NEW ROADS TO BE BIG FACTOR FOR BUSINESS

Local C-C Official Tells Of Benefits to Be Felt Here

Irrigated Valley to Gain Most From Good Highways

"The passing of the $1,110,000 road bond issue in Wichita county would become a prime factor in developing the irrigated valley," Hubert M. Harrison, general manager of the Wichita Falls Chamber of Commerce declared Saturday. Mr. Harrison emphasizes the importance of the small farms that will be built up and the value of the state park and fish hatchery at Diversion lake if made available to the public through good roads.

On each of these farms would be constructed a house, barn and other improvements, furnishing employment to carpenters, brick layers, painters and other craftsmen on a large scale. The trade in groceries, dry goods and other purchases of these farmers would center in the towns of the county and much of it be available to Wichita Falls because of easy communication.

Roads Aid Business.

A steady growth and development in every business and trade would be inevitable under the influance of an issue the magnitude of this, according to chamber of commerce officials, and depression such as has been current at times in the past avoided in the solid growth of every community.

Regarding the new $30,000 state park and fish hatchery, Mr. Harrison believes that good roads leading to the lake where it is to be established in the very near future would not only become a great benefit to local population, but would offer an attraction for tourists from all over the United States.

"If proper road connection were made with Wichita Falls the average wage earner of the city would be enabled to take his family to the park for an enjoyable outing at almost any time, with a day of recreation, fishing and other pleasures afforded at small cost," he explained. "The park will certainly become a popular resort with all the improvements to be made by the state at the site of the hatchery, and will be one of the most frequented pleasure grounds of this section of the state in a very little time."

Plans of the state game, fish and oyster department include planting trees, shrubs and flowers on the large acreage obtained and every convenience for the picnicer will be added to the natural and landscaped beauty of the place. Good roads to such a potential resort would mean material profit and commercial advantage from every angle, it was pointed out.

New Bridge Near.

The new concrete bridge over the Wichita river will be completed within a few days, and a short route to the park afforded. The building of a good road over these 28 miles as one project provides for will make the drive one of the most attractive in the country, it was affirmed.

Other projects in the issue will each have similar advantage, it was pointed out. The roads included have long been needed for the unhindered development of Wichita county, connecting it with adjoining counties, and supplementing the general benefit, will mean special development for some special section, he said.

"My Plane and I— FROM THE LIPS OF LINDY HIMSELF"

(When Col. Charles Lindbergh landed at LeBourget Field, Paris, after his epochal flight from New York, William Hillman, Universal Service writer, was waiting for him. They met and never separated until New York's great reception for the Atlantic ace. To Hillman, Lindbergh told his story intimately as friend to friend. Hillman is now writing under title "My Plane and I From the Lips of Lindy Himself," a 60,000-word story for The Wichita Falls Record News and associated newspapers in Universal ervice. The second chapter of this story appears in today's issue. Succeeding chapters will appear daily for the next 30 days.)

By WILLIAM HILLMAN

(Copyright, 1927, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Childhood ambitions are fragile dreams. Only geniuses and dullards are ever able to realize them. But a dullard dreams of being a chauffeur and remains a chauffeur all his life. Lindbergh dreamed of being a chauffeur and became the most glorified "chauffeur" in history. Lindbergh's fame was sudden. Within a period of three weeks he sprang from an obscure air mail pilot to a heroic explorer whom millions cheered as no man has ever been cheered before.

But there had been years of preparation for the glorious adventure. Lindbergh's sudden rise to fame was preceded by a careful apprenticeship and intense love and study of motors and planes and flying.

"I always wanted to be a chauffeur," Lindbergh told me one day. "It was my first ambition.

He Liked Mechanics

"Motors and mechanical things always fascinated me. I was never happy unless I was knocking something down and rebuilding it or trying to make something of my own that would sail or move along.

"I could drive my father's car when I was 10 years old. But lots of boys at that age can drive now.

"I guess I didn't care much for school. Sometimes instead of attending to my lessons, I would kind of fuss around with thingss or draw pictures and designs of aeroplanes."

A notebook of his used in one of his classes and now being jealously preserved by admirers, reveals how young Lindbergh's mind was absorbed by aviation.

"I didn't get thinking seriously of aviation, though, until I went to college," he said. "I've only been flying five years. The first time I saw anyone fly was, I think, in Washington, when I saw Lincoln Beachey fly. I was about eight years old. It made quite an impression on me."

Screams of Iowa Park Woman Rout Intruder Who Invades Her Home

Special to The Record News.

IOWA PARK, June 19.—night about 2 o'clock Mrs. Raymond Morris was awakened to see a man leaning across the bed from an open window. Alone at home with her three children while her husband was away at work, she ran to the door as the man reached for her and began to scream. This frightened the intruder away and Mrs. Morris and the children sought protection at a neighbor's house. Foot prints and nails pulled loose in the screen showed that the man had tried to enter at other windows but was unable to open them. He had propped open the screen of the window he entered so as to make his escape easily.

From the Morris home the man went to the home of A. C. Henson. He went through all the house, searching in everything, but nothing of value was missing.

Mystery Plane Also Being Groomed For Atlantic Crossing

By Universal Service.

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N. Y., June 19.—Unfavorable weather—a driving rain storm over New York and vicinity, and wind and rain storms over the Atlantic ocean, again today delayed the start of the third great American trans-Atlantic non-stop flights, that of Commander Richard E. Byrd and his tri-motored Fokker monoplane, America.

The start of the flight is now planned for early Tuesday morning, weather conditions permitting.

The big monoplane is all ready for the take-off, with the exception of a few emergency rations for the four men who now plan to comprise the America's crew. These include Commander Byrd, Lieutenant Noville, radio man, Bert Acosta, pilot, and an unnamed passenger. The plane has been fully fuelled for the flight.

The trans-Atlantic course of the America will be much nearer to the regular trans-Atlantic ship course than the routes flown by either Colonel Lindbergh or Clarence Chamberlin, it was learned here today. One object of charting a course nearer to the steamer route is to provide the America with constant radio reports from ships while the plane is in the air.

MYSTERY PLANE GROOMED FOR TRANS-ATLANTIC HOP

By Universal Service.

SHREWSBURY, N. J., June 19.—Coincident with persistent reports that a well-known aviator planned to attempt a trans-Atlantic flight to Rome, it was revealed tonight that an old hangar here houses a mystery airplane.

The hangar is guarded by special patrolmen and no one is allowed to enter. The plane is apparently a Bellanca, designed by the same man who built the machine in which Clarence D. Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine flew to Germany.

The same rumors which led to the discovery of the mystery plane linked the name of Congressman Fiorello H. La Guardia of New York as a prospective passenger in the hop to Rome. Asked if he contemplated making a transocean trip, Congressman La Guardia refused to discuss it but added:

"As you know, I have been interested in all kinds of airplanes for 14 years. Bellanca taught me how to fly."

Giusseppe Bellanca himself also denied that he was in any way connected with the plane, but pointed out that he was very busy with aviation matters at all times.

Another denial of responsibility for the plane was made by Lieut. Mitchell G. Bonnell, who declared recently that he was going to fly to Paris and back.

"The plane I am to fly is on Long Island," he added.

Mechanics were working on the mystery plane Saturday and at the hangar it was stated they would be on the job again tomorrow.

Officers searched for several blocks around the scene of the robbery but did not find trace of the youths.

Dan Moody Heads 'All Texas Special' On Long Trek Through Rest Of U. S.

DALLAS, June 19. (AP)—With every reservation taken, the "All Texas Special" carrying governor Dan Moody on a tour of 15 million people in the state right with Gov. Dan Moody, leaves here at 10 o'clock Monday morning, it was stated today. The governor arrived in Dallas in time to participate in a luncheon at which the purpose of the tour were explained and the reign of good fellowship with which Texas is to be filled was inaugurated.

Other notables on the tour are Dr. W. M. W. Splawn, president of the University of Texas, Clarence Ousley, Fort Worth former secretary of agriculture, Judge Alex Lacy, Houston, Dr. S. P. Brooks, president of Baylor university, Tom H. Ellbridge, San Antonio, and Colton F. Thomas, Dallas.

Elaborate Itinerary

Over the United States, Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Memphis.

The party will also visit Canada.

Dr. Howard Peak, the first white child born in Tarrant county, will exemplify to the north and east the progress of Texas within the span of a lifetime as a member of the "All Texas Special," a good will party which pulled out of the union terminal here at 11 p. m. Sunday for a tour of 15 major points in the older portions of the United States.

Governor Dan Moody, who heads the party, was in high good humor at the hour of departure and at the banquet preceding paid a brief tribute to the ability of Lieutenant Governor Barry Miller to manage the affairs of the state in his absence, congratulating him likewise on the fact that he will not have the legislature to worry with.

"Sometimes lately I have felt like I was sitting on a powder keg while an irrepressible child was playing around with a blow torch," the governor added, feelingly.

He'll Pardon One

The acting governor "served notice" on the departing executive and others that he was going to exercise his clemency prerogatives in at least one instance. This is a negro who has served five and a half years for stealing $75, Mr. Miller explained.

One possible change in schedule was announced. It is probable that the party will spend two days in Chicago and eliminate Detroit from the itinerary, it was stated. This is in deference to the wishes expressed by several members of the party.

GERMANY VIES FOR AIR PRIZE

Airplane Builders Rushing Secret Models

By Universal Service.

BERLIN, June 19.—Stirred by the triumphs of the American ocean flyers all Germany is scurrying with more or less secret plans and preparations not only to duplicate but to outdo the American accomplishments.

Germany, a pioneer in air transportation, considers it a point of honor to recapture the blue ribbon of the air so spectacularly seized by America over whose lagging air transportation development Germany both wondered and smiled only a short time ago.

Projects which with German thoroughness were being slowly perfected in secret workshops and conference rooms of German aircraft concerns are now being rushed to completion with feverish speed, and air circles scarcely that almost any day during good flying weather might bring the news that a German plane had started for New York.

Germans Ambitious

The German ambition is not only to be the first to cross the Atlantic in the far more difficult flight from east to west, but also to do it in a plane carrying paying freight and not merely in flying across the pond as the American flyers are doing.

The German newspapers and the German aviation circles are offering $25,000 prize which has been added to $5,000 and Lesing, the famous aviation publisher, is offering 50,000 marks as well.

War flyers who have served their country in the war are flocking to Berlin to be ready for the flight.

The plane is being built in secret in a hangar at the Junkers plant in Dessau. Only a few of the workmen employed know the purpose for which the plane is being built. The plane is being built in sections so that it can be shipped to the starting point in Germany or America without arousing curiosity.

Mystery Plane Built

The plane is a monoplane of all metal construction. It is equipped with a 500 horsepower motor and has a cruising radius of 5,000 miles. It is equipped with a special radio sending and receiving apparatus and has a special compass for navigation over the ocean. The plane is equipped with a special fuel system which will permit the pilot to jettison the fuel in the event of a forced landing at sea.

The mystery plane will have a crew of five men, a pilot, two mechanics and a radio operator.

Airplane Circus To Tour States To Promote Understanding Of Aviation

DETROIT, June 19. (AP)—At least 25 airplanes of types varying from the single seated one-passenger to the multi-motored 10-passenger machine and possibly including the "Pride of San Diego," sister ship of the plane Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh piloted from New York to Paris, are expected to participate in the national air tour which starts here on June 27.

The tour of 4000 miles will take the participants to the Atlantic coast, thence to Texas, and back to Detroit by way of Omaha, and Chicago, with 24 stops en route. The schedule calls for the return to Detroit on July 17.

When the time for filing of entries expired today the tour committee announced 20 entries were on hand and that several others had been placed in the mail.

The tour which had its inception in Detroit, in 1925, originally was known as the annual commercial airplane reliability tour for a trophy offered by Edsel Ford.

PACKARD FIRES HOT BROADSIDE AT OFFICIAL

Highland Christian Pastor Charges Failure To Perform Duty

ALLEGES BETRAYAL

Roy Carter Accused Of Failing to Keep His Campaign Pledge

Having charged that Roy E. Carter, fire commissioner, included in his raid on a local dispensary last week a city police officer in the party, the Rev. Paul Henry Packard, pastor of a local church, in a bitter attack in his sermon at the Highland Heights Christian church Sunday night, charged the administration of Carter as police commissioner of Wichita Falls.

But Mr. Carter forgotten the pastor charged Dr. Packard from the pulpit, that his attention was called to the fact that beer was being sold from a joint in the shadow of the West Texas chamber of commerce auditorium during the convention and that instead of taking a search warrant and raiding the joint he sent one of his men down to buy a bottle.

He Charges Betrayal

Making the assertion that Mr. Carter had betrayed the people who helped elect him, Dr. Packard said that before the election the fire commissioner had promised several ministers in Wichita Falls, among whom was Dr. Packard, that if they would support him that he would use his best efforts to enforce the eighteenth amendment and stamp out the liquor traffic in Wichita Falls.

"Mr. Carter stated last week," exclaimed Dr. Packard, "that he has instructed the police force not to make any liquor raids unless by complaint of citizens. We have proven that a police commissioner who would betray the people who elected him by giving such instructions will not even respect the eighteenth amendment on complaint of citizens."

Protection promises made by Mr. Carter which Dr. Packard said the police commissioner had failed to fulfill after his election included the removal of all members of the police department appointed during the former regime.

Every man on the present detective or plainclothes force except one has been retained from an administration which Mr. Carter later attacked during his campaign, said Dr. Packard.

But Mr. Carter has not only failed to keep his promises to the people, he charged, but also to employes of the Wichita and Denver railroad, he charged in the charges made by Dr. Packard.

Charges Promise Broken

"Mr. Carter and the Fort Worth and Denver men," exclaimed Dr. Packard, "he would do anything they asked him to do if they would support him. They asked the dismissal of a Mexican officer; he fired the Mexican officer and made an apology to American prisoners.

"Sheriff W. G. Braly with two deputies had made a raid one night and Mr. Carter with 24 men, had

SEEK FRIENDS WISELY

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

YOU WON'T FIND HIGH-MINDED GIRLS HERE.

DON'T SIT BACK AND WAIT.

SEEK FRIENDS IN QUIET CLUBS.

You Can't Find the Worthwhile Ones in Jazz Haunts

By Beatrice Fairfax,
An Authority on the Problems of Love and Marriage.

JUDGING by my correspondence, many girls who consider themselves lonely and unloved believe they would win friends and popularity if they were not so good. You might conclude from reading these letters that the only thing holding girls back from good times and success is their own high principles and ideals.

Yet the truth is, girls who are moral, honest, sincere, may be either unpopular or extremely popular. To win many friends and hold them; to attract love and marriage to the man of her choice, a girl needs both character and charm.

Charm is hard to define, but it may be said to result from utter lack of self-consciousness.

A girl who possesses this secret of charm can refuse to neck, to drink, even to smoke and dance, and yet be surrounded by admiring friends who love her.

Of course, if you have standards and ideals, it is wise to seek your friends where these ideals are respected and shared. Marie brings out this point in the following letter:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"When I read your article about gold-digging girls, I just felt that I wanted you to know what I think about it.

"The 'Average Girl' says she can hardly believe there is a man in this world who appreciates a plain, wholesome girl who isn't jazz-crazy. I happen to know a number of young men who have the highest of ideals and are looking for high ideals in the girls they choose as friends.

"At present, I am corresponding with four young men, averaging a little less than twenty-three years of age. They freely express to me their idea of the girl who pets and also the girl who is called a gold-digger.

"At the same time, I know dozens of good, pure, clean-living girls who are very popular. So I say to all girls: 'Don't pet—it pays not to in the end.'

"Someone will probably ask how to meet these young men and women. I met them through a club which has as its goal the development of character. If one wishes to find good companions, one must look for them. And a club of this sort is a good place to meet whole some young people. When I say 'good' I do not mean righteous. One can be good and yet be gay, agreeable and popular.

"It is true, I am not popular with the young men in my neighborhood. Why? Because I do not pet. I have never petted in my life and have never found out just what necking is. The friends I mentioned, live in neighboring towns. The club is a nation-wide affair.

"So I agree with you perfectly, when you say that a good girl can also be entertaining. And in the end, isn't she the bride a sensible young man will choose? I hope you will print at least part of this letter, and tell the 'Average Man' for me, that he will find plenty of girls who are not gold-diggers if he will look around a little.

"MARIE."

Here is a practical, sensible suggestion for girls and young men who complain that they cannot find friends with high ideals and standards.

Are you seeking friends in the right way and right place?

Naturally, if you honestly want to make friends with young people who do not neck or drink bootleg whiskey or pick up acquaintances on the street you will not look for them in public dance-halls of cheap quality, pool rooms or bar-rooms, for they do not thrive there. A girl who does not care for modern jazz dances may find herself a fish out of water in the average cabaret or night club.

On the other hand, if you identify yourself with nationwide organizations of the type Marie describes in her letter, or with your church activities, or such organizations as the Y. W. C. A., the Y. W. H. A., or similar clubs connected with your own particular form of religion or ethics, or with worthy charities, you will find your best qualities fully appreciated, your companionship sought by the young men and women you meet directly or indirectly in connection with such membership.

I know one charming girl who finds her social life through membership in a large church choir. Her choir picnics, choir camping trips and parties keep her interested and happy, and her companions share her tastes and ideals.

My suggestion is, join the group or club nearest you to which you are eligible that stands definitely for character-building and do your share. You will in this way find usefulness and also plenty of recreation and fun, companionship, friendship and sooner or later you are likely to win the congenial life-partner of whom you dream.

Elastic Attitude Needed to Deal With Youth

By L. Lamar Matthews.

A DOZEN or more school girls were holding a confab one night and while they talked most of them were puffing on cigarettes although smoking in that boarding school was expressly prohibited. Then a teacher knocked on the door and demanded admittance. Cigarettes were hidden and a brave effort was made to dispel the smoke; but smoke is a perverse sort of thing. The outcome of the matter was that every girl in the room was ordered to report next morning to the Dean of the school.

L. LAMAR MATTHEWS

Another secret confab was held a few minutes later, and the girls agreed that when confronted with the accusation they would all deny smoking.

But instead of being called, in a body before the Dean next day, they were called in, one at a time, to face both the Dean and the President. Every girl denied her guilt except one—and that one we shall call Betty because that was not her real name.

"I meant to deny the charge," Betty said when she was telling me about the happening, "but when they asked me pointblank whether or not I had smoked the night before, I simply could not lie."

Betty, alone, was sent home in disgrace. So great was the ardor of the dignitaries in abolishing smoking from their school that it seemed to becloud every other consideration.

Let it be said for the other girls, however, that they came to Betty and volunteered to make a clean breast of the whole affair; but she told them to say no more about it.

"Those old fogies are absolutely merciless," she said, "it would only mean that all of you would be expelled and that wouldn't help me a bit."

"I got down on my knees to them," she declared. "I told them that my being expelled from school would break my mother's heart, and that if they would only let me stay the rest of this year that I would observe every rule in the catalogue, religiously. But they were like stone—I even cried, but I couldn't move them."

It is surprising to know how many grown-ups there are who take a stand on a certain matter and refuse to listen to any suggestion that is not in line with their own set opinion. Of course, no teacher or parent wants young girls to smoke, but it isn't the very worst possible thing that a girl can do. It isn't as bad as lying or sneaking.

Many people have for years measured right and wrong by certain fixed standards. Now when boys and girls insist upon observing the customs of modern society it naturally displeases and distresses conservative folks. But it is worse than useless to hold tenaciously to opinions concerning minor matters if it means sacrificing some principle or some relationship that does matter.

If you happen to be one of those old-fashioned parents with a new-style son or daughter you shouldn't be so dead sure that you are always absolutely right about every point. You may find out later on that you could have compromised a little bit, here and there, without hurting anybody.

Your ideas may be best for your son or daughter, it is true; but when the mighty wave of present day frivolity is threatening to sweep your child out of your grasp, you had better cling to him and forget your fixed and unalterable opinions.

Cool Cooking for Hot Days

By Hannah Wing.

EVERY woman would echo more heartily her husband's invitation, "Come down for the week-end," if it weren't for the thought of the Sunday cooking in a hot kitchen. To simplify the meals for hot Sundays so that there may be a calm leisurely day to spend outside the house with friends requires careful planning, but it can be done to the satisfaction of host and hostess as well as guest.

First, choose foods which can be prepared in advance, or those which need little cooking. Your guests will enjoy fresh fruits and quickly cooked vegetables or salads much better than elaborately prepared pastries and entrees which form so great a part of the Winter menu.

Jellied soups cut in cubes and piled lightly in soup or bouillon cups and served with a crisp bread stick or butter cracker are very preferable to the steaming plate of rich soup so enjoyable in cold weather. If you have no stock on hand with which to make these jellied soups, use boullion cubes of beef or chicken which can be purchased at almost any grocery or drug store.

In Summer, clams and lobsters are at their best and cheapest and should be found on many menus; clams on the halfshell or in a cocktail and lobster in ways almost too numerous to mention.

Meat can be cooked on Saturday to be served for the Sunday dinner. Nothing is more appetizing than a cold baked ham stuck full of spicy cloves, or a plump, cold chicken delicately browned and served with hot gravy. A veal or meat loaf well seasoned, or a mold of salmon or tuna fish, makes a most delicious main course.

Salad is the most refreshing of all Summer foods and may form the principal dish on the menu if made from meat or fish, such as chicken or lobster. Keep a jar of mayonnaise, cream or French dressing on the pantry shelf, and salad will be the easiest food to prepare. Use the vegetables left over from Saturday's dinner, or fruits sliced or cubed, or perhaps berries for your salad. Marinate (which means to pour French dressing over them and let them stand awhile in the ice box) and serve on a crisp salad plant.

Of course, in Summer a frozen dessert is always welcome and it may be frozen in the early morning, and left to ripen. Or it can be put into a mold, packed in equal parts of ice and salt and left to freeze by itself. Or better still, with electric refrigeration it can be tucked into the refrigerator and forgotten about.

Delicate gelatin dishes, which can be made the day before, and iced melons and cantaloupes, are delicious desserts for hot weather. Cold drinks are a welcome addition to Summer menus though for dinner some prefer hot coffee. If an electric percolator is used, the work of making coffee is simplified.

-:- The Rhyming Optimist -:-

By Aline Michaelis

OH, a merry song is a fleeting thing, but its echo rings all day through, and the gleam of sun on a bluebird's wing makes the heavens show a deeper blue. Just a span of steel can bridge a flood so that men may pass safely above, and one smile or one look can stir the blood to the magical rhythm of love. One hour can work changes to lift a life from the bottomless depths of despair, and one kindly word can end pain and strife with visions serene and fair. Oh, the glimmer of light on the bluebird's wings can add joy to the gold of the sun, and a laugh and a kiss are but fleeting things, yet of such is life's gladness spun!

Hygienic Dangers in Handshaking

By Chas. A. L. Reed, M. D.,
Former President of the American Medical Association.

HANDSHAKING at his inaugural reception so exhausted the energy and lowered the vital resistance of President Wm. Henry Harrison that he died within thirty days.

CHARLES A. L. REED, M.D.

It's a silly habit that is more dangerous than silly and dangerous in more ways than by inducing physical exhaustion.

Hills and Matthews, of the University of British Columbia, have stated the results of an experiment on germ-transmission by handshaking. (American Medicine.) They found that the transfer of organisms was as great, if not greater, when the given hand was dry than when both were moist, a somewhat surprising result. Most of the germs are transferred by the palm of the hand, few by the fingers and hardly any by the finger-tips. Handshaking, they say, is more likely to transmit disease from one person to another than if both use the same towel. The contact is direct between unwashed hands as against indirect between washed hands. Once germs are on the hand their usual way into the system is by the mouth, and these authorities have calculated that 10 per cent of the members of any crowd have their fingers in their mouths.

This sounds alarming. But we need not yet abandon the friendly custom of shaking hands with our friends, nor be any the less ready to shake hands with our enemies.

Among normally clean people the risk of infection is far less than many others that form part of our normal life nowadays. Money transmits germs and there is an element of danger in handling clothing, foods, household or cafe glasses and cups which will continue to be present until every member of the community has sufficient health sense to keep his fingers out of his mouth and to wash his hands after attending to his bodily needs or after coming into contact with dirt.

Ordinary rules of cleanliness should protect healthy people against infecting their mouths with their own hands. This is a much sounder protective measure than many which are supposed to be signs of the advanced development of a people's hygienic conscience.

For instance, many waiters wear gloves to protect customers from contamination by their bare hands, but these gloves are often in a state which no one with any sense of personal cleanliness whatever would have his hands in. Moreover, the cleanest glove is useless if the wearer takes a towel from his pocket or under his arm and wipes plates with it. The very thing which is supposed to protect from infection is either a screen for the enemy or the actual vehicle in which he approaches.

A water faucet that has a filter on it is nominally safe to drink from, but it does not take long for a filter to get so septic that it makes the water-supply more dangerous than if it were not there. It is not, therefore, yet time to require everyone to dip his hand in antiseptic solution before greeting a friend.

If we wish to curtail the spread of infection by greeting, we had better start by refraining from kissing on the mouth, which really is dangerous. If shaking hands is a hazard, the kissing of the hand of an exalted person as a sign of formal allegiance, is presumably much worse, yet no epidemics have ever been reported from the practice of every member of a large gathering kissing the hand of a queen, still less from the hand-shaking of a mayoral or presidential reception.

When Manners Are Correct

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

General Helps.

DEAR MRS BEECKMAN.

Will you kindly straighten out these few difficulties for me?

1. How should one eat pickels that are served cut in quarters? When they are the small sweet pickles how should they be eaten?

2. When at a rather large dinner, should one begin to eat immediately after being served, or would it be better to wait until everyone is served?

3. When a boy takes a girl out shouldn't he select the place to dine, or should he ask her where she would like to go?

4. Do you approve of my letter-paper?

A READER

IF pickles are served so that they may be put on your plate for instance, in the dinner course, or at supper, you should eat them with your fork, or, if it is necessary to cut them, with your knife and fork. But sometimes, as, for instance, when they are served as relishes, it is necessary to eat them in one's fingers. But, as with all other kinds of food, it is much better not to eat them in our fingers if we can avoid it.

2. I think theoretically we should not begin to eat until everyone at the dinner table is served, but at a rather large dinner this is not practicable, and we must find a middle course, between waiting 'til all the other guests are served, and starting to eat directly after we are served. In other words, make it a point to wait until a few guests near you are served.

3. I like the "masterful" host, who is such an accustomed host that he knows where he wants to dine. "Would you like to dine at—?" is to me far pleasanter than the very indefinite "Where would you like to dine tonight?"

As a matter of fact, the last question is not too easy for a girl to answer, since the man puts up to her the decision as to what kind of place they are to go to, and it is difficult for her to steer a clear path between choosing of a place that honors his hospitality, and still does not put too great a strain on his wallet.

4. Not particularly. I am not very fond of the long one-sheet letter paper. It always looks so business-y to me—not a bit social.

If you have a supply of this paper on hand you might fold it and make of it the conventional two-sheet letter paper. I tried it on your paper and it makes a very good size double sheet. Your handwriting is very good and your letter form is good. It is better not to use any abbreviations on the envelope or in the heading of a letter.

(Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)

Folly's Daughter

A Thrilling Mystery of New York Night Life

By Ann Lisle

An Invitation for Jill.

MAC NEIL SHANNON'S apartment in the hotel which bore his surname was a duplex, the first floor of which was his office suite. And so Jill's call was switched to the sanctum which was now in the throes of a dinner party he was giving to a select group of newspaper men before the formal opening of the Shannon. He sat in a big William and Mary chair before a vast Tudor desk and asked quizzically of the girl whose phone call had jogged his memory to certain recollection:

ANN LISLE

"It is little Jill, isn't it? Little Carmen of the cigarette tray. What can I do for you child?"

"You hardly remember me," she said wistfully.

MacNell Shannon protested easily: "Of course I remember you. Didn't I know Jill and Carmen were one and the same? Well, name your little errand, child. I've a crowd of men coming here to dinner and I have to get into uniform and out of my working clothes inside of half an hour. So I can't parley with modesty too long. . . . What is it?"

"I don't want you to do anything for me," Jill said. Then she added under her breath: "But just—believe in me."

He laughed. And because it was the thing MacNell had reason to believe natural from a poor girl to a rich man, he asked lightly: "Want me to believe in you enough to lend you a hundred?"

She felt as if he had struck her. "I want you to believe in me enough to give me——" she paused and a flicker of humor came into her voice. "Guess again. It's not a hundred dollars."

"Make it two," he said indulgently, caught by something in her voice that interested him, that was vaguely fragrant like the personality fixed in his mind by its resemblance to the exotic, flaming beauty of Vivian Scarlett.

"It's five——" Jill ventured experimentally.

He whistled. "I like your nerve. It's yours. When will you come and get it?"

"Now!" she said inexorably. "I'll take it now."

"But I've told you a bunch of men are coming," MacNell Shannon replied, amused and interested in the girl's impudence and liking this Jill better than the one who had struck a silly pose of school-girl innocence on her visit to him three or four days ago.

"I'll take my five—minutes now and over the phone," Jill said demurely.

Mac exploded into an easy, comradely laugh. Jill joined him. She was delighted with this conversation. He was easy to talk to. She had never felt so friendly to anybody before. She thought the thumping of her heart was enjoyment, fun, interest in having a real friend of her own—somebody she could talk to perfectly naturally.

"You little rascal!" Mac said. "How did I ever come to let you get away from me if you're such a cute little rapscallian?"

"I ran," Jill said drily.

"And I didn't run faster?"

"You'd have me running now—as fast as I could come, if it weren't for an obligation to be here and entertain my guests," he told her.

"Well there's no hurry about me," Jill told him so seriously that he wanted to have her right there to hug. "You see I'm way ahead of things, really. I haven't the fifty dollars yet——"

"What?" he roared, breaking in abruptly. "Who said anything about fifty dollars? What's that got to do with this pleasant chat we're having?"

"Everything," she answered seriously. "I've found out who took it and I've a promise that it will be returned to me very, very soon. And I wanted you to know. . . . I couldn't bear having you not know. I thought if I ever came into your mind it would be as a girl who took advantage of your giving her fifty dollars and didn't make good after she said she'd return it."

"You darling!" Mac said with appreciation not undimmed by the fact that he had been tasting a preliminary cocktail while he talked. "I wish you were here. I'd tell you what I think of your cute, honest determination to keep me from starving for lack of that fifty. I told you once to—keep the change."

"And I told you once, I wouldn't take advantage——"

He shouted again. And then because her voice was sweet and his mood was mellow and the time was ripe, he asked suddenly—almost anxiously.

"Jill, child, how would you like to come and have dinner with me here tomorrow night?"

Two Light Summer Frocks

—Republished by Special Arrangement With Good Housekeeping—

LIGHT, washable Summer dresses are always necessary in abundance for the warm weather wardrobe. And the two illustrated here will serve this purpose admirably.

The one at the left is of linen and its trimming consists of a hemstitched design. The other dress is of voile and would be equally charming in orchid, green, blue or peach.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

—By Beatrice Fairfax—

See a Religious Adviser.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am in love with a young lady who is two years my senior. Our religions differ. Should I allow these two facts to interfere with my happiness? A. B. C.

ARE you and the young lady you love congenial in every way, and sufficiently tolerant not to try to control or change each other's opinions? If so, I do not see why either a difference in religious beliefs or her slight seniority should affect your happiness as friends or as husband and wife you should decide to marry.

In regard to religion, however, the person to consult is your religious adviser, because some religions have very strict tenets regarding marriage with one of another faith.

INNOCENT TOT SAVES MOTHER

Babe's Call For Neighbor Saves Poison Victim

By Universal Service.

SAN ANTONIO, June 19.—Bedtime for "baby" in one San Antonio home tonight came and passed.

"Baby," a four-year-old girl, took advantage of mother's lapse and played on for a time. But little eye-lids grew heavy and the holiday stolen from the Sandman grew dull.

Quite willing to go to bed to await the dreams brought by a nightly story of the doings of make-believe princes and princesses in far away lands, she found mother.

"I am sleepy, mama," yawned the child, "so sleepy."

Mother, Mrs. J. M. Munchnader, was lying across the bed and answered the child with a groan. "Baby" climbed to her side.

"Mama, do you hurt somewhere?"

"Yes, yes," the woman gasped between short breaths, "run, baby, and get Mrs.——." The name died in the throat that sought to utter it.

The child leaped from the bed. Neighbors heard her childish wails before she reached the adjoining house.

"Mama's sick," the child sobbed. "Come and get a Goctor."

Neighbors found the mother across the bed, rapidly losing consciousness. She was able to gasp that she had taken poison.

Police were called. The woman was sent to the hospital. Doctors worked swiftly. Soon they knew that life would be the reward of their efforts.

"Five minutes more and there would have been no need for us," said a white clad interne.

RAINS DELAY GRAIN HARVEST

Cotton County Uses Combine to Gather Crop

Special to The Record News.

WALTERS, Okla., June 19.—Harvesting in Cotton county has been delayed several days by recent rains. Wheat and oat cutting was in full swing at the time of the first rain Tuesday morning. Most farmers are using combines for harvesting, and a number of these machines have been purchased within the past two weeks.

The grain yield is exceedingly light this year, due to damages done by hail, rust, and green-bugs. Few fields average more than eight bushels per acre, and most of them even less. Some grain has been plowed under and corn, cotton, and other late crops planted.

If fair weather continues, threshing is expected to begin within the next two weeks.

Boy Scout News

TROOP THIRTEEN.

The Pathfinders held their regular meeting Wednesday night at Temple Israel, opening with the flag ceremony. The new assistant scoutmaster, Crawford Stovall, was present, also a visiting recruit.

The bird boy, Marion Reesby, asked ten very interesting questions.

A cross-question contest was held which netted a few correct answers.

After a few games, the meeting closed with the Allegiance to the Flag.

Troops Twenty-four, Sixteen, Seventeen and Thirteen are scheduled for a hike up the river next Thursday to cook their supper and to have a great camp fire program. The program will be in charge of Frank O'Neil, scoutmaster, Troop Twenty-four. The troops will meet at the First Baptist church at 5:00 promptly. Each boy will take his own food and may bring visitors if he so desires.

TROOP TWO.

Troop Two opened their meeting Friday night in the regular manner with the scout laws oath, and the allegiance to the flag. Mr. McClure, scoutmaster, called the roll and collected dues.

Ed Eiter read the scoutmasters' bulletin and an open discussion was held. Vernon McDaniel and Maxie Waggoner gave a brief report on the last hike the troop had at the Rod and Gun club. Entertainment of the troop fell on Miller McDaniel's patrol. They put on quite a few stunts, the most interesting being the human chariot race.

Mack McClure gave a short talk on the flag. Many important points were brought out in his talk.

Eggleston Ramey had charge of the game period. Nigger Baby, relay races, seat race, and knock 'em over, were among the games enjoyed.

A letter from Horace Thompson, who is now in Abilene, was read by Miller McDaniel. Horace says he is having a good time but would much rather be here with his troop. We are sorry to say that Mutt Giles has been operated on for appendicitis. Mutt is one of the old standbys of Troop Two and the boys say they sorely do miss him. Reports from the hospital say he is coming along fine. All boys wishing to see him will go to the General hospital.

Last Saturday and Sunday Troop Two went on a hike to the Rod and Gun club. The luggage was taken out in cars and the boys walked, arriving there in time for supper. After the meal and camp inspection several games were enjoyed. At 10 o'clock they retired. The scoutmaster made a ruling that anyone disturbing the slumbers of the camp would have to run the gauntlet in stocking feet. The ruling kept wouldbe night walkers under cover until day break. The boys arose at 6 o'clock and took a nice chilly dip in the river. This made them doubly eager for the delicious breakfast which was served at 7 o'clock. At 9 o'clock the troop went in swimming again and stayed in until 11 o'clock. When they were called into camp and ordered to prepare dinner during the "rest hour" a washer and horseshoe pitching contest was held. Ed Eiter and Cooper Jones won in both events. The troop then went to Westmoreland and went swimming again, returned to camp, prepared supper and returned home. This was the most successful hike the troop has ever had.

CAMP BUILDING NEARLY COMPLETED.

Scout Executive Creighton reports that the building at the scout camp at Diversion Dam is up over the window ledge now and that the roof will be on by Wednesday of this coming week.

The latter part of next week a bunch of about 20 scouts will leave for the camp to stay a week, getting the camp ready for habitation. There will be no charges for this trip but every boy who goes will be expected to work. Any boy desiring to go on this trip will please register at scout headquarters the early part of the week.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Troop Two will leave the troop headquarters at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon for Westmoreland swimming pool. All members are requested to bring their suits and 10 cents.

TROOP SIXTEEN.

Troop Sixteen, Kenneth Erwin scoutmaster, enjoyed a varied and interesting program at the regular weekly meeting Friday night at the First Baptist church. The feature event was an interesting and instructive talk on the Mississippi flood by Mr. J. S. Sherrill, who has just returned from a trip through that part of the country.

The making of plaster of paris casts of animal tracks was demonstrated by Woodrow Williamson.

Most of the activity period was given over to contests between the patrols, each patrol issuing challenges on such subjects as they chose.

Mr. John Kauffman, scoutmaster of Troop Thirteen, visited the troop and invited the members to join in the observance of a council fire ceremony to be held next Thursday night. The invitation was enthusiastically accepted.

Plans were made for the re-organization next Friday night of Troop Seventeen with Mr. D. R. (Sunshine) Mayers as scoutmaster. Troop Seventeen will meet thereafter each Thursday night at the First Baptist church.

CAMP DIRECTOR.

The Wichita Area Council has secured a camp director for the scout camp this summer. E. Clay Venable, a man who has specialized in all branches of handiwork and who teaches manual training in the Harding Junior High school in Oklahoma City. Mr. Venable has been a camp director six years, and as the saying goes "knows his onions" when it comes to running a camp. He is also a qualified instructor of American Red Cross life saving, both Junior and Senior, and the scouts will have the opportunity of passing these tests while at camp.

Mr. Venable will be in charge of a patrol leaders school which will be held at the scout camp July 11, 12 and 13. He will have as his assistants several scoutmasters and they will give the boys a very helpful course in patrol leadership.

TROOP TWENTY.

Troop Twenty, E. E. Davis scoutmaster, held their regular meeting at the Southern Presbyterian church Friday night.

Instruction and practice in signaling was given by the scoutmaster and most of the evening was devoted to practice in first aid.

Three scouts completed their second class tests and will appear before the next session of the board of review.

Swing ball, sack race and pillow fight were the games played during the evening.

The meeting closed with the scout oath and the pledge of allegiance.

MOVING PICTURE MCHINE

The pictures that were taken with the Cine kodak, presented the Scouts by Everett McCullough of the Lions club convention held recently at McAllen, Texas, have been received and a series of free moving picture shows have been held during the past week at scout headquarters.

Everyone who has seen the pictures is delighted with them. This machine is a gift that will give the scouts a great deal of pleasure during the years to come.

TROOP 11

Troop 11, Floid Billingsley, scoutmaster, met at the Floral Heights Methodist church Friday night. Several visitors, among them former members of the troop, were present.

The meeting opened with a bugle call by Red Allen, troop bugler, followed by the scout oath. Roll call and collection of dues followed.

Game exercises were led by Shelby Parham, assistant scoutmaster, and the scout laws were repeated by the entire troop.

The game of "Touch" was played and signalling was brought into the game. Patrol contests were held.

The patrol leaders gave an account of their trip to Lake Kemp and Mr. Billingsley read the Scout Bulletin.

The meeting closed with a bugle call by Red Allen and the scout oath.

TROOP FIVE

Troop five will hold an overnight hike instead of the regular meeting next Thursday night. The boys will meet at the troop hall at 6 o'clock and spend the night out.

JAMBOREE

Great plans are being made for the third quarterly jamboree of the Boy Scouts which will be held at Bellevue park July 14. Events were announced a month or so ago and each troop is practicing in order to win pennants for the purpose of decorating their troop room.

An added feature of the jamboree will be a moving picture show. Pictures of special stunts put on by individual troops will be taken with the new Cine kodak and will be shown at the jamboree. No one but members of each troop will know what the stunt will be until the night of the jamboree. Any troop wishing to have their picture taken must have it done before July 1, as the films have to be sent away to be developed.

TROOP 10

Troop 10, the Longhorns, opened its meeting Friday night with the Lord's Prayer, followed by old and new business.

This being Flag week and the 150th anniversary of the flag, the troop had history of the flag, in charge of Billy Wells. Billy started with the first United States of America flag and described all our flags from then to the present stars and stripes.

Test passing was taken up and three boys passed tests. Maxie Shumake passed second-class signalling. Berry Muense passed second-class first aid. Edward Hebb passed his tenderfoot requirements.

Last week at the regular session of the First Presbyterian church board a new troop committee was appointed. They were Messrs. Frazier, Wells, Naylor and Steblik. Messrs. Naylor and Steblik were both visitors at the meeting Friday night and gave talks on scouting and the benefits derived from same and the co-operation of the troop committee with the troop.

One visitor was present, an Eagle Scout by the name of Tucker, from Troop No. 5, Duncan, Okla., who gave a talk on what scouting is doing in Oklahoma.

Otto Steslik won a fire by friction contest by making a fire in 18 seconds.

About half an hour of tumbling and pyramid building was enjoyed and the meeting adjourned with the allegiance to the flag.

TROOP NINE

Troop nine, the Rising Sun troop, did not hold its regular meeting Friday night, but went to Westmoreland swimming pool for a swim. All the boys had a wonderful time.

Mexico Will Expel American Visitors Hiding Below Rio Grande For Crimes

By Universal Service.

BROWNSVILLE, June 19.—Belief that the hundreds of fugitives from justice who haunt the south bank of the Rio Grande will be deported back to the American side, was expressed today when three persons wanted on this side were deported from Matamoros as the inauguration of a general move in that section to force all foreigners to prove their citizenship and pay head tax or be deported.

Alfredo L. Vega, chief of immigration in Matamoros, said the regulation is an old one, but that orders have been issued from headquarters to carry it out, which has never been done before. He said that fully 80 per cent of the foreigners living along the south bank of the Rio Grande are fugitives from justice, and expressed the belief that carrying out this order will force them back to the United States and to justice.

Victory For Len Small

GOVERNOR LEN SMALL of Illinois continues in the limelight. He has agreed to a judgment of $600,000 for interest due the people of Illinois while he officiated as their state treasurer. He placed large sums of the money of the people in a bank operated by a friend. Then friend banker loaned the money to Chicago packers at a high rate of interest.

Governor Len did not know it. He was a victim of misplaced confidence. This was his alibi. In the confessed judgment it is explicitly set forth that the unfortunate Len was unaware of the fact that friend banker was charging interest and that the packers were paying interest. This absolved Governor Len from all guilt. He was given a clean bill of health.

Now he says, "With God's help," he will pay off the judgment when he is able to pay it off. In order to get himself in place where he may be able to pay it off, he may offer as a candidate for re-election to the office of governor of Illinois.

Think of it. A confiding state treasurer was lead into ways that are dark and tricks that are vain by a friendly banker, and he never discovered it until he had retired from the office of state treasurer and had won the highest political post in the gift of the people of his tate.

This should be a warning to professional politicians or men who hold high office. They tumble from their high estate without ever knowing that they had hit the earth.

Sun Is Shining

MOISTURE is the thing. Mother Earth is just like a human being. When the sun parches the soil Mother Earth is thirsty. Then the children of nature or rather of the product of nature wilt and droop and die if the heavens fail to open and precipitate the life restoring fluid.

It came in Texas at an opportune time. It saturated the parched earth from the foothills of the Rocky mountains to the shores of the Gulf of Mexico. Now what did the rain do? Why the livestock kings are smiling, they say that it means rich pasturage for their herds and their flocks of sheep and goats.

Farmers are smiling. They predict a magnificent yield of corn. A short crop of corn calls for the expenditure of money for corn purchased in other states. Texans will have corn for export this year.

There is going to be a tremendous watermelon crop. These are the reports from the melon growing district. All the growing crops of Texas have been benefited.

All this means money for those who till the soil—those who follow the plow and the hoe as well as those who are orchardists or gardeners.

In the irrigated districts the experienced tillers of the soil laugh at drouths. In the districts where irrigation has not appeared it is different when a drouth comes. It forecasts disaster for the sons and daughters of men who plow and hoe and reap and garner the fruits of their labor in normal years.

Yes, moisture is the thing and without it the country would be turned into a desert and its people would be compelled to hike to more favorite spots.

A Sister in Black

FOR the first time in Pennsylvania a negro woman will receive the degree of Bachelor of Laws at the commencement exercises of the University of Pennsylvania. She is Sadie P. Mossell Alexander, who also is the first negro woman to receive the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in Pennsylvania. She is the daughter of Arron A. Mossell, the first negro to graduate from the University of Pennsylvania and she plans to practice law. There is a huge negro colony in the city of Philadelphia. The husband of this sister in black is a lawyer and a Republican leader of the brothers in black of the city founded by William Penn. Yes, "de sun do move," Brother Jasper.

How it Was Killed

SENATOR CHARLES FLOYD of Lamar county held the floor for hours to prevent a vote on the house bill to regulate establishment of junior colleges. His purpose was to kill the bill. He killed it and when it died Senator Thomas B. Love groaned a ghastly groan. A senate is said to be the most deliberate body in the world. How so?

Road Building in Missouri

MISSOURIANS who believe in modern highways are urging another bond issue to speed the completion of the 7640-mile highway system. An additional bond issue of $120,000,000 is advocated by the Automobile club of Missouri, and a former chairman of the highway commission favors only another $60,000,000 issue. In the not distant future buyers of gasoline in old Missouri may be paying a gallonage tax of six cents. The gallonage is a great revenue lifter. In Texas the three-cent tax will place $15,000,000 in the treasury in a single year unless all the signs point the wrong way.

A Doctor of Laws Two Times

ATTORNEY GENERAL Claude Pollard is a Doctor of Laws two times. That is he is carrying two degrees. First he was crowned with the honor by St. Edwards university of Austin, and then the Southwestern university at Georgetown bestowed the same honor upon the head of the legal department of the state of Texas. Next.

Bo-Broadway

By JOSEPH VAN RAALTE

NEW YORK, June 19. (EFS)—Many suburbanites who commute to New York park their cars at the suburban station in the morning and ride home in them in the evening.

Ray Sisley, a fellow Mamaronecker, who, like myself, is driven to and from the station by the missus, was prompted to remark the other morning:

"The kind of a guy I'd like to be is one of these big, two-fisted he-men who park their cars at the station and leave their wives at home without a car all day long. That's the way to treat a woman—if you can get away with it. I can't."

Then there are those enviable he-men who take in only one morning newspaper, hog the paper at the breakfast table, and calmly walk off with it to finish reading it on the train.

And there is the fellow who can get away with calling his wife up at 5 o'clock in the afternoon and telling her he is bringing out a friend to dinner on the next train.

And there is the fellow who buys bootleg Scotch at $75 a case and puts up a squawk when his wife wants $15 for a new hat.

And there is the cluck who plays golf at a dollar a hole and observes the club rule against tipping the caddy.

And there is the brave fellow who wins $200 in an all-night poker session and tells his wife gruffly that he lost 40 bucks.

And there is the strong, silent man who sprawls across the seat of a crowded suburban train with his arms outstretched, reading a newspaper, so that timid folk dassent summon up courage to sit down beside him.

And there is the lovable cuss who cuts out of traffic and races ahead of the line on the wrong side of the road at a 40-mile clip, forcing oncoming cars to slow down and draw toward the curb, when there is no cop around.

And there is the big business man who calls several office conferences of high-powered executives on successive days to thrash out the question as to whether it would be bad for her morale to grant an additional $2 in salary to an $18-a-week file clerk, who has asked for a raise after two years' employment.

There is the thoughtful and considerate woman who runs her husband into debt by living and dressing on a scale to impress her acquaintances.

And there is the woman who plays bridge all the afternoon and puts up an argument when her husband wants to join the boys in a little session of poker.

And there is the woman who is always rude to shop girls.

And there is the woman who just must go away to the seashore every summer, while her husband sweats in the city, and who complains to her husband that he never wants to be with her any more, whenever he puts in a Saturday afternoon at golf.

HERE and there: One of the pathetic panhandlers of Broadway is a hop-head, whose addiction to drugs has cost him fame, money and self-respect. Not so many years ago he was a matinee idol who was paid one of the highest salaries current in the theater at the time; and he lived sumptuously and spent freely. He lost out because, after he became a drug addict, he could not be depended upon for rehearsals or to show up for his part. Several times he "threw the show" by balling up his lines and acting a hopeless wreck. . . . A playwright, who wrote one of the biggest hits in the history of the stage some 15 years ago, lives in a boarding house near Times Square and rarely ventures out of it. He never wrote but that one success, and he went through with the money he got out of it. An actors' benefit was arranged for him and the profits derived from it was put into a trust fund out of which he is paid enough to live on as long as it lasts. The gay life ruined him as a writer.

My Son's Sweethearts

WHAT HAS HAPPENED—

The entrance of America into the World war finds Phillip Wynne Tracy IV suffering from the collapse of his first passionate love affair. Before this, he and Natlee Jones had had a childish engagement which was objected to by both Mrs. Tracy and Mr. Jones.

Phillip becomes interested in Lyra Hilliard, an old friend of his mother's, and shortly finds he is failling in love.

The whole affair, however, sinks into nothingness because war is declared.

Rod and Phil are the first to enlist. Natlee nearly breaks Rod's heart by ignoring him completely at the depot, where she has gone to see the boys off.

Mrs. Tracy sends Phil a letter of introduction to Marta Tennis, the daughter of an old friend, who lives near the training camp to which Phil has been sent.

Here he meets Gladys, a girl of the streets, and on an impulse of pity, Phil proposes marlage, which the girl, for Phil's good, refuses. He then insists on givinging her $1000 with which to start life anew.

Phil's regiment is ordered back to New York, presumably bound for France, and he meets Natlee there. His love flames anew, and he is gone from camp several days.

Here the story further unfolds—

CHAPTER XXXIV

A SIGHT OF MARTA TENNIS

So fast and furious was their love making that when Phil had left Natlee at the door of her aunt's sitting room at the Waldorf on the night of the fourth day he was A. W. O. L., they had planned to go before some judge and be married the next morning.

"I'll call for you and we'll go and get a license as early as we can," Phil said. "I know it isn't fair, dear heart, for me to do this thing. You should not let me make you my wife before I go overseas, but, oh, Natlee, I want you so. I want you so. I know that I may be gone for years—that I may never come back, but I am selfish enough, my darling, to want to feel that I have left you behind mine—I want to be able to think as you are tonight in this little soft white frock, with its foolish little bunches of flowers catching up its folds—with your arms about my neck and your eyes looking into mine, but I want more than all else to keep a picture of you in my memory as my wife."

"Come to me by nine in the morning, Wynne, and pray God we may have at least one day's happiness before you leave."

The next morning, however, Phil was awakened by the jangling of his telephone bell in his room at the Ritz.

Taking down the receiver he heard Rod's voice. "The regiment has orders to move. For God's sake, get here as soon as possible."

Hastily he got into his uniform, went back to Camp Merrit and reported that he had been A. W. O. L. for five days.

Although everything was in the greatest confusion, Lieutenant Andrews took time to have him court-martialed. He was fined $50 and reduced to the ranks.

It was characteristic of him that he took his medicine stoically, saying to himself that the meeting and understanding with Natlee was worth it, even if that understanding could not be consummated.

He had not been able to get word to her although he had telephoned many times, sending her just before they started for the ship a wire, "Undying love, Wynne."

There were very few people at the dock from which they embarked, as all movements of the army were kept as secret as possible, but among the crowd he, at the last moment before they were ordered below, caught sight of his mother, tears streaming down her face, frantically wringing her hands and trying to pick out from those surging againts the rail.

"Mother, Mother," he called, all his love and loneliness for her filling his heart at sight of her. "Here I am, here is Phil," but she did not hear him.

"Every one below!" was the command, and he was pushed through the doorway as the uncomprehending liner slipped from the docks and glided to the dark brownish river and turned her long muzzle out to sea.

Down, down, into the depths of the ship, he was herded with the others, but the day had been full of excitement and hard work and it was over.

Phil felt something go out of him. To his surprise he found he was not able to even be sorry for his mother or Natlee, and he never thought of himself except to get into his bunk as soon as possible and drop asleep.

He hardly sensed the motion of the boat before he sank into oblivion.

The next morning as a sailor shouted "All out for breakfast," Phillip Wynne Tracy IV awakened in a different world from that he had ever known before.

As he rolled out of his bunk he wondered if all the others of this crowd that was slowly passing up the ladder, laughing, swearing and some of them almost crying, were looking forward to breakfast as despairingly as he.

Smells—smells—smells. The fetid air of below decks, the sickening smell of disinfectant, the odor of dirty bodies as the line slowly passed through the entrance into the mess hall, the stench of burning grease, and slimy dishwater, almost seemed more than he could bear, but Phil managed to squeeze in and put his mess kit and cup down on the counter.

Undone bacon, bitter marmalade ,hunks of dry bread were thrown into his mess kit, while hot, weak coffee was slopped equally into his mess cup and over his head.

He tried to eat but it wouldn't go down.

As soon as possible, he stumbled back to his bunk, but was soon called out again to hear the captain say that from now on the life preservers that were at the head of the bunks must be worn all of the time, and that no one must take off his clothes under any circumstances. You must sleep in your uniforms, men, shoes and all, and if one of you is found without his life preserver he will be arrested."

Reeling back into his bunk again, Phillip tried to think of something pleasant—of the beautiful Biltmore Cascades where they danced last night—of Natlee as she looked in her white chiffon gown with the little bunches of flowers looping up the skirt—of the touch of her soft, red mouth. Then he suddenly became ashamed of introducing her into memories that had no other result than the overturning and reaching of his stomach.

"O, God, don't let me be afr aid—don't let me be afraid."

He found himself crying like a hurt child, in utter misery.

Again and again he swore at himself for losing his nerve at the first suggestion of hardship. He fairly trembled with contempt as he asked himself if he were going to be a coward—would he find out that he was yellow? With a groan he turned over on his face and prayed, "O God don't let me be afraid—don't let me be afraid."

Frantically he started for the deck, he could not stand it longer. When at last he reached the open air he found Rod looking pale, calmly sitting down close to the rail.

"Have you been down in that hell hole, Rod?" he asked, weakly.

"Yes, I just came up."

"How did you stand it?"

"I'm afraid I didn't stand it, Wynne. It makes one feel very small not to be able to control one's stomach, doesn't it?"

Phil, to whom the fresh air of the deck had acted like a tonic sat down by the side of his friend.

"Rod," he confessed, "I don't mind not controlling my stomach so much, although that is rather awful—but I cannot control my thoughts. Rod, if you see me acting as if I were afraid, will you please knock me on the head?"

Rodney Maxwell put his hand on his chum's head as if he were years older than he. "There there," he said. "I don't think you're different from the rest of us who have an imagination. I don't believe any man can be a hero when he's sick at his stomach."

"I'm not afraid, Rod," muttered Wynne shakily, "but, oh, I'm so damn afraid I'll be afraid."

There is such a thing as becoming used to misery, Phil found, in the next week, and although it seemed as though the nights only stretched out further if possible than the endless days when he managed to roll out for formation and meals he grew to bear it all in a kind of semi-consciousness.

At last, after standing hours beside their packs at their proper deck stations through the danger zone, there came the sight of land through the mist and rain.

Phil took a long breath. The storm was blowing off shore. The air had a very different smell from that which had only blown across the bitter salt brine.

Phil almost thought he could detect the odor of damp earth, but he told himself not to be a fool.

Utterly weary and uncaring for what should come to him next, he was surprised by the lilt of a woman's laugh.

He looked up. On an upper deck where officers, nurses and war correspondents were standing watching the approaching land, he saw in a beautifully fitting, smart "Y" uniform, Marta Tennis.

Phil's first thought was to try and cover his dirty hands and wrists, and he was aware that probly his neck was black, as he turned away to avoid Marta's eyes. Soon he realized, however, that he need not have worried. She did not see him. It was evident now that all soldiers in the ranks looked alike to her.

Lieutenant Andrews came up and spoke to her. He wondered if now she would say—if she recognized him down there—that he was better looking than the natty officer in his spick and span uniform.

Almost involuntarily he moved behind another man, as he looked down on the mob huddled below her, tired and miserable—and smiled.

Evidently the condition of the men had not reached her consciousness.

So that was the way she was going to make it pleasant for the boys overseas.

From now on, Marta Tennis would probably not even recognize an enlisted man, except across a counter.

"To hell with her, and all her kind."

"What are you swearing about, buddy? Ain't you glad that we're at last in France?"

"I wish to God we'd been rammed by a U-boat and left in the bottom of the sea," was Phil's surly answer.

The man looked at him as though he had suddenly gone crazy.

At last his feet were on land once more.

As Rod passed him in the blur of deepening twilight, he said, "Well, Wynne, we're here."

"So are General Pershing and Lafayette," answered Phil between a growl and a grin.

It was the first ghost of a smile that had been on his lips since the day he started from America.

Rod was pleased to see it and with a hand on his shoulder for a moment, he said, "All right, Wynne, we must surely see each other in the morning. Wish you were still a sergeant."

"Oh, shut up, Rod. I know you're wishing that for me, for you're not a snob, but I'm all right."

He hoped that Rod had passed on before he realized how his teeth were chattering. The rain, cold, damp, had gone through to his skin.

(To Be Continued.)

Phil, attractive as ever to women, soon meets feminine representatives of France, as told in the next installment.

The badges are made of brilliantly-colored silk, and make a pleasing addition to the scout uniform. Harold Frierson had taken examinations in nine merit badge tests and Charles Withers had stood the examinations for eight merit badges. The badges were awarded to the winners on their arrival here.

THORN KILLS YOUTH.

MODISH MITZI — Mitzi Embarks For Home — By JAY V. JAY

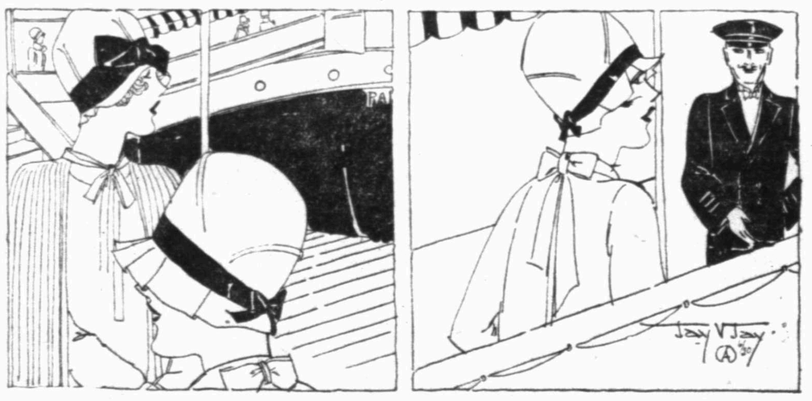
"Do they contain ammunition or firearms?" asks the French customs officer as he passes Mitzi's baggage. Mitzi wonders if she should tell him about that new powder blue evening dress. But he doesn't seem interested. He won't even look at the waterproof she carries. Smart as it is, she is very glad that it isn't necessary to wear it. Not a drop of the steady downpour outside has fallen on her new hat with the irregular brim. Isn't it lucky that the boat train steams right up on the pier at Harve? Even though it is raining cats and dogs, a Paris costume is safe.



She might still be in Paris for don't all the caps of the Stewards say so and there's a sign on the boat too. Polly wears a silk cape with pleats from the shoulder and a hat matching it exactly in bois de rose. Her costume is bois de rose and navy blue, even to the bag she carries.

Her hat matches her frock exactly as all French hats do and incidentally and by no means accidentally her eyes. The officer at the other end of the gang plank is one reason why Mitzi did not want to wear a rain coat. You know how it is, officers are men and men are only . . . human.

Quite a Number of Husbands Belong To The Amalgamated Order Of Rest

The Problem of Supporting a Husband in Idleness Used to Belong Only to Rich Women Who Indulged in Luxury—But Now Business Woman Discovers Her Husband May Belong to 'Amalgamated Sons of Rest.'

I get a great many letters from your business women asking me whether they should support their able-bodied husbands or not. They say that as soon as they got married their husbands quit work and left them to take care of the family.

This seems to indicate that the economic freedom for which we women have fought so hard is something of a boomerang, and that when we demonstrated our ability to hold down a job and make a living we frequently acquired with it the necessity of doing so.

Undoubtedly many a man who has all the natural qualifications and talents for being a charter member of the "Amalgamated Sons of Rest" is driven into being industrious because he is forced to earn his own living by the sweat of his brow. If he doesn't work, he won't eat, and rather than starve he makes a gesture at toil. Assure that type of man, however, of three square meals a day and a roof over his head and he joyously knocks off work, and lets any one who will feed and clothe him.

It is this type of man who is the male parasite who lives upon his wife and lets her toil in office or store while he talks politics at the corner grocery, or plays pool at the nearest speakeasy.

Of course, these loafing husbands always have an alibi with which they fool their wives for a time. They represent themselves as the chronic victims of the injustice of employers. Or they are temperamental and can not endure any sort of sordid labor. Or they are always hunting for work which by good luck they never happen to find. Or they become chronic invalids with no disease the doctors can ever diagnose.

And so, at first, the wife does not realize that she has married a man who is so indolent and no account that he is willing to sit down in idleness and let a woman support him. Then when the knowledge does come home to her with sickening, deadly certainty, the solution of her problem isn't quite so simple as it appears to be on the surface.

Sometimes the woman is a good sport, with a sense of humor, and she says to herself that turn about is fair play, and that inasmuch as a lot of men support trifling wives who lay down on their part in the domestic partnership, why shouldn't a woman support a lazy husband?

Sometimes the husband who won't work is amiable and agreeable and his wife maintains him as a luxury as she might an automobile or a yacht. Sometimes she carries on just because she dreads the mussiness of divorce and hates to wash her dirty linen in public. Generally she stands her good-for-nothing husband because she lacks the nerve to shut the door in his face and turn him out to starve.

But the situation is always one that is full of acute misery for the wife, because the man that a woman supports is always like a surly dog that bites the hand that feeds it. There is just one thing that he hates worse than work, and that is the woman who works for him.

I have known many lazy men who were dependent on their wives, but I have never yet known one of these men who treated his wife decently. Invariably they were ill-tempered and grouchy and abusive. They would take all that their wives could give them, but they never showed the slightest appreciation or gratitude. They were never kind, never even ordinarily polite.

And the reason for this is obvious enough. The man who lets his wife support him is humiliated in his own eyes. He knows himself for a poor, miserable weakling. Less than a man. He realizes that everybody else holds him in contempt, and he takes out upon his wife his futile rage at his own shortcomings.

He hates her for her virtues. Because she has the strength he lacks. Because she has the grit and determination he has not. Because she is competent and he is incompetent. Because she is a success and he is a failure. Because she makes money and he makes none. Because she gives and he takes. Because she is a better man than he is, and he knows it and the world knows it.

All this fills his heart with venom and he takes his mean revenge upon her by eating her bread and being disloyal to it.

Nor does the woman who has a parasitic husband long love him because a woman can not love the man she does not respect. A woman may cherish a romantic illusion about a man who has committed half the crimes on the calendar if he is strong and masterful and forceful, if he does big things and commands men and is a go-getter.

But there is nothing romantic, nothing to capture and hold a woman's fancy about a lazy man who is too no account to work, and who has to ask his wife for his pocket money.

Nothing else disgusts a woman so quickly as that, nothing gets on an energetic woman's nerves so quickly as just lack of energy in a man. She could easier love a successful porch-climber, or a crackerjack burglar than she could a man who never did anything at all.

The problem of supporting a husband in idleness used to belong exclusively to the rich woman. With her it was a simple matter of whether she cared to indulge in that kind of a luxury or not, and as she generally bought something ornate with social prestige or a title to it, it may be presumed that she got the worth of her money.

But now the business woman also discovers that there are a number of men who were born too tired to work, who are looking around for good, industrious wives capable of supporting them in the style in which they would like to live. And what to do about it is one of the new problems of the new woman.

With eight victories against two defeats for the home stand and a four and a half game over the Waco second-placers, Wichita Falls' championship-aspiring Spudders buzz out today on a foreign territory in the first game of a 19-day trip.

Four and a half games at this stage of the race might be called a commanding lead. If the Spudders can play as good as .500 ball on the road, they more than likely, barring a sudden victory streak by Waco or Dallas, will come back home still on the top rung.

July 4 is not so far away. You know, they say a team in the lead on Independence day will be in the lead when the curtain is rung down in September.

Dallas, this time last year, didn't have quite as sharp an advantage.

Habits of great men: E. B. Bynum, tire peddler, valiantly asserting the funny Dutch Mantell is human like the rest of you, is NOT an ape. IS a man, and really IS a wrestler of the first water, notwithstanding the numerous contrary reports and the fact you and I know better.

The eloquent and eccentric Knute Rockne, master mind of football, blooms into the spot again during the off-season. The ever-colorful Knute gets the boys "told" anent shifts made in the grid rules. Rockne charges the national rules committee with endeavoring to change a "he-man's game to a silk-stocking contest." The Notre Dame mentor said that in 1935 the account of the Harvard-Notre Dame game will be carried in the society section, and most of the account will be given to description of what the athletes wore and not what they did. Tea will be served between halves, according to Rock, and profs will lecture on psychology with hopes of spurring the teams to greater effort in the last half. When the Notre Dame safety politely informs the approaching Harvard player that he has a hole in his stocking, the Crimson will lose the game, according to Rockne, for, utterly modified at his disheveled condition, the Harvard player will drop the ball, dash to the club house and, incidentally, save the day for Notre Dame, Rockne said.

The Mick grid wizard may be stretching details just a we bit, but the bulk is there. Football with each new season has been getting calmer and calmer. The game of today is a tea party to the game plyed by dad back in the nineties and just over the century mark. Compare the days of the flying wedge and bone crushing plays to the game of 1926 or 1927 as she looms. A far gentler game today. At the same speed of evolution, or degeneration, take a guess as to what the game of 1935 really will be.

The unusual in sports: Finley Weldon, an angler of prominence, left-handed, too, who NEVER boasts about the size of fish he has caught or is purported to have caught.

NO

Jack Reynolds, weighing 143 pounds, refuses to meet the rough-and-ready Charles Grip, weighing 152 pounds, under New York commission rules. Whereupon, a matchmaker, one A. B. Ross, arises and avers Reynolds is afraid and the matchmaker would chalk a black mark on the Indianan's escutcheon. Reynolds admits fear, in a way, why not? Says he, "What do I want to get in there with that big bum for in a free-for-all fight and run the risk of getting bunged up and knocked out of several matches and the coin that goes with them? I'll take him any day in a clean match."

FINE SPORT

Ross more than has tipped his hand. He admits wishing to cajole Reynolds into a ring and sic some burly bozo on him who will not only trim him under wrestling rules fair and square, but will black an eye or so, crook a nose and maybe crack a rib. He figures Grip, allowed to wrestle as he pleases, which means kick, bite, scratch and slug, can do all this to Reynolds and more. Grip, curtailed by Police Gazette edicts, it is doubtful can beat Reynolds.

JENKINS SLUGS SPUDS TO WIN

Wichita Falls Trims Penner By 8-6 Score

By BLONDY CROSS

The thick-bodied Joe Kiefer hurled almost flawless ball for eight stanzas Sunday afternoon at Spudder park, then gave the customers a large scare by coming apart in the ninth and while wide open being jabbed for a quartet of runs Houston threatening to overhaul a lengthy Wichita Falls lead amassed by inning-for-inning pecks at Ken Penner, the Buff ace. But Milt Steengrafe charged to the rescue with two out and a runner on. The next swatsman shot a long blow to port. Jenkins hustled over at a Charles Paddock gait and pulled down the pellet from mid-flight, signing off on the Wichita Falls home stand with an 8-6 victory over the south Texas entry. The Spudders departed early Sunday evening for a 19-day road jaunt, stopping off first at San Antonio for three games.

Tom Jenkins, black-domed Spudder port gardener, furnished the loudest music yesterday for entertainment of a top size Sabbath gathering. The swarthy one combed a home run, a two-bagger and a single from the Penner offerings and batted four runs across. His three putouts in left field were of the bright color variety.

But the outer works defensive wreath went to Lucy Lamb, Spud right fielder, who scampered wild on four sharp thrusts to the starboard that with a less spry athlete on deck would have caused huge disaster.

Swenson Swats

The Swedish Mr. Swenson continued to be there in a hurry with the war club, hoisting a couple of Texas leaguers for two cushions each and pelting a single off third.

The great Penner was punched for 13 safeties in all, and so was the great Kiefer, but Kiefer's defense was the better in the ticklish spots with Fitz plugging a couple of sweet catches and LaFayette and Benton performing in handy fashion. Benton booted a couple that didn't cost, but saved our lives on several other instances, coming up with a sig of dirty drives at short.

We looked like we were rocking rosily along until that ninth when Harlem Joe got tired or something behind an 8-2 lead and succumbed to a fiery rally that produced five base blows, four counters and a third out yet to be made, but Steengrafe, as chronicled further up this col, and Jenkins connived effectively for the good-night close-up.

Kiefer walked the first man facing him in the curtain couplet and we mixed up a coupleof misplays on the inner works with the free ticket, but Joe struck out a couple and another popped to Turgeon who robbed LaFayette of a catch by a running one-hand stab at first, so the Buffs didn't score. Kane and Penner bingled in the second after one was out, but Powell retired with a hoist to left. Thereafter, Houston bats were dormant until the sixth.

Meantime, the home guard plunked Penner for a quartet of Scoring nuggets, tabbing one apiece in the second and third and a brace in the fifth.

High Homer

Jenkins started the advance with a home run knocked just as high as it was long over the center field batting screen. The blow came in the second with the runways empty. Lamb walked in the third and absconded with the keystone. Then the eminent Mr. Jenkins slapped him in with a one-asck clout to right, making her, 2-0. Spudders. LaFayette opened the fifth with a single but was forced by Turgeon who a moment later stole second, held his base while Fitz bounded out to the box and scored on Lamb's line larrup to center. Lambie went to second on the throw-in and continued to third when the ball trickled through Warwick. The boisterous Jenkins followed with a full-length double against the upper tier of the right field parapet, scoring Lucy.

The Mathesmen cashed two in the sixth on a walk to Martin. Roettger's blow to right that got by Lamb and went for a triple and a long rocket to the same sector by Taylor. The Spudders got one of the runs back ere the round was complete, scoring on a double by Swenson paired with Lapan's single.

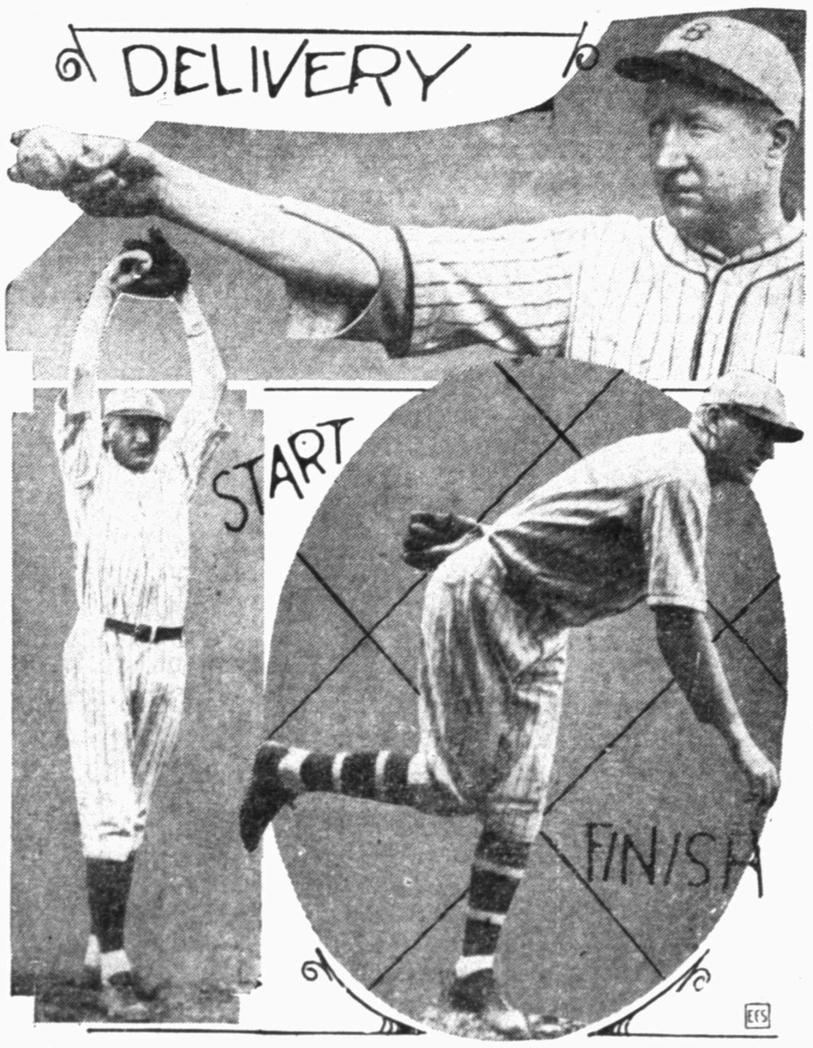
Vance Tells Secrets of His Strikeout Records and How He Does It



The highly scientific art of striking out batters in the big leagues has finally been explained by Dazzy Vance, who for the last five years has led the national league in this little nicety of the game. And unless Dazzy breaks an arm or something he should capture the strikeout for the sixth consecutive season.

Here is something unusual to those who have watched Vance buzz his blistering hard one past the batter or catch the corner of the plate with his jagged cure.

Dazzy attributes his remarkable strikeout success not to his speed or hook but to his own ideas about pitching—ideas that do not coincide with the views of practically all of the leading hurlers of the day.

"In my opinion I lead the league in strikeouts because I always press my advantage when I have the batter in the hole," explains the great Brooklyn ace.

"I never did agree with the usual thing of wasting a ball of so just because the batter has two strikes. Yet that is what nine out of every 10 pitchers do.

"You see it every day. A pitcher will get two strikes on the bitter. Then he begins playing around. He deliberately wastes one, maybe a foot outside, hoping to get the batter to swing. Then he'll throw one inside. That is ball two. Now the batter knows the next one is coming through there. He's likely to bust it a mile.

"When a pitcher is wasting balls he is letting up on his own stuff. Merely wasted energy. Now and then one of those wasted balls gets away and comes right through the middle. The hitter probably cracks it off the fence because the pitcher has put nothing on it.

"Again in nine cases out of 10 the pitcher gains nothing by wasting his pitches with two strikes on the batter. Usually he merely weakens his own position.

"It is my own opinion to throw the strike as quickly as possible after the first and second strikes.

"There are other reasons for busting one right through there with the count two strikes and no balls. For one thing the batter knows he is up against it. His confidence has been weakened. Often he is not as good a hitter when he is in the hole. Many batters you know are effected that way.

Further the pitcher can put everything he has on the ball because it makes no difference if it is not over. I mix up the fast one and the hook so the hitter doesn't know what to look for. No batter when he hasn't the slightest idea of what is coming, especially if he is a bit nervous with two strikes.

"Of course, now and then, the batter will be up there guessing and he is liable to guess right every now and then. But I will take that percentage anytime. It pays in the course of a season."

Statistics prove Vance is correct in his deduction—at least as far as his personal fortunes go. In the five years he has been with the Dodgers he has a total whiff record of 950 and probably a high percentage of those arrived when the batter had two strikes and no balls.

Vance has opened this season at his usual strikeout speed, turning back 60 in his first 10 games. He expects to have more than 200 before the campaign closes.

Grip Ready To Biff Leahman

Bullet-Head Expects Tough Match Tuesday

Charley Grip, bow-legged, heavy-muscled little man of the mat who steps out of his class again Tuesday night to defend his laurels against the assaults of a rugged light heavyweight, is expected in Wichita Falls today, according to a wire received by the promoter Sunday.

Grip, the colorful Buffalo junior middleweight wrestler, is carded with Charley Leahman of Detroit Tuesday night at the Ross stadium in finish match that carries all the cauliflower marks of a bitter blood struggle.

Feeling that exists between Grip and Leahman admittedly is not of the best and never was. When the midget matman got rough with Leahman here a month or so ago, slugged him in the ribs and tore away at one ear in a clinch until he almost dismantled the maltreated auditory organ and the match had to be stopped, Leahman swore vengeance then and there to be acquired at some date, no matter how long he has to wait.

Grip when told of being matched with Leahman this week at first demurred as if reminescent of those threats Leahman tossed at him following that other match, then shrugged his shoulders, scrowled and said, "All right, let the big man come and get it again."

Earl Smith To Get Long Rest

Fiery Buccaneer Backstop Given Suspension

CHICAGO, June 19. (AP)—Catcher Earl Smith of the Pittsburgh Pirates, was indefinitely suspended today by John A. Heydler, president of the National league, as a result of his attack on Manager Dave Bancroft of the Boston Braves in Pittsburgh yesterday.

Mr. Heydler came to Chicago from St. Louis where he had attended the National league flag raising and Lindbergh celebration ceremonies yesterday. He went into conference with Barney Dreyfuss, president of the Pirates, Manager Donie Bush, Catcher Smith and several other members of the team which is here playing the Cubs. He said that final disposition of the incident would not be made until after he had an opportunity to hear the Boston side, and he left at once for New York for that purpose.

Manager Bush said he regretted very much that the encounter occurred and hoped the matter would be straightened out. He expressed his sorrow at losing Smith at this time, but said he still admired his catcher as much as ever.

CONOCOS WIN 1 TO 0 CONTEST

Jackson Tire Nine Unable To Squeeze Across

(By ICHABOD TURNER)

Tommie Forbes bested Harry Geyer in a 1 to 0 hurling duel Sunday afternoon at Katy park in which only three runners reached second base, and the Conocos opened the last half of the Twilight league race with a victory over the Jackson tire team.

Both pitchers seemed to be backed with perfect support and great control all the way. Only two hits were made off Geyer while three was the best the Tiremen could do off Forbes.

Carrington led the attack for the leaders when he slapped out the only two hits made off Geyer. O'Neal hit two for three off Forbes while Walker beat out a slow roller to Whatley for the third Jackson hit.

Run In Seventh

The winning run came in the seventh inning one hit and an error. Carrington opened the inning with a sharp single to left field, his second hit off Geyer. Ramsey was the sixth man to face Geyer and pass out over the strike out route. Carrington pulled up at second on a wild pitch. When Carrington reached second it marked the first man to reach the midstation up to that point of the game. Dickey hit to Dieterman who juggled the ball too long to get Dickey at first. Carrington taking third. Dickey stole second. Carrington scored when Dieterman heaved out Homer Doke for what should have been the third out. Ray was tossed out by Willie Lawson.

Two consecutive men in the Conocos lineup was robedd of base hits but in two separate innings. Hull lined one that loked like a cinch hit to right, but Cecil Allison vent into the air and pulled the ball down with his gloved hand. Forbes, the first man up in the sixth inning lined one to right center that Thorn captured after a hard run.

Scratch to First

Carrington's scratch hit through the box after two were out in the first and with one out in the third Geyer hit Forbes with a pitched ball to be the only men to reach first base off Geyer in the first six innings.

Thorn opened the game for Jackson Tire by flying to Dickey in center field and from then until the fifth inning, Jackson never hit a ball out of the infield off Forbes. Dieterman flied to Ramsey in the fifth for the last out to make the second ball hit to the outfield off he former varsity star.

Walker's slow hit to Whatley in the third inning was their first man to reach first base. Whatley and Hull then handled pop flies in a neat style and Thorn rolled to Hull. Their next hit came in the fifth inning after Lawson had popped to Whatley. Boone knocked down O'Neal's roller past second, but was unable to get O'Neal at first. Walker popped to Ray and Dieterman lined to Ramsey.

Retired in Order

In the sixth and seventh Jackson Tire was retired in order, Allison falling victim of Forbes' slow curves for strike outs in the seventh. O'Neal dropped a Texas leaguer back of short for his second hit to start the eighth. Walker attempted to sacrifice and Forbes forced O'Neal at second. Walker stole second to mark the first Jackson Tire runner to safely reach second base, and to be the only Jackson Tire runner to reach second base in the game. Dieterman flied to Ramsey and Whatley tossed out Geyer.

After one was out in the ninth Levine drew the first and only pass issued by Forbes. After fouling a hard drive to left field Allison struck out. Doke kept the second base cleared of other runners when he nailed Levine by a wide margin with a beautiful throw to Whatley for the last out.

PASTOR TAKES POLICE TO TASK

Packard Charges Laxity To Official

failed to file a single liquor charge in the courts, Dr. Packard said:

"Not a single liquor case has been filed by a city official."

"Dr. Packard's sermon in full follows:

Text: "And while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred within him, as he saw the city wholly given to idolatry." Acts 17:18.

"Paul was one of the world's greatest men. I admire his character, and his true, noble, courageous life. Paul was the kind of a man I want to be. There is something about a brave man that excites enthusiasm and admiration, and I believe it is impossible for a man to read of his great life, and his mighty sermon, without having something of that iron determination, to be something more than a common high collared dudish, ladies' man, or a third rate society dudess. Paul reminds us that the great need of today is not for young men who have more collar than culture, or young women whose morals have degenerated to such an extent that their actions are such as to advertise "Man wanted," but rather for men and women of strong character, and a high standard of morals, and a God-sent determination to suppress every evil influence that threatens the safety of the church and home and the state. We do not need a Bible to prove that there is something wrong in our country. Take up a newspaper or one of our magazines, and about all we can see is suicides, murders, divorce, drunkenness and crime. We do not need a Bible to prove that there is something wrong when we face the appalling fact that the United States leads the world in nine of the greatest evils of civilization; that American homes are furnishing 50,000 of the purest and best young women to satisfy the demands of the brothels of our country, and that our country is spending more than three and one-half millions of dollars every day because of crime. This country reminds me of a man trying to get a drink of clear water at a little spring. He was doing all that he could to clear the water, but failed. Finally a friend called him and said: "Neighbor, if you will come up here and drive this hog out of the stream the water will clear itself." The hardest job the church of Jesus Christ has to face, is to try to raise the standard of morality and purify our cities at the same time tolerate the hogs of vice that we tolerate and do nothing to suppress and eradicate them. The greatest proposition the church and every other institution that stands for uplifting humanity, has on their hands, is the solution of the sin and vice problem of America. Never in all of the history of the church or reforms, have we been challenged to unite the power of church and state on the suppression of vice, as we are today. Some forms of vice, and sources of our national shame, are becoming national problems. We are challenged to eradicate their stain from our character, not only by our legislation, but by the enforcement of the laws we make. It is time the church is taking its rightful place as an enemy to the corruption and polluting influence of our cities and towns.

A Disgusting Sight.

"The most disgusting sight you ever saw is when the church is signalled out to battle against sin, and some great big six footer, an actual man from all appearances, with whiskers and britches on, cry ing for peace. The church has lived in peace so long now she wouldn't know how to recognize the smell of powder. We do not know what it means to be marshalled out against sin and vice in a vigorous battle. It is all right to sing:

"I love thy Church, O God'
Her walls before thee stand,
Dear as the apple of thine eye,
And graven on thine hand."

"But it is just as religious to close up the hymn book, lay aside the Bible, and put our religion into practice. The church has settled down in peace at the expense of principle. We have been an army of occupation when we should have been the army of conquest ,and it is time to wake up. Sin says: "Let us fill up your towns with gambling dens, bootlegging institutions, and dives; let us rot your politics, and pollute your municipal systems; let us fill your churches with a bunch of social polly-wogs, dancing, card-playing, nonentities, and convert your homes into gamblers training schools," and we have just folded our arms and sat at ease, and sang: "We are marching to Zion!" while the putrifying and debauching work has been gnawing at the character and at the heart of our manhood and womanhood and threatening the very foundation of American citizenship.

"The progress of civilization as civilization has been understood for 19 centuries, is measured by the extent to which 'Law and Order' are substituted for the barbarous methods of 'force and fraud.' Law and order can never be maintained when changes are effected by the private action of unauthorized and lawfully irresponsible individuals, or groups, rather than by the duly constituted law-making authority.

Need Brave Officials.

"(1) "City given to idolatry"—where is the remedy. We need brave city officials. We need men who dare to stand for law enforcement, honesty, morality, and righteousness and for the punishment of all law breakers, regardless of where they live or the high-powered limousine they ride in.

"When a man comes to office with a vow to do what is right, then willfully falls; who promises to enforce the law and does not do it, but slips in with a characterless bunch of tin horn politicians, and the whole bunch sell out to a whiskey ring, you're cursed with as low a set of licksoittle, grafting, grasping, pliable, plastic, soft-handed, spineless tin-horn time-servers as you can get. Henry Ford, in the last issue of the Dearborn Independent, says: "The old masters of philosophy held that men who are at war with the moral universe are not to be trusted with the secrets which make for progress; if still more power is to be won by human beings, it must be kept under the restraint of conscience and used accordingly to the dictates of morality."

"When law is openly violated there is but one thing evident, and that is: either the officer elected to enforce the law, is incompetent or he has sold out.

Discusses Local Officers

"(2) Before Mr. Carter announced his candidacy, he visited a number of the pastors soliciting their support and assuring us of certain changes in the police department. After his election he told me he attributed his election to the support of the Christian forces and the influence of the pastors. He faithfully promised:

"1. To reorganize the police department from top to bottom, and remove every officer placed there or kept there by the former administration.

"2. The strict enforcement of all law, and especially the prohibition law.

How has he kept these promises?

1. Every man on the present detective or plain clothes force, except one, has been retained from an administration which Mr. Carter characterized during his campaign, as a "disgrace to the city."

2. He promised the Fort Worth and Denver boys he would do anything they asked him to do if they would support him. They asked the dismissal of a Mexican officer; he promised it—He took the Mexican off that particular job and made his city jailor over American prisoners.

3. Mr. Carter not only kept the old regime intact, with one exception, but retained a city judge who was put in office by opponents of the 18th amendment.

4. Mr. Carter stated last week that he has instructed police force not to make any liquor raids unless by complaint of citizens. We have proven that a police commissioner who would betray the people who elected him, by giving such instructions, will not even respect the 18th amendment, on complaint of citizens. Has Mr. Carter forgotten that his attention was called to the fact that beer was being sold from a tent in the shadow of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce auditorium during that convention, and that instead of taking a search warrant and raiding the tent, he sent one of his officers down to buy a bottle.—

"What are the results of this administration? What are they?

1. Not a single liquor case has been filed by a city official—Sheriff Bralley made 15 raids one week ago last night and found booze at every place they raided; Mr. Bralley has only two men he can use, while Mr. Carter has 14.

2. Increase in all kinds of crime, especially bootlegging, knob-knocking, and auto stealing. Seven automobiles were stolen in one day, last week, and 40 for the first 15 days of this month. The department boasts it has recovered a number of these stolen cars—It doesn't take a Pinkerton detective to find an automobile that's been stripped and thrown along side the highway. Where are the thieves? Where are the knob-knockers? Where are the bootleggers? I am not forgetting the "burglar" they shot last week, but having received an advance tip that the job was to be pulled, why wasn't there sufficient force sent to make sure of the catch? You ask "how many ought we sent?"—I don't know; the entire force of 43 men don't seem to have caught one yet, so you can figure out about how many it would take to catch two burglars.

"I believe one officer did catch some men, but they broke out of jail a few hours later.

"3. The third result is that opponents of the eighteenth amendment boast that they still control the city.

"4. A wide open town attracts undesirables from other sections, and unless the law is enforced, our fair city will be a refuge for all the thugs in this section of the country.

Charges Inefficiency

"As a sign of the inefficiency of the police department: They were called a few weeks ago to this church to arrest an intoxicated driver who had smashed a parked auto in front of this building, and attempted to make an assault on the owner of the car when reprimanded. In addition to driving while intoxicated, the eighteenth amendment had been violated, a religious service had been disturbed, an assault had been made and the peace disturbed. The man in question was arrested and tried by Judge Bass. The party was found guilty and the case appealed to the county court, where it was discovered that no charges had been filed against the accused man until two days after he had been tried in the city court. The law requires that charges be filed before a case can be tried, but the incompetency of the city court did not seem to know this. The case was sent to the county court for trial in such a way as to be refused attention by the county attorney, and while the case is still pending, there is no possible chance of it being called by the county attorney.

"It is strange to me that a drunken driver can go scot-free and a worthwhile upright citizen of our community can be dragged into court, embarassed, humiliated, and fined for parking his automobile too long.

"Gentlemen, enforcing the law is something more serious than 'Chalk Brigade' that hauls over-time parkers into court.

"Over-time parkers are not undermining the morals of this city; they are not blasting at the foundation of our fair citizenship, making our business houses unsafe, or defying a law that makes anarchists, and if it's necessary, Mr. Carter had better take his whole 'Chalk Stick Law Enforcing Body' and turn them loose on a job that amounts to something.

"While I recognize the power our officers have, yet I believe there is a power that can control even a bunch of politicians, and that power is Christian manhood, and Christian homes, of a city like this. There is not an evil existing in Wichita Falls tonight that could survive 24 hours if the Christian manhood and womanhood would arise and assert itself.

"We need fathers who are worthy to be called fathers! I like to see a brave man in his home, and one who at least exercises parental authority. You had better have a backbone as long, as lanky and as knotty as a center pole in a circus tent, and know that the honor, virtue, character and good-citizenship leans up against it, than to have a tadpole backbone that bends with every element, and which, if your whole spinal column was analyzed wouldn't have enough lime in it to powder your old bald head.

He Cites Napoleon

"We need brave mothers! Napoleon never spoke more truly than when he said the greatest need of France is mothers, for such is the great need of all civilizations. I like to see a mother who values character enough to stand guard over her children. How strange it is when moral lepers wriggle from foul dives of vice and corruption, you settle back and let the devil rifle your home of the purest fruit of your fireside. Our children today are not getting all of their waywardness out of the streets. They are getting it from their home and if some women would pay less attention to society, cards and booby prizes, and more attention to their children, the story of our reform schools and penitentiaries would be altogether different than it is. It reads as it does because you parents live too loose a Christian life in the home, and allow your children to drift into sin at nine or 18 years of age, go to seed at 12 and to the devil at 15, body and soul, never to come back.

"We need some brave young women. A good, sincere girl, who can choose the right path and dare to walk in it in spite of criticism, a girl who is choice in her selection of company, and refuses to run with every Tom Dick and Harry, and who guards every action of her life, is a scarce article. I like to see a girl who, if her parents are indifferent toward her life, and the company she selects, will look after it herself, and refuse to waste her own future in the questionable paths of life.

"We need brave young men. Many a young man has been brave enough to knock the chip from the shoulder of his pal, or to toe the line or answer the call of his country in one of the great crises, but when it comes to the moral issues of life, God calls him to stand for right, an' he lacks backbone."

The sermon closed with an illustration from Robert E. Lee.

Father's Day

By THOMAS ANDREW BRADLEY.

Father whose form is bent with years
Whose brow is furrowed with care
Eager with love and watchful eyes
Is first our troubles to share.
Never a day but that his thoughts
Are only of things we do
Giving his love, his strength, his all
—A heart that is tried and true.

Father, who walks with trembling steps
This day 'tis of you we think
Father, perhaps you stand today
So close to eternity's brink.
Seldom a thought for you is given
Though broken with toil and care
Let's stop today our rush for wealth
Let DAD in all honors share.

Observance of Father's Day in Wichita Falls was featured in church services Sunday with mention of the occasion in a number of sermons by local pastors.

"My Plane and I—

FROM THE LIPS OF LINDY HIMSELF"

when I asked him if he ever had ambitions to be a politician as his father was.

He was sitting in a comfortable chair in a luxurious room of the American embassy in Paris. He was dressed in a borrowed suit. The coat was several inches too wide around the waist and the trouser legs somewhat baggy. The suit had been found after hours of digging through wardrobes following Lindbergh's arrival at Le Bourget. All Lindbergh came with was a flying suit.

Ambassador Herrick offered his best suit but it was like putting Lindbergh in a potato sack. Members of the embassy staff got busy but no one could be found with a suit to fit this long, lanky Minnesota boy.

Finally ambassador Herrick's valet came to the rescue. He had a friend almost the length of Lindy but with several more inches of girth.

Freakish Garb

Lindy accepted the suit and for two days made his official visits to statesmen and attended receptions dressed in the suit. The trouser cuffs had a queer upward tilt to them, the shoulders of the coat a funny depression. It was an awkward looking suit. Someone asked him when he was going to get a new outfit and Lindy said:

"What's the matter with this one? Isn't it all right?"

Lindy was never very much concerned about his clothes. He always seemed superior to them, his natural poise making people forget how he was dressed.

When I asked Lindy about his ambitions to be a politician, he had already been called the "American ambassador." He was already playing that role of bearer of good will among people, a role that was to be as sensational as his role of trans-Atlantic aviator. Lindenberg had already begun on that long series of speeches he was to make to statesmen, to kings, to mobs.

He had become a greater politician than his father, who devoted 10 years to politics, had ever hoped to be.

Not In Politics

"No," Lindy answered, "I can't see anything in politics."

"Did you ever think of making speeches?" I asked him.

"No," was the monosyllabic reply.

After a few second of reflection he added: "And I don't intend to become a speaker. I've been called a 'flying fool' but I don't intend to became a 'speaking fool.' I have been talking a lot lately, though. And I never had any ambitions to be a writer. They are not in my line."

lindbergh's line was machinery, things he could handle and experiment with, objects he could literally breathe life into.

As a kid he was ever planning curious vehicles and contraptions. He made funny cardboard toys. He was already playing with tools. His first mechanical means of travel was a bicycle. Then he began to play with parachutes as every youngster in every town in the United States was beginning to play shortly after the aeroplane began to be a practical thing.

But Lindy always made bigger and more successful parachutes than his playmates of Little Falls. He was able to travel much farther in them than any of his friends.

Parachute Flier

He became an expert parachute flyer, his experience proving of great service to him later when he was forced to descend four times to save his life.

"I liked parachutting," he said, "but I never enjoyed the experience of having to jump with a parachute to save my life. There's no fun in that."

lindy was always given to experimenting. He once pushed a neighbor's cat off a porch to see why the cat always landed on its feet. This cat has become as famous as the seven kittens who put to sea in the nursery rhymes.

When I asked him about the cat experiment, Lindy said:

"Shucks, every kid does that."

Every kid may want to push a cat off a porch or drag it around by the tail, but not every kid is eager to observe what natural phenomenon occurs when a cat falls.

Cat Yarns Pave Him

Lindbergh is rather peeved about cat stories.

"They started a cat yarn about me in New York," he said. "I had picked up a little cat that had been wandering around Roosevelt field.

"One day when things were dull, and newspaper men and photographers had been unable to find anything for a story, they asked me if I wouldn't pose with the cat. I said 'all right, I see you're hard up for a story.'

"The next day the papers had me saying I was going to take the cat along as passenger to Paris. And what made it worse, when I got to Europe, all the women reporters wanted to know what I gave the cat to eat during the flight."

Lindy was always puttering about machinery and tinkering about with his father's automobile. When the motorcycle craze set in, he got a motorcycle and would tour the neighboring country at breakneck speed. One winter he built himself an iceboat made of a hulk, a motorcycle engine and an airplane propeller. He used this iceboat on Lake Mendosa. His contraption came to grief in a collision, but lindy built a new iceboat.

Dog for Companion.

One summer in Little Falls, Minn., he built a curious model of a houseboat for his dog and himself. His dog was frequently his favorite companion. He was always with him in the woods. Lindy did not deliberately shun the society of other boys, but he preferred to be alone whenever he could.

During the war, when Lindy worked on his father's farm, his eager mind sought outlet by creating mechanical contrivances for that work.

It was natural then that he should go to the school of mechanical engineering of the University of Wisconsin. Mechanics was his whole outlook on life, but mechanics in theory and the class room soon irked him.

"I guess I didn't get much thrill out of studying," he said. "I never did have much use for marks and diplomas.

"If I had time now, I'd like to go back to college. I was restless when I was there. I wanted to go in for aviation. I had thought of aviation for sometime before this, but in the spring after seeing some planes fly around Madison, I made up my mind to go in for flying.

Life for Aeronautics.

"I hope to devote all my life to the furtherance of aeronautics. I have no definite plans yet as to my future. I don't know whether I'll go in for manufacturing. But I don't intend to give up flying.

"People think because I flew from New York to Paris, I'm going to stop now. That isn't the spirit in which I started the flight. The flight was made in the interest of aviation. Besides, I like flying too much to give it up. Why give it up anyway? You might think there was danger in flying to hear people talk that way."

Lindbergh dreams and talks of nothing but aviation. His mind is richly crowded with knowledge of aviation and mechanical principles. He astounded European aviators with his knowledge. Here is a typical expression from one of France's greatest flyers, Commandant Weiss.

"He is remarkable. It's amazing what he knows of aviation. He must have had a solid foundation, a thorough education."

What do your colleges think of Lindbergh's education, acquired by direct experience in pursuit of a childhood ambition in direct conflict with an educational system of marks and diplomas?

Lindbergh had one other childhood ambition, to be a crack shot with a rifle.

"Outside of aviation, I like rifle shooting" he told me. "I have done a lot of hunting, especially duck hunting. I can shoot a rifle pretty well."

He's Expert Shot.

Lindbergh today prizes a trophy he won in a marksmanship contest. At the University of Wisconsin he was one of the crack shots of the Gun and Pistol club. At Brooks and Kelly aviation school, San Antonio, Texas, he was considered an expert marksman.

I remember his eager interest in the anti-aircraft guns on the U. S. S. Memphis which brought him home from Europe.

He spent a half hour examining them.

"Wonder if I could hit a plane with one of these," he asked the gunnery officer of the Memphis.

GIANTS STAGE RAILROAD WAR

Van Sweringen Merger Up Before I. C. C. Again

By Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—The interstate commerce commission will meet in extraordinary session tomorrow to determine whether O. P. Van Sweringen, chief proponent of the billion dollar Cheaspeake and Ohio railroad merger, must bare to the world the inside details of his many spectacular railroad-stock exchange coups.

If the commission rules against him, Van Sweringen will have one more chance to answer the questions propounded by the minority stockholders who oppose the merger.

He already has once refused on the advice of counsel, to answer the queries put by the minority counsel Col. Henry W. Anderson. If the commission rules the matter relevant to the issue a second refusal will undoubtedly mean another contempt case similar to the refusal of Harry F. Sinclair the oil magnate to testify before the senate oil scandal committee. Sinclair was found guilty and is at liberty under a sentence of three months in jail pending hearing of his appeal by the courts.

His Council Demurs.

Van Sweringen's lawyer, Newton D. Baker, secretary of war in President Wilson's cabinet, insists the manner in which Van Sweringen secured control of the C. & O. when and how he made his stock exchange purchases, his market profits, and who, if anybody, backed him financially in the venture that made the heretofore unknown Cleveland real estate dealer a leader in the world of railroad finance a few short years, are not matters to be brought into the C. & O. merger hearings.

If he can convince the commission that his position is sound in the arguments tomorrow Baker will remove his multi-millionaire client from an unhappy position, his associates point out.

Baker will be aided in his pleadings by Charles C. McChord, former chairman of the commission, and Herbert Fitzpatrick, general counsel for the C. & O.

Van Sweringen already has been forced by the minority, over the objection of opposing counsel, to furnish the commission with the full amount of his private loans since the first ill-fated Nickel Plate unification plan was filed with the commission in 1925.

These statistics revealed that the Clevelander during the short period of one year and one-half borrowed slightly more than $100,000,000 for the personal account of either himself or his brother or their family holding company.

Approximately $77,000,000 of this amount has been furnished by J. P. Morgan & company, Wall Street bankers. The money in each case was used mostly to finance operations in railroad stocks.

Minority Makes Demand.

The minority demand that Van Sweringen now divulge his every purchase of C. & O. stock—when he first started to secure control and who, if anyone, furnished the financial backing.

The Van Sweringen brothers already have told how they started in buying railroads after the war on the installment plan. They first bought a small road, then hired a good railroad executive, paid for the road and then started in borrowing money, buying new roads and using the stock of the newly acquired carriers to make further purchases of other lines.

As a result they today control the Nickel Plate, the Hocking Valley, the Chesapeake & Ohio, the Pere Marquette, the Tric, the Greenbrier & Eastern, the Virginian anda a host of smaller lines which they hope to unite into the country's largest and most gigantic steam transportation system.

Whether their dream will be possible will largely be determined, it is pointed out, by the disposition the commission makes of the present C. & O. case.

Pretty Miss Kicks Glass Out of Jail Window

Wichita Falls Girl in Hospital After Wild Party During Early Hours

Culminating several hours of revelry on Wichita Falls streets and in a taxicab, a pretty young woman was rushed to the Wichita Falls General hospital late Sunday afternoon with a severe gash in her leg, received when she kicked out a window pane in the city hall while officers were placing her in jail.

A man, said by officers to have been the young woman's companion in a disorderly taxi ride in a residence section, was also arrested and is being held in the city jail.

The arrests were made after officers had received reports that a man and woman had been scuffling in a taxi. It was also reported that a young woman, apparently intoxicted, had created a disturbance in the business district.

The girl refused to tell police her name and strongly resisted efforts of arresting officers. When she was being taken to the woman's cell she broke from two officers and crashed her foot through the second story window.

A surgeon who examined the wound stated that a blood vessel had been severed by the broken glass. Several stitches were taken to close the wound before the woman was placed in a detention ward at the hospital.

Officers declared that the girl exhibited unusual strength in resisting them. It was believed that she had ben drinking alcoholic beer.

POISON DRAFT PROVES FATAL

Solution Mistaken For Wine Proves Deadly Dose

BEAUMONT, June 19. (AP)—One man is dead and another is in a hospital here in a critical condition tonight because they mistook some radish insect poison in a neighbor's house this afternoon for a bottle of red wine.

Charles Joseph O'Reilly, 37, and J. T. McInerney were in the home getting grain with which to feed the neighbor's chickens while he was out of town. The bottle of wine-colored liquid attracted their attention, and believing i really to be wine, each took a drink. An hour later O'Reilley had died from the effects of the poison and McInerney was in a critical condition at the hospital.

The poison liquid, intended to be sprayed on flies, contained considerable arsenic, according to physicians who attended the stricken men.

The brand of insect poison which they drank is exploited as "sure death."
