Committee opens oil probe

Panel investigates charges Reagan caused crash

■ Author claims Reagan, William Casey sought to destroy Soviets at expense of U.S. oil industry.

By Elizabeth Schwinn
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — A congressional subcommittee is investigating charges that the Reagan administration deliberately caused the world price of oil to crash in the mid-1980s.

Oil prices — which had hovered around $30 a barrel throughout the early 1980s — fell abruptly from $27 a barrel in November 1985 to $11 in July 1986.

The resulting cheap imports of oil caused the loss of an estimated half million jobs in America's domestic oil industry.

A panel of the House Government Operations Committee has been investigating whether the Reagan administration played a role in the dramatic price drop, according to a top aide to Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., chairman of the panel.

"We're starting down the track of what would be a fairly extensive review," the aide said.

No decision has been made on whether to convene public hearings, the aide said.

If hearings are held on the issue, top officials from the Reagan administration would be asked to testify, the aide said.

The question has taken new relevancy in light of a recently published book, "Victory," about the end of the Cold War.

The author, Peter Schweizer — who interviewed former Cabinet officials and Reagan's top security advisers for the book — says Reagan and Central Intelligence Agency director William Casey sought to destroy the Soviets by cutting their biggest source of

Engine check

PITTSBURGH — Investigators are checking whether the right engine of a USAir jet suddenly went into reverse and caused the crash that killed 132 people, a safety official said Saturday night. The Boeing 737 dropped rapidly from 6,000 feet and crashed Thursday night in a thick forest six miles short of Pittsburgh International Airport. On Saturday, one of six thrust reverser activators on the right engine was found to have deployed — a possible indication of why the pilots lost control of the plane, National Transportation Safety Board member Carl Vogt said./12A

Mother recalls losing her daughter, helps others cope with loss

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a three day series on the justice system, which has been and likely will continue to be, under public scrutiny.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Lydia Frescaz collects angels. In fact, she believes her daughter is an angel now.

It's ironic, since she's been through hell and back.

Ms. Frescaz lost her daughter, Angela Dee Frescaz, at the hands of her daughter's estranged husband.

The nightmare began long before Angela's March 6, 1992, death.

Angela graduated from high school in 1989 and on Nov. 5, 1990, married Gilbert Rivera, the man who eventually killed her.

She finally left him in November 1991 after suffering emotional and physical abuse and discovering he was unfaithful.

Angela had a protective order issued against her estranged husband almost a year before he shot her several times at close range on Feb. 25, 1992. She was five months pregnant.

Since her death, Angela's parents — Luis and Lydia Frescaz — have taken it upon themselves to speak out. They lobbied for stalking laws in Texas and helped form a support group called Survivors of Homicide.

Ms. Frescaz said she worked to start the support group because "there is a lot of pain and there was no group for victims of violence. It's a release of anger and feelings and it's just not that easy to get over," she explained.

The families involved in the support group "have gotten to be a family now. We comfort each other.

"A lot of people don't want to talk about it, but

No answer exists for those victimized by justice system

Justice. The word itself has a different meaning to everyone.

But, one thing holds true for the people who come in contact with the justice system involuntarily — they are overwhelmed by the processes involved with dispensing justice.

From the victim of a crime to the defendant, most people have no working knowledge of how the system operates until they are thrown into a situation that unwittingly makes them an expert by the time they are done.

Victims question the moves of the attorneys on both sides of the case, ponder the judge's actions and criticize the lack of input they have in the case they are involved in.

Court proposes tax increase to fund '95 budget

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Despite the Midland County Commissioners' Court making cuts to the proposed budget, taxpayers will be paying more this year than they did in 1993 because of a proposed 7.99 percent increase in the tax rate to help fund the $26 million 1995 budget.

However, the actual cost to the taxpayers is far more: A 12.2 percent increase based on the literal increase in the tax rate.

The county's proposed general-revenue fund budget for fiscal year 1995, which begins Oct. 1, is $18 million. The county's overall budget — including general revenue and special revenue — is $26 million.

A public hearing on the tax rate and the budget proposal is set for 9 a.m. Friday at the Commissioners' Courtroom in the Midland County Courthouse.

Initial budgetary requests from the county departments exceeded projected general-fund revenue by $3.2 million.

"We had to trim (proposed departmental budgets)," said Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer.

Groups hope to wake up holiday spirit in Midland

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Two groups of Midlanders are working together to wake up the Christmas spirit downtown. One wants to raise money to restore Christmas decorations to downtown; the other hopes to persuade downtown building managers to light up their buildings.

"Maybe, we'll have a special Christmas this year," Mayor Bobby Burns said in praise of the efforts.

A group of concerned citizens has started "Merry Merry Midland," to solicit donations to fund the purchase of lighted Christmas decorations for utility poles downtown.

Up until a few years ago, the city put up double-candle, garland wrapped decorations on the poles downtown. But the decorations, more than 10 years old, became frayed and broken. A prohibitive

Secession from Canada may follow Quebec vote Monday

■ One party promises to break up Canada by creating new country on U.S. border; other pledges to work out provincial problems within Canadian federation.

Associated Press

MONTREAL — Quebec voters take what could be their first step toward independence when they vote for a new provincial government Monday.

The choice has never been more clear in this French-speaking province of 7 million people. One party promises to break up Canada by creating a new country on the United States' northern border; the other pledges to work out provincial problems within the Canadian federation.

A confident Jacques Parizeau, leader of the separatist Parti Quebecois, was buoyed up by a long string of polls that show his party will oust the incumbent Liberals, led by Premier Daniel Johnson.

Parizeau, 64, even joked that the grueling 50-day election campaign — a mere blip on the political screen by American standards — was starting to turn the electorate off.

"I have the impression that when voters see our heads on TV these days they want to zap us," Parizeau said, announcing he would take Saturday off and end his campaign in his home district today.

Johnson, for his part, lost his voice. A recurring case of laryngitis forced him to cancel two of four scheduled broadcast interviews.

"My vocal chords aren't working as well as (Parizeau's), because I'm answering questions," said Johnson, 49. "Jacques Parizeau has consistently hidden the cost of separation."

Parizeau has pledged that if his party, known as the PQ, wins and forms the next provincial government, it will hold a referendum on independence within a year.

If he is successful in the referendum, he would chop Canada in two. An independent Quebec would cut off the Maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland from the rest of Canada.

The Canadian constitution doesn't deal with the issue of secession of one of its provinces, but if Quebec wanted to secede it's unlikely the federal government would try to stop it.

A poll published Saturday in The Gazette, Montreal's English-language daily, found that 46 percent of the voters favor the PQ to 43 percent for the Liberals. In real terms, that would translate into a large majority of PQ seats in the 125-seat Quebec legislature.

European Union ministers declare end of recession

LINDAU, Germany (AP) — European Union finance ministers say the severe recession that had thrown nearly 18 million people out of work has officially ended.

"The recession is over," declared German Finance Minister Theo Waigel, who hosted a meeting of the 12 EU nations at a resort in southern Germany Saturday. "The union is definitely on a growth pattern again."

EU economics chief Henning Christophersen predicted the group's economy would expand at 2 percent this year, higher than he forecast a year earlier.

With improved economic performance, the unemployment rate was projected to run this year at about the same as 1993 — 10.9 percent. It had been expected to surge to 11.6 percent this year.

Ministers said the jobless rate was still too high and urged continued efforts to get millions of unemployed back to work.

Last December, the union agreed on a massive public works program to create 15 million new jobs by the end of the decade by investing billions of dollars in telecommunications, energy and transportation.

Christophersen said the nations had gone heavily in debt during the downturn.

"We are now coming out of the recession with the highest level of public debt . . . in Europe since the Second World War," he said. "Deficits must be brought down as the recovery takes root."

The nations must stabilize their finances before they can enter the group's new monetary union, which will set up a joint central bank by 1999 to issue a common currency.

China warns U.S. not to be tight with Taiwan

BEIJING (NYT) — China registered another "strong protest" Saturday over the Clinton administration's decision to upgrade unofficial ties with Taiwan, warning that Taiwan was a potentially "explosive issue."

A senior Foreign Ministry official summoned Ambassador J. Stapleton Roy and accused Washington of "taking steps" to create "two Chinas, or one China, one Taiwan," and said this would not only stall the development of relations but would also lead to their deterioration.

"We demand that the U.S. government approach the question of Taiwan with every seriousness and caution," the official, Deputy Foreign Minister Liu Huaqiu, said in remarks carried on the official New China News Agency.

Liu accused Washington of "gross interference in China's internal affairs" and of infringing upon China's sovereignty, saying, "This represents a major retrogression of the United States policy on the question of Taiwan, which will entail grave consequences."

Western diplomats here have nevertheless argued that China's warning does not portend a serious rift in relations. Indeed, for the last several weeks, the Chinese leadership has been questioning U.S. officials to determine what it will take for President Clinton to make a state visit to Beijing as a sign that relations are improving.

U.S., N. Korea eye offices at start of talks

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The first official U.S. delegation to go to North Korea began discussions Saturday on opening liaison offices, a major step toward establishing formal diplomatic ties.

Liaison offices in Washington and Pyongyang, North Korea's capital, also would open a channel of communication that could speed resolution of the nuclear impasse.

U.S. officials say relations will not be fully normalized unless North Korea lets in inspectors to see for themselves whether the North has been secretly building nuclear weapons at clandestine installations.

A simultaneous round of technical talks on nuclear issues began Saturday in Berlin, which has significant expertise in nuclear matters.

The United States has never had diplomatic relations with North Korea since its founding as a Communist state in 1948.

A similar pattern was followed with China. Former President Richard Nixon ended decades of U.S. isolation of China by opening liaison offices in Beijing and Washington. Former President Jimmy Carter subsequently established full diplomatic relations in 1979.

The American delegation, led by State Department Korea specialist Lynn Turk, arrived in Pyongyang on Saturday and began preliminary discussions that evening, the North's official Korean Central News Agency said in a short report.

The talks, expected to last through Tuesday, are to focus on technicalities such as mail delivery, office space and telephone service. South Korean officials believe the liaison offices will be opened by the end of the year.

The State Department said it sees no symbolism in the talks being held in Pyongyang, but spokesman Mike McCurry conceded last week that the North Koreans might.

Cubans rush to leave before government halts exodus

■ Cuban Coast Guard gives rafters until midday Tuesday to shove off. After that, authorities vow to stop exodus by force if necessary.

N.Y. Times News Service

LAS BRISAS, Cuba — The tide of people fleeing Cuba surged again Saturday as hundreds rushed to beat a 72-hour deadline set by the government after its agreement with the United States to halt the exodus.

Cuban Coast Guard officers in green fatigues patrolled the shore on foot, but seemed to be making little effort to block the motley procession of homemade vessels into the sea.

Though the government announced that it would begin at noon Saturday to urge people not to leave, many of those on the beach said they were told by the Coast Guard that they would have until midday on Tuesday to shove off.

After that, the authorities said, they will stop the rafts by force if necessary. "Nonetheless," the government said in a statement published Saturday by the Communist Party newspaper Granma, "persuasion will always be the fundamental method employed."

In Washington, State Department officials reacted cautiously to Cuba's gradual approach to enforcing the accord, which was signed in New York on Friday after eight days of negotiation.

"The agreement started yesterday," said the chief American negotiator in the talks, Michael Skol, the principal deputy assistant secretary of state for Inter-American Affairs.

"We expect that actions will take place right away. We are going to have to judge this based on actual numbers of people who are picked up."

Throughout much of the afternoon and evening on Friday, rain, wind and choppy seas appeared to limit both the departure of rafts and their rescue by United States Coast Guard ships waiting at the edge of international waters.

After 610 Cubans were picked up by the Coast Guard on Thursday, only 177 were rescued on Friday.

But by 2 p.m. ET Saturday afternoon, the day's total was 247, and it was expected to rise as scores of rafts that left after the agreement was announced to television and radio here floated beyond the 12-mile limit of Cuban waters.

United States officials emphasized on Friday that would-be immigrants detained at American military bases in Panama and Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, would have to return home to apply for entry into the United States.

Still, it seemed to remain an article of faith along the shores east of Havana that being picked up by the United States Coast Guard and taken to Guantanamo would mean some sort of priority on the list of people seeking to immigrate.

"The people who are going to get in are the ones who get to Guantanamo," said Guillermo Vega, 30 years old, an automobile mechanic who was preparing to leave from this beach town aboard a rickety platform floated by some empty oil drums and festooned with a banner calling it "The Miraculous One."

"The people who stay are going to have to apply to God," he said.

Under the terms of the accord, the government of President Fidel Castro is obliged to "take effective measures in every way it possibly can to prevent unsafe departures, using mainly persuasive methods."

In the past, the Cuban authorities generally punished people trying to leave the island by raft with jail sentences or stiff fines. But as it did briefly in 1965 and 1980, the government suddenly lifted the ban last month.

Today partly cloudy, upper 80s

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for patchy fog in the early morning changing to partly cloudy skies later in th day with a high in the upper 80s. Winds will be from the southeast at 10-15 mph, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is expected to be fair with a low near 65.

Monday should be partly cloudy with a high near 90.

Saturday's high was 83, compared to the record high for that date of 100 set in 1964. The record low is 50 set in 1935.

STATE

An upper-level disturbance combined with a high pressure ridge triggered showers and thunderstorms Saturday in North Texas and the Coastal Plains, with more precipitation expected through the beginning of next week.

Most rainfall amounts, as indicated by Doppler radar, were one inch or less, the National Weather Service said.

Storms in the state's northern sections were triggered by moist, unstable air and an outflow boundary from earlier rainfall along the Gulf coast.

High temperatures ranged from the low 70s in rain-cooled areas to low 90s in the Rio Grande Plains and parts of the lower river valley and 95 degrees at El Paso.

Winds were mostly southerly to southeasterly at 5 to 25 mph in North Texas and the Panhandle and variable elsewhere.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms were expected in North and South Texas, along with the Concho and Big Bend valleys and parts of the Edwards Plateau and Panhandle, with rainfall diminishing in the evenings through Monday.

Patchy fog was possible this morning for sections east of the West Texas mountains.

Overnight lows should range from the mid-50s to near 70, with daytime highs in the 80s to low 90s, except for near 100 in the Presidio Valley on Monday.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms drenched southern Texas and the Gulf Coast on Saturday, while Tropical Storm Debby swept through the Caribbean, leaving three people dead and two others missing.

A tornado near Islamorada, Fla., caused minor damage at a motel. At least 2 inches of rain fell at New Orleans in a six-hour period. Galveston, Texas, had more than an inch.

A man was killed and two people were missing on the Caribbean island of St. Lucia, which was hit by the tropical storm, the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla., said. Also, a woman was killed in southern Martinique when a swollen river swept away her car and a man drowned while fishing off the coast of Puerto Rico.

In the West, a cold front moved across the northern Rockies, where some snow showers were reported above 6,000 feet. Towns in central Oregon had readings in the 30s. The morning temperature at Redding, Calif., dropped to 50, tying the daily record low set in 1926.

For the 24-hour period ending at 8 a.m. EDT, nearly 3 inches of rain fell at Corpus Christi, Texas, while more than an inch fell at San Antonio and College Station, Texas; Lafayette, La.; Tallahassee, Fla., and Brunswick, Ga.

Elsewhere, a thunderstorm at Standardsville, Va., produced more than half an inch of rain in 15 minutes. South Bend, Ind.; Rockford, Ill., and Wilkes-Barre, Pa., had more than an inch of rain.

The nation's cold spot was Kalispell, Mont., where it was 33.

hard cash: oil exports.

To achieve that goal, Reagan persuaded the Saudis to increase oil production to bring world oil prices down, according to Schweizer.

The same theme was sounded earlier this year by a Russian historian, Sergei Sefchuk, whose book reported that Soviet intelligence reports in the Russian archives showed the same U.S.-Saudi strategy.

Former Secretary of State George Shultz, a key Reagan administration official, scoffs at Schweizer's theory.

"It's a ridiculous idea," said Shultz, now with the Hoover Institution, a conservative think tank in Stanford, Calif.

"The Reagan administration wouldn't be able to do that even if it wanted to, and it didn't particularly want to," Shultz said in an interview.

However, another former Cabinet officer, ex-Attorney General Edwin Meese, told Schweizer that the Reagan administration in fact did want lower oil prices.

"We wanted lower international oil prices, largely for the benefit of the economy," Meese said. "The fact that it meant trouble for Moscow was icing on the cake."

A Washington specialist on energy in the former Soviet Union agrees with Meese's point.

"It makes a great story, but it's simply not true," said Robert Ebel, a senior fellow with the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

He said any harm to the Soviet economy would be "a side effect." He said the United States, as the leading importer of oil, would be the main beneficiary of cheap world prices.

In Schweizer's scenario, cheap oil was one part of a multi-faceted U.S. strategy aimed at ruining the former Soviet Union.

Schweizer cites an unnamed U.S. official for his description of a private meeting between Reagan and Saudi King Fahd during the king's February 1985 visit to Washington.

"No quid pro quo was ever presented and no specific price was suggested," Schweizer writes. "But the message to Fahd was unambiguous — the president who had demonstrated his commitment to Saudi Arabia wanted oil prices down for the benefit of both countries and the injury of their common enemies."

Regardless of whether Reagan and King Fahd conspired, three related facts seem beyond dispute:

■ Within a year after the White House meeting, the Saudis increased their oil production and world oil prices later plunged 58 percent.

■ The Soviet oil industry, which exported 547.5 million barrels of oil to the West in 1985, suffered a huge blow, losing an estimated $8.8 billion worth of hard currency over a 12-month period.

■ The American oil industry also took a huge hit because the sliding world price of oil forced many U.S. producers out of business.

In 1985, there were 1,960 active U.S. oil drilling operations; a year later, more than half had been shut down.

Donald P. Hodel, secretary of Energy in the Reagan administration, remembers a visit he made to a Lone Star Steel plant in Texas after the bottom had fallen out of the oil business. The Lone Star factory made products for the oil industry.

"It was appalling to go into a plant that had employed 800 people, and now there were 20 maintenance people trying to keep it fit to be started up again someday," Hodel said in interview.

Hodel, now an adviser to an oil company, said he tried unsuccessfully to persuade the Reagan administration to protect the U.S. oil industry.

Hodel said he was not privy to most of the conversations and events outlined in Schweizer's book but, nonetheless, he said he believes the author's thesis.

Hodel said he might have doubted it but for an endorsement by Caspar Weinberger, Reagan's defense secretary, who called the book "fast-moving, exciting and accurate" in a brief review in Forbes. Weinberger is publisher of the magazine.

Separately, Weinberger declined to comment specifically on the cheap-oil theory when asked by a reporter. Instead, through a spokeswoman, he said only that he "had known the book generally to be accurate."

If the theory proves true, one consumer activist thinks the administration should be held accountable for its actions.

"The Reagan administration pursued the policy despite knowing what the impact would be on the domestic oil producers. They didn't care," said Ed Rothschild, who follows the oil industry for the consumer group Citizen Action. "I think it was outrageous."

Both Rothschild and Hodel have called for congressional hearings.

By contrast, the head of a leading trade association for the oil industry doubts that undermining the Soviets had much to do with Reagan's oil policies.

"It's just good politics to have cheap oil," said George Alcorn, chairman of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, which represents 5,300 American oil producers.

"I don't know that the '86 price crash caused the Soviet Union to collapse. But I do know it just killed our industry. It was like a bomb that just blew up the whole oil patch."

Alcorn said congressional hearings wouldn't help his industry.

"I'm afraid we're an industry that's out of style politically and socially," he said. "If you say you've sacrificed the oil industry to bring down the communist horde, you might find plenty of people who think that was a great trade-off."

Rep. William Tauzin, D-La., an oil-state lawmaker, said reparations should be made to the U.S. oil industry because of the 1980s price collapse. He urged President Clinton to reinstate tax credits to benefit independent producers.

"Corrections ought to be made to give some life back to this domestic industry," Tauzin said.

"Whether the Soviet Union was part of the policy or not is immaterial to me," Tauzin said. "I know the 'cheap oil' policy was conducted. I believe it was conducted mostly for the right reasons, to help the economy."

CAFE: Restaurant offers 'roadkill' cuisine

(From 1A)

Fowlers at nearby Wickett.

Sarge's business card offers a quaint variety of services that include assassinations and such, and the Roadkill menu offers something for everyone but the squeamish.

Or diehard pet owners.

The Roadkill's grease-soaked, graffiti-stained cooker was fired up one recent weekend and snorting mysterious but exotic aromas into the clear blue West Texas sky.

"You Kill It — We Grill It," read the Roadkill sign off the fairway and beside the eighth tee box at the windswept Snyder County Club.

"Eating food is more fun when you know it was hit on the run."

The occasion was the sixth Blowout Partnership Golf Tournament where Sarge and his colleagues in culinary crime were cooking and dispensing their special wares.

They cook for love and money, mostly the former.

"It started out as a hobby, and they started calling us to cook," laughed Betty Fowler. "We were retired and just fooling around."

They're still fooling around, and they've adopted a menu to prove it.

The Roadkill fare included such entrees as Center Line Bovine, which "tastes real good straight from the road," for $4.95. Or, for $3.95, the chicken "that didn't cross the road."

Flat Cat was featured as a single item or in a stack for $2.95.

Late Night Delights included rack of racoon, smear of deer, awesome possum and cheap sheep, "served each night after dark."

Golfers who looked closely, as most did, probably recognized pork ribs, sausage and ham and fiery western beans flavored liberally with onions and jalapeno peppers.

Some had more difficulty with a secret concoction, which Sarge and the gang identified as posole, a Mexican hominy soup recommended for hangovers.

"Soaks up the alcohol," disclosed Sarge.

A bearded bear of a man with a tattoo, a sly grin and a marvelously warped sense of humor, his uniform was smoky casual with a cap that said:

"If you think your life stinks, try a whiff of mine."

Actually, Sarge readily divulged the secret to Roadkill cuisine: Cold beer. He doesn't soak anything in it except himself.

The Thompsons, married 42 years, and the Fowlers, married 52 years, can be found cooking in faraway places like Fort Stockton and McCamey and such Big Bend outposts as Lajitas and Terlingua.

"We're all in our second childhood," Dorothy said smiling.

Sarge, a retired oilfield pumper, says he and his wife have attended every chili cookoff at Terlingua except the first one in 1967.

Sarge built his cooking pit in 1980 and says a London Times reporter once compared the smoke sputtering pit to the African Queen.

Presumably, though, not everybody is impressed by his menu, which features a "Bag 'n Gag" daily special: "Anything dead on bread."

For dog lovers, there is "Canine Cuisine," some of which the Roadkill menu identifies as Slab of Lab, Pit Bull Pot Pie, Cocker Cutlets, Poodles 'n Noodles and Round of Hound.

"Guess That Mess" is a daily special: "If you can guess what it is, you eat it for free!"

Sarge tells a story about the time a lady of better-than-average breeding came by as he was setting out his delicacies at Lajitas. As the woman tasted a bite or two, someone asked what it was Sarge was cooking.

He allowed as how he didn't rightly know.

"Two cars in front of us run over it," he drawled. "We just scooped it up off the road and tossed it on the cooker."

The woman fainted.

FUND: Commissioners' Court proposes tax increase

(From 1A)

"We carved as much fat out of the budget requests as we possibly could and still came up short," he said. "I think we could have done some more."

To fund the difference between anticipated revenues and expenditures, the commissioners proposed the 7.99 percent tax increase.

Seltzer estimated that each 1 percent increase in the tax rate would generate $85,000 in new revenue. Based on that, the proposed increase would bring in an additional $680,000 to the county's treasury.

The county's 7.99 percent rate was computed in part on a state formula to offset the county's $375,000 in unreimbursed expenses of $2 million in housing Texas prisoners in fiscal year 1994. As a result, the proposed tax rate does not reflect the literal 12.2 percent tax increase to taxpayers.

Without figuring in the effective tax rate, the difference between last year's 23.56 cent rate and the proposed 26.43 cent rate is 2.87 cents or a 12.2 percent differential — tax increase. The county's effective tax rate is 23.508 cents.

Each cent generates about $370,000, which is based on the $3.7 billion tax base. On that basis, the 2.87 cent tax increase would generate more than $1 million in new revenue.

The proposed tax increase would convert to an almost $30 increase in county taxes on a $100,000 house — from $235.60 to $264.30.

The proposed 7.99 percent tax increase — which is just short of the 8-plus percent rate that could result in a rollback election — was passed in a 3-2 vote.

Voting for the 26.43 cent tax rate were Win Brown, Henry Goulet and Louisa Valencia. Seltzer and Guy McCrary opposed the increase.

"I am a fiscal conservative," Seltzer "I ran for office (the judgeship) as a fiscal conservative. I have tried to be a fiscal conservative all my life, and I intend to leave office (at the end of 1994) as a fiscal conservative."

Seltzer believes further "cuts could have been made" to lower the budget and reduce any proposed tax increase.

"Each individual department has its own wants, needs and wishlist," Seltzer said.

"It has never been the intention of this court to macro-manage any other officeholder, but only to manage those departments under our direct control," such as the Midland County Library.

McCrary said this year is "simply the wrong time to raise taxes on assets — families and businesses in our community.

"We are seeing some signals of a stronger economy," McCrary said. "And I think there's encouragement in those signs."

However, the $3.7 billion tax base "has yet to recover from pre-1986 levels," McCrary said, when the tax base peaked at more than $5 billion in 1985.

Mrs. Valencia, however, said the tax increase was "overdue.

"We should have taken care of it awhile back," she said. "We needed to increase the tax rate to make ends meet."

Mrs. Valencia cited growth in county government — which employs 500 people — and increases in trial costs, paying court-appointed attorneys and housing prisoners.

Seltzer termed many of those added expenses "unfunded mandate madness" from the state and federal governments. Among mandated expenses were costs in buying and renovating a downtown building to house probation offices for the Midland Judicial District's Community Supervision and Corrections Department.

Midland County's tax rate is one of the lowest among Texas counties, Mrs. Valencia said.

"I think, maybe, we made a mistake in the past by not increasing our tax rate according to our growth," Mrs. Valencia said. "And we still have to give people the services they are entitled to."

"We're running short of money all of the time," Goulet said. "And we just have to have it . . . I hate to raise taxes. It's just a question of trying to break even."

The county's single highest source of general-fund revenue comes from the ad valorem, or property tax, which in 1994-95 is to bring in $9.7 million, according to a report prepared by County Auditor James Ross.

The half-cent sales tax is to generate $5.4 million. Additional funds are generated by service charges or fees, fines, forfeitures, grants and interest.

"I think a sales tax is, quite frankly as taxes goes, a much more equitable way to tax things than necessarily property taxes," Seltzer said.

Among budgetary cutbacks made by the Commissioners' Court was $1.1 million from Sheriff Gary Painter's proposed $7.49 million budget. Most of the sheriff's funding goes toward corrections — maintaining jails and inmates. The remainder goes toward public safety, which includes patrolling, investigating crimes and serving warrants.

The sheriff, who employs 166 people, sought a pay raise for his employees, more manpower, more vehicles, and support for those increases. Of his work force, 112 are assigned to the county's two jails.

The Commissioners' Court has not granted pay raises to county workers for four years.

The sheriff said his budget would be much healthier if he could be credited with the estimated $2.2 million paid to the county in fiscal year 1994 for housing inmates.

Texas' share of inmate costs is $2 million, which is about $375,000 short of what it cost Midland County to house state prisoners.

"The auditor and the Commissioners' Court refuse to credit that back to the Sheriff's Department," Painter said. "It goes into the general fund for them to spend anyway they want to. The Sheriff's Department doesn't get any credit for it. We don't have the opportunity to make use of that money or even get credit for it. So, we're penalized for doing a job that we can't ignore. We, by law, have to (take prisoners)."

Seltzer said the state Legislature has abolished the practice of officeholders keeping fees generated by their offices.

"That (law) prevents you from going into a commercial operation, which is exactly what the sheriff wants to do," Seltzer said. "All at money is paid into the general fund of the county.

"The budget runs your office, not the other way around," Seltzer said.

DECORATE: Groups hope to wake up Christmas spirit

city budget didn't allow for replacements.

Now the committee of "Merry Merry Midland" hopes that through the generosity of Midlanders, individuals, organizations and companies, the city can afford the expense.

Targeted are decorations for 124 poles on Wall Street from Andrews Highway to Front Street, on Texas Avenue from A Street to Main Street, and surrounding the Midland County Courthouse.

Cost to restore the decorations is about $35,000.

"We are going about this as selling the poles," said Denise Burns, a member of the committee.

For example, $250 will decorate a pole and $3,000 will decorate a dozen. But, Ms. Burns pointed out, donations of any size are welcome.

The mayor has sent out several hundred letters seeking donations for the project. "Right now it seems like Midland is very interested," he said of the initial response.

The committee — which includes a few interested citizens and representatives from Keep Midland Beautiful, the Arts Assembly and the city — hopes to raise the money by the end of this month and have the decorations up by Nov. 10.

Although a style of decoration has yet to be chosen, possibilities include a Christmas tree, stocking, wreath or candy cane.

To complement the anticipated utility pole decorations, the "Christmas Spirit Committee," has set out to get all the downtown buildings lit up with Christmas lights or decorated, such as with green paper in the windows to form a giant Christmas tree.

"We wanted to help Midland shine. We are hoping it will help revitalize downtown," said Mona Craig, a member of the Christmas Spirit Committee.

Letters have been sent out to all the building managers and many appear responsive, Ms. Craig said.

Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. has already committed to lighting NationsBank building, Midland's tallest building, she said.

The committee has also designated the evening of Dec. 2 for all buildings downtown to go all out with decorations and lighting "so people can drive downtown and see it," Ms. Craig said.

Tax deductible donations for the downtown Christmas decorations can be made to the Permian Basin Area Foundation, P.O. Box 10424, Midland, 79702.

Abortion draws attention to population boom

Delegates are expected to approve a wide-ranging plan for curbing population growth before world population conference adjourns Tuesday.

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The abortion debate at the U.N. population conference, for all its divisiveness, has succeeded in focusing the world's spotlight on the broader issue of curbing the world's population boom.

Delegates failed to resolve three remaining issues in their Program of Action on Saturday night, but before the conference closes Tuesday they are expected to approve the wide-ranging plan for slowing population growth.

It's true that many more compelling components got short shrift — equal rights for women, ensuring equal education for girls, women's health issues and balancing population growth with the earth's limited resources.

But the silver lining is that with the abortion argument raging, the world paid more attention to overpopulation over the past week than it would have if the conference consisted only of droning speeches.

Dr. Fred Sai, chairman of the committee on the abortion question, said the abortion debate has been good for the conference. "Without it, you people (in the media) would have buried it," he said Saturday at a news conference.

In a ceremony organized alongside the conference by religious activists, Muslims, Christians, Buddhists, Hindus, Sikhs and Ba'hais held hands in a circle Saturday and prayed for peace.

The Muslim prayer ended with a veiled woman shouting at the imam, or prayer leader, for speaking out against abortion, women's equality and other ideas discussed at the conference.

"God, take care of those who want to spread promiscuity and homosexuality among Muslims," the imam intoned. About 100 people responded "amen" before an Egyptian woman in the audience began shaking her fists.

"I am Muslim and I don't support what you are saying," she shouted before security intervened. "You are destroying and distorting the image of Islam."

While the problems of population growth are huge — the world gains more than 90 million people each year — the meeting has mostly dealt with arguments over minute turns of phrase like "fertility regulation" and "reproductive and sexual health."

The joke circulating in the corridors at the conference was: "Who ever thought that talking about sex all week could be so boring."

The key remaining issues center on "reproductive rights" for women. The Vatican objects that the phrase could be misconstrued to include abortion, and Muslim countries are worried that the wording could foster premarital sex.

Delegates finally hammered out compromise language on "unsafe" abortion Friday, but the Vatican still refused to sign on, along with predominantly Catholic Malta, Ecuador, Peru and Argentina. Delegates said Jordan, Libya and Costa Rica also registered objections Saturday.

Sai, whose committee worked on the abortion compromise, said that for all the fuss, changes in language did not alter the meaning that much.

But he noted the Vatican's rigid stance through five days of debate produced much bitterness.

"There is rightful anger, frustration and concern among many quarters about the extent we had to bend over backwards" in trying to accommodate the Vatican's position, Sai said.

At the current rate of population growth, the current population of 5.7 billion would hit 10 billion by 2050.

Aid workers: Traumatized Rwandan children may carry on bloody deeds

By Karin Davies
Associated Press

BUKAVU, Zaire — Hidden in tree branches, Alfred Hategekimana watched Hutu soldiers butcher his mother, father, sister and brother.

"Their blood was everywhere," the 14-year-old whispers, his body quaking. "I am very sad."

Aid workers treating Alfred and other traumatized children fear that unless they can be redeemed, the long-time hatreds of Rwanda will continue into another generation and a new cycle of bloodletting.

The Tutsis won Rwanda's civil war in July, but for Alfred the battle goes on.

His dreams are of Hutu killers and rivers of blood. He cries out for his dead sister, and sliced his hand reaching through a window pane for her.

Some days Alfred is hostile — striking out at all grownups, blaming them for his parents' brutal murders. Other days, his heart pounding and his hands fluttering like butterflies.

Doctors believe he was a normal, happy boy before Rwanda's people turned on each other in April and he lost his family in a frenzy of ethnic killing.

Alfred is one of nearly 500 children getting special treatment from UNICEF for psychological and social problems. There are an estimated 10,000 unaccompanied children in Bukavu alone.

'Dehumanize children today, and they will shoot you in the back tomorrow.'

— Brother Bernard Heylen

"These troubled children are the future of Rwanda," said Juan Carlos Espinola, UNICEF's coordinator for emergency operations in Bukavu. "We must help them to overcome their traumas and become useful members of society. If we fail as a society to convince them to choose peaceful ways, we will have another massacre in Rwanda."

Brother Bernard Heylen of the Belgian Roman Catholic group Brothers of Charity had a bleak warning: "Dehumanize children today, and they will shoot you in the back tomorrow."

A study by UNICEF in Kigali, Rwanda's capital, found that 90 percent of children interviewed had been traumatized by the war.

"A high percentage of these kids were really affected by the war because they saw their families being killed or saw their families killing others," Espinola said.

Heylen said the Hutu death squads that hacked and clubbed to death more than 500,000 people, mostly Tutsis, "succeeded in creating a mentality that you had to participate or you would become a victim. Even children knew this. In Rwanda, children became killers, too."

Panzi is like a boot camp for boys. Teen-agers sprawl on the ground in fatigues, playing cards and swearing. They bum cigarettes and beer from the soldiers and paw the breasts of passing girls.

They sleep on the ground, under the stars. They fight for food, a turn at the showers, attention.

The boys take swaggering pride in the nasty label given to them by those aid workers who deemed them unworthy of help — only UNICEF and the Catholic aid agency Caritas have worked with the children at Panzi. They are known as "crapes," a diminutive of the French word "crapules," which means "scum of the earth."

In the showers at Bukavu's Ibanda Camp, a dirty slip of a girl rocked back and forth, moaning, never speaking.

A child on a dusty road near Gikongoro in southwestern Rwanda panicked when a truckload of armed soldiers passed. "Mama, mama, they're killing me!" he screamed.

An impish 10-year-old at an orphanage, in an attempt at black humor, covered his head and howled, "My mama's dead, my mama's dead."

Jean-Claude Nzagisenga, 15, whose parents were killed in the war, said: "I feel dead inside. I don't care about anyone or anything."

"A talk show should reflect real life. Sometimes serious and sometimes fun."

Pope appears frail during his first visit to former Yugoslavia

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) Pope John Paul II, looking frail and leaning on a cane, began his first trip to former Yugoslavia on Saturday.

After an evening service in Zagreb cathedral, the pontiff steadied himself by placing his hand on the altar and was helped down several small steps by Zagreb's archbishop, Cardinal Franjo Kuharic.

The 74-year-old pontiff broke his leg in a fall in April, and now relies heavily on a cane. His left hand noticeably shook on Saturday.

Calling himself a "defenseless pilgrim of the Gospel," the pope arrived in this Roman Catholic stronghold just days after canceling the trip he had hoped to make to Sarajevo, the capital of war-torn Bosnia-Herzegovina.

For the first time on any of his 62 foreign trips, the pope failed to kiss the ground after hobbling down from his Alitalia jetliner. Instead, he kissed Croatian soil held up to him in a bowl.

Croatians, nearly 70 percent of whom are Roman Catholic, are hoping for moral support in their conflict against the Serbs and will be looking for political symbolism at every turn of the pope's two-day stay.

John Paul did not disappoint them.

During airport welcoming ceremonies, the pope praised the late Cardinal Alojzije Stepinac, who is condemned as a Nazi sympathizer by many Serbs.

He also singled out the Croatian towns of Vukovar, Dubrovnik and Zadar, which came under attack from Serbian forces.

Croatia is still chafing at the loss of one-third of its territory to Serbs during its civil war in 1991, and wants the pontiff's visit to focus attention on the country's plight.

He also spoke emotionally of Sarajevo, the Bosnian capital besieged by Bosnian Serbs. He called it "a martyred town, which I as a pilgrim of peace and hope wanted fervently to visit."

The pope called off a planned trip to Sarajevo because of fighting.

Tropical Storm Debby hits Caribbean hard

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Tropical Storm Debby churned northwest through the eastern Caribbean on Saturday, killing three people, leaving two missing and causing extensive damage on the islands of St. Lucia and Martinique.

Heavy rain and gusty winds were expected in the drought-parched U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. The storm was to pass just south of the islands early today.

At 5 p.m., the center of Debby was located about 220 miles south of San Juan. The storm was moving toward the west northwest at about 20 mph. The storm packed sustained winds of about 40 mph.

A man was buried in a landslide in the southwest town of Soufriere on St. Lucia, police reported. Two others were missing in Soufriere. A 29-year-old woman died in southern Martinique when a swollen river swept away her car, police said. A 22-year-old man drowned while fishing off the southwest coast of Puerto Rico.

In St. Lucia, flooding swept away bridges and chunks of roadway, leaving some roads impassible.

The storm wreaked havoc in the French island of Martinique, destroying banana plantations, flooding towns and blocking roads with trees felled by the strong winds. Some 20,000 residents were left without power and schools were closed.

The storm wasn't entirely bad news for Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands, which are suffering from a year-long drought. The U.S. federal government has declared Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands agricultural disaster zones. Some 1.8 million people in the eastern part of Puerto Rico, including the San Juan area, have endured strict water rationing since May.

Official: Invasion looms because of stubborn Haitian leaders

WASHINGTON (AP) — The refusal of Haiti's military rulers to discuss a peaceful return to democracy is pushing the United States closer to invading the island nation, President Clinton's special adviser on Haiti said Saturday.

The adviser, William Gray, told CNN's "Newsmaker Saturday" that an invasion is likely now because the United States and other nations have run out of patience with Gen. Raoul Cedras' repeated rejection of United Nations emissaries who sought to start negotiating a peaceful transfer of power.

"We have tried everything," Gray said. "We would like to resolve this issue peacefully without using the military option. They refuse to even meet with the international community.

"Only the president of the United States will announce when there is a deadline," Gray said. "I would just simply say . . . a military option is a very high probability."

Clinton, Vice President Al Gore and top national security advisers met Saturday at the White House to discuss Haiti, but made no final decisions, said Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers.

Poll: 57 percent of Americans oppose U.S. invasion of Haiti, and 51 percent would rather wait for tougher economic sanctions to have an impact.

The goal of an invasion would be to drive out Cedras and his followers, who seized power in a September 1991 coup that ousted Haiti's democratically elected president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

According to a Newsweek magazine poll released Saturday, 57 percent of Americans oppose U.S. participation in a multinational invasion of Haiti, and 51 percent would rather wait for tougher economic sanctions to have an impact.

The poll of 752 adults, with a 4 percentage point margin of error, found that 61 percent said they favor a compromise under which Haiti's military rulers would surrender power to someone other than Aristide and hold new elections.

Some members of Congress questioned the pace at which Clinton is trying to proceed with an invasion, and urged him to let Congress thoroughly debate the matter before he makes his decision.

"President Clinton and his advisers seem to feel no need to secure authorization from the Congress," Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said in the GOP response to the president's weekly radio address. "What American interests in Haiti are so vital that we are prepared to spill American blood to protect or promote them?"

Rep. James Oberstar, D-Minn., who lived in Haiti for three years, said an invasion of Haiti should be considered a police action.

Almost Miss Americas talk about how it feels

By John Curran
Associated Press

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — One minute, she's planning her walk down the runway. The next, she's helping the woman next to her put on the crown.

There she is . . . the first runner-up in the Miss America Pageant.

But many of the women who have come that close to the coveted title say they wouldn't rewrite history, even if they could.

"I would've loved to be Miss America. I'm not kidding anybody. But luckily, it wasn't the biggest thing in my life and hasn't been since," said Karen Herd Talbot, the first runner-up for the 1972 crown.

"It's very disappointing," said Tana Carli Dimino, who lost out for the 1979 title. "When you're not the top one, you go, 'Oh, I came so close.' You'd almost rather lose big than lose that way."

Before the winner is announced, the master of ceremonies always tells the finalists that if Miss America is unable to perform her duties, the first runner-up will assume the post.

But it's only happened once: When Vanessa Williams was forced to resign after nude photographs of her were published in Penthouse in 1984. Next Saturday's pageant is the 74th annual contest.

She was succeeded by Miss New Jersey, Suzette Charles, who held the title for two months. Charles declined to be interviewed for this article.

'It's very disappointing. . .When you're not the top one, you go, 'Oh, I came so close.' You'd almost rather lose big than lose that way.'

— Tana Carli Dimino, 1979 first runner-up.

After the pageant, Miss America goes on to a year of fame and travel. Her second fiddle goes home to play trade shows, Jaycees meetings and civic events.

"The tears didn't hit me until I got home," said Dimino, a 38-year-old mother of two in Fisher Island, Fla. "I walked into my house, and there I am after working for so many years to be Miss America, feeling very lonely. I had a good cry and I felt much better."

She was Miss America for one day, sort of: Miss America Cheryl Prewitt was booked for two events in different places on the same day, so Dimino subbed for her at the Greater Pottsville (Pa.) Winter Carnival.

But even as first runner-up, she was a hot commodity. Her schedule filled up so quickly she had to take a leave of absence from her job as an accountant to make time for all the appearances.

Then there was a second career as a news anchorwoman at network television affiliates in Cleveland and Miami.

Like others, Dimino has no complaints about the way her life has played out because she wasn't Miss America.

"It's a title for a year. It doesn't make your life or break it. It can open a door for you, but you have to wiggle your foot to get in there even if you do have the title," Dimino said.

And some say there are advantages to finishing second.

"Many people say that as first runner-up, you reap the rewards and benefits without sacrificing too much. It's like getting your cake and eating it, too," said Julianne Kiedinger, first runner-up for the 1987 crown.

Kiedinger, known as Julianne Smith when she represented Virginia in the 1986 pageant, entered it unsure if she wanted to win. By the time she stood on stage with the other finalists, though, she had talked herself into it.

Cubans break out of detention camps

Military security personnel dressed in riot gear and armed with fixed bayonets escort Cuban refugees back to camps at Guantanamo Bay.

WASHINGTON (AP) — About 2,500 Cubans broke out of detention camps Saturday at the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba to protest a new U.S.-Cuba immigration agreement, Defense Department officials said.

A crowd of refugees walked about a half-mile to the base's Navy Exchange and restaurant area about 1 p.m., but most began voluntarily returning to their camps by 2:30 p.m., said Maj. Walter Thorpe, a spokesman for the Navy's Atlantic Command.

About a half-hour later, Brig. Gen. Mike Williams spoke to about 500 to 600 Cubans who remained, Thorpe said. Williams is commander of a military task force overseeing both Cuban and Haitian refugee camps at Guantanamo.

"After a 30-minute discussion, this group also began returning to their camps," the department said in a written statement.

Military security personnel dressed in riot gear and armed with fixed bayonets escorted the Cubans back, according to the statement. At least one refugee — a 35-year-old man — suffered a shoulder wound from a bayonet, and authorities said they were trying to confirm a report that one other person was hurt.

"We believe that someone pretty much had moved into or walked into a bayonet, and that it more or less grazed an arm," Thorpe said. "This person then disappeared into the crowd, and we've not been able to locate that person, although we've been looking."

The man with the shoulder injury was reported in stable condition at the base's hospital, where he was to remain overnight for observation.

Thorpe described the protest as peaceful.

"There were no rocks thrown. There were no other acts of violence reported," he said.

Meanwhile, the Coast Guard said 372 Cuban rafters had been picked up by 6 p.m. Saturday, more than twice Friday's total of 177, and were being transported to Guantanamo. Petty Officer Jeff Hall pointed out that the number Friday could be been held down by a number of severe thunderstorms in the Florida Straits.

Five officials from the State Department and the Immigration and Naturalization Service were to be sent to Guantanamo Bay on Saturday to explain the new agreement to the Cubans.

The agreement, announced Friday, will allow thousands more Cubans to enter the United States legally, but only from Cuban soil. Refugees who decline to repatriate will remain at Guantanamo or at "safe havens" in other countries.

The more than 24,000 Cubans detained at Guantanamo will not be allowed to apply for immigrant status. "There will be no processing of any kind," said Michael Skol, the chief U.S. delegate to the talks.

The White House said it hoped the pact will stop a chaotic, dangerous exodus by sea.

The agreement, initialed by negotiators on behalf of President Clinton and Fidel Castro, acknowledged the interests of both countries in ending the risky flight by raft across the Straits of Florida.

Attorney General Janet Reno said the United States would admit a minimum of 20,000 Cubans a year under existing immigration authority. That's in addition to immediate relatives of Cubans who have become U.S. citizens and an additional 4,000 to 6,000 Cubans currently on the waiting list for visas.

Currently, the 20,000 figure is an upper limit instead of a minimum, and only a few thousand Cubans have actually been allowed to immigrate each year.

'I've been patient, but this took all the wind out of my sail (two-month trial delay). There is no consideration to us. I need to wake up from this nightmare. We need closure . . . We haven't set the headstone yet because it hasn't been closed.'

LOSS: Mother struggles through death of child

(From 1A)

it's good to talk about it," Ms. Frescaz said.

"We've accepted it. It's hard to know a person you loved had to hurt and die like that. I can still see my Angela crying out for help," she said, remembering. "I just wanted to die when she died. I couldn't believe there was no more life in her body."

Ms. Frescaz said the support-group members talk on the phone a lot and "we know each other's pain."

In addition to helping others cope with the suffering, Ms. Frescaz also played an instrumental part in getting a stalking law passed by the state Legislature.

She contacted state Rep. Debra Danburg, who spearheaded the movement for a stalking law.

"She (Ms. Frescaz) had written us a letter and sent us a picture of her daughter. Hearing her story, it was really sad, but we found her story to be a classic stalking case," said Debbie Johnson, Ms. Danburg's legislative assistant.

Ms. Johnson said the Frescaz family traveled to Austin to speak before the Legislature in the spring of 1993.

"She went out of her way to drive down here and she really helped get the bill passed," Ms. Johnson said. "I recall her telling us she was not going to let her daughter's death be a waste. She said she was going to make a difference."

She said Ms. Frescaz's testimony was "moving and really helped get the legislation passed."

"I'm fighting this cause for her" Ms. Frescaz said of her testimony regarding the tragic ending of her daughter's life.

Ms. Frescaz can vividly recall the horror and fear her daughter felt because of her estranged husband.

"She was so scared she didn't know what to do. She had to go to the women's shelter and she had to sneak around to do it or he would have hurt her and the baby," Ms. Frescaz said.

Midland police Sgt. David Garcia said the stalking law and a Family Violence Law have both helped make situations like Angela's less common.

"We have come a long way in domestic violence. We used to couldn't arrest someone if we didn't see the incident or the wife wouldn't press charges. The only thing we could do then is to advise someone to leave or press charges," Garcia said.

"Now, the Family Violence Law has enabled law enforcement to make arrests if there is evidence of an assault or threat of an assault or if the victim is in obvious fear . . . We have diffused a lot of situations by making arrests," he said.

If the couple is at an impasse and no one will leave or the officer believes he will return to further problems or it will escalate, then an arrest can be made, he said.

"I think we've stopped some serious aggravated assaults or homicides . . . This has to be one of the best things to recently be placed in law," he said.

He said the new stalking law helps to save lives, as well.

"In the Frescaz case, the guy was obviously stalking her and if the guy is determined, there is only so much we could do to prevent it," Garcia said.

Under the stalking law, victims have to report every act to authorities to make sure officers can do something about it, Ms. Frescaz pointed out.

Ms. Frescaz said she wants to start another support group to get laws changed so prison sentences are served. She wants to organize the new group as a "watchdog group" and hopes it will involve people with many years of experience who can assist victims.

She hopes the group can get started later this month or in October. She said it will entail a lot of work, but she anticipates the group helping make the system work better and make the streets safer.

"We need to let people know when you do wrong you're going to pay the price for it," she said.

"We don't want to see criminals get out once they're sentenced. I feel like if I break the law and I'm sentenced to 20 years, I expect to do 20 years . . . This nonsense of 'good behavior' and 'overcrowding' setting these guys free is a bunch of hogwash," Ms. Frescaz said emphatically.

"We're talking about people who rape and murder . . . They don't deserve compassion. They didn't have compassion when they were committing these crimes," Ms. Frescaz said.

Angela's killer was sentenced to life in prison for the murder, but the Frescaz family fears Rivera will be released sooner.

"The first place he'll come is here to try and hurt us . . . He is full of revenge and hate. He probably thinks it was our daughter that got him in that place instead of accepting the blame for his own actions.

"I had always thought life was life. But now I understand he only has to serve like one-quarter of the time and that's only 15-20 years," Ms. Frescaz said.

The Frescaz family — which includes Mr. and Mrs. Frescaz, their five other children and Angela's 3-year-old son Bradley — still fear Rivera's wrath.

Ms. Frescaz said Angela left Rivera in November 1991 and both she and her family thought the ordeal would be over at that point.

"We thought it was all going to blow over" after that, she said.

Instead, they began getting strange calls, hearing someone outside their home at night and seeing his car driving through their neighborhood at all hours, Ms. Frescaz said.

"It was scary just knowing he was around," Ms. Frescaz recalled. "Gilbert had threatened to kill (Angela's physically handicapped) brother just to spite her."

Rivera also threatened Ms. Frescaz's husband and Angela at various times.

Ms. Frescaz, speaking about Rivera, remembered a time he took his and Angela's car from the Frescaz's home when Angela was visiting her family and then reported it stolen.

She also related a time when Rivera called a suicide hotline and had them call Angela to tell her about it. Other incidents include the time he broke into the Frescaz's home and trashed Angela's room and when he tried to burn down the Frescaz's house.

"It's so hard to believe people are like that," Angela's mother said.

She also told of harassment from Rivera after he was in the county's custody. She said she received mail and magazines in Angela's name after her death.

"It's never going to be over. Unless, maybe, he dies. That might be the answer to our prayers, but then I'd be afraid his ghost would haunt us — that's how afraid I am," Ms. Frescaz said.

Since he's been incarcerated, a friend of Rivera's told Ms. Frescaz that he "found Christ and has changed."

Ms. Frescaz called the conversion "humbug."

She said he may be a better person while "he's cooped up and can't hurt nobody, but when he comes out, the bad thoughts will all come back."

Rochell Buck, coordinator for the Midland County District Attorney's Victim Witness Program, said Ms. Frescaz is unbelievable in the amount of strength she demonstrates.

"It's like a never-ending story for them. He is always messing with them and they have a fear of him coming back," she said.

"You look at all they've been through and the things they can handle. Instead of turning all their support inward, she turns it outward to help others. The load she carries is amazing," Ms. Buck said.

But, Ms. Frescaz is quick to admit she couldn't do it all on her own.

"I pray to God to give me strength," Ms. Frescaz said. "Every time I see the news it breaks my heart to see people hurting each other."

She said people take every day for granted, but life is so fragile it should be treasured.

"You could be going to the store and can get raped, robbed or killed and then you're a victim. I'm leery of everyone now," she said.

Despite the fear and apprehension, Ms. Frescaz expresses both joy and sadness when she recalls her daughter.

"Sometimes I can still hear her come through the door," she said.

"She was sweet, friendly and was all smiles all the time. She had aspirations to be a physical therapist working with handicapped people," Ms. Frescaz said.

While Ms. Frescaz talks, a red-haired little youngster in denim overalls bounds onto the couch and gives his Mama a hug. The dimples in his cheeks add a mischievous look to the youngster as he asks Mama to put a "Thomas the Tank Engine" video on the television for him.

This energetic little boy is the son Angela left behind. The Frescazes are Bradley's legal guardians and are working to adopt the boy.

They are also trying to get Bradley's name legally changed from Rivera to Frescaz, but Rivera — although he is in jail — is fighting them.

Ms. Frescaz said he doesn't understand what happened to his mother, but he knows the Frescaz family as his own because he hasn't had anyone else to remember since his mother was killed when he was 11 months old.

The topic of conversation turned to her grandchild. Ms. Frescaz said every time Bradley passes a cemetery he knows his "momma" is in there.

Since Angela's death, Ms. Frescaz's life has changed. She said every Christmas the Frescaz family buys a new ornament for the tree in honor of Angela. This year will mark the third ornament in the collection.

"Really, sometimes, I just know she is coming through the door. But, I know that's not happening," she said.

She said her husband has taken the loss of his daughter very hard.

"It breaks his heart," Ms. Frescaz said.

"You think you're going to live your whole life and then she's gone. You want the best for your children and then your kid meets someone like that and it destroys your life. I still can't believe she's not here.

"When someone takes a life, it hurts a family. We'll never get over it. This has taken some of the joy out of the house . . . It's just not the same anymore. When you hurt someone, it doesn't end there," Ms. Frescaz said.

As Bradley bounds back into the room, the conversation shifts back to the youngster.

She said he has a birthmark in the exact same place his mother did. She'd go to sleep at the dinner table during a meal; so does Bradley.

"She used to smile, big time, and he does, too. I guess everything happens for a reason, we just don't know what that reason is," Ms. Frescaz said.

"So many people expect you to just get over it and go on with life. But, you can't go on with life and forget about it," she said.

Ms. Frescaz has vivid thoughts of Angela getting shot as she sat in her car in a grocery store parking lot.

"Sometimes I feel like the whole thing is a nightmare and I'm going to wake up and it will all be over."

"Even after they amputated her leg I prayed to God to let her live. It would be hard but I thought I could do it — I could take care of her.

"It was so sad walking into that ICU room and not crying. I didn't want her to see me cry because she was alert the whole time, she would write notes asking when could she go home, could she have a Coke, and she also told of Gilbert and his accomplice shooting her and asking if the police had him," Ms. Frescaz said.

Angela lived for 10 days in the hospital after the shooting.

Tears welled up in her eyes as Ms. Frescaz told of her daughter's lungs continuing to deteriorate and harden, causing her death.

"We had so much hope," she said.

"Angela lost out and he surely lost out as well," Ms. Frescaz said about her daughter's killer.

"I'm not going to teach Bradley to hate. It is going to be hard to teach him what happened. Especially when the man who killed his mom and the baby sister he never had will want to come back and see him," she said.

Ms. Frescaz returns to court in October to continue her fight to gain legal custody of Bradley and to change his last name.

JUSTICE: System can overwhelm victims, their families, defendants

(From 1A)

Defendants, too, are almost excluded from the proceedings, taking cues from their attorneys and oftentimes not knowing what their rights are. They depend solely on their attorneys for advice.

The constant in the entire ordeal is that no answer or solution exists for persons victimized by the justice system.

Sandra Edge worked with victims and their families — listening to their concerns — while she was the coordinator of the district attorney's Victim Witness Program.

Ms. Edge said some victims and their families "don't have a clue regarding the justice process" and others have preconceived ideas that aren't accurate.

"Many just don't understand the procedures and the laws . . . they don't know why some evidence can't be presented in court, let alone understand all the delays involved in court.

"They watch 'L.A. Law' and see these cases over in an hour, so they don't realize that proceedings like motions for continuances and pre-trial hearings and everyday things like attorneys having a death in the family or being sick can cause slowdowns," Ms. Edge said.

Judge Dean Rucker of the 318th District Court agreed.

"In any capacity in judicial proceedings, what you see on television shows like 'L.A. Law' and 'Matlock' may not be truly representative of the way things happen."

Rochell Buck, who is now the Victim Witness Program coordinator, said most victims "want it all done right away."

"I usually tell them immediately it's going to take about one to 1½ years before the case goes to trial; then if it comes up in six months, they're happy. If you tell them it should be up in six months and they have to wait a year it's worse for them," Ms. Buck explained.

"Although it's touted as the best system in the world, it has delays and false starts. But, it is still the best system in the world," Rucker said.

Ms. Buck said the holdups cause problems for victims "in the sense that you can't begin to recover from what has happened to you while it's still pending . . . You can't put it out of your mind."

"They are in a hurry and anxious . . . They want to get on with their lives and they're put on hold," Ms. Edge said.

"Many have told me going through the trial is like the whole thing happening to them again," Ms. Buck said.

Plus, she said, the victim — who has to be excluded during testimony if he is a potential witness — can't hear what's going on in the trial. However, during closing arguments, the victim and other witnesses can return to the courtroom and often they hear new things and that adds to their trauma, Ms. Buck said.

Crisis Intervention Unit Coordinator Francie Murdock and Survivors of Homicide organizer Lydia Frescaz listen at a recent meeting as a member talks about an upcoming case.

Lydia Frescaz, the mother of a murder victim, is now more familiar with the justice process than she had ever aspired to be.

Her daughter was killed in early 1992 and her contact with the courts is ongoing as she is trying to adopt her daughter's son.

When she had the initial contact with the courts she knew little about just how justice is administered or what would be involved in the trial of her daughter's killer.

One of the things she learned is that the victim's family has to remain stoic and composed during court proceedings, which can be difficult, she admitted.

"In that courtroom you know lies are being said, but there is nothing you can do in the court system," she said.

Prosecutors indicated that emotional outbursts can lead to mistrials or give the defendant a reasonable cause for a new trial on appeal.

Ms. Frescaz said that during the trial having support from family and friends helps.

"It gives you hope to have someone there to hold your hand . . . Sandra and Rochell were a big help, especially by keeping witnesses apart and safe," Ms. Frescaz said.

"You never know what you're going to go through . . . You wonder what you did to deserve this; you don't have to do anything to get in this situation," she said.

Having gone through the criminal trial and seeing the killer convicted, Ms. Frescaz is now experiencing the civil side of the justice system while she is seeking legal custody of her grandson.

Her main piece of advice for anyone who gets involved with the courts is to "be ready for changes . . . The dates never stay the same."

"I can understand anyone being overwhelmed . . . There are some complex hurdles to overcome," Rucker said about the system.

Midland's district court judges understand the sensation of feeling overwhelmed from all sides of the system.

142nd District Court Judge George "Jody" Gilles said "the family of the victim is flung into the system involuntarily" and that in itself is overwhelming.

The fact that victims and their families are involved in the criminal justice system without any choice is one of the unfortunate effects, according to 238th District Court Judge John G. Hyde.

"We live in a society where violence has become commonplace, to the chagrin of all of us (and) to the horror of law-abiding citizens. Violence is an everyday part of life," Hyde said.

Midland attorney Vern Martin, who served as Midland County district attorney for eight years, said people feeling overwhelmed by the system has "always been a dilemma."

"Everyone feels like a victim," Martin said. "Law enforcement needs to stop fanning the fire of victimhood on people and be more honest with them on what's going on in the system."

"Being more clear and honest with people feeling victimized . . . the whole thing should be tempered better by the police and the prosecution and that is no easy job," Martin said of the public's lack of understanding of the justice process.

Rucker acknowledged the administration of justice is complicated and encourages people to avoid the feeling of being overwhelmed by coming down to the courthouse and observing trials and seeing what happens at the courthouse.

All hearings — except some juvenile cases — are open to the public.

INJUSTICE FOR ALL

Programs help those victimized by crime, crisis

Victims are often the forgotten participants in the justice system. Efforts are being made to change that, however.

Midland County has two different entities devoted to victims of crimes. The district attorney's Victim Witness Program and the Crisis Intervention Unit help victims on two different levels.

The primary purpose of the Victim Witness Program — which is operated through the Midland County District Attorney's office — is to assist victims and witnesses and act as an intermediary between the victim, the prosecutor and other area law-enforcement agencies.

The coordinator keeps victims and witnesses informed of trial dates and court procedures and informs them of the status and outcome of their cases.

The coordinator also assists victims in obtaining financial and emotional support from various private and state agencies. Financial assistance can often be obtained for medical expenses through the State Victim Compensation Program.

Rochell Buck, Victim Witness Program coordinator, said the entire district attorney's office "is very victim-oriented; the victim always comes first."

"We're there for them and we really care about them . . . Many we consider our friends and we're still in contact with the families today," Ms. Buck said.

Lydia Frescaz, the mother of a murder victim, said the Victim Witness Program helped her make it through the trial of her daughter's killer.

She said the employees in the Victim Witness Program were "a big help keeping witnesses apart and safe." Plus, she said it was nice to have someone there simply to hold her hand and offer support.

The Crisis Intervention Unit serves crime victims and others at the scenes of incidents and makes referrals, according to CIU coordinator Francie Murdock.

Not only does the CIU benefit victims, but it also helps law enforcement, firefighters and others perform their jobs without having to handle other tasks.

"One of my greatest concerns is for those persons who have experienced the victimization created by crime or the trauma of a crisis situation," Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said.

"The Midland County Sheriff's Department Crisis Intervention Unit was organized to alleviate some of the burdens placed upon crisis victims and to make them aware of every available service offered by Midland County."

Regarding law enforcement, the CIU's main objective is to perform various time-consuming tasks, enabling officers to return to law-enforcement duties much quicker.

The CIU is at law enforcement's disposal with trained volunteers wherever requested — whether it is at the emergency room, a residence or at the scene.

The CIU responds to death scenes whether natural, accidental, criminal or suicide.

"CIU volunteers can extend compassion to those affected, notify next of kin, make child-care arrangements, obtain funeral home information, stay with them until family or friends arrive, or anything (that might be requested)," Ms. Murdock explained.

CIU volunteers can respond to family violence and provide transportation to shelters, offer support to those involved, make referrals where needed and do follow-ups.

In the case of a sexual assault, Rape Crisis Center is the victim's primary contact. But CIU can be instrumental in reasoning with a reluctant victim to obtain necessary medical treatment and follow up with Rape Crisis and assist family members and friends during the crisis, Ms. Murdock said.

Children may be left in the care of the CIU while a volunteer or law-enforcement officers make necessary arrangements, such as in a situation where the person the children are with is arrested for DWI, shoplifting, or any situation where they would otherwise be left alone.

Ms. Murdock said a CIU volunteer can contact Child Protective Services or temporarily supervise the children. CIU can contact family members or friends who can come and care for the children.

The CIU also offers transportation to the hospital emergency room, Permian Basin Shelter for Battered Women and Their Children, Salvation Army, etc.

CIU is housed at the Midland County Law Enforcement Building and is under the auspices of the Midland County Sheriff's Department. It is funded jointly by a Victims of Crime Act grant and the Abell-Hanger Foundation. The Sheriff's Department provides a van for crisis intervention calls.

The CIU — started in January 1990 by Olivia Wilson — responds to calls from all area agencies, including the Midland Police Department, Sheriff's Department, district attorney's office, Fire Department and the Department of Public Safety.

However, Ms. Murdock said the majority of phone calls come from the Police Department.

Ms. Murdock said the CIU volunteers don't do any kind of long-term counseling, but instead refer people to the appropriate agencies.

"We're like big ol' Band-Aids," she said with a smile. "We might not be able to make it any better, but we can, hopefully, keep it from getting worse."

She said CIU volunteers undergo extensive training. Another training session is to begin at the end of September.

There are about 17 volunteers who are on 24-hour call. The volunteers take three-day shifts when they are on call.

Midland police Sgt. David Garcia said the CIU makes a police officer's job easier.

"When I was on patrol I always thought they were a godsend . . . This job is hard enough and we, as police officers, try to keep our emotions in check. The CIU takes the pressure off the officers," Garcia said.

Survivors of Homicide: Group works together to cope before, after trial

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel

I thought I had forever

As the days go by each in every way
I think of what I could have done.
So much to do and so much to say
But, in my heart I thought I had forever.
The hurt I feel when I think of you
So much pain for you to endure.
The things I should have done.
But, in my mind I thought I had forever.
Now, you're gone and I feel so alone
Your memory is what keeps me alive
So now I say what needs to be said
And do what needs to be done.
For you never know if you have forever.

— Lydia Frescaz
(written May 6, 1994)

Nothing changes the way they feel. Not a tough prison sentence. Not the fact that their loved ones' killers are in jail. Nothing.

That's life for these people — these members of a newly formed support group: the Survivors of Homicide.

The group was organized by Lydia Frescaz, the mother of a murder victim.

Ms. Frescaz has been dealing with her pain since her daughter's violent death at the hands of her daughter's estranged husband in early 1992.

For these survivors the pain doesn't go away.

But, the support-group sessions — which began in July — help give way for acceptance of their situations and provide a sense of understanding from others in similar circumstances.

To date, about seven families of murder victims have attended the meetings. Three families in particular have been regulars at the meetings — Ms. Frescaz, the Belcher family and the Zachery family.

Ms. Frescaz's daughter, Angela Frescaz, was murdered by her estranged husband, Gilbert Rivera. He was convicted of murder and received a life sentence. But knowing he will be in prison for a long time doesn't make her pain any less real.

Tony and Janice Belcher know that pain too. Their daughter, Angela Belcher-Perkins, was killed last November. Her killer, Sherry Henderson, was recently found guilty of murder and sentenced to 50 years in prison.

The Zachery family endured the murder trial of Duann Dewayne Stewart. He was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter, delivery of cocaine by offer to sell, and possession of cocaine. He received 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine for the January killing of James Zachery. For delivery of cocaine, he was sentenced to 40 years in prison with no additional fine; and for possession of cocaine, he was sentenced to 20 years with no additional fine. The sentences will be served concurrently for no more than 40 years. Zachery's brothers, in-laws and mother are among family members who attend the meetings.

In any case, no amount of prison time can bring back the dead.

So, no prison sentence is enough and no amount of compassion will ever wipe the hurt away.

Before the trial

The group's fourth meeting was held in the Justice of the Peace courtroom the Thursday night before the murder trial of Ms. Henderson began.

Belcher, obviously fatigued and stressed-out, was nervous and upset at the prospect that the trial of his daughter's killer would be postponed for some two months at the request of her attorney.

"I've been patient, but this took all the wind out of my sail . . . There is no consideration to us. I need to wake up from this nightmare. We need closure . . . We haven't set the headstone yet because it hasn't been closed.

"Once it's over and justice has been set out by the good citizens of Midland County . . . all I'm asking for is justice," the distraught father told his fellow support-group members.

"I haven't been back (to the cemetery) since I laid my baby to rest," Belcher tearfully told his friends.

Francie Murdock, the Crisis Intervention Unit coordinator, responded to his suffering by pointing out that people who are not in these situations don't truly understand the pain.

"Things go on for everyone and everybody else's life goes on but this hits right here" — she said as she pointed to her heart — "for all of you."

Rice Freeman-Zachery, sister-in-law of James Zachery, agreed.

"We have to go to these hearings and hear the attorneys laugh and joke with one another . . . To them it doesn't mean anything."

After Belcher learned that a hearing was set on the motion seeking continuance to the murder trial, he said he didn't sleep for two days.

"I don't blame the defense attorneys — that's their job, but what about us?" Belcher said.

Regarding the approaching Stewart trial, Ms. Freeman-Zachery said the manslaughter and drug charges that were added to Stewart's indictment were not comforting.

"A conviction of manslaughter isn't going to be good enough," she said.

Earl Zachery enhanced his wife's remarks.

"This is good for us to vent our frustrations," he said.

Zachery's mother spoke of the fact that her deceased son would have celebrated his birthday the week of the trial.

Mrs. Zachery said she found a letter James had written his children but hadn't mailed before he died. She said she cried along with the children as they read it.

"There is nothing you can say to them" to provide any comfort, she said.

Along the same lines, Belcher said he still leaves a door open for his daughter to come home.

He explained that his family's way of doing things was to leave a door open and the last person home would lock it.

Once, Belcher said, he locked it and his wife asked him why and he told her no one was coming home.

"It took more for me to lock it than to unlock it," he said.

Mrs. Zachery dabbed tears from her eyes as she listened to Belcher's trauma unfold.

She then told Belcher about losing her husband after 35 years of marriage and how, as a couple, they used to enjoy eating watermelon together. She said it took her two years to eat watermelon without him.

"It just takes time," she told Belcher.

Ms. Frescaz agreed and told him the first year after the loss is the hardest to get through.

The conversation turned to questions of how a jury determines a sentence in these cases.

Belcher mentioned the attempted capital murder conviction of Mark Mitchell and his prison sentence of only six years and then questioned the jury's sentence of 30 years in the murder conviction of Frank Molinar.

"What is the jury telling me?" Belcher said.

Zachery said he believes local juries think the defendants are "kids and they can be rehabilitated."

The discussion halted for a moment as Belcher prepared to leave the meeting.

"I need to go because I'm hurting. I'm not running out on ya'll."

"Are you gonna be OK?" Ms. Frescaz asked Belcher.

"No."

"Are you gonna try to be OK?" Mrs. Zachery asked him.

"Yes, ma'am."

He turned to hug Ms. Frescaz and told her that he admired her.

"This is my extended family" he said as he hugged others in the room.

"This is the 'ZaBelcherZ' family," he said with a weak smile as he left.

Ms. Freeman-Zachery said, "he doesn't look like himself."

Ms. Frescaz replied "you won't ever be yourself again."

Discussions then turned to Ms. Frescaz and her continuing battle to adopt her grandson, the child her daughter left after she was murdered.

"He's the one that keeps me smiling. He comes in the room with those big eyes and that big smile," she said speaking of the 3-year-old.

Her next hearing is in October, she said.

She turned her thoughts back to the people around her.

"One of these days it will all be behind you. The first year is the hardest. It gets better a little, day by day," she said pushing her own pain aside to help the others.

Mrs. Zachery spoke of how she enjoyed talking about her son, despite efforts of her friends to change the subject when talk turned to her son.

Ms. Frescaz said she understands that feeling.

She told of a cousin who recently died of cancer. Her cousin knew the end was coming and prepared for it. With the death of her daughter, they didn't have that luxury, she said.

Mrs. Zachery acknowledged those emotions and said she finds comfort in knowing that her son is "with the Lord," but said it doesn't take the pain away.

"That's my baby I nursed," she said.

Ms. Murdock warned the group not to "look for a wonderful ending" when their trials end, because with the trials, all the pain will be brought to the surface again, this time for public display.

Ms. Frescaz warned the Zachery family that the defense will try and paint the victim in a bad light and pointed out that the family has to sit there and tolerate it without saying a word.

Ms. Freeman-Zachery said she's scared of the juries. Ms. Murdock piped in — "especially after these verdicts," referring to the public's views that some criminals have received light sentences in recent months.

Zachery said he was concerned about the upcoming trial because of Stewart's age and what he believes are juries sympathetic to youth.

After the trial

Two weeks later much has changed — except the mourning.

In the two weeks since the last Survivors of Homicide meeting, a lot had changed in the life of Ms. Henderson, the Belcher family and five innocent children.

Ms. Henderson's trial went as scheduled, despite her attorney's request for a continuance. She was found guilty of murder and got a 50-year sentence.

However, the pain of Janice and Tony Belcher had not lessened with justice served.

"The trial is over. People tell you it gets better, but it don't. I look at her kids every day and I'm reminded," Mrs. Belcher said.

Belcher said he was glad Ms. Henderson got a tough sentence because he was concerned that if she got probation he may take justice into his own hands.

He commented on the weak sentences juries have been handing out lately.

Zachery added he thought the age of the defendants played a part with juries sympathetic to youth.

"I'm fed up" with juries, Belcher said.

"The feelings and emotions haven't got any easier for me even though she got 50 years. People say 'congratulations' and I say 'for what?' Janice still can't lock the door," Belcher said.

Mrs. Belcher said she sat up for two nights after her daughter was killed waiting for her to come home.

His daughter was killed on her son's birthday, Belcher pointed out.

"I can't see it getting any easier right now.

"Sure, justice was served. If she did 15 years we would live with that. The jury rewarded us with 10 more years before she's eligible for parole.

"But she can see her children. The only time Angela can see hers is at the grave," Belcher said.

Belcher and his wife care for the two children their dead daughter left behind.

Ms. Henderson has three children.

The group turned its attention to the Stewart trial, which still hadn't occurred at this point, but has since been completed.

Zachery again commented on how he believes age plays a part with juries being sympathetic to teens.

"Juveniles are not worried. They know someone on the jury will plead he's only a kid and they should give him a second chance," he said.

The conversation swings back to Belcher and the Henderson trial.

"As far as joy for her getting 50 years — it's sad."

"I'm not happy. There are five kids involved. Her three kids and my two grandkids. Two lost their lives," Belcher's wife said. "My daughter is in a shallow grave and she's in prison. The kids are the ones who are gonna suffer."

"It's like Janice said, two young ladies are gone. One is forever and it's Angela," Belcher said.

He told the Zachery family he thought they were fortunate to have the additional charges added to Stewart's indictment.

"But we won't be happy with that," Ms. Freeman-Zachery said in reply.

Belcher said he felt confident the jury would find Stewart guilty of murder.

"But how can you attempt to kill someone and get six years and kill someone and get 12 years?" he said.

Ms. Freeman-Zachery said she could just imagine what would all come out at the trial. Her husband agreed, noting that the defense would "dig up every little piece of dirt from his past they can find."

"And they'll make the defendant look like a choir boy," Ms. Murdock added.

Everyone agreed that the victim is put on trial with pieces of their past brought up as if to justify their deaths.

Belcher said now that the trial of his daughter's killer is over he can "put some closure on it" and set the headstone on his daughter's grave.

He told the Zachery family and others who haven't been to trial to "try and bond and get closer . . . Don't listen to those lawyers. That's their job."

He spoke of losing his daughter, but was grateful to have had her for 21 years.

Ms. Freeman-Zachery said the death of her brother-in-law has seriously affected the Zachery family. She said she and her husband have grown closer, but some family members are having a difficult time dealing with the loss.

Jose Chavez — the father of a woman who was shot and killed by her estranged husband earlier this year — entered the meeting a little late, but joined in soon after.

Rogelio Mireles, the man charged with killing Chavez's daughter, was released on bond and placed on electronic monitoring. Mireles has since jumped his bond and is considered a fugitive.

Chavez expressed his bitterness with the justice system.

"Why'd they reduce his bond? Because the judge doesn't have the same pain as the victim," Chavez said angrily.

Belcher explained to Chavez that the judge has to set a bond the defendant can conceivably pay.

This didn't satisfy Chavez as he continued to voice his dismay with the justice system and to voice his fears.

"Why does the judge reduce bond when he knows the man is a psychopath? He called three days after his escape and said he was coming back to kill me . . . I've never had a weapon before . . . now I sleep with one," Chavez told the group.

"How about the victims?" he asked.

No one could truly answer him.

USAir crash probe eyes engine reversal

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Investigators are checking whether the right engine of a USAir jet suddenly went into reverse and caused the crash that killed 132 people, a safety official said Saturday night.

The Boeing 737 dropped rapidly from 6,000 feet and crashed Thursday night in a thick forest six miles short of Pittsburgh International Airport.

On Saturday, one of six thrust reverser activators on the right engine was found to have deployed — a possible indication of why the pilots lost control of the plane, National Transportation Safety Board member Carl Vogt said.

A pilot uses thrust reversers to slow the plane during landings. They can only be deployed by the pilot, Vogt said.

"If a thrust reverser deploys in the air — this has happened on one aircraft several years ago, and resulted in an accident . . . — it can have catastrophic consequences," Vogt said at a news conference. "Any evidence that there was a deployed thrust reverser in flight demands serious attention."

"In layman's terms, if you are flying along with two engines and both are going forward and one of them suddenly reverses — if it were uncontained, you would lose control of the aircraft," he said.

A Boeing 737 has 12 thrust reversers. The piece found Saturday came from the engine on the right wing, and investigators are looking for the other 11.

One engine may have been switched into reverse while others were going forward.

A speedometer in the cockpit indicated the plane was traveling at about 303 mph when it hit the ground, Vogt said.

Witnesses who saw the plane in the air said it rolled over on its belly to the left and went down nose first. Vogt said one witness reported seeing the plane go down in a corkscrew pattern.

A group of witnesses at a nearby auto dealership reported hearing a surging noise of thrust, followed by silence and then a whining noise as the aircraft fell, Vogt said. One witness saw a puff of smoke, he said.

Police charge security chief in Tiffany's robbery

NEW YORK (AP) — A security supervisor accused of masterminding an inside job was one of six people arrested Saturday in the $1.9 million Tiffany's heist — the worst robbery in the world-renowned jewelers' 157-year history.

The sixth suspect, Mark Klass, walked into a police precinct to surrender Saturday night and handed over most of the jewelry, said Sgt. Joseph Gallagher, a police department spokesman.

The arrests came just six days after the robbery, which police had praised as "exceptional" work by a team of well-prepared criminals. The bandits made off with 457 necklaces, bracelets, watches and rings.

"We were shocked," Tiffany's Chairman William R. Chaney said Saturday. "We didn't think it could happen."

While the robbery was professional, attempts to fence the jewelry were comical. Manhattan Chief of Detectives John Hill said one suspect sold a $6,000 gold bracelet for $300 on a Harlem street; another was trying to sell the stolen jewelry in Times Square.

The plan was cooked up three weeks ago by Scott Jackson, a security supervisor at the posh Fifth Avenue store for the past five years, Hill said.

Jackson recruited his cousins, Derrick Jackson and Klass, as the gunmen and persuaded another Tiffany's guard, Mark Bascom, to join in the heist, Hill said.

Police arrested the four and two other men accused of trying to sell the stolen jewelry.

According to Hill:

Klass and Derrick Jackson met Bascom as Bascom, a second-year employee, arrived for the midnight shift. Bascom told co-workers they were his cousins and needed to use the bathroom.

Once inside, the two men pulled their guns and bound Bascom and three other unarmed guards with duct tape. They systematically emptied four cases of jewelry; before leaving, they took Bascom and removed all the store's surveillance tapes.

Simpson defense wants to use high-tech, TV system in court

By Julie Yamamoto
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — O.J. Simpson's high-powered defense team is going high-tech. It wants to use an expensive computer program that could display colorful drawings of DNA strands or graphically recreate the double murder.

The information would be flashed on large and small monitors, part of an elaborate court-reporting and evidence presentation system Superior Court Judge Lance Ito is having installed for Simpson's trial.

"Graphics are always better than words when they're available," said attorney F. Lee Bailey, who was appointed to set up the system for the defense.

Computer animation and document presentation have been used to compare signatures in a Charles H. Keating Jr. civil fraud trial, to simulate the disastrous voyage of the Exxon Valdez and to recreate a slaying in northern California.

However, some legal scholars are concerned that a flashy, digital presentation could mislead jurors.

"Once the jury sees the picture, they stop questioning the assumptions," said Eleanor Swift, law professor and evidence expert at the University of California-Berkeley. "The picture has so much immediacy to them that they don't do the job of examining the underlying theory of why this simulation is supposed to be accurate."

Simpson, 47, is accused of killing his former wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, and her friend, Ronald Goldman, outside Ms. Simpson's Brentwood condominium June 12. Trial is set for Sept. 26.

If his attorneys seek to show there wasn't enough time for Simpson to commit the murders before taking a limousine to the airport, they could recreate the crime for jurors, complete with a clock in the corner timing the action.

They also could attempt to enliven the presentation of complicated DNA evidence by depicting some microscopic parts of it in bright blue or yellow.

Paper charts of Simpson's estate, like those displayed and marked by witnesses in the preliminary hearing, would be replaced with digital maps.

Witnesses could make marks on an evidence screen in different colors, just as sportscasters on television explain key plays.

Some legal scholars, however, are concerned that a flashy, digital presentation could mislead jurors.

Bailey said jurors and viewers in the Simpson case will see "computer-generated images," but they shouldn't expect to see "little characters running around stabbing each other."

"Essentially, it's no more than a glorified chalkboard that has been used in courtrooms forever," said Howard Harris, systems information trial consultant for the defense. "It just gives them (lawyers) a little more ability to be a bit more creative in their display."

"It assists in getting across their point of view," he said.

Although Ito already has said he will use a system that will allow for instantaneous transcription of testimony and electronic display of graphics and evidence on screens around the courtroom, the defense must seek permission to use its software.

Prosecutors are considering using a computerized presentation system but haven't made a decision yet, said Sandi Gibbons, a spokeswoman for the district attorney's office.

Gary Hilton, a consultant for inVzn, the defense team's software company, declined to say how much the defense will pay. The typical rate is $1,000 a day for an on-call consultant and the use of software and equipment. The judge has estimated the trial could last several months.

The bulk of the cost likely won't be for the presentation, but for the preparation: the costs of making digital images of legal documents, scanning photographs and creating animated sequences. Animation alone can cost in the thousands or tens of thousands of dollars, depending on how sophisticated the image and action are.

But the courtroom payoff can be large.

A lawyer who used the inVzn system to win a $300 million award against Keating in Arizona said the computer tools gave him an edge in managing the civil case, which involved 35 defendants and 52 million pages of documents.

"We had a monster of a case to handle," said attorney Michael C. Manning, who used the software to enlarge and compare signatures on key documents.

Robert Reisch, inVzn president, said the software has been used in about 100 cases across the United States.

Items in O.J.'s hotel room go on auction block

CHICAGO (AP) — An anonymous $10,000 bid was withdrawn Saturday for the contents of the hotel room where O.J. Simpson stayed for a few hours the day after his ex-wife and her friend were killed.

That meant some Simpson collectors at the auction ended up with what they believe could be pieces of history. Others, however, still walked away empty handed.

"Someone will pay $100,000 for this room someday," said Rose Simone, who unsuccessfully bid $65 for lamps Simpson may never have switched on.

Auction organizer John Klesch described the person who offered the $10,000 as an eccentric millionaire who changed his mind.

"He bought it with the intent of investment and was going to sell it in London, but then he . . . figured it wasn't worth the (aggravation)," Klesch said.

Wasfi Tolaymat spent more than $1,000 on the room, including $200 for the bed, $45 for a wastebasket, $42.50 for an ashtray and $70 for a set of drapes.

"I wanted to have it. It's history," he said, adding that he intends to keep all his purchases.

A chipped dresser, a pastel bedspread and generic framed prints were among the 31 items sold, along with standard fixtures — an ashtray, an ice bucket, even a Bible.

Other bids included: $100 for a burgundy couch; $15 for a plastic tray; and $130 for the Bible.

Simpson stayed in the room after arriving from Los Angeles on June 13. He returned to California the same day after police called him to tell him of the slayings.

President shifts from health care to family values

WASHINGTON (AP) — Flummoxed over what to do next on health reform, President Clinton is shifting his pre-election focus to warm, fuzzy themes of family values and personal responsibility.

Even former Vice President Dan Quayle is giving Clinton a nod of approval — sort of — but some conservatives question whether the president has the trust and moral standing for his words to ring true with Americans.

Talk of values has cropped up in every Clinton appearance since he returned home last week from a 10-day vacation on Martha's Vineyard. Expect to hear more of the same in the two-month leadup to Election Day, Nov. 8.

Too many kids "are growing up without the values of mainstream society," Clinton lamented in his Saturday radio address.

A day earlier, he told the National Baptist Convention in New Orleans, "I know not everybody is going to be in a stable, traditional family like you see in one of those 1950s sitcoms, but we'd be better off if more people were."

There are far too many abortions, he said, far too many unwed mothers.

Through it all, Clinton made only passing reference to his top legislative priority — health reform — which lies gasping for breath on Capitol Hill.

The White House insists it is not giving up on health care, just trying to elevate Clinton above day-to-day legislative skirmishes and reassure Americans worried that the country is off track.

Polls show Americans are increasingly concerned about the country's values.

Ford worker kills 2 at union meeting

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — A Ford worker opened fire with a handgun as a union meeting was breaking up Saturday, killing two fellow workers and wounding two others.

The gunman, Oliver French, surrendered to authorities and was being questioned, Police Chief Ronald Deziel said.

French left the room during the meeting, returned about 20 minutes later with a .357-caliber Magnum and started shooting, Deziel said. French, 47, refused to give a motive.

"He told another employee, 'I just shot four people,'" Deziel said. He repeated the statement to police when they arrived.

Police planned to seek first-degree murder charges against French, said Officer Robert Bochenek.

All five men were representatives of UAW Local 600, in a unit representing maintenance and construction workers at the Ford Motor Co. Rouge Plant complex, Deziel said. French has worked at the plant for 28 years.

There were no arguments, threats or other signs of a dispute before the shooting, Deziel said.

Jim McNeil, president of Local 600, said there was no disciplinary action pending against French and nothing to indicate why the shooting happened.

Jerry Sullivan, Local 600 first vice president, described French as a "good guy."

Killed were Ron McTasney, 44, and Greg Couls, 46, Bochenek said.

Bill Bisbing, 44, was shot in the chest and was in stable condition at Oakwood Downriver Medical Center in Lincoln Park. Dave Weitz, 53, was treated and released for a grazing gunshot wound to the head.

USAir crash carnage shocks rescuers

By Robert Dvorchak
AP national writer

ALIQUIPPA, Pa. — The flight was packed with executives, office managers, energy experts and others in their business suits returning to Pittsburgh after a workday in Chicago.

Also buckled into their seats were Earl and Kathleen Weaver and their three children. They had attended a funeral for Mrs. Weaver's 9-year-old nephew and were returning to their suburban Pittsburgh home.

Their twin-engine Boeing 737-300 jet was on final approach for landing, well past the point when flight attendants make sure tray tables are up and seats are upright, and passengers crane their necks toward the windows to glimpse the western Pennsylvania hills that roll like the folds of a blanket on an unmade bed.

At just past 7 p.m. Thursday, with the weather clear and calm, the plane rolled abruptly to the left — a maneuver that federal investigators called "an aberration" — and nosedived. As if it just dropped out of the sky, it plunged 6,000 feet in 23 seconds into a wooded ravine six miles northwest of the airport.

The impact on the ground was so violent that no piece of wreckage was larger than a car door. Some debris landed two miles from the crater; much of it was scattered over the length of three football fields. An orange fireball and cloud of acrid black smoke climbed into the air.

And all 132 aboard USAir Flight 427 — five crew and 127 passengers — perished.

Paramedic Steve Bailey was with the first response team to arrive. But with no survivors, there was no assistance he could render as firefighters, who had to cut a road into the remote area, worked to douse flames.

"You want to have a feeling you can do something when you get there. Once you realize there's nothing you can do . . ." Bailey said.

Those first at the scene were shocked at the carnage and destruction awaiting them in the dying twilight and when they returned Friday morning. After impact, bodies and jagged metal shards were tossed back into the air. They settled again in a jumble amid the charred terrain and smoldering rubble.

"It blew people out of the plane. It blew them apart. Into smithereens," said Beaver County Sheriff Frank Policaro, among the first to arrive at the site.

"I have never seen mutilated bodies like that. There's nothing but torsos laying around up there. Just pieces," he added.

Because the blood and body fluids that drenched the ground might carry pathogens, officials declared the site a biohazard. Rescue workers were inoculated against hepatitis and tetanus, and they were required to don protective suits, boots, gloves, masks and goggles.

"It looks like there's been bodies thrown 30 or 40 feet," said Mike New, a supervisor with Medic Rescue of Beaver County. "There's not many complete bodies. You find a part of a torso, a leg, a hand. What I thought was the worst was pieces of skin hanging from the trees. The force that can do that is unbelievable."

Recovery crews set up a series of grids, marked with orange spray paint, to sift through the wreckage.

Body parts removed from the site were trucked in refrigerated trailers to a U.S. Air Force base near the airport.

Perot returns to politics with special agenda

DENVER (NYT) — Ross Perot is out on the campaign trail again, his short-term goal to influence the 1994 congressional and state elections, his long-term goal still a tightly wrapped secret.

After lying low politically for the better part of a year after a precipitous drop in the polls and a high-profile failure to defeat the North American Free Trade Agreement, he thundered noisily back into public view this weekend, beginning here on Friday night with the first of 10 rallies leading up to the Nov. 8 elections.

Preaching to a crowd that, like most Perot audiences, was made up mainly of partisans, he loosed one of his most acidic attacks ever on President Clinton, accusing him of stupid and dishonest handling of government.

Then he warned: "The people are deeply interested in being the owners of the greatest nation in the history of man."

Saturday, he followed with a second rally in St. Louis. Other rallies will be held in California, Florida, Georgia, Michigan, New Hampshire, New York and Washington State, followed by a series of several dozen call-in broadcasts on radio stations scattered coast to coast.

Given Perot's drop in the polls since he won 18.8 percent of the vote in the 1992 presidential election, and given recent insistent bickering within his organization, United We Stand America, his comeback is by no means assured. But the cocky Texan was the very picture of confidence as he strode the stage of the Civic Auditorium here for an hour on Friday night.

"You and I together," he told 1,500 whooping supporters in his reedy twang, "can slow down the race to big government in 1994 if we commit ourselves to do it. We can do even more in 1996. We are not going to go away. We are alive and well."

He did not elaborate on his reference to 1996, thereby leaving still tantalizingly unanswered what presidential plans he might have.

5th deadly crash muddles an already bleak outlook for USAir

By Dan Blake
Associated Press

NEW YORK — USAir was in trouble even before its fifth deadly crash in five years.

The sixth-largest U.S. airline, born as an East Coast mail carrier nearly 60 years ago, has lost hundreds of millions of dollars in the past few years.

It has one of the most expensive work forces in the industry. And it has been hard-pressed to match the new competition from cheap-seat airlines like Southwest and Continental.

Any airline can expect to lose business for at least a week after a fatal crash. USAir's recent history and the mystery surrounding the cause of Thursday's accident could make travelers even more reluctant to fly the airline.

But airlines historically have been been able to bounce back from the bad publicity of a crash. As the horror of bodies and twisted wreckage fades, passengers once again choose their airline according to price and schedule.

"In terms of this being a nail in the coffin, that's just not in the cards," said Michael Boyd, an industry consultant at Aviation Research Systems in Golden, Colo. Lost bookings "will be very short-term and it won't be that big a hit."

How quickly USAir recovers from the crash depends partly on whether passengers blame the airline or just bad luck for the disasters. A reputation for questionable safety and nicknames such as "U.S. Scare" can quickly foil years of effort to build confidence among travelers.

The possibility that passengers will avoid USAir certainly played a role in its stock price drop on Friday. The company's shares were off more than 10 percent on the New York Stock Exchange to $6. That's half the value of USAir stock a year ago and about one-third of its value 18 months ago.

Still, USAir has some deep-seated strength. It holds what other airlines consider an enviable grip on one of the busiest regions in the country — the heavily populated Northeast.

"It's not easy to avoid USAir in many markets," said Daniel Kasper, transportation consultant at Coopers & Lybrand in Boston. "They're a major carrier in the Northeast. In important markets they have a schedule far superior to others. That gives them some insulation."

Janine Vieyra, an agent at Travel Associates in Cleveland, said Friday that a few clients had asked about the crash. But as long as "the price is right and it goes when they want to go," none wanted to avoid the airline, she said.

That doesn't mean the crash can't do some serious damage to the airline's financial picture. Although USAir is insured for such disasters, the crash could divert the attention of top executives for some time.

At the airline's Arlington, Va., headquarters, the mood was gloomy on Thursday.

"Life has to go on. The business has to go on," said spokesman Mike Clark. "But in the back of your mind you know something unpleasant has happened."

The crash came just as the airline was undertaking an aggressive effort to attract more business travelers.

Earlier Thursday, for example, USAir announced it was installing convertible seats that could quickly be changed from narrow economy-fare seats to fatter business-class seats.

USAir's roots are in a Washington-based flying mail service founded by Richard C. du Pont of the Dupont chemical dynasty in 1937.

In 1949, it began passenger service, expanding into a web of small Northeast communities bounded by Boston, Washington, Cleveland and Detroit. It was renamed Allegheny Airlines in 1953.

The airline expanded further by purchasing other small carriers in the 1960s and '70s and changed its name to USAir.

USAir Deadly crash history

Five fatal USAir crashes in the past five years:

1. Sept. 8, 1994: USAir Boeing 737 crashes near Pittsburgh, killing all passengers on board.
2. July 2, 1994: USAir DC-9 crashes near the Charlotte-Douglas International Airport in North Carolina during a thunderstorm, killing 37 of the 57 on board.
3. March 22, 1992: USAir plane crashes while trying to take off in a snowstorm from La Guardia Airport in New York, killing 27.
4. Feb. 1, 1991: USAir plane and a commuter plane collide on a Los Angeles airport runway, killing 34.
5. Sept. 20, 1989: USAir jet carrying 62 people skids off runway at La Guardia Airport and into the East River, killing two.

NASA chooses landing site for next mission to Mars

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — If all goes as planned, a small spacecraft slung beneath a parachute will fall through a cold Martian morning in 1997 and land on a rocky plain called the Ares Vallis, NASA officials said September 9.

The landing site chosen for the Mars Pathfinder mission is an ancient flood plain, formed when water flowed on the planet eons ago. It should offer many types of rock and soil samples, mission planners said.

The site is 527 miles southeast from where U.S. Viking 1 landed on July 20, 1976, as the first spacecraft to land on the planet. No spacecraft has landed on Mars since Viking 2 on Sept. 3, 1976.

"This mission is the first one to really go to look at rocks. The Viking missions really focused on whether there was life there," said Matthew Golombek, project scientist at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

The area was chosen to maximize the amount of sunlight available to the solar-powered spacecraft and rover. The sun will cross directly over the lander, Golombek said.

Mars Pathfinder and its tiny rover cost $150 million. Launch and operating costs will bring the mission in at about $250 million, Golombek said.

By comparison, the Mars Observer spacecraft NASA lost as it neared Mars in August 1993 was on a $1 billion mission.

Immigrant daughter fails to call for medical help, mother dies

■ Daughter fears deportation for illegal immigrant members of family.

By Tanya Schevitz
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Most people don't hesitate to go to the doctor for even minor ailments such as cuts or earaches. But because of the immigration status of some of her relatives, a Pinole, Calif., woman who was badly hurt was afraid to call for medical help — and it cost her her life.

When Pinole emergency crews were called to a quiet suburban home a few minutes before 4 p.m. on Aug. 4, they found that the woman had stopped breathing and had severe burns on her back and buttocks. Efforts to resuscitate her were unsuccessful, and she died shortly after arrival at Doctor's Hospital.

Police said the 87-year-old Korean woman, whose name was withheld because of her relatives' status, had run her morning bath as usual around 8 a.m, but did not realize she had turned on only the hot faucet and filled the tub with scalding water. The searing heat instantly made a red ring around her foot as she stepped into the water, and the pain caused her to panic and fall into the caldronlike tub.

She was unable to get up after she fell, and her elderly daughter, who was asleep, did not immediately hear her splashing around and calling for help.

But even after the daughter pulled her out of the tub a minute or so later, the daughter did not call for emergency medical help — because some members of the family are illegal immigrants and were terrified of being turned in, police said.

Finally, concern about her mother's condition overrode fears of deportation.

Dr. Edward Chow, medical director of the Chinese Community Health Plan and a San Francisco health commissioner, said the hesitancy to contact government agencies was common among immigrants.

"I think you see this not just with illegal immigrants, but also with legal immigrants and even citizens who have come from the type of environment where there is a great deal of concern about the government's interest in the personal affairs of someone," Chow said.

Pinole Police Chief Michael Radcliffe said it was vital for immigrants to understand that medical services are not something to fear. The Pinole woman could have been saved if her family had called earlier for help, he said.

"Don't ever hesitate to call 911 to get help," he said. "This is a tragic example of what happens when you delay."

There is no state law requiring government workers to ask about immigration status or to turn in illegal immigrants. In fact, most cities discourage such inquiries and when it comes to medical emergencies, most agencies are careful to stay away from the issue, Radcliffe said.

'I think you see this not just with illegal immigrants, but also with legal immigrants and even citizens who have come from the type of environment where there is a great deal of concern about the government's interest in the personal affairs of someone.'

—Dr. Edward Chow

"We are not going to be asking whether people are legal residents of the United States or not," he added.

But Roberto Lemus from the Immigration Project of Catholic Charities in Oakland, Calif., said many immigrants don't realize that.

"They are afraid to go to the courts. They are afraid to go to the hospital, because they are afraid that they will be reported to the INS," he said. "People who come to the United States from Mexico and other Latin American countries, they are poor people with low education and they don't know about their rights."

Phil Waters, acting director of the San Francisco office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, said that even when names are turned in to the INS, the agency has enough personnel only to check out those suspected of criminal activity.

"If a person is sick and needs medical treatment, certainly by all means they should go," he said. "That is the No.1 priority. You make sure that a person gets medical treatment."

But that might change in November if voters pass Proposition 187, which takes aim at illegal immigrants. The "Save Our State" proposition would require public agencies — from police to schools to health facilities — to report suspected undocumented immigrants to the INS.

The potential consequences of Prop. 187 are disturbing, and there could be more deaths like the one in Pinole if the measure passes, Chow said.

Teens hike for help after dad dies in woods

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Frank Brace and his sons had ventured into the woods for day hikes before, but nothing in the youngsters' backwoods experience prepared them for the moment their father dropped dead on a rugged mountain miles from civilization.

Unable to read their map — and having no compass — the boys scrambled five miles over rock-strewn slopes and across meadows, relying on landmarks and their sense of direction to find their way back to some cottages they had seen when they hiked in two days before.

They found help there, then led rescuers back to their father's body in a clearing.

"We really didn't know where we were going," 12-year-old Jesse Brace said. "Our dad led us in, and we didn't have any emergency plan for the trip."

After their father died of a heart attack while hiking up a steep hill, Jesse and Isaac, 13, were forced to spend a night alone in the high mountain county before hiking out.

The Labor Day weekend excursion was the first time the boys or their father had ever gone on an overnight backpacking trip.

"I can't imagine having been in their place," Sandra Leigh Thomas, the boy's mother, said Thursday. "They acted so responsibly. There's nothing they could have done any better than what they did."

The ordeal began Saturday when they shouldered their packs near Pinecrest, about 180 miles east of San Francisco. About five miles past the last rough dirt roads and small summer cottages, they made a camp. The next day they hiked to a reservoir nearby.

As they were climbing a steep hill to return to camp, Brace, 43, collapsed. The boys tried mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

"We were calling for help, going to the tops of mountains and yelling," Jesse said. But it was getting dark and nobody came, so they ran back to camp.

"You don't plan for your dad to die all of a sudden, just in a few seconds," Jesse said.

Thomas said the boys told her they spent a frightening night alone. They turned on every flashlight they had and put a radio on full blast "to take away some of their fears," she said.

At first light, the boys walked away from the camp — with just the clothes on their backs — and headed back in the general direction where they remembered seeing the cabins. The hike took three hours.

"I was extremely impressed," said Raymond Gada, who met the boys near the cabins and called for help.

Thomas said that the boys, starting seventh and eighth grade this year, became very upset once they were safe at home. They both were close to their father, who had lived a mile away since he and Thomas divorced eight years ago, she said.

"These kids did real, real well," Gada said. "It's very rugged terrain back there. Under the circumstances, they were troupers."

Decision on court remains indefinite

Deadline for motions approaches in case of 385th District Court

■ Creation of new Midland court set off lawsuit by Texas against U.S. Department of Justice over judges' election.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

The future of the new 385th District Court in Midland remains uncertain as the Oct. 20 deadline nears for attorneys to submit motions and documentation in the case of the State of Texas vs. the United States of America — a lawsuit sparked by attempts to create the new Midland court.

The lawsuit stems from confrontation between the U.S. Department of Justice and the state of Texas over the way in which judges are elected. The 385th District Court, created by the Texas Legislature in 1993, stands at the center of this controversy.

At issue is the at-large system of electing judges, mandated in the Texas Constitution. According to Justice Department officials, this system is unconstitutional in that it undermines minority voting strength.

Motions are being submitted for a summary judgment in the case. A federal judge in Washington, D.C., will review the submittals in a motion to decide the matter without going to trial, explained Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman.

This hearing is set for Dec. 5, with both sides scheduled to present arguments.

However, if a summary ruling is not made, the case will go to trial before a panel of three federal judges. Dettman said this is something of a rarity.

If the case goes that far, the trial will be heard in July.

The 385th District Court controversy first began when a lawsuit was filed by Midlanders Al and Edia Hernandez, who claimed the state was illegally administering an election change without preclearance from the Department of Justice.

This lawsuit led to a Justice Department official denying the creation of the court.

Texas Attorney General Dan Morales filed a lawsuit against the Justice Department's decision to halt the creation of the court. Morales contends the Justice Department "reached an erroneous conclusion."

The Justice Department ruled that the at-large system was unconstitutional despite several appeals court rulings to the contrary, said DeVal Patrick, an assistant U.S. attorney general.

According to the Texas Constitution, a statewide general election would have to be conducted to approve dividing any county into judicial districts smaller than an entire county, said 318th District Judge Dean Rucker.

Until the Justice Department withdraws its objection or the Washington, D.C., court makes a judgment, a judge cannot be appointed or make rulings under the auspices of the 385th District.

The 385th, due to begin operation Jan. 1, was planned to relieve Midland's other district courts,

Award-winning pianist to perform with symphony in series' concert

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

When Jose Feghali, gold medalist in the 1985 Van Cliburn International Competition, first began playing the piano, he did so in secret.

Feghali

"My brother was having piano lessons," said the native of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. "I started hearing what he was doing and trying to play the stuff on the piano, generally when there was nobody at home because I wasn't supposed to touch the expensive new instrument. But one day I was caught."

He was 3 years old at the time. He began taking lessons when he was 4 and gave his first recital when he was 5.

"I remember just bits," said Feghali, who plays Rachmanioff's "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, Opus 43" with the Midland-Odessa Symphony in the opening concert of the MasterWorks series Saturday at Midland's First Presbyterian Church. The concert is set for 8 p.m.

"I remember having fun.

"Playing the piano was a blast. I remember having a lot of fun just sitting there playing in front of a bunch of people. I remember looking at the audience. I do have a picture in my mind of the audience, but that's about it."

At 8 years old, he was one of five finalists in a competition that landed him the opportunity to perform as a soloist with the Brazilian Symphony Orchestra, directed by Isaac Karabtchevski. After Feghali, the youngest person in the competition was 16.

"That was more overwhelming, I must say," Feghali replied when asked what it felt like to be on stage with an orchestra.

"However, the conductor was extremely good and very nice. We had a wonderful rehearsal. It was a lot of fun. I remember him asking me if I was nervous. I said, 'No. I'm just sweating a bit.' "

All of his childhood memories center around playing the piano.

"I cannot remember a time when I

Lunch dates play havoc with otherwise sophisticated behavior

It is one of the oldest traditions in male/female relations, yet to this day, despite all of our advancements in sophisticated behavior, it remains perhaps the most dreaded exercise any of us will ever face.

Ott

I speak, of course, of the "semi-blind lunch date."

The word "semi" is used here because in the case we will be discussing today, you know who the person is you are having lunch with, you just don't KNOW her. (NOTE: If you can figure out that sentence, please read on.)

Still with me? Good.

How these so-called lunch encounters generally come about is that you meet a person — either briefly in person or by telephone — and say to yourself, "Gee, she seems nice. I'd like to get to know her better."

Yet, at the same time, you realize these gut feelings are usually incredibly inaccurate, so you promptly rule out a "real" date — dinner, a movie, etc. — figuring if the two of you don't hit it off, which is normally the case, at least you won't have to spend five hours in the company of a person who gives you the creeps.

So, you opt for lunch, thus reducing the time for potential misery to a mere hour or so.

Now, before you start criticizing this admittedly pretentious attitude, please be assured the other person is experiencing the exact same fears. You can bet, in fact, that she has already considered the possibility that you will turn out to be the biggest drip who ever walked the face of the earth. She doesn't want to take a chance on a "real" date, either. She's every bit as wary of you as you are of her.

Thus, the casual lunch becomes the perfect alternative.

Still, despite your best efforts to remain low key and to keep your stomach relaxed and knot-free, the anxiety persists. And so do the inevitable questions: What if we have nothing in common? Suppose our political views are in direct conflict? What if she's a Nazi? Suppose she doesn't laugh at my one-liners? What if I spill soup on my new tie? Or, get food stuck in my teeth? What if she has bad breath? Or worse, what if I have bad breath?

And so on, and so forth.

Instead of looking forward to a simple outing with a mature and intelligent human being, you spend 48 hours pacing the floor like a caged animal and imagining every conceivable disaster possible, not unlike a character from an early Woody Allen film, back when they were funny and actually made sense.

Another common practice, as most men will tell you, is to stare at the bathroom mirror, rehearsing potential dialogue. You anticipate her questions and then attempt to formulate suitable responses, preferably something with just the right mix of humor and sensitivity, the kind of answer that will make you seem like a modern-day Cary Grant. Very suave, yet down to earth.

Likewise, you want to be a bit flirtatious without appearing to be "coming on too strong," which, of course, is a most boorish and unappealing characteristic. Again, it is necessary for you to practice in front of a mirror, this time a full-length mirror so you can properly study your body movements, which are terribly important when attempting to flirt within the bounds of good taste. After all, an arched eyebrow at the wrong instant can ruin an otherwise promising lunch.

Now, you might be thinking, "OK, Gary, be honest. Aren't you exaggerating just a bit?"

Perhaps.

But you should hear what's involved before a "real" date.

SYMPHONY: Feghali to play at opening of concert series was not playing the piano. I don't remember everything that happened when I was 3, 4 and 5, but whatever I remember from my early childhood, the piano was always involved. Music was always involved."

He continued studying and entering competitions in Brazil until he was 15.

"I moved to London because of music. My father had died by then, and my mother was advised to send me to study abroad. I went to study with Maria Curcio."

He lived with a family his first year there, then moved out on his own. When he was 17, he started at the Royal Academy of Music, where he studied under Christopher Elton while continuing his lessons with Ms. Curcio.

In the beginning, he found London "quite overwhelming" because of "the change in culture and the change in society and especially the amount of music and art in London.

"London was the music capitol of the world and to a certain degree it still is. It showed me a side of music that I just had no idea existed. Art was much more complicated and wonderful and diverse than I had ever thought."

He was 24 in 1985 when he received the gold medal in the Van Cliburn International Competition, held annually in Fort Worth.

"I was in a state of shock, really," Feghali said, remembering how it felt to win. "That's what I remember, just thinking 'This must be a dream.' "

"And then, kind of slowly, it dawned on me. It was a dream come true in a sense, and my life definitely totally changed after that."

In the first year following the Van Cliburn, Feghali went from performing around 25 concerts to playing 92.

"And of course, the type of concerts were much more important than the ones I was doing before. It also meant that out of that year, I spent 11½ months on the road.

"The experience was incredible. Actual playing of the instrument is not one of the problems with having a career like that. Most of the problems come with having the stamina to put up with all the traveling, with the strange hours that one has to keep, and, of course, with the pressure associated with it. And unless one has been in that kind of a position, one doesn't know how one is going to react to it all."

Feghali found his life then to be, above all else, "an incredible learning experience. I felt very honored to be able to have the opportunity to work with the kind of musicians and conductors and orchestras that otherwise I wouldn't have been able to.

"It's not nearly as hectic as it used to be, and I enjoy it much more even than I enjoyed it then because you always have to progress with music.

"You have to always be learning something and getting better. And the meaning of the beauty of music keeps growing for me. And also, I suppose, from a performance standpoint, you could say that music is the only language that communicates directly from one soul to somebody else's soul."

These days, his schedule has slowed some, and he performs between 40 and 50 engagements a year.

But he still doesn't have as much time as he would like to spend as an amateur radio operator or to work in his home darkroom, where he develops his own black-and-white photographs.

Deanna, his wife of one year, is also a pianist. The couple lives in Fort Worth with Deanna's 16-year-old daughter, January — who is a singer — two dogs and three cats.

His immediate family still lives in Brazil. His older brother, Fernando, is not a musician; he's a civil engineer.

"My mother loved music, and that's the reason she wanted my brother to have lessons," said Feghali, who is currently artist-in-residence at Texas Christian University. "Little did she know that I was going to take it up seriously."

He credits his mother, Aurea Feghali, with making the kinds of decisions that made his career possible.

"If it wasn't for my mother, I wouldn't be doing this today. If it wasn't for her support and the decisions she made back then, I really wouldn't be doing it. That's for certain. If I hadn't left Brazil when I did, I would not have developed in the necessary way in order to be doing this professionally today. I could have stayed in Brazil and been involved in music, but never to the degree that I'm involved today."

SEPTEMBERFEST: Museum's fund-raiser closes today

(From 1B)

This year's annual museum fund-raiser began "Under Starry Skies" Friday evening on the museum grounds.

About 1,100 people flocked in to enjoy a dinner catered by Murray & the Frenchman on a warm balmy evening that had more than one sponsor proclaiming: "We have been blessed with beautiful weather tonight."

Saturday's festivities began with a morning 5K road race and fitness walk, hosted by the Permian Basin Road Runners.

Thousands of celebrants turned out Saturday afternoon to take part in everything from getting confetti eggs cracked over their heads to petting "Stinky," the rather large potbellied pig. Some folks relaxed in the shade under canopies to listen to the sounds of the Risky Business Band. Others browsed the booths of 68 artists, and children smeared frosting and candies on sugar cookies in the Kinderfest section.

Sporting a fresh-painted rainbow on her face, Betsy Dill, 5, proclaimed a balloon hat, fashioned by Midland's "Tommy" the clown, "the most neato thing" at Septemberfest. Her brother, Mark, 7, was partial to decorating sugar cookies as he slapped chocolate frosting on one cookie and topped it with a mound of candy corn.

In the nearby petting zoo — organized by Midland High School's Future Farmers of America — "Stinky," a black 85-90 pound potbellied pig, was one of the star attractions. However, his owner, Midland Freshman High School student Jonathan Chappell, 15, said, "He's not used to all of this attention. We took our other pig home and now Stinky has no time off."

Some youngsters tried their luck at the hat walk and their chances to land on a winning square in order to take home a firefighter's hat, sombrero or cowboy hat.

Several adults said they were impressed with the whimsical pet portraits in clay, made by San Antonio artist Janice Joplin. Others admired the eye-catching painted clothing at Jo Dufo's booth, and still others said watercolors displayed of stormy Texas skies were "absolutely stunning."

While it was wall-to-wall people by late afternoon Saturday, Septemberfest chairman Ann Wardlaw said she was pleased "the flow of people is moving so well."

Jami Owen, president of Las Manos, said if the weather holds out today, Septemberfest organizers may be looking at a record year.

"That would be really fitting for our 25th Septemberfest," she said.

"It could be a record, but I hesitate to say," Ms. Wardlaw said. "We have had about 7,500 people here today," she said, about 5 p.m. Saturday

She said new Septemberfest attractions included mes[illegible] steer roping and the gyroscope, a [illegible] contraption that people get strapped in [illegible] order to whirl around head over heels [illegible] eat a burrito before you do it," one youngs[illegible] warned

Ms. Wardlaw said the laser light show, presented every half hour in the nearby planetarium, was booked solid with attendees.

She said a Las Manos core group of 25 organized this year's event. "We have had a great community response and area businesses have been so generous. For example, Alldredge Gardens donated the landscaping for our preview dinner," she said.

Ms. Wardlaw said much of the preparations were done in-house by Las Manos, the museum auxiliary. Admissions chairman Tina Hood and invitations chairmen Gretchen and Shawn Davis also organized the preview dinner.

Food booths this year include turkey legs, sausage-on-a-stick, Opa's Smoked Meats, snowcones, Texas Taters, homemade ice cream, barbecue sandwiches, pizza, hamburgers and Lemon Chill.

Artists' booths include bread-dough Christmas ornaments, bronze sculptures, woodwork, pottery, oil paintings, stained-glass art, hand-painted ceramic tiles, painted fabric hats, acrylics, fiber art, watercolors, wooden toys, metal art and glass sculptures.

Admission is $4 for adults, $3 for senior citizens and children 6-17 and free for children 5 and younger. Admission to the laser light show — a mix of music, light and color — is $3 a person.

Proceeds from Septemberfest benefit Museum of the Southwest.

The museum is located at 1705 W. Missouri.

Tigua Indians slowly realize their dream to operate first modern casino in Texas

By Eduardo Montes
Associated Press

EL PASO — John Spencer has gotten his first taste of casino gambling and it wasn't in Vegas, Atlantic City, or anywhere even remotely near those glittering gaming meccas.

The San Antonian placed his first bets — and lost his first casino cash — in Texas' westernmost tip, where the Tigua Indians are gradually realizing their dream of bringing Vegas-style gaming thrills to the Lone Star State.

"I like it. It's a lot of fun," said Spencer, a student at New Mexico State University in nearby Las Cruces.

He conceded he lost "a few bucks" at one of the four blackjack tables that got their inaugural run Friday night at the Tigua's Speaking Rock Bingo and Entertainment Center. But he indicated that wouldn't dissuade him from wanting to come back.

Those are the kinds of sentiments that bring a smile to the face of Tigua Gaming Commissioner Vince Munoz, who was beaming brightly Friday as he stood amid the noisy babble of the tribe's fledgling casino.

He watched eagerly as patrons lined up for spots at the blackjack tables, where some players smiled broadly and others frowned as they ran their fingers anxiously through their hair.

"I think it's going to be very popular," Munoz said, talking over the sound of dealers prompting players to place bets, laughter, clinking chips and the clamor from the tribe's adjacent "super bingo" hall.

In fact, the tribe is banking on Speaking Rock's potential popularity. They've shown a fierce commitment to making it the state's first — and for now, only — world-class casino. They see the operation as a way of making the tribe economically self-sufficient and of providing needed jobs, not just for Tiguas but for El Pasoans in general.

Tigua leaders became involved in serious attempts to open a casino last year when they began trying to negotiate a gaming compact with the state. Compacts are treaties required by federal law for any tribe that wants to offer Class 3 gaming, which includes slot machines and table games such as roulette.

The state said it couldn't agree to the games the Tiguas wanted, however, sending the tribe to federal court, where it won an order forcing Texas officials to negotiate. The state, which contends that Texas law does not allow casino gambling, appealed and is awaiting a ruling from the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

The Tiguas, meantime, have proceeded with their plans, offering the games the law allows — and some say even games the law doesn't. They opened Speaking Rock last November as a high-stakes bingo hall, added poker tables in June and now offer a form of blackjack they call "Tigua 21."

And the tribe has faced challenges almost every step of the way.

When the Tiguas announced the bingo hall, local charities began to protest that a high-stakes hall would cut into their own bingo operations and deprive them of needed revenue.

The poker tables, which now number 10 and are drawing sizable crowds, brought the scrutiny of the El Paso County District Attorney's office, which determined the Tigua's card games would be illegal if they were played anywhere other than the reservation.

"What's clear is that if I had a private group playing blackjack, let's say in El Paso, we would prosecute," said District Attorney Jaime Esparza, whose authority does not extend to the reservation.

The issue gets murky because of the different jurisdictions involved — the Tigua's reservation is in El Paso, but is a sovereign nation — and because of the many ongoing court battles and Congressional debates that could reshape the 1988 Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, which allows tribes to operate casinos.

Report: Skills test results exclude thousands of students' scores

■ Omission may have boosted public schools' performance, report claims.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — By leaving out between 70,000 to 150,000 student scores from a Texas skills test, total performance of public schools may have been boosted, the Austin American-Statesman reported in a copyright story Saturday.

The Texas Assessment of Academic Skills data, which was praised by Gov. Ann Richards, was calculated without factoring in more than 10 percent of fourth-, eighth- and 10th-grade students who were tested, according to a computer analysis by the American-Statesman.

Students who enrolled after Oct. 29 were excluded from the rankings of campus scores in the April examinations for the first time in the test's four-year history.

The rationale of some educators for the exclusion was "mobility control," meaning schools should not be held accountable for performance of pupils who might have arrived only days before taking the TAAS.

"Lots of superintendents were very concerned about students walking in the day of the TAAS and taking the test," said Criss Cloudt, TEA associate commissioner for policy planning and evaluation.

Republican gubernatorial candidate George W. Bush, seizing upon the report as evidence that Richards has not fully disclosed all students' performance on the highly touted exams, urged her to explain the exclusions.

"Ann Richards used these test scores to trumpet improvement and tout her candidacy, but as the truth comes out it becomes increasingly apparent the test results were manipulated and doctored to mislead the people of Texas about what is really happening in our schools," Bush said in a prepared statement.

But Richards' spokesman Bill Cryer denied Saturday that the governor had kept any scores secret. He defended the exclusion policy and maintained that Texas students' performance generally has improved.

"The TAAS scores went up, and all objective accounts of those tests say they went up for good reasons," Cryer said. "The SAT and ACT — college board tests — both went up. It all points to the same thing: students are doing better.

"To say anything different is to denigrate what the teachers have accomplished," he said. "All tests of achievement have gone up, and that points to the fact that something good has happened to Texas schools in the last three years."

Ms. Cloudt said how much mobility control policy affected school passing rates had not been determined.

"I have that on my list — to go back literally and look at how many students were left out and the difference in test performance," she said. " . . . I suspect we're going to find that in some districts, it's going to be a wash."

The American-Statesman calculated that at least 70,000 students were left out. The newspaper said if the same percentages occurred in other grades taking TAAS — third, fifth, sixth and seventh — at least 150,000 students could have been affected.

The analysis of 1993 TEA data found that low-performing schools excluded the most students for mobility control, with TAAS passing rates usually increasing.

In four of every seven schools, passing rates went up after the 1993 data were adjusted.

Texas schools gave the TAAS, which measures reading, writing and math skills, to 661,530 students in grades four, eight and 10 in the spring of 1993, with 46 percent passing.

Judge restrains protests at Dallas medical school

DALLAS (AP) — A state judge has restrained demonstrations against officials at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas.

Visiting state District Judge Virgil Mullanax ruled Friday that demonstrations by the Black State Employees Association of Texas at the officials' homes pose "imminent danger" to the officials.

> 'Anytime a public figure or institution intentionally goes out and eliminates the positions of all African-American women . . . you're subject to complaints of discrimination, you're subject to protests.'
> —Darren Reagan
> Employees Association of Texas

He said the protests threaten the privacy and safety of the officials' families.

Throughout much of the summer, the association has been protesting the proposed layoff of 13 workers in the school's 200-employee medical services research and development department.

The association says all of the 13 are black women.

"Anytime a public figure or institution intentionally goes out and eliminates the positions of all African-American women . . . you're subject to complaints of discrimination, you're subject to protests," said Darren Reagan, chairman of the association's 300-member Dallas local.

The university insists the layoffs are part of a department restructuring and does not target only black women.

The order forbids pickets, blockades or use of loudspeakers outside the homes and offices of UT-Southwestern officials. It also forbids harassment of officials or their families.

Workers discover missing memorial to slain ATF agents

WACO (AP) — A monument to the federal agents killed in the shootout at the Branch Davidian compound has disappeared.

A state road maintenance crew noticed last week that the metal plaque on top of a waist-high pole was missing, said Helen Havelka, a spokeswoman for the Department of Transportation.

The plaque was engraved with the names of the four U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents who were killed in the Feb. 28, 1993, standoff near Waco.

"I'm baffled," said Donnie Carter, special agent in charge of the Houston ATF office. "My instinct tells me someone could have done it as a prank, or someone could have taken it because they didn't like it being there. I don't know."

The McLennan County Sheriff's Department is investigating.

Tornado hits coastal town, destroys house

SURFSIDE (AP) — A tornado hit this coastal town Saturday, destroying one home and damaging several others, authorities said.

No injuries were reported, Brazoria County Sheriff's dispatcher Cheri Brem said.

The tornado touched down around noon in an area where most houses are weekend homes, she said.

"One house was destroyed and several were damaged. All of them are on Ocean Avenue," she said.

Surfside is a small coastal town 60 miles south of Houston.

Prison officials voice concerns about new Texas penal code

FORT WORTH (AP) — Prison officials fear that ambiguities in the new Texas penal code could make them powerless to use deadly force against escape tries by a new category of offender, the "state jail felon."

The Texas Department of Criminal Justice has asked Attorney General Dan Morales for an urgent interpretation of the law, which took effect Sept. 1.

Prison officials said they want to know whether these felons are inmates subject to deadly force if they try to escape, or probationers legally protected from such force, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Saturday.

"This is such an important question for our correctional personnel to have resolved that we are asking your office to expedite consideration of the issue," said Carl Reynolds, the department's general counsel.

The formal request for an opinion, dated Aug. 19, was among documents accompanying the agenda for next week's meeting of the Texas Board of Criminal Justice.

The board is building 18 facilities to house 25,490 state jail inmates for up to two years.

The inmates have been convicted of "nonviolent" offenses that fall between third-degree felonies and Class A misdemeanors, including property crimes, drug possession and technical parole violations.

Reynolds said 120 state-jail cases have been filed in Harris County under the week-old law and one inmate has already been sentenced to a state jail. Because none of the new state jails is ready, the board designated the boot camp at the Coffield Unit near Huntsville as a temporary jail last month.

The new penal code continues to authorize deadly force to prevent prison escapes, but its definition of "escape" apparently does not apply to probationers. Therefore, the law may not apply to some offenders in state jails or other community-based corrections facilities, Reynolds told Morales.

He said the law's creation of the offense of "unauthorized absence from a community corrections facility" further clouds the issue.

The problem with the definition of "escape" is that the facilities will combine inmates jailed as a condition for future probation and those who have had their probations revoked, Reynolds said.

Authorities arrest former regent of Texas Tech

AMARILLO (AP) — A one-time Texas Tech University regent has been jailed on suspicion of being a fugitive from Switzerland.

Swiss authorities issued a warrant charging Wesley Will Masters, 56, of Amarillo, with embezzlement, fraud and "unfaithful management," according to documents filed in U.S. District Court in Amarillo.

Masters allegedly committed crimes in 1993 involving millions of dollars, the documents said.

He was arrested Friday at an Amarillo office at Switzerland's request, authorities said.

Federal authorities are detaining him in the Potter County Jail without bond pending a Monday hearing before U.S. Magistrate Clinton E. Averitte.

A judge in Geneva, Switzerland, issued a warrant for Masters' arrest on May 13. The Swiss government has asked for Masters' extradition, according to a complaint filed by the U.S. attorney's office.

According to the Swiss government's complaint, Masters and Jonathan Digby Delorme apparently defrauded a German financier of about $15 million.

Masters was founder, chairman and president of Center Plains Industries, an Amarillo-based anhydrous ammonia wholesaler. He also served as director of Falcon Oil and Gas Co. and Lyric Energy Co. in Amarillo.

He also was founder and chairman of Cepex Inc., a fertilizer company; Masters Land and Cattle Co.; Centergas Inc.; and Masters Agronomics Inc.

The Plainview native received the Texas Tech Distinguished Alumnus Agriculture Award in 1982. He served as a regent for Texas Tech University and Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center.

Top candidates on GOP ticket wind up weekend tour in Conroe

CONROE (AP) — The state's top Republicans, with Sen. Phil Gramm acting as ringmaster, wrapped up Saturday a two-day swing dubbed the "Victory Round-Up Tour" through Texas' two largest metropolitan areas.

The top-of-the-November-ticket candidates, led by Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison and gubernatorial candidate George W. Bush, were accompanied by other statewide GOP candidates for rallies in Houston, Sugar Land and Conroe.

Saturday's appearances came after a similar jaunt Friday through Dallas, Plano, Highland Village and Colleyville in north Texas.

In Conroe, the last stop of the tour, Gramm introduced his party's hopefuls — including candidates for comptroller, treasurer, lieutenant governor, attorney general, land commission and railroad commission — to about 200 people who crowded into a steamy Veterans of Foreign War hall and denounced the Clinton administration's push for changes in the nation's health care system.

"All over the world today, people are fighting to get out of socialized medicine," Gramm said. "Yet in America under Bill Clinton and the Democrats they're trying to make us the only country in the world that's trying to get into it.

"I want to tell you Kay Bailey Hutchison and I are going to stop it from happening. We're not willing to tear down the greatest health care system the world has ever known and rebuild it in the image of the post office."

Hutchison complained that Clinton was responsible for a huge tax increase, deployment of U.S. troops to be United Nations policemen, restrictions on private property rights and an assault on health care.

"We have a mission in November of 1994," she said. "We are going to change the direction of this state and this country."

Bush said he hoped to use Hutchison's popularity to ease his run for governor.

"I can't wait to grab on to her skirts because she's going to pull me through in November," he said.

Meanwhile, in Houston, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen did some stumping Saturday for his nephew, congressional candidate Ken Bentsen Jr., and other Democratic candidates at a meeting of Baptist ministers.

The Baptist ministers also announced their endorsements for a host of Democratic candidates, including Gov. Ann Richards, Texas Attorney General Dan Morales and Ken Bentsen. The group said it will make a separate endorsement next week for Richard Fisher, the Democratic candidate running against Mrs. Hutchison.

"It's hard to believe a state this big doesn't have at least one Democrat in the Senate," Secretary Bentsen said. "It's important to have at least one senator with full access to the (Clinton) administration and to the president. It's important to be able to work both Democrat and Republican sides."

Poetry tells black cowboy's story

Symposium participants are helping to 'set the record straight'

■ At a panel discussion on black cowboy poetry, MC English instructor James Fuller got a chance to examine the "rough, rugged, raw experience of the American cowboy."

Elise Coombes

The Sixth Annual National Cowboy Symposium and Celebration in Lubbock this weekend had all the trappings of the American cowboy culture: an all-day trail ride, team roping, a sheepdog demonstration, even a western fashion show.

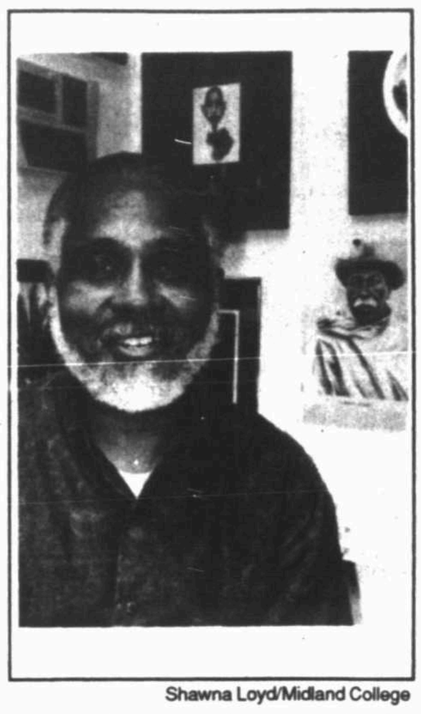
For Midland College English instructor James Fuller, the symposium was a chance to dust off the myth of range lore and examine the real history of the West and the American cowboy.

As a facilitator of a panel discussion on black cowboy poetry, Fuller views the symposium as "a healthy way in which to dispel misconceptions about the role of the African-American in the settling of the West."

Much of that experience is revealed in the poetry of the cowboy--Anglo, Hispanic andAfrican-American. "The poetry reflects the ups and downs and harshness of the environment," Fuller said. "It was a rough, rugged, raw experience."

Cowboy poetry often speaks of the snakes and dust and sand--the physical dangers and discomforts of living on the prairie. But, the black cowboy often used these elements as metaphors for living on the prairie, Fuller said.

"Withstanding the abrasiveness of sand is one thing," he said. "Withstanding the abrasiveness of racism is something else."



Shawna Loyd/Midland College

James Fuller's interest in the Cowboy Symposium was sparked by a former student.

Fuller's interest in the role of the African-American in the settling of the West began when several years ago when a former student asked him to participate in Cowboy Symposium panel discussion "The Forgotten West." Since then, he has continued to participate in the symposium, an event he said is a direct step in the right direction.

"The interesting thing about this symposium is that we have reached a point where the record is being corrected," Fuller said. "There is a growing recognition that a multi-cultural populace contributed to what is now American," he said.

That contribution is reflected in new scholarship that documents a strong African-American presence in the West.

A recent article in U.S. News and World Report points out a number of statistics about African-Americans in the West: as many as one in four cowboys who participated in the cattle drives through Texas was African-American; by 1890 about 4 percent of the nation's black population lived west of the Mississippi; and more than 60 all-black towns were founded from Alabama to California.

"My desire is simply to want to know," Fuller said about his interest black cowboys, pioneers and "Buffalo Soldiers," the black Army soldiers who fought Indians and patrolled western borders. He said he sees cowboy poetry, which has an appeal beyond that of regular poetry, "as an excellent vehicle to right the story for everybody."

Budgeting time can help solve parking woes

About this time every semester Midland College has a P.C. problem--that's a Parking Correctly problem as students rush to park and get to class on time in the mornings.

In general, the college has plenty of parking, but students who arrive for class five minutes before the hour and want to park in a space close to their classroom should be forewarned: be prepared to spend some time circling the parking lots for a space; be prepared to be ticketed if you are parked illegally, be prepared to be late for class.

Coombes

Security Guard David Sapp has two easy solutions to the parking problems: be courteous and learn to budget your time. When those two solutions fail, Sapp issues tickets to people who violate parking rules. Sapp says tickets are most commonly issued to:

—students and faculty who park in fire lanes

—students who park in employee parking

—cars parked illegally in handicapped zones

—students who create their own parking spaces in fire lanes and along curbs (students who do this may want to make sure their auto insurance is paid up)

—cars with Midland College parking permits not placed on the driver's side rear bumper.

Sapp reminds students that a yellow stripe on a parking lot means the space is reserved for employees, handicapped space or it is a fire lane. Students may park in white-striped areas.

Students who despair of finding a parking space should note there is plenty of parking at Chaparral Center. Students can access any building on campus in five or six minutes. But, "you may have to run to get to class," Sapp said. Unfortunately, there is no P.E. credit for jogging across campus.

Fines are $5 and may be paid at the business office. Sapp warns that students with unpaid parking fines at the end of the semester will have a hold placed on their transcripts. Parking tickets may be appealed to the Student Activities office.

Visitors to the campus who receive tickets can mail their tickets to the Midland College Business Office and the fine will be waived.

Elise Coombes is public relations director for Midland College.

You truly can make political difference

If you were one of the 5,373 Midlanders whose names were purged from the registration rolls in August, you'll be happy (we think) to know that you still have a month to register to vote in the November general election.

On the other hand, if you're not the slightest bit interested in ever entering a voting booth again, you're in need of another kind of revitalization. Politics, regardless of the stripe, tends to have a depressing effect on voters after a time, particularly when several years pass and voters still can't put their finger on anything that has changed for the better in the country.

It's that state — call it "voter burnout" if you will — that must be changed in order for the American political system to evolve and move on, truly serving the people. Dropping out isn't the way to change things politically; being involved is.

That point is aptly addressed in today's "Speaking Out" column by Gary R. Willis, a former member of the Midland Independent School District board of trustees, and while Willis looks at the need to be involved from the standpoint of the Democratic Party, what he is saying cuts across party lines. Regardless which political party you're affiliated with or even if you're totally independent, doing more than merely going to the polling place to cast your ballot is essential.

Politics — whether good or bad — will help shape life in this nation regardless of how we personally feel about what is happening in Washington, Austin or even Midland. Because of that fact, it's imperative that you be involved in the political system because if you aren't, you're left out entirely. If you're involved but your opinion isn't among the majority decision on any issue, you may not have affected the outcome but your input still has affected the political discussion. That's important.

So, it's important to be involved and to do what you can to affect our political system. Voting is important. If you don't know whether you're legally registered to vote, check to find out.

But also remember that merely voting is only going halfway in doing what you should do to keep our political system alive and well. Register to vote, get involved with politics regardless of which party you support and make a difference.

It's time to make the political system better.

Candidates who shoot birds may lose voters

Where else but Texas would two gubernatorial candidates feel compelled to show off their dove-shooting skills as part of their election strategy?

Decked out in camouflage hunting gear, Gov. Ann Richards and her challenger, George W. Bush, tried to prove to reporters Thursday they could be tough on birds, as well as tough on crime.

While Gov. Richards obligingly fired in the air at nonexistent doves in Kaufman County, Mr. Bush embarrassed himself near Houston by mistakenly downing a killdeer, a fowl shot that will cost him a $130 fine.

If these two candidates are so determined to snap up the good ol' boy vote, we would suggest other ways to go about it without filling the air with buckshot.

How about a Texas Gladiators contest with no holds barred? Here are some of the competitive events:

■ Jalapeno eating. The first candidate who turns beet red, hollers or faints is the loser.

■ Cow chip tossing. Contestants will be judged on style as well as distance.

■ Mud wrestling. This longtime political event would finally be officially sanctioned.

■ Country line dancing. This would prove the candidates' ability to walk, skip, kick and yell "yahoo" at the same time.

■ Chili cookoff. In this state, the ability to put together a zesty bowl of red has always been a good judge of character. But if either chooses to drop beans in the pot, the governor's race will end right there.

Ms. Richards and Mr. Bush probably think this idea is for the birds. And they may just be right. The birds of Texas are probably hoping the candidates will find some other way to bag votes.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Sept. 11, the 254th day of 1994. There are 111 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Fifty years ago, on Sept. 11, 1944, President Roosevelt and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill met in Canada at the second Quebec Conference.

On this date:

In 1777, during the American Revolution, forces under Gen. George Washington suffered defeat at the hands of the British in the Battle of Brandywine near Wilmington, Del.

In 1789, Alexander Hamilton was appointed the first U.S. secretary of the Treasury.

In 1814, an American fleet scored a decisive victory over the British in the Battle of Lake Champlain in the War of 1812.

In 1850, Jenny Lind, the "Swedish Nightingale," gave her first concert in the United States, at Castle Garden in New York.

In 1885, author D.H. Lawrence was born in Eastwood, England.

In 1936, President Roosevelt dedicated Boulder Dam (now Hoover Dam) by pressing a key in Washington to signal the startup of the dam's first hydroelectric generator in Nevada.

1996 GOP contenders bash Congress

WASHINGTON — Two top contenders for the 1996 Republican nomination for president are on a collision course over how to reform Congress.

Anderson

Former Education Secretary Lamar Alexander says "cut their pay and send them home." Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., thinks senators should be sent back to work, and that what should be cut is the dinner hour.

The question dividing Dole and Alexander — should Congress be replaced with a part-time "citizens' legislature" — may also split the ranks of the GOP as the 1996 primary season approaches. "I think 'cut their pay and send them home'... should be the battle cry of the Republican party," Alexander told us. "I discovered that when I began to mention this.... First I got a smile, then applause, and then people actually rising out of their chairs."

That may be why Dole derided his proposal as a "crowd-pleaser" and quipped that Alexander could offer a real "bell-ringer" by proposing to abolish Congress altogether.

"Of course it's a crowd-pleaser," says Alexander. "It's a catchy phrase for a serious idea." The idea is to keep Congress in session six months a year, and then send it home to "take a real job" and make room for "farmers, teachers, and merchants" to run for office. Alexander added: "I think it's good for Republicans to speak in plain English."

Dole, who normally is no defender of Congress, reserved his use of "plain English" for a blistering critique of Capitol Hill culture. During a recent interview, he lamented the lack of discipline among senators of both parties, the number of distractions, and the power of one member with a dinner appointment to derail the institution.

Dole also pointed out a paradox in Alexander's plan: Congress already is a part-time legislature. Last year the Senate was in session 156 days. In 1992, there were only 129 working days. This year, the Senate has worked 117 days, with approximately 15 more to follow.

"When he (Alexander) said 'cut their pay and send them home,' I said 'we're not here much anyway,'" Dole told us.

The lot of a leader is not a happy one in the Senate. While debates over health care and crime rage on the Senate floor, the fiercest bickering can break out over schedules and lifestyles. "People don't want to vote early on Mondays," Dole complains. "They want to leave early on Friday."

The biggest "thief of time" in Congress, argues Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., is the incessant fund-raising required of members to stay in office. The average senator today must raise $2,000 per day, six days a week, over an entire six-year term to raise enough money to get re-elected.

Dole counters that Byrd has never felt the pressure of being in a tough re-election race.

Winning those tough, competitive races takes lots of money under the current system. Yet Alexander remains an absentee in the debate over campaign finance reform, a prerequisite for turning the political process over to "farmers, merchants and teachers," as Alexander envisions. "I haven't made any speeches about (campaign finance reform)," Alexander says.

Perhaps because he thinks it wouldn't be a crowd-pleaser.

Texan's 17 percent flat tax makes sense

WASHINGTON — The first — make that the only — thing Congress should do before adjourning is pass Rep. Dick Armey's "Freedom and Fairness Restoration Act." Congress won't, any more than a crocodile will drain the swamp that is its habitat. Still, the bill is a blueprint for relimiting government and changing Washington's political culture.

Will

Armey, a Dallas Republican, believes government grows faster than most Americans want or know because of the stealth and meretriciousness of the political class. The withholding tax siphons away money before earners see it. Everyone, says Armey, knows how much his monthly car payment costs but who knows exactly how much the IRS is taking each month? By the fiction of the "employer contribution" to Social Security taxes, which actually is just part of the employees' compensation, government blurs the fact that government is taking a 15.3 percent bite from paychecks. Two-thirds of Americans pay more in Social Security taxes (counting the employer "contribution") than in federal income taxes, but do they know that? Under "current services baseline budgeting" a $2 billion spending "cut" is proclaimed when a program scheduled to increase $10 billion is increased by "only" $8 billion. And there is the hidden taxation of government subsidies and regulations, such as the 40 cents of the cost of an average jar of peanut butter that is the cost of subsidizing peanut farmers. The average family, says Armey, pays more in taxes than it spends on food, shelter and clothing combined.

The core of Armey's bill is a 17 percent flat tax on income. This net tax cut for the nation would be paid for by thorough simplification of the tax code and by spending restraints.

Taxpayers would add up their wages, salaries and pensions, subtract personal and dependent deductions, and pay 17 percent of the remainder. With a personal deduction of $26,200 for a married couple and $5,300 per child, a family of four earning $36,800 would pay nothing. These high allowances make Armey's flat tax progressive: the wealthy would pay a larger percentage of their incomes in taxes than middle income people would pay. Many millions of the working poor would be removed from the tax rolls. A family of four earning $50,000 would pay 4 percent of its earnings, a similar family earning $200,000 would pay 14 percent.

But all would file their returns on a form the size of a postcard. This would radically reduce the estimated 5.4 billion hours a year — as many hours as the entire population of Indiana works — that Americans spend complying with federal income tax laws. Furthermore, a flat tax would cause wholesale and wholesome unemployment in Washington's parasite class of lawyers and lobbyists who rent themselves to the sort of people economists call "rent-seekers" — people seeking to gain advantages, or impose disadvantages on others, by tampering with the tax code's baroque complexities.

Because savings would be untaxed under the flat tax, there would be more savings, so the pool of investment capital would grow, interest rates would fall and new businesses would proliferate. Elimination of capital gains taxation would remove the disincentive to shift money from old investments to new ones, and the stock market would boom.

Armey's bill would build into the American year a dozen incitements of popular resistance to government. By eliminating withholding, it would require taxpayers to write monthly checks to the IRS. Imagine: twelve occasions for comparing the value of government benefits received with the value of disposable income lost.

Armey knows that his bill stands no chance in Congress as it is currently controlled. However, he believes the flat tax idea is going to be carried to Washington by many new members of Congress next January.

What do you call an 11-year-old hit man?

Small problems first: What do you call an 11-year-old hit man? Not a hit child surely. That makes him sound like a Hollywood moppet who's dynamite at the box office. Those cute "Home Alone" movies, chewing gum for the brain, spring to mind.

Baker

Eleven-year-old Robert Sandifer (height: 4 feet 8 inches) was a real-life instance of what can happen when you leave a kid home alone.

He was bumped off by his gang's teen-age superiors last week after botching a killing in a Chicago slum. Firing a semiautomatic pistol into a group of teenagers, he shot one boy in the hand and killed a 14-year-old girl.

Police think his gang lost confidence in him, figured he might tattle on them, so dispatched a pair of teen-age torpedoes who shot him in the back of the head and left the body in a pedestrian underpass.

Don Terry of The New York Times rounded up the usual details of a now common home-alone tale: "... neglected and burned with cigarettes before he was 3, and bounced from his grandmother's home to group homes, and from the back of police squad cars to detention centers most of the rest of his short life."

It was only the 11-year-old angle that earned Robert's story big play in press and television. Stories of teen-age gang murders are now too commonplace to make the national news wires. But an 11-year-old killer — ah, a first!

Firsts are news.

Last Friday, for instance, the discovery of Robert's body was front-page news in The Times, but a 13-year-old charged with murdering four people in the firebombing of a Bronx grocery ran on page 3 of the second section. What a difference two years can make in a world where there are more murders than appendectomies.

Maybe the heavy media attention to the Chicago story reflected editors' natural tendency to believe their own stories. Congress' passage of the crime bill had been played everywhere as such a victory for President Clinton that the Chicago story immediately exposed the victory as a joke.

"What! Crime still being committed — and now by mere children — despite the triumphant enactment of the crime bill? And just when I thought it was safe at last to leave the keys in the car again and go to bed with the house unlocked."

That's me mimicking my own reaction, which was skeptical, as always, when press and television announce presidential victories.

The news industry is forced to cover the intractable social realities of our vast and vastly cantankerous nation as though covering a prizefight: "Congress floors president in third round," "GOP cautioned about low blows," "Comeback Kid lands knockout punch on crime bill."

The public, besotted with sports, demands this kind of coverage. Even news people who hate it often agree that it's more "readable" than news about the complexities of governing. So government is commonly treated as game-playing.

This leaves the public vulnerable to heavy doses of political fraud dished out in such oversold stuff as the crime bill. Crime being a local problem, there are only a few things either Congress or president can do about it, but no Washington payroller will admit it.

If polls say voters want something done about crime, Washington is going to do something about it, even if it can only thump its chest and utter bestial roars. You can fool some of the people all of the time, and often that's enough of the people to get everybody re-elected.

One of the few things Washington can do about crime is to funnel back to local communities some of the money it suctions away from them. To the extent that the new law does this, it's probably good news for your local police chief. Most of the rest is posturing.

After so much Washington malarkey about crime, the story of the 11-year-old gang gunman is like a bucket of cold water in the face. "Here is the reality, folks," it says with an obscene jeer. "It is more terrible than anything you blowhard Washington strutters can even imagine, much less begin to deal with."

Voters should oust nation's politicians

I did not cause the nation's deficit; you did not cause this national disaster, the whole thing was caused by our presidents, both Democratic and Republican and both houses of Congress, both Democratic and Republican.

And it does not seem that any of these folks who are responsible have any intention of doing anything about it.

Columnists have long said that voters and taxpayers disapprove of the members of Congress except for their own representative and senators. I say to you that none of them, including our own Lamar Smith and Phil Gramm, have any intention of reducing the deficit.

Now the deficit is not our main problem; the national debt is, but in order to lower or eliminate the debt, it is necessary to have a positive side on the deficit.

So, no matter how much you like or respect your own officeholders, since it is obvious that they will not eliminate this national cancer, I urge you to vote against them.

Symphony-chorale thanks people for hardy support

On behalf of the staff and musicians of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale (MOSC), I would like to thank the citizens of our community for supporting the recent Outdoor Pops Concert in Beal Plaza at Midland College. Your enthusiasm for quality music and entertainment was heartwarming. We also appreciate your generous donations given that evening. Your support will enable us to continue to provide the people of West Texas with one of the best symphonic orchestras in the state.

The MOSC is at an important crossroads in its professional growth. We are blessed with outstanding musical talent; however, in order to meet the challenges of an ever-changing artistic environment, we must attract new audiences. We need the support of the community now more than ever. I hope you will continue to patronize the wonderful concerts throughout the 1994-1995 year.

Community and Senior Services thanks volunteer

On behalf of the board of directors, staff and auxiliary of Community and Senior Services (CSS), I want to thank Ken Terrell for a job well done as the charter president of the CSS Auxiliary. Ken has been a tireless volunteer for the agency for many years. Over the past year, he has generously given his boundless energy and enthusiasm in organizing the auxiliary, the primary volunteer support group for CSS.

Thanks to Ken and the many other dedicated agency volunteers, the new auxiliary helps to ensure that the agency's Meals-on-Wheels and other homebound services meet the growing needs of our city's elderly and disabled population.

On many occasions, Ken has provided leadership in CSS activities.

For the past three years, he has chaired a department of our Texas Size Garage Sale. He also has been a key recruiter of volunteers for this annual "Texas Size" fundraising event.

Ken is a sterling example of what volunteering is all about — helping to improve the lives of others. Not only have Ken's efforts brightened the lives of CSS' clients, he has also made volunteering a fun and rewarding experience for all of us at CSS.

Truth should be told about wildlife center

In reference to your Sept. 4th editorial, I believe that a person in the editorial position should be making comments on the truth, not using their position to try to brainwash the Midland City Council or the Midland citizens.

The truth — the simple truth — is that the Erskines live in a zone for one-family dwellings only and have illegally undertaken wildlife rehabilitation in their backyard for all these years. The City Council did not say that they should not live at their residence, only to use it as a living location with acceptable standards and to move the rehab portion to another location in the appropriate zoning. Our City Council is to be commended in the way they are performing their job in upholding the law.

The Erskines were offered another location on FairgroundsRoad, free, which is approximately three miles from their residence. Most every person working has to travel at least that far to their job site, and I am sure that they would all like to work at home. So my question is, why should the Erskines receive preferential treatment?

I pray that the City Council will be fair and wise and turn a cold shoulder to the unreasonable request that was quoted. I believe the taxpaying neighbors of the Erskines, who have suffered for years, are entitled to enjoy their homes and backyards.

Government OKs FBI, CIA abuses of power

I can't believe that the 12 years of Reagan-Bush covert operations have been forgotten. In my opinion, it was 12 years of the biggest complicity of lies, propaganda and fraud this country has ever known. The sad part was Congress had to know but didn't turn a hand to stop it.

The despicable excuses for the cold wars and billions of tax dollars spent to slaughter innocent people was an insult to our Constitution. The trashing of our savings and loans by rich and powerful businessmen and politicians in Houston (and other places), aided by the CIA and buddies of the Mafia, left our great grandchildren a huge debt to pay off.

The Resolution Trust Corp. sold the failed S&Ls for a song to be exploited by profiteers. It concerns me now that many people are either unaware or flat don't want to bother with learning the facts of how our tax money is spent on corrupt out-of-control agencies like the CIA and the FBI. For years, our government has supported and condoned the CIA in their covert operations such as supporting death squad thugs in all Third World and impoverished countries. Their worn out excuse is: It is for our national security. They recruit men like Gen. Raoul Cedras (and he is just one among many) who have been trained in the fine art of torture and jungle warfare at our dirty camp in Fort Benning, Ga. Some of our good men in Congress tried to pass a bill to get rid of this camp but the "good ole boys" voted it down.

Since the '30s I have learned the truth about J. Edgar Hoover. He was an egotistical, ruthless man with an obsession with his own image and power. Over the years, he left a legacy of deceit and corruption that is still in full swing today by the FBI. All they have done is change the dirty coalition called "Cointelpro" by Hoover into many other names. They intimidate and harass innocent citizens who have every right to organize and speak out on their political or religious views. The stupidity shown in the handling of the religious compound in Waco that caused the horrible deaths of men, women and little children was a disgrace to our Constitution. How could any clear-thinking person believe the lies and propaganda put out by the media and FBI about the huge weapons buildup and the terrible monster, David Koresh?

What can we expect when our government gives such agencies the go-ahead to commit such abuses of power as the CIA and the FBI have done during the last 40 years. I have no respect for either.

Branum's gun remarks deserve readers' thanks

Readers of the Reporter-Telegram owe a debt of thanks to Lowell E. Branum for his remarks on "Gun regulations in America," (Opinion, Sunday, Sept. 4). Branum reminds us of an old, but often forgotten lesson, that "a little bit of knowledge may be dangerous, and may lead to serious error!"

While I do not wish to instruct Branum, he may be interested in the following fact: under the currently valid and unrepealed Title 10, section 31, of the United States Code, the militia of each state includes all able-bodied males at least 17 years of age and under 45 years of age who are or have made a declaration of intent to become citizens. All persons in that group are expected to possess, and know how to use, weapons of defense including military weapons such as AK-47s and other modern automatic weapons.

The everyday violent acts of criminals, in and out of government, clearly demonstrate that each of us must be his own first line of defense against the individual who has decided that he is not bound by our law and intends to take by superior force whatever we have that he wants.

It makes no difference in the outcome as you are about to be relieved of your property and perhaps your life by force of arms. Here you are; you have a choice; if your assailant plans to kill to get what he wants and leave no witnesses, you can surrender and die or fight and perhaps die. It's your choice and there is no one who can help but you. How do you want to go into that battle, armed and prepared to use your weapons as necessary to protect what is yours, or disarmed with no chance of survival?

Readers' views on: New school football stadium

Other problems eclipse need for new stadium

I am not one to express my opinion in print. However, when I read your paper today and the article on Marla Carr's efforts to obtain signatures for a new football stadium, it led me to write this letter.

Businesses are closing, most have struggled and some have lost everything.

Oil companies have laid off employees by the hundreds.

Many, many people are on welfare, or like my husband on Social Security disability, and because of my own illness, I am unable to work. Yes, Ms. Carr, a new football stadium is really on the minds of most Midlanders.

Here are some solutions:

1. Let Lee build its own stadium since most of the desire for a new stadium comes from Lee, because if you don't have season tickets you can see Permian vs. Lee!

2. Odessa has a stadium large enough to hold the people, let that game be played there. Odessa built their stadium during the high-roller times.

3. Be realistic, and do with what we have.

It must be nice, Ms. Carr, to have nothing more to worry about than a new football stadium so you can have season tickets. Get real!

LaNell Cruse
Midland

Reading scores should come before football

I doubt that the devastation Marla Carr felt about losing her season football tickets can compare to the devastation a parent feels when they find out that their child cannot read.

In 1994, 21 percent (a little more than one in five) of the eighth-grade students did not pass the TAAS reading test. Forty-one percent did not pass the math portion and 31 percent did not pass the writing portion.

We do not need a new monument to athletics until we get more teachers, smaller classes and better academic facilities. Many of our elementary schools are in worse condition than our current football stadium. A state-of-the-art citywide science lab, math lab, art facility or a hands-on science museum would benefit everyone. What about teaching all children to read?

Let's put our priorities in order. Sports are for fun and relaxation, but academics must always come first! Few students will benefit directly from the construction of a new stadium, but everyone benefits from academics.

Wouldn't it be great if people got as charged up about reading, science and math as they do about football?

SPEAKING OUT

People who take part in political process can resurrect America

By Gary R. Willis

Gary R. Willis, a former board trustee for the Midland Independent School District, is an occasional contributor to this column.

Blame me, I voted for Clinton. He campaigned as a New Democrat, and being a conservative Texas Democrat in the tradition of Sam Rayburn, LBJ and Lloyd Bentsen, I thrilled at the prospect that our party would be led back to the center of American politics by a Democrat Leadership Council New Democrat. After all, we Democrats have controlled Congress governing this nation over half a century, longer than I've been alive. Yet, in recent years, our national leadership seems determined to forget that we have historically been a center-left coalition not a radical left fringe.

We have much of which to be proud. The Social Security safety net. The Civil Rights Act. The Voting Rights Act. Environmental stewardship. Medicare. Medicaid. Support for education. We have always been the political coalition that seeks to empower the powerless among us to live better lives. More often than not over the decades our Republican opponents have stood in opposition to our attempts to create better opportunities for the aged, the sick, the poor and the disheartened. Yet, who will deny that for all our material prosperity as a nation, matters are not well with our national spirit. The blame for which must lie in large part at our door.

Unintended consequences overwhelm many of our hard-won programs and policies. Take public education. Did we intend to create white flight to the suburbs? Or Aid for Dependent Children? Did we intend to create a significant upward trend in babies born to single, unwed mothers? Or welfare in general? Did we intend to create a new underclass of multiple generations of the poor? Take our current legal structure. Did we intend to become a nation in denial of personal responsibility running at first chance to the courthouse? Of course not. But we did. Consequences we never intended grip our nation's collective throats and spirits.

As a ruling political coalition, we have been hurt by defections to the Republicans. But what has really hurt both us, the Republicans and our nation are the multitude of our fellow citizens who despairing of self-government have ceased participation in our political life. Voter turnout is not the whole story. Far more people turn out to vote than the few, very few, who choose to participate in the ongoing political process. While on the Midland School Board, I participated in dozens of called community meetings. We often saw the same few dozen people over and over again.

Citizens, we can all act to reverse the negative decay of our civic life. Remember who we are. Recapture a vision for effective self-government. Re-engage in daily political life. Voting in elections while important will not turn the tide. Start here. In Midland, Texas. Resolve that local government will work and work well because you will play a role in making it so. Take part. You've vacationed enough.

As for Midland Democrats, we must set aside pride, admit the unintended consequences of our past programs at all levels of governance and take action to change what is. Recent news reports say many Texans consider themselves moderates. Well, there is a place in the Democratic Party for moderates. We once were a CENTER-left coalition. We can be so again. Also, Democrats, Clinton needs to hear from us. Write him and remind him he ran as a New Democrat. Now that health care has stumbled, tell Bill that to save his presidency he must accomplish the transformation of welfare into workfare. The permanent welfare-dependent underclass is our gravest unintended consequence. We caused it, and we must find the political will to change it. With luck, the Republicans will help us as Americans of all political stripes believe in the dignity of work.

Un-aligned Texas Moderates: Our Democratic Party welcome mat is out. Roll up your sleeves and sign on. We need you. Our community, state, and nation need us all.

Club to conduct beginners' square dance lessons

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

If you like dancing and good fellowship, the High Sky Square and Round Dance Club is looking for you.

The club starts beginners' square dance lessons at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the M-Squarena, West County Road 130. The lessons will continue each Tuesday through next spring.

"We usually start incorporating actual dances into the lessons about Christmas, depending on how far along the dancers are," said Debra Parker, the club's vice president. "That way, they are actually dancing."

The first two lessons are free. After that, lessons are $2.50 a person.

Ms. Parker said to join the club, annual fees are $12 a person or $24 a couple.

Originally there were four square dance clubs — the Sash-A-Ways, with 100 members, the M-Squares with 50 members, the 21-member Grand Squares and the Plus-Busters — that combined in 1986 and became The High Sky Squares.

The new club first met on Dec. 21, 1986, at M-Squarena. David Davis was selected as the club's caller.

The first dance was the "Winterfest" held on Jan. 17, 1987. Carol and Harold Franklin were elected as the club's cuers.

The club then became known as the High Sky Square and Round Dance Club.

Davis and the Franklins still call and cue the club's dances.

"Calling" is the instructions given to the squares of eight people who are dancing. "Cueing" is similar to calling, but is used in round dancing, which involves only two people.

The club currently has 119 active members — 41 couples, 31 singles, four teen-agers and two pre-teens.

"We have an 8-year-old who is really good and I think our oldest members is 80," Ms. Parker said. "Overall, it's mostly middle-aged" dancers.

The reasons for joining the club range from exercise to meeting other people.

"Personally, I love the fellowship I have with the other people," Ms. Parker said. "It is warm, friendly fellowship with people.

"Plus, it is good exercise and it's a great way to meet people. Square dance people are the best people in the world. They just accept you just the way you are."

For more information, call Ms. Parker at 684-3975.

Letter from WWII gives look at man's historic experience

By Brad Kellar
Greenville Herald-Banner

GREENVILLE — The envelope and its letter have yellowed over the years and the Air Mail stamp and cancellation marks, while faded, are still readable.

Inside is a brief letter home from a serviceman stationed in Tokyo. The cancel mark on the envelope reads "Sept. 8, 1945," six days after the Japanese surrender that ended World War II.

Greenville resident Kenneth Smith wrote the letter, which he found recently while going through some of his personal effects. It begins with the usual apologies for not having written sooner, and gives thanks for a package sent from home, Shreveport, La., in May of that year, even though it apparently hadn't made it through without getting wet.

In all, the first page is filled with fairly routine matters, hardly the type of letter one might expect from someone who had been at the site of one of the great milestones of world history.

"I don't feel like I'm part of history," Smith said. "If they had three more like me we would have lost the war. I was the original snafu. But you have a tendency to forget all the bad stuff and remember the stuff you can laugh at."

His philosophy is evident in the letter itself, which seems to have been written more to comfort a worried family than to describe the situation Smith found himself in at the time.

"The first page is just a kid talking to his mother," Smith said. "The second page is telling her about the surrender and everything." Actually, the "surrender and everything" is only mentioned in one paragraph of the letter:

"I guess we made a little history Sept. 2, didn't we. I was on hand in Tokyo Bay when they signed the papers, and this ship was the first American ship to unload in Japan."

The 68-year-old Smith was serving aboard the A.K.A. A71 landing craft in the convoy that was to take part in a possible invasion of Japan. Instead Smith and his shipmates found themselves among the first Allied craft to enter Tokyo at the time of the surrender.

"We had ships all over the Pacific, and they were just kicking the devil out of us," Smith recalled. Allied bombers conducted constant bombing missions on the Japanese mainland throughout July 1945, to convince the Japanese an invasion was about to take place.

Instead came the dropping of the atomic bombs on Hiroshima on Aug. 6 and Nagasaki on Aug. 9, setting in motion the events that led to the signing of the declaration of surrender aboard the U.S.S. Missouri on Sept. 2.

Smith said the crew of his ship was relieved when they heard of the bombings, as they feared the possibilities of having to approach the Japanese mainland while the conflict still raged.

"Because we had to go about 17 miles through the channels, caves and gun embankments going into Yokohama Bay," Smith explains.

"They started three days ahead of time broadcasting, to several towns and several cities in advance, telling them to evacuate, and that they were going to drop it on them," Smith said. "And it was coming over our public address system on board ship. But they were trying to get all the citizens of these cities, there were five or six of them, to evacuate, and they were all big towns."

ARMED FORCES NEWS

Marine Cpl. Robert Pessia Jr., son of Robert and Joan Pessia of Monahans, has returned home after five weeks at sea, patrolling the waters off the coast of Haiti in support of Operation Support Democracy.

Pessia

Pessia is onboard USS Inchon, an amphibious assault ship homeported in Norfolk, Va.

Ressia and the rest of the crew were part of a four-ship amphibious ready group of 2,000 Marines and 3,000 Navy men and women assigned to enforce the United Nations Security Council sanctions aimed at restoring democracy in Haiti.

The sailors and Marines departed Norfolk and Morehead City, N.C., more than a month ago.

Pessia is an anti-tank gunner onboard Inchon. The mission of the ship is to transport Marine assault forces and put them ashore.

The four-ship amphibious ready group has been relieved by USS Wasp, an amphibious assault ship and USS Nashville, an amphibious dock-landing ship. An 1,800-man special Marine task force is onboard the two ships. Both ships are homeported in Norfolk.

U.T. at Austin offers environmental issues courses in master's business program

Staff Report

AUSTIN — As the greening of America takes root, a new crop of environmental classes are sprouting up in the University of Texas at Austin's master of business administration program.

Sponsored by the Management Institute for Environment and Business (MEB) in Washington, D.C., U.T. is offering programs on environment and natural resource issues.

Courses will include environmental dispute resolution and environmental regulation of business.

"Increasing numbers of corporations understand that the environment is an intrinsic part of business activity, from product design to marketing and disposal," said MEB President Matthew Arnold.

"In many cases, companies can reduce waste, lower manufacturing and regulatory compliance costs, achieve higher quality products, reduce litigation and increase customer loyalty."

However, he noted, until recently, environmental issues had not played a significant role in business education.

Chris Stinson, an assistant professor of accounting at U.T., said the university offered internships with the Natural Resource Conservation Commission this past summer.

"The internships provided ways to see which regulations and costs firms face in this area and what they should be doing," he said.

"And students work with companies on class projects," said Stinson, program coordinator for the new MBA environmental concentration.

Students can also learn about environmental troubleshooting, environmental management and environmental considerations in marketing strategy.

U.T. Austin is one of a coalition of 25 graduate schools of business participating in the MEB program.

Agency cancels food distribution this month

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The usual monthly distribution of supplemental USDA food rations to more than 400 low-income Midland families will not be carried out in September.

"We should have it for October," said Cheryl Moseley, director of West Texas Opportunities Neighborhood Center, which distributes the food.

A U.S. Department of Agriculture cutback has canceled this month's supplemental food supply to Midland-area communities.

Normally, a variety of food is distributed through West Texas Opportunities from the Texas National Guard Armory in Midland on the second Wednesday of each month.

"It's more or less a supplemental food source," Ms. Moseley said. "It's not their primary food source (although) a lot people depend on it."

Many of the people who participate in the program already receive food stamps.

Last month, food distributed to families included five one-pound bags of dried pinto beans, five cans of peaches, three one-pound blocks of butter and two cans of refried beans.

"Every month, we don't give the same items," Ms. Moseley said. "Whatever they ship us is what we give out."

Cheese is no longer on the distribution list. "Our clients sure would like to have some of it," she said.

The Odessa Neighborhood Center will distribute this month because it has an "abundance" of supplies, she said.

Vicario fights back for title

■ Twenty-two year old Arantxa Sanchez Vicario comes back from a 1-6 first-set defeat to win her first U.S. Open.

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

NEW YORK — Arantxa Sanchez Vicario's obsession to become No. 1, a yearning that led her to a sports psychologist and a new trainer six months ago, paid off Saturday in a stunning triumph of will over Steffi Graf for the U.S. Open championship.

In a women's final that ranked among the best of the Open era, Sanchez Vicario repeatedly showed a refusal to lose even when shots seemed far out of her reach.

That never was more evident than in the last game when she earned one of three match points, sprinting diagonally across the court in a desperate chase for Graf's dying drop volley. Lunging at the last moment, Sanchez Vicario scooped up the ball as her racket scraped the ground and lofted a backhand lob over Graf's head into the corner.

It was that kind of effort, more than the sudden flare-up of Graf's sore back in the middle of the second set, that enabled Sanchez Vicario to turn a rout into a classic comeback and a 1-6, 7-6 (7-3), 6-4 victory for her first U.S. Open title.

Sanchez Vicario, 22, who won her second French Open title in June, earned $550,000 for the victory, giving her more than $7.3 million in career earnings. Graf, 25, picked up $275,000 to put her total prize money at $14.6 million.

The U.S. Open title proved that Sanchez Vicario is not just a clay court player and won't necessarily stay No. 2 behind Graf for long.

"I won two Grand Slams and I have been so consistent, I can probably be (called) the best player of the year," Sanchez Vicario said. "Steffi is still a great player, a great champion, and she is still No. 1 by the computer rankings ...

"I don't know who is the best player, but I am very proud of what I did. Now, I can say to everybody that I can also win on hardcourts."

In the men's semifinals, Andre Agassi beat Todd Martin 6-3, 4-6, 6-2, 6-3 to set up a title match Sunday against Michael Stich, a 7-5, 6-3, 7-6 (7-4) win-

A&M avenges Sooner loss

■ A year after getting blown out by Oklahoma, Texas A&M returns the favor against the No. 15 Sooners.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

COLLEGE STATION — What went on between Oklahoma and Texas A&M last year came back like a boomerang against the Sooners.

Corey Pullig threw two touchdown passes and Rodney Thomas scored twice Saturday as No. 16 Texas A&M avenged last year's 30-point blowout by Oklahoma with a 36-14 victory over the 15th-ranked Sooners.

"This is the same thing that happened to us last year," said A&M defensive back Ray Mickens. "We waited a whole year for this and we let it all out. It's a great feeling."

A&M coach R.C. Slocum said it was a big-time payback.

"Revenge is a bad emotion, but respect is a much more positive emotion and we had respect for Oklahoma because they beat us convincingly last year," Slocum said. "I think we have just scratched the surface with this team on how good we can be."

The Aggies had three sacks, three interceptions and recovered two Oklahoma fumbles.

"What happened to us in the fourth quarter is what happened to A&M last year," Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs said. "What looked like an exciting finish ended up in a blowout. Their defense dominated us. They are very fast."

The Aggies (2-0), who lost to Oklahoma 44-14 in Norman last year, had been pointing to the rematch against the Sooners (1-1), who beat Syracuse 30-29 last week.

"Texas A&M puts a lot of pressure on you and we cracked under it," Oklahoma center Chuck Langston said. "They have a great defensive scheme. You can't take anything away from them. We made a lot of mistakes but they caused a lot of them."

The Aggies defense has only five returning starters and a new coordinator in Tommy Tuberville. Yet they didn't miss a beat as A&M won its 21st straight game at home before a non-conference record crowd of 72,577 in Kyle Field.

"I was amazed how we stopped their running game with only 85 yards," Tuberville said. "This game was for Slocum after what happened last year."

The Sooners stopped A&M's vaunted running game, but Pullig threw TD passes of 12 and 2 yards to keep the Big Eight Conference foe off balance. By the fourth period, the Aggies of the Southwest Conference pulled away.

"I thought we were fired up for Oklahoma because we had things to settle," Pullig said. "We had too good a team to lose like we did."

Pullig, a junior, had one of his best collegiate games as he threw for 191 yards on 17-of-30 passing. He was not intercepted.

AUSTIN — It took a week, but 20th-ranked Texas has found its defense.

After giving up 489 yards — including 251 to one running back — in a season-opening victory against Pittsburgh, the Longhorns figured out how to stop the run and defeated Louisville 30-16 Saturday.

Texas, a once-powerful program that has struggled over the past decade, is 2-0 for the first time since 1985.

"Last week, we came out nervous and tense and didn't play up to our potential," UT linebacker Kevin Watler said. "This week, we knew we had to come out and show what we were capa-

Momentum, win go to Dawgs

■ Midland High takes an emotion-filled District 4-5A volleyball opener over Midland Lee.

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

Midland High and Midland Lee picked up where they left off last October — in a volleyball match ruled by emotion and momentum.

This time, however, the momentum swung toward the Lady Dawgs as they regained their composure from a loss in the first game and came back to defeat the visiting Lady Rebels 10-15, 15-13, 15-9 Saturday in the Midland High gym.

It was the District 4-5A opener for both teams. Midland Lee, which won both matches against MHS last year, fell to 4-8 for the season while the Lady Dawgs improved to 10-6.

Momentum, as is often the case in volleyball, ruled the outcome of the match Saturday.

MHS coach Terri McColloch said it was the way the Lady Dawgs regained their composure in the second game that eventually turned the match their way.

"They were playing very nervous in the first game,"

Michigan beats clock, kicks ND with field goal

By Rick Warner
AP Football Writer

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — There was another miracle comeback under the Golden Dome on Saturday. Only this time, Notre Dame was the victim instead of the victor.

Remy Hamilton kicked four field goals, including a 42-yarder with 2 seconds left, to give sixth-ranked Michigan a 26-24 victory over No. 3 Notre Dame in a sensational seesaw game.

"Every kicker thinks about making a winning field goal," said Hamilton, a redshirt sophomore from Boca Raton, Fla., who had attempted only one field goal in his career prior to Saturday. "I'm a hero now. I could be a goat next week."

Cowboys-Oilers rivalry is emotionally one-sided

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The rivalry between the Houston Oilers and the Dallas Cowboys is one-sided emotionally. A victory over the Cowboys can make the Oilers' season. The Cowboys win one and forget it.

"We get excited playing them because they are so successful," said Houston quarterback Cody Carlson. "It's a big challenge."

The two teams, who have training camps within an hour's drive of each other, scrimmage against each other and play an annual preseason game against each other, meet in a rare regular-season game Sunday in Texas Stadium. The Cowboys are 15-point favorites.

"We have a great geographic rivalry," said Houston coach Jack Pardee. "It's special when we play against each other."

In fact, Dallas coach Barry Switzer said he thought Houston was looking ahead to the Cowboys when it took a 45-21 whipping from the Indianapolis Colts last week.

"It would be a natural tendency for Houston to look ahead to us," said Switzer. "I've been guilty of it. I've seen teams practice for one game when they were thinking about another opponent. It happened when we had Nebraska coming up while I was at Oklahoma."

Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman thought so, too.

"Maybe they were looking forward to us, because it didn't look like the real Houston last week," Aikman said. "For us, it basically is just another game in the 16 we have to play."

Dallas owner Jerry Jones said he takes delight that when the Cowboys play the Oilers in preseason, even in the Astrodome, "most of the fans are for the Cowboys. It's a legitimate rivalry."

The Cowboys come into the game off a 26-9 victory over the Pittsburgh Steelers where the defense produced nine sacks, including four by Charles Haley.

The Oilers have problems at quarterback, where Cody Carlson is nursing a bruised left shoulder and backup Bucky Richardson is inexperienced. Pardee said it could be kickoff time before he picks a starter.

Pardee, 7-0 against Dallas, including six preseason games, said he doesn't get awed by the Cowboys' talent.

"They've never gone through a season undefeated yet," Pardee said. "Just like anybody, they can be beat."

Dallas leads Houston 4-3 in the regular season, but the Oilers have won the last two regular-season matchups, dating back to 1988. Houston beat Dallas 26-23 in overtime in 1991 after Emmitt Smith lost a fumble to set up the winning points.

"I'm not sure why we always play well against Dallas," Pardee said. "There's no magic. We just make the key plays in the close games. We match up with their players well."

Dallas lost 6-0 to Houston on a muddy field in Mexico during the preseason.

Cowboys re-sign back Coleman

IRVING (AP) — Running back Lincoln Coleman's on again-off again career with the Dallas Cowboys is on again.

The two-time NFL champions said Saturday they signed the weight-troubled Coleman to a two-year contract on Friday, three days after they cut him.

Coleman becomes the No. 4 running back on the Cowboys, behind league MVP Emmitt Smith, fullback Daryl Johnston and Tommie Agee.

The Cowboys signed free agent Lindsay Chapman on Tuesday, but cut him when he was deemed not ready to step into action. Coleman then signed a two-year deal worth $135,000 this season and $162,000 in 1995, officials said.

"I think he'll be here for a while," Cowboys vice president Stephen Jones said.

Coleman, a former Dallas high school star and Arena Football League player, gained notoriety last season when he ran for 57 yards against Miami

GIRLS: Pritchett leads way

(From 1C)

McColloch said. "They were playing not to lose instead of playing to win. But they did a great job of regaining their composure and hanging in there."

In the second game, backline defensive specialist Sara Pritchett served the Lady Dawgs to a 7-0 lead with pinpoint accuracy that kept Lee on its toes.

"She's a good defensive player," McColloch said. "She got us off to that good lead. But like I told you earlier, this team is so equal, all nine of the players had a hand in helping the team calm down. If you noticed, I used a different starting lineup in all three games."

The Lady Rebels rebounded from the quick MHS start in the second and pulled to a 9-9 tie behind the serving of Emily Hayes and Kasey Wolters. They took the lead at 13-9 with a service ace by Roseann Sullivan before Pritchett served back to tie the game at 13-13 and MHS went on to even the match.

For the Lady Dawgs to stop Lee, a big second game was needed. The Lady Rebels came out in the opening game with a crisp offense, run by setter Roseann Sullivan, and looked like they had not missed a beat since finishing second in district last year.

"Roseann Sullivan played brilliantly," Lee coach Anita Corder said. "She ran a beautiful show."

Lee jumped to a 4-0 lead in the first game and held on, with kills from Wolters and Amber Willis, to win the opener. That's when the Lady Rebels let down, Corder said.

"We relaxed in the second game," Corder said. "Everything was flowing very well for us. But as you know, in volleyball, everything happens so quickly. We let them get a little life and they were able to come back. (The match) was well-played by both teams."

With the momentum behind them in the third game, the Lady Dawgs held the lead all but one time, a 4-4 tie, and never trailed. MHS got two huge kills by Jamee Stennett and Deshawn Berry for crucial sideouts to end Lee runs.

"To win the first district game, especially in a rivalry, is a big boost," McColloch said. "I think they thought they could do it (beat Lee) but this will go a long way in showing these girls they can have a successful year."

Corder said her team will be able to rebound from the loss.

"Our team is very talented," Corder said. "They just have to decide if they want to be the team that played in game one or if they want to be the team that played in the other two games."

Midland High travels to Abilene Cooper Tuesday at while Lee hosts Abilene High. Both games begin at 7:30 p.m.

Montana faces ex-teammates for first time

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

He acknowledges he left his heart in San Francisco.

He also acknowledges that his head, his arm and the rest of his body are in Kansas City.

That's just so everyone knows Joe Montana will give nothing but his best Sunday when he faces the team he led to four Super Bowl wins for the first time since the 49ers traded him to the Chiefs after the 1992 season.

"I'm sure I'm going to be excited and nervous," he said. "All the people back home will be watching, and so will everyone else."

There are, of course, several subplots, including Montana vs. Steve Young, his least-favorite left-handed quarterback and the man who effectively ran him out of San Francisco. Young is not held in the same regard as Montana, even in the Bay Area; although he's won an MVP and three passing titles, he has lost two NFC title games.

Montana also faces Jerry Rice, his favorite receiver, whose three touchdowns Monday night gave him an NFL career record of 127. Fifty-five of those TDs came on passes from Montana, and 49 came from Young.

"It brings back a lot of memories to me," Rice said. "But one thing I never told Joe: I never told Joe he was the greatest to ever play the game."

In the Chiefs' 30-17 win at New Orleans last Sunday, Montana was in his mid-1980s form. He hit 24-of-33 passes for 315 yards and two touchdowns. Monday night, Young was 19-of-32 for 308 yards and four TDs in a 44-14 rout of the Los Angeles Raiders.

Two of Young's touchdowns went to Rice, including the 38-yarder that broke the record.

New York Giants (1-0) at Arizona (0-1) (Sunday night)

The Cardinals' 14-12 loss to the Rams at Anaheim last week makes this a critical game for them, even this early. An 0-2 start with a home loss on national television would destroy much of the credibility that Buddy Ryan brought to Bill Bidwill's operation in the desert.

"I think we have a great chance to beat the Giants," Ryan said. "We're as good as they are."

Actually, the Cardinals were supposed to be better. Ryan used to beat better New York teams with less-talented Eagles clubs.

But Giants coach Dan Reeves has squeezed a lot from youngsters and he's spent the week working on the blitzes that Ryan is sure to throw at inexperienced quarterback Dave Brown.

Buffalo (0-1) at New England (0-1)

Another second-week game with more than routine importance.

The Bills were inept last week in a 23-3 loss at home to the Jets, especially Thurman Thomas, who had only 5 yards on 7 carries. That raised the question: Is the nucleus that took the Bills to four straight Super Bowls finally on the collective downside?

Jim Kelly's reply: "It's just one game. If we were 0-7, I'd worry."

How about 0-2?

Bill Parcells' Patriots lost 39-35 at Miami last week, a loss Mr. Defense might have taken better had it been, say, 9-5. As in Arizona, the expectations in New England have been heightened immensely, and an 0-2 start, even with Drew Bledsoe's early heroics, would cost some credibility.

■ This Week in the NFL

Detroit (1-0) at Minnesota (0-1)

Yet a third important game for the home team. A loss would leave the Vikings 0-2 against the two teams that figure to challenge them in the NFC Central title.

Last week, Minnesota lost 16-10 at Green Bay, the offense didn't score a touchdown, and Warren Moon had three passes intercepted, two that bounced off the hands of receivers.

"They'll get another chance, but only one," Dennis Green said of the young culprits, Qadry Ismail and Jake Reed, who between them dropped a half-dozen Moon balls.

Miami (1-0) vs. Green Bay (1-0) at Milwaukee

These are playoff-bound teams that need to take another step.

Miami showed offense last week, with Dan Marino throwing for 473 yards and five TDs. Green Bay showed defense, holding Minnesota to 194 total yards and shutting down Warren Moon.

"I hope Dan's arm got tired last week," Green Bay coach Mike Holmgren said..

Brett Favre, who led the league last year with 24 interception throws, is learning to throw the ball away, but the same offensive problems remain for the Packers. They have little running and no real receiving alternative to Sterling Sharpe.

Denver (0-1) at New York Jets (1-0)

A funny thing happened to John Elway in Denver's 37-34 loss to San Diego. He couldn't close. About to score at the end of the first half, he had an interception returned 99 yards for a touchdown, then fumbled the ball away on a potential game-winning drive at the end.

Moreover, the Broncos' questionable defense is banged up. Which means that their best hope is the offense and the Jets' history — after a win like the one they had at Buffalo in Pete Carroll's debut, they tend to let down, particularly at home.

Houston (0-1) at Dallas (1-0)

Barry Switzer's getting a chance to mouth the same cliches he used to utter when his Oklahoma teams were 70-point favorites over Kansas Northern or Iowa Southern: "On any given day ..."

That could be true if the Oilers' 45-21 loss last week at Indianapolis was just one of those things. But it doesn't help that Cody Carlson was hurt and that Bucky Richardson might start this week, although Richardson did well enough in garbage time last week.

The Cowboys looked no different under Switzer than they did under Jimmy Johnson in their 26-9 win at Pittsburgh last week. So much for exhibitions.

Pittsburgh (0-1) at Cleveland (1-0)

The bad news for the Steelers is that they've won only one of the last 12 games they've played on the lakefront. The good news is the law of averages and the fact they started 0-2 last season and still made the playoffs.

Bill Belichick used to be a defensive coordinator and a special teams coach, which is a reason the Browns beat the Bengals last week. They used a punt return by Eric Metcalf and a kickoff return by Randy Baldwin for touchdowns; a surprise two-point conversion, and an end-zone interception by Antonio Langham, the No. 1 draft choice.

Chicago (1-0) at Philadelphia (0-1), Monday night

The Eagles went into the Meadowlands still thinking about the pay cuts some of them were forced to take, fell behind the Giants 21-3 and never recovered. Randall Cunningham threw for 344 yards but was sacked five times and seemed tentative in his first real game back from last year's broken leg.

So look out for the Philadelphia boo-birds if the Bears get off quickly Monday night. Erik Kramer gave Chicago the semblance of an offense against Tampa Bay last week.

On the other hand, what did it prove to beat the Bucs at home?

Indianapolis (1-0) at Tampa Bay (0-1)

The last time the Colts started 2-0 was 1977, seven years before they moved from Baltimore to Indianapolis. They didn't have Marshall Faulk then, nor Jim Harbaugh, who has less athletic ability than Jeff George but is a far more positive presence in the huddle and locker room.

For the Bucs, it's one down and nine to go for the 12th straight season of double-digit losses. Jimmy Johnson is in the wings for Sam Wyche and Trent Dilfer for Craig Erickson, but Wyche and Erickson can't really be blamed for all the team's blown draft choices and misfortunes.

Seattle (1-0) at Los Angeles Raiders (0-1)

Where is Bo Jackson, who had such a great game against the Seahawks seven years ago? Or Marcus Allen? The fact is the Raiders' Super Bowl hopes looked very overblown Monday night without a running game to go with Jeff Hostetler and his track team.

Now they try to run against a good front led by Cortez Kennedy. This game could answer some questions about the Seahawks that the 28-7 win at Washington didn't. Are they building nicely or did they just beat a bad team on a bad team's bad day?

Cincinnati (0-1) at San Diego (1-0)

Both these teams felt positive after last week. The difference, of course, was that the Chargers won. "That's not what would have happened in the past," Chris Mims said after San Diego rallied from a 17-0 deficit, held off John Elway at the end, and beat the Broncos 37-34 at Denver.

The Bengals felt good because they almost beat the Browns after trailing by 18 points. But inexperience at quarterback persists. David Klingler threw an end zone interception in the final two minutes on a ball he should have thrown into the seats.

Los Angeles Rams (1-0) at Atlanta (0-1)

New coach, same old problems for the Falcons, who thought they had harmony after June Jones succeeded Jerry Glanville. After the overtime loss at Detroit last week, newly acquired Chris Doleman groused that he didn't want to play for a loser ("6-10, 0-16, whatever," he said) and Andre Rison "guaranteed" a win this week without knowing the opponent.

The Rams didn't exactly sparkle against the Cardinals, but they won. "It's amazing how good that can make you feel," said Chuck Knox, who hasn't had many wins since arriving in Anaheim for his second tour of duty.

Washington (0-1) at New Orleans (0-1)

Jim Mora thought he still had a defense despite the loss of many of the stalwarts of the past eight years. But Joe Montana picked apart his young unit, leaving Mora only hoping that he has guys out there who can stop someone.

The Redskins' Norv Turner may be taking a page from Jimmy Johnson, who ran a revolving door in his first year at Dallas, went 1-15, but built the base of a two-time Super Bowl winner. Heath Shuler gets his first start at quarterback on the theory that you've nothing to lose but a game if you throw the kid in now.

McCumber leading Price by one stroke

Associated Press

OAKVILLE, Ontario — Mark McCumber shot a 5-under-par 67 to take a one-stroke lead Saturday over desperately scrambling Nick Price in the third round of the Bell Canadian Open.

"Really an up and down round for me today," said Price, who has won five tournaments this year. "It's not the way I've been accustomed to playing over the last 2½ years."

Price then ticked off his various adventures on the Glen Abbey course: Two shots that hit trees, two balls in the water, four bogeys, one of which was saved on a 20-foot putt.

But he also made eight birdies and escaped with a 68 that left him one back of McCumber's leading 54-hole total of 206.

Steve Stricker, who shot 69, and Tom Lehman, with a 70, were next at 208.

They were followed by Rick Fehr, Glen Day, Mark Calcavecchia and South Africa's Fulton Allem. Day, Calcavecchia and Allem each shot 71 and Fehr moved up with a 67.

Dan Halldorson, seeking to become the first Canadian in 40 years to win his own national championship, shot 69 and was in a group at 210.

"Tomorrow will be a very difficult day for me," he said, adding that being the Canadian standard-bearer places great pressure on him.

And he made it abundently clear that Canadian expectations are for him to win, not just be the leading native player.

"Being low Canadian," he said "is like being the tallest midget."

McCumber, 43, who broke a five-year non-winning string with a victory in the Anheuser-Busch Classic earlier this season, played without a bogey as he took the lead.

■ Golf Roundup

"It will be fun tomorrow. It's always fun to play with Nick. He's a gentleman and right now he's the best player in the world," McCumber said.

"If the wind blows, we'll be hanging on. If the wind doesn't blow, it'll be a shootout."

And he's hardly overwhelmed by Price's current stature in the game. "Not after 16, 18 years out here," McCumber said.

Price, however, did not have the same game that produced victories in the PGA, the British Open and three PGA Tour events this year.

Quicksilver Classic

MIDWAY, Pa. — Dave Eichelberger, taking advantage of a hot putter and a little luck, shot a 5-under-par 67 to take a one-stroke lead over Graham Marsh after the second round of the Quicksilver Classic.

"I hit the ball pretty good and I putted extremely well," said Eichelberger, who had a 6-under 138 total on the Quicksilver Golf Club course.

"Three months ago, I was driving the ball out of bounds at least twice a round. I'm still going back and forth, but now I still leave myself a shot. As long as you keep the ball inside the tree lines, you are in good shape,"

He lined one off a tree on No. 15, but salvaged a par when the ball bounced out of trouble. On No. 18, his approach was headed for a bunker but skipped off a grassy mound and stopped 10 feet from the hole to set up a birdie.

Marsh, who made a 30-foot birdie putt on No. 4, had a bogey-free 68.

"When you don't have a bogey, that sure makes life a lot easier," the Australian said.

Miller Barber was two back at 140 after a 68 and J.C. Snead (69), Dave Stockton (70), Jim Albus (71), Jim Colbert (72), Bob Dickson (72) and Raymond Floyd (72) followed at 141.

"I hit my irons like I used to hit them years ago," the 63-year-old Barber said. "I said to myself, 'My gosh, where have you been all these years?'"

First-round leader Ben Smith fell out of contention, following his opening 68 with an 81.

The Quicksilver Country Club is seven miles from where USAir Flight 427 crashed Thursday, killing 132 people.

Ping-Cellular One

PORTLAND, Ore. — Val Skinner held a one-stroke lead over four others when play was suspended by darkness in the rain-interrupted LPGA Ping-Cellular One Championship.

Skinner, who shot a 5-under-par 67 in the opening round, completed nine holes at even par before she was forced to stop because of darkness.

Only 68 of 138 golfers finished the second round, which was delayed four hours by rain. The second round was to be completed early Sunday morning, with the final round to follow.

Four players who finished their rounds — Elaine Crosby, Allison Finney, Ellie Gibson and Rosie Jones — were at 4-under-par through 36 holes at the par-72, 6,319-yard Columbia Edgewater Country Club.

Skinner had finished only two holes Saturday when play was stopped by rain. She said the break threw off her concentration.

Labonte tackles rain-delayed race

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Not even the fastest pit crew in the business could stop Terry Labonte from winning Saturday night's Miller Genuine Draft 400.

Labonte overwhelmed the field and overcame a superb late-race pit stop by Rusty Wallace to win the rain-delayed event at Richmond International Raceway.

Labonte was leading when both drivers had to pit under green for fuel and tires with less than 60 laps left. Wallace's pit crew, widely regarded as the top unit on the Winston Cup circuit, got him out in 16.6 seconds, compared to 21.1 seconds for Labonte.

But Labonte chased down Wallace, shot past him on lap 373 and was unchallenged the rest of the way. He finished 1.79 seconds ahead of teammate Jeff Gordon.

Winston Cup points leader Dale Earnhardt overtook Wallace with two laps left and wound up third. Wallace, who was seeking his third consecutive victory under the lights on Richmond's .75-mile layout, held on for fourth and Ricky Rudd was fifth.

■ Miller GD 400

It was Labonte's second victory this year and the 12th of his career, but his first in 33 starts at Richmond. It also marked the fifth time in a seven-race span that Labonte, in his first year driving for Rick Hendrick, finished in the top 10.

Earnhardt added five points to his lead in the season driver standings and now has a 232-point edge over Wallace with seven events left.

The race represented a setback for Hoosier tires, which had been making solid gains recently in the company's bid to challenge Goodyear's longtime dominance on stock car racing's top circuit.

Blistering problems kept the seven drivers on Hoosiers from being competitive in long green-flag stretches, making the runs at the front of the pack Goodyear-only affairs.

Labonte, Wallace and Earnhardt kept the lead almost all to themselves over the last 200 laps.

Tracy takes pole again

ELKHART LAKE, Wis. (AP) — Paul Tracy topped a record-breaking qualifying session Saturday, taking the pole position for the Texaco-Havoline 200 for the third straight year.

Tracy, a 25-year-old Canadian, buried the track qualifying record set Friday by series point leader Al Unser Jr. with his lap of 136.602 mph.

Unser can clinch his second Indy-car PPG Cup championship Sunday by finishing fifth or better, no matter what runner-up Emerson Fittipaldi does. Unser fell from first to fourth Saturday despite improving from 134.948 to 135.598 during the final 30-minute session.

"The car was good, but it wasn't quite as good as we wanted it to be," Unser said. "But we'll be ready to race. We won't hold anything back. If you try to be too conservative, you usually wind up doing something wrong."

Jacques Villeneuve, the 23-year-old son of late Formula One star Gilles Villeneuve, made it an all-Canadian front row on the final lap of the session with a lap of 135.864.

Nigel Mansell, the defending series champion, slipped from second to third at 135.829.

A&M: Pullig has hot hand

(From 1C)

"It was the best game I've seen Corey play," said new offensive coordinator Steve Ensminger. "He threw the ball to the right spot every time."

With Oklahoma trailing by a touchdown, James Allen fumbled to A&M's Larry Brown at the Sooners 8. Three plays later, Pullig hit tight end James McKeehan with a 2-yard TD pass with 5:13 to go.

Another Sooners fumble led to a 26-yard field goal by Kyle Bryant, his third of the day.

Then Ray Mickens intercepted Garrick McGee's pass and returned it 38 yards for a touchdown to the delight of the Aggies who had seen the Sooners run up the score last year.

"I think we proved a point in this game," said A&M linebacker Antonio Armstrong. "This proves we're a national power."

McGee said the Sooners were out of sync all day.

"We started off slow and had to play catchup," McGee said. "They are a good, solid team. And we didn't play well."

Thomas scored his second TD on a 1-yard run to give the Aggies a 19-7 lead midway through the third quarter.

HORNS: Defense produces

ble of."

The defense produced three interceptions, including one for a touchdown, and had four sacks to keep the Longhorns alive while the offense and special teams struggled through three first-half turnovers against Louisville.

The Cardinals (0-2) turned two of the miscues into 10 points as they took a 16-9 lead at halftime.

But Louisville, which appeared formidable after an 18-play, 77-yard drive in the first quarter filled with gutsy third- and fourth-down play calling, was shut out in the second half.

The Longhorns hounded Cardinals star running back Anthony Shelman, holding him to just 27 yards, and UT spent much of the second half in the backfield pressuring quarterback Marty Lowe.

"We didn't protect the quarterback the way we should have," Louisville coach Howard Schnellenberger said. "He was under a lot of duress most of the game."

One of the most vicious plays on Lowe was a sack by Thomas Baskin, who spun the quarterback and threw him down for a 13-yard loss. On the last play of the game, Lowe threw a fourth-down interception that Joey Ellis returned 49 yards for Texas' final points.

"They just really shut down the running game and took advantage of their opportunities," Lowe said.

The Texas offense followed the lead of the defense and got in gear in the second half after ditching the passing game in favor of a run-oriented attack led by Priest Holmes.

Holmes' zigzagged through the Cardinals for 127 yards, including a 1-yard touchdown with 8 seconds left in the third quarter that put Texas ahead for good 23-16.

Neither team could score in the fourth quarter until Lowe's final pass on fourth down was picked off by Ellis and returned for the final score.

Louisville broke a 6-6 tie in the second quarter after Tyrus McLoud intercepted a pass by Texas' Shea Morenz. Four plays later, Shelman scored on a 3-yard run and the Cardinals led 13-6.

Louisville made it 16-9 with 1:05 left on a 35-yard field goal by David Akers, set up when Texas' Mike Adams fumbled a punt at the Longhorns 17.

Texas tied the game at 16 in the third quarter with a bit of luck. Louisville's Terry Quinn tipped a pass by Morenz, but Curtis Jackson snagged the wobbling ball in the end zone to complete a 6-yard scoring play.

UCLA holds off SMU upset bid

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Sharmon Shah rushed for 158 yards and scored the go-ahead touchdown early in the fourth quarter Saturday as 13th-ranked UCLA struggled to a 17-10 victory over Southern Methodist.

Shah's 9-yard run with 12:17 left capped a 79-yard, nine-play drive, which came right after SMU tied the game.

Shah, who carried 24 times, also caught six passes for 52 yards.

The Mustangs had a first-and-goal at the UCLA 3 with 1:45 remaining, but two running plays lost a yard each before Donnie Edwards sacked Ramon Flanigan for an 11-yard loss. Edwards was credited with 4½ of UCLA's eight sacks.

After a delay-of-game penalty, Flanigan threw an incomplete pass, and UCLA then ran out the clock.

The Bruins (2-0), favored by more than three touchdowns, blew several scoring chances and had their hands full containing Flanigan, who completed 22-of-34 for a career-high 301 yards and his team's only touchdown with one interception.

UCLA played without All-America wide receiver J.J. Stokes, who sat out the game because of a bruised left thigh. Stokes is expected to return next Saturday when the Bruins face top-ranked Nebraska at Lincoln, Neb.

The Mustangs (0-2) tied the game 10-10 on an 18-yard touchdown pass from Flanigan to Mick Rossley — the son of SMU coach Tom Rossley — with 1:09 remaining in the third quarter.

Cajuns corner Cougars for home win

RUSTON, La. (AP) — Jason Cooper ran for 106 yards and Jason Armstrong rushed for 96 Saturday night in leading Louisiana Tech to a 32-7 victory over Houston.

Cooper's 25 carries included a 5-yard touchdown that staked Tech (1-1) to a 7-0 lead. He also caught a 39-yard touchdown pass from Jason Martin to expand Tech's lead to 20-0 after three periods.

It was the ninth time Cooper has rushed for 100 or more yards in his career.

Armstrong carried 16 times, running 9 yards for one touchdown as Tech ground out 234 yards rushing on 52 carries.

Marty Kent also kicked field goals 32, 18 and 42 yards and Steve Roberts contributed a safety for the Bulldogs.

Martin completed 13 of 19 passes for 167 yards as Tech gained 407 total yards, 237 in the second half. Tech's stingy defense, meanwhile, held Houston to 64 yards rushing on 24 carries and 141 yards passing.

Houston (0-2) didn't score until the fourth quarter, on Chuck Clements' 12-yards touchdown pass to Daniel Adams with 14:46 left in the game. The Cougars finished with just 64 rushing yards, 56 by Jermaine Williams on 11 carries.

Davis' 325 rushing steps pace TCU

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Andre Davis ran for 325 yards, including a school-record 87-yard touchdown, to lead Texas Christian to a 44-29 victory Saturday night over defensively generous New Mexico.

Davis, who scored four touchdowns last year against New Mexico in a 35-34 win by the Horned Frogs, again ran virtually at will against the Lobos. His 44-yard TD run with 10:03 left in the game drained a second-half New Mexico rally after the Lobos had gotten within 31-26 on Stoney Case's TD pass to Eric Young.

Case provided most of New Mexico's offense. He scored on a 4-yard run, connected with wide receiver Dean Gallegos on a 42-yard desperation pass as time ran out in the first half and hit Young with a screen pass for a score with 12:22 left in the fourth quarter.

Case completed 37-of-62 passes for 403 yards.

TCU's Koi Woods scored on runs of 1 and 6 yards and quarterback Max Knake threw touchdown passes of 29 yards to tight end Brian Collins and 62 yards to flanker Chris Brasfield.

New Mexico (0-2) again was riddled by a Southwest Conference offense. The Lobos, who gave up 467 yards to Texas Tech last week, surrendered 606 to the Horned Frogs (1-1).

The teams combined for 1,202 yards, with New Mexico getting 596.

TCU, with Davis picking up double-figure yardage on just about every carry, scored on its first four possessions and led 24-12 at halftime. By then, Davis had 176 yards.

Davis' 87-yard run got TCU out of a first-and-28 situation.

Late kick drops Rice, 15-13

HOUSTON (AP) — Bart Baldwin kicked a school record five field goals, including a 47-yard game-winner as time expired, rallying underdog Tulane to a 15-13 victory over slow-starting Rice on Saturday.

Baldwin, who missed four field goals against Southern Mississippi last season, provided all the offense Tulane needed to beat the Owls in Coach Ken Hatfield's first game as head coach.

Baldwin broke the record of four field goals in a game set by Dan Guirl against Louisville in 1986. He missed a chance at the record when he failed to convert a 45-yarder with 3:34 left to play.

But Tulane wouldn't quit. The Green Wave drove 42 yards in eight plays, spurred by a 12-yard third down pass from Craig Randell to Jerold Sowell to the Owl 39. Another pass to Derrick Franklin to the 30 set up the game winner.

Sowell fueled Tulane's (1-1) offense with his third straight 100-yard performance, the first runner to get three straight 100-yard performances since Mark Zeno in 1987. Sowell had 110 yards on 27 carries.

The Owls (0-1) thought they had put the upset behind them with 2:05 left to play when Josh LaRocca hit Ed Howard with a 47-yard touchdown pass that gave the Owls their first lead at 13-12.

A heavy rain that persisted through most of the first half slowed offenses for both teams and resulted in a 6-0 halftime lead for the Green Wave on field goals of 18 and 33 yards by Baldwin.

Baldwin's third field goal, a 29-yarder in the third quarter, extended the lead before Rice finally completed its first scoring drive with a 1-yard dive by Spencer George with 11:37 left in the game.

Baldwin kicked his 18-yarder in the first quarter after defensive tackle Joel Locker stepped in front of a LaRocca pass and returned it 40 yards to the Owl 21.

Tulane quarterback Craig Randall fumbled and Rice's Deric Rutherford recovered at the Owl 19 in the second quarter to kill a Tulane scoring drive, but the Green Wave settled for Baldwin's 33-yarder moments later.

After forcing Rice to punt, Tulane moved from its 45 to the Owls 16.

Baylor scores 35 in first during win

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Baylor shocked San Jose State with 35 first-quarter points and went on to a 54-20 win Saturday night, its second straight lopsided victory.

The Bears (2-0) scored through the air, on the ground, off interceptions and blocked punts and even a safety in defeating the Spartans (0-2), who endured another one-sided loss.

Baylor was coming off a 44-3 win over Louisiana Tech and the Spartans off a 45-13 loss to Fresno State.

Jeff Watson powered the Baylor attack, throwing for two touchdowns and running for one, and Kalief Muhammad added two scores.

The Bears only outgained San Jose State 381 yards to 324 but played more soundly, especially on defense, holding the Spartans to minus-22 yards rushing and intercepting four passes off Allie Abrew to overcome his 346-yard, three-touchdown passing effort.

The frustrated Spartans also committed 14 penalties for 134 yards. Three times, San Jose State was flagged for having 12 men on the field.

The game turned ugly for San Jose State in a hurry. After Baylor's opening possession ended in Jeff Watson's 13-yard scoring pass to John Stanley, Bears linebacker Tony Tubbs intercepted Abrew's first pass and Watson scored two plays later on a 20-yard run.

Baylor completed its five-touchdown first quarter on Muhammad's 6-yard run, Adrian Robinson's 24-yard interception return for a TD and Philip Kent's block of Joe Nedney's punt that was scooped up by Joe Manor.

Houston transfer leads Lions

■ West Texas A&M is off to its best start since 1968 with a 14-7 win over Adams State.

Associated Press

COMMERCE — East Texas State quarterback Chandler Evans came off the bench and threw three touchdown passes Saturday as the Lions rolled past Northwest Missouri State 49-13.

Evans, a University of Houston transfer who shared time with Cole Cayce, entered the game in the second quarter and completed 23 of 30 passes for 266 yards.

Jason Smith led ETSU (1-1) on the ground with 105 yards rushing and scoring on runs of 1, 5 and 37 yards. Smith's first two TDs helped the Lions take a 28-7 halftime lead over the Bearcats (0-2).

East Texas sacked Northwest quarterbacks nine times and held the Bearcats to just 54 yards of offense, including minus-35 yards rushing.

The Bearcats' only scores came on special teams and defense.

Northwest's Jason Smith returned a fumble 32 yards in the second quarter, and Chad Hoiska returned the second-half kickoff 94 yards for the Bearcats' only other score.

ETSU put the game away in the fourth quarter, as Smith scored his last TD and Evans threw TD passes of 32 and 3 yards.

Howard Payne 50, Ottawa 8

OTTAWA, Kan. — Howard Payne's Scott Lichner threw four touchdowns and ran for a fifth as the Yellow Jackets routed Ottawa.

Lichner completed 15-of-23 passes for 251 yards for Howard Payne (1-1). He scored on a 1-yard run, then threw 17- and 49-yard touchdown passes to Brandon Harrison as Howard Payne scored 26 points in the second quarter.

The only score for Ottawa (0-1) came on an 85-yard kickoff return by Desmond Harrison in the second quarter.

Chad Franks caught touchdown passes of 22 and 4 yards from Lichner. Tony Lott returned a fumble for 15 yards late in the third quarter for the final score.

Montana St. 21, Stephen F. Austin 18

NACOGDOCHES — Fred Moore and Da'Ron Comier each scored touchdowns to give Montana State an early lead, then the Bobcats held off a second-half rally by Stephen F. Austin for a victory.

Moore scored on a 6-yard run and Comier had a 33-yard TD run on his only carry of the night as Montana State (2-0) jumped to a 21-7 halftime lead.

But SFA (0-1-1) came back in the second half behind Leonard Harris, who rushed for 153 yards on 26 carries and scored on runs of 1 and 14 yards.

The Lumberjacks got within 21-10 on Mark Oberholtzer's 24-yard field goal late in the third quarter.

Then Harris plunged in for a 1-yard score in the fourth quarter, and the Lumberjacks converted the 2-point conversion.

SFA had one last chance, but Mike Quinn's desperation pass into a crowd fell short as time expired.

Chris Jefferson finished with 83 yards on five catches for the Lumberjacks.

West Texas A&M 14, Adams St. 7

CANYON — Norman White ran for 101 yards on 21 carries, including the winning touchdown with 1:19 remaining as West Texas A&M defeated Adams St.

The Buffs, who are 2-0 for the first time since 1968, got the only points of the first half when Arnold Marcha fired an 8-yard touchdown pass to Pete Loera with 3:25 left in the second quarter.

White's scoring run came after the Indians (0-2) roughed WTAMU kicker Gus Aldana on a missed 43-yard attempt.

Sam Houston St. 24, Southeast Missouri St. 4

HUNTSVILLE — Sam Houston State's Brandon Bennett threw a touchdown pass and ran for another as the Bearkats held Southeast Missouri State to a pair of safeties in a victory.

Bennett, a sophomore, completed 13 of 21 passes for 151 yards for Sam Houston (2-0). He opened the scoring with a 4-yard run in the first quarter.

Then Charles Harris, who led the Bearkats with 58 yards rushing, added a 1-yard scoring dive to give for a 14-0 halftime lead.

The only scores for the Indians (1-1) came on muffed punt attempts.

In the third quarter, Sam Houston punter Chad Orsak fell on a bad snap in his own end zone. They got another safety when Brian Brune blocked an Orsak punt out of the end zone in the end zone.

SHSU got its final points on a 13-yard TD pass from Bennett to Kirk Lawrence early in the fourth quarter.

Sam Houston held the Indians to just 44 rushing yards on 35 carries.

'Noles roll in second half; Clemson tumbles

■ Florida, Florida State rack up huge numbers in Saturday wins.

Associated Press

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Second-ranked Florida, making a powerful statement for returning to No. 1, took no chances against Kentucky on Saturday.

The Gators, who needed a last-minute touchdown to beat the Wildcats a year ago, shrugged off losing the nation's top ranking and scored on five of their first six possessions en route to a 73-7 rout of their Southeastern Conference rival.

■ Top 25 Roundup

After tying an NCAA record with seven touchdown passes in the first half of Florida's 70-21 season-opening victory over New Mexico State, Dean tossed four more against Kentucky (1-1, 0-1), which trailed 21-0 before it managed to make a first down.

Dean left the game late in the third quarter, finishing with 15 completions in 22 attempts for 201 yards. In five quarters this season, he has 11 TD passes and no interceptions.

Freshman Elijah Williams gained 107 yards in the opening half and finished with 115 on 13 carries. He scored on runs of 15 and 2 yards and also set up a field goal with a 51-yard run in the second quarter.

No. 4 Florida St. 52, Maryland 20

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Danny Kanell had another sensational game against Maryland and No. 4 Florida State rebounded from a stunning halftime deficit with 35 straight points.

The heavily favored Seminoles trailed 13-3 early in the second quarter and 20-17 at halftime against a Maryland team coming off a 33-point loss to Duke.

But Kanell, in a performance reminiscent of his effort against Maryland last season, directed the Seminoles on two third-quarter scoring drives that put the defending national champions in command. Kanell was 28-for-44 for 417 yards and a touchdown.

Zack Crockett, Rock Preston and Warrick Dunn each scored twice for Florida State (2-0 overall and in the Atlantic Coast Conference), which amassed 725 yards.

No. 8 Penn St. 38, No. 14 Southern Cal 14

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Kerry Collins passed for two of Penn State's five first-half touchdowns and the eighth-ranked Nittany Lions went on to beat No. 14 Southern Cal.

Penn State (2-0) led 21-0 less than eight minutes into the game and 35-0 at halftime.

Southern Cal (1-1) didn't cross midfield until the last three minutes of the half and scored only on Quincy Harrison's 68-yard interception return in the third quarter and after an 81-yard drive against Penn State reserves in the fourth quarter.

The Trojans, who lost for a second straight year in Beaver Stadium, seldom managed to stop Penn State's first-team offense. When USC was looking for Bobby Engram or Ki-Jana Carter — Penn State's top receiver and rusher — Collins found Freddie Scott, who had six catches for 133 yards, including a 44-yard touchdown.

Collins, 18-of-33 for 248 yards, opened the game with a 17-yard pass to Scott in the right flat and hit him again on a similar play for 14 yards before Carter's 32-yard TD run 75 seconds into the game.

Southern Cal had but 70 yards at halftime to Penn State's 363. After three quarters, Penn State's edge was 493-98.

No. 10 Wisconsin 56, Eastern Michigan 0

MADISON, Wis. — Coach Barry Alvarez directed the Wisconsin sports information staff not to bother producing a slick campaign pushing tailback Brent Moss for the Heisman Trophy.

The nation's leading returning rusher, Moss showed that actions speak louder than fancy brochures Saturday when he triggered the 10th-ranked Badgers blowout of Eastern Michigan by rushing 18 times for 129 yards and three touchdowns.

Fellow senior tailback Terrell Fletcher added three touchdowns with 100 yards on 11 carries.

The Eagles turned the ball over five times.

No. 11 Alabama 17, Vanderbilt 7

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Alabama avoided a major upset against a team it has dominated over the past quarter-century, scoring 10 points in final seven minutes to defeat Vanderbilt.

The Crimson Tide (2-0 overall, 1-0 Southeastern Conference) staggered on offense most of the game, suffering six sacks of quarterback Jay Barker and accumulating only 151 yards in the first three quarters as Vandy (1-1, 0-1) fought to a 7-7 tie.

Alabama took advantage of four Vandy turnovers, scoring its first touchdown after an interception, its second after a fumble recovery.

Michael Proctor, who missed a 40-yard field goal in the third quarter, put the Tide ahead for good on a 31-yarder with 6:04 remaining to cap one of only two Alabama possessions that covered more than 23 yards.

No. 12 Auburn 44, NE Louisiana 12

AUBURN, Ala. — Patrick Nix threw for 224 yards and a touchdown as No. 12 Auburn defeated Northeast Louisiana, extending the nation's longest winning streak to 13 games.

The Indians, in their first year in Div. I-A, suffered their second straight lopsided defeat at the hands of a Top 25 team.

This one could have been worse for Northeast Louisiana (0-2) than last week's 48-13 loss at Colorado. Auburn (2-0) drove inside the Indians' 20 and settled for field goals three times.

Northeast Louisiana didn't get a first down until only 2:50 remained in the first half. The Indians scored their first touchdown on the same drive, moving 71 yards in five plays with fullback Eric Foster taking Raymond Philyaw's pass 46 yards for the touchdown.

No. 25 Washington 25, No. 18 Ohio State 16

SEATTLE — Nimble tailback Napoleon Kaufman squirted his way to a career-best 211 yards and scored a touchdown to lead No. 25 Washington to a victory over 18th-ranked Ohio State.

Washington (1-1) scored three touchdowns and led 19-0 in the first quarter, then had to hang on to beat Ohio State (1-1) before a crowd of 70,861 in the sun at Husky Stadium.

After scoring its second touchdown and second 2-point conversion with 1:43 left, Ohio State got another chance when Alex Rodriguez recovered an on-side kick.

Bobby Hoying hit D.J. Jones with a 44-yard pass to the Washington 9. But Hoying threw three incomplete passes and then was sacked at the 17 with 53 seconds to go.

Trailing 22-0 at halftime, Ohio State got a 24-yard touchdown run from Eddie George in the third quarter and Hoying passed 13 yards to Buster Gillman with 1:43 left for the Buckeyes' second touchdown.

George gained 108 yards on 24 carries while Hoying was 19-for-38 for 288 yards and a touchdown with one interception. Tillman caught nine passes for 106 yards.

Huard completed 12-of-20 passes for 134 yards and a touchdown and wasn't intercepted.

No. 19 Tennessee 41, No. 23 Georgia 23

ATHENS, Ga. — James Stewart ran for 211 yards and four touchdowns as No. 19 Tennessee turned to a time-consuming ground attack to down No. 23 Georgia.

Stewart scored on runs of 3, 6, 71 and 15 yards, the longest with 7:44 remaining when he broke two tackles on his way to the left sideline from where he outran the defense the rest of the way.

Junior Todd Helton, a Tennessee baseball star making his first start at quarterback as a replacement for injured Jerry Colquitt, kept the Bulldogs off balance throughout the game with a few key passes, but mostly through the running of Stewart and Aaron Hayden, who had 113 yards.

It was the Southeastern Conference opener for the Vols, who opened last week with a 25-23 loss at UCLA when Colquitt was lost for the season with a knee injury on the seventh play of the game. Georgia fell to 1-1, with both of its games SEC affairs.

Eric Zeier led the Georgia attack, completing 30-of-45 passes for 401 yards and one touchdown, a 45-yarder to Juan Daniels late in the third quarter on the first play following a 42-yard interception return by Will Muschamp.

No. 21 Virginia Tech 24, Southern Miss. 14

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — Bryan Still caught a 41-yard touchdown pass from Maurice DeShazo in the fourth quarter as No. 21 Virginia Tech overcame six turnovers to get past Southern Mississippi.

The Hokies (2-0), who dominated offensively, were down 14-0 in the first quarter after a fumble and the first of two dropped snaps by punter Robbie Colley gave Southern Miss the ball inside the 5.

On a field dampened by a periodic light rain, Tech lost four fumbles and had two interceptions.

Tech, which outgained Southern 431 yards to 144, finally took the lead with 10:35 left in the game when DeShazo faked a handoff, rolled right and found Still streaking down the sideline. The six-play, 73-yard drive was set up by Torrian Gray's second interception.

Dwayne Thomas had 28 carries for 123 yards, including a 2-yard touchdown run in the first quarter for Tech. DeShazo was 17-of-28 for 230 yards.

N. Carolina St. 29, No. 22 Clemson 12

CLEMSON, S.C. — Eddie Goines caught two touchdown passes, one a gamebreaking 76-yarder, as North Carolina State overwhelmed No. 22 Clemson, the Tigers' worst home loss in 14 years.

The Wolfpack (2-0, 1-0 Atlantic Coast Conference) piled up 493 yards and held Clemson (1-1, 0-1) to 183 yards and one offensive score — a 13-yard TD catch by freshman Kenya Crooks with three minutes left.

Goines, the senior receiver, also broke free for a 20-yard scoring catch, setting an N.C. State record with his 15th and 16th career TD receptions.

Rod Brown ran for 91 yards, Brian Fitzgerald had 89 yards and Terry Harvey completed 12 of 17 passes for 167 yards and two touchdowns for North Carolina State. It was Clemson's most lopsided defeat at Death Valley since a 34-17 loss to Duke in 1980.

North Carolina State's Steve Videtich kicked three field goals and ran his string to 11 straight, breaking the school mark of 10 by Mike Cofer.

No. 24 Stanford 41, Northwestern 41

EVANSTON, Ill. — Steve Schnur, a late first-quarter replacement, passed for two touchdowns and Dennis Lundy ran for three as pesky Northwestern tied No. 24 Stanford.

Steve Stenstrom, who ran for two touchdowns and passed for one, marched Stanford into scoring position in the final seconds, but Eric Abrams missed a 23-yard field goal with 3 seconds left.

The Wildcats (0-1-1), scoring the most points since a 41-14 victory over Wake Forest in 1991, took advantage of three fumble recoveries, two by nose guard Bill Koziel, for three scores and a 31-27 halftime lead.

Sam Valenzisi kicked a 47-yard field goal, the longest of his career, to give Northwestern a 34-27 lead in the third quarter. Stanford came right back with an 11-yard touchdown pass from Stenstrom to Justin Armour to tie the score at 34-all.

Penn State running back Ki-Jana Carter (32) races past USC defender Sammy Knight for a first quarter touchdown during the Nittany Lions win Saturday.

Kansas overcomes errors, Spartans

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Asheiki Preston directed two long scoring drives to lead mistake-prone Kansas past Michigan State 17-10 Saturday night before the biggest crowd ever to see a Jayhawks home opener.

Kansas, which opened on Sept. 1 with a 35-13 victory at Houston, had three turnovers in the first half as Michigan State seized a 10-0 lead.

The Jayhawks went ahead for the first time at 14-10 with a 12-play, 74-yard drive on their first possession of the second half.

Preston, who left the game in the fourth period with a head injury, carried seven times for 36 yards in the go-ahead march.

The crowd of 48,100 snapped the Memorial Stadium record for home openers set at 42,811 in 1988.

Stich plays 'large' Agassi in final

NEW YORK (AP) — Maybe things would be easier for Michael Stich if this were Stuttgart or Munich or Hamburg.

But on Sunday, in the men's final of the U.S. Open, he will be far from the Rhine, most certainly in New York and facing an opponent in Andre Agassi who has made this tournament his own, a player who in the words of Todd Martin is "ridiculously large."

"I think when when I am playing very good tennis and I show the people I am not going to give it away, I think they are going to appreciate the way I play," said Stich, a 7-5, 6-3, 7-6 (7-4) winner over Karel Novacek in Saturday's semifinal.

"That is what I'm trying to do and there are going to be some people for me and some for him. I don't worry a bit. I have to focus my game. That is my job out there."

Agassi is riding a most unlikely wave. He came to the tournament unseeded and has knocked off four seeds, the last a 6-3, 4-6, 6-2, 6-3 semifinal decision over Martin, the No. 9. seed. He is the first unseeded player in the 114-year history of the U.S. men's singles championships to beat four seeded players. He is the first unseeded finalist at the Open since Jan Kodes in 1971.

Agassi's one Grand Slam victory is Wimbledon in 1992. He was runner-up to Pete Sampras in the 1990 U.S. Open, and he is not about to understate the importance of getting another crack at a major title.

"This is the greatest feeling in the world to me," Agassi said. "Since Wimbledon I haven't been this excited about just stepping on the court. And I owe a lot of that to the New York fans. They have got me through a time when I had to come out here and prove I can play with these guys. And I got one more to go."

And he has a tough one in Stich, the No. 4 seed. The German has had an untroubled path to the final, facing only one seeded player (No. 14 Yevgeny Kafelnikov) along the way.

"You have to have the luck," he said. "You need to play well and you need a good draw. And all those things came together these two weeks, and here I am."

Stich won Wimbledon in 1991 but he had not gotten past the second round in the three previous Grand Slam events this year. He likes the way his game is coming together.

"I'm not rushing my shots at all," he said. "I'm staying back and trying to play four, five, six shots, then pick the ball to come to the net and be aggressive. Not like I used to do in the years before."

Stich and Agassi have played four times, with Agassi winning three times, the last a straight-sets victory on hardcourts in Cincinnati in 1993. Stich has a big serve-and-volley, but his game is adaptable to all surfaces.

Agassi says Martin's serve prepared him for Stich, who has one of the best serves on the tour. Stich also moves better than Martin, and Agassi says he will need to return well, dominate the backcourt rallies and stay on top of the German.

"When I come into these tournaments I do feel like I can win them," Agassi said. "And that is a great feeling to have. But you still have to go out there and do it. ...

"The reality is Michael is going to have a lot to say about it. He is a gifted, great player who can go out there and play the match of his life. I mean all these things are possible. That's what makes sports, sports. But the way I am hitting the ball, yes, I think I can win."

VICARIO: Graf brilliant in first set

(From 1C)

ner over Karel Novacek.

Graf, who missed a tuneup event before the Open because of back spasms related to a stress fracture, put on a brilliant performance in the first set.

Her shots were precise, winner after winner kissing the corners as Graf yielded only four points in the last five games and wrapped up the set in 22 minutes.

All Sanchez Vicario could do was race side to side in a futile chase. She tried outslugging Graf, but the result was forehands that soared past the baseline. When Graf missed on occasion, she did so by inches. When Sanchez Vicario missed, it was by yards.

Things began to change early in the second set when Sanchez Vicario broke Graf for the first time after losing her own serve, and tied the set at 2-2.

The flags atop the stadium were stretched out stiff in the wind, but Graf's low, hard forehands had cut through the gusts with uncanny accuracy until that point. Suddenly, she was missing by inches and Sanchez Vicario was running her around with a clever combination of slow-paced and hard shots.

Fans could hear the sound of Sanchez Vicario's racket continually scraping the court as she used it for balance while changing directions, and they could hear her grunts and gasps on nearly every shot.

Graf, playing in silence as always, was serving to tie the set 4-4 when she wrenched her back on the second point, losing it on a running forehand that she hit wide crosscourt. Graf stopped play for a minute, knelt and bent over to stretch her back, and flexed it side to side. She managed to hold service, but looked uncomfortable, bending and stretching after several points.

Graf requested a trainer come out on court on the next changeover, and she received a brief massage on her lower back. She also took anti-inflammatory pills.

But Graf never requested the trainer again, noting later that "there is nothing you can do. It is not going to get better. I have done all that I can to handle as much pain as possible. .... I am going to see the doctor next week and we are going to talk about how long a period I have to take off."

Though her back obviously bothered her, it could not fairly be considered an excuse for the loss. Nor did she claim such an excuse afterward.

"It hurt for about two, three games real hard, then it was OK," Graf said. "Then it started getting better, actually."

During the awards ceremony, she was asked about the injury, and the crowd booed the question. Graf praised Sanchez Vicario, and the crowd cheered.

"I know she had a back problem, and I know she feels OK," Sanchez Vicario said. "I never tried to think that she was hurt. She played really well since the beginning. I just started to be more aggressive and probably put good volleys away. I never gave up and I kept fighting."

Neither Graf's movement nor her strength seemed to be affected by the injury. Instead, she just seemed a little less precise, a little less controlled and confident. And Sanchez Vicario had a lot to do with that as she stepped up her attack by going to the net more and catching Graf offguard.

"It is just disappointing, I wasn't able to raise my level when I wanted to," Graf said.

Sanchez Vicario won the last five points of the tiebreaker.

KICK: Michigan's turn

series resumed in 1978, including a late touchdown pass by Rick Mirer in 1990 and Reggie Ho's winning field goal in 1988. But this time it was the Wolverines (2-0) staging an amazing rally to beat the Irish (1-1) for only the second time since 1987.

"It seems like Notre Dame does it to us every time," said Michigan senior quarterback Todd Collins. "When we had an opportunity to get the ball back, I said, 'OK, let's do it to them.'"

Ron Powlus, Notre Dame's highly touted sophomore quarterback, looked like he would be the hero after throwing a 7-yard touchdown pass to Derrick Mayes with 52 seconds left to put the Irish ahead 24-23.

"I thought we had won it," said Powlus, who was 15-of-27 for 187 yards and two touchdowns.

But Collins, who was 21-of-29 for 224 yards and one touchdown, came up with some heroics of his own. He opened the winning drive with a 15-yard scramble, then completed three passes as Michigan drove to the Notre Dame 24 before Hamilton booted his final field goal.

Collins was in the grasp of an Irish defender when he threw the last pass, a 9-yarder to Seth Smith, who dove out of bounds with 7 seconds left.

Notre Dame then called a timeout as the play clock was about to expire because the Irish thought they had an extra man on the field. The delay didn't bother Hamilton.

"I was out there stretching trying not to think about what this kick meant," he said. "Coach (Gary Moeller) just told me to go out there and make the kick."

As he was about to go on the field to attempt the kick, Hamilton got encouragement from Mike Gillette, a former Michigan kicker whose last-second miss of a 49-yard field goal allowed Notre Dame to escape with a 19-17 victory in 1988.

"Right before the kick, he came up to me and said, 'Come on, Remy, you can do it,'" said Hamilton, who made two 32-yarders and a 35-yarder against Notre Dame before his game-winning attempt.

Michigan fans stormed the field after the kick, but the game wasn't over until the Wolverines squibbed a kickoff and tackled Notre Dame's Pete Chryplewicz as time expired.

"This hurts," said Irish coach Lou Holtz. "It was a great comeback by Notre Dame, followed by a great comeback by Michigan."

Notre Dame trailed 23-17 after Hamilton kicked his third field goal with 2:15 remaining. But Powlus, who threw four TD passes in his debut against Northwestern last week, led the Irish on a quick scoring drive after Michael Miller returned the kickoff 55 yards to the Michigan 36.

Mayes leaped high in the back of the end zone to grab Powlus' pass, which just cleared the outstretched hands of safety Chuck Winters.

"It was a great pass by Ron and I went up and made the catch, but that really does't matter now," said Mayes, who had seven receptions for 106 yards.

Two of Hamilton's field goals were set up by fumbles by Irish tailback Lee Becton, who hadn't lost a fumble in 233 carries since the third game of the 1992 season.

Michigan's touchdowns came on a 10-yard run by Tim Biakabutuka and a 3-yard pass from Collins to Jay Riemersma.

Aided by a pass interference call against Michigan's Tyrone Noble, Notre Dame took a 17-10 lead in the third quarter on an 8-yard touchdown run by Marc Edwards. But Michigan rallied to take a 20-17 lead later in the period on the TD catch by Riemersma and Hamilton's 35-yard field goal.

Notre Dame took the opening kickoff and drove to the Michigan 15, where Stefan Schroffner booted a 32-yard field goal.

Gamecocks skunk Hogs

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Fullback Stanley Pritchett scored two touchdowns and South Carolina's special teams blocked two kicks Saturday night as the Gamecocks defeated Arkansas 14-0.

The win for South Carolina (1-1, 1-1 Southeastern Conference) was the first of Brad Scott's coaching career and it came over a one-time nemesis, Arkansas coach Danny Ford. During Ford's 11 years as coach of Clemson, he compiled a 7-3-1 record against the Gamecocks.

The Razorbacks (1-1, 0-1) had trouble with their kicking game. Lance Ellison missed field goals of 43 and 23 yards and had a 24-yarder in the first quarter blocked by Terry Cousin.

Matt Wait's 27-yard punt in the fourth quarter gave South Carolina the ball at midfield to set up a touchdown. Quarterback Steve Taneyhill put the Gamecocks in position when he rolled left and threw 29 yards to Toby Cates, who caught the ball as he fell at the Arkansas 7.

Pritchett then grabbed a shovel pass from Taneyhill and rumbled in for his second TD of the night.

Taneyhill completed 15-of-28 for 165 yards and no interceptions.

Hank Campbell helped seal the win for South Carolina when he recovered Marius Johnson's fumble in the end zone with about three minutes left. The Gamecocks ate up all but 45 seconds of the remaining time.

The Gamecocks' first score came thanks to defensive end Stacy Evans, who threw his hands in front of an Arkansas punt with about three minutes left in the second quarter.

The block put the ball on the Arkansas 32 and Pritchett plunged in five plays later from the 1.

"It's 4 U" Game Rules:

Anyone 18 years or older can enter except employees (and family members of employees) of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Brite systems Inc., Associated Publishing Co., and their advertising and promotion agencies.

The "It's 4 U" Game is designed for people who live in the Midland and Odessa calling areas and no purchase is required to play or win prizes, although long distance toll charges may apply if you call from outside the Midland-Odessa calling area.

Look for the "It's 4 U" Game ad here and in the advertisers' service directory in the Midland Reporter-Telegram every day until November 5, 1994. Call 560-2400 and enter any four-digit advertiser's code listed in the directory. You will hear a brief advertiser's message and, if you are one of five instant winners chosen at random each week, you will win one of that week's prizes. If you are an instant winner, listen for details about claiming your prize. In order to claim your prize, you will be required to give your name, age, address and telephone number. The more often you call, the better your chance of winning a prize.

You can also enter a second chance drawing for unclaimed prizes by hand printing your complete name and address and daytime phone number on a 3"x5" piece of paper and mailing it in an envelope to "It's 4 U" Second Chance Game, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702, so that it is received before the deadline, October 30, 1994. Enter as often as you wish, but submit only one entry in each envelope. Entries become the property of the sponsors. None will be returned.

Each game begins at 12:01 a.m. Monday and ends at 11:59 p.m. Sunday. Each week for eight weeks ending November 5, 1994, five entries will be selected at random and will win one of that week's prize. The total value of all prizes to be awarded in the "It's 4 U" game will equal $4,000 or more. The names and cities of winners will be published in the Midland Reporter-Telegram Classified Ads page. No substitution of prizes is permitted. Only one prize will be awarded to each winner.

By entering, winners authorize the use of their names, cities or photos for publicity purposes. Winners may be required to sign an affidavit of eligibility and release. Taxes are the responsibility of winners. Void where prohibited.

HOMES & CLASSIFIED

GRAND SPLENDOUR

This afternoon, there is a wonderful opportunity to view what has to be one of the nicest houses currently for sale in Midland.

This 3-bedroom, 21/2 bath family home is uniquely designed and offers the very unusual aspect of being set on 2 acres of land in the safe and prestigious Saddle Club Estates.

The owners have done a tremendous amount of work on the property to bring the level of comfort and elegance to an unsurpassed level. In addition, they have increased the desirability of the property by spending a lot of time and effort on the landscaping.

The fruits of this labor are obvious as soon as one drives up the curved drive: the grounds are in an immaculate condition and great attention has been placed on design.

In recent years, over twenty trees have been planted to augment those already in-situ, with the end result that trees and shrubs abound and flank the lawns giving a great sense of peace and privacy.

The inside of the home is just as impressive as the exterior landscaping and it too has been extensively remodeled in recent years. Amongst the recent additions in the home are the new built-in kitchen hardware, new air conditioning unit, new Mexican tile in the kitchen, breakfast area and sunroom, and insulated storm windows and doors.

However, practicality has not been the only consideration in the upgrading of this home. There are plenty of new points which add style and elegance to the home, points such as the custom designed stained glass windows at the front of the home.

The overall level of design in this property is very high, and great attention to detail has been spent making sure that the house is as easy to live in as it is stylish and elegant.

One aspect of the home's design, which is sure to appeal to many people is the location of the dining room and formal living area: these two areas make up the sunroom which overlooks the garden.

The huge garden is certainly one of the highlights of the home with its groves of trees, large flower beds and lawn bordering the swimming pool and patio area. It is this view which makes the sun room and master suite that much more pleasant to be in.

The designers and builders added one extra feature to ensure that the lovely effects of the sunroom's wall of glass could be felt throughout the living areas: louvered windows let the natural light from the sunroom into the family room and breakfast area.

The open house will be held from 1 p.m. until 4 p.m. this afternoon by Marilyn Jo Smith of ReMax at 18 Saddle Club Drive North, in the Saddle Club Estates.

Sellers are given one chance to create favorable impressions

Pat Orseth
President Midland
Association of Realtors

You have completed all necessary repairs to put your home in top condition for the market. Now it is time for actual showings. Remember, you only have one chance to create a favorable impression with prospective buyers. Consider the following prior to opening your home for viewing:

ACCESSIBILITY - Exposure sells homes. Provide easy access to property for showings. The amount of notice you have prior to a showing varies - bare in mind, the buyer has several homes to view. If he can not see your home, he will go on to another.

CLUTTER - Keep rooms neat and avoid clutter. Keep all toys in the children's room, and all bikes, wagons or skateboards safely stowed. Bathroom and kitchen counters should sparkle.

LIGHT - Open all draperies and shades to let in light. Turn on overhead lights, lamps and indirect lighting for a bright and cheerful look. Turn on porch light and any outdoor light if house is being shown at night.

AROMAS - Set out fresh flowers for the appearance and fragrance. If time, air the home, use air freshener or run a lemon through the disposal. Baking cookies, bread or simply a pan of cinnamon adds a pleasant aroma.

POSTERS AND SIGNS - We live in a tolerant age, but do not take a chance on offending a potential buyer. Remove any signs or posters that might be considered controversial.

ASHTRAYS - Dirty ashtrays are both unsightly and a source of objectionable odor to nonsmokers. Keep them clean.

UTILITY BILLS - Have copies of the past 12 months bills available or a written summary of the amounts paid monthly for that period.

PETS - Keep pets out of the house - many prospects are afraid of, do not like, or are allergic to cats and dogs. Do not give a potential buyer a reason not to be able to thoroughly consider your home.

MUSIC -Soft background music can create a relaxed mood, but as individual's tastes in music vary, you take a risk distracting a buyer. Probably best to leave it off - and never have the TV on when the house is being shown.

PERSONAL RESERVED ITEMS - If there are items that are usually considered "Part of the Property" and you plan to remove them - do so before you market the property. Once it is viewed by the buyer, he gets discouraged with a long list of reserved items. Tag any item that is not included in the sale if you do not remove it.

YOUR PRESENCE - Most buyers will not relax and closely inspect a home if the owners are present, so try to arrange to turn the home over to the salesperson. If you must remain at home, try to go out on the patio, weather permitting. Greet agent and prospects politely and excuse yourself. Leave the selling to the agent. Agents know what your house has to offer and what these particular buyers are looking for. Refrain from talking unless questions are directed to you. All too often, a seller will jump in to point out some special feature, fearful that the salesperson might overlook it. Please bear in mind that some of the most successful salespeople will say little or nothing during showings. Generally, the salespeople have made their selling points before entering the house and they want the buyers to discover some features for themselves.

Take advantage of the Realtors professional skills in selling homes.

The Midland Association is one of more than 1,800 boards nationwide that comprise the National Association of Realtors, the nation's largest trade association and the voice for real estate.

Real Estate Facts . . .
Information can help relieve stress caused by relocation

Vicky Garrett
Chaparral Realtors

Planning to relocate to another city? There's a world of information available to you about your new city - without ever leaving home.

Perhaps the most stressful aspect of the relocation process is the proverbial "fear of the unknown." You may never have visited your new city, yet you are expected to be delighted with the move.

What's the weather like there? Can you adjust to the change from a quiet, small town to the fast pace of a major city (or visa-versa)? How are the schools? What about professional sports? Are there local and state taxes? The list goes on and on.

Stress comes from not knowing the answers to those questions, and constantly coming up with new questions. If you had clear information about your future hometown, you could feel more informed. Being more informed, your stress level would decrease, and your move becomes more of an adventure than a hassle.

Where can you get the information you need? Call your local real estate representative. Ask to be referred to a highly experienced, active agent in your new city. Be prepared to provide details about your home buying plans too, so the agent will know your objectives.

What happens next will amaze and delight you. The agent in your new city will contact you promptly by phone to get acquainted. Describe the information you prefer to receive about your destination area, and share your plans for buying immediately, based on your family's needs.

In no time, you'll begin receiving details about your new hometown. Build rapport with the agent at the other end of your relocation. This new friend can be an invaluable real estate resource for you, making your transition worry-free.

Start today by making a call to your local representative. Be informed tomorrow!

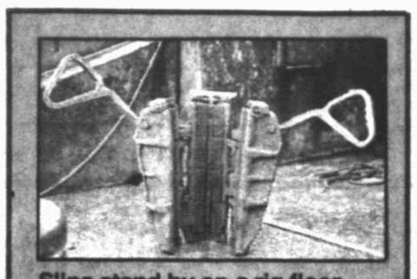
OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, September 11, 1994 — SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

COMING . . .
OIL SHOW OCT. 19

BRIEFING



Slips stand by on a rig floor, as the rig count showed improvement.

Rig count rises

There were more rigs at work during the week ended September 2, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the rig count rose six to 103 for the week, well below 127 a year ago.

Lea County, N.M. was the most active in the Basin with 15 rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. with 11 rigs and Midlnad County with eight rigs.

Nationwide, the rig count climbed 16 to 784 for the week, but remains below last year's 834.

Texas posted the biggest gain among major producing states, seven, while North Dakota and Oklahoma each lost four rigs.

SPE conference

A conference set for October in Veracruz, Mexico, will focus on opportunities available in the Mexican oil and gas industry.

The conference is sponsored by the Society of Petroleum Engineers and will give U.S. firms a chance to display their wares and services, giving exhibitors access to officials from Mexican companies.

A well service crew pulls rods on a Martin County well, as oil prices were marginally higher.

Prices gain

In a Labor Day-shortened week, crude prices showed some strength as traders took the apparent end of the Nigerian oil workers strike in stride and focused on inventory.

West Texas Intermediate for October delivery rose to the week's high of $17.81 at mid-week on the New York Mercantile Exchange, then fell to $17.67. The drop was due largely to conflicting inventory figures from the American Petroleum Institute and the Department of Energy. The API reported a 1 million barrel drop in crude supplies while the DOE reported only a marginal decline.

Posted prices closed at $16, a level seen much of the last week.

ESP has its corporate office in Midland and is co-located with the domestic marketing staff and one of the company's equipment testing facilities.

The accreditation by Det Norske Veritas makes ESP the first and only company in the submersible pump industry to receive quality system certification and registration in North America.

ESP's facilities in Oklahoma City are comprised of 100,000 square feet on 10 acres and is co-located with the ESP International marketing staff.

Val Verde trading heats up

■ Ultra, TransTexas announce major transactions

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

As drilling activity in the Val Verde Basin intensifies, so do the transactions as companies jocky to gain a position in the promising play.

Two significant transactions were announced this week. In one, Ultra Petroleum Corp., a Canadian company, says it has signed an option agreement to acquire additional leases contiguous to its Monty Prospect, which straddles the Pecos-Terrell county lines.

The Monty prospect currently consists of 3,082 acres and is located 12 miles to the southeast of the prolific Puckett field, which has produced more than 3.7 trillion cubic feet of gas from the Strawn, Devonian and Ellenburger formations.

The first test well on the Monty prospect was drilled to the Devonian to a total depth of 13,647 feet and production casing has been set.

The current owners have granted Ultra the right to drill a test well on any of the sections of the optioned acreage before May 15, 1995. In consideration for the option, the company will pay the sum of $700,000 and issue 100,000 common shares of Ultra Petroleum Corp. to the current owners of the optioned acreage.

Ultra has also agreed to tender to the owners of the optioned acreage an acreage fee of $1 million per section prior to the commencement of a test well on a section. Upon the timely completion of each test well on a given section the owners have agreed to execute an assignment which will deliver to the company all interest in the oil and gas leasehold estate of that section.

The owners will reserve an overriding royalty interest of 50 percent of 8/8 of production, subject to all previously existing burdens on production encumbering the owners interest in each section. This agreement is subject to regulatory approval.

Donald T. Metcalfe, vice president, operations, of Ultra Petroleum (U.S.A.) Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary, said, "This transaction allows us to more than double the size of the Monty prospect." He said Ultra expected to perforate and test the first well by mid-September."

Ultra Petroleum Corp. is the operator of the Monty prospect and currently has a 52.5 percent working interest in the property.

In a second transaction, TransTexas Gas Corp. says it has acquired 100 percent working interest in Westar Royalty's intestest in a 33,945 acre leasehold in eastern Val Verde County.

TransTexas says it plans to commence drilling a 16,000 foot Ellenburger exploratory well on the acreage in early October.

The project is located in the Val Verde Basin southeast of the prolific Brown Bassett field, and TransTexas says the reserve potential is comparable with other Ellenburger fields.

The company says published reports indicate, natural gas reserves for

Oil Show technology previewed

■ Preview series will detail important oil and gas technology

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

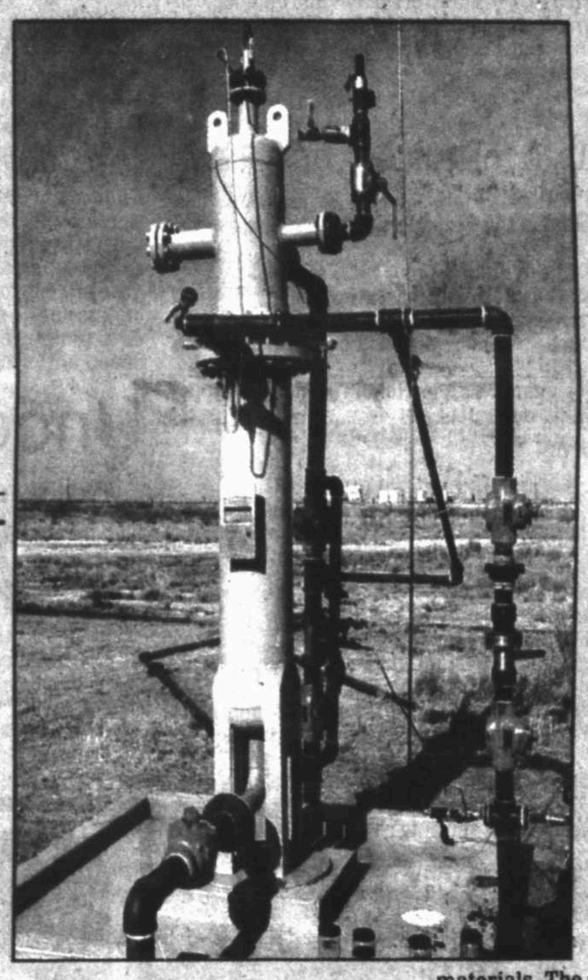
Oil and gas producers agree that the new game in the oil patch is technology and cost control, that is producing more oil and gas for less money.

Beginning this week the Oil Report begins a series of reports to preview technology that will be exhibited at the Permian Basin Oil Show. The purpose of these reports is to acquaint producers with the applications and cost-saving aspects of some of the technology available to oil and gas operators, and to give them advance notice so they can take a closer look during the Oil Show.

Jay Alvey, executive director of the Permian Basin Oil Show, says the Oil Show is making an even greater effort this year to be a vehicle for technology transfer. Technology to be previewed this week include:

HYDROCYCLONE SEPERATOR — A new technology that is expected to help operators with high water cut wells is a hydrocyclone separation system made by Vortoil Separation System, a subsidiary of Conoco.

The hydrocyclone technology has long been used on offshore platforms, but only in the last two years have the manufacturers been able to get the cost down to be affordable to onshore producers.



Above, the skid-mounted Flomaster system is used for pilot floods, injectivity tests and EOR and "Huff n Puff" projects.

The skid-mounted package consists of a triplex pumping system and a computerized monitoring and data recording building where surface pressure, bottomhole pressure, temperature, pumping rates and other pertinent data is recorded and monitored.

Left, a Vortoil hydrocyclone separation system, installed on Arco's Cowden Deep lease, uses centrifugal force to separate oil and water, and eliminate a freewater knockout vessel.

Bill Bowers, Vortoil general manager, says the system, which replaces a freewater knockout has the possibility of wide application in the Permian Basin, because of the large number of wells with a high water cut. He noted that the ideal oil-water cut would be 90 percent, and that the hydrocyclone system could clean the water to 100 parts per million, or clean enough for reinjection.

Vortoil claims the advantage of the system over a freewater knockout are: increased reliability, equality of performance, lower capital cost, lower operating cost, and corrosion resistant materials. The systems, which require smaller concrete pads, can also be built to spec to suit any situation. Arco has installed two of the systems in the Permian Basin with satisfactory performance. Other onshore installations include Arco Alaska, Oxy and WRT Energy in Lousiana.

According to an SPE paper written by S.M. Stroder of Arco and E.E. Wolfenberger of Vortoil, the fluid separation device works by directing fluid at high speed tangentially into a vortex tube, where centrifugal forces separate oil and water by density. The

JOHN PAUL PITTS

White House fax reply lacking for facts

Pitts

Who's tending shop? Who's out to lunch? Sometimes the answer is obvious.

Mike McDermett, president of Cobra Industries of Hobbs and newly elected president of the National Association of Oilwell Service Contractors, sent me two faxes this week. One was a fax he had sent to President Clinton; the other the president's response to that fax.

Mike's fax was a well-thought, factual representation of a hurtful downturn in the New Mexico oil and gas industry, and the crippling effect it had on his own business.

The fax recounted how Cobra had started in 1980 as a small well service company, with only five employees and had now grown to 200 employees responsible for the support of 900 family members. He then detailed how equipment utilization had dropped from 95 percent in October of 1993 to 51 percent in February of 1994 and how accounts receivable past 90 days had grown from eight percent in 1993 to 27 percent in 1994.

This was the soulful plea of concern McDermett sent in a fax to the president:

Dear President Clinton:

"As incoming president of National Association of Oilwell Service Contractors, I am concerned for the survival of the entire oil industry.

"In New Mexico, the industry provides 30 percent of all state taxes and 80 percent of educational funds. The counties with oil production represent only three percent of the population, so the industry is under represented and invisible except as a major source of tax revenue. This situation is typical for other states and for the nation.

"Increased dumping of cheap foreign oil feels good temporarily as our citizens enjoy low gasoline and heating prices, but it creates a dangerous dependence as the domestic oil industry infrastructure is dismantled. We do not tolerate a similar picture for farm products, clothing, electronics, autos or any other necessity.

"Failure of the industry will immediately hurt each oil producing state, especially their education systems. We have already seen how fast hyperinflation of gasoline prices and long lines can show up during the foreign oil embargo. We are even less prepared today to increase domestic production."

Sincerely Mike & Georgia McDermett

This was the thoughtful response President Bill Clinton sent back to the president of AOSC, an organization whose members employ 15,600 employees:

Dear Georgia and Mike:

Thank you for your letter regarding the proposed transfer of federal land at Ward Valley, California, for a low-level radioactive waste disposal facility.

As you may know, the state court ruling in the Ward Valley matter directed the state to review more closely certain issues raised by several scientists of the U.S. Geological Survey relating to the rish of groundwater contamination and potential pollution of the Colorado River....

Sincerely,
Bill Clinton

So much for sitting down and writing a thoughtful letter to the President of the United States.

fields could range as high as two to four trillion cubic feet, and individual wells may range from 60 to 80 billion cubic feet per 640 acre spacing unit.

With the Val Verde transaction, TransTexas has increased its gross leeasehold in Texas to approximately 330,000 gross acres, and continues a long-term trend of increasing its acreage position in selected high reserve potential areas.

TransTexas says that wile the Val Verde Basin remains relatively under explored, recent improvements in both seismic and drilling technology have made it feasible and cost effective to explore the area's reserve potential.

Sources say other deals involving major oil company purchases in the area could be announced in the near future. Some of the main players in the area of interest, which stretches roughly southeast from the Puckett field to the Brown-Bassett, include Conoco, Riata, KM, and Tom Brown.

Potentially major gas field found in Colombia

■ A newly found Colombian gas field could be significant, group leader Amoco reports.

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — A group led by Amoco Corp. has discovered a potentially significant new natural gas field in Colombia.

An exploratory well, located in the Middle Magdalena Valley about 125 miles north of Bogota, tested at a daily rate of 45 million cubic feet of natural gas and 2,000 barrels of condensate, a high-grade liquid petroleum.

Amoco's Colombian affiliate owns a 60 percent stake in both the well and the entire Opon Contract area. A unit of New Mexico-based Hondo Oil & Gas Co. holds a 30 percent stake, while the privately held Opon Development Co. of Denver has a 10 percent stake.

Ecopetrol, Colombia's national oil.company, has the right to take a 50 percent working interest in any commercial well.

The partners drilled to a depth of 12,710 feet, and tested for oil and gas reserves between 10,018 feet and 12,348 feet. They plan to spend between $25 million and $30 million on the well.

D.F. Work, Amoco's group vice president for worldwide exploration, said in a statement that while the company considers the discovery significant, it needs to do more seismic evaluation and drill additional delineation wells.

Amoco officials believe Colombian cities like Bogota and Medellin, as well as Ecopetrol's Barrancabermeja refinery, represent potential markets for gas developed at the site.

There are, however, no pipelines currently in place to transport the gas. Company officials said there is a liquids pipeline about 30 miles away that could be converted to move natural gas.

While the find is potentially sizable, the well would not raise daily natural gas production dramatically for Amoco, the nation's fifth-largest oil company. Last year, Amoco produced an average 4.15 billion cubic feet of gas a day.

Amoco's stock rose 3/4 to close at 585/8 Wednesday. Hondo stock, meanwhile, lost 6 percent of its value to close at 183/4, down 11/8.

"It looks like the market's not overly excited about the impact on Amoco," said John Frankola, an analyst with Parker Hunter in Pittsburgh.

Word of the discovery follows British Petroleum's announcement last week that it had discovered a field in northern Colombia with estimated recoverable reserves totaling 5 trillion cubic feet of gas and 250 million barrels of condensate.

BP officials estimated Colombia's annual gas demand is expected to grow by up to 10 percent over the next five to 10 years if gas is available.

Colombia currently consumes about 400 million cubic feet a day and could be up to 1.5 billion cubic feet a day by 2005.

Report finds growth in alternate-fueled vehicles

Staff Report

By the end of 1992, nearly 250,000 vehicles were powered by fuels other than gasoline and diesel fuel, according to a report by the Energy Information Administration. That number could increase by 60,000 by the end of 1994.

This rapid growth is due in part to the lead taken by the federal government in mandating the use of alternative fueled vehicles in its fleet to reduce the nation's dependence on foreign oil and improve air quality.

The report, "Alternatives to Traditional Transportation Fuels: An Overview," is the first of its kind in its comprehensive coverage of the stock of alternative fueled vehicles. Calculations are based on existing and planned purchases from the federal government, as well as estimates from state and local governments and the private sector.

The study is a precursor to a report mandated by the Energy Policy Act of 1992, which EIA will provide to Congress in October. The act requires that EIA update the report annually. Other major findings about alternative fueled vehicles and the fuels that power them include:

■ In 1992, alternative fueled vehicles operating on liquefied petroleum gas (propane) accounted for nearly 90 percent of all alternative fueled vehicles. Modest growth is forecast for this category.

■ The use of compressed natural gas vehicles is expected to increase from 24,000 in 1992 to more than 54,000 vehicles by the end of 1994. Most of the increase will occur in the private sector.

■ Alternative fueled vehicles will primarily be used in fleets because of the centralized refueling facilities. Refueling infrastructure is being expanded to include all alternative fuels.

■ Other types of alternative fueled vehicles operate on methanol, ethanol, liquefied natural gas and electricity. These vehicles represent about 5 percent of the current market.

Unocal, Marathon to swap Alaska properties

ANCHORAGE — Union Oil Co. of California and Marathon Oil Co. have announced a non-binding agreement to complete a major property trade and realignment of operations in the Cook Inlet Region of Alaska.

The trade and realignment is intended to become effective December 1, 1994. Contractual negotiations to reach a definitive binding agreement are currently underway.

Under this agreement, Marathon will receive Unocal's interest in the Beaver Creek field and interest in and operatorship of the Kenai and Cannery Loop fields. Unocal will receive Marathon's interest in the Swanson River field.

In addition, Unocal will succeed Marathon as operator of the Dolly Varden and Steelhead Platforms and the Trading Bay Onshore Production Facility, making Unocal the sole operator of all facilities in the Trading By Unit.

Although a reduction in total jobs is anticipated, the specific impact of these changes on employees has yet to be determined.

The new arrangement is designed to improve the performance and efficiencies of both companies' operations in Alaska by taking advantage of natural synergies, economies of scale and allowing each company to focus its efforts in areas critical to its success.

Going to a single operator in an offshore environment will offer both Marathon and Unocal efficiencies that are necessary to continue economic operations in a mature field. The realignment of gas properties will allow each company to more efficiently control and manage field operations and development of the remaining gas reserves.

BRIEFS

Coastal to offer financing for producers

HOUSTON — The Coastal Corp. announced that its subsidiary, Coastal Gas Services Co., has completed arrangements for up to $250 million in oil and gas production for oil and gas producers.

Under the arrangement, Santa Rita Capital Co., which is a partnership affiliated with independent foundations which benefit the University of Texas, will use bank borrowings to provide crude oil and natural gas-based production payments to a variety of producers. Coastal Gas Marketing Co., a subsidiary of Coastal Gas Services, will purchase the crude oil and natural gas attributable to the interests of Santa Rita Capital.

NationsBank of Texas, N.A., is the agent for the financing, with National Westminster Bank plc and Texas Commerce Bank National Association as co-agents. Additional terms of the financing were not released.

"Coastal Gas Services set up this program to obtain long-term gas supplies, while at the same time providing needed capital to independent producers;" said David A. Arledge, Coastal's president and chief operating officer. "This financing arrangement demonstrates Coastal Gas Service's ability to provide a full package of physical, marketing and financial services to the oil and gas industry."

Williams unit buys natural gas plant

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Williams Field Services Group is purchasing a natural gas processing plant in the Texas Panhandle and will develop a physical hub there.

Williams is a subsidiary of The Williams Cos., Inc., in Tulsa.

The energy company purchased the plant in southwestern Hemphill County from Kerr-McGee Corp. and seven other owners. The company said it will build a cryogenic turboexpander that will be integrated with the Kerr-McGee plant.

The processing complex, designated as the Hobart Ranch facilities, will have a capacity of 74 million cubic feet per day.

The scheduled date of operation is Oct. 1.

Enron to build power plant in China

HOUSTON (AP) — Enron Corp. announced an agreement to build, own and operate a $130 million 150-megawatt power plant in the province of Hainan, an island off the southeastern coast of China.

Enron signed the pact with Hainan Electric Power Corp., the area electric utility on Hainan Island, which will purchase the power generated from the plant.

Houston-based Enron said it had received all permits and approvals on the project. Construction is to begin in October with startup set for August 1995.

Enron Corp. is one of the nation's largest natural gas companies with about $11.5 billion in assets. It operates one of the largest natural gas transmission systems in the world, totaling 44,000 miles on two continents.

Strategy shift prompts loss at Excel

HOUSTON — Excel Resources Inc. has announced earnings and revenues for the six months ended June 30.

Revenues of $31.9 million were down from $67.6 million for the six months in1993. The decrease is due in large part to a $25.2 million drop in natural gas marketing sales caused by a change in corporate strategy, shifting from marketing of natural gas to production and transportation of natural gas. Revenues from the new activities were $1.6 million in the second quarter compared to nil production sales in the same quarter a year ago.

The company reported a net loss of $65,900 or 1 cent per share for the six months, down from a profit of $180,250 or 2 cents per share in1993.

Francis H. Brinkman, chairman and chief executive officer, said, "The strategic change in direction for the company caused the drop in revenues and earnings but we expect to see improvement in performance as we continue to acquire production facilities, producing assets and pipeline facilities."

Five large Delhi Group shareholders want an auction

N.Y. Times News Service

At first glance, shares of Delhi Group, the natural gas unit of USX Corp., seem cheap.

The natural gas business is consolidating at lightning speed, with players paying huge premiums to gobble up rivals and gain market share. And analysts describe Delhi's assets, which include pipelines that weave a lucrative web through prime oilfields in Texas and Oklahoma, as choice.

In a recent report on Delhi, William D. Hyler, an oil industry analyst at Oppenheimer & Co., wrote that the spate of recent natural gas deals "suggests that the value of Delhi assets could be far in excess of the current stock price."

So why did the shares of USX-Delhi Group hit a record low of $12.50 in mid-August on the New York Stock Exchange? The stock has traditionally tended to trade at a lower price to cash flow than its peers, but over the last few months the discrepancies have increased.

Some of Delhi's large shareholders say they have an explanation: USX is doing nothing to prop up the price of Delhi's shares and has ignored the overtures of potential acquirers.

So five big Delhi shareholders — Guardian Life Insurance, National Provident Institution, Oak Hall Capital Advisors, Odyssey Partners L.P. and Tocqueville Asset Management — are agitating for an auction to sell the company that would bolster the sinking value of their investment.

The unhappy shareholders say that last year USX rebuffed an offer from Natural Gas Clearinghouse, a natural gas company owned by British Gas PLC and Nova Corp. of Alberta. According to the shareholders, Natural Gas sent a letter to USX saying it was weighing an offer of $31 a share for all of Delhi's 14 million shares, contingent on due diligence.

"They never got a response," one shareholder said, speaking on condition of anonymity. He said that executives from Enron Corp. had also discussed with USX management a deal to buy Delhi but that nothing had come of those talks.

USX declined to comment. At a recent news conference, however, Charles A. Corry, chairman of USX, said that while the company was not averse to selling Delhi, no credible offers had been made.

"There were rumors that I heard about some big offer out there to buy Delhi, which, frankly, I have not seen," he said. "I'd like you to forward me a copy of this offer, and I hope it's an offer and not a suggestion or a proposal with 16 conditions on what would happen if A-B-C-D-E-F-G happened."

But people familiar with Natural Gas Clearinghouse's interest in Delhi say the only contingency in its proposal was that it be able to examine Delhi's books, a normal request. Executives at Natural Gas Clearinghouse did not return calls.

On Aug. 4, Natural Gas Clearinghouse announced a deal to acquire Trident NGL Holdings Inc., another natural gas business, for 12 times its earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization, a standard measure of cash flow. Delhi's dissident shareholders, and many Wall Street analysts, believe Delhi is worth a similar multiple, but their shares are currently trading at roughly four times cash flow.

In a letter to USX's board dated June 30, the shareholders said, "We believe this discount from fair market value exists because of the convoluted ownership structure of USX-Delhi Group and the market's perception of unwillingness on the part of USX Corp. to maximize value for the holders of DGP common stock and USX Corp. by selling the assets of USX-Delhi Group."

So why doesn't Natural Gas Clearinghouse or some other aggressive natural gas company step up to the plate with a hostile bid for Delhi? For that matter, why don't the shareholders mount a proxy fight?

The short answer: They can't.

Delhi is a targeted stock. Its dividend reflects the performance of USX's natural gas business, but the stock does not represent ownership of Delhi's assets. A stake in Delhi fundamentally represents a stake in USX, which owns the assets.

The five funds with 15 percent of Delhi's 14 million outstanding shares say they have the support of owners representing 40 percent of the shares. Even though USX holds 5 million shares, or almost 36 percent of the total, most Delhi shareholders seem to support an auction.

But they have little influence to pressure USX because their holdings represent only a small fraction of USX's total shares. Similarly, a company wishing to mount a hostile bid to buy Delhi would have to acquire a huge chunk of USX in the process.

USX has issued three stocks, representing its steel business, its Marathon oil business and Delhi. These shares separately reflect the performance of those businesses but are essentially shares of one corporate entity, USX, and have voting rights only as part of the collective company, not at the subsidiary level.

Ronald L. Gallatin, an investment banker at Lehman Brothers who represents USX, said the problems at Delhi had nothing to do with the stock's targeted status. He said Delhi's shareholders, like investors of any underperforming company, whether they hold targeted shares or not, are unhappy because their investment is not paying off.

Gallatin and others point to several other reasons for Delhi's shares to trade below those of its peers. For one, USX has asked the Securities and Exchange Commission for permission to sell its 5 million Delhi shares. While it has not pursued a sale, the market factors the potential dilution into the share price.

Additionally, Delhi has underperformed its rivals in terms of earnings, Hyler of Oppenheimer said. Though Delhi has done a good job of increasing the amount of natural gas it sells, Hyler estimates that the price of natural gas will drop almost 40 percent this year.

"One big reason the stock is down is due to a sharp erosion in profit margins," he said.

But the plunge in profits makes the dissident shareholders' argument for an auction stronger. Falling prices account for much of the momentum behind the consolidation sweeping the natural gas business as companies seek greater cost efficiencies.

MEETINGS

Houston geologist to visit well loggers

The Permian Basin Well Logging Society will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Dr. David K. Davies, president of David K. Davies Inc. in Houston, will speak on "Geological-Petrophysical Reservoir Characterization of Clearfork Carbonates, North Robertson Unit."

He will describe how core and petrographic image analyis were used to define eight petrophysical rock types, each characterized by unique permeability and capilliary properties. These rock types were then related to log responses such that they could be identified in uncored wells.

Cost is $11 for members, $13 for non-members. Reservations can be made by calling 694-9561.

Desk & Derrick to host RRC director

The Midland Desk and Derrick Club will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club. The meeting will begin with social hour at 6 p.m., followed by dinner at 6:30 p.m.

The guest speaker will be Mark Henkhaus, District 8 director for the Texas Railroad Commission. He will be discussing what the oil and gas industry has done in terms of environmental improvement.

Reservations can be made by calling 682-5371.

Big Lake field reclamation topic for WTGS

The West Texas Geological Society will meet Tuesday at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Michael L. "Doc" Weathers, with the Midland office of the University of Texas Lands, will present a paper he co-authored entitled "Surface Reclamation in the Big Lake Field, Reagan County." He co-authored the paper with Kenneth R. Moore of the University of Texas Lands office in Big Spring, Donald L. Ford of the USDA Soil Conservation Service in Abilene and Charles K. Curlee of Marathon Oil in Midland.

Since the oil discovery at the No. 1 Santa Rita in 1923, the Big Lake field in Reagan County has produced 135 million barrels of oil and one billion barrels of saltwater. Until the early 1960s, the accepted disposal method for saltwater was surface discharge to evaporation ponds north of the field. Approximately 200 million barrels of saltwater was discharged, resulting in 7000 acres of eroded, barren landscape characerized by highly saline soils incapable of supporting vegation.

In 1989, the University of Texas System, the U.S. Department of Agriculture Soil Conservation Service and Marathon Oil initiated an experimental project to relaim 300 acres of affected land and restore it to rangeland roductivity. Weathers will discuss the projectand its success.

Weathers has been a staff geologist with University of Texas Lands since 1988. He came to Midland in 1978, transferring here from Casper, Wyo. with Marathon Oil.

Cost is $7 per person and reservations can be made by Monday afternoon by calling 683-1573.

SPE conference to focus on Mexican oil

Staff Report

RICHARDSON, Texas — Francisco Rojas, director general of Petroleos Mexicanos, is scheduled to make a major address to open the first Society of Petroleum Engineers International Petroleum Conference and Exhibition of Mexico in Veracruz, set for October 10-13. He will officially open the international exhibition in ribbon-cutting ceremonies on October 10.

The technical exhibition will offer hands-on evaluation of relevant products and services, a feature eagerly anticipated by Mexican petroleum industry engineers and executives.

"There is still time to purchase exhibit space or make plans to attend," said an SPE spokesperson. "Exhibitors are excited about the opportunity to demonstrate service and supply capabilities to major officials directly connected with the Mexican oil and gas operations."

The SPE-sponsored event is co-organized with assistance by International Exhibition Inc. of Houston. Mexico's national oil company, Pemex, and the Instituto Mexicano del Petroleo are endorsing organizations of the event. The general director of Pemex E&P, Manuel J. Ortiz de Maria, is the event's general chairman.

Ortiz, with William G. Lowrie, president of Amoco Production Co., Joao Carlos de Luca, director of E&P for Petrobras in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and James K. Gray, president of Canadian Hunter Exploration Ltd. in Calgary, Canada, will headline a distinguished keynote panel discussion on October 11. Panelists will address Mexico's present and future role in developing its natural resources. The impact of the North American Free Trade Agreement will also be a topic of discussion.

Recent data from the U.S. Commerce Department show two-way trade between Mexico and the U.S. during the second quarter compared with the same period a year ago jumped 18 percent. The report also revealed a large increase in petroleum purchases during the same period.

Augmenting the international industry exhibition, a 60-page technical program will examine characteristics common to many Mexican oil and gas fields. — naturally fractured reservoirs and deepwater basins. The focus on fractured reservoirs includes reports on reservoir characterization of dual porosity systems, numerical simulations, and fractured reservoir behavior. Offshore-oriented papers will detail deepwater structures, drilling mud systems, offshore completions and production techniques, and new innovative technologies relevant to Mexican operations.

"Mexico's energy and economic requirements strongly depend on cost-efficient development of oil and natural gas resources," said program chairman Alfredo Arriola-Torres of IMP.

Edisto details new business plan

DALLAS — Edisto Resources Corp. announced a new business plan that will focus on Edisto's existing gas marketing operations and an expansion into energy related financial trading.

Edisto also plans to study a future expansion into electric power marketing.

In connection with the new business plan implementation, Edisto will reorganize its corporate structure into separate profit centers and seek additional key management personnel to staff its expanded operations.

Since its emergence from bankruptcy i June 1993, Edisto's new management has focused its attention on improving its working capital position and selling assets that no longer fit the company's long-range business plan. Now that these initial goals have been met, the company's management has developed a new business plan to take advantage of the company's improved financial position.

Edisto's subsidiary, Vesta Energy Co., will continue to be a regional gas marketer to the Midcontinent region from Edisto's Tulsa office. After the sale of Edisto's Missouri intrastate pipeline, which is awaiting regulatory approval, Edisto will allocate $15 million of capital to Vesta and will seek additional capital from outside lending sources. Edisto's gas marketing operations in Houston will operate from a new subsidiary and will concentrate on the Gulf Coast region. The Houston gas marketing operations will be allocated $10 million of capital and will also seek additional capital from outside lending sources. Edisto also plans to expand its gas marketing operations in Canada through its gas marketing subsidiary, Enex Gas Ltd. Edisto plans to review Enex's capital requirements in the fourth quarter of 1994.

Edisto plans to study the expansion of its gas marketing operations into the marketing of electric power as the electric industry starts deregulating. Edisto believes that its gas marketing operations would be well poised to enter this new market. As part of its long-term business plan, Edisto also plans to explore other opportunities in electric power geneation.

Edisto plans to form a financial trading subsidiary that will enter into energy-related financial instruments for market speculation purposes. These financial instruments will initially include futures contracts, option agreements and price-swap agreements for natural gas, but they are expected to expand at a later date into electricity and possibly other energy related commodities. The new subsidiary will be based in Houston and will be formed in the fourth quarter. Edisto will allocate $15 million of capital to the financial trading subsidiary and will seek additional capital from outside lending soruces.

Substantially all of the company's proved oil and gas reserves are from offshore properties in the Gulf of Mexico. These properties have a high initial production rate, followed by a steep decline in production. The company feels that opportunities for further development and exploitation of its oil and gas reserves are limited, and has substantially reduced its resources devoted to acquiring and developing new oil and gas reserves. Therefore, the company's reserves and revenues from its existing oil and gas production will decline rapidly over the next two years. The company, however, will continue to review oil and gas transactions brought to its attention for attractive opportunities.

The pending sale of Vesta's Missouri intrastate natural gas pipeline to Utilicorp United Inc. is subject to the approval of the Missouri Public Service Commission, which held hearings on this matter on August 15-17. The company does not expect the commission to enter a decision until sometime in the fourth quarter. The net proceeds from the sale will be approximately $28 million after the payment of approximately $47 million to Vesta's three lenders.

Edisto's Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Michael Y. McGovern, comments, "We have spent a year stabilizing the company and improving its working capital position. Now that these tasks have been accomplished, it is time to focus on implementing a new business plan that we feel can best maximize shareholder value."

DOE seeks ACTI proposals

■ The DOE is seeking research project proposals under its advanced technology initiative, ACTI.

Staff Report

The Department of Energy is implementing a new program that will increase the competitiveness of the U.S. natural gas and oil industry and strengthen the leadership of this critical national industry in exploration and production of domestic petroleum resources.

Under its Advanced Computational Technology Initiative, DOE is requesting proposals for cost-shared collaborative research projects that will make the unique computational capabilities of nine National laboratories available to U.S. domestic natural gas and oil companies, including service companies. The primary objective of ACTI is to increase the ability of domestic producers to find, develop and produce natural gas and oil and lower costs and with reduced environmental and financial risk.

The new research effort is outlined i a "call for proposals" issued by DOE. Proposals are due November 1 and DOE is expected to select the winning proposals by mid-January 1995. Each ACTI proposal must represent a collaborative teaming of industry companies and DOE's multipurpose National Laboratories. Proposals for this first year's call should focus on areas of petroleum exploration, development and production that have a strong computational component, fit within a broad scope ranging from long-term basic research to short-term applications, and incorporate advances in geoscience, engineering or information technology.

Industry is expected to cost-share individual projects, usually through in-house effort or in -kind support. All segments of the domestic natural gas and oil industry are eligible to participate. University participation is encouraged but not required.

Proposed projects should generally be capable of being completed in three years or less. Multiyear proposals are allowed, although this year's call is for the first year of funding only. Continuation of multiyear proposals will be based on annual review by the ACTI Industry Review Panel and the availability of funding. No restrictions are placed on the size of proposed projects, the proposed funding level, or the number of collaborating companies, National Laboratories and universities.

ACTI is an industy-driven program. Industry companies initiate the process by defining their research needs and determining a match between those needs and the capabilities of one or more National Laboratories. A project is then mutually defined and the required type of agreement determined by the collaborating organizations. Generally, the National Laboratories will be primary interface with DOE, and will be responsible for most of the proposal, fiscal and reporting requirements of the projects.

The ACTI Industry Review Panel, comprising 14 members from independents, majors and service companies, will individually evaluate and prioritize each proposal based upon the written submission and an organ presentation, if required. The Partnership Office, representing the participating National Laboratories, will then provide recommendations to DOE based on the panel's priorities and comments. DOE will make the final selection and funding decisions.

Abraxas reports Gulf Coast activity

SAN ANTONIO — Abraxas Petroleum Corp. has announced results from two months of development activity along the central Texas Gulf Coast in the Portilla field, San Patricio County.

As a result of workover activity and new wells, daily Portilla field production levels have posted a 216 percent increase in barrels of oil per day to 2,310 bopd (88 percent under proforma state allowables of 1,374 BOPD. Gas production rose 147 percent to 2,630 Mcfd and natural gas liquids production rose 46 percent to 282 barrels of oil equivalent.

Abraxas owns a 50 percent working interest and a 36 percent net revenue interest in the field.

Three new wells were drilled. The No. 78 Welder was drilled and completed in the Vicksburg No. 5 at approximately 8,815 ft. On a state test, the well flowed 1,093 Mcfd with 3,475 psi flowing tubing pressure on a 5/64 inch choke, together with 30 barrels of condensate.

The No. 79 Welder was drilled and dually completed in the 7,300 ft. and 7,400 ft. sands. On a state test, the combined recovery was 327 barrels of oil and 310 Mcfd, flowing naturally.

The No. 80 Welder was drilled and dually completed in the 7,700 ft. A sand and the 8,100 ft. sand. On a state test, the combined recovery was 374 barrels of oil and 606 Mcfd on gas lift.

The No. 5 Welder was reworked i both the 7,300 ft. sand and the 7,400 ft. On a test following the rework, the well flowed 314 barrels of oil compared to six barrels of oil per day previous to the workover. The No. 49 Welder was reworked in the 7,400 ft. sand and recompleted in the 7,700 ft. C sand. On a test, the 7,400 ft. sand flowed naturally 1,236 bopd compared to previous production of 26 bopd, and the 7,700 ft. C sand flowed 10 bopd; it was previously shut-in. The 7,400 ft. sand will be choked back to 300 bopd to comply with allowables.

One drilling rig and one workover rig continue working in the field.

OIL SHOW '94 TECHNOLOGY PREVIEW

Western Gas Resources Midkiff plant serves the Spraberry area.

Western Gas Resources beoming major player

WESTERN GAS RESOURCES INC., a leader in gas gathering and processing in the Permian Basin and offers producers, has a strong technology reputation. It is known throughout the industry as a technically-orientated company with the in-house ability to design and construct complex facilities to better serve gas producers.

The company has operations in major oil and gas producing basins in the Rocky Mountains, Gulf Coast and southwestern regions of the nation.

Western Gas also owns and operates natural gas gathering, processing and storage facilities and markets and transports natural gas and NGLs. The company provides services to the producers by connecting producers's wells to its gathering systems for delivery to its processing plants, processing the natural gas to remove NGLs and by-products, and marketing the natural gas NGLs throughout the United States.

Other services offered include fractionation, storage, treating and sulfur recovery.

Major Controls shows off liquid level controls

MAJOR CONTROLS INC. — The Tulsa-based company will be displaying its Model 710 series liquid level controls.

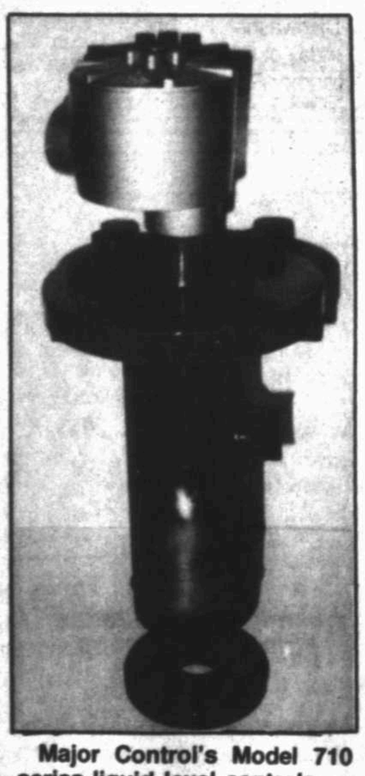
The Model 710 series is comprised of flanged external cage float/displacer controls for use within industries such as the petroleum, chemical processing, power and natural gas.

The controls use a positive magnetic coupling to assure a reliable switch actuation for level alarm or control functions. The 710 series is designed for external mounting to the process vessel, which allows the switch to be isolated from the process when used with isolation valves.

The units also have flanged chambers that allow for period inspection and maintenance and are designed to withstand pressure up to 1,480 psi, temperature up to 1200 degrees Fahrenheit and work in low specific gravity.

Major has incorporated a modular concept into the series, allowing the customer versatility in selecting the most economic combination while custom engineering the control for a particular application.

Options include special alloys, special mounting dimensions and process connections, special actuation points, interface detection, NACE trim, high pressure and temperature units.



Major Control's Model 710 series liquid level controls.

SPE paper says the Arco installation in the North Cowden Deep was able to separate 80 percent of the oil from a well producing 1500 barrel daily of fluid, and thereby eliminate the need to expand conventional separation and handling facilities.

Bower says the ideal ultimate application would be to put the technology downhole to separate oil and water downhole, pumping a clean oil stream to the surface and reinjecting the water into the same sand member or another sand member. He said tests on such a technology were already underway using an esp pump and progressive cavity pumps. A test design is also being worked out for rod pumps.

PORTABLE PILOT — In the last decade many applications have been found for trucked CO_2, one company that is busy expanding those applications is FloCO_2 Inc.

After years of research, testing and development, the company says it has developed Flomaster, a portable CO_2 system, which can be used for pilot floods, injectivity tests and EOR and "Huff n Puff" projects.

The skid-mounted package consists of a triplex pumping system and a computerized monitoring and data recording building where surface pressure, bottomhole pressure, temperature, pumping rates and other pertinent data is recorded and monitored.

FloCO_2 says the unit has been successfully tested on numerous projects, injectivity tests and other EOR projects, including two large pilot floods which used both CO_2 and WAG with continuous 24 hour pumping for a period of six months.

The Flomaster system works by utilizing the high pressure pumps to suction CO_2 from a storage vessel, into a high pressure discharge line, through a CO_2 hearter and into the well.

CASED HOLE EXPLORATION — Computalog says its Pulsed Neutron Decay Spectrum logging system — called PND-S for obvious reasons represents a major breakthrough in cased hole exploration, and eliminates many of the economic roadblocks to the evaluation of exisiting wells.

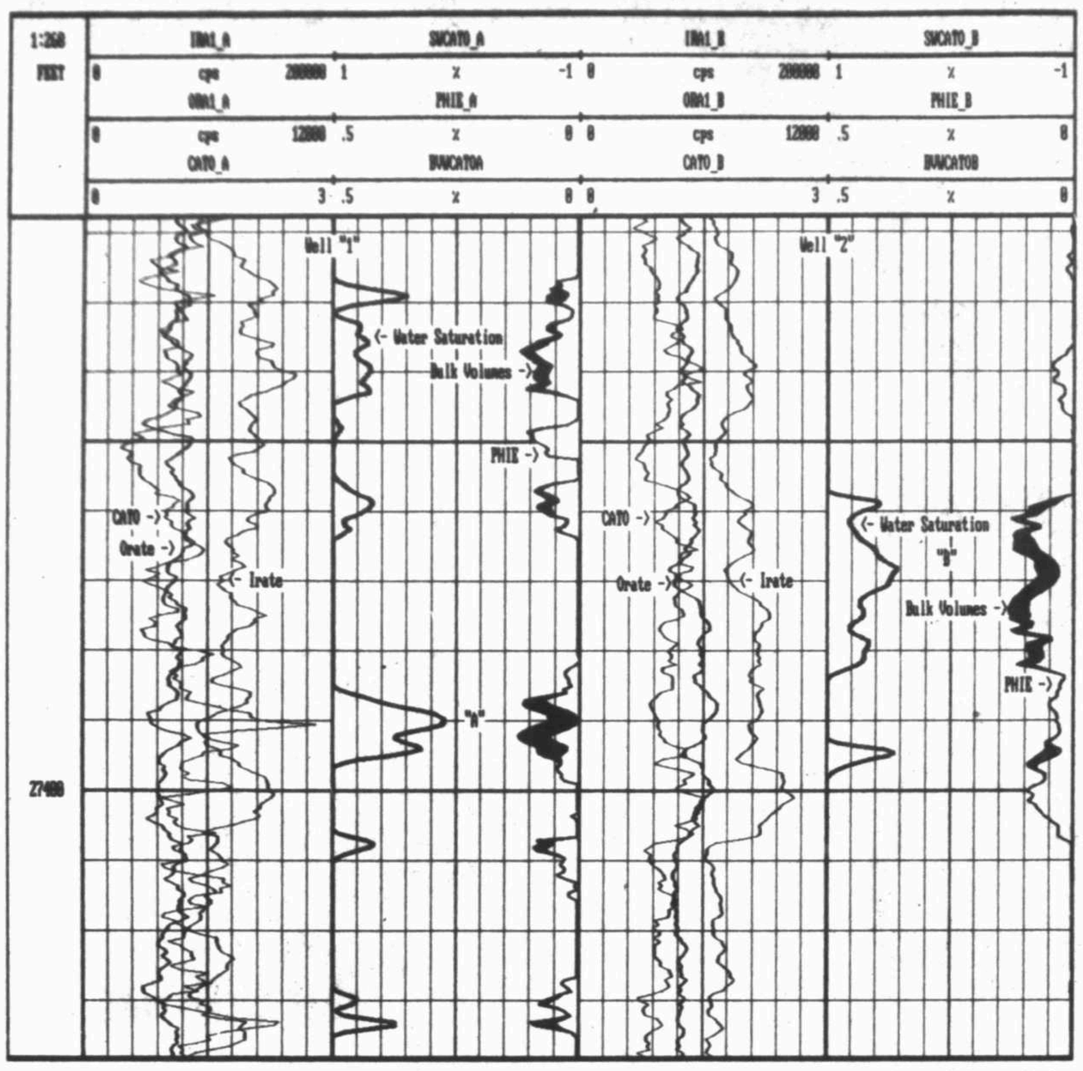
Computalog says the system, for the first time, makes possible simultaneous thru-tubing recording of all data necessary to determine fluid type, amount, and porosity — regardless of water salinity..

In one pass the Pulsed Neutron Decay Spectrum is able to record:

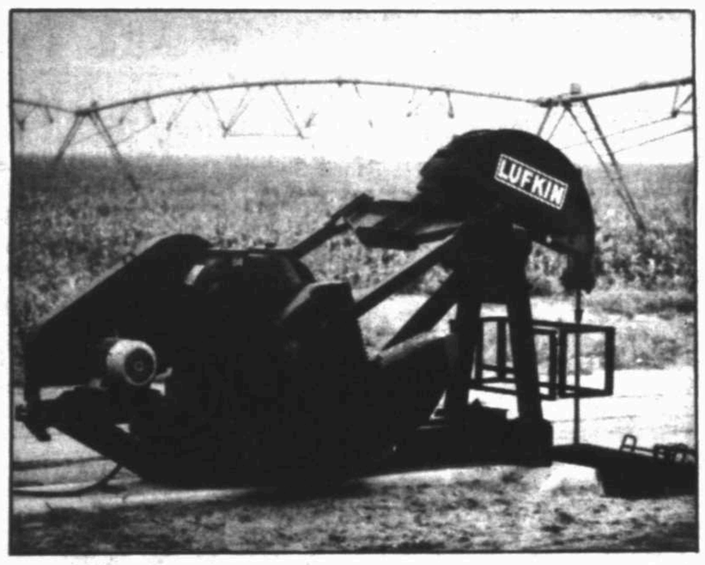
- sigma for water saturation even in high salinity wells,
- ratio for a neutron type porosity,
- capture count rates and inelastic gamma rays to determine fluid type,
- capture and elastic energy windows to calculate water saturations,
- lithology indicators,
- additional porosity indicators for use in fresh and saline formation waters.

PND-S also outputs a Carbon Oxygen type measurement to differentiate fresh water from oil with more sensitivity, and at 5-10 times the logging speed of tranditional C/O measurements.

Oil and gas producers and petroleum engineers will find the system useful for building base logs for future work: identifying fractures, fluid contacts, and thin pay zones: differentiating oil from low salinity water, and CO_2 from methane, also for determining saturation and porosity.



Shown is PND-S data from two wells in a West Texas waterflood. Density and neutron type porosities were calculated on both wells, and water saturations were calculated using CATO. Both wells were then tested, and the tests verified the results obtained using PND-S inelastic data.



A Lufkin low profile pumping unit designed for use in irrigated fields.

Lufkin means reliable technology for today

While the oilpatch is full of high tech, Lufkin Industries has built a reputation on reliable and appropriate technology.

LUFKIN INDUSTRIES — has grown into a leading oilfield pumping unit manufacturer since its founding in 1902, and will be displaying its latest offerings and describing both its various models and assembly, shipping and parts services.

The company began building pumping units in 1923. In 1925, the company introduced the Trout Adjustable Counterbalanced Crank and the first twin crank pumping unit in 1931.

In 1959, the company began marketing the patented Mark II Unitorque pumping unit. Since then, the company has introduced the low profile unit used extensively on farm land with sprinkler systems, and the Reverse Mark unit, an enhanced geometry conventional unit.

Lufkin also operates a fleet of the trailer-mounted portable pumping units designed for temporary pumping needs.

In 1992, the company purchased the rights to manufacture the American brand pumping unit from Guardian Industries and manufactures this unit along with the Churchill line of small pumping units.

Safety service featured by Safety International

The oilpatch is not all nuts and bolts technology. It is also people technology — about keeping a safe and secure workplace for people.

SAFETY INTERNATIONAL INC. — at the Oil Show will be exhibit numerous innovative solutions it has developed for enhanced oil and gas production, hydrocarbon soil remediation, hard surface cleaning and oil storage tank bottom cleaning.

Among its displays will be a company-developed product known as SI-93, a patent pending polymer with silicon and hydrogen as its major components. The product is a strong wetting agent and will wet the interfaces where water, oil and sand meet. Safety International has conducted extensive testing on SI-93 both in the lab and in the field to meet regulatory benchmark for total percent hydrocarbons.

Another service Safety International provides is confined space rescue. The company has developed a rescue team and equipment to assist in the event of a confined space entry. The company has developed a confined space rescue trailer designed for rescue situations in horizontal and vertical applications, featuring equipment designed by Smith Safety Products Inc., which are distributed by Safety International.

The products and services reviewed in this special Oil Show Technology Review were paid for by the manufacturer or provider.

Interface's BeamMount Transducer for measuring loads.

Interface analyzes wells for better performance

INTERFACE INC. provides innovative pumpoff technology to better analyze wells for pumping unit load and downhole analysis.

Among the products Interface will display are the 1923 LoadTrol Load Cell, a full-engineered product for quantitative load measurement for pump off control systems. The predecessor to the current model was designed in 1976. And over 15,000 pumping units send load signals from Interface load cells for control.

The BeamMount transducer was recently designed to be mounted on the walking beam and to provide load signals for qualitative load measurements. Either transducer is compatible with virtually all controllers.

The Scottsdale, Ariz.-based company says it constructs its load transducers from aircraft-quality steel alloy and heat treat the alloys to produce high-tensile strength and excellent performance characteristics. The transducers use a bonded electric strain gage technology made by Interface from a proprietary alloy that promises higher sensitivity and strength for cyclic loading and better corrosion resistance.

Coil tubing technology requires special tools

Coiled tubing is rapidly becoming the new technological wave of the oilpatch, and as more and more coiled tubing goes downhole the need for innovative fishing tools especially designed for coil tubing is on the increase.

HIPP-TRIPPER drilling tools, rented by Sonoma Corp., has developed several products that relate to the coiled tubing drilling and thru-drilling fishing operation.

According to the company, its bread and butter is the "Hipp-Tripper" drilling tools, designed to run on coiled tubing or on threaded pipe. Sonoma rents two different types of tools, the bi-directional and single-directional "Hipp-Tripper."

The bi-directional series of tools are referred to as "drill-jars" and are capable of delivering both upward or downward impact. These tools can be used as a drill, a fishing jar or a combination of both.

The single-directional model is a rotating impact drill which operates on any fluid medium, including diesel and xylene.

5 a day

Text by Elizabeth Edwin

Stop and think about what you eat.

From the time you awake until the time your head hits the pillow, what you put in your mouth is very important to your health.

That is why the National Cancer Institute (NCI) and the Produce for Better Health Foundation have embarked on the largest-ever industry/government joint nutrition education program. It is called "5 A Day."

Basically, 5 A Day is a campaign designed to educate the public about and emphasize the importance of eating five servings of fruits and vegetables each day. This message is considered particularly important in light of the link between a high consumption of fruits and vegetables and lowered cancer risk. For a number of cancers, "people who eat large amounts of fruits and vegetables have about half the risk of cancer of people who eat small amounts," according to Peter Greenwald, director of NCI's Division of Cancer Prevention and Control.

To emphasize the importance of 5 A Day, the NCI and the produce industry are launching their next challenge — National 5 A Day Week, today through Saturday — with the main emphasis on how easy it is to eat 5 A Day.

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

The Summer Mummers Chili Team brought home the gold (first place in Showmanship) from a recent cookoff in Big Bend. The Annual Chili and Brisket Cookoff sponsored by La Kiva Restaurant and Campgrounds was held at Terlingua.

For their winning act, the Midlanders performed "A Testimonial to Chili," co-authored by Bill Larkin and Harry Harrison. They received a signed and numbered bronze sculpture, entitled "The Hungry Buzzard." It will be housed at the Yucca Theatre, home of the Summer Mummers.

The team, which was led by Connie Barnes and Harry Harrison, also was composed of Roger Barnes, Randi Dyson, Todd Slaton, Karl Schmidt, Jeff Latimer, Lorrie Daniel, Mossy Bateson and Susan and Alan Bryant. Susan was the team's chief chili cook.

Harry presented the trophy to Mummers' board president Barbara (Mrs. Rod) Slaton at the closing night cast party last weekend at the home of Myra and Andy Salcedo.

After dining on gourmet fare prepared by the Salcedos, cast and crew heard a report on the 46th successful season of the melodrama, and trophies were awarded by producer Doug Heck to the following Mummers of the Year: Connie and Roger Barnes, Paul Fiorella, Paul Hiebert, and Mark, Pat, Charlotte and Glynn Wornell. Cleverly decorated skimmers also were presented to a number of other volunteers for their outstanding contributions this summer.

AFTER A HONEYMOON to Paris and the wine country of France, Ty Allen and his bride, the former Carolyn Britton, will make their home in the Texas Hill Country, where both are employed by Camp Longhorn. They were married Saturday evening at the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity. A garden reception followed at the home of the bride's parents, Susan and Ron Britton.

Pre-nuptial festivities for the couple began in February with an engagement party at the Brittons' home and continued in May with a weekend of parties.

The wedding weekend got underway Friday evening with a cocktail buffet for the out-of-town guests at the home of Suzy and Jim Boldrick. Also hosting was Connie Scharbauer.

Following the rehearsal dinner hosted at Midland Country Club by the groom's parents, JoAnn McKenzie and Jerry Pritchard and Kathy and Tom Allen, all of Austin, members of the wedding party joined the party in progress at the Boldricks.

Janet and Bob Pollard hosted a wedding day brunch at their home. Co-hosts were Barbara and Jerry Bross, Elizabeth and Byron Greaves, Linnie and Art Donnelly, Mary and Jim Rasmussen and Marsha Swanson.

A light supper was provided at the church for the wedding party by Kay and George Smith, Marilee and Ed Runyan and Anne and Jack Herbig.

VIRGINIA AND ROBERT (Sody) Herrell celebrated 65 years of marriage this past Friday.

The couple were married at Heavenly Rest Episcopal Church in Abilene on Sept. 9, 1929. Robert was from Bartlesville, Okla., and worked for Phillips Petroleum Co. Virginia had moved to Abilene from Amarillo. After their marriage, they moved to Oklahoma City and in 1937 to Midland. Robert became in independent oil operator here in 1943.

To celebrate the milestone anniversary, a family dinner was held Friday evening at the home of the Herrells' daughter and son-in-law, Sharon and Gene Floyd. Saturday night, family members were joined by a few close friends for a dinner at Midland Country Club.

Those attending were the Herrells' other daughter and her husband, Julia and Richard Stafford, and their daughter, Kelly, of Dallas; granddaughter and family, Shannon and Marty Board and Martin and Michael of Dallas; grandson Mike Floyd and his wife, Jana of Fort Worth; grandson and family, Bobby and Sharon Floyd and Michelle, Robert, Michael and Coleman of Midland, and Robert's sister, Gladys Alagood of Shreveport, La.

Also, friends Vee Ross, Ginny Powell, Jess and Ann Lindsey, Hugh and Marge Post, Boots and Louise Goode, all of Midland, and Karlene (Mrs. Dick) Garber of Santa Monica, Calif.

BRADLEY REDDELL BLACKWELL and Brittany Lee Blackwell, the twins of Barry and Rise Blackwell of Roswell, N.M., were introduced to family and friends at a "Come and Peek" party held in the home of Wade and Julia Colburn last weekend.

The twins, born on July 11 and weighing in at seven pounds one ounce and six pounds eight ounces, were welcomed by their sister, two-year-old Bailey.

Grandparents of the twins are Jean Reddell and Pat and Richard Blackwell, all of Midland.

Other hostesses for the party were Kari Watson Bramer of Dallas and Katy Reddell of Midland.

Among those dropping by were the twins' aunt, Kelly Blackwell (Mrs. Curtis) Duggan, Paula (Mrs. Fred) Mitchell, Joann (Mrs. Glenn) Gardner, Jean (Mrs. Samuel) Howard, Lou (Mrs. Webb) Farish and Rosenelle Cherry.

BRANSON, MO., and the Lake of the Ozarks were the honeymoon destination for Bruce Marczynski and his bride, the former Kristin Wilson. They are now at home in Lubbock, where he is manager of Harrigans Restaurant, and she is manager of The Black-Eyed Pea.

The couple were married on Sept. 3 at First United Methodist Church, with a reception in the church parlor hosted by the bride's parents, Barbara and Clyde Wilson.

Kristin was honored in Midland with a miscellaneous shower given by Chris (Mrs. Fred) Newman, Frances (Mrs. Larry) Stapp, Carol (Mrs. Jack) Mangan and Brenda (Mrs. Harold) Eldridge at the Newman home and in Lubbock with a lingerie shower given by aunts, Rhydora Graham and Janie (Mrs. Al) Fowler.

The rehearsal dinner was hosted at the Plaza Club by the groom's parents, Donna and Lou Marczynski.

DAY: Alter diet to include 5 A Day

(From 1F)

For this week, consumers are being challenged to make an effort to eat at least five servings of fruits and vegetables every day. By designating a week where attention is paid to what is eaten each day, the campaign sponsors hope consumers will realize it will take little alteration in their established eating patterns in order to fulfill the 5 A Day quota.

Statistics from NCI surveys showed that most Americans already eat three servings of fruits and vegetables every day. Therefore, the challenge to add two more servings should not be a difficult one.

The 5 A Day Week campaign lists snacking as a good time to add servings of vegetables or fruits to your diet, particularly for those who already do eat three servings a day. For example, instead of that doughnut that helps ease the hunger pangs until lunch, grab a banana or a glass of juice. Or replace that afternoon chocolate bar with some cut-up vegetables. With those minor alterations, you've added the two servings needed to fill out your 5 A Day.

If you are one of those people who doesn't always incorporate at least three servings a day in your diet, eating 5 A Day may be a little more of a challenge, but far from impossible. It's really a matter of changing your mind-set when selecting what you will eat.

SINCE MORE than 50 percent of Americans eat at least one meal a day out, according to the National Restaurant Association, it's important to pay special attention to keep the 5 A Day goal in mind when ordering.

Many restaurants already are adjusting to consumers' wishes by adding more entree salads and stir-fried vegetables to their menus. Vegetables seasoned with only lemon or herbs also are a popular choice. Many restaurants also are willing substitute healthier side dish items in place of such things as french fries.

Even Texas Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry is encouraging Texans to join in the 5 A Day Week; however, he wants Texans "to think the Lone Star Way to 5 A Day."

"Because of the great diversity of soils and climate in Texas, something is almost always in season," Perry said. "The advantage of eating Texas-grown fruits and vegetables is the freshness. Many items are harvested and in the grocery store or farmers' market within hours of being picked. Of course, some of these fine Texas fruits and vegetables also are canned and frozen. The important thing is to get five servings a day to improve your intake of important vitamins, minerals and fiber."

According to the Texas Department of Agriculture (TDA), a serving is defined as ½ cup of fruit, ¾ cup of juice, ½ cup of cooked vegetables, 1 cup of leafy vegetables or ¼ cup dried fruit.

It is important to select fruits and vegetables that are high in vitamins A and C, and fiber should be included in the diet every day. TDA information lists that cabbage family vegetables such as broccoli, cauliflower, brussels sprouts and cabbage should be eaten several times a week.

"Right now, Texas apples are coming off trees," Perry said. "When you bite into a Texas apple, it will crunch and spray a little juice. Most of the apples on sale now from other states are still last year's crop that have been stored all winter. One bite of a Texas apple and you'll search for and demand fruit grown in the Lone Star State.

"Many melons are still being harvested in Texas and fresh vegetables will be available well into the fall," he said. "Texans are lucky to have fresh produce nearly year-round. This makes meeting the 5 A Day requirement easier and tastier."

THE 5 A DAY program began three years ago. Since then, more than 30,000 retail stores across the country have signed on to encourage consumers to eat more fruits and vegetables.

According to the 5 A Day quarterly newsletter, "Last year, even the Professional Football Athletic Trainers Society and the National Football League became involved, with videos showing how super-athletes, such as the Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys, eat fresh fruits and vegetables at their training tables.

In addition, the Texas Department of Agriculture has been licensed in the program since 1992.

In just two years, awareness of the need to eat more fruits and vegetables has more than tripled, according to an Omnibus survey conducted for the NCI in September 1993.

For those who need help with their dietary planning , or would like more information about special diet concerns, Memorial Hospital and Medical Center has an information line available at 685-0944.

Teen mothers confuse babies with dolls

By Erma Bombeck

For years, doll makers have been trying to design a toy for a child to view as a real baby. Manufacturers have come up with little babies that eat, cry, crawl and muss their pants. With a microchip in their backs, some can even say loving things like, "I love you, mama," or "I want to take a nap."

Bombeck

Somewhere we've sent out the wrong message. Teen-age pregnancies have reached epidemic proportions in this country — half a million a year. These babies are born to a generation of little girls who believe all it takes to raise a baby is a comb and a change of clothes.

There have been several attempts to impress young people with the awesome responsibilities of raising a child. A few years ago, educators coupled students together and gave them an egg to care for day and night in an attempt to point out how fragile and constant parenthood can be. Later, someone came up with the idea of carrying sacks of flour so teen-agers could get the feeling of lugging around a helpless bit of humanity and being tied down by it.

Recently an unemployed rocket scientist came out with a doll called "Baby Think It Over." The one thing that gets your attention with this doll is that at random intervals, day or night, it will let loose with a high-pitched cry that could make you sterile. The only way it can be silenced is to insert a key in its back and hold it there for 20 to 30 minutes — the average time it takes to feed a newborn.

I've got news for all you girls out there vying for Miss Raging Hormone. A sack of flour, an egg and a recorded scream don't begin to cover what you're in for.

A doll isn't real. The smile is painted on its face. For the first few months a real baby doesn't do a lot of that.

When a doll becomes chipped or damaged, you can get it fixed. When babies get sick, that's not always the case.

Doll babies become boring because they don't do anything. You have to move their arms and talk for them. Same way with a real baby. The only difference is you can sling a doll under your bed where it can make a life among the dust balls. You can't outgrow a real baby and go on to another toy.

The biggest difference between make-believe and reality is that with a real baby there is no Ken in a box. You're on your own.

Dolls are supposed to be fantasies. They're a part of childhood. Exchange it for a real baby, and you have just given up a part of your life that, once relinquished, can never be yours again.

Entering fair's horticulture event takes planning

By Deborah A. Benge

It's been a tough year for gardening — all the more reason to show off your green thumb. If you've got flowers, fruits, vegetables and even trees and shrubs, be sure to bring them to the Permian Basin Fair Sept. 13.

Benge

We've all seen those "blue ribbon" plates of tomatoes and wondered what they had that all those other beautiful entries didn't. Well, here are a few guidelines that should help when selecting horticultural entries for the fair.

When selecting horticulture specimens for the fair, there are certain criteria you should consider. Look for specimens that are true to type, of good quality, in the correct stage of maturity, free from pest or mechanical damage, are correctly prepared for show and have the correct number of specimens for that entry (see schedule).

Now let's take a look at some specifics with different horticulture categories.

FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

Uniformity of the sample is key to the entry. A wining sample should be uniform in size, shape and color. For example, if you've got one big beautiful tomato and two medium size tomatoes, the sample is automatically downgraded due to a lack of uniformity of size. Three nice medium-sized tomatoes will do much better than the mismatched entry.

Stems can play an important role in competition. With tomatoes it is proper to have stems or no stems, but the sample should not be mismatched. With summer and winter squash, stems are a must to prolong storage life. Fruits and vegetables that are harvested with a knife should have stems trimmed neatly and trimmed to the same length. Some plants have stems with a natural breaking area, such as tomatoes, peppers and apples which have stems that will separate from the plant at a designated area. Care should be taken when separating to make sure that there are no tears, especially into the fruit or vegetable itself.

When it comes to judging, entry preparation could be the deciding factor in a close call. The type of preparation will vary with the plant. Many samples merely need to have the dirt washed off and be gently dried. Squash, tomatoes, peppers, apples and pears are all examples. Some may need careful rinsing and air drying so the natural bloom isn't removed. Grapes and plums fall into this category. Root crops need rinsing and the leaves and long stringy roots trimmed off. Scrubbing to remove dirt from potatoes, carrots and others is a no-no. The scrubbing will leave marks, remove natural barriers to rot and shorten the storage life of the various crops. Onions only need the loose dirt removed with the tops and roots trimmed. It would be a mistake to remove the loose papery covering.

Gather your samples early in the morning when the moisture content is the highest and plants are the freshest. Try to avoid harvesting during the heat of the day. Samples taken during the heat tend to wilt and shrivel, and don't last long.

FLOWERS

Select flowers that are just about to reach their prime. Buds should be opening, showing color and not be too tight. Under most circumstances, they will be fully open for judging. Collect specimens in the morning while it's cool and moisture levels are highest. Cut stems with a sharp knife or shears at a diagonal to expose more tissue. Be as generous with stem length — you can always shorten them if needed. Cut stems with a sharp knife or shears, since dull tools will crush stem tissue interfering with water movement up into plant. Place cut stems immediately in warm water and as soon as possible, store them out of direct sunlight and wind.

Flowers with a milky sap or hollow stems must have the cut stem seared with an open flame to seal it. This will stop the sap from streaming out of the plant.

If flowers are wilted, you can try reviving them by recutting the stems and putting them in warm water. Don't cover the flowers or the majority leaves with water, but submerge as much of the stem as possible and let them stand until they've recovered.

Strip the lower leaves off the stems that will be below the water line once they are placed in their display containers. Be careful to leave an attractive amount of leaves as part of your entry.

If it will be a day or so before entering your flowers, store them under refrigeration to keep them fresh. Preservatives will help cut down on bacteria and prolong life if you choose to use one, but fresh, clean water will do as well.

WOODY PLANTS

Trees, shrubs and vines can all be entered in the horticulture show. If it is a flowering tree or shrub, you'll want to display it with those flowers. If it bears a fruit or showy seed pod, you'll want to select branches that feature those.

Woody stems will need several two- to three-inch long vertical cuts up the stem. Or you can pound the lower two or three inches of the stem with pliers or hammer. Both of these methods will increase the amount of cut or exposed surface area available to take up water. Be generous in the length of your specimens, as they can always be shortened once you get them to the show. Display rules require these to be cut and displayed at certain lengths. The minimum and maximum lengths are 20-30 inches for trees and shrubs, and 12-24 inches for vines.

There are other interesting categories of plants you can take advantage of. There are Container Grown Plants, Hanging Container Grown, Dish Gardens, Cacti and Succulents, Greenhouse Grown, Ornamental Grasses, Nuts, Native Plants and even a Garden Oddities section.

For more information on the Permian Basin Fair Horticulture Show, call 684-8540 or call the Ector or Midland County extension offices at 335-3071 or 687-1351. Pick up a horticulture show schedule from the extension offices, garden centers or feed stores.

For all entries, bring the variety and cultivar name of each entry. If there are some plants you don't know the proper name of, classifiers at the horticulture show can assist you. Bring a few extra specimen of entries, just in case of an accident while transporting entries to the fair. Entries will be taken 9 a.m.-8 p.m. Tuesday.

DEAR ABBY

Wedding is celebration, not reward for 'good behavior'

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Please advise the daughter of "Mother of the Bride" that she can find a pastor from another Christian church to marry her and her fiance. I know lots of people who have lived together before marriage (and people who have been divorced) who have found sympathetic pastors who allow God's presence to be part of their marriage ceremonies. She just needs to look outside of the Catholic Church. It is ironic that in an effort to punish this couple for living together before marriage, the mother and the Catholic Church refuse to allow this couple to marry, which means they must continue living together outside of marriage, a position which makes it impossible for the couple to end the "sin"!

Van Buren

Unfortunately, the church is so focused on maintaining authority, it forgets that the message of Christ was one of reconciliation and love. What is important about this couple's relationship is that they are committed to each other, and that their life together is an expression of their commitment to God.

Mother and the church should take this opportunity to be a witness to their faith by offering the couple forgiveness. Living their lives in the presence of God means much more than obeying the rules of the Catholic Church. — ANOTHER POINT OF VIEW

DEAR A.P.O.V.: Thank you for this opportunity to suggest that the Unitarian Church responds to situations like this in a most enlightened way. Many readers have also felt strongly about that column. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: In response to the letter from "Mother of the Bride," Marsha and Brad seem like normal young adults, trying to live, love and marry according to God's law. Their condemnation by her mother is tragic, unwarranted and undeserved. It's interesting that after all her self-righteous babble, she was too ashamed to sign her name.

I am a staunch Roman Catholic — educated by the Jesuits throughout high school and college — and I can tell her with certainty that most of the Jesuits who taught me would condemn her profoundly. In this entire premarital mess, the mother is the only sinner. Her ONLY obligation in this matter is to stand by her daughter, and support her psychologically and in every way possible. In 20 years, when she goes to visit her daughter and her family, and they throw her out, she'll ask, "What did I do wrong?"

I speak with authority; I was there. In 1960, my wife and I married in the face of considerable opposition. Betty was a superb wife and mother. She raised three beautiful children, but we could never forget the cloud that hung over what should have been one of the happiest days of our lives. Betty died three years ago, during the 31st year of a wonderful marriage.

For God's sake, Mother, help your daughter, PLEASE! — LEONARD J. DE CARLO, M.D., OKLAHOMA CITY

DEAR DR. DE CARLO: Thank you for a wonderful letter. I hope Mother sees it, and gets your message. Some readers wrote asking why I had assumed that this conservative mother had not shared her feelings with her daughter when she was maturing. In her letter, Mother said she was "thrilled" when the church refused to provide a priest for the nuptials "due to the fact that Marsha and Brad were living together unmarried," adding, "I haven't shared my feelings with Marsha because it would cause a fight."

Abigail Van Buren's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Children know about proper nutrition

HACKETTSTOWN, N.J. (AP) — Young people today know a lot about nutrition and healthful eating, a new study reveals.

More than 54 percent of the 700 children surveyed knew that a well-balanced diet should include fruits and vegetables and some fats.

About seven in 10 believed, correctly, that diets should also include some sugar and salt.

In the survey of youngsters between 8 and 17, conducted by the Gallup Organization for Kudos Whole Grain Bars, more than half said they were more influenced by their parents' food choices than by their peers' choices.

Rolf Hechler, superintendent of Elephant Butte Lake State Park, N.M., stands in front of the rocky hill that gave the lake its name. More than one million people visit the lake each year.

Paradise found in desert

By Katherine Shelley

ELEPHANT BUTTE LAKE STATE PARK, N.M. (AP) — It's a water paradise in the desert, a lake named for a rocky hill in its middle that resembles an elephant.

Elephant Butte Lake State Park attracts millions of people every year. It offers fishing, boating, camping, jet skiing, knee boarding, water skiing, scuba diving, parasailing, swimming, canoeing, sailing and golfing.

During the holidays, there are boat races, fireworks shows, volleyball tournaments and chili cookoffs.

Despite its location — in the middle of a desert with few or no trees — people flock to the 43-mile-long lake each year, especially during the peak months of March through September.

One sunburned visitor, 13-year-old Sharon Knobelsdorf of Albuquerque, said during a recent trip to the lake that she and her family have made Elephant Butte their refuge every summer for the past seven to eight years.

"We come boating and play water sports," said the teen-ager, whose face showed the result of six days of almost non-stop sun. "We come here for two weeks every summer. There aren't a lot of trees, but that's OK."

An Odessa, Texas, woman said her family loves the lake.

"We bring the kids out here and have a good time every once in a while," Georgie Armstrong said.

Elephant Butte Lake — established in 1965 as a state park — is a water oasis for 1.4 million to 2 million people largely from Texas, New Mexico and most recently, Arizona, said park superintendent Rolf Hechler.

"We see a lot of people from Albuquerque and El Paso," Hechler said. "But I've also been seeing a lot of people from Arizona. Their lakes are crowded. Most (Arizona) people are from Tucson."

The lake, about 145 miles south of Albuquerque, offers around 110 developed sites with electricity to accommodate people with trailers. Nightly camping fees for those spaces are $11.

> 'We bring the kids out here (Elephant Butte Lake State Park, N.M.) and have a good time every once in a while.'
> — Georgie Armstrong
> Odessa resident

An additional 125 developed sites without electricity cost $7 a night. All other campsites at the lake are considered "primitive" and cost $6 a night. Comfort stations with showers, electric hookups and an RV dump station are also offered.

And for those who don't like to live primitively, there are motels at Elephant Butte and nearby Truth or Consequences.

The lake is also a picnic haven for many residents, such as Angel Magdaleno, who lives in Truth or Consequences.

"Every other week, we get our friends together and come to socialize and swim in the lake," Magdaleno said. "We never stay too long, but it's a nice place to come to relax and enjoy the sun."

Elephant Butte dam was completed in 1916, and the lake was intended for recreation and irrigation purposes. The lake traps water from the Rio Grande and can hold up to 2 million acre-feet of water, Hechler said.

At the time the dam was completed, it was the largest structure to impound water ever built in the United States.

Hechler said this year's high water level covers more beach, making it harder to fit in people. But they still come and manage to find room, he said.

More people also has me..nt increasing problems at the lake, Hechler said. Violence during major holidays has increased, and park officials now are looking for ways to remedy the situation.

"We have problems during the major holiday weekends," Hechler said. "Last July 4, we had a lot of gun-related calls. Hopefully, it's not a trend.

"But there are plans to control the situation in the future and make it safe for families. I don't want us to be known as a party place," he said.

Some proposals being considered include banning alcohol in certain areas of the lake, handling parties and large groups with lots of law enforcement and increasing patrols during the holidays, Hechler said.

"We're really looking at ways to try to make the lake safer for the public," he said.

"I have for many years past, contemplated the noble race of red men who are now spread over these trackless forests and boundless prairies, melting away at the approach of civilization . . . and I have flown to their rescue . . . (that) phoenix-like, they may rise from the 'stain of a painter's palette,' and live again upon canvass."

— George Catlin

A singular driving passion fueled artist George Catlin's work.

"He had one major ambition that was very important to him: that this tremendous body of work — some 600 paintings — eventually become part of the national archives," said Wendell Ott, director of the Museum of the Southwest.

"He wanted this to go to the Smithsonian where it would be a permanent body of work about the Indians and their leaders.

"And he was frustrated politically in that respect. He was never able to achieve that during his lifetime . . . It did happen, but it happened two years after his death."

Catlin, who died in 1872, was absorbed by his desire to document the West and the tribes of Indians occu-

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: An interest in art will bring both great pleasure and new profits. Beauty plays an important role in business as well as romance. Avoid making impulsive decisions. Your kind and sympathetic attitude helps restore harmony within the family circle.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Postpone travel; you may be able to achieve the same results by making phone calls and writing letters. Go ahead and reach out for help. Friends and relatives are just waiting to be asked.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Push ahead full steam! A longtime romantic relationship could suddenly change. Be careful when dealing in real estate. Trust experts' advice. Do not let domestic worries or self-doubt interfere with your creative genius.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Other people may be more objective than you right now. Listen to the advice of an old friend who has your best interests at heart. A reunion could put you in a nostalgic mood.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be prepared to accept additional domestic responsibilities. New emotional rewards are part of the picture. Pursue romance. A hunch will pay off.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Stop making excuses for someone. Instead, encourage this person to stand on their own two feet. Mate or partner will be unusually enthusiastic about certain entertainment plans.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your romantic partner could make you happy by showing up unexpectedly. Clear up a financial matter without further delay. A loved one has an idea that proves to be the sensible thing to do.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Exchanging ideas with your loved ones gives you new hope for the future. Your social life gets a shot in the arm following a chance meeting with a member of the opposite sex.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your creative talents come to the fore now. Deal with someone's hostility in a mature manner. The financial outlook improves. Powerful influences are at work on your behalf.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Seize an unusual opportunity before it slips from your grasp. It could solve a recurring career or financial problem. The person you love most may be worried about you — offer reassurance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An atmosphere of understanding and cooperation is what makes a happy home. Let your hair down. Ask loved ones to help reduce a strain on your budget. Write any letters that are overdue.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An honest appraisal of a troubling situation will serve you much better than wishful thinking. The truth must be faced! A telephone call brings welcome news about the folks from home.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It takes the presence of loved ones for you to fully enjoy life's pleasures. Working all the time is depleting. Plan a special trip to see someone you think about often.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♡

Are you surprised to see how many contracts South fails to make in the bridge columns? Are you convinced you could do better? If so, cover the East and West hands with your thumbs and decide how you would play three no trump after the lead of a low heart.

The auction is textbook. All that remains is to make the contract, rendered difficult by the fact tnat North's queen of hearts is a wasted asset.

Since you can afford to give up the lead only once before the defenders establish at least three tricks in hearts to go with their minor-suit aces, you have not counted your tricks if, after winning the first trick, you started on diamonds. An opponent will win and return a heart, and you have only eight tricks — three spades, three diamonds and two hearts — before the defenders get five.

Does that mean you must lower the flag? Not yet. There is one possibility which will allow you to score nine tricks before the opponents get their hearts going. You must find East with a bare queen of clubs!

Win the king of hearts and bang down the king of clubs. This is your lucky day — the lady falls from the East hand as West wins the ace. All that remains is to take the heart return, finesse the eight of clubs, return to hand with a spade and repeat the finesse for the ten of clubs. That allows you to score four club tricks and nine in all.

Can't West defeat you by holding up the ace of clubs for two rounds? No. After the second club wins you switch to diamonds, and rake in an overtrick.

A project of the Arts Assemby of Midland

Theater group refurbishes old movie house

DALHART (AP) — The LaRita Performing Arts Theatre's major makeover still lacks a few finishing touches.

But when volunteers wrap up the overhaul — a thorough gutting, a bout with asbestos and new decor — the old movie house will reopen as an elegant showplace for live drama.

If it hadn't been for intervention by Dalhart Community Theatre Inc., board president Carol Hendrix said, "the prettiest building in downtown Dalhart would have fallen in, and we would have lost part of our heritage."

The LaRita opened in 1923 and became a popular hangout for movie buffs. Board member Susan Clay recalled watching Roy Rogers and Gene Autry matinees there.

But in 1957, after Dalhart's post-World War II population dropped off and TV sets were rooting firmly in most living rooms, the theater closed. The building was used temporarily as a warehouse.

The 200-member community theater group, meanwhile, was needing a home for its performances. They had meandered show-to-show from the Chamber of Commerce auditorium, to a restaurant and even a coliseum that serves as a bull barn.

So the group paid $15,000 for the theater in 1989.

"There's a lot of history in these walls . . . a lot of memories here," Ms. Hendrix mused during a recent tour.

Sawhorses, boards and a ladder cluttered the stage. Bare light bulbs dangled from exposed wires. Fine dust coated the folding chairs.

But signs of elegance emerged through the mess.

The balcony and box seats overlooked a proscenium arch of colored tiles. The paint job was fresh, the roof was new and some of the original loveseats were ready for re-installment.

Ms. Hendrix said the theater group was aiming for the feel of a turn-of-the-century opera house. She hopes to finish renovations this year.

"I think because it's such a different project and something that our community is going to be proud of, it'll be a showplace," said board member Kevin Caddell.

"It's a thing that caught the imagination of our community," Caddell said. "Even people who never had anything to do with theater, or that part of culture, have kind of been taken by this project."

Plans for the finished product include a costume room, guest director's suite and space to seat about 300 people. Workers still need to put up handrails and other trim; the box office and lobby aren't ready either.

Ms. Hendrix said she expects to spend about $500,000 — money raised mostly through donations, grants and the sale of box seats. Volunteers handled about 70 percent of the remodeling, she said.

Residents say culture isn't forsaken in this Texas Panhandle hub for ranching and rodeo.

"Dalhart is a very sophisticated town," Ms. Hendrix said. "We're very proud of our western heritage and don't let it drop for a second. But we're very into the arts."

ART: 19th century artist paints portrait of American Indians

pying that vast expanse of land.

"He was very sensitive to the plight of the Indian, especially considering the time he was working. He was very much an advocate to restore and maintain as much as he could of their history and their culture."

The museum, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is hosting a major exhibition of Catlin's work through Nov. 6. Midland is the only stop on the tour of "First Artist of the West: Paintings and Watercolors by George Catlin from the Gilcrease Museum."

The Midland showing marks the first venue on the exhibition's national tour after its initial showing at the Tulsa, Okla., musuem that developed the exhibit.

For the first time, the museum is charging admission to see an exhibition. The fee is $2 for museum members, free for their children 12 and under, $3 for non-member adults and $1 for children 12 and younger. The fee is a means of funding a portion of the exhibition's cost.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. For more information call 683-2882.

Born 1796 in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Catlin grew up on the family's plantation where he roamed the woods and participated in his favorite pastimes of hunting and fishing. He also collected the evidence of Indian life found when the Catlin fields were plowed.

He began studying law in 1817, but by 1823 had abandoned law for what was to become his life's work.

"Another and stronger passion was getting the advantage of me, that of painting," Catlin said. "I very deliberately resolved to convert my law library into paint pots and brushes and to pursue painting as my future and apparently more agreeable profession."

His first Indian portrait — of the Seneca orator Red Jacket — was completed in 1826. In the late 1820s, congressional legislation was pending to remove all the eastern tribes across the Mississippi River. Catlin was determined to capture on canvas all of the tribes of North America and set out in 1830 on his first trip into the wilderness.

"This man literally adventured into the wilderness to meet with the Indians at a time when the American frontier was very much that," Ott said. "It was still wild and wooly."

Not all of the dangers came from man or nature, said Ott, recalling a U.S. Army expedition Catlin joined that was headed into the Texas-Oklahoma area.

"He was going to accompany the Army troops to meet with the Comanches and Apaches. The original orders called for a troop of 850 soldiers and 450 troopers started out. They were beset after they got out into the wilderness with cholera and only 200 soldiers returned from that expedition. Catlin himself spent four or five days on a litter where he could not stand or walk.

"I mention this particular story just to emphasize it wasn't only the conflict we think of in the lore and legends of the West — cowboys and Indians fighting. There was a lot of other hardships these people endured as they explored and adventured into the West."

Catlin, on a trip up the Missouri, had his small boat capsize. The accident cost him close to 200 paintings and sketches representing six months of work.

Catlin also experienced his share of cultural misunderstandings.

"He was painting portraits of some of the Plains Indians and unknowingly painted one in profile, and the painting became quite a controversial thing," Ott said. "The other Indian chieftains looked at the painting and they said, 'Well, this artist thinks that this warrior is only half a man.' And it became quite a difficulty for that individual socially in the tribe as well as for Catlin as an artist to explain his way out. That explains why most, if not all, are full view. He didn't do profiles after that."

The politics of the time played a role in keeping Catlin from seeing his goal of having his body of work entered into the Smithsonian.

"There's been a lot of discussion over the years about the aesthetic quality of his work," Ott said. "Even during his time, there was mixed reviews — everything from total acceptance from the American Academy of design to a complete pan by some of his contemporary artists. For example, Audubon was very much a critic of Catlin's work.

"We don't always understand the politics and that very much colored the critical reviews and response to his work at that time."

By the end of his career, Catlin had visited 146 tribes.

"I feel he is one of the most important artists in American painting in terms of establishing a new subject matter for American art," Ott said. "And as one writer had written, 'After Catlin, every artist who attempted Western subjects was obliged to pay homage to his buffalo hunting scenes.'"

At a time when human service needs are changing rapidly, maximizing and focusing the available resources become a critical reality. This report is the result of effort put forth by many people who have been challenged by the shifting service demands and who are also involved in raising and allocating scarce resources. This major research project was coordinated by United Way of Midland but was sponsored by many and represents the second comprehensive community needs assessment conducted in partnership during the last six years.

Midland Introspective '93 was coordinated by the efforts of a Steering Committee chaired by K. Michael Conaway and an Oversight Committee comprised of almost 100 Midlanders to assure broad representation and community involvement.

Members of the Steering Committee deserve special recognition for their time, energy and talent shared in the completion of this project. Sincere appreciation and thanks are also extended to United Way of Midland staff who have been most generous in their efforts to assist with the data collection, coordination and development of this project. Appreciation is also extended to Casa de Amigos staff who willingly donated time and expertise to translate the surveys from English to Spanish.

Midland Introspective wishes to thank all who responded to the survey. From representatives of local human service agencies to the high school students, all respondents are commended for donating their time and effort to improve the quality of life for all Midlanders.

Last but not least, appreciation is extended to Davidson Family Charitable Foundation, Permian Basin Area Foundation, City of Midland, Midland Independent School District, Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, Midland College, Midland County, Junior League of Midland, Midland Chamber of Commerce, Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, and United Way of Midland for the financial support of this project.

Midland Introspective is proud to offer this report to the community. It identifies the many human service problems that we face and the challenges for our tomorrows. The work has just begun -- the volunteer leadership of Midland Introspective invites you and other community groups to offer suggestions so that together we can better address our current problems.

INTRODUCTION

Midland Introspective '93 is the second time Midland residents have been surveyed to assess current human service needs. Like Midland Introspective '88, this project assembled a broad spectrum of service providers, community leaders, students, and randomly selected households in an effort to identify current needs.

Midland Introspective '93 was convened by the United Way of Midland and sponsored by the City of Midland, Davidson Family Charitable Foundation, Junior League of Midland, Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Midland Chamber of Commerce, Midland College, Midland County, Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Midland Independent School District, Permian Basin Area Foundation and United Way of Midland. A Steering Committee, comprised of twelve Midlanders, and an Oversight Committee made up of almost 100, guided the process in consultation with Renee M. Zimmerman from Wichita, Kansas.

The Midland Introspective '93 project was a modification and expansion of the United Way of America's "Compass" model which was developed in concert between United Way of America and the Gannett Foundation in 1987. The broadly inclusive process had several parts:

- A mailed survey to 2,000 randomly selected households.
- The gathering and analysis of secondary data about human service issues in City of Midland, Midland County, State of Texas and United States.
- A mailed survey to 96 representatives of non-profit agencies who are direct providers of services in Midland County.
- A mailed survey to 181 community leaders.
- The distribution of a "Youth Survey" to over 200 MISD students who were randomly selected through local high school English classes.

This executive summary presents major findings on the current issues facing all of us.

METHODOLOGY

The methods used for the Midland Introspective '93 were standard survey practices discussed in most social research texts. There were four major populations selected as relevant sampling frames from which data was collected: agencies, community leaders, households, and youth.

All respondents were asked to rate a series of "issues for their neighborhood." These ratings were based on the respondents' perceptions with regard to areas such as affordable child day care, crime, employment, drug abuse, etc. The ratings were based on a scale from "never occurs" to "don't know if it occurs or not in my neighborhood."

Another section of the survey dealt with real "household issues" experienced within the past twelve months by the respondent or any member of their household. Respondents were asked to rate the severity of the issue experienced on a scale from "not an issue at all" to "don't know if it was an issue or not in my family." For example, not having enough money for food; not being able to pay the utility bills; having a lot of anxiety, stress, or depression were rated by each respondent.

In the third section of the survey, respondents were asked to identify whose primary responsibility (besides the individual or family) it is to address various issue areas with financial resources. The options given were: charity, government, or a combination of these two groups.

Finally, the respondents were asked to identify three top and three least important priorities for Midland County from a list of 40 different variables.

Survey Distribution & Response Rate

Survey	Distributed	Returned	Response Rate
Households	2,000	422	21.10%
Agency Representatives	96	45	46.88%
Community Leaders	181	106	58.56%
Students	280	74	26.43%
TOTAL	2,557	647	25.30%

The household survey was mailed to 2,000 households by using a random stage proportional sampling technique. A total of 422 surveys were returned of which 414 were usable. Although higher response rates are more desirable, this survey's response rate of 21% is adequate in that it exceeds the 20% minimum response rate level widely accepted by statisticians working in the social service sector. The sample of households involved used several stages of random selection to help assure that a representative population had been chosen. For example, Midland County contains 5 different residential zip codes and 26 census tracts.

If a census tract contained ten percent of the total population of all census tracts, then ten percent of the predetermined number of surveys were distributed to the residents of that census tract. This method of selection was also applied to blocks within the census tracts and houses within each block. Specific households were then drawn using a random table of numbers and the crisscross directory.

While this method of randomness is very time consuming, it does assure that every household has an equal chance of being selected which is not the case when phone book selection or mailing lists are used for social research efforts.

Actual percentage returns from the household surveys ranged from a low of 7.9 percent to a high of 38.46 percent. Table 2 displays the household survey responses received from the various residential census tracts. Missing from the table below are the responses from three census tracts. For reasons unknown the surveys mailed to census tracts 101.04, 3.03, and 11 were not returned. However, the omission of this data does not compromise the results of the survey.

Each respondent group was asked to identify:

- Perceived issues in their neighborhood,
- Real issues for them and their household,
- Top three priorities for Midland County,
- Least three priorities for Midland County,
- Most appropriate funding source for each issue listed,
- Safety/Comfort of neighborhood,
- Their sociodemographic characteristics,
- Their volunteer and charity contribution practices and,
- Agencies perceived to be addressing community needs with success.

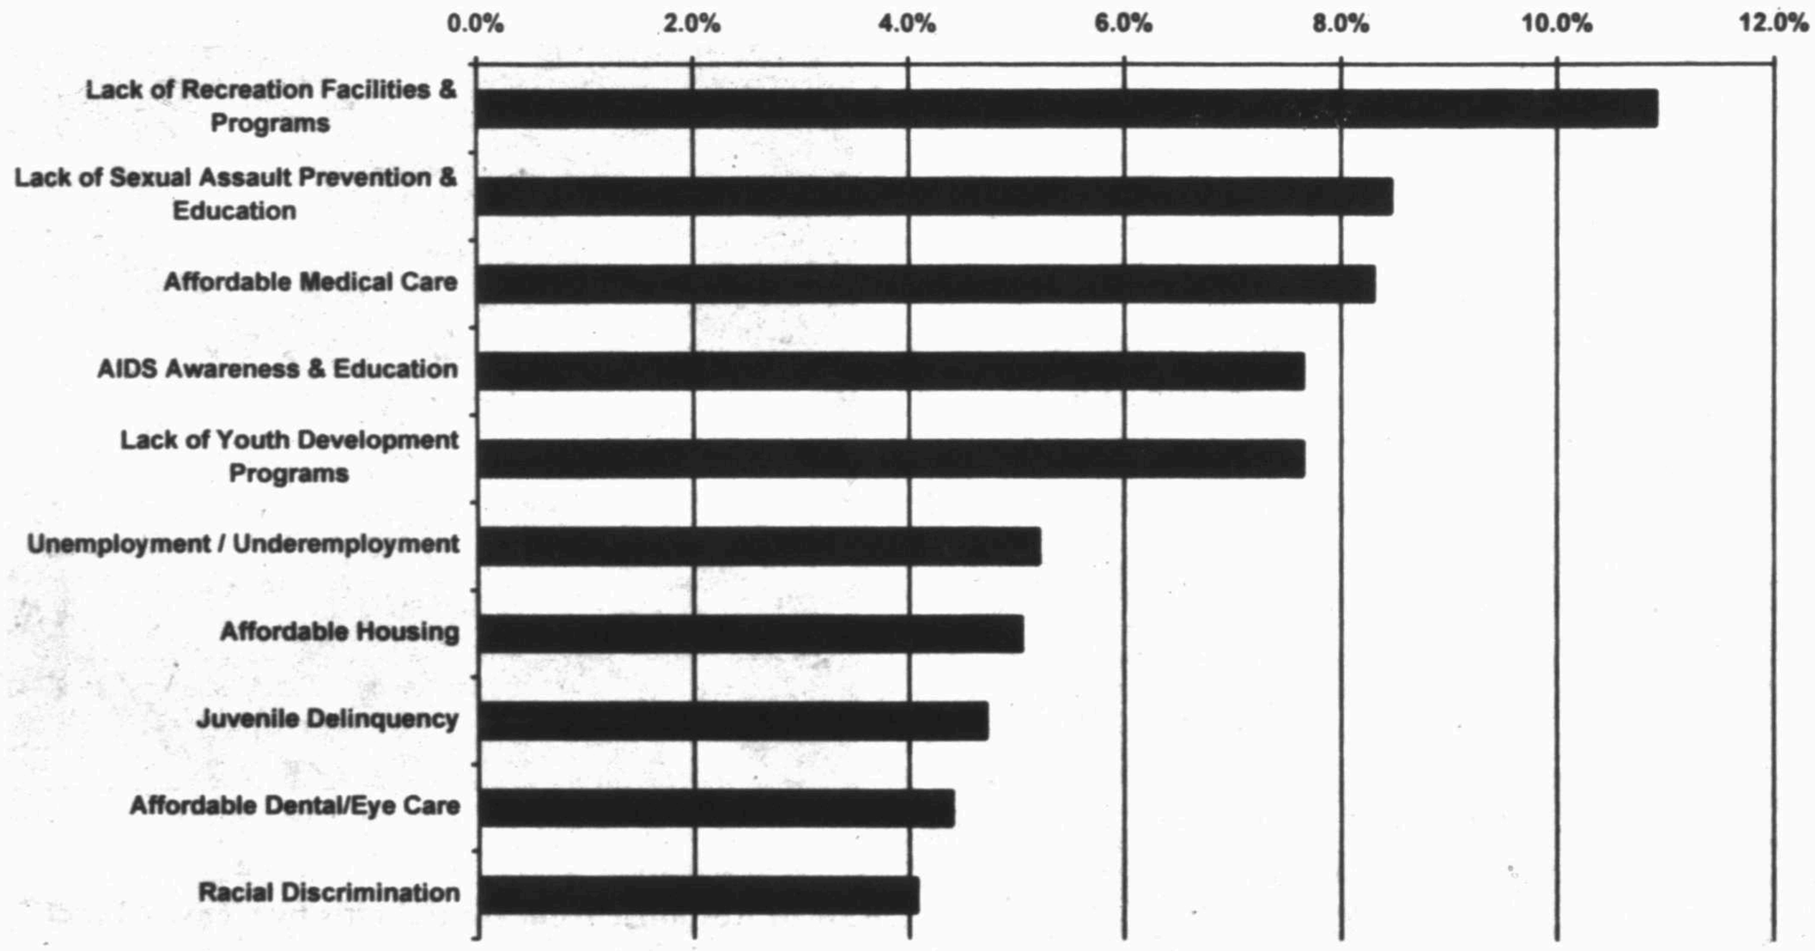
SURVEY RESULTS

Issues Affecting Neighborhoods As Perceived By All Respondents

The top ten "most often perceived" neighborhood issues, as identified by all survey respondents, are identified in Chart 1 and the top two "most often perceived" neighborhood issues of each respective target group is outlined in Table 3.

Chart 1
Top 10 Most Often Perceived Neighborhood Issues By All Respondents



"Lack of sexual assault prevention and education" was ranked by youth as the number one perceived neighborhood issue. This same issue was ranked second by all respondents, tied for third position by agency execs and randomly selected households, and ranked fourth by community leaders. The only other issues that ranked in the top ten positions by all respondent groups were: lack of recreational facilities/programs, lack of youth development or character building programs, and lack of AIDS awareness and education programs.

Affordable medical care was an issue in the Midland Introspective '88 survey; respondents' concerns regarding affordable medical care have increased significantly over the last five years. It is interesting to note that in 1988 issues surrounding substance abuse were the most frequently described as important issues. New concerns include AIDS issues, sexual assault awareness education, and racial discrimination.

In comparing 1993 data with Midland Introspective '88, one can see that unemployment has continued as a community concern. Table 4 shows neighborhood issues ranked "most often".

Approximately 13 percent of the total respondents characterized their neighborhood as fair to poor and over 2.5 percent stated they were not comfortable and wanted to move. Seventy-seven percent of the respondents stated they were comfortable and not afraid to live in their neighborhood, while another 19 percent stated they were comfortable but were afraid after dark. Respondents who were most likely to be concerned about their neighborhood after dark reside in tracts 14, 4.02 and 12. Over 27 percent of the respondents from these tracts reported that they felt uncomfortable in their neighborhood at night. Respondents living in tracts 101.08 and 17 reported feeling the safest at night in their neighborhood.

Over 33 percent of all respondents to the Midland Introspective '93 feel that they have little to no opportunity to affect their neighborhood. The majority of the respondents from tracts 1 (55%), 3.05 (50%), 4.01 (50%), 12 (54%), 14 (71%), 17 (55%), and 101.05 (60%) suggested that they have little to no opportunity to affect their neighborhood. Over 33 percent of community leaders believe that they do have an opportunity to affect their neighborhood.

The survey asked what household issues had affected the respondent during October, 1992 through October, 1993. A crosstabbed comparison of all survey groups' responses is printed in Table 5.

The top ten "real" issues of the survey respondents and their households are shown in Chart 2. The issues of "lots of anxiety, stress or depression" and "no money for medical insurance" tied for the number one "real" issue being experienced in Midland County. The number one issue for both the community leaders and randomly selected households was "lots of anxiety, stress or depression". Almost six percent of the community leaders and eight percent of the households cited this issue as real for them and their families. This same issue ranked third for youth and tied for second place for agency executive staff.

Roughly nine percent of the total respondents stated that "lots of anxiety, stress or depression" has been a "real" major concern for their household in the last 12 months. While this may seem a small percentage, it represents approximately 3,360 households in Midland County. As already stated, the level of anxiety and stress identified as major for each group ranged from a low of 5.94 percent for community leaders to a high of 15.52 percent for youth.

Issues which are "real" concerns for households but which did not make the top ten list include: specialized transportation, home health care, adult day care, and affordable legal aid. When looking at the issues that did not make a "top" list it is interesting to note the variances in reporting between the various groups. For instance, no adult survey respondent suggested they had a "major real" issue in their homes regarding "kids being recruited by gangs" or "kids abusing illegal substances". However, the youth responded quite differently. Over five percent suggested a major problem with being recruited by gangs and twelve percent suggested that they or some other person in their household has a major problem with abusing illegal substances.

The youth were more likely to suggest that "there was not enough room in their house" or the "house is in need of major repairs" before their parents identified these issues as a major issue. The youth were more likely to feel a greater impact of the homelessness and AIDS issues than any of the other respondent groups.

It is interesting to note that while the youth had the largest percentage of respondents to identify "lots of anxiety, stress or depression" as a major problem, they were more concerned about household issues regarding lack of money for medical insurance, doctors, and prescriptions.

Table 6 outlines the top two "real" household issues for each respondent group. It is not surprising that families are experiencing more anxiety, stress or depression as the majority of issues identified as real for households have financial implications directly associated with them (i.e., utilities, health care, unemployment, etc.).

While only 1.14 percent of the total respondents suggested homelessness as a major to moderate issue for themselves or their households, it is important to note that this represents over 400 households which have had a major issue with homelessness during the last year.

Other variables which received a low percentage response in terms of being a major issue for the survey respondents included: difficulty in reading, inability to find after school child care, experiencing drug problems, kids being recruited by gangs, and having been a victim of sexual abuse. While these percentages may be low it is important to realize that the population enduring the issue may represent a more vulnerable population and that these issues when they do occur can play havoc on more than one household. For a complete listing of household issues and the projected number of households affected, see Table 7.

Funding Issues

When it comes to assigning responsibility for funding other than to the individual or their family, the majority of respondents strongly believe that each issue area should be jointly funded by government agencies and charitable organizations. The expectations of the respondents toward charitable funding is primarily aimed at preventive types of programs. Recreational activities, youth development and character building, family counseling, budget counseling, anxiety, stress and depression counseling, and financial assistance for utilities are programs seen to be more appropriate for charitable funding by the survey respondents.

Funding expectations from the government are geared more toward treatment and welfare programs. Government is expected, more than charitable contributions, to cover costs associated with employment assistance; mental health residential facilities; low-income housing construction; basic medical care; juvenile delinquency/gang prevention programs; and assistance for victims of crime.

Priorities

The number one issue identified in terms of priority by all respondents was unemployment/underemployment in Midland County (Section E, questions 1 and 2 on page 7 of the survey). The other issues which rounded out the top three priority positions included drug/alcohol prevention and education; juvenile delinquency/gang prevention; and teen pregnancy. Chart 3 identifies the top ten priorities as identified by all of the Midland Introspective '93 respondents.

Likewise, the respondents were asked to identify the three least priorities for Midland County. Their least priority was adult recreation, followed by legal aid and providing transportation to work. Chart 4 identifies the least ten priorities as identified by all of the survey respondents.

The selection of priorities was difficult for the respondents as many of them wrote comments on the survey regarding the level of difficulty they experienced in trying to pare down the 40 variables into three.

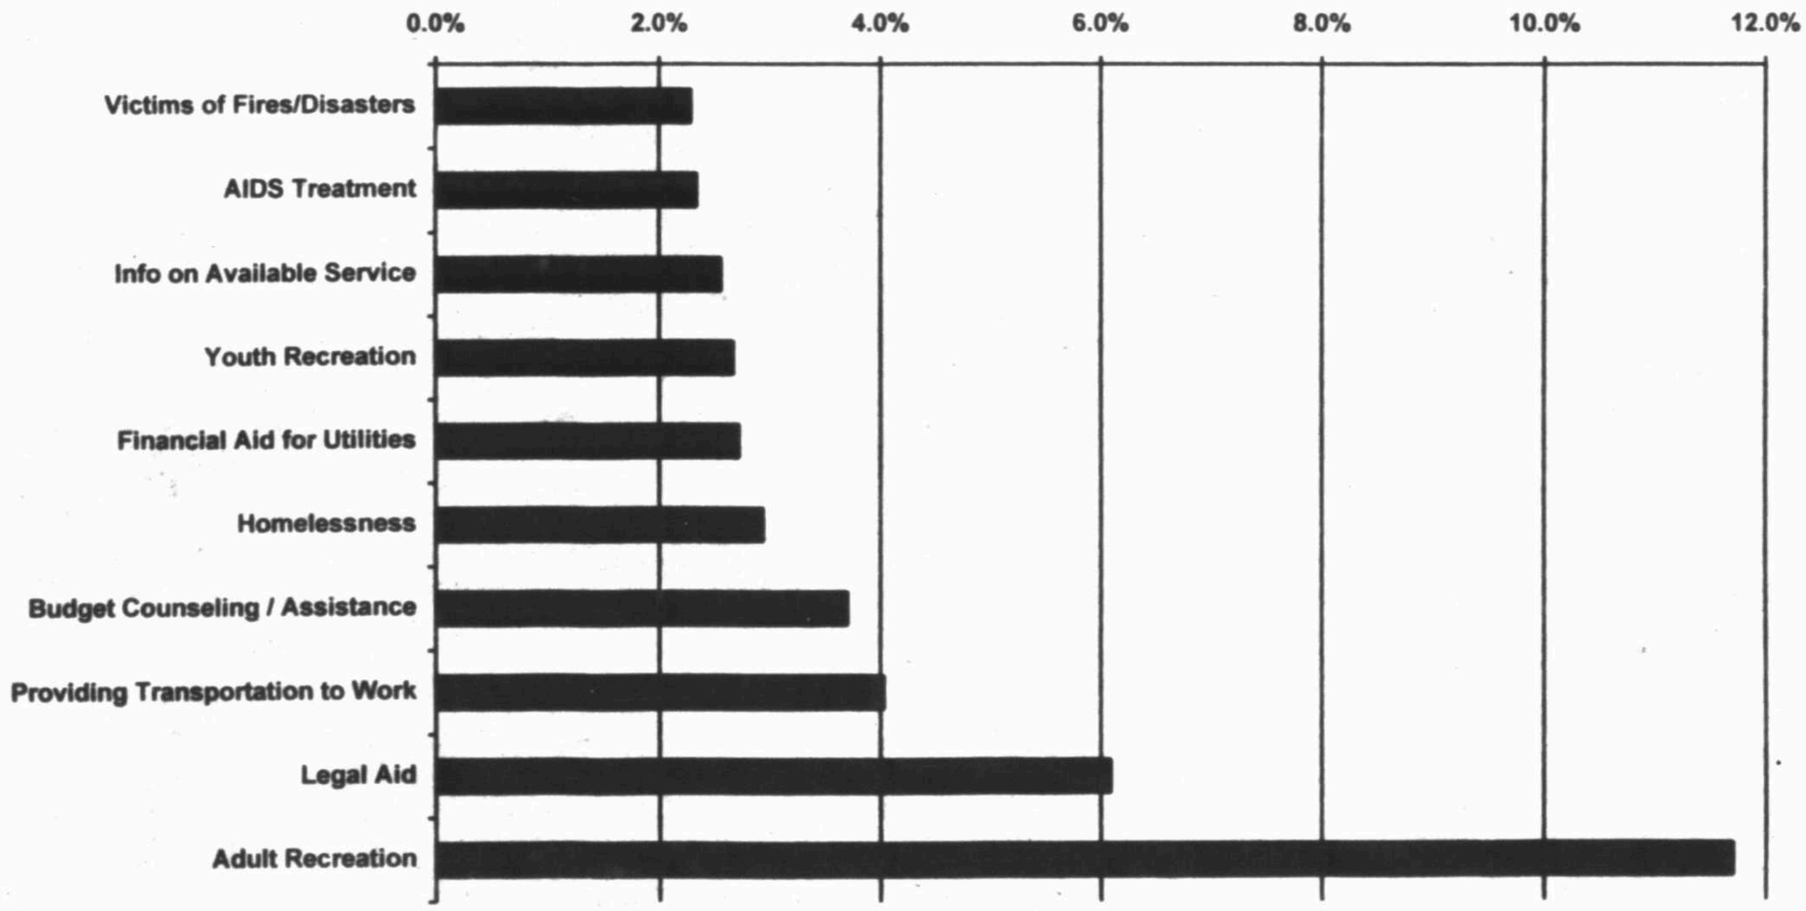
10 Least Important Priorities Identified By All Respondents



Volunteerism

One of the most positive aspects of Midland is that over 68 percent of the respondents reported that they regularly volunteer. Approximately 98 percent of the community leaders, 88 percent of the agency execs, and 64 percent of the household respondents report some regular form of volunteerism. These statistics compare very favorably to the 51 percent of all Americans who volunteer as reported in the 1992 Independent Sector study. Chart 5 displays where Midland Introspective respondents are most likely to volunteer.

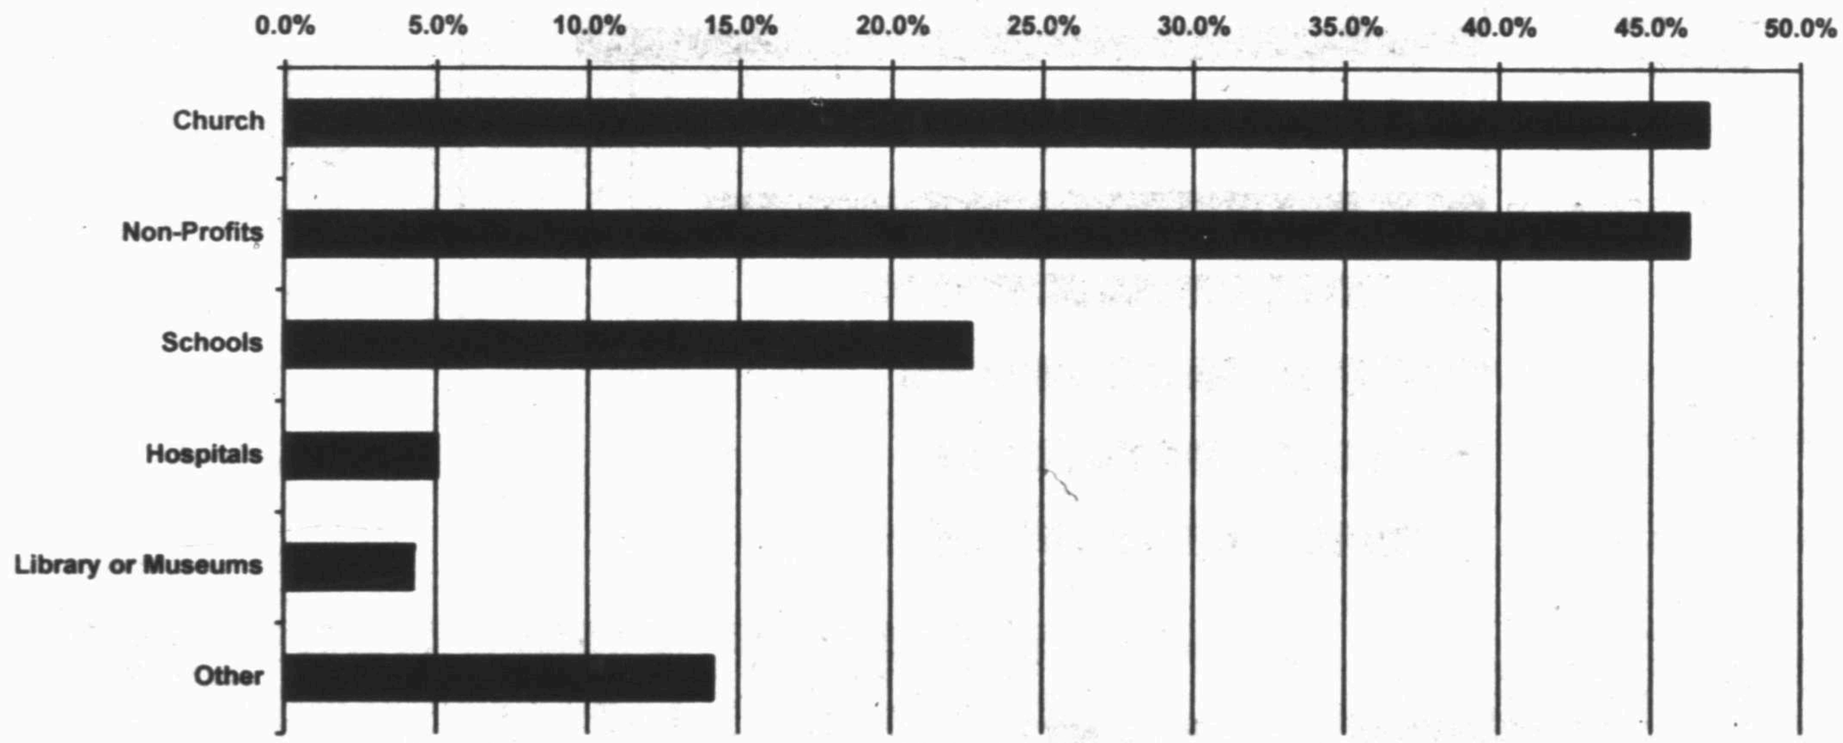
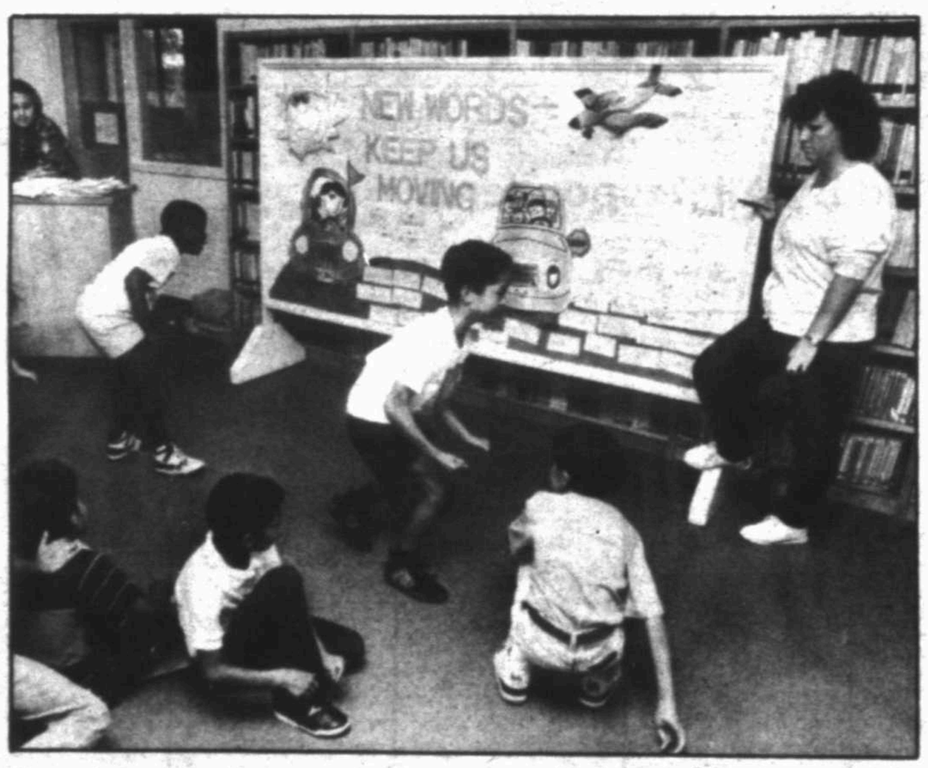
Respondents Favorite Places to Volunteer





The survey asked respondents to list agencies that they felt were addressing a community need with success. More than 60 percent did not respond to the question. The three agencies most frequently mentioned as serving a community need were Casa de Amigos, Community & Senior Services, and the Permian Basin Center For Battered Women and Their Children.

To Conclude...

This survey has provided a considerable amount of data regarding critical needs and issues facing Midland. The solution to many of the needs and issues reviewed here requires major community coordination and a combination of funding sources. The challenge now is to take responsibility and work together to design the most effective plan for the future.
