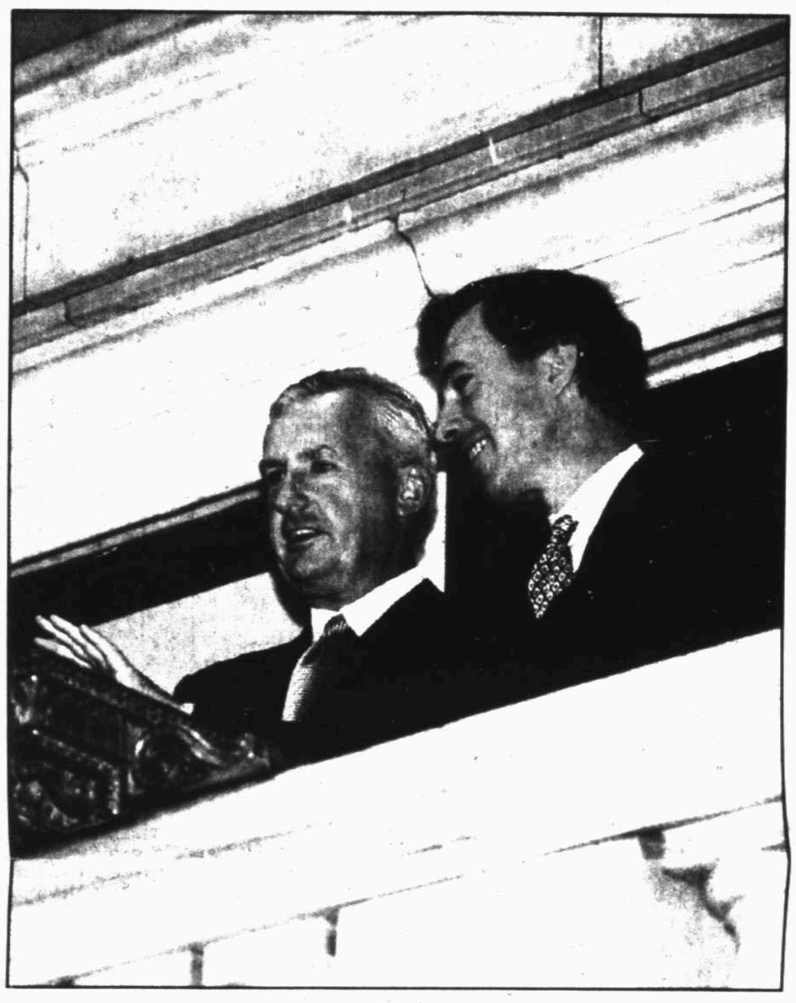
U.S. auto industry sales in 1998 should be 15.25 million to 15.5 million vehicles, Trotman said, little changed from what analysts are predicting for 1997. Most analysts and the three U.S.-based automakers have said 1997 U.S. vehicle sales will total 15 million to 15.5 million. Growth in the U.S. gross domestic product will probably be 3 percent in 1998, with inflation at about 2.5 percent to 3 percent, Trotman said.

"I have to confess, it looks good," he said of the economy.

Trotman faced several questions about the Associates First Capital Corp., a commercial lending company 80 percent owned by Ford that has been linked in several recent television and newspaper stories with deceptive lending practices.

A pastor from Washington, D.C., Grayan Ellis-Hagler, told shareholders today that Ford, through the Associates, is "preying upon neighborhoods and preying upon hard-working people." Trotman denied that, saying the company had high standards and a strong record of customer satisfaction. The company is investigating the allegations and will correct any problems, he said.

"There have been problems here and there, as there are in any large organization," Trotman said. The chairman also told shareholders he wants the automaker to have enough cash so it wouldn't have to cut its stock dividend during a recession, as it has in the past. He said Ford's board will consider a stock buyback program this year, as it does every year, though he doesn't know whether it will be approved.



Paying yourself

Above the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, Paul Hondros, left, president of Fidelity Investments, prepares to push the button and ring the bell to open trading Thursday. Robert G. Britz, executive vice president of the NYSE, is with him. Hondros was commemorating the launch of May 9, as "National Pay Yourself Day" to promote savings for retirement. The date was picked because it takes wages earned through May 8 to pay the average worker's annual tax bill.

Jobless claims steady at four-month peak

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The number of first-time claims for jobless benefits was unchanged last week as labor strikes and flooding continued to keep applications at a four-month high.

The Labor Department said Thursday that new applications for unemployment insurance totaled a seasonally adjusted 347,000, the same as during the week ended April 26, which had been the highest since 365,000 during the week ended Jan. 4.

Many analysts had forecast a drop of about 19,000.

But while claims had been expected to moderate from their April 26 level, economist Lynn Reaser of Barnett Banks Inc. in Jacksonville, Fla., had predicted they would total more than they had earlier this year.

She attributed the higher level to layoffs related to labor strikes, flood-related job losses and more moderate economic growth.

Still, analysts contend the economy continues to create jobs. The unemployment rate fell to 4.9 percent in April, lowest in more than two decades, as payrolls grew by 142,000.

The four-week moving average of new weekly jobless claims rose for a fifth straight week, up 5,750 to 336,250. It was the highest level since 339,750 during the period ended Jan. 25.

OPEC members agree to stick to quotas

N.Y. Times News Service

Isfahan, Iran — Oil ministers representing seven of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' 11 nations agreed they should stick to their OPEC quotas in a bid to shore up world oil prices.

OPEC ministers, who control about one-third of the world's oil, will meet in Vienna June 25 to determine the group's supply target, which is currently 25.033 million barrels a day.

The group has been pumping about 2 million bbl/day more than that in recent months though, analysts said, which has contributed to a 25 percent drop in oil prices this year.

"We all agreed that countries should abide by their quotas," Iran's oil minister, Gholamreza Aghazadeh, told reporters, speaking of behalf of all seven ministers.

The oil ministers, from Iran, Kuwait, Venezuela, Nigeria, Libya, Indonesia and Qatar met to discuss OPEC policy while attending an oil conference in Isfahan, Iran.

"All of us strongly want to increase the price. We have to be very careful now," Aghazadeh said when asked what guarantees OPEC could provide to ensure that it doesn't exceed its target.

The group of ministers included Venezuela and Nigeria, which exceed their quotas the most, by about 811,000 bbl/day and million 315,000 bbl/day respectively, according to Bloomberg Energy Service calculations.

The Libyan oil minister Abdalla Salem El-Badri, who is also currently OPEC president, said he would visit Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Qatar next week to discuss quota compliance.

OPEC members Saudi Arabia, UAE and Kuwait are currently showing the most restraint, analyst said, because they hold the lion's share of the group's unused production capacity, estimated at about 3 million bbl/day.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Getting 10 percent return is realistic expectation

By Eric Tyson

Q: One of your recent columns astounded me. Our portfolio with a huge investment firm has given us a 4.5 to 5 percent annual average return since early 1989, yet you said that investors can earn a 10 percent return. Aren't you being overly optimistic?

Tyson

A: No. In fact, during the past five and past 10 years, stock market investors who bought and held a diversified portfolio have enjoyed returns in excess of 10 percent.

The Wilshire 5000 index, which is the broadest measure of U.S. stock market performance, has produced an average annual total return of 14.9 percent and 14.7 percent during the past five and 10 years, respectively, for the periods ending Dec. 31, 1996.

Of course, the performance of individual portfolios varies from the market averages. Primarily because of investment fees, most investors earn a return slightly below the market index averages. Trading in and out of the market also almost always lowers one's returns.

Even if a portion of your portfolio is invested in bonds, the returns you're getting are still well below what they should be.

The average annual total return of the Lehman Intermediate Term Bond Index during the past five and 10 years has been 7.6 percent and 8.6 percent, respectively.

To be honest, I have been accused more of pessimism than optimism in recent years! To a newer stock investor who has never experienced a down market, my 10 percent figure seems abysmally low. History has shown, however, that over the long term, stocks do indeed return about 10 percent per year. To assume that the market will sustain annual returns of 15 percent going forward is unrealistic.

An annual average return of around 5 percent since 1989 is terrible, by just about anyone's standards. Sounds to me like you should choose a new strategy ... and find a new investment firm.

I recommend that you learn how to invest in diversified, professionally managed mutual funds. Focus on funds offered by companies with long track records of success and ones that charge low fees.

If you want to guarantee that you earn the market rate of return, you can invest in index mutual funds.

Q: I have received a number of solicitations in recent months to invest in options. It appears that I can make great profits from the leverage afforded by options. I assume that these are volatile investments so that I can lose money too.

What do you think of options as an investment?

A: Financial instruments such as options and futures, also known as "derivatives," are not investments. Most derivatives represent short-term bets on the price movement of an underlying security, such as a stock or a commodity.

Individual investors should stay away from derivatives. Why? While you might enjoy an occasional short-term success, it's almost certain that you eventually will lose your money. Furthermore, the trading commissions on derivatives, as a percentage of the amount invested, are very high.

Derivatives are best used by professional money managers as a way to hedge investment risk. Proper hedging requires financial sophistication and costs money — that's why it's best left to the pros.

Professional investors also sometimes use derivatives as a way to speculate or leverage their potential returns. The pros sometimes guess wrong.

Don't put money in derivatives unless you treat it as gambling money that you are willing to lose.

And when you're investing with professional money managers, ask how and why they might include derivatives in their portfolios. I would avoid investing with managers who speculate with derivatives.

How To Read The Market in Review

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 405 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

Name: Stocks appear alphabetically by the company's full name (not its abbreviation). Names consisting of initials appear at the beginning of each letter's list.

Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.

Chg: Loss or gain for the day. No change indicated by ...

YTD: Percent change in price since December 31.

How to use: The year-to-date percent change compares the most recent price with the company's price as of Dec. 31. The number is a good way to compare and track the performance of different companies in the same industry or the same town.

Benchmarks are important in investing and the year-to-date percent change can be a useful field of information when used as a benchmark. If you were considering investing in the automotive industry, for example, you could watch to see which auto stock was enjoying the best performance so far this year by looking at this field.

These numbers can be helpful in following stocks but as with all financial data are only one of many factors to use in determining how to invest. Consult your financial advisor before making any investment decision.

Opening lead: Ace of ♣

At first sight it appears that the defenders can take four fast tricks against your four-spade contract. Because of the club blockage, however, that is not possible so, after banking the first two tricks with the ace and king of clubs, West finds the best defense by shifting to ace and another diamond. Can you get home?

North's double of two clubs showed length in the majors but limited strength. The vulnerability fully justifies South's jump to three spades, especially with such a powerful hand for the reopening double.

After winning the king of diamonds in hand, you cash the king of spades and discover the good and bad — West's diamond discard means trumps are 4-0, but at least the queen of spades is finessable. How do you proceed?

Your only entry to dummy is in hearts, but if you lead a low heart to the jack you are eventually going to have to depend on a 3-3 split in the suit to get home — try it if you like. Better is to lead the queen of hearts and overtake with the king. Now run the jack of spades, repeat the trump finesse, then draw the outstanding trump.

Next cash the ace of hearts on which East follows with the ten. The Principle of Restricted Choice as well as a differential count of the distribution, marks East to have started with 10-7 in hearts rather than 10-9-7, so your earlier play in hearts is about to bear fruit. Continue with a low heart and finesse the eight, and when East shows out you can cash the jack of hearts for your 10th trick.

'The X-Files' star Duchovny ties knot with NBC actress Tea Leoni

NEW YORK — No aliens crashed the wedding.

David Duchovny, the sexy investigator of Fox's "The X-Files," has married Tea Leoni, star of the NBC comedy "The Naked Truth."

The couple exchanged vows Tuesday evening at Grace Church School in Greenwich Village, where Duchovny went to school and where his mother still teaches.

David Duchovny and Tea Leoni got married Tuesday.

The Rev. Craig Townsend, an Episcopal minister, performed the 10-minute ceremony, which was attended by only a few family members.

Miss Leoni's publicist, Carissa Rosenberg, and Duchovny's media representatives confirmed Thursday that the actors married Tuesday at Grace Church School. The publicists declined to release any details of the ceremony, but Ms. Rosenberg said the two have been dating since January.

Duchovny, 37, wore a tan suit while the 31-year-old actress wore a pink strapless dress, according to the New York Daily News.

"We are thrilled. We are happy. It all worked. We are clanking rings," gossip columnist Liz Smith quoted the couple as saying Wednesday.

To keep the wedding a secret, Duchovny wore a fake moustache when he applied for a marriage license earlier this week, Smith said.

It's his first marriage and her second.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Travis Tritt says he used to play Russian roulette with AIDS.

Tritt, 34, told The Nashville Network in an interview to be broadcast May 20 that he was not successful with women as a youth, but that all changed when he started having hits like "Here's a Quarter (Call Someone Who Cares)" in the early 1990s.

"I was ... walking off stage every night and I didn't have to go looking," the country singer said.

"At the time that I was getting started with all this stuff, AIDS was just starting to come into the picture. And all of a sudden there's something out there that literally can take your life. And I was playing Russian roulette every night."

Tritt married model Theresa Nelson last month at his home near Atlanta.

NEW YORK — Alicia Silverstone often flirts in her films — and she's doing the same with her career.

"It's like I consider these my college years," the 20-year-old actress says in the June issue of US magazine. "I'm working really hard, and I'm working really stressfully. But I think that by the time I'm 22, if I want to, I can give it all up. And then after that I should probably consider a real career."

Alicia Silverstone hopes to give up acting before too long.

The star of "Clueless" has the leading role in the romantic comedy "Excess Baggage," the first movie to come out of her $10 million production deal with Columbia Pictures. She also plays Batgirl in "Batman and Robin," which comes out in June.

MINNEAPOLIS — He's only 16, and he's opening up for Aerosmith.

Blues guitarist Jonny Lang is slated to play at several East Coast concerts on Aerosmith's Nine Lives tour starting June 30, one of Lang's managers said Wednesday.

Lang, a North Dakota native, is touring Europe this month. He also is scheduled to tour with B.B. King, Tower of Power and Robert Cray on the East Coast in June, manager James Klein said.

Lang's "Lie to Me" rose to No. 55 on the Billboard album chart this week and is No. 1 on the blues chart.

NEW YORK — Sylvester Stallone paunchy and deaf in one ear?

In his latest film, "Cop Land," the actor plays the hero, a sheriff. But he's no Rambo.

"Oh, I suppose I'm as different as I can be without covering myself up in Elephant Man makeup," the 50-year-old Stallone says in the June issue of US magazine. "I'm much heavier. The body posture is different. The dialogue is almost apologetic and obsequious. He's not a pro-active character at all, until the end."

Stallone's character is afraid to investigate corrupt fellow officer and mentor (Harvey Keitel) until goaded by an international affairs agent played by Robert De Niro.

"Cop Land" is due for release in August.

SUMMER: 'Jurassic', 'Batman' sequels promise to be the big hits of the hot season

(From 12C)

So fierce that the warning is already out: expect a constantly shifting release schedule. With the opening weekend's gross increasingly the all-important factor in a film's success, distributors will be scrambling as never before to find the most advantageous opening date and the least damaging competitors.

Last month, for instance, "Speed 2" suddenly switched its announced opening from June 9 to June 13, and set off a whole round of reshuffling of release dates. And last week, James Cameron's "Titanic" — in terms of budget and expectations, the biggest film of the season — suddenly steamed right out of the July lineup and into the fall. This is bound to instigate a new round of re-scheduling to fill the blockbuster vacuum.

This movie summer may look to be the most uncertain ever, but there are some things we do know:

■ There will be a record number of movies, and the most profitable of them will be three franchise sequels — Steven Spielberg's "Jurassic Park" follow-up, "The Lost World" (May 23), "Speed 2: Cruise Control" (June 13) and George Clooney as the latest Caped Crusader in "Batman and Robin" (June 30).

■ It's also a safe bet that the season's animated Disney musical, "Hercules," which bows on June 27, will earn its studio a hefty share of the summer box-office total. The Disney musicals always tend to own their opening weekend, and the word on this one is that it is less "grim and ambitious," and more "accessible," than last summer's "Hunchback of Notre Dame."

■ Of the May openings, expectations are high on a trio of screwball comedies — "Addicted to Love," a Matthew Broderick-Meg Ryan vehicle that opens the Seattle International Film Festival next Thursday and debuts in the multiplexes eight days later, and two slapsticky buddy comedies, "Trial and Error," teaming Jeff Daniels and TV's Michael Richards ("Seinfeld"), and "Gone Fishin'," pairing Joe Pesci and Danny Glover (both May 30).

■ Doing battle with "Speed 2" and "Batman and Robin" in June are "My Best Friend's Wedding," a romantic comedy starring Julia Roberts (June 27), and not-one-but-two action thrillers starring Nicolas Cage — "Con Air," co-starring John Cusack and John Malkovich (June 6), and "Face/Off," co-starring John Travolta (June 27).

■ In July, the biggies are "Men in Black," an alien-invasion comedy top-billed by Will Smith and Tommy Lee Jones (July 2); Robert Zemeckis' adaptation of Carl Sagan's sci-fi novel, "Contact" (July 11), and two political thrillers opening against each other on July 25 — "Air Force One," starring Harrison Ford as a hijacked U.S. president, and "Conspiracy Theory," with Mel Gibson as a paranoid New York cabbie who stumbles on a very real assassination plot.

■ August tends to get the dregs of the season, but its first weekend will see the opening of "Event Horizon" — the last of summer '97's quintet of sci-fi epics (this one about a space ship "sucked into an alternate dimension"), the big-screen version of TV's classic sitcom, "Leave It to Beaver," and "Cop Land," starring Sylvester Stallone in an offbeat role as a deaf small-town-New Jersey sheriff doing battle with the likes of Robert De Niro, Harvey Keitel and Ray Liotta.

In the meantime, don't forget the 23rd Annual Seattle International Film Festival, which runs between May 15 and June 8 and is therefore also a summer film event of sorts. This year, a mind-boggling, near-200 features are in the line-up, which added to the record Hollywood offering, makes 1997 by far the busiest movie summer in Seattle history.

10 films to watch for this summer

By William Arnold
N.Y. Times News Service

So, you ask, what in the avalanche of summer movies might be worth seeing?

That's always a hard call, and it's compounded this year by a certain ho-hum factor. As technically competent as they may prove to be, can anybody get seriously excited about another Batman, more Spielbergian dinosaurs, a second Sandra Bullock roller coaster ride?

But of the non-sequels, the following — based on casting, behind-the-camera credits, plot summaries, my gut instinct and the advance word of mouth that's been seeping out of Hollywood screening rooms during the past month — are 10 summer movies that look especially auspicious:

■ "Air Force One" — How could any movie that combines the talents of German director Wolfgang Petersen ("Das Boot," "In the Line of Fire"), Harrison Ford (as an uptight president of the United States) and Gary Oldman (as a hijacker) be anything but immensely watchable? (July 25)

■ "Contact" — Robert Zemeckis ("Forrest Gump," "Back to the Future") would seem to be just the right director to make something cinematically special out of Carl Sagan's novel about the effect of Earth's first contact with aliens. Jodie Foster and Matthew McConaughey star. (July 11)

■ "Men in Black" — This "X-Files"-like, sci-fi comedy — directed by Barry Sonnenfeld ("Get Shorty") and starring Tommy Lee Jones and Will Smith as detectives who search out unfriendly alien invaders — is the only one of the non-sequel, event movies that's been generating a healthy "buzz" within the industry. (July 2)

■ "Buddy" — Screenwriter Caroline Thompson made such an exemplary job of her 1994 directing debut (a remake of "Black Beauty") that it seems quite possible that her animal-cast follow-up — a true story about an eccentric '20s Brooklyn socialite (Rene Russo) who raises a gorilla as her son — could be the "Babe" of 1997. (June 6)

■ "Mimic" — With a script by John Sayles and Steven Soderbergh, this "Invasion of the Body Snatchers"-like biomedical thriller — about a horde of mutant insects that has somehow learned to "mimic" the appearance of human beings — threatens to be ghoulish fun. With Mira Sorvino and Jeremy Notham. (July 18)

■ "Ulee's Gold" — This comeback vehicle for Peter Fonda — the story of a reclusive Florida beekeeper forced to re-enter the world to help a long-lost daughter-in-law — was so well received at the last Sundance Film Festival that Fonda has already been touted as a possible '97 Oscar nominee. (June 13)

■ "The Leading Man" — After the flop of "The Journey of August King," the normally reliable Australian director John Duigan ("Sirens," "Flirting") is due an art-house hit, and — even with the unlikely Jon Bon Jovi in the lead — this West End London backstage drama could be it. (No firm date)

■ "Desperate Measures" — With Barbet Schroeder ("Reversal of Fortune") at the helm, this unusual cops-and-criminals thriller — about a police detective (Andy Garcia) who gets a bone-marrow transplant from a serial killer (Michael Keaton) and learns to regret it — sounds almost too intriguing to pass up. (Aug 8)

■ "My Best Friend's Wedding" — Its trailer makes it look like 50 other Gen-X romantic comedies of late, but people treated to an advance peek at this second Julia Roberts vehicle of the summer — directed by Australia's P.J. Hogan ("Murial's Wedding"), from a script by Ron Bass ("Rain Man," "The Joy Luck Club") — swear it's a peach. (July 27)

■ "The Man Who Would Be King" — This 1975 adventure — John Huston's last great film — is simply the best Kipling adaptation Hollywood ever made (yes, better even than "Gunga Din"), and an irresistible star vehicle for Sean Connery and Michael Caine. The summer's only major revival. (July 4)

CUSACK: Actor has learned from others, stayed out of tabloids

(From 12C)

Handling multiple chores on the film assisted his acting, Cusack says, helping him avoid a tendency to obsess about his performance.

"It helped me just go with my instincts. The last thing you want to be doing as an actor during a scene is thinking," he says. "I like when a lot of stuff goes on at once. I love chaos."

Cusack attended Evanston Township High School outside Chicago, class of 1984, where he says besides acting he did "a lot of partying," describing himself in those days as a "rebellious urban punk."

All grown up now at age 30, he worked with two boyhood friends on the final script. After hammering it out, they decided to attend their high-school reunion to compare their fiction to the real thing.

"It was surreal," Cusack says. "It might have been weirder than the reunion in the movie, except nobody got killed — that I know of."

Despite the film's offbeat premise and its ever-increasing absurdity as the story progresses, Cusack says there's more going on than meets the eye. Extensive research went into creating the hit man's professional profile.

"This is a comedy about the dark side of life, a farce with teeth," Cusack says, lounging in a Manhattan hotel room, wearing black jeans, black Nike basketball shoes and a plain gray sweat shirt under a black windbreaker.

"It looks at the whole warrior as junkie thing," he explains. "These guys describe combat and killing as the peak moments of their lives, and I'm sure for them there are instances of great joy. And they can stand anything, anything but peace."

There's also a lot of denial, which Cusack's hit man is having such a hard time maintaining that he starts seeing a shrink, played by Alan Arkin.

"He's a guy who thinks that what you do for a living doesn't necessarily reflect who you are," Cusack says. "Work is just work. He sees himself as a good guy, who just happens to be a professional killer."

Cusack admits there are parallels between the career demands of a hit man and his chosen profession.

"Working in Hollywood, you see plenty of mercenary values. They're pretty rampant out there," he says. "There's literal violence and there's emotional violence."

For Cusack, surviving as an actor in that kind of environment has meant taking extra steps to protect his privacy.

"I try and avoid the celebrity culture as much as possible, but you can't totally get away from it," he says. "There are places I can't go without attracting a lot of attention, and that can be hard. I'm not into wearing disguises."

For the down-to-earth actor, fame is an unfortunate side effect of success.

"You get good tables in restaurants, and you can get good tickets to sporting events, but that's about it," Cusack says. "It surely doesn't solve any of life's problems. In fact, it does the exact opposite. It makes your problems harder to overcome. Spiritually, being famous is completely worthless, I think."

Learning from the mistakes of fellow actors has helped him stay out of supermarket tabloids and newspaper gossip columns.

"If you behave badly, you can bet you'll be written about," he says, adding that keeping his love life private makes paparazzi look elsewhere.

"I just don't talk about that stuff. I have no need to show off," Cusack says. "I don't feel like every part of my life is a commodity."

Still, Cusack knows his days of blending into the scenery may be over. On top of "Grosse Pointe Blank," he'll be front and center this June in his first big-budget action film: "Con Air."

"I never avoided doing action films, I was just kind of looking for one that was smart. This one is," he says. "And I got to work with some great actors. John Malkovich and Nick Cage are in it, so it's not like it's a Jean-Claude Van Damme movie. Deciding to do it was really a no-brainer."

His future looks promising, to say the least. His only worry is: "Mediocrity. Settling. Phoning it in. Not doing my best."

FATHERS: Comics' pairing doesn't pay off

boy is also pursued by two drug runners he stole money from, and the boy's apparent father also joins the chase, with unfunny results.

Somehow, the pairing of the two comics doesn't pay off as well as planned. By playing the conservative lawyer, Crystal loses the caustic humor that makes his Academy Award hostings so delightful. And Williams' portrayal of an over-age hippie looks terribly dated.

The two women seem overlooked in the scripting process. Kinski has little to do but set the plot in motion, and Louis-Dreyfus gets little chance to display her comedic talent.

Paul McCartney contributes two songs to the soundtrack: "Young Boy" and "The World Tonight."

"Fathers' Day" is a Warner Bros. release produced by Joel Silver and Reitman. Rating: PG-13, sexual innuendo. Running time: 98 minutes.

'Fifth Element' amazing, but could be much more

By Ted Anthony
AP National Writer

Ambitious, dazzling, engrossing and even awe-inspiring, "The Fifth Element" is a rough jewel that could have been so much more.

Luc Besson's visual epic, an odd cross-breed of post-cyberpunk chic and comedic farce, leaves an unsatisfying aftertaste. For an adeptly choreographed film with masterpiece-level sets, stunning camera work, some shining performances and a few very thought-provoking scenes, it is ultimately muddled, mediocre and derivative.

Besson ("The Professional," "La Femme Nikita") paints a memorable vision of an anarchic New York City circa 2214, where airborne checker cabs dart among skyscrapers so tall that street level has become a forsaken netherworld hidden under a shroud of pollution and fog.

Comfortable in this chaos is the rather world-weary Korben Dallas (Bruce Willis), a wise-cracking (surprise) former special-forces officer retired into a somewhat pathetic life as a reckless cabbie.

Through an unlikely series of coincidences, Dallas becomes involved in a plot to save the world from an incarnation of pure evil that surfaces every 5,000 years to swallow life.

Dallas must find the ancient keys to unlock the ultimate power of good and thus help his cut-rate United Federation of Planets prevail, with the help of a bumbling priest (Ian Holm) and a reconstituted alien (Milla Jovovich) who holds Earth's hope of survival within her.

To reveal more would be to give too much away, since the plot — the film's weak link — holds together by only the most tenuous strands.

Besson creates the look of his film by combining a number of elements, most noticeably the dark-cornered urban streetscapes of Ridley Scott's 1981 "Blade Runner," considered a seminal film that brought cyberpunk into the mainstream.

But he also draws from "Star Wars" for his cantina-bar-style creatures, "Flash Gordon" and the original "Star Trek" series for his bizarre Gaultier costumes, "Metropolis" for his urban mattes — and an unsuccessful combination of "Raiders of the Lost Ark" and "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World" for the second half of his plot.

Willis starts out in full "12 Monkeys" mode, a haunted, spent individual, but returns to his petulant "Die Hard" mien by mid-film, which serves him less well.

And Jovovich, a beautiful and expressive actress, manages to convey an exceptional presence and impishness even though most of her lines are spoken in ancient tongues.

Gary Oldman is at first entertaining, then annoying as a redneck arms dealer of the future with a miniature Jabba the Hutt as his pet.

Perhaps the oddest performance comes from Chris Tucker as "Ruby Rhod," an affected interstellar talk-show host who seems like nothing more than Eddie Murphy's "Little Richard Simmons" parody from "Saturday Night Live." The performance is funny at first, but soon becomes intensely irritating.

With the plot such a jumble, "The Fifth Element" turns on its nuances, and they are many. Exaggerated, deliberately symmetrical camera work gives the whole movie a fish-eyed, lampoonish feel. And around every corner is a brilliant mini-touch, like a flying Chinese food vendor — in a cart shaped like a sampan — that pulls up to Dallas' apartment window to dispense noodles and sage advice.

METAL: Name change may be contributing to format's problems deeply personal songs of self-doubt and despair have graduated to the anarchist industrial rock of bands like Marilyn Manson, Nine Inch Nails and Tool.

But the most concrete evidence of metal's decline is sales figures. Bands like Def Leppard and Queensryche, after having multiplatinum albums in the 1980s, haven't been able to hit even platinum in the '90s.

Metal still makes up 23 percent of the market, according to Soundscan, which charts record sales.

Depending on whom you ask, there are many reasons why the metal meltdown.

One theory is that heavy metal is going through a name change, from the frowned-upon "metal" to the more accepted and more encompassing "hard music."

"If you just use the word 'metal,' I think there's no question that metal is not in vogue at all," said CMC International president Tom Lipsky. "If you say 'hard music,' that covers a broad base."

Many observers say bands like Nirvana evolved from changes in the nation's mood in the aftermath of the conservative Reagan-Bush era.

"People got cynical (and) jaded, and the generations that were growing up had to express their angst," said Marty Maidenberg, vice president of marketing at Mercury Records, home of Def Leppard and Bon Jovi.

Kids could no longer identify with metal's message of power and self-confidence, according to sociologist Deena Weinstein of DePaul University, author of "Heavy Metal: A Cultural Sociology."

"I think partly why some metal lost its audience (came) with the designation of the young generation as slackers, as weak, as people who are stressed out," Weinstein said. "That self-definition really conflicts with a lot of what metal offers."

Some say the so-called "hair" bands — like Poison and Warrant — ruined the credibility of more thoughtful bands like Megadeth, Queensryche and Pantera. The pretty boys got all the airplay and the splashy MTV videos, while others toiled anonymously on the road.

"When people think about metal, they think of '80s metal," said Monty Connor, vice president of artists and repertoire at Roadrunner Records. "They think of the hair spray, the clothes, the stupid fake attitude, the big arenas, the silly image."

When all-powerful MTV stopped playing metal videos, the genre lost one of its biggest supporters.

"(That) hurt, and I guess everything else just followed suit," said publicist and label manager Marco Barbieri of Century Media, a German label with U.S. headquarters in Santa Monica, Calif.

Def Leppard's 1992 album "Adrenalize" sold 3.3 million copies, but their 1996 effort, "Slang," has only sold 289,000 units to date, according to Soundscan. Queensryche's 1990 record "Empire" sold 2.2 million copies, while 1994's "Promised Land" managed only 710,000, Soundscan said.

Only Metallica continues to sell in the millions with their latest, "Load," which has sold 3 million records to date. But they have a long way to go to match the success of their 1991 self-titled album, which sold 9.3 million copies, according to Soundscan.

It's not that the quality of metal music declined, either; most bands were into their third or fourth albums and putting out their best material when the slump hit.

On the radio front, Los Angeles' revered hard rock station KNAC became a Spanish-language station several years ago. New York metal pioneer Q-104 now plays classic rock.

But in Europe, Japan and Latin America, metal remains a viable force that sells well. MTV's "Headbanger's Ball" still airs. And England's renowned Castle Donington Festival draws thousands of raging metalheads each year.

Roadrunner's Connor says it's because those countries are a few years behind the United States and fans there are less fickle and trendy.

Summertime movie competition: Hot, hot, hot

Hollywood ready for blockbuster May-to-September take

By William Arnold
N.Y. Times News Service

Before 1990, Hollywood's summer movie season was that period between Memorial Day and Labor Day when the kids were out of school and the big studios could be expected to give us maybe one potential blockbuster every other week or so.

But the movie "summer" has been steadily expanding in this decade, and with Memorial Day still three weeks away, this year's season is already in high gear, with such official summer entries as "Volcano," 'Austin Powers" and "Breakdown" already showing and two more — "Father's Day" and the "The Fifth Element" — debuting Friday.

The problem, of course, is that there are so many films vying for a valuable summer position (a time when Hollywood earns more than 40 percent of its annual take) that the celluloid is simply spilling out at both ends. Some analysts actually consider "The Saint" to be the first of 1997's summer movies, and it opened the first weekend of April.

■ 10 movies to watch for/10C

In terms of the more traditional summer period, however, some 50 wide-release films are scheduled to bow between the two holiday weekends, plus gosh only knows how many independent and art house releases. With almost every weekend from now until September booked solid, the competition is bound to be fierce.

Pay off comes up short

With Williams, Crystal, more laughs would be nice

By Bob Thomas

For years, Hollywood has been scavenging plots from French films.

The results sometimes have been good: "Three Men and a Baby," "The Bird Cage," "Nine Months." But just as often, something gets lost in translation: "Diabolique," "Blame it on Rio," "Intersection."

"Fathers' Day" falls somewhere in between. It is an amiable road comedy, but not as hilarious as you would hope from the first film teaming of comedians Robin Williams and Billy Crystal.

The plot is something only the French could conjure. Borrowed from Francis Veber's script for "Les Comperes," the story begins before the titles end. An adolescent boy (Charlie Hofheimer) races off with his girlfriend after a bitter argument with his father (Bruce Greenwood).

The boy's distraught mother (Nastassja Kinski) contacts two men she dallied with 17 years before. She tells each he is the father of her errant son. Both are dazed by the news, but respond to her pleas to help find the boy, who is apparently following a rock group from Los Angeles to San Francisco.

Dale Putney (Williams), a failed poet and playwright, receives the news in San Francisco, where he is burning his life's writings and loading a gun. He postpones suicide to join the search.

Jack Lawrence (Crystal), a well-groomed power in Los Angeles law, is equally stunned by his apparent fatherhood. He leaves his wife (Julia Louis-Dreyfus) and his practice to fly to San Francisco.

The two men meet when they try to interview the girlfriend's belligerent father. The odd coupling of the meticulous lawyer and the anarchic poet provides much of the comedy as the pursuit dashes from San Francisco to Sacramento to Reno, Nev., and back to Los Angeles.

Director Ivan Reitman ("Ghostbusters," "Kindergarten Cop," "Twins") is skilled at exacting laughs from outrageous premises. Lowell Ganz and Babaloo Mandel ("Splash!" "City Slickers," "A League of Their Own") know how to pepper their scripts with a barrage of gags.

Despite such a pedigree, "Fathers' Day" falls short as a satisfying comedy. Perhaps concerned about the fragile premise, the filmmakers invented extraneous subplots: the

Cusack emerges in new 'Grosse Pointe'

By Ric Leyva
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Ever enigmatic, John Cusack stands out in Hollywood for his ability to blend in. At least up until now.

Like a cinematic chameleon, he's there onscreen and then, somehow, he isn't, playing major roles in major films without attracting much attention to himself.

Consider:

✔ He was the earnest, naive playwright Dianne Wiest begged "Don't speak, don't speak" en route to her Academy Award in "Bullets Over Broadway."

✔ He was Mayor Al Pacino's quiet political fixer in "City Hall."

✔ He was a fiery pro baseball player banned from the game for life after the 1919 Chicago White Sox World Series betting scandal in "Eight Men Out."

✔ He was Angelica Houston's con-artist son, who ultimately gave his all for mom, in "The Grifters."

John Cusack

Other notable credits include "Sixteen Candles," "Stand by Me," "Say Anything," "The Road to Wellville," "Shadows and Fog," and "Bob Roberts."

Still he has remained something of a mystery, shunning the celebrity spotlight throughout a career that began in 1983, when he was just 17.

That all changed with his latest film "Grosse Pointe Blank."

Cusack not only stars in "Grosse Pointe Blank," playing a hit man returning home for his 10-year high-school reunion, he also co-wrote and co-produced the wildly witty black comedy.

It's also the first movie by Cusack's own film company, New Crime Productions, meaning the usually publicity-shy actor has had to step forward and sell, sell, sell.

"Did you like the movie?" he says, getting the first question in, a bit too fast, revealing how much he has riding on "Grosse Pointe Blank."

Lighting an American Spirit cigarette, he apologizes for "being such a nicotine addict," then explains that his company has several movie projects in development, and the success or failure of "Grosse Pointe Blank" will determine their fate.

"We're trying to raise money, lots of money. If this flick does business it'll be a lot easier," he says, betraying his nervousness by taking a deep drag off his smoke and adding: "Do you think it will?"

He didn't have to worry. "Grosse Pointe Blank" spent its first month of release in the box-ffice Top 10, earning more than $20 million in ticket sales against stiff competition that included "Liar Liar," "Anaconda" and "Volcano."

Metallica, winner of the Favorite Artist/Heavy Metal/Hard Rock category gather around their trophy backstage at the American Music Awards in Los Angeles Jan. 27.

Is metal dead? Does anybody care?

By Kira L. Billik
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA — It wasn't scary seeing a bare-chested Pat Boone at this year's American Music Awards wearing a leather vest and fake tattoos and hyping his latest record, "In a Metal Mood."

But it was scary seeing Metallica, who had just won for favorite heavy metal/hard rock act, show up at the awards show looking like a bunch of choirboys — with short hair, jackets and ties, and frighteningly well-mannered dispositions.

And it seemed no one cared about the reunion of notorious bad boys Motley Crue.

Does all this mean that heavy metal music as we know it is dead, buried and beyond resuscitation?

Maybe so.

The facts:

■ MTV, after being metal's champion throughout the 1980s, won't touch it now. They canceled their "Headbanger's Ball" show in the United States three years ago after a seven-year run.

■ Rock radio stations have jumped the metal ship en masse, changing to "modern rock" formats.

■ Major record labels have trimmed or eliminated their metal divisions.

■ The kids who once thrived on Kurt Cobain's

TV rating system seems woefully inconsistent

Patterson

Clearing the desktop of opinions, recommendations and other scraps of paper ...

According to KODM's Spencer Bennett, the Top 2 requested adult contemporary songs these days are Bruce Springsteen's "Secret Garden (The 'Jerry McGuire' Mix)" and "Butterfly Kisses," by contemporary Christian artist Bob Carlisle.

If you've ever had daughters, you can certainly appreciate the array of emotions that Carisle so precisely sings about in "Butterfly Kisses," which by its name alone deserves some sort of recognition. The song, which follows a father's relationship with his daughter as she grows from baby to bride-to-be, is just now making it big in a.c. radio, but actually won a Dove Award last year.

As for 'Secret Garden,' Springsteen has never been the type to sellout, but to allow the movie soundtrack from the Tom Cruise movie about sports agents to be used in the song would be somewhat akin to Bob Seger allowing "Like a Rock" to be used to sell trucks. "Secret Garden," an average song by Springsteen standards, is tarnished — not to mention annoying — with the inclusion of bites from the movie. But hey, the production company has to find a way to drive sales and rentals of the videotape.

TV Ratings. Let's see here, when it aired recently on the Disney Channel, "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" was rated PG-14. The film is devoid of any violence whatsoever. It's a kind-hearted little science fiction movie with just a brief scare or two. Also rated PG-14: TNT's presentation of "The Hunchback," with Mandy Patinkin and Salma Hayek. Fine movie, if you're an adult. But how many kids flocked to the tube to watch the live action version of the film after seeing Disney's animated tale only to find Quasi Moto receive 50 lashes with a whip, which were followed by a series of stabbings in the next segment. If the TV geniuses are going to rate television shows, there certainly is a need for much more consistency. The ratings board failed badly when rating "Hunchback" and should be embarrassed. By the same token, "Close Encounters" is no worse than 'G' TV.

Recommendation: If you're a fan of jazz vocals, it should come as no surprise that "The Best of Al Jarreau" is an absolute must for a collection. An exceptional vocal talent, Jarreau also wrote or cowrote seven of the 16 songs included on the late-1996 release. Roughly divided into a ballads half and an uptempo half, the collection contains such masterpieces as "Compared to What," "Agua De Beber," "Roof Garden," and "Heaven and Earth," not to mention a slew of his more radio-friendly hits like "We're in this Love Together," "Moonlighting," and "Mornin.' FAMILY MATTERS

Mother's reaction to divorce worries daughter

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: I am worried about the way my mother is acting after her divorce from my father.

They had been married 22 years, and my father had some kind of mid-life crisis and decided that he had to "find himself." He said that they got married too young (he was 19 and my mother was 17). He never got to sow his wild oats.

May

My mother was very, very upset and depressed for months. I do understand both of them, but I'm mad at daddy too.

After a lot of fighting and nasty stuff with their lawyers, the divorce was finally over. It took almost a year to get their divorce, and the entire time my father was going out with every woman he could find, and it broke my mother's heart.

About two months after the divorce was final, my mother started going to the bars with some new "girl friends" on the weekends. Then she started going most days after work for happy hour.

I'm getting really worried about her. It's so weird that now I'm having to worry about her going to bars and meeting men after all these years of her doing the worrying about me! She has never in her life gone to bars. She always was against drinking because of my father.

I talked to her about what she's doing and she says that if he can find himself, then she can find herself too. She said she's having fun now that he's not controlling her every move.

I don't know what she's found, but I don't like it at all. My brother is away at college, and when I talked to him, he didn't seem concerned. He told me that this was mother's life and she was old enough to know what she wanted to do.

Am I wrong to be worried about my mother? I do have a life of my own, but I don't like what she's doing with hers. What makes a 40-year-old woman suddenly start dressing like a 20-year-old and going out with strange men?

Is there anything that I can do to help her? Should I try to help or does she even need help? I know that I've criticized her for what she's doing, but I don't want her to be depressed again either. TOO YOUNG TO BE THE MOTHER

DEAR TOO YOUNG: Your mother has been through a devastating experience. The divorce changed many things — her life plans, her view of herself, her place in her world, etc. People often react to such sudden unwanted life changes in ways that are completely out of character for them.

I encourage your mother to use this unwanted intervention as an opportunity to reassess her spiritual life rather than focusing on the physical.

You may find it helpful to make a real effort to listen to your mother without judging her actions. Listening does not imply approval, it gives her pain a way to express itself. You could give her a copy of Dr. Bruce Fisher's book, "Rebuilding: When Your Relationship Ends." He describes various stages associated with adjusting to divorce and actions that can be taken to help with the pain.

Also, encourage your mother to attend one of the divorce recovery workshops to help her with this process. These workshops are available at different churches, including Golf Course Road Church of Christ and First United Methodist Church.

Anyone going through such a process needs to focus on her spiritual development. Your mother did not ask for this to happen to her, but now that it has, she may want to take the opportunity to focus on God's plan for her life. As Dr. Craig Barnes wrote on the subject of divorce in his book, "When God Interrupts: " "... it tells us too clearly that if we do the will of the Father, we are given a new family made up of those who share this same Father." That is, go to the church rather than running away from it.

THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES OFFER THE FOLLOWING "QUESTIONS THAT PARENTS CAN ASK THEMSELVES WHEN THEY FEEL STRESSED BY THEIR CHILDREN:"

- Is it so important that the children always do things my way?
- Can I let the children have it their own way sometimes?
- Do I really take enough time to try to understand what the children are saying to me?
- Do I really know what the children want and need from me?
- Is what I say or tell them to do really clear to them?
- How often to I stop and listen — letting the children tell me what they think and feel — simply because they need to talk to me?
- After I've lost control, how do I really feel about myself?
- Can I really "make it up" to them?
- Am I really taking my problems out on them?
- How would I feel if someone said or did the same thing to me?

DEAR ABBY

Generous father heads up family full of ingrates

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Six years ago, my father buried his sister as she instructed in her will. Her son (my cousin) now complains to my father that there is no marker on his mother's grave.

Van Buren

As long as I can remember, my father's relatives have expected him to be the "godfather" to all of them.

He buried his parents with no financial help from his eight brothers and sisters.

He also paid for a lovely headstone for his grandparents' graves. His siblings complained that it wasn't fancy enough.

My father has paid for new cars, home repairs, etc., for this brother or that sister, but the only time they call him is to ask for more money. Most of them earn more than he does, but they blow their money on gambling or drinking.

My mother finally divorced Dad because his generosity has enabled his dysfunctional family to continue their wasteful ways. Father is in complete denial, but believe me, Mom was right. Dad made his wife and children do without, while never questioning his siblings' constant requests for money.

I say, if my drug-addicted cousin wants the Taj Mahal on his mother's grave, he should arrange for it and pay for it himself.

Despite my father's generosity to those who don't appreciate it, I still love him.

I'm just fed up with relatives who have no conscience about spending the nest egg that was meant to take care of him in his retirement. Sign me ... TIRED OF BEING THE GODFATHER'S DAUGHTER

DEAR TIRED: Until your father finds the courage to say no to these moochers, they'll continue to regard him as a soft touch. I maintain: If someone takes advantage of you once, shame on him. If he takes advantage of you twice, shame on you.

I sympathize with your feelings, but it's your father's money and how he spends it is his decision. You can bet that he gets much gratification out of being the provider and the symbolic head of the family.

DEAR ABBY: My best friend "Sally" just called and told me that she had been visiting at her brother's house.

While she was there, her sister-in-law showed her a "cute little trick" she had taught Sally's 2-year-old nephew. Abby, this sister-in-law is not exactly the family favorite. She handed him a lit cigarette, and he sucked in and blew out smoke!

When Sally told her how disgusting that was, the boy's 4-year-old sister piped up, demanding her turn — which she was given.

I told Sally to call child protective services, that this is child abuse. She refused because she's afraid that it will cause a family rift.

Abby, what can be done to help those kids? — DISGUSTED IN VIRGINIA

DEAR DISGUSTED: If, after all the recent media attention focused on the addictive nature of tobacco, Sally's sister-in-law has not realized that encouraging her children to smoke is dangerous to their health, something must be wrong with her.

The family should be told about this woman's stupid and irresponsible behavior in the hope that family pressure will force her to stop.

It is possible that what Sally observed was a one-time lapse in judgment. However, if it persists, I agree, child protective services should be notified.

DEAR ABBY: My best friend (I'll call her Jennifer) is getting married soon, and she is busy making her plans.

Jennifer's stepmother told her that the maid of honor and the bridesmaids must be unmarried virgins. Is this true?

This news has disturbed Jennifer because all the friends she has chosen to be in the wedding party are married. — BRIDE'S BEST FRIEND, NEW JERSEY

DEAR BEST FRIEND: Jennifer's stepmother was either joking or she is misinformed.

The bride chooses her best friends or closest relatives to be in her wedding party without regard to whether they are virgins or not. Marital and sexual status have nothing whatsoever to do with the honor of attending the bride.

For everything you need to know about wedding planning, order "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Emily Post's 'Etiquette' is updated for the '90s

By Jeff Guinn
N.Y. Times News Service

In 1922, Emily Post set out to tell everyone else how we "ought" to act. A self-made novelist, Post populated her societal how-to with characters dubbed Mrs. Newlywed, Mr. Kindheart and the ever-loathsome Richard Vulgar. Through their various adventures, readers figured out the proper use of a finger bowl and how to upbraid the live-in help (firmly, but patiently).

In retrospect, it's possible to offer the educated guess that Ms. Emily's tome became a huge best-seller for the same reason that modern readers guffaw at Miss Manners now: a vicarious, laughable look at the lifestyles of the pretentious.

There is, however, a huge difference. Miss Manners' tongue is firmly in her cheek. Emily Post's tongue was no doubt "somewhere," but no lady would ever tell its location and no gentleman would ever try to guess, especially before marriage.

So it is with Peggy Post, who now offers us the 75th anniversary edition of her great-grandmother-in-law's "Etiquette" (HarperCollins, $35). "Etiquette, very simply, is a code of behavior based on consideration and thoughtfulness," Mrs. Post the Younger notes in her lengthy introduction.

Uh-huh. And, no doubt, those who moon for the gentility of generations past will be thrilled to find out, once again, the proper format of thank-you notes. Thanks to Post the Latest, we now know how to introduce the president of the United States to our other dinner guests. Next time you're in a restaurant that serves round bread on a cutting board, you'll be glad you read this 75th "Etiquette."

Yet it must be acknowledged that Peggy does, in her refined way, attempt to address certain social niceties that were unnecessary, or at least unthinkable, in Emily's era.

For instance, there's that sticky matter of telling your parents that you're living with someone without benefit of official nuptials. Living together "found a place in our society, took on a degree of respectability and has proven that it is here to stay," Peggy admits.

Accordingly, the Postian method of telling Mom and Dad: "I know you don't approve of living together outside of marriage, and I am sorry to upset you. But Bill (or Alice) and I love each other. We have made a real commitment. The only difference is that we don't feel ready to commit ourselves for life. If we grow in that direction, we'll get married; and if I find that Bill (or Alice) is not what I want for the rest of my life, we'll split up. But right now it is good for us together. I want you to understand and accept it because I love you. The relationship you and I have means a great deal in my happiness."

And if Pater and Mater decline to approve?

"Time and repeated evidence of your love may enable them to relent."

There's also this shocking inclusion: Two paragraphs about homosexual couples living together!

Not that Peggy offers a hint of how to break the news to Mumsy and Poppy about that one, beyond observing "all the aspects of heterosexual couples living together are more or less the same for homosexual couples who elect to share their lives." The rest of her comments concern proper family structure of said gay couple if children are involved.

Ah, well, give points for effort. Peggy and her 845-page book of how-to's are links to a more genteel time. There is, after all, nothing wrong with common good manners. In a modern world where Jenny McCarthy defines cool for the MTV generation, there's always a chance the pope will show up unexpectedly at your house right around dinner time. Don't you want to address him properly?

Wrong: "Hey, J.P."

Right: "Most Holy Father."

Some scenarios left out of famous book's update

By Jeff Guinn
N.Y. Times News Service

From the tasteful size of a divorcee's new engagement ring to the proper way to eat spaghetti, Peggy Post's 75th anniversary edition of "Etiquette" offers the definitive methods of dealing with almost any social situation.

Despite the author's apparent determination to include everything, she in fact forgot a few possible scenarios. For instance:

- When you audibly break wind in public: If you are among at least two (2) companions, glare at the one nearest you but refrain from comment. If there is only one other person present, say simply, "Odd. The weather forecast didn't mention thunderstorms."
- When your teen-age child comes home with a pierced nose: "What a wonderful addition to your already-sparkling personality."
- When a waiter informs you your credit card was rejected: "Obviously, the person to whom you spoke has also eaten here."
- When a passing driver makes the famous obscene gesture: "Here is the church, and there is the steeple ..."
- When your Significant Other has found fault with you: "You correctly note the very traits which prevent me from attracting a quality companion."

Gardening feeds body, spirit

By Lana Cunningham

The clocks throughout Bill Sparks' house tick off the minutes and the hours. The sound is a reminder that just as time can't be rushed, neither can the days and weeks it takes to grown the thousands of vegetables he and others have planted in the Manor Park garden.

With the arrival of spring each year, Sparks and his gardening cohort, Darrell Smith, begin the preparation of the bed located on a northeast corner of the retirement community. Then the bedding plants arrive. And the residents begin asking: "When is it going to be ready?"

But Sparks knows there is no way to rush time and Mother Nature. He pulls a cap down on his head each day and heads for the garden with the steadfast manner of someone who knows what he's doing. Gardening is not new to Sparks. He grew up on a farm near Spearman and lived in Amarillo for 38 years.

Then, in 1980, he moved to Midland and worked with his two sons, Don and Bynum. Sparks eventually moved to Manor Park, and it wasn't long before he was into gardening after meeting someone who has become one of his best friends — Darrell Smith. "It was just Darrell and me for a while, and we picked up another gardener recently, Bill Wilson."

The garden is no small project — it measures 120x110-feet. Sparks charts exactly what is planted, where it's located and when it was planted. They started planting around April 15, "and nearly everything is coming up."

He walked out to one area and pulled up a few of the green onions ready to eat. "Radishes will be the next thing to come off. And then we'll have some black-eyed peas, okra and carrots.

"We have quite a few of the black-eyed peas because people like these around here. They also like okra and green beans. And they like lots of cucumbers. Some women out here make pickles from the cucumbers; they're very good."

The gardeners aim to please, and so they plant accordingly. And they plant abundantly.

"We ordered 4,000 onion plants and they usually come 60 to a package," said Sparks. When the gardeners began planting what had been delivered, they discovered 70 to 75 plants per package. "We ran out of space in the garden and had to double-plant."

Curt Wilcott/reporter-Telegram

Bill Sparks, along with two of his friends, keeps the gardens growing at Manor Park. The produce they grow not only helps feed residents of the retirement community, but brightens their days with its green, growing plants.

Last year, the garden produced about 1,500 pounds of onions. "I gave up on estimating the squash and zucchini," he said. It was a lot. "Sometimes we stand at these people's front doors with so much squash that they don't want to see us," Sparks said with a chuckle.

In past years, the gardeners have recruited three women, each living in a separate section at Manor Park, who deliver the fresh vegetables. "We take a 5-gallon bucket of vegetables to each one, and they deliver it to the residents. And we take some to the kitchen.

"That's our pay — being able to give it to the people out here," Sparks added.

That's not the only benefit Sparks and the others get from gardening. "We get out there in the garden and we can do as we please," he said. "I like the garden; we get out there and forget the world. It's pretty good therapy for us."

And it brings back memories for the residents. "So many people out here walk by that garden. They love to see the garden grow; they remember when they used to garden," Sparks added.

Gardening isn't the only activity that keeps Sparks busy. That day, he had worked a few hours in the commissary. He and his wife, Sunny, serve as president of the Residents' Council, the first time a couple has been elected to that position. "There's so much that goes on out here, and we feel like we have to attend it all," he said.

When he and his partner in crime (Smith) aren't hoeing away in the garden, they're working on projects for the women's crafts class. They recently finished cutting deer heads out of wood that will be painted. "Darrell and I are the 'honey-do' guys for the crafts ladies," he said. "They say 'we need this,' and we're glad to do it."

Working with wood is just another of Sparks' hobbies. Like gardening, it's something he's done for many years. "I've been a woodbug for a long time," he chuckled, showing a small trunk with a curved top that he made. This piece of craftsmanship was displayed at a seniors state crafts fair in Austin.

He's also designed and built several dollhouses over the years, fashioning them after houses that belong to family members. The last one was two-story house with a basement and 32 electrical outlets ("and all the outlets work").

More recently, he and Smith installed a fountain in the Manor Park atrium. The original one had worn out. But they didn't do the job without adding their mark — a touch of humor.

"Walk past that frog," Sparks said to a guest. As soon as the person was near the amphibian, there came a loud "rrbbtt." Sparks laughed. "People in wheelchairs just love to see this frog."

Age doesn't matter to Sparks. "I'm just 82. I can't ever remember being Darrell's age. And Bill (Wilson) is just in his 70s."

The clocks in his house keep marking the hours, and Sparks fills each day with as many activities as he (and others) can find. But time, well, it's something Sparks seems to run out of at the end of each day.

Seniors act their attitude, not their age

By Allen R. Myerson
N.Y. Times News Service

Though inspirational to some, former President George Bush's recent sky dive over the Arizona desert at age 72 — just like his political career, perhaps — was less on the leading edge and more part of a trailing afterburn. Many other elder-heroes have been there and done that and much more.

Why, just last June, Al Dietzel, an executive at The Limited, the retailing conglomerate, celebrated his 65th birthday with his own parachute jump — which came before 18 holes of golf (a 93, with no cart) and after two sets of singles tennis, a 180-pound bench press and a two-mile run at a nine-minute-a-mile pace.

"I'm stronger at 65, 66, than I ever was in my life," he says. For his 66th birthday he is planning, among other feats, a 190-pound-plus bench press, three miles at his nine-minute pace and a six-mile kayak trip ending at the Statue of Liberty.

Kenneth Cooper, founder of the Cooper Aerobics Center in Dallas, recalls being taught back in medical school that vigorous exercise over 40 increased the risk of a heart attack.

Hah! Now, at 66, he still runs or race-walks several times a week, lifts weights, skis at least two weeks a year and scales a 13,000-foot peak every summer in the Colorado Rockies.

He says the effects of aging can be not only slowed but actually reversed through a diet-and-fitness regimen that strengthens bones and builds muscle mass. "We're eventually going to rewrite the textbooks on aging," he adds.

The new-found capabilities of the elderly are forcing the revision of a lot else: health and demographic studies, rules of athletic competition, marketing plans and — soon perhaps — assumptions about geezers that permeate popular culture. It could be goodbye Walter Matthau and hello Walter Mitty in a new era of modern immaturity.

More Active Aging studies have been more apt to measure a duffer's ability to dress himself than clock his performance in a triathlon, so as yet it's hard to definitively gauge a trend toward sport and risk-taking among the elderly. Existing surveys suggest a more active elderly population, because as a group the elderly have become healthier and more functional in daily life.

The Duke University Center for Demographic Studies — whose surveyers periodically sample 20,000 Americans over 65 — has noted a 15 percent drop from 1982 to 1994 in what it calls chronic disability rates — measuring things like the ability to feed oneself. Now the center is beginning to track activities like tennis, bicycling and long-distance running — although "jumping out of airplanes is beyond what I would measure," says Kenneth G. Manton, the professor who oversees the studies.

He attributes higher activity rates more to healthier, smarter living than to better medical treatment. And in fact would-be super-seniors are forewarned that they are not indestructible. Bush took his doctor along as a precaution. And though Dr. Cooper once ran marathons, he now says that running long distances leaves older people vulnerable to injuries that outweigh the added benefits.

Woe to the elderly who try skiing at Colorado's high altitudes without having followed an exercise program that went beyond hoisting second helpings onto their plates. "You'd be surprised at the number of heart attacks that occur in Colorado," Dr. Cooper says. "It's primarily older people who conk out." But many who began exercising when young now continue throughout their lives, while others who never dreamed of bungie-jumping are pondering the actuarial probabilities and thinking, oh, what the heck.

Swimming, track and bodybuilding are only some of the sports that have strong national programs for older athletes. Organizers of even the most challenging, downright masochistic events are having to add older and older award categories.

Helen Klein, 74, successfully hectored the directors of ultramarathons like the Western States 100, a 100-mile jaunt across the Sierra Nevada, to add awards for women over 70.

Older athletes like Mrs. Klein are gaining a measure of celebrity — appearing, for example, on the TV networks' morning shows — as well as profiting from their obsession, in Mrs. Klein's case through sponsorship by an outdoors clothing maker.

Consulting and marketing firms like Age Wave of Emeryville, Calif., are bringing forth 90-year-old black belts and Iditarod sled-mushers to help persuade clients like American Express, Coca-Cola and General Motors that the elderly can be vigorous customers too. The company's stated goal: "to replace gerontophobic marketing with a new, more positive image of aging." In the downsizing workplace — at a time when courts are holding that dismissing a company's best-paid workers is not age discrimination — some older employees appear to have concluded that the best defense is a solid marathon time or bench-press mark. "It keeps me competitive in a young environment," Dietzel says of his regimen.

COMMUNITY CONNECTIONS

Hospice is one organization that serves community

By Alexandria L. Rose

There are many spokes in the wheel in describing organizations that work for and with the needs of senior citizens. Hospice is one of these.

Suzy Boldrick, community relations director for Hospice, proudly told me about a group called Friends Who Care, an organization of widows and widowers who stand tall together. They have been through the grief process in the past and, in turn, help those currently going through that process, especially the senior citizen. These delightful ladies and gentlemen feed information to the public concerning community resources and how to access them. In addition, they have fun! Once each week they treat themselves to playing cards, eating out and taking trips. Not a bad idea to hook up with them!

What else does Hospice do for the senior? How about the Patient Care Program? Hospice, like American Association of Retired Persons (AARP), wants to serve and not be served. Patient Care Program enhances the life of the terminally ill and their families. Any senior who needs a support group on grief recovery needs to connect with Hospice. Your life will be enhanced.

And last but certainly not least, there is an appeal to all seniors who would like to express their speaking skills and be a part of a Speakers Bureau which gives our community visibility and awareness.

Hospice always welcomes the senior citizen to be a part of any of the programs which they sponsor. The goal of this organization is to make Midland County a more caring and cohesive community. We are truly fortunate in Midland to have so much wealth in the form of people who care about others.

All of the above programs are currently being offered through Hospice. Call 682-2855 for more information.

Bell comes alive in Astros victory

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Derek Bell had a home run and a double and drove in two runs as the Houston Astros beat the New York Mets 4-2 Thursday.

■ NL Roundup

Mike Hampton (2-3) matched his longest outing of the season, scattering seven hits over seven innings. He struck out five and walked only one.

Billy Wagner pitched the ninth and struck out the side for his seventh save in seven chances.

Loser Rick Reed (3-2) allowed seven hits and four runs, three of them earned, while striking out three and walking none in six innings.

Bell, in a season-long slump, hit his first home run and his sixth double. His two RBIs gave Bell 10 for the season after he had 113 RBIs last year.

Bell's first-pitch, first-inning home run was his first since Aug. 29, 1996, a span of 197 at bats. Last season, he hit 17 home runs.

Houston took the lead in the fourth when Luis Gonzalez led off with a double to right. One out later, Bob Abreu's infield single drove Gonzalez in when second baseman Manny Alexander bobbled the ball and threw wildly to home. Abreu went to second on the play then scored on Ricky Gutierrez' double to left to make it 3-1.

Bell's double in the fifth inning drove in Craig Biggio for a 4-1 lead.

The Mets added a run in the fifth when Rey Ordonez singled and went to second on Reed's single to center. Alfonzo drove Ordonez in with a single to center.

Cardinals 6, Phillies 2

ST. LOUIS — Gary Gaetti had a three-run double, and Andy Benes allowed five hits in eight innings for St. Louis.

Ray Lankford also continued a hot start with a hit and two RBIs for the Cardinals, who scored 20 runs in the two games. St. Louis has won nine of the last 12 to climb to a game below .500 at 16-17 after a franchise-worst 0-6 start. The Cards have won eight of their last nine at Busch Stadium.

Pirates 10, Rockies 8

DENVER — Jason Kendall's three-run double keyed an eight-run fourth inning, and Pittsburgh continued to pound Colorado.

The Pirates, who collected 14 hits while winning their third straight game, reached Colorado pitchers for 24 runs on 31 hits in their two-game sweep at Coors Field. In its previous eight games, Pittsburgh totaled only 17 runs.

Al Martin and Kevin Elster homered for the Pirates, who concluded their road trip with a 5-2 record.

Cubs 6, Padres 2

SAN DIEGO — Sammy Sosa went 4-for-5 and Brian McRae was 3-for-5 with a homer as Chicago had a season-high 16 hits.

McRae, who extended his hitting streak to 10 games, and Sosa each scored twice. Fernando Valenzuela (1-4) allowed a season-high 10 hits in five innings, including McRae's three hits and a homer by Jose Hernandez.

Marlins 5, Braves 1

MIAMI — Tom Glavine was rocked for five runs before leaving the game when hit by a pitch, and Tony Saunders homered en route to his first major league win.

Glavine (4-2) was hit on his pitching hand while attempting to bunt and left the game in the fifth inning, but X-rays were negative and he isn't expected to miss a start.

Moises Alou had a bases-loaded triple in Florida's five-run third, an inning that saw Saunders (1-1) lead off with his first big-league hit, pulling a 1-2 pitch from Glavine over the right-field wall. The homer was only the second allowed by Glavine this season.

Yanks' Rivera earns tough save vs. Texas

Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

NEW YORK — Mariano Rivera struck out Juan Gonzalez with the bases loaded to end the game, preserving Andy Pettitte's sixth victory as the New York Yankees beat the Texas Rangers 5-4 Thursday.

The Yankees won their third straight game and sent Texas to its season-high third loss in a row.

Pettitte (6-1) joined Jimmy Key as the top winners in the majors. He took a four-hitter and 4-1 lead into the eighth inning before the Rangers rallied on Ivan Rodriguez' RBI single and, after Rivera relieved, an RBI double by Will Clark.

Charlie Hayes homered in the New York eighth for a 5-3 lead, but again Texas came back. Pinch-hitter Lee Stevens blooped a double with one out and scored on pinch-hitter Dean Palmer's single. Rodriguez singled with two outs and Rusty Greer walked to load the bases, but Gonzalez was caught looking at a 1-2 fastball on Rivera's 43rd pitch.

Rivera got his 11th save. New York beat Texas for the 14th time in their last 16 regular-season meetings at Yankee Stadium.

Darren Oliver (1-3) took the loss, leaving Rangers starters 0-4 in the last 10 games.

Cecil Fielder hit an RBI single off Oliver with two outs in the fourth, and another run scored when the ball skipped past Buford. It was Buford's third fielding error in six games — before that, he had gone 106 games without a miscue.

Paul O'Neill doubled home a run in the sixth, making it 3-1 and finishing Oliver. With two outs in the seventh, reliever Danny Patterson balked with the bases loaded.

Mike Simms singled home a run in the Texas fourth.

Royals 4, Tigers 0

DETROIT — Tim Belcher escaped several jams to win his third straight decision, and Jay Bell homered as the Kansas City Royals beat the Detroit Tigers.

Belcher (4-3) scattered four hits in seven innings, lowering his earned run average to 1.12 over his last five starts. He has allowed just five earned runs in his last 40 innings.

Blue Jays 4, Indians 3

CLEVELAND — Juan Guzman held hot-hitting Cleveland to three hits in seven innings and Toronto survived a three-run homer by David Justice in the ninth.

Guzman (3-2) retired 14 straight after Brian Giles doubled in the second. He tired in the seventh, but got out of a bases loaded, one-out jam by getting Giles to ground into a double play.

Twins 10, Red Sox 7

BOSTON — Paul Molitor's tie-breaking, two-run bloop single capped a five-run sixth inning to help Minnesota win for just the third time in 15 games.

Boston led 4-1 when Matt Lawton hit a leadoff triple, Roberto Kelly walked and stole second and, after Rich Garces (0-1) relieved Tim Wakefield, Greg Myers walked to load the bases. Ron Coomer's fielder's choice scored one, Rich Becker's single scored another and, after Pat Meares struck out, Garces walked Chuck Knoblauch and Brent Brede to force in the game-tying run.

Orioles 13, Mariners 3

BALTIMORE — Randy Johnson's 16-game winning streak came to an end as the Orioles got two homers and six RBIs from Chris Hoiles.

Johnson (4-1) struck out 10 but gave up five runs, six hits and two walks in six innings. He was attempting to tie the AL record of 17 straight wins, set in the 1930s by Johnny Allen of Cleveland and tied by Dave McNally of the Orioles in 1968-69.

White Sox 10, Athletics 6

CHICAGO — Frank Thomas and Lyle Mouton hit first-inning home runs and Norberto Martin added a three-run homer in the third to power Chicago.

James Baldwin (1-4) survived a scary comebacker off his shoulder in the fifth to win his first game in six starts. He allowed two hits over five innings, struck out six and walked two before leaving as a precautionary measure with a bruised shoulder.

Pooley fires 64, leads BellSouth

By PAUL Newberry
AP Sports Writer

DULUTH, Ga. — Greg Norman designed the course. Don Pooley mastered it.

Pooley shot an 8-under-par 64 Thursday to grab a two-shot lead after the opening round of the BellSouth Classic, being played for the first time at the new TPC Sugarloaf Country Club.

Norman, who designed the picturesque, 7,259-yard course which meanders through the rolling hills north of Atlanta, finished with a 2-under 70 after bogeying the final two holes.

"I love this course," Pooley said. "It's fun to play. You can shape shots, think your way around and score."

Pooley, the top putter on the PGA Tour, put together a nearly perfect round with eight birdies and 10 pars. Starting on the back nine, he drained a 30-foot birdie putt at No. 11, chipped within a foot of the cup for another birdie at 13, then took two more shots off his score by making 15-footers at 14 and 17.

On the front nine, he started off with birdies from 12 and 15 feet before his putter finally let him down. He missed a 6-footer at No. 3 and settled for par.

But Pooley bounced back with birdies at the two par-5s. He reached the green in two on the 541-yard fourth hole and two-putted, then lipped out a wedge from the bunker on 6 and tapped in for the birdie.

"It was a great round," said Pooley, who missed only one green. "Every facet of the game was there."

The conditions were optimum for those golfers who teed off the in morning, with soft greens and hardly any wind. The breeze picked up considerably in the afternoon after Pooley took the course, but he still managed one brilliant shot after another.

"I'm not a long hitter, so I like this course because you must position yourself," he said. "But teeing off, I didn't think the afternoon would have the lower score. I was surprised."

Pooley, who has been plagued by injuries throughout his career, leads the tour in average putts per round (27.67) and the rest of his game is catching up. He has made the cut in every tournament this year, with two fifth-place finishes.

"I've always been a good putter and it's there now," said Pooley, who underwent neck surgery in 1992 and back surgery the following year. "My problem was I was not swinging it well. Now I'm swinging like I did in 1987. The game's fun again."

Pooley's last victory came a decade ago in the Memorial. His only other tour victory was the 1980 B.C. Open.

Five golfers were tied for second at 66, including Nick Price, who is in prime position to win his second tournament in less than a month.

NINTH IN A SERIES
Finch is up. The Albatross isn't.

After a detour to avoid dangerous airspace over central Africa, Linda Finch picked up Amelia Earhart's trail this week. She flew to Dubai, Karachi, Calcutta and Chiang Mia, Thailand. Unfortunately, the Albatross had engine trouble and was left behind. Throughout her flight, Finch has tried to talk to girls and women. In Karachi, a crowd of reporters, photographers, airport officials and tourism executives greeted the plane. Not a single woman was among them. I Calcutta, women spoke wistfully about American women doing important things with their lives. Finch's stops have provided a view of how different cultures view women and how women in different cultures view the world. American women symbolize, the "Liberated "female. So, Finch is a role model wherever she goes.

Like Earhart, Finch carries a message for women: Dream big dreams. Feminists have taken issue with Earhart for that approach. But they also acknowledge that she and women like Katharine Hepburn, Babe Didrikson and Georgia O'Keeffe served as examples of what women could accomplish. Finch's approach is similar. She told Indian housewives that there's great value in raising children and doing volunteer work. She urged Senegalese schoolgirls to take interest in technical areas. And she agreed with a female Pakistani lawyer who said that women are only inferior if they believe they are.

In Calcutta Finch spent a few hours at Mother Teresa's home for orphaned and abandoned children, and visited a school whose students devote time each day to teach street children. Later that evening, Finch donned an Indian dress called a "salwar kameez" for a dinner at the Bengal Club, a grand old vestige of the British empire. After Calcutta, Finch flew to Thailand without the Albatross, But everyone is hopeful that it will catch up soon.
