Mother takes stand, denies killing sons

Darlie Routier testifies about events on night of murders

'I loved those children more than my life. They were the most important thing to me.'

—Darlie Routier, on witness stand in her capital murder trial

KERRVILLE (AP) — A tearful Darlie Routier took the witness stand Wednesday to deny stabbing her two sons, blaming an intruder for the attack that killed the children she loved "more than my life."

The 27-year-old housewife on trial for capital murder also told jurors that she didn't slash herself to fool police. Defense attorneys rested their case shortly before 5 p.m.

"I did not stab those children nor did I try to stab myself," Mrs. Routier said firmly when asked by defense attorney Doug Mulder if she was responsible for the June 6 attack in the living room of the family's Rowlett home.

Wearing a light green suit and her long, blond hair in a bun, Mrs. Routier appeared calm when Mulder questioned her about her childhood and her family background.

But she became emotional when he asked her about the events surrounding the deaths of 5-year-old Damon and 6-year-old Devon.

Prosecutors claim Mrs. Routier killed her sons because she was angry over money problems and the burdens of motherhood. They are seeking the death penalty.

Mrs. Routier said she woke up and felt Damon hitting her right shoulder and saying, "Mommy." She testified that while not completely awake she saw a mystery man walking away from the couch, heard a glass break and she started towards him.

She said she told Damon — who was following her — to stop, saw the man go into the utility room, then flipped on the lights but he was gone.

"It was at that moment that I realized I had blood on me," Mrs. Routier testified.

She said she saw a knife on the floor in the doorway between the utility room and the kitchen and picked it up.

"It was an instinct," she said.

Mrs. Routier, crying throughout her testimony, described a chaotic scene in which she called upstairs

Rather's mugger

NEW YORK — The mystery may be solved: Dan Rather has identified the man he says beat him up on the street in 1986 while demanding to know "Kenneth, what is the frequency?" The CBS anchorman said his assailant was William Tager, now in prison for killing an NBC stagehand outside the "Today" show in 1994. Tager was convinced the media had him under surveillance and were beaming hostile messages to him, and he demanded that Rather tell him the frequency being used, according to a forensic psychiatrist who examined Tager after the NBC shooting.

AOL refunds

Threatened with lawsuits across the country, America Online agreed Wednesday to give refunds to customers who haven't been able to log on because of the overwhelming demand created by AOL's flat $19.95-a-month rate. Customers will be offered either cash or a month of free service. AOL had no immediate estimate of how much the settlement will cost. However, if every member was able to get a full refund for the two months, an highly unlikely scenario, the agreement would cost America Online about $320 million.

No ticket correctly matched all six numbers drawn Wednesday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas, state lottery officials said. The drawing was worth an estimated $18 million. The numbers drawn from a field of 50 were: 6-27-41-46-48-50. If sales continue as expected, Saturday night's drawing will be worth an estimated $25 million.

FORT WORTH (AP) — Uncle Sam wants Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones — to pay up.

The Internal Revenue Service claims Jones and his wife, Gene, owe $8.3 million in back taxes and penalties from 1992. The couple is contesting the matter in U.S. Tax Court, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Wednesday.

The government agency said Jerry Jones understated his 1992 income by $23.4 million.

In a statement issued on behalf of the Jones family, a team spokesman said the dispute will have no impact on the Cowboys or Texas Stadium.

"This is a civil tax dispute with the IRS over the amount of personal income taxes due that year. They are confident that

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

The city recently was awarded a half-million dollar matching grant for acquisition and development of a community park in southwest Midland. Meanwhile, city officials are making preparations to purchase 116 acres for the park.

City officials expect to buy the property east of Loop 250 between Annetta Drive and Highway 80 next month for $310,000. Last spring, the City Council entered into an earnest money contract that gave the option to purchase the property by March 1.

The future park will complete the city's goal of having a community park in each quadrant of Midland. The other three parks are: the 60-acre C.J. Kelly Park under development in the northwest, the 63-acre Reyes-Mashburn-

Trying to stay optimistic

Families try to bounce back after fires destroy their home

'God won't put you through more than you can handle. He's just seeing what we can do and (if we can) come back."

—Jack Nichols, who lost his home to fire

Amid ashen ruins, Jack Nichols is optimistic in a bleak setting.

"Welcome to my nightmare," he said, as he and his friend, Tammy Weston, once again viewed the remains of their home where they lived with his two children and her four children south of Midland.

Their 14-by-65-foot house trailer was destroyed by fire earlier this month. Last spring, the trailer's 20-by-20-foot bedroom addition was charred in another fire.

"I was doing the best I could," said Nichols, 26, a cosmetology student at Aladdin Beauty College. "Then, it goes up in flames. I was trying. The trailer is shot — a total loss."

The wooden bedroom addition, which he had hoped was salvageable, will "never be livable as a bedroom," Nichols said. "The stench will always be there."

Nichols and Ms. Weston, 29, are trying to decide whether to restore a donated house trailer or build a "bare-bones" house as funds become available.

He said the donated trailer's roof, ceiling and floor are rotting out. "It's a nightmare ... All the windows are gone ... But, it is something to start with."

For now, Nichols, Ms. Weston and their children are living with Nichols' mother, Beverly Nichols.

"We're friends," Nichols said of Ms. Weston and himself, "(which) makes dating kind of tough."

Nichols said that firefighters thought last year's fire in the bedroom was started by a "ball of flame" erupting from a gas-fueled space heater. Nichols, however, thought that it was started by an electrical short near a lower wall stud.

Midland's Bill Williams Softball Complex has been named as the Outstanding Amateur Softball Association Complex for 1996 by the Sportsplex Operators and Developers Association.

The complex received the honor at SODA's 17th annual conference in Albuquerque, N.M., Jan. 17-20.

Representing Midland at the SODA Conference was Freddie Ezell, who received the award from Bill Plummer III, Amateur Softball Association Hall of Fame Services manager. Ezell has been the tournament director for all 17 ASA national championships that have been held at the Bill Williams Complex since 1984.

"I think this is a great honor for Midland and serves as recognition for what we've done with the Bill Williams Complex in the past with the national tournaments," Ezell said. "It's one of the reasons we are able to land the caliber of national events that we have at the complex every year."

In 1996, Midland was one of 21 cities hosting the USA Olympic softball team. Each year Midland registers more than 670 teams with the Texas

N.Y. Times Service

GAZA CITY — The council members took their places, agenda folders and waiting microphones before them. The topic, the Hebron agreement with Israel, had been dominating world headlines for weeks, and now it was the turn of the elected Palestinian legislators to debate its details.

There was one problem: The accord had been signed and implemented the previous week.

Denied a chance by Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to examine and discuss the accord beforehand, representatives from the West Bank and Gaza Strip were now faced with the humiliating prospect of a debate without consequence, another manifestation of their own irrelevance.

"There is no point in debating an agreement that has already been implemented," Dr. Haidar Abdel Shafi, a Gaza representative, lamented to his colleagues at the session last week. "But we have to discuss the fact that this council was entirely neglected before the deal was accepted or rejected."

One year after electing an 88-member Legislative Council, a historic exercise in democracy observed by thousands of journalists and widely seen as a dress rehearsal for political life in a future state, the Palestinians are confronting a harsh reality: Their representatives have no power.

The council has passed hundreds of resolutions, written the first draft of a basic law on separation of powers, and courageously confronted Arafat on numerous issues within its chamber. But the man who has symbolized and led the Palestinian cause for three decades has largely ignored it.

Arafat has failed to sign all but one law (on local governance); he has declined to assign a defined budget to the body; and he has not kept secret his view that the legislature and indeed the courts should be answerable to him.

"When the council was established, we thought we'd broken the monopoly of Israel as the only democracy in the region," said Ziad Abu Amr, a political scientist and council member. "It was a historic opportunity. But one year later I'm very skeptical. We are unable to deliver. I've almost come to the conclusion that the experience is a failure."

The comparison with Israel is not an isolated one. Throughout last week's meeting on the Hebron accord, member after member, even those associated with the militant Hamas movement, referred to the fact that Israel's Knesset, or parliament, plays a role they wish for themselves.

"I am worth every bit as much as any Knesset member," fumed Sheikh Wajih Yaghi, an Islamic activist and council member. "In Israel, the Knesset debated the Hebron accord before it was put into effect. But not here."

The fact that the democratic template that council members wish to copy is Israel's creates a kind of cognitive dissonance for many, since that same model has, in other respects, been the source of so many of the council's troubles in its first year.

For the first months of the council's existence, the Israelis imposed a complete closure on the borders of the West Bank and Gaza because of a string of suicide bombings. This meant that many council members were often unable to get to their own meetings and constituency.

It also meant many months of economic downturn for the Palestinians, who were unable to move merchandise or to make good on offers to foreign investors, thus placing intense strain on the society.

In addition, the election of the conservative Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and the prospect of arduous negotiations with Israel over a whole set of issues have made many fervent democracy advocates hesitant to create an internal political crisis with Arafat.

Restrictions cramp style of U.S. troops in Bosnia

Their comrades from Russia, Poland and Nordic countries can wander through the old town of Tuzla in pairs, stopping at coffee houses and buying souvenirs.

Americans can't even stop at gas stations or cafes to use the toilet, and must wear heavy "battle rattle" — full military gear, including helmets, flak jacks and automatic weapons.

When the Americans arrived in northeast Bosnia in December 1995, they were under stringent rules that kept them on their base at a nearby airport. Even though Tuzla is so safe it didn't have a single murder in 1996, the rules remain for the 8,500 American soldiers settling in for another 18 months.

The different rules for different countries arise because each country contributing troops to the 31,000-strong NATO-led peacekeeping force decides what measures are necessary to protect its soldiers.

Regulations for the U.S. troops are built on memories of Vietnam, the 1983 bombing of the U.S. Marine barracks in Beirut and the murder of 18 U.S. Rangers in Somalia in 1993.

"If you're going to do a terrorist act, it's not going to be against a French guy or a Brit. It's going to be against an American," said U.S. Army Capt. Marty Nelson, 36, of Palmer, Texas.

Privately, many officers from other NATO countries say the American military is overprotecting its troops and not carrying out an important peacekeeping mission — showing soldiers on the streets acting normally.

"I believe when people are in touch with each other, all the anger, all the problems can be solved," said Danish Capt. Tage H. Nielsen, 52, of Copenhagen, whose government allows soldiers to visit Tuzla and other towns.

On military duty, American GIs who monitor one of the most hotly disputed areas in Bosnia support the rule that they must patrol in "battle rattle" and travel in a four-vehicle convoy with eight soldiers and an M60 mounted machine gun. There are still dangers out there.

The rub comes when U.S. soldiers travel on official business or have free time.

"If I go to a security briefing by the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Tuzla, I have to take eight people and four military vehicles," Nelson said. "In one sense, force protection inhibits me from doing my mission, but in another it keeps me safe."

Diverse group of powerful, famous meet at world forum

DAVOS, Switzerland (AP) — Bibi Netanyahu, meet Bill Gates. Newt Gingrich, say hello to Kofi Annan. And everyone listen to Luc Montagnier, one of the discoverers of the AIDS virus.

Only at the World Economic Forum, a six-day extravaganza of deal-making, deep thinking and fun in the snow, does such a disparate group of high-powered politicians, business leaders, scientists and intellectuals come face to face.

Headliners at this year's forum, which opens Thursday, include the Israeli prime minister, the Microsoft billionaire, the U.S. House Speaker, the new U.N. chief, key players from the Middle East and Russia and top scientists from around the world.

Most of the action takes place outside the formal discussions and dinners. "If you look at the subjects of most of the debates, you can't imagine most people sitting through them," said British author Bryan Appleyard.

Many of the government and corporate bigwigs will spend their time outside the Congress Center in one-on-one meetings.

Netanyahu has blocked out hours of time for sessions with other participants, including Gates and British Foreign Secretary Malcolm Rifkind.

In the past, the Davos forum has achieved its biggest success as a backdrop to negotiations. Netanyahu's predecessor, Shimon Peres, negotiated through the night with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat in 1994 to achieve breakthroughs in their peace efforts.

The prime ministers of Greece and Turkey met in 1988 to smooth relations. In 1990, soon after the Berlin Wall came down, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl sat with East German leader Hans Modrow to move toward reunification.

But sometimes differences are bridged within the forum itself. In 1992, South African President F.W. de Klerk shared a platform with African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela and his Inkatha rival Chief Mangosothu Buthelezi.

Whether Netanyahu will meet privately with Arafat or Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak this year has yet to be disclosed.

Davos (pronounced DA-vos), a narrow valley town of 12,300, is taken over for a week each winter by the forum, which began in 1971.

Leaders and business moguls leave behind virtually all of their aides. They have to. Hotel rooms can barely handle the 1,700 participants as well as 300 journalists covering the event. Only the most risk-prone politicians bring bodyguards.

This year, Montagnier, the French AIDS research pioneer, will lecture on the threat of new diseases, while Annan, the new U.N. secretary-general, expounds on his vision for the world body.

Steve Forbes, big-spending loser in the U.S. Republican presidential primary, will join deputy Treasury Secretary Lawrence H. Summers in speculating on whether other countries can learn from the American economic recovery.

Chen Jinhua, chairman of China's State Planning Commission, will reassure potential investors about the Chinese economy, and Anatoly B. Chubais, chief of staff to Russian President Boris Yeltsin, will discuss how Russia can make more of an impact on the world economy.

Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin will appear in a separate session.

On Sunday morning, the fun and games move to the slopes, for those who want to ski and make deals at the same time.

Bhutto loses bid to regain Pakistani post

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Benazir Bhutto lost a bid to regain office when Pakistan's highest court ruled Wednesday that her ousted government was corrupt. New elections will be held as planned Monday.

A lawyer for the former prime minister called the ruling disappointing. Ms. Bhutto said it was expected.

President Farooq Leghari used his constitutional powers to dismiss Ms. Bhutto's government Nov. 5, two years before her term expired. He accused her of driving Pakistan toward economic ruin, stealing billions from the national treasury and using police in the southern city of Karachi to quash a rival political movement.

Ms. Bhutto denied the charges and accused the president of dismissing her government in an attempt to consolidate power. But Chief Justice Sajjad Ali Shah told a packed courtroom there was abundant evidence to support them.

In a 6-1 ruling, the judges upheld the president's actions and ordered Monday's general elections to go ahead as scheduled.

"There is significant proof of corruption," Shah said. "There is enough evidence which shows the government was involved in extrajudicial killings."

Ms. Bhutto's government was accused of sanctioning police hit squads that targeted members of the opposition political group Mohajir Qami Movement. The movement represents Indian Muslims who fled to Pakistan when the country was created in 1947.

Hundreds of riot police surrounded the white marble courthouse, wearing helmets and holding steel shields. About a dozen women pelted police with stones and tried to storm the gate of the courthouse when the decision was announced. Earlier, they lay down on a road and blocked traffic.

In Karachi, Ms. Bhutto told reporters she wanted to withdraw her legal challenge two days ago because she did not expect justice, but her lawyers persuaded her to await the decision.

Her lawyer, Aitzaz Ahsan said the ruling "was disappointing."

A lawyer for the president, Khalid Anwat, said the judgment sent a warning to future governments "not to go beyond the law, not to take dictatorial power."

Ms. Bhutto is a candidate in Monday's election and has threatened to contest the results if her Pakistan People's Party wins fewer than 90 seats in the 207-seat National Assembly or lawmaking lower house of Parliament.

The Supreme Court said the only allegation made by the president that could not be substantiated was that her husband was involved in the fatal shooting of her brother last September.

The president said that Asif Ali Zardari may have been involved in the shooting and may have interfered with the police investigation.

Zardari was investment minister in his wife's government and was known to his detractors as "Mr. 40 Percent," a reference to the alleged kickbacks he demanded of potential business contacts.

The court's ruling has no impact on the charges against him in connection with the shooting.

Campaigning for next week's elections has been low-key. The interim government has banned the use of posters and loudspeakers and has outlawed large rallies.

Leaders to meet over Peruvian hostage crisis

LIMA, Peru (AP) — President Alberto Fujimori will get a chance this weekend to personally reassure Japan's prime minister about efforts to free 72 hostages held by leftist rebels in the Japanese ambassador's home.

Fujimori and Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto will meet in Toronto on Saturday, Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien announced. Canada was chosen for the summit because of its mediation role in the crisis.

Fujimori spoke with Hashimoto by telephone Tuesday night about the standoff, which began Dec. 17 when leftist Tupac Amaru rebels shot their way into a party at the diplomatic compound.

Talks to free the captives, including Japanese Ambassador Aoki Morihisa and Japanese executives, have stalled over the rebel demand that Peru free hundreds of Tupac Amaru prisoners from Peruvian jails. Fujimori refuses.

Hashimoto warned PΔ2eru not to take unnecessary risks after the guerrillas fired on heavily armed police commandos who were circling the residence Monday. Videotape of a commando gesturing obscenely at the compound, apparently drawing the gunfire, was broadcast worldwide.

There have been no police maneuvers near the compound since Monday.

Hashimoto told reporters in Tokyo on Wednesday that Fujimori contacted him and said he wanted to talk. Hashimoto said he would like to go if parliament approves, Kyodo News service said.

Canada's ambassador to Peru, Anthony Vincent, is on a commission charged with mediating talks between the government and rebels.

Peru, meanwhile, said it was willing to give Japan a greater role in reaching a peaceful solution to the standoff. The mediation commission met Tuesday with Fujimori and a Japanese diplomat, Terusuke Terada.

Seeking to reassure Japan, government negotiator Domingo Palermo said Peru recognizes the ambassador's house enjoys diplomatic privilege and Peruvian forces cannot enter without Japanese permission.

About 20 Tupac Amaru rebels took control of the house during a cocktail party celebrating the Japanese emperor's birthday attended by more than 500 dignitaries and other guests. They released most of their hostages but still hold 72 to demand the release of at least 300 guerrillas from Peruvian jails.

Fujimori was invited to the reception but didn't attend. The son of Japanese immigrants, he enjoys close ties with Japan, Peru's largest trade partner.

Other hostages include Peru's foreign and agriculture ministers, police officials and Fujimori's younger brother, Pedro.

Police had increased their presence around the diplomatic residence over the past week. Dozens of armed police commandos were parading past the residence, on foot and in armored vehicles, when the gunshots rang out Monday.

HONOR: Award is reflection of hard work

(From 1A)

ASA, which in 1996 registered 14,012 teams, an all-time high for the ASA.

"Midland has certainly done an outstanding job in promoting and holding ASA national championships," said Don Porter, ASA executive director. "This award is a reflection of the hard work and dedication of their people. We congratulate them for their outstanding service to ASA."

Jack Aaron, Texas ASA commissioner, said, "we are thrilled that Midland has received this award from SODA. We have a bunch of dedicated, hard-working people who have continually gone above and beyond for Midland and the Texas ASA.

"As state commissioner, I appreciate the hard work and effort of not only the people in Midland, but all of the people involved with the Texas ASA. We had a record year, thanks to all of them."

Ezell said that Midland's first of 17 national tournaments was landed in Albuquerque in 1984.

"It was nice to go back and receive this award in Albuquerque," Ezell said. "This is a very important award for us since it will help us in our bids for future national tournaments."

Bill Williams, for whom the complex is named, said this award shows how government and private citizens can work together for positive results.

'It was nice to go back and receive this award in Albuquerque. This is a very important award for us since it will help us in our bids for future national tournaments.'

—Freddie Ezell

"The dream actually began in 1982, two years before we hosted a national tournament," Williams said. "Everything we do is with volunteers and the complex is owned by the city. It shows how the city and private citizens can work together.

"As far as the award is concerned, it's like a lot of awards. It's pleasing that they thought of us. There are politics involved and you have to be lucky, but at the same time, it will help us get more votes for more national tournaments," he said. "Sometimes it's just good to get a pat on the back for what you've been doing. And there are a lot of people in this who have been doing a good job for the community. And, also, the complex gives us a great place to stage our own local leagues."

The state, region and national events brought into Midland also have a huge economic impact on the community.

"This award is an accreditation for the facilities that we have in Midland," said Nancy Swallow, sports coordinator for the Midland Chamber of Convention and Visitor Bureau. "I think it makes a statement for our community in all sports. One event, like a national tournament, also generates a lot of dollars coming into the community for motel, retailers and restaurants. And it's money from the outside."

The Bill Williams Complex, located in Hogan Park, has a full summer of local events scheduled, including its 18th national event.

On June 6-8, the BWC will host the Men's B Slow Pitch National Qualifier, which will bring in 25 to 30 teams. On June 13-15, the Girls 12-under Fast Pitch National Qualifier will host 30 to 40 teams. On July 25-27, Midland will have the Girls 12-Under Fast Pitch A&B Regional with 60 teams where three teams in the A Division will advance to the national tournament and three teams from the B Division to an area tournament.

And the Girls 12-Under Fast Pitch National Tournament will be in Midland on Aug. 5-10 where 73 teams will battle for a national championship.

The complex won't have to wait until June, however, for bringing in more out-of-town teams. On Feb. 20-22, the BWC will host the West Texas UIL girls softball Classic where 30 high school teams have already accepted invitations and each team will be given a four-game guarantee.

Midland has long taken a leadership role on the softball front, both on the national and state levels. Ezell is the Texas ASA district commissioner. Williams is the state president of the Amateur Softball Association. Jimmy Mowles is the president of the Midland Softball Association.

While no national events have been landed for 1998, plans are already in the works to bid on events for next year also. With the award to the Bill Williams Complex this month, that job should be much easier.

"There is a lot more to landing a national event than just having the top bid," Ezell said. "You have to have the facilities, the people to run the event and it helps to have given a good experience in the past to the teams that come here. You have to give a whole package. This award is very important to us in that regard."

BLAZE: Midlanders set up account for families

(From 1A)

"Tammy came home to make a phone call and found the fire" that damaged the house trailer.

He rebuilt the bedroom and living room.

"I had it livable until this happened, until the second fire," which, Nichols said was started by the children playing with a cigarette lighter in a bedroom.

At the time of the most recent fire, Nichols' children, Kalliegh, 4, and Andrew, 3, and Ms. Weston's two younger children, Aaron, 2, and David, 3, were playing in the house. Ms. Weston's other two children, Ashley, 6, and Samantha, 5, were in school at Bonham Elementary.

Ms. Weston, who is a clerk at Town & Country, was at home; Nichols was at the college.

"They were playing in the middle bedroom, as they usually do," Ms. Weston said,

Then, the children came running.

"(Kalliegh) told me that there was a fire on the bed," Ms. Weston said. Instead, the fire was blazing among papers in unpacked boxes. In vain, she tried to smother the fire with blankets.

Neither she nor the children were injured in the fire.

Meanwhile, Midlanders Jackie Quain and Laura McNeese, who became acquainted with Nichols through his beauty-school training, have helped set up an account at Bank One. The college's staff and clients have donated clothing and food to the two families.

"They don't have anything," Ms. Quain said.

She and Ms. McNeese, in a hand-written public appeal, said that "Those of you that God has blessed with so much, won't you please find it in your heart to give generously to this precious family and, at the same time, find the joy that giving to those in need can bring to you?"

"God won't put you through more than you can handle," Nichols said. "He's just seeing what we can do and (if we can) come back."

Anyone interested in helping the families may call Ms. Quain at 694-0915 or Ms. McNeese at 694-6616 or 694-5346.

STAND: Mother reads from journal entries to her husband, Darin, for help and put towels on the boys' wounds to try to stop the bleeding.

"I put a towel on Damon and told him to hold on," she said. "I said, 'Hold on, Damon' and he said, 'OK, Mommy.' That's the last thing he said to me."

Asked if she loved the boys, Mrs. Routier replied: "I loved those children more than my life. They were the most important thing to me."

To help search for answers to the killings, the Routiers had a psychic come to the house, she said.

Prosecutor Toby Shook tried to shake Mrs. Routier into admitting that parts of her testimony didn't match earlier accounts.

He contends she previously said she struggled with an attacker, which she now says she doesn't recall. Asked Shook, "Do you really think you could have slept when a man cut your throat?"

"I don't think so," she said.

"I think if I lived to be 100, I wouldn't be able to tell you everything that happened that night," Mrs. Routier said.

Mrs. Routier cried continuously through the last hour of cross-examination, at times uncontrollably, as Shook grilled her about subpoenaed letters she had written from jail to family and friends mentioning two men as possible suspects.

One was a man who lived in the Routiers' neighborhood. The other man had stopped in at the Routiers' business.

Mrs. Routier said she learned about them from her defense investigators.

"Sir, at the time, I was hoping," she said.

Finally, she questioned Shook.

"Can I ask you where you're getting all these letters from, sir?" she asked.

Shook showed her a document and she read it out loud.

"Jail file in central room," she said. "Isn't that illegal?"

"No," he said.

"It's not?" she asked.

The courtroom erupted into laughter as Mrs. Routier cried.

Earlier in the day, Mrs. Routier cried and cleared her throat often when she read from her journal, including one unfinished passage written a month before the slayings in which she contemplated suicide. She said her husband came home, they cried together and her life improved.

Mrs. Routier testified she and her laundress, Halina Czaban, saw a black car leaving the alley quickly the day before the killings. Ms. Czaban told her the driver had been looking into the garage, Mrs. Routier said.

The defendant also said she had been receiving phone calls in April and May 1996 in which the caller didn't say anything.

"This went on quite a bit," she said. "I just figured that it was kids prank calling."

Outside the courtroom, Mulder said Mrs. Routier had wanted to testify from the beginning, but acknowledged one of the worst parts of her testimony was when she was asked about the letters.

"In many of these deals you've got to take the bad with the good...she answered truthfully and forcefully and we're still convinced that she didn't do it," he said.

PLANS: IRS claims Joneses owe $8.3 million

they will prevail," the statement said.

IRS spokesman Phil Beasley said Wednesday he was prohibited from commenting on any individual's tax situation.

But an IRS lawyer told the newspaper about 95 percent of tax disputes are settled before they reach a tax court judge for a ruling.

The IRS told the Joneses in October they were liable for $12.8 million in total taxes in 1992, but said they paid less than $5.9 million.

The government agency said the Joneses understated their 1992 income by $23.4 million when they listed their earnings at $19 million.

The disputed income involved the sale of 49 percent of the stock in Texas Stadium Corp. to Pro Seat Limited Partnership and dividends from Texas Stadium Corp. and its subsidiaries.

An additional $1 million in other income, depreciation or dividends is in dispute.

In an unrelated matter, Jones spent nearly $800,000 on an unsuccessful effort to get the city of Irving to pull out of the Dallas Area Rapid Transit System, The Dallas Morning News reported Wednesday.

Jones spearheaded the campaign for residents to withdraw from DART, arguing that the city could get its own transit system for a lot less money. He had proposed an alternate transit system and offered to pay more than $4 million of its cost for about two years.

According to finance reports filed with the Irving city secretary's office, Jones contributed the bulk of the money to the Committee for Responsible Transportation, while about $50,000 went to the Committee for the Right to Vote.

PLANS: City seeks to acquire land for southwest park

(From 1A)

Nelms Park in the southeast, and the 55-acre Windlands Park in the northeast.

Development and acquisition costs for the planned southwest park will be offset by the $500,000 grant from the Texas Parks & Wildlife Commission.

Construction of the park isn't expected to begin until early 1998.

"What we'll do between now and the end of the year is secure some of our engineering and design services and get started on some of the drawings of what the park will look like," Director of Community Services Chuck Swallow said.

The first phase of the park, using grant money, will consist of the development of 25 acres. That will include seven Little League baseball fields, two soccer fields, a sports court, six picnic units, 1,700 feet of hiking/biking trail, a small amphitheater, a restroom and concession building, a pond and a playground.

The first phase is expected to take about a year and half to complete once construction begins, officials said.

The remaining 90 acres of the park will be developed in sections with subsequent grant applications made as the work progresses, officials said.

In addition to design work beginning this year, the City Council is expected to seek a name for the park within the next few months.

Frenchman says he was forced to aid in Jews' deportation

PARIS (AP) — The last Frenchman facing trial for the Holocaust stirred angry reaction from Jewish groups Wednesday for comparing himself to Jews he claims were forced to help organize the deportations.

"Ask forgiveness for what? I did nothing," said Maurice Papon, a former official of the pro-Nazi Vichy regime who last week lost his final appeal to avoid trial for crimes against humanity.

In a television interview broadcast Tuesday, Papon, 86, gave France a sneak preview of the arguments he's likely to use when he stands trial, probably this fall. No date has yet been set.

The former Vichy police chief in the Bordeaux region is charged in the arrest and deportation of 1,690 French Jews to Nazi death camps during World War II. Of the 75,000 French Jews deported to concentration camps during the Holocaust, only 2,500 survived.

At times angry and unrepentant, Papon shocked Jewish groups and historians with callous denials of established historical facts. Arno Klarsfeld, a lawyer representing Jewish families in the case, called him "a desperate man, up against the wall."

'Ask forgiveness for what? I did nothing.'
— Maurice Papon, former Vichy police chief

Papon, a high-profile political figure in postwar France whose case had been stalled for 15 years, has long held that he was just following orders. Papon claimed he was "the secret protector" of many Jews, that he was a "master sabotage artist" in the French resistance.

"If we make it a trial of Vichy, we should be complete and objective, and start from the beginning," he said.

"You can't avoid speaking of the role of the General Union of Jews," which he said was also forced, like himself, to go along with the Nazi roundups of Jews. He apparently was referring to the wartime umbrella organization of French Jews.

Papon also blamed his high political profile in postwar France for making him the only one of France's 90 police chiefs to face war crimes charges. In the 1970s, he was budget minister under President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

Papon claimed to know "an eminent Jew in French society" who was in charge of "sorting" Jews at Drancy, a camp outside Paris. The figure, whom he did not identify further, decided on "those whom they kept at Drancy and those they designated for deportation to Germany."

"This is completely false," Nazi hunter and historian Serge Klarsfeld said in a telephone interview.

"No Jew ever had that kind of decision-making power. The Jews did the menial work in the camps. They cleaned toilets, emptied trash cans," he said. "They did the secretarial work, typed up the lists of names, nationalities and identification numbers furnished by the French police and the Germans."

Historians have said that nearly all Jews deported from France passed through the French-run Drancy, known as "the antechamber of death," on their way to Auschwitz.

The 20-minute interview, filmed at Papon's Paris home, was his first public appearance since last week's high court ruling.

An umbrella organization of French Jewish groups, known as the CRIF, angrily responded Wednesday to what it called Papon's "scandalous comments." It also condemned TF1 for interviewing Papon.

CRIF spokesman Adrien Bornstein acknowledged that some members of the wartime General Union helped manage daily life in internment camps in France, "but everyone ended up being deported themselves."

Historian Marc Ferro told French radio Wednesday that while many French civil servants joined the underground at the war's end, Papon continued to hunt Jews and sign arrest orders as late as January 1944.

Lawyers call for death penalty in Vietnamese corruption trial

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam (AP) — Prosecutors demanded the death penalty Wednesday for four of 20 defendants accused of causing the collapse of a state-run company and losing $27 million.

Government lawyers said Communist Party member Pham Huy Phuoc, director of the export-import company Tamexco, ruined the company through dirty business dealings.

Phuoc, the main defendant, wept quietly as he heard the prosecution call for the death penalty, the state-run newspaper, The Laborer, reported.

Prosecutors also called for death sentences for Tran Quang Vinh and Le Minh Hai, private business executives and Phuoc's alleged gambling partners. Le Duc Canh, a low-level government official in southern Vietnam, also could be sentenced to death, if convicted.

All four are accused of a litany of corruption-related charges, including bribery, embezzlement and gambling.

In Vietnamese criminal trials, prosecution lawyers typically make their sentencing recommendations before a verdict has been announced.

Court officials and reporters from state-run media say the verdict and any sentences will be announced this week.

Vietnam last year introduced the death penalty for corruption cases that involve serious losses to the state. Since then, it has been invoked three times in corruption cases.

According to The Laborer, when prosecutor Tran Kim Tien stood to read his recommendation for the death penalty, the courtroom's handpicked audience applauded and cheered.

State-run media already have practically tried and convicted Phuoc, labeling him a "public enemy." Prosecutors say he siphoned millions of dollars from bank loans to feed his gambling habit and finance questionable business deals.

Chinese woman plans sit-in to protest husband's treatment

BEIJING (AP) — The wife of a jailed labor activist said Wednesday she plans to request permission to stage a sit-in to demand better treatment for her husband.

Chu Hailan said she felt she had no legal alternative but to protest the poor treatment of her husband, Liu Nianchun, at a labor camp 600 miles northeast of Beijing.

Chu said Liu is not receiving proper medicial treatment for intestinal problems and that she has been effectively denied permission to spend the Chinese New Year with him because there are no cars traveling to the remote site at that time.

Chu said she would file a request Sunday with Beijing's Dongcheng District Court, despite the risk of police retaliation.

"I don' expect this to work, but that doesn't matter," she said. "I feel I have no choice."

Liu, who spent three years in prison in the early 1980s, was picked up again in May 1995 during a sweep of dissidents before the anniversary of the June 4, 1989, military assault on pro-democracy demonstrators in Beijing.

He was never told why he was detained and was only sentenced to a labor camp in May — a year after he was taken into custody. In July, he was sent to Shuanghe in Heilongjiang province.

Chu also said she was still waiting for a verdict from a court hearing at the camp in September, when Liu sought to challenge his three-year sentence.

Liu wants his labor-camp sentence overturned, compensation for a year he spent in secret detention and an explanation for his confinement.

Under Chinese law, police have the authority to send people to labor camps for terms of up to three years without trial.

Meanwhile, a human rights group said that Tong Yi, former secretary to jailed dissident Wei Jingsheng, had been denied the right to work since her release from a labor camp in October. She had served a 2 1/2-year sentence.

Police detained Tong on April 4, 1994, after she told foreign reporters that Wei, who is serving a 14-year prison sentence for allegedly trying to subvert the government, had been taken away by police three days earlier.

Tong was charged with forging an official seal. Authorities later dropped the charge and sent her to a labor camp near her hometown, the central Chinese city of Wuhan.

Since her release, Tong has been unable to find work or travel because the police took away her identity papers, Human Rights in China said in a statement Wednesday.

The New York-based group cited an annual U.S. government human rights report to be issued Thursday that details police harrassment of Tong since her release.

A U.S. delegation in Beijing also urged Chinese officials Wednesday to make improvements in human rights before the United States must decide whether to sponsor a United Nations motion condemning China's record.

The U.N. Commission on Human Rights may consider such a motion when it meets in Geneva in March. U.S. officials have said they will examine China's human rights record before deciding whether to sponsor the motion, but have made clear they want to see progress.

Gandhi's ashes arrive in holy city to be immersed in Ganges River

ALLAHABAD, India (AP) — A train carrying a handful of Mohandas Gandhi's ashes rolled into this northern city Wednesday where the remains will be immersed in the Ganges River on the 49th anniversary of his assassination.

"Long live Mahatma Gandhi!" chanted the crowd of several hundred people that mobbed the train when it arrived in Allahabad.

Police waved wooden sticks to push back the crowd, which was eager for a glimpse of the metal urn containing the ashes.

"I feel great. I am overwhelmed. I am proud to be the great-grandson of Mahatma Gandhi," said Tushar Arun Gandhi, who claimed the urn that had been kept for years in a bank vault in eastern India.

He carried a wooden box containing the urn on his head as he stepped out of the train car, which was decorated with flowers. The urn was placed on a bed of roses.

The ashes will be immersed in the Ganges River on Thursday, according to Hindu practice. It appeared most people would have to watch from the shores, because boatmen who ferry pilgrims to the confluence of the Ganges and Yamuna rivers are on strike demanding higher rates.

"Of course I will go to see the immersion of the ashes. He is the father of my country," said Allahabad resident Ram Rajya Misra.

Thursday is the 49th anniversary of the day a Hindu fanatic shot and killed the leader of India's independence campaign.

Allahabad, a dusty city of 800,000 residents, already was crowded Wednesday with 150,000 pilgrims who came for an annual Hindu festival. Millions of people come to Allahabad to bathe every year, believing that the waters of the Ganges will wash away their sins.

After his death, Gandhi's ashes were divided and sent to all the states of India to be scattered in rivers. No one knows why some of the ashes instead were placed in a safety deposit box at a branch of the State Bank of India in Cuttack, 1,100 miles southeast of New Delhi.

Tushar Gandhi sought custody of the ashes after newspapers reported their existence in 1995. On Tuesday night, the ashes, in a copper urn draped in a red cloth, were put in a special railway car for the 550-mile journey north from Cuttack to Allahabad.

The train was nearly 2 1/2 hours late reaching Allahabad, but hundreds of people thronged platform No. 1, which had been painted and festooned with marigold garlands.

"It's a big day for Allahabad to be able to pay homage to Mahatma Gandhi in such a way," said lawmaker Satya Prakash Malviya.

Class day change may aid students

Midland School Board members face a difficult challenge as they consider whether to move to a seven-period day for Midland Independent School District (MISD) — and if they do, whether to make it mandatory for all students.

While such a change would benefit many students by giving them additional time during the school day to take additional courses for credit, it likely would not be used by other students. That fact appears to make a mandatory seven-period day unnecessary.

However, were the board to make it mandatory for all students, it's entirely possible that the additional class time would encourage some students to exert additional effort who might not otherwise do so. So, the change might have motivational influence.

The change also could invite some additional headaches for MISD teachers and personnel since a mandatory seven-period day was used in the past by both Midland High and Lee High with less than laudatory results.

With all that to consider, the decision will not be an easy one for the board. It's obvious, however, that the change will benefit some students who want to do more than the norm and are finding it difficult in the current six-period day.

We hope the board can arrive at a compromise that will benefit those students and perhaps encourage others to push themselves to achieve all they can.

ANOTHER VIEW

Bush angling toward big political coup

Even before it convened, the 75th Texas Legislature had already earned a place in the record books.

For the first time in 125 years, the Republican Party controls one of the two legislative chambers. But Gov. George W. Bush doesn't want this session to be a one-shot wonder.

When he was elected two years ago, even the most die-hard of Republican supporters would admit in private that young George would have a difficult time being as effective as the personable Ann Richards.

To everyone's surprise, Bush has not only showed remarkable maturity and nonpartisanship as governor, but he has won the respect of the Democratic leadership in the House and Senate.

For a Texas governor to be basking in the light of a high approval rating at the mid-point of their term and to see those numbers go through the floor as an election approaches is a fact that is not lost on Bush. If anything, he is a quick study. He doesn't want what happened to Richards in 1994 to happen to him in 1998.

So, with an eye firmly looking at the next election, Bush has been touting his $1 billion property tax relief package designed to take some of the burden of funding schools off the backs of property owners.

The only problem with promising to eliminate $1 billion in revenue collected from homeowners is that the money has to be made up from some other revenue source.

Right now there are three options:

- Higher sales taxes.
- A new gross-receipts tax on business revenue, or
- A new business-activity tax, which would tax the difference between the sales and costs that a business incurs.

Some lawmakers are suggesting a "hybrid" combination of levies might be the way to go.

But whichever plan or combination of plans becomes the magic pill, the inescapable fact is that taxpayers won't be getting a $1 billion tax break, instead they'll just be paying it at the checkout counter in the form of a higher sales tax or higher price on goods.

Bush's feel-good tax break will no doubt make his re-election in '98 an easy one. His only real competition — Comptroller John Sharp — has yet to get ahead of the curve and has been stuck playing catch-up.

But the real test will be whether Bush can parlay his tax plan and re-election to the governorship to the national office he covets.

As if unseating the woman that ridiculed his father on national TV wasn't sweet enough, Bush ultimately wants to restore the family's honor and occupy the White House.

Nothing could be sweeter for young George Bush than to fulfill the fateful pledge the elder Bush made when he said, "No new taxes."

That would really be one for the record books.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's Highlight in History:

On Jan. 30, 1948, Indian political and spiritual leader Mahatma Gandhi was murdered by a Hindu extremist.

On this date:

In 1649, England's King Charles I was beheaded.

In 1798, a brawl broke out in the House of Representatives in Philadelphia, as Matthew Lyon of Vermont spat in the face of Roger Griswold of Connecticut.

In 1882, the 32nd president of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, was born in Hyde Park, N.Y.

In 1933, Adolf Hitler became chancellor of Germany.

In 1933, the first episode of the "Lone Ranger" radio program was broadcast on station WXYZ in Detroit.

In 1962, two members of the Flying Wallendas high-wire act were killed when their seven-person pyramid collapsed during a performance in Detroit.

In 1964, the United States launched Ranger 6, an unmanned spacecraft carrying television cameras that was to crash-land on the moon.

In 1968, the Tet offensive began as Communist forces launched surprise attacks against South Vietnamese provincial capitals.

In 1972, 13 Roman Catholic civil rights marchers were shot to death by British soldiers in Northern Ireland on what became known as "Bloody Sunday."

In 1979, the civilian government of Iran announced it had decided to allow Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, who'd been living in exile in France, to return.

Astronomical forecasts put things in perspective

WASHINGTON--Well, better late than never. As the century closes we have come upon a cure for the century's defining disorder, political zealotry. The cure is astronomy. Astronomy's withering rejoinder to zealotry is, What's the use?

Will

Recently two University of Michigan astronomers reported that if the laws of physics as currently understood continue to operate, then in 10,000 trillion trillion trillion trillion trillion trillion trillion years the universe, which is pretty much everything, will run down. Carbon-based life, including us, wil' long since have disappeared and the entire cosmos will be a thin soup of diffuse particles.

This assumes that the universe will go on expanding. Into what? That is hard to envision because, it has been said, the universe may be not just stranger than we imagine, but stranger than we can imagine. However, back to the end of things, which may come a lot sooner and more abruptly than the two Michiganders suppose.

Lots of old debris and new stuff makes the universe uncomfortably eventful. Earlier this month a "solar belch" (The Washington Post's description) from the sun, a magnetic cloud 30 million miles thick, washed over the Earth at a million miles an hour. It may be what ruined a $200 million AT&T satellite.

However, such clouds are child's play compared with the comets and asteroids that might bump into Earth without bothering to file an environmental impact statement. The impact would be memorable, if any creature with memory survived, which is by no means assured, according to Timothy Ferris, writing in The New Yorker.

We have, Ferris writes, located fewer than 1 percent of the millions of asteroids--small planets made of stones and metals--in our little solar system, where impacts are ubiquitous, as the pock-marked surfaces of the moon and Mars attest. More than 150 terrestrial impact craters--there is one 50,000 years old and a kilometer wide near Winslow, Ariz.--have been located on the Earth's surface. The surface would be as scarred as the moon's were it not for the erosion by wind and rain, and geological upheavals.

Every hour the Earth, orbiting the sun at 66,500 mph, gains a ton of weight from micrometeorite dust. Fist-size meteors hit about once every two hours. Once or twice a week there are "near hits" like that of the tumbling house-size object that was discovered just a day before it brushed past the Earth in 1994, just 65,000 miles out.

Every once in a million years, Ferris says, Earth collides with an object a kilometer in diameter--large enough to destroy India. If the object that produced the 1908 blast that flattened trees for 15 kilometers around in Siberia had arrived a few hours later it might have destroyed Oslo or St. Petersburg.

Last November only about 10 hours may have spared Manila or Bangkok from the impact of the meteor that instead dug a crater 165 feet wide and ignited acres of coffee plants in Honduras. Extrapolating from cratering rates on the moon and other indices, astronomers estimate that about 2,000 asteroids larger than a kilometer in diameter — capable of generating deviating ocean waves and threatening a "nuclear winter" pollution of the environment — are in orbits that come near, meaning closer than the moon, to Earth's orbit. Only a tenth of them have been located.

It is, Ferris writes, widely accepted that 65 million years ago a comet or asteroid perhaps 10 kilometers wide hit near Yucatan, creating enough environmental havoc to kill the dinosaurs and nine-tenths of all other species on Earth. If one hit the Atlantic near Bermuda, it would generate a wave that would be 600 feet high when it hit Manhattan at 500 mph and would submerge low-lying regions from Dublin to Hong Kong. Soot from fires started around the world by the exploding comet might blot out the sun for a year, and acid rain would destroy much of the remaining plant and animal life.

"A day will surely come," says a NASA astronomer to Ferris, "when the sheltering sky is torn apart with a power that beggars the imagination. It has happened before. Ask any dinosaur, if you can find one. This is a dangerous place."

Which confirms the wisdom of Arthur Balfour, the intellectual aristocrat who had been Britain's prime minister in 1905 and was still leader of the Conservative Party in 1911 when he suddenly and without explanation quit. He thought the all-consuming nature of modern politics was disproportionate to any good politics could do. As a friend explained, "He knows that there was once an ice age and that there will be an ice age again."

Clinton fundraising debacle deserves investigation

Fred Wertheimer, the former president of Common Cause and a moral icon to some when it comes to defining the straight-and-narrow way of money and politics, describes fund-raising by the Clinton administration and the Democratic National Committee as "a systematic misuse of the White House." He called the alleged cash-for-access-to-the-president scheme "unprecedented." Because Wertheimer has been a critic of fund-raising by Republicans and Democrats, his description carries more weight than the usual partisan complaints.

Thomas

Hundreds of pages of new documents show that President Clinton participated in 71 "coffees" with corporate donors and supporters. Hillary Clinton, Vice President Al Gore and his wife attended 32 more coffees at the White House with big donors and Democratic fund-raisers. Prior to the release of the documents, the administration had called these gatherings mundane and claimed no fund-raising took place. Technically there may have been no appeal for money during the meetings, but the documents reveal that those who gained access to the president coughed up $6.5 million to his reelection campaign, and at least $600,000 of that amount was given shortly after the visits.

Other papers show that former Deputy Chief of Staff Harold Ickes instructed aides to devise plans to win the support of Asian-Americans, Hispanics, blacks and other ethnic groups. Republicans were frequently demonized at such gatherings, especially when the audience was black. "College-educated black professionals have a different perspective than black 'blue-collar' workers," said one of the papers. "Blacks in rural areas think differently than blacks in urban areas." Any Republican who said that would be labeled a racist.

White House special associate counsel Lanny Davis said those involved in the project to target ethnic voters contributed their time over and above the 40-hour workweek and thus did not violate the Hatch Act. That will bear looking into, as will the flipping and flopping done by Gore over his visit to a California Buddhist Temple, an event that raised $140,000 for the party. At first Gore denied knowing of any fund-raising at the temple, then acknowledged it had occurred, but now says, "I did not know that it was a fund-raiser."

The president's nominee for secretary of labor, Alexis Herman, sat in on five of the coffees. She was put in charge of Ickes' special project to attract minorities to vote for the president, which involved substantial fund-raising activity. The public-interest group Judicial Watch released a video deposition from James Hackney, counsel to the late Commerce Secretary Ron Brown, in which he says Herman coordinated White House briefings for participants in Commerce Department trade meetings, virtually all of which carried big contributors on foreign missions. White House officials rejected the implication of a quid pro quo.

The documents reveal that other participants in the coffee meetings with the president included some of the nation's most prominent bankers and at least one senior banking regulator, the Treasury secretary and the top fund-raiser for the Democratic Party. If these meetings weren't about raising campaign contributions, why did the fund-raiser attend? While meetings between any president and potential donors are common in an election year, it is not common for such events to be organized by a political party nor for those who regulate an industry to be present at such gatherings.

Republicans will have a more difficult time investigating these matters than in the first Clinton term because the president is conducting a preemptive strike in bipartisanship. From his calling for a volunteerism summit to be co-chaired by former President George Bush and Colin Powell, to his proposed reduction in the increase in Medicare spending (for which he and the Democrats demonized Republicans during the campaign), Clinton is trying to build a rosy public-relations hedge around himself in case the scandals become too much even for a public largely anesthetized by his charm. Now that he no longer needs to run again, he says he'll stop taking "soft money" campaign contributions if Republicans do the same. Last week, he pledged to improve the quality of our food.

No matter how difficult the task, Congress must investigate every misuse, abuse and excuse in the White House fund-raising debacle.

Even in White House, money doesn't mend everything

A Kung Fu monk came to the White House door with a broken electric toaster.

The butler asked him what he wanted.

"I'd like to get my toaster fixed."

"We don't fix toasters."

"I gave $250,000 to President Clinton's campaign, and they told me his people would fix anything."

Buchwald

"You misunderstood. They said that for $250,000 they would listen to your problems, but not necessarily do anything about them. We were only guaranteeing you access to the White House for a very reasonable price."

"You say that now, but at the time you assured all of us visiting the Oval Office that for a decent offering we could have anything fixed if it was broken."

"Within reason. For your contribution you are welcome to bowl in the basement, sleep on the second floor of the White House and have your picture taken with Socks. These are reasonable political perks that any generous citizen is entitled to during the Clinton administration."

"Surely you must have someone here who can fix my toaster."

"We may have, but if word got out that we were repairing electric appliances for political contributions it would look tacky."

"Are you trying to tell me that my $250,000 went down the drain and the breakfast I attended with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the CIA and the Marine Corps band was for naught?"

"Of course, it meant something. You are now in our computer where you will remain forever. The moment the president needs advice on Kung Fu legislation you will be the first person he'll call. When you want breakfast you can stop by Vice President Gore's office and talk to him about the Internet. These are meaningful things that money can't buy, although it doesn't hurt to give some."

"And my toaster?"

"Forget the toaster. If you want an electric power plant, we'll send you to the Department of Energy. If you are in the market for a new airport, we'll shuttle you to the Department of Transportation. If you would like to be the new ambassador to China, we'll escort you over to State. But once and for all, the White House doesn't do toasters."

"Thank you. Could I make another contribution to the Democratic Party in exchange for talking to President Clinton again?"

"I'll clear it with John Huang and put you down for a golf game on Thursday."

Republicans used White House, too, but Clinton breaks new ground

WASHINGTON (AP) — For $100,000 contributors, there were receptions at the White House, invitations to state dinners and briefings with senior officials. Maybe even a ride on Air Force One with baseball greats Ted Williams and Joe DiMaggio and the president.

President Bush, that is.

The White House and the perks that come with it, it seems, were an irresistible instrument of political fund-raising long before Bill Clinton came to Washington.

President Reagan, for example, greeted big Republican donors at the White House. He even attended a Roosevelt Room reception for major contributors to a group that was providing military aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels — despite a congressional ban on such aid.

And long before Rep. Newt Gingrich was a household name — or House speaker — the Georgia Republican rewarded big contributors to his GOPAC political organization with invitations to a special White House reception with Bush.

"Prior to the reception, we will go to the Old Executive Office Building for briefings with Cabinet members and other White House officials," Gingrich said in an October 1989 letter to major GOPAC donors.

So as Republicans accuse Clinton of selling access to the White House — and administration policymakers — for giant contributions to the Democratic National Committee, Clinton and many allies are crying foul, on grounds prior Republican administrations did much the same.

"They raise more foreign money," Clinton, with obvious bitterness, said of Republicans in a speech last week. "They raise more money in big contributions and we take all the heat. It's a free ride."

Federal election records prove part of Clinton's point: Republicans do have a perennial advantage in fund raising, including collections of the large, unregulated "soft money" donations at the core of Justice Department and congressional investigations of Democratic fund-raising in last year's campaign.

In the 1995-96 cycle, national Republican committees raised $141 million in soft money, compared with $122 million for Democratic committees.

> 'There has been for some time a pattern of using the White House for political fund raising. But I think the Clinton administration has taken the game to a new level ....'
> — Don Simon, general counsel of the public interest group Common Cause

And, like Democrats, Republicans have marketed access.

Early last year, for example, the Republican National Committee promised meetings with Speaker Gingrich, other GOP congressional leaders and the party's presidential nominee — who had not yet been selected — for a $250,000 contribution.

But Republicans involved in prior administrations argue that Clinton has crossed the line when it comes to using the White House itself as an instrument of fund raising.

They also argue that Republicans had a meticulous system of checking that contributions came from legal sources; since coming under scrutiny, the Democratic National Committee has returned nearly $1.5 million in questionable contributions, much of it from individuals or corporations with foreign roots.

"We would have major donors to the White House to meet with the president, but it was long after the checks were in the bank," said Bush White House political aide David Carney. "These guys were blatantly bringing people in as a way of getting them to give money."

Clinton and Democratic National Committee officials vehemently deny that any fund-raising solicitations were made at the White House. Such overtures would be a violation of federal law prohibiting fund-raising in official government buildings.

But critics note that prominent Democratic fund-raisers were on hand for most of the 70 political receptions held by Clinton over a 19-month period, and they point to records showing that many of those invited made contributions on the same day as the reception, or within a few days after.

While highly critical of past GOP practices, campaign watchdog groups echo Republicans in asserting that Clinton has broken new ground.

"There has been for some time a pattern of using the White House for political fund raising," said Don Simon, general counsel of the public interest group Common Cause. "But I think the Clinton administration has taken the game to a new level both in the amount of money that is being raised and in the aggressive use of the president and the White House as a key part of the fund raising. The image that is created is one of the White House being for sale."

Senate Watergate hearings were replete with evidence that President Nixon's operatives solicited contributions of $100,000 or more from wealthy Americans, most of them corporate officials who did business with the federal government, and promised access to administration policy-makers in return.

Post-Watergate reforms banned such giant contributions to federal candidates, but by the 1980s both parties were taking advantage of a loophole that allowed unlimited contributions to party organizations.

In the Reagan and Bush years, Team 100 was the exclusive Republican National Committee fund-raising club, open to those who gave $100,000 a year to the party.

Like major Democratic donors during the Clinton administration, many of these big contributors were named to administration advisory boards and given coveted spots on Commerce Department trade missions.

In a 1992 study, Common Cause complained that Bush was doling out government favors to big donors and detailed several cases in which administration decisions benefited Team 100 members and their companies.

"The Bush administration's actions on behalf of $100,000 donors raise striking parallels to the Watergate scandal," Common Cause said in April 1992.

Five years later, the organization is lodging similar complaints against Clinton.

Licensed gun dealers fewer since tougher rules enacted

■ The number of federally licensed gun dealers has dropped 57 percent in the 3 years after stricter requirements went into effect.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three years after toughening requirements for getting a gun dealer's license, the government says the number of federally licensed dealers has plummeted more than 57 percent — from 286,531 in 1993 to 124,286 early this month, the lowest level in 22 years.

Requirements that gun sellers provide fingerprints and meet face-to-face with federal inspectors, as well as higher application fees and more inspections of gun shops, have helped weed out people who used to obtain licenses even though they didn't operate legitimate gun stores, said Raymond Kelly, undersecretary for enforcement at the Treasury Department.

"Three years ago the United States was awash in what I call marginal federal firearms licensees," said Kelly, whose office oversees the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. "Many of them were no more than kitchen table dealers."

> 'Three years ago ... Many (applicants) were no more than kitchen table dealers.'
> — Raymond Kelly, Treasury Department undersecretary for enforcement

Many gun dealers chose not to renew their licenses under new application rules, said Kelly, a former New York city police chief. About 2,600 gun dealers volunteered to give up their licenses and 301 had their licenses revoked.

In 1993, under a presidential directive, the ATF started requiring gun license applicants to give more information and show they have a legitimate business. Fingerprints and photographs were gathered for criminal checks. The agency also raised fees for three-year licenses from $10 to $200, and for renewals from $10 to $90.

A 1994 law required applicants to promise to obey state and local laws. The Brady Law added a five-day waiting period and background check for handgun sales. At the same time, the ATF stepped up inspections of gun shops and started requiring applicants to meet with inspectors.

The current number of 124,286 dealers is the lowest since the ATF began keeping complete records on gun licenses in 1975. It is expected to fall to between 100,000 to 115,000 by the fall, when the first cycle of application renewals under the new requirements will be complete.

In California, the number of gun dealers has fallen by 15,000 in the last three years to 8,827. Texas has 9,187 gun dealers today, 11,000 fewer than it did in 1993. In Montana, 1,576 fewer licenses were issued, bringing the state total down to 1,822.

Gun control advocates applauded the news and said fewer bogus gun dealers are getting through system.

"These were people who were gun owners masquerading as gun dealers so they could buy guns at wholesale prices and order handguns interstate," said Bob Walker, president of Washington-based Handgun Control Inc.

With fewer gun dealers, the ATF stands a better chance of making sure licensed dealers are legitimate, he said.

Water walking

It comes as no surprise that Midland High School's physics students have come up with some ingenious inventions, but walking on water? MHS students in advanced physics classes established a competition in which they challenged their peers in the Physics I classes to develop devices that strap on feet and upper legs to walk on water. The challenge, open to the public free of charge, will begin 9 a.m. Saturday at the Mabee Aquatic Center. Contestants must stand on their "water shoes" and navigate an obstacle course across a 25-meter swimming pool. No motors or outside sources of power are allowed, and only the "shoes" can come in contact with the water. The competition is expected to take two hours. MHS physics students are under the direction of teacher Chuck Bell.

Opera

The Riverside Light Opera production of Gilbert & Sullivan's "H.M.S. Pinafore" is set for 7 p.m. Saturday at the Yucca Theatre. Tickets to the Midland Opera Theater-sponsored event are $15. For ticket information call 684-4101. The box office at Swartz's is open workdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Financial aid

Lee High School will host a free financial aid workshop 7 p.m. Tuesday in the school library. The workshop is for parents of seniors who are planning to attend college. Bob Haines of Midland College will present information about loans, grants, works study programs, and completing financial aid forms. He will also have the Fund Finder computer program set up from 6:30-7 pm. for parents to use to find specific scholarships for their students.

Eleven sentenced for federal fraud

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Eleven people believed to have cost taxpayers $1.67 million have been sentenced in the A-1 Mobile Homes federal conspiracy and bank-fraud trial.

U.S. District Judge Royal Furgeson handed down a federal prison sentence Saturday to the last of the defendants, who were convicted in June following a trial that lasted more than eight weeks in a Midland federal court.

In federal criminal cases, each defendant must have a pre-sentence investigation. In this complex case, there were 29 defendants, leading to the long delay between the findings of guilt and sentencing, according to Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark Roomberg, who served on the panel of prosecuting attorneys in the case.

The defendants were charged in a scheme to defraud federally insured banks in Midland from A-1 Mobile Home lots in Bryan, Waco, Nacogdoches and Roswell, N.M.

The defendants, who were owners, managers and salesmen at these lots between November 1986 and June 1990, were convicted of submitting false documents to banks in order to make their commissions and profit by getting financing for unqualified purchasers.

One of the 11 defendants found guilty in June was Max Waylan Cain, 55, former vice-president in charge of mobile home lending for the victimized savings and loan bank — Home Savings Association and HSA Mortgage in Midland.

Cain, now of San Antonio, was found guilty of one count of conspiracy to commit bank fraud and two counts of bank fraud. He was sentenced to five years, or 60 months, in prison.

Testimony revealed that Billy Wayne Cox, 39, of Boerne, was the ringleader of the scheme. Cox owned interests and operated the four A-1 lots involved in the fraud scheme.

Cox was found guilty of one count of conspiracy to commit bank fraud and two counts of bank fraud. He was sentenced to 70 months in prison.

Mason Long, 31, of Caldwell, also owned interest in the four lots. He was found guilty of one count of conspiracy to commit bank fraud and two counts of bank fraud and was sentenced to 63 months in prison.

Alice Barber, 36, of College Station managed the Bryan lot. She was found guilty of one count of conspiracy and one count of fraud. She was sentenced to 51 months in prison.

Darrell Paul Freeman, 49, of Daisetta, was a salesman at the Bryan lot and was found guilty of one count of conspiracy and one count of fraud. he was sentenced to 37 months in prison.

Sammi Davis, 44, of San Antonio was a salesman at the Bryan lot and was found guilty of one count of bank fraud. She was sentenced to three months in prison.

Arnold Gene Trout, 48, of Sommerville, was a salesman at the Bryan lot and was found guilty of one count of conspiracy and one count of fraud. He was sentenced to 30 months in prison.

James Mike Caldwell, 43, formerly of Nacogdoches, was a salesman at the Nacogdoches lot and was found guilty of one count of conspiracy and one count of fraud. He was sentenced to 33 months in prison.

ClayDesta offers to sell Harrigan's vacant restaurant

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Three weeks after Harrigan's Restaurant closed its doors at 418 W. Wadley Ave., building owner ClayDesta Corp. has signed a contract to sell it.

Mitch Malouf, leasing agent with ClayDesta, said a contract has been signed with an investor who is talking with several national restaurant chains to lease the building. An announcement is expected in the near future.

Malouf said after word got out that the popular dining spot had closed, he received a number of calls from potential tenants or buyers.

Apple South Inc. of Madison, Ga., decided to close the restaurant after its lease came due.

"It would have required a significant investment in the building such as the kitchen and other areas," explained Diann Yost, manager of public relations for Apple South. "It seemed the most sound business decision was to close the location."

The company is keeping its Odessa location at 2701 John Ben Sheppard Parkway. Midland managers were transferred to other Harrigan's locations and the other 35 staff members were offered transfers to other Harrigan's or were given assistance finding jobs with other local companies.

The Midland restaurant was one of the first Harrigan's when it opened in 1983. Presently the company operates 11 Harrigan's.

No Harrigan's have been opened since 1991, according to Ms. Yost, who said only one will be opened this year at an undetermined location.

Apple South also operates 235 Applebee's Neighborhood Grill and Bar restaurants, 63 Don Pablo's restaurants and 10 Hardee's fast-food restaurants under franchise agreements, for which it has signed a contract to sell.

Board agrees to expansion try in Midland

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Midland County Hospital District board members have given the green light to a project whereby Memorial Hospital and Medical Center will attempt to purchase additional medical office space near the hospital.

At a Wednesday meeting of the board, approval was given for hospital officials to establish a Texas non-profit organization to enter into a long-term lease agreement with Highland Park Medical Partnership, which owns an office building at 208 W. Ohio Ave.

Two office suites are now empty in this building after two oncologists moved to the newly expanded and remodeled Allison Cancer Center building.

Because of its proximity to the main facility, hospital officials hope to secure more than 5,000 square feet of the building for $290,000.

No tax funds are to be used for the purchase.

Also at the meeting, board members were updated on usage of the hospital's outreach centers, which provide health care to the county's indigent and uninsured population — where locally raised tax dollars are used.

The outreach centers are in place to reduce expensive emergency-room usage by these citizens.

In December, the new Memorial Community Clinic on Florida Avenue cared for 1,321 people, which is up 42 percent over the same period last year when the clinic was housed at Casa de Amigos.

Statistics indicate that indigent usage of the emergency room was significantly lower in December, but it is too soon to correlate this directly with the outpatient clinic, according to hospital officials.

In the women's clinic, almost 2,200 people received treatment and the pediatric

Soup cook-off to benefit monastery

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

STANTON — Unlike the real world of politics, votes can be bought legally for $1 each for the soup or soups of choice in Stanton's eighth annual Great Texas Soup Cook-off to benefit restoration of the community's 1884 adobe monastery.

"The only place where buying votes is legal and encouraged" is at the Great Texas Soup Cook-Off, set for 5-7 p.m. Saturday at Martin County Community Center, said Kathryn Burch, event chairman and Martin County extension agent.

The $3 admission to the soup cook-off entitles each ticket-holder to three votes for the soup or soups of choice among the 17 or more home-made soups. Additional votes may be purchased for $1 a vote.

"Buying more votes is certainly encouraged," Ms. Burch said.

She said the medley of soups includes everything from a pink strawberry soup made by Jayne Titsworth to a wild-game, robust, stick-to-your ribs soup made by "the old Texas Army out of Andrews."

Previous winners are: 1990, First Methodist Church Youth, Sorehead Soup; 1991, Dr. Thomas Miller's office, Janie's 15-Bean-and-Beer Soup; 1992, Rho Xi sorority, Cheddar Chowder; 1993, Martin County Senior Citizens, Fountain-of-Youth (broccoli-chicken) Soup; 1994, Rho Xi sorority, Wild-Rice Soup; 1995, Mark and Leslie Cook, Mark and Leslie's Chicken Soup; and 1996, Boy Scouts of America Troop 28, Potato-and-Chicken Soup.

Proceeds from the cook-off — and accompanying bake sale — are for Martin County Convent Inc., a non-profit organization.

Last year's cook-off brought in about $1,000 toward the $500,000 restoration project, which already has received a $111,000 matching grant from the Texas Department of Transportation for adobe restoration.

TexDOT is providing 80 percent of the $111,000 funding; the community is putting up 20 percent of the money.

Creatures spark mutual respect for all life, creation

Nowadays, as in the past, scientists and wildlife observers are trying to discern if it is instinct or intelligence that rouses a spider's cunning in capturing prey and directs a bird's astounding navigational skills.

Todd

"Timing is everything," says the old truism. And many of those critters with superb gifts, instinct or sense, are pretty keen and crafty scholars, designers, architects, engineers, builders, laborers, navigators, pursuers, tricksters, aviators, divers, swimmers, runners, crawlers, providers, survivors.

They are all amazing as, for instance, the National Geographic magazine and nature and scientific journals attest. Season after season and generation and after generation, the critters strive and seek to thrive.

In the main, it seems, their existence is taken for granted by mankind, which can only feebly emulate the navigational skills of the arctic tern, the flight of the honey bee, the industry of the ant, the water-firing and hunting acumen of the archerfish, the keen sight and flying talents of the birds of prey from falcons to eagles, the spinning and weaving of spiders, the agility of squirrels, the survivability of coyotes, the aerobatics of hummingbirds, the fertility of sparrows, the natural balance within the depths of the sea world, the grace of deer and antelope on the run, the agility of mountain goats, and the family loyal of wolves.

Amazing.

Though the same in their respective species, they all appear to be quite individualistic within their realm. Do astute animal fanciers not recognize peculiarities and character traits, attributes or foibles, of critters that strike their fancy?

Indeed.

The universal love affair between man and beast is witness to a bond that, were it not so common, would be mysterious. Boy or girl, man or woman, there seems to be a natural affinity awaiting to be enlivened between humankind and animals.

The bond between individual humans and individual critters, such as the domestic dog and cat, horse and bovine, goat and lamb, rabbit and bird, attests to trust and understanding. Does not that comradeship then suggest compassion and an intelligence within the bounds of instinct or beyond those bounds?

Think?

Most anyone who has lived with a critter, be it dog, cat, horse, mule, goat, or hog, would attest to the animal's sense of soul and ability to think and to reason within the critter's own realm.

Who, indeed, is to understand whom: The man, the beast, or the beast, the man? And who has the greatest insight?

Within the critter kingdom, kind attracts kind. Therein are remarkable communications and living skills and understanding of the environment so often lacking in just plain human folk. That seems to be the case whether they are educated just on the homefront or sent off to schools, colleges, and universities to learn and earn academic degree upon academic degree.

Either way, critters or people, instinct or sense, it is a struggle and a pleasure to live life. And life, hard times and all else, ought to be a joy for critters and folk. Surely, there must be a mutual respect and awe for creation.

OBITUARIES

Joe Woody Boyd

Joe Woody Boyd, 86, passed away peacefully, surrounded by his family, on Tuesday, Jan. 28, 1997, at Midland Memorial Hospital. He was born Dec. 5, 1910, to Ola Cozby and Frank Leslie Boyd, who were early pioneer residents of Crane County. He was in the first graduating class of Crane High School, one of three students.

Mr. Boyd married Johnnie Ruth Allen in 1932. They were married 42 years before her death in 1974.

He was employed by Gulf Oil Company in the Crane McElroy District for 42 years. During this time, he served three terms on the Board of Trustees of the Crane Independent School District.

Mr. Boyd was a deacon of the First Baptist Church of Crane and also served as treasurer for nine years. He coached and worked for a number of years with the Crane Pony League baseball program.

Following his retirement, Mr. Boyd married Ruth Thomas in 1975 and moved to Midland. He was employed for nine years with Permian Coffee Service. He was a member of the Crestview Baptist Church where he served as a deacon.

Mr. Boyd was preceded in death by his two sisters, Ruth Reed and Mary Hanks.

He is survived by his wife, Ruth Boyd of Midland; two sons, Joe Allen Boyd of Imperial and Gordon Bruce Boyd of Phoenix, Ariz.; stepson, Stephen D. Thomas of Victoria; two brothers, Jack C. Boyd of Big Spring and C. Ben Boyd of Phoenix, Ariz.; six grandchildren, Kirsty Sutton and Kelly Rogers, both of Andrews, Brad Boyd and Dan Boyd, both of Lubbock, Molly Duddleston of Trabuco Canyon, Calif., and Lindsay Thomas of Victoria; three great-grandchildren; and numerous nieces and nephews.

Pallbearers are Mike Credicott, Lloyd Morse, Wayne Hildreth, Jim Crumley, Porter Wallis and Henry Clingman. Honorary pallbearers are Ron Van Dyke, Vernon Sivage and the Deacons of Crestview Baptist Church.

Funeral services have been set for Friday, Jan. 31, 1997, at 10 a.m. at Crestview Baptist Church with Dr. Larry Ashlock officiating. Graveside services will be at 2 p.m. at Crane County Cemetery.

Arrangements are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Obituary & Death Notice policy

There is no charge for death notices of residents or former residents of Midland or for those who have Midland relatives. We also publish death notices for residents of the surrounding West Texas area.

Free death notices include date and place of death, service and burial information, funeral home handling arrangements, date and place of birth, brief biography, survivors and memorials. A longer, more detailed obituary is available for a charge. It may include tributes, expanded biography, organizational associations, notes of appreciation, pallbearers, honorary pallbearers and a photo.

Deadline for both free death notices and paid obituaries is 4:30 p.m. and information must be either received from or verified by a funeral home.

DEATH NOTICES

Services are to be at 2 p.m., Friday Jan. 31, at Bell-Cypert-Seale Walker Funeral Home in Snyder with the Rev. Larry Holden officiating. Burial will be at Campspring Cemetery in Scurry County under the direction of Bell-Cypert-Seale Walker Funeral Home.

He was born April 18, 1915, in Hermleigh.

He was a farmer and stockman and a member of First United Methodist Church in Rotan. He married Grace Inez Talley on Jan. 27, 1936.

He was preceded in death by his wife on May 17, 1994, and by two brothers, Joe Groves and Alton Groves.

Other survivors include two daughters, Janie Blount of Idalou and Delores Greer of Lubbock; a sister, Winnie Stapleton of Joshua; 13 grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Grandmother writes comic book on gun safety

Funded by area businesses and used by local libraries and police departments the book deals with the adventures of Jason, a little boy and encourages him to play safely with toy guns.

INGLESIDE, Texas (AP) — Frances Nichols didn't laugh along with the family when her 2-year-old grandson pretended to shoot his daddy using his hand as a gun.

She went to Wal-Mart.

Buying five toy guns, Ms. Nichols embarked on a project that would earn her a reputation as one of the toughest grannies in the West. Mustering support from area businesses and armed with pen and ink, she drew.

She drew 22 pages, to be exact.

And she called it "Straight Shootin" — a coloring book aimed at teaching children that they should be careful in handling toy guns, or what they think are toys.

She has donated the coloring books to police departments, whose officers use the books to teach gun safety to children in schools.

More than a year ago, Ms. Nichols bought five toy guns at Wal-Mart to use as models for her artwork, borrowed real guns from a neighbor and researched at the library on the topic of children and gun safety.

When parents laugh at how cute it is when a child pretends to shoot somebody, that sends the wrong message, said Ms. Nichols, a retired teacher. And television programs send a harmful message when a character is shot and killed but pops up alive the next day in a different show, she said.

It made her think that children should understand the dangers of guns because they may not know the difference between pretend guns and real guns.

"It looks like play now, but the consequences of their play-acting can carry over into how they would play with a real gun, if they found it," Ms. Nichols said.

Ms. Nichols said she is not anti-gun, but she would prefer children not playing with toy guns at all.

"If they do, I want them to be aware they should use targets, such as bull's eyes or trees," she said.

With her ideas and the research, she started planning a book, the idea of which evolved into a coloring book upon the suggestion of her son — the one who had laughed when his son pretended to shoot him. Ms. Nichols' son, Kirk, a Drug Abuse Resistance Education police officer in Haltom City near Fort Worth, saw the error in his ways and supported his mother's efforts. Using his DARE background, he suggested that she turn her project into a coloring book.

"He said, 'The more (time) they spend on every single page, the more they'll think about it.' And I said, 'You're absolutely right,' " Ms. Nichols said.

He also suggested that his mother ask area businesses to pay for the printing costs by buying advertising in the back of the book.

A few businesses declined, saying it was the responsibility of parents to teach children gun safety, she said.

"I said, 'You're absolutely right. But what are you going to do when your child or your grandchild is playing in the home of parents who have never taught their child about gun safety?' " she said.

That argument changed two business owners' minds, she said.

Ms. Nichols sold 18 ads, ranging in price from $100 to $250, and had 4,000 copies printed.

Ms. Nichols donated the books to the Ingleside Public Library and the Aransas Pass, Ingleside and Portland police departments. A second edition, with ads from Rockport and nearby towns, was donated to the Rockport Police Department.

The book tells a story about a boy named Jason, who is dressed like a cowboy. Simple captions encourage Jason and friends to play but not to point toy guns at others, including a bird, Jason's dog and a cowboy.

As the book closes, one picture shows the three lying on their backs in a house — the dog and bird with their feet in the air, and the cowboy with his hat on his chest. Outside, seen through a window, is a cemetery.

"Real guns are deadly. Real guns KILL animals and people," the caption says.

The next page shows two revolvers for children to color, and the message: "Toy guns do not KILL. But many times you cannot see the difference between toy guns and real guns, until it's too late."

"The message is very straight-forward and not one that many parents like to talk about," Ms. Nichols said. "It's not very pleasant for people to talk about death. But it's much more unpleasant to see a 2- or 3-year-old shot and die."

Ms. Nichols has seen the effects of an accidental shooting of a child. Fourteen years ago, one of Ms. Nichols' friends lost her 13-year-old son because he was playing with a gun.

"I would like to make people aware of the real dangers of a child finding a loaded gun and playing with it as if it were a toy gun," Ms. Nichols said. "The life of their child can be ended in a moment. However, the resulting tragedy for the parents will last a lifetime A an accident preventable through education of gun safety."

Randy Ward, a detective with the Portland Police Department, said the book has worked as an educational tool on a topic that isn't addressed otherwise.

"That's something I'd thought about before, but I didn't really know what was the best approach, and this made it easier," Ward said.

Ward remembers one boy who approached him and showed him that he had drawn a red circle with a slash through the gun, to show he couldn't tell if it was real or not.

Ms. Nichols keeps a scrapbook that contains several children's thank-you notes, including one from a boy who said, "I learned never to point a gun at anyone not even my dog. I only point my gun at deer."

Another note from a girl in second grade shows a gray gun.

"If you didn't write this book we would not learn about guns," the girl wrote.

In addition to the prison sentences, Furgeson has ordered all defendants to pay restitution in amounts ranging from $2,000 to $600,000 — equal to $1.76 million.

This case was sparked by a three-year investigation by the FBI.

In ensuring years, the monastery was converted to a convent and was abandoned in 1938 following a tornado that destroyed the Our Lady of Mercy Academy at the site of the old monastery.

DPS center takes lawmakers by surprise

DALLAS (AP) — A Texas Department of Public Safety proposal to build a $15 million training center in Central Texas has taken many state lawmakers by surprise, the Texas Journal of The Wall Street Journal reported Wednesday.

Without letting the Legislature in on the idea, the DPS already has bought 1,000 acres of rolling, tree-covered land for the center in northwest Williamson County near Florence, just south of Fort Hood. It also has hired an engineering firm to draw up a master design.

The proposed DPS center would feature a 2 1/2-mile track to practice high-speed chases, a shooting range and a small lake to train underwater rescue teams.

Agency officials say they would finance the center with federal forfeiture funds, proceeds from property seized from drug dealers and other criminals.

The Journal said lawmakers liked the idea. The existing shooting range in North Austin can't handle shotgun and rifle practice, and there is no place to train recruits in high-speed pursuit techniques.

What lawmakers resent is not having known about the project.

"If we don't give you permission to build a building or buy a computer or a phone system, it's because we don't want you to have a building or a computer or a phone system," says Rep. Pete Gallego, D-Alpine and a member of the House Appropriations subcommittee in charge of the DPS budget.

DPS officials said they had hadn't meant to keep details from lawmakers. The land purchase was listed in a report on seized-fund purchases filed with the governor's office.

But agency officials said they don't need legislative approval for the land purchase because it was paid for with funds received under the federal forfeiture program. Those funds must be used for law enforcement, and state legislatures cannot decide how they will be spent.

Furthermore, the funds must supplement an enforcement agency's budget, not replace appropriated funds. The department only needs to report to the state a detailed list of seized assets and how money from the account is spent.

"This has not been a secret," said DPS Director Dudley Thomas. "It's not anything we're doing behind closed doors."

Indeed, the House Public Safety Committee, which oversees all DPS operations, was told of the project last fall, long before the site acquisition, said committee Chairman Keith Oakley, D-Terrell.

Under the plan, the first phase of the project, about 40 miles north of Austin and about 20 miles south of Fort Hood, would include the track, shooting range and lake.

The matter never came up when the agency's latest budget request was considered two weeks ago by the Senate Finance Committee.

But Gallego argued that he could have found more urgent uses for the forfeiture funds. For one, the DPS needs more radio towers in the Big Bend area, where law-enforcement vehicles often lose touch with one another in the wide open spaces, he said.

For now, the entire project is on hold. Engineering consultants estimated that completing the first phase would cost about $15 million, and the DPS' federal forfeiture-fund account only has about $9.8 million as of last August.

Woman admits killing her child

HOUSTON (AP) — Hours after sending police on a frantic hunt for her infant son, a 20-year-old woman confessed to beating the baby to death and throwing his body into Buffalo Bayou, police said Wednesday.

Evonne Michele Valdez admitted late Tuesday night to killing 3 1/2-month-old Ramiro Jr. after insisting all afternoon that he vanished from a restroom in a downtown Houston shopping mall, police spokesman John Cannon said.

She was in police custody Wednesday but no charges had been filed.

Police divers, meanwhile, went back into the murky waterway Wednesday afternoon to look for the baby's body. They had suspended an earlier search because temperatures were near freezing.

Mrs. Valdez told police she put her son's body into a plastic bag and tossed it into the bayou, Cannon said.

"Investigators are not yet ready to say anything about a possible motive," Cannon said.

Teachers criticize education commissioner's recommendations

AUSTIN (AP) — Teacher evaluations would be based partly on schoolwide student performance under a system recommended by Education Commissioner Mike Moses and blasted as unfair by teacher groups.

Moses, in outlining the appraisal system Wednesday, acknowledged the disagreement about how to link student performance to teacher evaluations, as required by state law.

Campus performance ratings were chosen rather than student attainment in each teacher's classroom because education is about teamwork, Moses said.

He emphasized that campus ratings would play only a small part in appraisals, as one of 52 evaluation items, and said no one should be fired solely due to that factor.

"This is not a system that is designed to be hurtful or punitive to teachers," Moses said.

Texas' 1,044 school districts may use the recommended Professional Development and Appraisal System or design their own to meet state requirements. The campus rating wouldn't be incorporated into teacher appraisal scores until the 1998-99 school year.

The Texas State Teachers Association, the state's largest teacher group, said Moses' plan places undue emphasis on the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills.

Student performance on the TAAS is a key part of statewide rankings of Texas' 6,359 campuses, along with dropout rates and student attendance.

"The test is already out of control in the public schools in Texas. It's already the be-all, end-all almost of education, and we're going to ratchet it up another notch," said TSTA President Richard Kouri.

Other aspects of student performance that could be looked at instead would be student portfolios or tests designed by textbook companies, he said.

The recommended system would hurt students at low-performing schools by making it more difficult for those campuses to recruit teachers, Kouri added.

"What's worse, this proposal requires that individual teachers' performances be graded on other people's work, regardless of their own individual performances," he said.

Kouri said teachers' concerns would be made known to school boards locally. TSTA has about 90,000 members, 85 percent of whom are active classroom teachers, according to the group. There are about 240,000 Texas teachers.

John O'Sullivan of the Texas Federation of Teachers — with 26,000 members, 85 percent of whom are classroom teachers — joined in the criticism, calling the proposal "half-baked."

While the recommended system keeps teacher protections that were part of the previous appraisal system, O'Sullivan said, "the part about using campuswide TAAS scores ... is about as fair as a teacher assigning an individual student a grade based on the performance of his classmates."

Moses said, "It is natural that many teachers wish to be evaluated only on how their particular teaching impacts a student's performance.

"However, the fact remains that a school is not simply a group of non-related classes serving students independently. The skills taught in one subject often relate directly to a student's success in other areas," he said.

The recommended appraisal system was designed in accordance with the education overhaul by the 1995 Legislature, which requires teacher evaluations to include implementation of discipline management procedures and student performance.

The recommended system was refined based on input from groups including professional associations, teachers, principals, superintendents, and personnel directors, state education officials said. Kouri said his group's concerns were addressed in a number of areas.

The new system will replace Texas' first appraisal system, which has been used since 1985.

Bush proposes new $84.7 billion state budget

■ The governor's proposal is a 4.9 percent increase over the 1996-97 state budget.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Gov. George W. Bush says the state should spend $84.7 billion during the next two-year budget cycle.

Bush on Wednesday released his budget proposal for the 1998-99 biennium. It includes $1 billion to cut local property taxes, more funding for education, prisons and welfare issues.

Day-to-day government spending and some natural resources spending would be cut.

"I've presented a balance budget, with a $1 billion tax cut, enough money to meet the basic needs of the schools, $100 million extra in my budget for child care, to meet the basic human needs of the state. It's a good budget," the governor said.

Bush's proposal is $1.4 billion higher than the $83.3 billion budget proposal state lawmakers already are considering.

The governor's plan also is $4 billion, or 4.9 percent, higher than the 1996-1997 state budget.

"These are not major differences," said Rep. Rob Junell, D-San Angelo, chairman of the budget-writing House Appropriations Committee. "We're not going to get in a wreck over how much money there is."

Bush's proposal includes nearly $1 billion in funds he says will be left over from the current budget. Comptroller John Sharp has estimated there will be a $688 million surplus.

Albert Hawkins, Bush's budget director, said the $300 million difference between Bush's and Sharp's estimates comes from less-than-expected spending on health, criminal justice and human services programs.

Hawkins said Bush has directed those state agencies not to spend the money unless they get more cases. Caseloads have been lower than expected when the current budget was written in 1995.

"In looking at 1997, they took a conservative approach," Hawkins said of the comptroller's surplus estimate.

Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, a member of the Senate Finance Committee, said he wants to know why money meant for services for the poor haven't been spent.

"Why is the caseload down?" he asked. "I see poor people and needy people in the streets all over the state all the time. Are they not applying? Are they locking the doors? What's going on?"

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said the difference appears to be in calculations.

"It looks like a difference of opinion in the methods of computation between the comptroller and the governor's office," said Bullock, adding that only Sharp is in charge of certifying that the eventually passed budget doesn't exceed the state's income.

Junell said questions about the amount of money available and others questions will be asked as state lawmakers weigh their own budget proposal and the governor's during the next four months. He said the important thing is that the proposals aren't too far apart and rely on many of the same assumptions.

"We're all talking apples and apples and oranges and oranges. That's important," he said.

"My staff and I are committed to provide the highest quality of oral health care in the most gentle, efficient, and enthusiastic manner possible."

Crime labs examine standards, practices in wake of O.J. case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The police blunders that were exposed famously during the O.J. Simpson case have led many of the nation's crime labs to take stock of themselves and tighten their standards.

"People realized that they sure didn't want to be on the witness stand looking like Dennis Fung," said Jim Norris, director of the San Francisco Police Forensic Services Division, referring to the Los Angeles criminalist who came off looking like a pathetic bumbler in the Simpson case.

Simpson's lawyers at his murder trial built a successful defense on police corruption and incompetence, condemning the way evidence was collected, stored and examined. His attorneys used some of the same themes in the civil case that went to the jury on Tuesday.

Fung, for example, spent nine agonizing days on the stand at the murder trial, admitting among other things that he left blood samples in an unrefrigerated truck. He was recently relegated to the ballistics unit — said to be the crime lab equivalent of the typing pool.

Similarly, a rookie technician, Andrea Mazzola, was forced to admit numerous slips, including failing to change her gloves as she moved from bloody glove to knit cap at the crime scene.

John Hicks, deputy director for the Alabama Department of Forensic Sciences, said his lab has "used the O.J. case sort of anecdotally" to seek added training for technicians.

'People realized that they sure didn't want to be on the witness stand looking like Dennis Fung.'
— Jim Norris, director of the San Francisco Police Forensic Services Division, referring to the Los Angeles criminalist

In San Francisco, Norris used the LAPD example to win an additional half-million dollars for equipment for his lab's fiscal 1997 budget — 10 times more than the amount allotted the previous year. Among the equipment bought with that money was a $300,000 scanning microscope.

The San Francisco lab is also moving to a larger building on the recommendation of the American Society of Crime Laboratory Directors-Lab Accreditation Board. And it expects to receive accreditation in a few months.

Even the FBI's highly regarded forensic lab, which can solve baffling crimes from a speck of blood or a mere strand of hair, came under public scrutiny because of the Simpson trial as well as other major cases.

On Tuesday, the FBI said it is overhauling operations at the lab in Washington and removing three supervisors who evaluated evidence from the Oklahoma City bombing. One of the three was Roger Martz, who was accused by Simpson's lawyers of slanting results to favor the prosecution.

Accreditation, which is mandatory only in New York, is based on standards in lab operation, equipment and work quality.

Jo Ann Given, chairwoman of the accreditation board, said the Simpson trial resulted in a stream of applications. The board, based in Raleigh, N.C., has accredited 164 crime labs, including 15 international ones.

The LAPD crime lab still is not accredited. But the department said it is spending more money on the lab, upgrading equipment and adding employees. It refused to give numbers.

Some of the pressure on crime laboratories to shape up is coming from defense attorneys who learned from Simpson's example.

Defense lawyers are increasingly asking for documentation of lab work and accreditation paperwork, said Linda Errichetto, director of the Las Vegas police lab, which is also working toward acrredition.

"Now all of a sudden they think we're a bunch of sloppy people — we don't know what we're doing," she said.

Superior Court Judge Hiroshi Fujisaki gave jurors the magnifying glass but withheld the test tube picture, saying the actual vial was among some 700 pieces of evidence already in the deliberation room.

The request for a magnifying loupe, used by photographers to study contact sheets of pictures, indicated jurors could be studying the trial's most controversial new evidence — 31 photographs of Simpson wearing the same style Bruno Magli shoes that left bloody prints at the crime scene.

Contact sheets — photos or small images of the film strips themselves — were entered in evidence by plaintiffs, who called a former FBI analyst to testify about them.

The expert, Gerald Richards, used a magnifying loupe to show jurors facets of the small contact pictures that he said confirmed their authenticity.

A defense photo technician, Robert Groden, said the first photo offered by the plaintiffs was a fake. He used contact sheets to point up flaws in the film that he said pointed to fraud.

The purple topped vial was a recurring theme for the defense in Simpson's criminal and civil trials. Witnesses said such tubes are used to preserve blood samples in police crime labs. The tubes are lined with a chemical known as EDTA to prevent deterioration, they said.

The defense claimed traces of EDTA found in blood at the crime scene indicated it was planted blood taken from Simpson's sample vial. There were also disputes about how much of Simpson's blood was taken by a nurse and whether some of it was missing.

The request came at the end of the panel's first full morning of deliberations.

Jurors — who were closeted in a room with a table, a green chalkboard and stacks of their accumulated notebooks — deliberated for two hours Tuesday and resumed Wednesday at 8:35 a.m. Less than two hours later, they had already deliberated longer than the jury that acquitted Simpson of murder charges 16 months ago.

FBI agent's wife testifies about affair with writer

MANASSAS, Va. (AP) — Crime novelist Patricia Cornwell was named as the other woman in the attempted-murder trial of a former FBI agent who says he became unhinged when his wife had a lesbian affair with the author.

The testimony came at the trial of Eugene Bennett, who is accused of trying to ambush his wife, Marguerite, at a darkened church last June.

He has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity, claiming his wife's affair with Ms. Cornwell led to the breakup of their marriage and drove him temporarily insane.

Mrs. Bennett, also a former FBI agent, testified Wednesday that she had "two intimate contacts" with Ms. Cornwell in 1992 when the writer was going through FBI training as research for her books about a sleuthing Virginia coroner.

Mrs. Bennett also said the writer visited her home when Bennett was there. But Mrs. Bennett said she did not know whether her husband resented Ms. Cornwell's presence.

Ms. Cornwell, whose best sellers include "Body Farm" and "Cruel and Unusual," has said only that she and Mrs. Bennett were close friends. Ms. Cornwell is not expected to testify.

Bennett's lawyers say he was humiliated by the knowledge that his wife left him for a woman. They say he suffers from blackouts and a split personality and wrestles with an evil alter ego named "X."

Dan Rather identifies his attacker

NEW YORK (AP) — The mystery may be solved: Dan Rather has identified the man he says beat him up on the street in 1986 while demanding to know "Kenneth, what is the frequency?"

The CBS anchorman said his assailant was William Tager, now in prison for killing an NBC stagehand outside the "Today" show in 1994.

Tager was convinced the media had him under surveillance and were beaming hostile messages to him, and he demanded that Rather tell him the frequency being used, according to a forensic psychiatrist who examined Tager after the NBC shooting.

Tager was convinced the media had him under surveillance and were beaming hostile messages to him, according to a forensic psychiatrist.

The turn of events apparently ends a weird mystery that inspired a best-selling song by R.E.M., "What's the Frequency, Kenneth," and made the newsman the butt of jokes.

Rather was told by the psychiatrist, Dr. Park Dietz, that Tager was almost certainly his attacker. The anchorman identified Tager from pictures supplied by the New York Daily News.

"There's no doubt in my mind that this is the person," Rather said in Wednesday's News.

Rather had been confronted at about 11 p.m. while walking on Park Avenue. When he tried to walk away, he was punched from behind in the jaw and knocked to the ground. The attacker then chased Rather into a building and kicked him several times in the back.

At the time, it was thought Rather might have been a victim of mistaken identity. But Dietz told the newspaper that Tager admitted attacking Rather after running into the newsman by chance and recognizing him.

Tager was in New York City at the time because he mistakenly thought he had an appointment with a female television personality to talk about ending the hostile messages, and had just been stood up when he saw Rather.

"It was a chance encounter with someone from a target victim class," Dietz said. In fact, Tager told the psychiatrist he had considered doing more harm to Rather but had decided against it.

Tager, 49, of Charlotte, N.C., later pleaded guilty to manslaughter in the slaying of stagehand Campbell Montgomery and was sentenced to 25 years in prison. Tager was trying to take an assault rifle into the street-level "Today" studio at Rockefeller Center, and opened fire when Montgomery pointed him out to police.

The district attorney's office said charges won't be filed in the Rather attack because the statute of limitations has run out. Tager's lawyer, John Esposito, told the News there are still questions as to whether Tager was involved.

CBS spokeswoman Kim Akhtar said Rather didn't want to talk further about the incident.

Certainly it wasn't a career highlight for Rather, who has anchored the "CBS Evening News" since replacing Walter Cronkite in 1981.

The attack came when Rather had taken to wearing a V-neck sweater on the air to soften his image and was signing off his broadcasts by saying, "Courage." Coupled with his 1987 walk off the CBS set to protest his broadcast being pre-empted for a tennis match, it led many to question whether Rather was losing it.

"These were hurtful in ways that I think everybody understands," Rather told the News. "Sometimes it angered me, and sometimes it was discouraging."

Dietz said he believes Tager never called him Kenneth, and Rather has said he's not certain that was the word he heard. News reports at the time also mentioned two attackers, and Rather has since said one of the men he saw may have had nothing to do with the incident.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 30, 1997

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: When faced with a major challenge, dig in. Your fierce determination and phenomenal stamina will carry you forward to victory. Complete pending projects before launching any new ones. Part company with people who are not on your wave length. A romantic attachment that develops over the summer could last a lifetime. New routines will make your work more interesting. Someone influential shows great interest in your efforts. A pleasant dream proves prophetic.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: actress Vanessa Redgrave, chess player Boris Spassky, golfer Curtis Strange, singer Jody Watley.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Eliminate the frills and get right to the point. The best way to deal with an obstacle is by going around it. Maintain your sense of humor and enthusiasm.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A project dear to your heart gets the green light. Heed the advice of long-time advisors. Break out of a rut and try new things. A new relationship has an almost dreamlike quality to it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Renew contracts only after reviewing any proposed changes with your lawyer or accountant. A financial situation shows steady improvement. Take calculated risks.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A secret surfaces that could prove embarrassing. Investigate the source of a rumor before deciding what course of action to take. A job offer is tempting.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your ability to see someone else's point of view is a tremendous asset. Spend time with people who love you for yourself, not what you can do for them. A longtime relationship is tested.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Try not to overanalyze your motives or emotions. Common sense will help you make the right decision. Co-workers who nag you have your well-being in mind. Gently remind them that you are an adult.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The emphasis now is on striking a better balance between work and play. Be serious during business hours and expect your co-workers to do the same. Maintain office protocol if you are a supervisor.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Rely on advertising and a public relations effort to attract new business. Acquiring high-tech skills will boost your earning power. Listen attentively.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Studying, publishing and long distance communications are favored. Others envy your energy and ability to regroup. Be apologetic if you must inconvenience a co-worker or neighbor.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look beyond the immediate. Career success may depend on your willingness to take an entry level job. Learn new skills and take on additional duties.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make a blueprint for career advancement and stick to it. An idealistic financial undertaking succeeds beyond all expectations. If necessary, seek publicity to gain acceptance for your innovative ideas.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Exercise restraint even if given total freedom. Take advantage of your social connections here and abroad. If you decide to mix business with pleasure this weekend, let loved ones know your plans.

Opening lead: Jack of ♣

Believe it or not, this deal is from a rubber bridge game almost 60 years ago. Sitting South and West, respectively, were Charles Lockridge and Sam Fry Jr., two of the great players of their day. North and East were capable 'amateurs.'

After East opened the bidding with one club South, convinced the auction would not die there, decided to bide his time. We do not know the reason for East's jump to three diamonds or decision to bid a mere four spades next, but Lockridge decided to wait no longer and entered the fray with six diamonds! West, never dreaming six spades could be made and looking at a doubleton diamond, elected to double, which everyone passed. We still don't know what East was thinking.

West led the jack of clubs and, as Lockridge later explained, "I was so impressed with my brilliant bid that I forgot to cover the jack with dummy's queen." East followed with the deuce of clubs and, when the jack held the trick, West went into a deep trance to decide on a continuation.

After waiting impatiently for a couple of minutes, Lockridge decided there was no point in wasting time and spread his hand, claiming the balance of the tricks. One of the strengths of Fry's game was an ability to count to 13, and he immediately switched to a heart. West ruffed for down one.

We will never know what West would have done had declarer not shown his hand. Aware that he had possibly thrown away a doubled slam, Lockridge threatened to throw himself out of the club's sixth-floor window. By a vote of 4-3, the committee decided to dissuade him from such a rash act!

Country singer Jackson to branch out with traditional American eatery

Alan Jackson announced plans Wednesday for the $5.6 million Alan Jackson Showcar Cafe.

He announced plans Wednesday for the $5.6 million Alan Jackson Showcar Cafe in this Great Smoky Mountains town.

The eatery, to open in July and be the first of a planned chain, will feature traditional American recipes straight out of his cookbook, "Who Says You Can't Cook It All."

It also will feature recording and touring memorabilia, a small performance stage, and eight antique cars from his collection.

Jackson's hits include: "Chattahoochee," "Don't Rock the Jukebox" and "Livin' on Love."

In Nashville, meanwhile, Jackson was the leader at Wednesday's announcement of nominees for the TNN Music City News Country Awards with a total of seven. Winners are to be announced June 16.

Jackson, named entertainer of the year at the 1996 awards show, was nominated for best entertainer, male vocalist, album for "Everything I Love," single for "Little Bitty," vocal collaboration and two video awards. Vince Gill had six nominations.

PORTLAND, Ore. — Thanks for the interest, but don't bother. Norway's skating association says Tonya Harding might have better luck under someone else's flag as she tries to get back into Olympic competition.

Last month, Harding's agent suggested his client, banned from competition by U.S. skating officials because of the 1994 attack on rival Nancy Kerrigan, might compete for another country at next year's Olympics in Japan.

Agent David Hans Schmidt sent a fax to Norwegian officials inquiring about Harding competing for their country, and got a firm rejection.

"If Tonya wants to skate again, I would recommend Austria, where the rules are more lenient," responded Arild Gjerde, general secretary of the Norwegian Skating Association.

For one thing, he said, Norway requires competitors to wait out a seven-year residency requirement.

"The possibility of her skating for us is not a theme in our debate," Gjerde said. "There is no way around these rules."

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. — The purple haze has cleared.

Years of legal wrangling over rights to Jimi Hendrix recordings ended Tuesday with MCA Records signing an exclusive worldwide licensing agreement with the heirs and estate of the guitarist who died 27 years ago.

The Hendrix catalog will be released on MCA Records in conjunction with Experience Hendrix, a family-run entity.

"His music is as fresh and innovative as ever as he continues to influence and inspire generation after generation of musicians," said Zach Horowitz, president of Universal Music Group, which orchestrated the deal.

BANGALORE, India — The Duchess of York, the new spokeswoman for Weight Watchers in the United States, also is taking an interest in Indian holistic medicine.

Sarah Ferguson was in India on Wednesday to look over plans for a holistic health center in the southern town of Bangalore, according to the Times of India.

Her connection with the center was not clear, but it is being built by Issac Mathai, an Indian practitioner of the alternative form of medicine who has treated her at a clinic in London.

Mathai's list of celebrity clients also includes Tina Turner, George Harrison and Sting, the newspaper said.

CHICAGO — Everybody wants to give advice to Dennis Rodman.

First, President Clinton suggested that Rodman shape up and admit he was wrong to kick a courtside photographer. Now Jesse Jackson says he is advising the Chicago Bulls star and wants to plead Rodman's case before the NBA.

Rodman was suspended for 11 games because of the Jan. 15 kicking.

Before he is reinstated, NBA Commissioner David Stern says Rodman must undergo psychiatric counseling and assure the league he will adhere to acceptable standards of behavior.

"It's one thing to punish a man. It's another thing to take away his dignity," Jackson said in the Chicago Sun-Times on Wednesday.

"Like everybody else, I don't condone Dennis' action. I want to convey to the commissioner my sentiment and the sentiments of a growing number of people that Dennis has already been punished enough for the very act in question," Jackson said.

Cosby's wife brushes off husband's admission of extramarital affair

NEW YORK (AP) — Bill Cosby's wife brushed aside the possibility he fathered a child during a long-ago affair, saying Tuesday: "All old personal negative issues between Bill and me were resolved years ago. We are a united couple."

"What occurred 23 years ago is not important to me except for the current issue of extortion," Camille Cosby, the comedian's wife of 33 years, said in a statement issued through her husband's publicist.

Mrs. Cosby said her focus is on finding answers in the Jan. 16 roadside slaying of her 27-year-old son, Ennis.

"What is very important to me is the apprehension of the person or persons who killed our son," she said. "I appeal to all of you to help us find the murderer."

Cosby previously denied he is the father of 22-year-old Autumn Jackson, who was arrested two days after the slaying on charges of trying to extort $24 million from the entertainer by threatening to go public with her claim to be Cosby's illegitimate daughter.

In an interview this week with CBS' Dan Rather, Cosby acknowledged having an affair with the young woman's mother and said "there is a possibility" he is the father. Cosby said: "If you said, 'Did you make love to the woman?' the answer is yes. 'Are you the father?' No."

The multimillionaire comedian said he and Ms. Jackson's mother, Shawn Thompson, had a one-time "rendezvous." Cosby said he didn't learn that she had delivered a baby until he called her for another meeting 14 months later, and he stressed his name does not appear on the child's birth certificate.

The admission was wildly at odds with Cosby's public persona as America's favorite TV father and family man. Ms. Thompson, asked by a Los Angeles TV station if she loves Cosby, replied, "Doesn't the whole world?"

Prosecutors said Cosby's possible paternity would have no effect on the extortion charges, but at least one legal expert said that might not be true.

"It's possible to be charged with extortion by threatening to reveal truthful but secret information," said Gerald Lynch, a Columbia University law professor. "On the other hand, I think it would be a rather remarkable prosecution and difficult to sell to a jury."

Meanwhile, Jackson's boyfriend pleaded guilty Tuesday to helping in the alleged extortion plot by doing research on Cosby and his corporate sponsors, receiving a document from someone at "The Globe" tabloid, and taking Jackson and Jose Medina to the airport for their flight to New York.

"At first, I was unaware that certain actions that I was asked to take part in were part of an extortion scheme," Antonay Williams said in court.

"However, after it became apparent to me that the scheme involved an attempt to extort money from Mr. Cosby, I voluntarily continued to assist Jose and Autumn in various ways."

Report: McVeigh's sister said he was involved in bank robbery

IDABEL, Okla. (AP) — Timothy McVeigh's sister told FBI agents he once gave her $300 he said he got from a bank robbery and asked her to exchange it for clean money, a newspaper reported Tuesday.

She said their transaction was in December 1994, a time when prosecutors have said McVeigh and co-defendant Terry Nichols were financing a plot to bomb the Oklahoma City federal building.

Jennifer McVeigh said in the sworn statement to federal agents that her brother told her he helped plan, but did not participate in, the robbery, the McCurtain Daily Gazette reported.

Ms. McVeigh told the agents that her brother had "an undetermined quantity of $100 bills, of which he provided me a small portion," the paper reported.

The Gazette did not detail how it obtained the information, but said Ms. McVeigh gave the sworn statement on May 2, 1995, weeks after the Oklahoma City explosion that killed 168 people.

Justice Department spokeswoman Leesa Brown in Denver said the department had no comment on the newspaper report.

Defense attorney Stephen Jones said there is no evidence "from any source that Tim McVeigh was ever involved in a bank robbery."

Jones said McVeigh's sister apparently misunderstood her brother's joke, and that he was being facetious when he said the money came from a robbery.

Jones said the sister's statement was probably leaked by someone in federal government bent on distracting public attention away from problems with the FBI's crime lab in Washington.

The agency has removed three senior FBI agents who evaluated evidence in the bombing case, as well as an FBI whistle-blower, from its crime lab while it evaluates a Justice Department report critical of the lab's work.

Federal prosecutors have decided against calling one of the investigators as an expert witness when McVeigh goes on trial in March. Nichols will be tried later.

The newspaper said Ms. McVeigh told agents about the money after they returned to her and said her original affidavit would need to be verified by a polygraph examiner.

She then said her brother gave her three $100 bills and asked her to circulate the money, the Gazette reported. She gave him about $300 in exchange and deposited the money he gave her in a federal credit union.

She also told agents that her brother wrote her in December 1993 that bank robbers might not be criminals at all, that banks were the real thieves and that income tax is illegal, the newspaper reported.

Ms. McVeigh also said her brother wrote a letter highly critical of the government's raid on the Branch Davidian complex and mailed it to the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms with a note saying, "You ... are going to hang," the newspaper reported.

Cancer society supports easy, at-home testing for colon cancer

WASHINGTON (AP) — An easy take-home test for colorectal cancer could lower the cost and unpleasantness that deter many Americans from being examined for the nation's second-leading cancer killer, say new medical guidelines being issued Thursday.

Taking those simple tests to detect blood in stool samples every year after age 50 could cut colorectal cancer deaths by a third, making them about as effective as mammograms are for breast cancer, say the guidelines, endorsed by the American Cancer Society and seven other medical groups.

The guidelines offer options, including testing once every 10 years — by snaking a fiber-optics tube into the colon to spot precancerous growths that could be removed to prevent cancer from ever forming. The simpler stool tests, in contrast, detect cancer early enough to cure.

About 131,000 Americans get colon and rectal cancer each year and more than 54,000 die. It strikes men and women about equally. And while relatives of cancer patients or people with colon growths called polyps are more prone to the disease, the biggest risk is simply getting older.

Taking simple tests to detect blood in stool samples every year after age 50 could cut colorectal cancer deaths by a third.

So the gastroenterological association assembled independent experts to find the best tests. They decided most people over 50 should choose one of the following:

■ Annual fecal blood tests, a $5 kit a doctor sends home for the person to collect six stool samples and mail back for analysis. Although easy to use, they can cause false alarms that necessitate further cancer testing.

The Food and Drug Administration has approved over-the-counter versions that people can use without a doctor. Fletcher said as long as people get six samples from three consecutive stools, because blood may appear intermittently, those tests should work fine, but Winawer recommends the doctor's version.

■ A sigmoidoscopy, where a tube threaded into the rectum checks just the lower half of the colon for polyps or cancer, every five years.

■ A barium enema every five to 10 years, a 20-minute procedure that lets doctors view the entire colon by X-ray to spot large polyps.

■ A colonoscopy every 10 years. Patients are sedated while a finger-wide fiber-optics tube is snaked up the rectum to view the entire colon. It requires a liquid diet and enemas to flush out the colon and costs $350 to more than $1,000. But it's the best test for catching tiny polyps that years later could turn cancerous.

ABILENE — Mike Unger has been named offensive coordinator at Abilene Christian University, head coach football coach Jack Kiser announced Monday.

Unger, who was assistant coach at Klein Forest High School last season after 12 years as head coach at Kingwood, will join the staff Feb. 1. Kingwood reached the Division I semifinals in 1990, and Unger was named high school Coach of the Year by the Houston Touchdown, The Houston Post and Houston Chronicle.

Pro Bowl subs

HONOLULU — Carolina quarterback Kerry Collins will replace San Francisco's Steve Young, and Green Bay center Frank Winters will fill in for Dallas' Ray Donaldson on the NFC roster for Sunday's Pro Bowl.

Young, who had been working out with the all-stars, withdrew Wednesday because of a rib injury. Cracked ribs had sidelined him during the 49ers' 35-14 playoff loss to Green Bay.

Collins becomes the third replacement quarterback for the league all-star game. Mark Brunell of Jacksonville and Gus Frerotte of Washington earlier were named to replace Denver's John Elway (shoulder) and Dallas' Troy Aikman (calf, elbow problems).

Collins, who has played two NFL seasons, threw for 2,454 yards and 14 touchdowns to help the Panthers win the NFC West title.

Donaldson will miss the Pro Bowl because of an elbow injury.

Winters, who has played 10 seasons, will be making his first Pro Bowl appearance.

Himmler bowls 300

AUSTIN — Brian Himmler of Cincinnati rolled two perfect games Wednesday to take the lead after the first two rounds of qualifying at the Professional Bowlers Association Columbia 300 Open.

The 23-year-old Himmler, who has a 2,955 pinfall total for 16 games, has a 214-pin lead over Walter Ray Williams Jr. of Stockton, Calif., the reigning IOF/PBA Player of the Year. Himmler is averaging 246 and is seeking his first PBA title.

Williams had a total pinfall of 2,741 and is averaging 228 for the tournament. He earned five titles on the tour last year.

Amleto Monacelli, who was inducted into the PBA Hall of Fame last week, is looking for his first win in the United States since 1994 (Lexington, Ky.). Monacelli, from Barquisimeto, Venezuela, is averaging 226 and has a total pinfall of 2,720.

Chaps need win as MC-OC rivalry continues

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

MIDLAND COLLEGE

With a 1-3 record in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference, coach Pat Rafferty would like for that get-well-quick remedy to come in the form of a victory over the Odessa College Wranglers at 8 p.m. at the Chaparral Center. The No. 5 ranked MC women take the court against the Lady Wranglers at 6 p.m.

From injuries to defections to hard-luck losses, the Chaps have endured it all this season. Now with their backs up against wall, they can't afford to lose a home game if they want to make that post-season trip to Waco for the Regionals.

"In light of the way everything has been going, we're in no way out of it," Rafferty said. "This game could really springboard us back into the conference race. Looking at the outcomes from Monday night, we need to seize the moment."

The No. 15 ranked Wranglers are coming into tonight's contest off a 105-94 win over New Mexico Junior College on Monday and are leading the conference with a 4-1 mark and are 17-4 overall. That success has been no surprise for Rafferty.

"Odessa College has the most and best talent in the league," he said. "(Point guard) Nathaniel Bailey is a guy that is key for them. He is really a good player and is the spark that makes them run."

That spark of Bailey's ignited for 34 points Monday against the Thunderbirds.

"Nookie (Bailey) has been playing very good lately, as well as Jacoby Johnson. But we've had a well-balanced attack this season," first-year OC coach Orlando Ontiveroz said.

The good start for the Wranglers has been a surprise for many with all but two players being freshman. That youth hasn't stopped OC from being one of the teams to watch in an otherwise topsy-turvy season in the WJCAC. That roller coaster ride through the conference is what concerns Ontiveroz the most when facing the hungry Chaps.

"They need a win and they need a win bad," Ontiveroz said about MC. "They've been in the games and have had chances to win a couple. We're coming into their house, so we know we better be ready to play."

Ontiveroz added he is also aware about how intense the Midland-Odessa rivalry can be.

"With me being from the area, I know what to expect. Like I told the kids, 'Take your high school rivalries and multiply it 10 times,'" he said. "I know that they should have a good crowd and maybe we're going to have a good crowd also. With all the emotions, you don't know what may dictate the game."

Rafferty said he hopes a good crowd gives his team a much-needed lift against the talented Wranglers.

"It's going to be an emotional game and we need an emotional game," he said. "I don't think it should be the fans' responsibility but I hope our fans can ignite our team to play because I don't think the team has played hard this year the way I expect them to play."

The team does return sophomore point-guard Todd Jones back from a knee injury that sidelined him in the 85-74 loss to NMJC last Thursday. Rafferty said in order for the Chaps to come out on top, the team needs regular games from Jones, sophomore forward Ceedric Goodwyn and sophomore post Silvester Kainga, plus significant contributions from role players such as Devon

WEST TEXAS SPORTS BANQUET

Ex-Yankee Richardson wows banquet crowd

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

The 1997 West Texas Sports Banquet and Memorabilia Auction offered a celebration of baseball and sport to West Texas fans.

Richardson

Headlining the night of sharing at the Midland Hilton was the keynote speech by former New York Yankee Bobby Richardson, a seven-time all-star.

The seventh West Texas banquet benefited the Special Olympics of Texas, Casa de Amigos and the newly formed Scott Seator Foundation.

Richardson spoke to a sold-out audience about his relations with fellow Yankee teammates, including Mickey Mantle. Richardson, who was a member of seven World Series ball clubs and is the only player to win the Most Valuable Player as a member of the losing squad, said that his relations with Mantle went beyond the diamond. He said that playing along side "The Mick" and being with him and his family made Richardson appreciate what was most important in life. That was Mantle going the way of the Lord.

Richardson, who only makes a handful of appearances a year and has to turn down nine of 10 requests, said that everlasting life, however, does not have its statistical barriers.

"God's hall of fame is for eternity and believing in his son will ensure the inscription," Richardson said. "Your name doesn't have to appear on the Hall of Fame."

Of course, there were thrills on the field. In 1962, Richardson placed second to his heralded teammate in the season's American League-Most Valuable Player voting. Mantle said Richardson deserved it. Richardson had a different opinion, and the gold glove infielder's biggest thrills came especially when Mantle was on the field.

"He was out for a month twice and when he came back received a standing ovation once he got into the on-deck circle," Richardson said. "Then he hit the ball out of the park both times. Those were my biggest thrills in baseball. They gave me goose bumps."

"When he wasn't in the lineup we didn't win."

Richardson said later that in this day and age, society has put too much of an emphasis on statistics. That includes the baseball field where a man's true worth is not always measured in his batting average.

"Stats aren't everything," said Richardson, holder of 10 World Series batting records. "Take someone who hits the ball behind the runner (to advance him along the base path). It doesn't make for a good stat but makes for a good competitor."

Velarde

Later in the evening, Richardson said that kind of passion might be slowly leaving the game. That might have to do with the passion of baseball being replaced by the economics of today's business.

"When we traveled by train, it was all baseball," Richardson said. "To contrast that, players of today have to worry about investments. There was more loyalty back then.

"I'm not being critical. I would love to play today."

The love for the game that is baseball, and the

Timlin

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

After six full major league seasons and two elbow operations, Midland's Mike Timlin has earned his valued status as the Toronto Blue Jays' closer with a breakthrough season in 1996.

What heights await him from this point on can only be the stuff that dreams are made of.

Timlin posted a 4-1 record with the Blue Jays last season with 31 saves, his first real shot a being the guy to get the call with the game on the line.

Until last year, Timlin's No. 1 claim to fame was getting the last out in the 1992 World Series against the Atlanta Braves. Now he's the man in the bullpen with Roger Clemens coming to town.

The only thing missing for Timlin a year ago was that trip back to the World Series.

"Being in the World Series was wonderful," Timlin said. "We won it in 1992 and there is nothing to match that euphoria you feel."

And Timlin feels the Blue Jays have made enough pitching changes with Clemens, Jose Guzman and Pat Hentgen to make another solid run at the playoffs.

"On paper, it's looking pretty good for us," Timlin says. "About the only negative of the off-season was the loss of John Olerud (who is now with the New York Mets)."

Timlin struggled in 1995, but finally got the call as Toronto's top reliever last season, the break he had been waiting on and took advantage of.

"We really hadn't had a true closer since we had Henke and Ward," Timlin said. "It's where you want to be. If you are a middle reliever, you can always got two ways — either as a starter or a closer. In Class A ball (1990) they were grooming me to be a closer. I felt all along that's the way I needed to go."

His Class A days in Dunedin, Fla., played a key role in the career of Timlin.

"In 1990, I went to spring training and worked with the Triple-A team all spring,

No. 1 Jayhawks beat Raiders despite injury

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press Writer

■ Texas Men

LUBBOCK — It looks like it's going to take more than one major injury at a time to sink No. 1 Kansas.

The Jayhawks, playing without injured starting center Scot Pollard, relied on 16 second-half points from Paul Pierce to erase their biggest halftime deficit this season in an 86-77 victory over No. 22 Texas Tech on Wednesday night.

"We lost our poise in the first half," Kansas coach Roy Williams said of the 47-33 hole the Jayhawks (21-0, 7-0 Big 12) had dug at halftime. "We got some help off the bench in the second, we were more active on defense and we got a few turnovers."

Texas Tech (13-5, 5-3) had maintained a comfortable lead until the turnovers began mounting midway through the second half. Five Red Raiders turnovers led to 10 straight Kansas points and a 64-63 lead with 8:30 to play, its first of the game.

"I think there was a point where we thought it was getting away," said Texas Tech center Tony Battie, who had 29 points, 10 rebounds and five blocks. "Some turnovers down the stretch killed us."

The teams traded baskets for the next three minutes, but Kansas' 16-for-18 free throw shooting down the stretch eventually wore out the Red Raiders, who were 1-of-5 from the line in the second half.

Texas Tech coach James Dickey, who received an early technical foul for arguing an out-of-bounds call, had more words for the officials afterward.

"I'd like consistency from the officials at both ends of the court," Dickey said. "If you saw the game, you know what I'm talking about."

Parcells needs Pats' permission to coach Jets

By Gerald Eskenazi
N.Y. Times News Service

If the Jets want Bill Parcells to coach them next season, they will learn that the New England Patriots' owner, Bob Kraft, will demand the No. 1 draft pick in the upcoming National Football League draft.

Kraft is able to make such a demand because Wednesday, in a sense, he was awarded his coach by Commissioner Paul Tagliabue. The commissioner said that Parcells' contention that he was free to leave New England and coach wherever he wanted next season ran "contrary to common sense."

Instead, Kraft still has the rights to Parcells for one more year. He does not want Parcells back, and Parcells will not return. Negotiations between the Jets and the Patriots are expected to start immediately, with these key questions: What kind of deal will satisfy Kraft and how high will the Jets go?

Parcells just completed going to the Super Bowl for a third time. And now the Jets, for the second straight year, have the overall No. 1 draft pick.

"You tell me what someone with three Super Bowls is worth on the open market," an ecstatic Kraft told associates

Stars' Moog shuts down Mighty Ducks

DALLAS (AP) — Chalk up another fine performance and another victory for Andy Moog, the NHL's top career winner among active goaltenders.

Moog gained his 364th career victory with a 25-save performance as the Dallas Stars beat the Anaheim Mighty Ducks 3-1 Wednesday night.

"I thought we had a lot of pressure in the first two periods, but Andy Moog was outstanding," Mighty Ducks coach Ron Wilson said. "Then in the third period we couldn't get anything going. It was a combination of their defense and we were out of gas."

The Stars' defensemen contributed a goal and three assists while holding the Mighty Ducks' high-scoring duo of Paul Kariya and Teemu Selanne without a point.

Dallas' number one defensive pairing of Derian Hatcher and Richard Matvichuk drew primary duty against the line of Kariya, Selanne and Steve Rucchin. The Stars kept Kariya and Selanne off the scoresheet for the third time in the 35 games they've played together this season.

"Matvichuk and Hatcher did a great job against them," Stars coach Ken Hitchcock said. "And we were facing one the the hottest goalies in the league (in Guy Hebert). To get three by him is a good sign."

Defenseman Sergei Zubov had a goal and an assist and defenseman Darryl Sydor added two assists as the Stars extended their winning streak to four games.

Hebert had to be good to keep the game close against the Stars, who have scored 20 goals in their last four games.

The Stars even got two more power-play goals — from Joe Nieuwendyk and Mike Modano — to give them four in the last two games. Dallas started the night 26th and last in the league with an 8.8 percent power-play success rate at home.

"We seem a lot hungrier on the power play lately," Nieuwendyk said. "A lot of it is attitude. The last two games the power play had been a big part of the win. It's something we've needed."

Anaheim's Peter Leboutillier scored his second goal of the season with 4:17 to play to spoil Moog's shutout bid.

The Stars got the only goal of the first period from Nieuwendyk on a power play, then Dallas increased its lead to 2-0 at 5:48 of the second period when Modano converted Sydor's centering pass.

Zubov, who also assisted on Modano's 22nd goal of the season, added his seventh goal at 1:12 of the third period.

Dallas continues to be the league's best team at preserving a lead, improving to 23-0-1 when it takes a lead into the final period. The Stars are 12-1-0 in their last 13 meetings with the Mighty Ducks.

TIMLIN: Reliever glad to be Jays' closer

but when the rosters came down, I was going back to Class A. I didn't understand that," Timlin said. "I had a long talk with my pitching coach in Class A and he told me it wasn't important where you pitched, just that you be consistent. I had 21 saves that year and it all seemed to click for me after that."

Timlin never wanted to be a pitcher when he entered the ranks of the Midland High Bulldogs in the early '80s, but he was put on the mound by coach Tim Whalen, who is now MISD athletic director.

"I wanted to be in center field," Timlin said. "I liked it out there. I really didn't like pitching until I got to college (Southwestern University in Georgetown). That's when I found out I sucked as a hitter."

But he did end up pitching. When Timlin was a senior in 1984, he pitched on the same team as Mike Stanton (a junior then), who is now a pitcher with the New York Yankees and who pitched against Timlin in the 1992 World Series with Atlanta.

It's regularly pointed out to the major leaguer that he and Stanton didn't even make the state playoffs in 1984.

"We just didn't know where the strike zone was back then," Timlin said. "I remember we were playing a game against Andrews one day and Bullet Neatherlin, a guy I played with then and who is still a friend of mine, and Mike (Stanton) teamed up to pitch a three-hitter that day. And Mike's first pitch was at the top of the backstop."

Timlin also said that playing high school baseball is a lot different than his days on the mound with Toronto.

"In West Texas the wind is always blowing like hell," Timlin said. "I was pitching in San Angelo one day and we get a guy on first base. The wind blows their pitcher off the mound and he tells the umpire the wind blew him off. Fine. I'm on the mound in the next inning and I put runners on second and third and the wind blows me off the mound. I tell the umpire the wind blew me off and he calls a balk. You get some strange calls in high school, depending on where you are playing."

Still, Timlin looks at his high school days as a great starting place for him. For one thing, he was introduced to the pitching mound, but he also learned other things.

"That's where we learned to play for the love of the game," he said. "We weren't great, but we gave every thing we had to the game. I went over to the school the other day to see Coach Whalin and I saw the baseball guys out there running. I hated all the running when I was in high school, but that's where you begin to learn what it takes to be a good player. You just never think about it at the time. Back then all that work was just a pain in the neck."

Timlin has signed a new two-year contract with the Blue Jays. He has just built a new home near Tampa, Fla., where his wife has lived for the past 13 years, and he has earned his place in the sun as the Toronto closer.

Life is good for Timlin right now. He just wants back in the World Series. Well, we all have our problems. Some of us even wanted to presence limited him to two rebounds. Billy Thomas went 4-for-8 from 3-point range and finished with 14 points for Kansas.

Texas Tech's Cory Carr scored 16 points on 6-for-21 shooting.

Battie, coming off a three-point performance last Saturday in a 64-61 loss to Iowa State, had his way early against the Jayhawks as Pollard watched helplessly in street clothes with a cast on his broken left foot.

It was Kansas' second win without Pollard, who is expected to miss 10 games. The Jayhawks played the first 10 games of the season without injured point guard Jacque Vaughn, but Ryan Robertson did a solid job as his replacement.

Early on, the Jayhawks obviously missed the 6-foot-11 Pollard against Battie.

"They came out and kind of kicked our butts in the first half," said LaFrentz, who moved over to play Pollard's spot up front. "We just started working harder and playing a little better defense (in the second half), and things began to turn our way."

Battie scored 14 points in the first half and the 47-33 halftime lead was Texas Ttech's largest of the game.

N.C. Charlotte 78, Houston 68

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — DeMarco Johnson scored a career-high 32 points as North Carolina Charlotte survived a late Houston rally for a Conference USA victory.

Se[illegible]olson added 15 points with eig[illegible] assists for the 49ers (13-6, 5-3 C[illegible]erence USA) and sparked a decisive 49-second stretch after Houston (10-8, 2-4) trimmed a 13-point halftime deficit to six points on three straight possessions.

After Willie Byrd's jumper brought the Cougars within 69-63 with 1:20 remaining in the game, Colson converted 3-of-4 free throws and added an open-court steal. The latter resulted in a feed to Andre Davis for a dunk and 74-63 lead with 31.4 seconds left.

Although Johnson scored 13 of N.C.-Charlotte's first 16 points, both teams' offensive struggles resulted in six ties and eight lead changes over the initial 13:07.

Shamahn McBride hit a 17-footer to bring Houston within 23-22 at the 6:41 mark before the 49ers forged a 9-0 run. A three-point jumper by Shanderic Downs capped the effort and opened a 32-22 advantage with 4:33 remaining in the first half.

N.C. Charlotte took a 42-27 lead into intermission.

Damon Jones, who netted five treys, and Galen Robinson scored 17 points each for the Cougars, who lost for the fourth time in their last six games despite shooting 60.7 percent from the floor in the second half.

BANQUET: Velarde honored with award

love for life that Richardson spoke about is what Scott Seator stood for before his life was taken by cancer last year. Another part of the banquet that hit close to home for all fans of the Midland Angels was the renaming of the Community Achievement Award to the Scott Seator Community Achievement Award.

The recipient of the award this year was Midland's Randy Velarde. The former NAIA Player of the Year and current Anaheim Angel adds his name to the list which includes his father, Lee Velarde (1991), businessman Bill Williams (1992), the City of Midland's Chuck Swallow (1993), former Midland High trainer Doc Dodson (1994), Midland College Golf coach Delnor Poss (1995) and former MR-T Sports Editor Ted Battles (1996).

Also adding to the night were the silent and live auctions. Sports memorabilia, such as autographed jerseys from Velarde, Jeff Bagwell, Tim Salmon; and sports equipment from pitcher John Wetteland, Troy Aikman and Nolan Ryan, Mantle, Duke Snyder, Don Larson, Bobby Thomson and Bob Gibson were just some of the items that raised over $6,000 for Special Olympics of Texas and Casa de Amigos during the live auction.

The newly formed Scott Seator Foundation, which will benefit the youth of Midland, also raised $500 donation from Auction Action of Midland. It was also announced that a $1,000 donation will be given every year by the Midland Angels and Coors Light in the name of the Midland Angels' Player of the Year.

The night also paid tribute to the 1997 Midland Angel Fan of the Year, Charley Torrence.

Other noteworthy guests honored at the sports banquet included Midland Angels and Odessa Hockey owners Miles Prentice and Bob Richmond; Anaheim Angel field manager Terry Collins; former Midlander and Toronto Blue Jay pitcher Mike Timlin; Mayor Bobby Burns; Anaheim Director of Player Development Ken Forsch and Texas League President Tom Kayser.

Another special guest was Tony Tavares, President of Disney Sports Enterprises. Tavares brought resounding applause from the audience when he stated that he "is committed to bringing the Anaheim Angels to Midland for a game (with the Midland Angels)."

Fielder willing to trade places with Irabu

TOKYO (AP) — New York Yankees slugger Cecil Fielder is willing to trade places with Hideki Irabu, the Japanese pitcher who has refused to negotiate with the San Diego Padres.

Earlier this month, San Diego acquired what they believe are exclusive negotiation rights for the star right-hander Irabu from the Chiba Lotte Marines. But Irabu, 27, says he has his heart set on playing for the Yankees.

Fielder, who is in Japan to promote sneakers, told Japanese reporters today he might have the answer.

"I love California. I'd raise my hand to go," he told a news conference aired on national television when asked whether he would trade places with Irabu.

The Padres have said they aren't backing down, but club president Larry Lucchino has said that Irabu's rights are assignable, meaning he can be traded if they don't sign him.

Yankees owner George Steinbrenner believes Irabu should be a free agent able to negotiate with any major league team. Major league officials are studying the situation.

Meanwhile, the Yankees haven't found a team interested in acquiring Fielder, who filed a trade demand in November.

If the Yankees don't trade him by March 15, the 33-year-old first baseman could opt to become a free agent, which would void the $7.2 million salary he is owed in the final year of his contract.

He joined New York last season in a trade with Detroit, and helped the Yankees win their first World Series title since 1978. He hit .252 with 39 homers and 117 RBIs in 160 games, the last 53 with the Yankees.

Fielder, who spent the 1989 season with the Hanshin Tigers, also said he wouldn't mind coming back to Japan.

"If there's a team that wants me, tell them to give me a call at my hotel," he told Kyodo News service.

MC: Chaps need win tonight against OC

(From 1C)

Warmack, Mark Reed and Bradley Waters.

"We need others to contribute," Rafferty said. "It's been proven in the past that if Ceedric and Silvester have good games, that doesn't necessarily mean a victory."

Goodwyn and Kainga have proven to be forces on the inside for the Chaps. The question marks lie in the guard play, which has been disappointing for Rafferty to say the least.

"I feel that tempo is going to dictate this game and that has to do with the way the guards play. Lately their guard play has been better than ours. Our guys are going to have to step it up," Rafferty said.

It was less than a week ago when the No. 5 ranked Midland College Lady Chaparrals stretched their war path past Odessa College in a 96-69 blowout. Now, less than a week later, the teams meet again tonight at Chap Center.

For at least one half, the short-handed Lady Wranglers surprisingly kept up with MC, as they trailed only 43-37 at halftime. But then the wheels fell off of the Lady Wranglers' ride in the second half and the result was the lopsided score.

Now, how does one prepare for a same team for the second time in a row? MC coach Ron Jones sees it as a opportunity to try some new defensive schemes.

"Ever since that loss at Howard (College), I think our intensity has been better and we reemphasized defense more," Jones said. "The loss made me realize that we were working a lot on our offense but I was neglecting to work on defense. We've been working a lot on our half court-sets, but really we hope to get better in all areas."

The Lady Wranglers (3-20, 2-9) are coming off yet another tough defeat, 77-64, to New Mexico Junior College on Monday. Things can only go up from here for OC coach Stephie Thomas and the Lady Wranglers.

"We're going to keep it as close as we can. The longer we can keep it close, the better chance we have of coming out on top. We need to play possession by possession and do the best we can," Thomas said.

Midland Christian hands out awards

The Midland Christian football team, which finished with a 9-3 record and was a Texas Association of Private and Parochial Schools semifinalist, gave out its awards for the 1996 season at a ceremony earlier this month.

Senior Alex Awtry was named both the team's most valuable player and most valuable offensive player, totaling 1,739 yards at quarterback. Senior Jerod Womack, a defensive end, was named the most valuable defensive player with 96 tackles and 10 sacks.

Rangers stay in second with win

The Rangers (15-11, 5-1 district) had control throughout on hapless Yellow Jackets (1-16, 0-6). Neil Boecking led Greenwood with 22 points, Andrew Wootan had 17, David Upton chipped in with 16 and Shay Macias added 10.

Lee hoops post wins

Along with the varsity's 62-61 overtime win, Lee's JV defeated Cooper 72-61 and the sophomores prevailed 62-57.

The Lee JV (19-3 overall and 8-3 in district) received 21 points from Josh Brewster. Blake Hinsley and David Gonzales scored 13 each and Jeremy Conaway threw in 10.

The sophomores (19-4, 7-2) were paced by Tony Smith's 17. Eric Clodfelter, Justin Gibson, Trey Bohanon and Orlando Castillo scored 10 each.

Pair of aces at Green Tree

Lightning struck twice in different places Wednesday at the Green Tree Country Club with two golfers scoring hole-in-ones.

Betty Williams and Scott Howard both had aces at Green Tree. Williams scored hers on the 142-yard No. 2 hole with a 2-wood for her first hole-in-one. Marge Bassett and Jean Elkin were witnesses.

Howard scored his ace on the 140-yard No. 16 hole with an 8-iron. Raymond Miller, Woody Jackson and Hector Garcia were witness-

PARCELLS: Tuna needs permission

(From 1C)

when learning of Tagliabue's ruling.

Kraft added, "I didn't break."

Parcells spent about eight hours at the Patriots Foxboro, Mass., stadium Wednesday, met with his assistants, and dashed out to avoid a horde of reporters. The day after the Super Bowl, he had not told his assistants his plans.

The Patriots issued an unsigned statement commending Parcells and saying "it was time for the team to move ahead and build on the success of the 1996-1997 season." A team spokesman, Stacey James, added, "this is just the starting point."

It is believed the Patriots are interested in Pete Carroll, the former Jets' head coach who was dismissed and replaced by Kotite. Carroll is the 49ers' defensive coordinator, and reportedly has already told friends he will be coming to New England.

The Jets have not had a coach for five weeks nor a general manager since the death of Dick Steinberg during the 1995 season, when Kotite was anointed "head of the Jets' family" by owner Leon Hess.

Steve Gutman, the Jets' president, contacted by telephone at his office Wednesday evening refused to make a statement.

"I have nothing to say until the process is completed, and I'm very busy," Gutman said before hanging up. It is believed he was already working on a deal.

Parcells and Kraft asked for a ruling by Tagliabue to settle a contract dispute that at times overshadowed the Patriot team as it prepared for last Sunday's Super Bowl.

Tagliabue found that an amendment to Parcells' contract last year did in fact give the Patriots "an exclusive option" on Parcells for next season. He originally signed a five-year contract in 1993, when the Patriots had a different owner, but then asked Kraft to let him out of the final year.

Kraft has said that Parcells was concerned about his health, the poor state of the team and was not enjoying coaching. However, the Pats rebounded this past season and made it to the Super Bowl, where they lost to the Green Bay Packers, 35-21.

Parcells claimed that despite last year's amendment, he could resign as coach, pay the equivalent of his last year's salary ($1.2 million), and then go to another team.

This interpretation, said Tagliabue, would be "contrary to common sense, as well as to Massachusetts law."

Also, a league spokesman made a point of saying that Parcells is not free to go to another club as, say, a general manager or an assistant or in any other capacity unless it is with Kraft's permission.

Tagliabue also told both sides to share plans with each other by Friday. But in any event, the Jets will need to first seek permission from Kraft to begin talks with Parcells.

Parcells "may pursue other NFL coaching opportunities for the 1997 season only with the Patriots' consent," wrote Tagliabue.

Tagliabue will not get involved in brokering any deal involving the Patriots, Jets and Parcells, unless specifically asked to by both sides.

Kraft is known to have told colleagues Wednesday: "Who's worth more? Keyshawn Johnson? Ki-Jana Carter? Dan Wilkinson? Or Bill Parcells?"

Johnson (of the Jets), Carter and Wilkinson (of the Bengals) have been the league's last three No. 1 draft selections. Their teams have had little success.

It has been obvious to the football world for sometime that Parcells is the man the Jets covet. They have not interviewed any coaches or general managers, and would be willing to invest him with the same or greater powers, that they gave Kotite, whose two-season slate showed a total of four victories.

Unlike some chief executives on other teams, Gutman has been willing to give broad football powers to others, and so it is likely that the colossal Parcells ego would not prevent the Jets from hiring him. The problems that led to his split with Kraft would be unlikely to repeat themselves.

But does Kraft really want the No. 1 pick? He would do well with even a second-round pick, for the Jets have the first choice in the second round. Thus, at the very least with a trade for a Jets' second-rounder, Kraft would have the 29th choice as the Super Bowl runner-up, and then the 31st overall pick.

The rumors about Parcells' departure have swirled around the Patriots all season, even after the 55-year-old Parcells started talking about how much he had begun to enjoy coaching again. But various reports had it that he had his Foxboro, Mass., home on the market.

He has chafed under Kraft's system, which makes the coach a cog in a corporate mechanism. Kraft has explained that he spends millions on scouting, and why would he suddenly depend on Parcells to have the final word on draft day?

Thus, there was a noted contretemps over wide receiver Terry Glenn. Parcells wanted defensive lineman Tony Brackens, but the Pats picked Glenn — the outstanding rookie receiver. Also, the Patriots selected Christian Peter of Nebraska, even though he was known to have a history of abusing women.

Jones, Bryant power Lakers' win vs. Spurs

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — With Shaquille O'Neal having his usual troubles at the foul line, the Los Angeles Lakers turned to their other two All-Star weekend participants.

Eddie Jones, who will be an All-Star reserve for the West, scored 19 of his 23 points in the second half and Kobe Bryant, who will compete in the slam dunk contest, scored 19 to lead the Los Angeles Lakers to a come-from-behind 99-92 victory over the San Antonio Spurs on Wednesday night.

"The whole team gave great effort and we had a great night at the Alamodome," said Los Angeles coach Del Harris, who saw his team win its fifth straight game. "Our guys found a way to win. I have coached other teams that may have lost this game."

O'Neal had 21 points and 19 rebounds to help offset a 3-for-13 night at the foul line.

"We played well," O'Neal said. "It's been a tough road trip, but we have accomplished a lot. Tonight we felt that if we came out in the third and fourth quarter and held tough and hit the 3s we would come away with the win."

Heat 103, Celtics 83

MIAMI — Voshon Lenard scored 15 of his 20 points in the second quarter as Miami handed Boston its seventh straight loss.

Miami, coming off a franchise-best 63.2 percent shooting performance against Phoenix, shot 55 percent against the injury-depleted Celtics.

Knicks 75, Cavaliers 65

CLEVELAND — John Starks scored 24 points and the New York Knicks, playing without All-Star center Patrick Ewing, held the Cleveland Cavaliers to the lowest point total in franchise history.

Cleveland's previous record for fewest points was 67, last reached in 1995 against Boston. It was the second-lowest point total ever against the Knicks, who held Indiana to 64 on Dec. 10, 1985.

■ NBA Roundup

Magic 112, Suns 105

ORLANDO, Fla. — Penny Hardaway scored a season-high 32 points and Orlando got a clutch 3-pointer and two free throws from Brian Shaw in the final minute to beat the Phoenix Suns.

The victory was the eighth in 10 games for Orlando, which rebounded from the previous night's 20-point loss at Washington to climb back to .500 (20-20) and extend the Suns' losing streak to four games.

Pistons 98, Trail Blazers 89

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Grant Hill had 27 points and eight rebounds and the Detroit Pistons came back from an 18-point deficit to beat the Portland Trail Blazers.

Kenny Anderson led the Blazers with 14 points despite being ejected with 10:17 to play after picking up two technical fouls for arguing a foul call.

76ers 101, Raptors 99

PHILADELPHIA — Jerry Stackhouse made a 12-footer at the buzzer and the Philadelphia 76ers ended a 12-game home losing streak — the worst in franchise history.

Pacers 106, Hornets 95

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Reggie Miller scored a season-high 40 points and the Indiana Pacers snapped a three-game skid.

Miller, held to a combined 38 points in the Pacers' two previous games against the Hornets this season — both Charlotte victories — hit 14 of 22 field-goal attempts this time, including six of nine from 3-point range.

Florida State upsets 5th-ranked Maryland

Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Florida State coach Pat Kennedy said all week that his team had to beat No. 5 Maryland to keep its flickering postseason hopes alive.

Kennedy's players responded Wednesday night, defeating the Terrapins 74-70 — the second win in eight days over a ranked Atlantic Coast Conference opponent. The Seminoles knocked off North Carolina 84-71 a week ago and lost 61-58 at second-ranked Wake Forest on Saturday.

"This was as about a good a week as we've had in a long time," Kennedy said. "This could be a key win when we look back."

Sophomore Randell Jackson scored a career-high 20 points and freshman Ron Hale added 17 for Florida State, which fended off a late Maryland rally to claim its highest ranked victim in four seasons.

"This is the No. 5 team," Kennedy said. "They're playing as well as anybody in the league. What I loved about it was the intensity level and our kids didn't back down."

Florida State (12-5, 3-5 Atlantic Coast Conference) led 56-43 with 10 minutes remaining, but Maryland tied the game 65-65 with 1:41 remaining on a reverse, left-handed layup by Keith Booth, who scored 16 of his 20 points in the second half.

Kerry Thompson's 3-pointer with 1:13 left gave the Seminoles a 68-65 lead. Thompson, who committed nine turnovers against Maryland's trapping defense, scored 12 points in the second half and finished with 14.

"To win a close game is huge," Thompson said. "This win is like two or three other wins."

No. 2 Wake Forest 68, Wofford 51

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Ricky Peral led a balanced Wake Forest attack with 12 points and the second-ranked Demon Deacons had little trouble beating Wofford.

Even in defeat Wofford (5-13) had something to celebrate. The Terriers played with no one taller than 6-foot-9, but still managed to end two long streaks by Duncan. The All-America did not block a shot for the first time in his career. Duncan had gone 114 games with at least one block — the longest streak of consecutive games with a block in ACC history. Duncan also failed to reach double figures in both scoring and rebounds for the first time in 27 games.

No. 3 Kentucky 92, Florida 65

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — No. 3 Kentucky had a bigger lineup, better players and hardly any problems as Ron Mercer and Anthony Epps led the Wildcats to a victory over Florida.

Mercer helped give Kentucky (19-2, 7-1 Southeastern Conference) an early lead with his shooting and passing, and Epps turned back every Florida threat with timely 3-point shooting.

■ Top 25 Roundup

No. 11 Iowa State 77, Nebraska 67

LINCOLN, Neb. — Dedric Willoughby scored 21 points and No. 11 Iowa State made all but one of its free throws over the final three minutes.

Neither team led by more than three points until Iowa State (14-3, 5-2 Big 12) held the Cornhuskers (11-8, 3-4) scoreless over the final five minutes of the first half.

Willoughby hit a 3-pointer to put Iowa State up 27-26 with 4:37 remaining in the first half, then nailed another long-range shot a minute later. Sean Bankhead hit his first 3 of the season to beat the buzzer and put the Cyclones up 33-26 at halftime.

No. 12 Duke 80, No. 19 North Carolina 73

DURHAM, N.C. — Trajan Langdon scored a career-high 28 points and his seventh 3-pointer with 41 seconds left sealed No. 12 Duke's victory over No. 19 North Carolina, snapping a seven-game skid against its arch rival.

The Blue Devils (16-5, 5-3 Atlantic Coast Conference) beat the Tar Heels (12-6, 3-5) for the first time since 1993 in a game that featured 17 lead changes and seven ties.

No. 18 Colorado 69, Kansas State 60

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Chauncey Billups scored 25 points, including a big 3-pointer with 2:58 to play, as No. 18 Colorado held off Kansas State to extend the Wildcats' losing streak to eight games and keep them winless in the Big 12.

Kansas State, which had stayed in the game the entire way against Colorado (16-4, 7-1), was within 59-55 with 3:12 to play when Aaron Swartzendruber made one of two free throws following a turnover by Billups.

No. 25 South Carolina 65, Vanderbilt 64

The Gamecocks (14-5, 8-0 Southeastern Conference) didn't put the victory away until Drew Maddux's 3-pointer bounced off the back rim and Pax Whitehead's putback missed just before the buzzer for Vanderbilt (11-8, 3-5).

Lady 'Horns' three-pointers prove too much for Baylor

AUSTIN (AP) — Angela Jackson scored 17 points and Angie Jo Ogletree added 16 points as No. 10 Texas beat Baylor 79-61 Wednesday night.

The Lady Longhorns (14-3, 7-1) shot 53 percent from the 3-point line, including four of nine from Kim Lummus, and used its pressure defense to wear down Baylor in the second half.

Baylor (11-7, 4-4 Big 12) would not go quietly however. The Lady Bears went on a 7-0 run to shave the Texas lead from 17 points to 10 points with six minutes remaining in the game.

But Texas made its free throws down the stretch to put the game out of reach.

Baylor took a 12-5 lead before the Lady Longhorns answered with an 11-0 run to move ahead 16-12 with 13:16 remaining in the half. Texas opened up leads as large as 18 in the first half, using 5-of-10 shooting from behind the 3-point arc and strong inside play from Jackson.

Nicole Palmer, who led Baylor with 17 points and nine rebounds, made four free throws and a 3-pointer for Baylor in a 10-3 run at the end of the first half.

Lummus finished with 16 points for Texas, and Vanessa Wallace had 11 points and eight rebounds. Amie Smith had 10 rebounds for the Lady Longhorns.

Mavericks' puzzling performance confounds new coach Cleamons

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — Jim Cleamons had to smile to keep from scowling.

His Dallas Mavericks had just lost again because of turnovers and poor shooting like they had so many times this season.

A year ago Cleamons was collecting yet another NBA championship ring as an assistant coach of the Chicago Bulls.

As the new coach of the Mavericks he is trying to put together a puzzle called the Mavericks, who have never played in the NBA finals.

"I'm not sure why I'm smiling," Cleamons said. "I guess it's because things are so frustrating that you have to try to keep a sense of humor."

Cleamons knows winning basketball. He has five championship rings, one as a player for the Los Angeles Lakers and four in seven seasons as a Bulls assistant under Phil Jackson.

But teaching the Mavericks how to win has been a job that working from 6 a.m. to 11 p.m. every day hasn't accomplished.

"Sometimes I wish I could unscrew the top of their heads and pour all the knowledge down in there and maybe they would see," Cleamons said.

The Mavericks are 14-27 halfway through the season, just where they were last year under Dick Motta, who was fired when new ownership made massive changes.

Cleamons knew it was going to be hard turning the Mavericks around. But this difficult?

"I'm as disappointed as anyone," Cleamons said. "We've been at it hard since October and we still don't have the answers. Somehow we have to start maturing. We have to start taking care of the ball and hitting our shots. I believe we're eventually going to win. Getting upset about it isn't going to help."

Cleamons has had plenty to get upset about.

Point guard Jason Kidd didn't like Cleamons' half-court offense and Kidd's grumbling led to a trade with Phoenix that brought the Mavericks Sam Cassell, A.C. Green and Michael Finley.

Then there were the rumored trades of Jamal Mashburn and Jim Jackson that were finally put on the back-burner until after the season.

Then top scorer and rebounder Chris Gatling walked out of a practice in a protest over his playing time. Gatling was suspended for a game and admitted he made a mistake.

AP Laserphoto

"I know one thing," he said. "I'm not going to quit working and I'm going to see to it that players on this team keep working. We can still work our way out of this."

Cleamons' blueprint is built around a work ethic in which selfishness is tossed aside. If it worked for Michael Jordan and the Bulls it shouldn't be too unsavory for the Mavericks. Jordan said Cleamons was "very instrumental in our success."

But this approach has yet to mold the Mavericks into a winner.

"The players just have to understand we can get through this if we practice hard," Cleamons said. "Practice makes better ball handlers and shooters. You can't just show up for games and expect some special recipe to kick in.

"A work ethic is needed. We need to challenge each other. We need some sacrifice and quit talking about minutes played and stats. You don't hear that on the Bulls."

Jesse Jackson wants to defend Rodman in front of NBA's Stern

First President Clinton suggested that Rodman shape up and admit he was wrong to kick a photographer. Now Jesse Jackson says he is advising the Chicago Bulls star, and the civil rights leader wants to plead Rodman's case before the NBA.

Jackson said he planned to meet with NBA commissioner David Stern on Wednesday in New York concerning Rodman's 11-game suspension for the Jan. 15 incident. NBA spokesman Brian McIntyre said no meeting was scheduled.

Jackson's father, Noah Robinson Sr., died in South Carolina on Monday night and it was unclear if Jackson had gone there.

"Like everybody else, I don't condone Dennis' action," Jackson told the Chicago Sun-Times in Wednesday's editions. "I want to convey to the commissioner my sentiment and the sentiments of a growing number of people that Dennis has already been punished enough for the very act in question."

The Bulls' 111-96 victory Tuesday night at Vancouver was the sixth game of the suspension, which is costing Rodman more than $1.1 million in salary and incentives. He also was fined $25,000 by the league, and he has agreed to pay a $200,000 out-of-court settlement to Minneapolis cameraman Eugene Amos.

Stern has insisted that before Rodman is reinstated, he must undergo psychiatric counseling and assure the league he will adhere to acceptable standards of behavior.

"It's one thing to punish a man. It's another thing to take away his dignity," Jackson said.

Jackson and Rodman met Monday in Los Angeles after the player's agent, Dwight Manley, contacted the former presidential candidate.

"I dig what the brother does, and he appreciates what I bring to the table," Rodman said. "He is one of the few public figures that I truly admire because I think he is really sincere."

Jackson said Rodman is basically a good person with a bad temper.

"But we had prayer," Jackson said. "I gave him my ideas and advice on the matter, and I intend to continue counseling him as long as he wants me to, and I feel I can help."

Buffalo's Kelly expected to announce retirement

Associated Press

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Quarterback Jim Kelly is expected to announce his retirement Friday at a news conference called by the Buffalo Bills.

Sources have said since last week that Kelly, unable to reach agreement with the Bills on a new contract deal, will retire after 11 years with Buffalo. Kelly and Bills owner Ralph Wilson also have reportedly been working on a compensation deal for the 36-year-old quarterback to send him into retirement.

The Bills made no mention of Kelly in scheduling the news conference but, anticipating strong media interest, announced it is being held in the cavernous fieldhouse where the team works out. Most club news conferences are held in the team's average-sized media room.

Although he had a career-low 14 touchdown passes last season and a career-high 19 interceptions, Kelly is still considered the Bills best quarterback ever.

He led the team to four Super Bowl appearances — all losses — and completed 60 percent of his passes for 35,467 yards, 237 touchdowns and 175 interceptions in his career.

Washington QB Heath Shuler announced Wednesday he was invoking a clause in his contract that allows him to leave the team.

■ NFL Roundup

Shuler, Redskins part ways

ASHBURN, Va. — The Heath Shuler era with the Washington Redskins, which never really got started, officially ended Wednesday.

The former first-round draft choice, who lost the starting quarterback job to Gus Frerotte before last season, announced he was invoking a clause in his eight-year, $19 million contract that allows him to leave the team.

In a strategic response, the Redskins announced they will take the steps necessary to make Shuler a restricted free agent, which means the team would receive a first-round pick and a third-round selection as compensation from any team that signs Shuler between Feb. 14 and April 14.

If no team signs Shuler during that period — during which the team will make him a contract offer, likely for the NFL minimum — the Redskins would retain Shuler's rights; under such a scenario, they no doubt would try and trade him.

"As I have said many times, Heath Shuler will be a starting quarterback in the National Football League," Redskins general manager Charley Casserly said in a statement. "We have already been approached by a number of clubs on his availability."

Heading the list of teams shopping for quarterbacks are the New Orleans Saints and Atlanta Falcons, who floudered under Bobby Hebert after starter Jeff George was benched by former coach June Jones.

Others teams who have questions at quarterback include the Kansas City Chiefs, where starter Steve Bono lost his job at midseason when the offense was sputtering. Replacement Rich Gannon did little better.

More gifted athletically than Frerotte, Shuler also made more mistakes — like throwing interceptions while trying to drill the ball into tight coverage, or fumbling while scrambling.

Turner vowed to stay with Frerotte throughout the 1996 season, and, except for one game in which Frerotte was knocked silly and missed a play, Shuler took no snaps all year.

Until the onset of the 1996 season, Frerotte and Shuler had struggled to win the job.

As a million-dollar rookie in 1993, Shuler had the upper hand. But when he held out for the first three weeks of training camp as his eight-year contract was being negotiated, Frerotte worked with the starting squad.

And when Shuler stumbled, both in exhibition games and the regular season, Frerotte made himself a fan favorite by leading the club to several come-from-behind victories.

Frerotte strengthened his hold on the job in 1995, when Shuler suffered a separated shoulder in a season-opening victory over Arizona and was lost for 10 weeks.

And as the Redskins continued to improve — going from three victories in 1994 to six in 1995 — it became increasingly clear that a team on the verge of making a playoff run could no longer wait for a gifted passer like Shuler to pick up the complexities of NFL defensive schemes.

Before last season, Turner selected Frerotte after he and Shuler competed for the job in training camp. Frerotte passed for a career-high 3,453 yards in 1996, when the Redskins started 7-1 before fading to a 9-7 record and missing the playoffs.

Cunningham mulls comeback

After a year out of football, the former Philadelphia Eagles quarterback says he's ready to play again in the NFL if the right team calls.

"I'm not in a rush. I want to make sure it's the right situation," Cunningham said.

Cunningham, who retired after 11 years with the Eagles, said his interest was spurred this month when the Houston Oilers called him. No offer was made, but Cunningham said Oilers coach Jeff Fisher was interested.

Before that, Cunningham said he had been thinking about playing again, after spending the last year running his Las Vegas business and working as an analyst for TNT's Sunday show, "Pro Football Tonight."

"I did a lot of praying to God and I asked, 'Please give me a sign and let that sign be a team calling me and being interested in me.' The next day, an NFL team called," Cunningham said.

Cunningham said his desire to play had tapered off in his final seasons with Philadelphia. He was benched during the 1995 season in favor of Rodney Peete.

Cunningham tested free agency before last season but found no takers. He retired to concentrate on his family's Las Vegas business, Custom Marble and Granite.

Cunningham said he was approached by NFL personnel last week while attending Super Bowl festivities in New Orleans.

"Each one of the coaches and general managers came up to me and asked me 'How old are you?'" Cunningham said. "When I told them I was 33 they all said 'Whoa! You have to get back into football.'"

Falcons hire ex-Rams coach

ATLANTA — Rich Brooks, fired as coach of the St. Louis Rams after two straight losing seasons, was named defensive coordinator of the Atlanta Falcons on Wednesday.

Dan Reeves, the Falcons' new coach, said he was impressed with Brooks' credentials, which include being a head coach the last 20 years.

"His background is defense and he wanted to stay in the league," Reeves said. "His philosophy is to attack on defense but also to be sound and not make the big mistakes that cost you big plays. Philosophy-wise, we're on the same page."

Brooks, 55, was fired by the Rams after going 7-9 in 1995 and 6-10 this season. Prior to that, he spent 18 years as coach at Oregon.

Reeves, who took over the Falcons after being fired by the New York Giants just one day after Brooks was fired by the Rams, said he was not concerned about taking on an assistant who spent two decades as a head coach.

"The guy wants to coach," Reeves said. "He could have sat out and not done anything, but he wants to be in the game. He's accepting a tremendous challenge to turn this thing around and hopefully get a chance to be a head coach again."

Brooks, who had two years left on the St. Louis contract that paid him about $600,000 per year, was not available for comment.

"He realizes this is a challenge," Reeves said. "But he also realizes that through the free-agent system we're under now, particularly with the type of money we have to spend under the salary cap, that if we can make some wise decisions we'll be competitive and turn this thing around."

Brooks was a defensive back coach at San Francisco in 1974 and '75 and also worked as a defensive assistant in college before he took over the Oregon program in 1977. Overall, he had a losing record with the Ducks, but he took them to four bowls in his final six years, capped by Oregon's first trip to the Rose Bowl in 1994.

He won his first four games as an NFL coach, but St. Louis was plagued by a shoddy defense and a large number of penalties.

Hanifan back in St. Louis

ST. LOUIS — Jim Hanifan, the former coach of the St. Louis Cardinals, is coming back to town as a Rams assistant under coach Dick Vermeil.

Hanifan was hired Wednesday as offensive line coach. He had been an assistant with the Washington Redskins since 1990.

Hanifan coached in St. Louis with the Cardinals from 1974 through 1985.

By Ken Peters
AP Sports Writer

HONOLULU — Wading into a thicket of outstretched arms wielding a wild assortment of caps, programs, shirts and requisite cheeseheads, Brett Favre struggled to lift his arm to sign autographs, pinned in by a crush of fans and photographers.

Of the 80-plus NFL all-stars gathered at Aloha Stadium, only Favre was assigned his very own security guard.

Welcome to super celebrity status, Brett Favre — pride of Kiln, Miss., and Green Bay, Wis., and now the Big Kahuna in Hawaii.

"Mr. Favre, Mr. Favre, you're the greatest," said a kid leaning over the stands, thrusting a scrap of paper and a pen toward him.

"Thanks for the great season, Brett," said a 50-ish man in an aloha shirt, clamoring with the same enthusiasm of his young competitor for the quarterback's scrawl.

A few minutes later, in the stadium's dim, quiet locker room, Favre seemed amused by all the fuss.

"Next year it'll be another guy," he said.

This year at the Pro Bowl, however, the quarterback of the Super Bowl champion Packers, and the two-time NFL MVP, was definitely "the guy."

Favre has seen it all before, only he wasn't in the eye of the storm.

"I remember I've come in here for the Pro Bowl and it was Steve Young," he said. "Once you win it (the Super Bowl), things do change. But I'm no different than I've ever been."

Although he has no desire to be a celebrity, Favre wouldn't mind staying in the limelight if it means the Packers win some more Super Bowls.

"I think we definitely have a good shot to build a dynasty," drawled the current king of NFL quarterbacks. "We have a lot of very talented players and now we have the experience of going through all this (the Super Bowl). We found out winning just makes you hungry to do it again."

Favre, 27, will be at the center of the Packers' hopes of repeating. He got the job done in Sunday's 35-21 victory over New England, throwing for 246 yards and two touchdowns with no interceptions, plus running two yards for another score.

After arriving in Hawaii to begin practice for the Pro Bowl, Favre was weary from the hectic week in New Orleans, the Super Bowl itself, and a long flight. He hadn't even had time to reflect on what it all means.

"It still hasn't really hit, but I began to realize what has happened once I got here and people were talking about it," he said. "Getting around all these players makes it somehow seem more real."

Cleveland may have to trade Lofton before he gets away in free agency

By Ken Berger
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND — If Cleveland Indians general manager John Hart had traded Albert Belle and Kenny Lofton after the 1995 season, fans would have pinned his picture on a wanted poster next to Art Modell.

It doesn't look like such a crazy idea now.

Belle played out his contract last year, then became a free agent and signed a $55 million, five-year contract with the Chicago White Sox. Now, Lofton's agent has told the team that the speedy center fielder will test the free-agent market after this season.

"We made overtures that we wanted to open negotiations, but Kenny made it clear that he didn't want to talk at this time," Hart told The Plain Dealer. "He said he still wanted to talk to us, but he also said he was going to test the free-agent waters at the end of the 1997 season."

Lofton has won four straight Gold Gloves and five consecutive AL stolen base titles and is considered the best leadoff hitter in the game. Last year, Lofton batted .317 with 14 homers, 67 RBIs, 132 runs and 75 stolen bases.

It was not clear if Hart made a contract offer during preliminary discussions with Lofton's agent, Steve Zucker. Neither Hart nor Zucker returned telephone messages Wednesday.

Belle rejected an offer from the Indians last spring, then filed for free agency. Trading Belle would have been as unpopular as Modell's moving the NFL's Browns from Cleveland to Baltimore. But at least the Indians would have gotten something for him.

Facing the same risk with Lofton, Hart said a trade was not likely, but wouldn't be ruled out.

"Obviously, this changes our view of what we would entertain for Lofton," Hart said. "At this stage, for a player we would have been very reluctant to talk about, you've got to examine what's best for the franchise over the long haul."

That's what Hart did in 1991. Three months after he was hired as general manager, Hart traded Willie Blair and Ed Taubensee to the Houston Astros for Lofton, an unproven talent. He locked up the speedster with a five-year contract with a club option that will pay Lofton $4.75 million this season.

Getting long-term commitments from Lofton, Belle, Carlos Baerga, Omar Vizquel and Manny Ramirez kept the Indians intact for their first World Series trip in 41 years in 1995.

Harris County to buy control of Astrodome

HOUSTON (BLOOMBERG) — Harris County, Texas, commissioners agreed to pay Houston Astros owner Drayton McLane $19.5 million for control of the county-owned Astrodome.

Yesterday's vote was the final part of a four-way agreement that could lead to a new stadium. Commissioners said the price was "fair and adequate."

A spokesman for McLane, who operates the stadium through his Astrodome USA company, said the vote is good news.

"We're excited the process is moving forward," Skip Balcomb said.

A referendum approved last year said general property taxes won't be used to subsidize a new ballpark. Officials had tentatively agreed to pay $180 million toward the estimated $265 million cost. The Astros, local businesses and permanent seat licenses would cover the rest.

"Now we have to get some stuff done at the legislative level," Balcomb said.

The county commissioners now would attempt to get county legislation enacted to help fund the project. Harris County said that financing would come from taxes on tourists and stadium users.

Involved in the agreement are the county, the city of Houston, Astrodome USA and the Houston Sports Facilities Partnership, a group of investors backing the proposed stadium.

Pro golfers, stars mingle at Pro-Am

By Ron Sirak
AP Golf Writer

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — British Open champion Tom Lehman was strolling past the practice green at Pebble Beach when a familiar face stopped him in his tracks.

"I saw James Woods," Lehman said, referring to the actor currently starring in the film "Ghosts of Mississippi."

"I said, 'Excuse me, are you James or Tiger?'" Lehman recounted with a huge smile.

That's the kind of atmosphere there is at the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am. It is like no other tournament. Fans are as likely to run into Joe Pesci or Clint Eastwood as they are to run into Phil Mickelson or Tom Watson.

A whopping 180 professionals — 36 more than at a normal PGA Tour event — play with 180 amateurs over three courses in an event that has more the feel of a Hollywood party than a PGA Tour stop.

"You just need to have a little different mind set," Lehman said Wednesday on the eve of the first round. "You have Bill Murray clowning in the bunker or Jack Lemmon joking with the gallery. It's a lot of fun. You just have to adjust like you would have to adjust to wind or ran."

It is a wacky atmosphere where the pros always have to be on the lookout for a wild shot by an amateur and be wary of a camera clicked in the middle of the backswing. Pebble Beach is the only event where fans are allowed to take cameras on the course during competition.

And as bizarre as it has been in the past at Pebble it should be even weirder this week when Tiger Woods, the hottest player on the planet, is paired with Kevin Costner, the heart-throb who scored big as a golfer in the film hit "Tin Cup."

Woods, who has adapted nicely to the celebrity scene and refers to Costner as "Cos" or "Kev," was more concerned with the state of his golf game than he was with the enormous galleries sure to follow him.

"Everybody will be watching Kevin," Woods said with a smile before heading to the practice range to work with his coach Butch Harmon on a swing Woods said is "off right now."

The practice range was the only place the players could work out in the days leading to the tournament. A month of rain left all three courses — Pebble Beach, Spyglass and Poppy Hills — closed to practice.

While the forecast for the next couple of days is good, rain on the weekend could leave the already saturated courses unplayable and put the tournament in the same situation it was last year when it was called off after 36 holes.

With last year's event washed out the defending champion is 1995 winner Peter Jacobsen. He'll be challenged by Woods, Lehman, Nick Faldo, Steve Stricker, Mark Brooks and Steve Jones, who shot 26 under par in winning the Phoenix Open last week.

Joining Costner, Murray, Lemmon and James Woods in the amateur ranks are NFL star Jerry Rice, former quarterback Roger Staubach, actors Randy Quaid and Andy Garcia and singers Huey Lewis, John Denver and Glen Campbell.

DIVOTS: Jack Nicklaus again has as his amateur partner his son Steve, who frequently caddies for dad. ... Tiger Woods' agent, Hughes Norton of International Management Group, is a member of the defending team champion. Norton and David Duval won Pebble Beach in 1995. ... Woods had a chance to play as an amateur in this tournament while at Stanford but turned down the invitation. "It was finals time," Woods said. "It was a week of school I didn't want to miss, especially at Stanford." ... As wet as the courses are it's likely the players will be able to clean their ball anywhere, even in the rough. "You hit it, dig it out of the ground, clean the mud off it and hit it again," Lehman said about playing under these conditions.

Prefontaine running again 22 years after his death

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — Twenty-two years after his death, Steve Prefontaine is running again — across the big screen.

"Prefontaine," the first of two movies due out this year about the charismatic distance runner, opened last weekend in 20 U.S. markets. The second movie, "Pre," is set for release this fall.

Considering Prefontaine's unmatched competitiveness, it's fitting that Hollywood has dueling renditions of the story of a handsome, brash youngster who burst onto the national track scene out of the coastal mill town of Coos Bay.

He became the best U.S. distance runner of his time. But his quest for an Olympic gold medal at age 21 failed when he faded to finish fourth in the 5,000 meters in the 1972 Munich Games, a race darkened by the deaths a few days earlier of 11 Israeli athletes and coaches at the hands of Palestinian terrorists in the Olympic Village.

Three years later, at age 24, just hours after his final victory, and one year shy of what was to have been a triumphant Olympic return, he died in a car crash. The end came on a winding, narrow road not far from the University of Oregon track where he had become, as the actor who portrays him in "Prefontaine" has said, "a rock star of track and field."

The most startling aspect of the movie is actor Jay Leto's uncanny resemblance to the real Prefontaine. Leto, from television's "My So-Called Life," has the hair, the moustache, the stocky physique, even the intense stare.

"We went up to visit the filming of the Olympic portions," Prefontaine's father, Ray, said. "When I first saw him, I had to take a couple of looks at him to realize it wasn't Steve."

The resemblance allowed writer-director Steve James ("Hoop Dreams") to intersperse historic race footage with scenes shot last summer. But the likeness was almost too close for the family.

"My wife cried and so did my daughter," Ray Prefontaine said. "When he came around the field, looking up at the clock like Steve did, it was hard to take."

Siskel & Ebert gave the movie a thumbs up, praising its use of the turbulent era of the early 1970s as a backdrop. Other critics, though, found fault with James' use of hand-held cameras and fake interviews to give the film a documentary feel. Critics in Oregon said the movie failed to capture the near-mystic qualities that made Prefontaine so adored by his fans.

Many of those close to Prefontaine, including his family, were consultants on the film. They included Pat Tyson, who shared a cramped trailer with Prefontaine in college, and Geoff Hollister, one of the first employees of the company that would become Nike.

Although the chronology of events has been altered, the film is mostly factual, with a few nagging exceptions.

The Amateur Athletic Union, which feuded with Prefontaine over athletes' rights, refused to allow its name to be used in the movie. So the film refers to a fictional "ATU" and even has a disclaimer in the credits insisting that any resemblance to any real organization was inadvertent.

HOW TO READ THE MARKET IN REVIEW

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 405 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.
Chg: Loss or gain for the day. No change indicated by ...
Tkr: The stock's ticker symbol.
How to use: The ticker symbol can help you get information about a company. Two important uses: Most services that provide stock quotes over the phone require the ticker symbol. Second, stock brokers and analysts can recognize stocks more easily with a ticker symbol.

Generally, ticker symbols resemble the company name although some – BUD for Anheuser-Busch Cos. and FON for Sprint Corp. – are more related to what a company does. Tickers on the New York and Amex usually don't exceed three letters. On Nasdaq, they go up to five letters.

The names you see in this paper are abbreviations of the company name supplied by The Associated Press. Companies can help determine what their abbreviation will be. Overall, AP tries to use an abbreviation that will most closely match the full company name.

Stock Footnotes: cc – PE greater than 99. dd – Loss in last 12 mos. d – New 52-wk low during trading day. g – Dividend in Canadian $. Stock price in U.S. $. n – New issue in past 52 weeks. s – Split or stock dividend of 25 percent or more in last 52 weeks. Dividend begins with date of split or stock dividend. u – New 52-wk high during trading day. v – Trading halted on primary market. Unless noted, dividend rates are annual disbursements based on last declaration. pf – Preferred. pp – Holder owes installment(s) of purchase price. rt – Rights. un – Units. wd – When distributed. wi – When issued. wt – Warrants. ww – With warrants. xw – Without warrants.

Prices rebound

NEW YORK — Oil futures rose Wednesday amid talk of political instability in Iraq and forecasts of cold temperatures in the U.S. Northeast.

Crude oil for delivery in March advanced 57 cents a barrel to close at $24.47 on the New York Mercantile Exchange, after moving as high as $24.55 earlier in the day.

Oil prices got an early boost from reports that Iraq may be preparing to attack Kuwait in a possible replay of its August 1990 invasion.

The rally lost steam around midday after the Clinton Administration moved to defuse the reports, saying that while it was aware of internal instability in President Saddam Hussein's government, it did not believe Iraq was taking a more aggressive stance toward its neighbors, particularly Kuwait.

Supply data released Wednesday morning by the Department of Energy was about on target with analysts' expectations. The DOE said that, for the week ending Jan. 24, crude oil stocks were up 3.4 percent and motor gasoline stocks were up 2.1 percent.

But supplies of distillate fuel oil declined 2.5 percent, and refinery utilization was down 0.9 percent, the DOE said.

Late Tuesday, the American Petroleum Institute said crude oil stocks rose by 3.725 million barrels in the week ending Jan. 24, nearly twice the gain that analysts had expected. Other API data, however, suggested a larger-than-expected decline in the supply of some oil products.

Natural gas for delivery in March slipped 10.8 cents per 1,000 cubic feet to settle at $2.438.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar broke the 122-yen barrier Wednesday to touch its ninth consecutive four-year high against the Japanese currency but ended lower in most other foreign-exchange dealings.

Renewed strength in the mark and Swiss franc, profit-taking from the dollar's run-up so far this year and remarks by Germany's central bank president suggesting the mark's depreciation against the dollar is nearly complete all contributed to the U.S. currency's retreat.

The dollar cost 1.6434 marks, down from 1.6485. The pound cost $1.6210, up from $1.6179.

Other late dollar rates in New York compared with late Tuesday: 1.4259 Swiss francs, down from 1.4291; 5.5380 French francs, down from 5.5600; 1,613.00 Italian lire, down from 1,616.00; 1.3450 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3401.

Auto earnings

DEARBORN, Mich. — Big Three earnings were flat last year at just over $12.9 billion, partly because of a 22 percent overall decline in fourth-quarter profits blamed largely on General Motors Corp.'s big strike costs.

Even so, 1996 ended up as Detroit's third most-profitable year. It would have ranked No. 1 if not for GM's $1.2 billion in after-tax losses from strikes in the United States and Canada and other one-time charges.

Ford Motor Co., the last of the U.S. automakers to report year-end results, said Wednesday that its profits increased 62 percent in the October-December period and 7 percent for the year.

America Online agrees to give refunds

■ Settlement is with 36 state attorneys general, but applies to AOL customers nationwide.

Associated Press

Threatened with lawsuits across the country, America Online agreed Wednesday to give refunds to customers who haven't been able to log on because of the overwhelming demand created by AOL's flat $19.95-a-month rate.

Customers will be offered either cash or a month of free service. AOL had no immediate estimate of how much the settlement will cost. However, if every member was able to get a full refund for the two months, an highly unlikely scenario, the agreement would cost America Online about $320 million.

The settlement was reached with 36 state attorneys general but applies to all 8 million of AOL's customers nationwide. Several of the states had threatened to sue America Online unless it promised refunds.

America Online, based in Dulles, Va., previously said it was selectively giving refunds. But it had refused to give blanket reimbursements.

The states had complained that AOL signed up hundreds of thousands of new customers without the means to accommodate the heavy usage. Some computer users trying to get online have gotten busy signals for hours on end.

"Under the consumer fraud laws of this state and many other states, you can't offer something to a subscriber and then not be able to deliver," Illinois Attorney General James Ryan said.

AOL chief executive Steve Case acknowledged that the company underestimated its ability to handle the increased usage. The company previously said it plans to spend $350 million by June on new equipment and staff to handle the demand.

Analysts viewed the settlement as a necessary move by America Online to get past a barrage of negative publicity at a time when its online service is threatened by people's easy access to the Internet.

"A long, drawn-out litigation would inevitably distract management at a time when AOL needs to critically focus on the right mix of gaining new customers and retaining existing customers in the threat of the wild frontier of the Internet," said Peter Kastner, an analyst at Boston-based Aberdeen Group.

In addition to the busy signals, AOL users have also seen a recent rash of technical glitches such as e-mail "brownouts" that occurred while America Online was trying to upgrade its network to accommodate the new users.

Refunds will be based on how much a customer was able to access AOL during December and January.

Customers will get a full refund for each month in which they connected for less than two hours. Customers who used less than eight hours during the two months will get back 50 percent.

People who connected for more than eight hours but less than 15 will receive 25 percent refunds. Anyone who used more than 15 hours will not be eligible for a refund.

Instead of a refund, a customer can make a written request for a free month of service.

AOL will suspend advertising during February and add a disclaimer to ads thereafter warning that people may encounter delays logging on.

In addition, the company agreed to make it easier for unhappy online customers to drop out, including adding more phone operators, more lines for faxed cancellations and detailed online instructions.

Dow snaps losing streak

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stocks struggled higher Wednesday, snapping a five-session losing streak for the Dow Jones industrial average, despite another jittery day in the bond market that briefly boosted long-term interest rates near 7 percent.

The Dow, which lost 228 points over the previous five sessions, jumped 84.66 to close at 6,740.74, having slipped to a 10-point gain with a little more than an hour to go.

For the second straight day, IBM was the Dow's biggest gainer as the computer maker continued to recover from a 22-point, four-session slide that followed last week's earnings report. The Dow also benefited from healthy profit reports by two more of its components, DuPont and Philip Morris.

Broader measures were mostly higher, with smaller and more speculative issues lagging the advance in blue-chip and other large companies.

Bonds finished a shade higher after a volatile session that saw the yield on the 30-year Treasury — a key determinant of corporate and consumer borrowing costs — briefly shoot toward 7 percent. Bonds quickly recovered, bringing the yield slightly below late Tuesday's 6.91 percent by late afternoon.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by a narrow margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume totaled 496.37 million shares.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock list rose 7.48 to 772.50, and the NYSE's composite index rose 3.23 to 406.09.

The Nasdaq composite index rose 0.80 to 1,355.17, and the American Stock Exchange composite index fell 0.40 to 587.67.

Oil company shares also bolstered the Dow as energy prices rose in futures trading on news of tight supplies: Exxon rose 2 3/4 to 103 1/4; Texaco rose 1 3/4 to 107; and Chevron rose 1 5/8 to 66 5/8.

The NYSE's two most active issues were companies that announced discouraging earning news: Brinker International, a Dallas-based restaurant operator, fell 4 1/4 to 11; while 360 Communications, a Chicago-based wireless communications concern spun off by Sprint, fell 2 3/4 to 19 1/4.

Disney could get $2.5 billion for publications

N.Y. Times News Service

Burbank, California — Walt Disney Co. may sell its publishing unit piece by piece because of the quality and variety of its magazines and newspapers, analysts and company officials said.

The unit could fetch as much as $2.5 billion if it is sold in parts, analysts said. The properties include the Kansas City Star, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, Women's Wear Daily, Institutional Investor, Food Engineering and New Steel.

While the publishing world has seen large acquisitions in recent years, none approach the magnitude and diversity of this one, analysts said.

"This may be the last great hurrah of print media as we head into the electronic publishing age," said Porter Bibb, managing director of investment bank Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. "You'll see bidders surfacing like crazy."

Disney said Tuesday that it would consider selling the magazines and newspapers that came with its $19 billion purchase of Capital Cities/ABC Inc. in 1995. The unit contributed $1.15 billion, or 15 percent, to Cap Cities' revenue in 1995.

Disney will consider spinning the unit off, as well as asset swaps, in addition to straight sales, spokesman John Dreyer said. The unit earned operating income of $170 million to $210 million in fiscal 1996.

"Publishing isn't a good fit with the entertainment business," said John Morton, an independent newspaper analyst in Silver Springs, Maryland. "They do fundamentally different things."

The unit is expected to fetch about 10 times cash flow of $250 million, or $2.2 billion to $2.5 billion, some analysts said.

Leading the units for sale is Fairchild Publications, home of Women's Wear Daily, W and other influential publications in the worlds of fashion and high society.

Disney's newspapers are sure to spark similar interest because they are profitable, analysts said.

The Kansas City Star in Missouri dominates its market with a weekday circulation of 279,305 and weekend of 416,812, as of Sept. 30.

Morton said he believed that the sale of the papers alone would bring in about $1 billion. But he cautioned that a lot of potential buyers are already digesting major acquisitions, although he viewed Newhouse and Hearst as potential acquirers.

Fort Worth has a daily circulation of 267,875 and 337,525 on Sunday but faces increased competition from the Dallas Morning News, he said. Other properties are the Oakland Press in Pontiac, Michigan, and the Belleview News-Democrat in Belleville, Illinois.

Possible bidders include Gannett Corp., which recently paid $1.7 billion for Multimedia Inc., which owns TV stations and small newspapers. Others are Knight-Ridder Inc., the parent of the Philadelphia Inquirer; Tribune Co., which owns the Chicago Tribune; and Times-Mirror Co., parent of the Los Angeles Times.

Factory orders for durables fall in December

Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — A second straight decline in factory orders for durable goods in December helped trim the 1996 gain to the smallest in three years and further eased fears of an overheating economy.

"The latest economic data offer no support for the case that the U.S. economy is growing too fast," said economist Bruce Steinberg of Merrill Lynch & Co. "Clearly, the economy is not overheating."

The Commerce Department reported Wednesday that orders for durable goods — products such as aircraft and appliances expected to last more than three years — fell by an identical 1.7 percent in both November and December.

The December drop — the seventh during 1996 — contrasted with analysts' expectations of a 1.2 percent advance, and the revised November decline was even larger than the 1.5 percent decrease reported earlier.

As a result, orders for all of 1996 rose just 5.5 percent, down from 7.2 percent in 1995 and the smallest increase since a 5.4 percent gain in 1993. Orders totaled $2.03 trillion for the year, including a seasonally adjusted $169 billion in December.

Orders are a key gauge of the nation's manufacturing sector and declines could lead to slower production and fewer jobs.

Analysts said the report bolstered arguments against any economy-slowing interest rate hike when Federal Reserve policy-makers meet next week.

Previous data, including the government's labor cost report on Tuesday, have indicated that inflation remains under control without further curbs on the economy.

A sharp 12.6 percent drop in demand for electronic and other electrical equipment such as circuit boards and communications gear led the December decline. These orders had fallen 10.2 percent in November after rising 17.2 percent in October.

Also contributing to the decline were virtually flat transportation orders.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Consumers overloaded with personal finance advice

By Eric Tyson

Q: Everywhere I turn today — radio, television, the Internet, magazines and the newspaper — I am bombarded with financial advice and information. Why is everybody giving financial advice? What are the dangers in following it? How do I decide what to listen to and read?

Tyson

A: The fact that most everyone needs to figure out how to manage his or her personal finances has not gone unnoticed by the news media, so today's consumer of personal finance information faces overload.

With the tremendous increase in the coverage of personal finance issues, journalists are writing about increasingly technical money issues.

Some of the coverage provides helpful information and advice. Unfortunately, there is also some incorrect advice.

There is always a danger in journalists giving advice about subjects in which they themselves are not expert. In other fields such as medicine or law, we wouldn't be so willing to take advice from non-experts and the media would be more careful in dispensing it.

Many factors have contributed to the explosion in the media's coverage of financial information and advice. While jobs are plentiful for people with particular training and skills, fear of job loss and financial instability runs high these days.

Economic changes and widespread cynicism about the ability of Social Security to provide a reasonable income to baby boomers have caused many to seek financial-planning help. Ironically, the failure of the "financial planning" industry to meet the needs of those looking for help is one of the reasons why so many consumers seek financial information elsewhere.

The failure of the financial planning profession to provide overwhelmed people with objective, comprehensive help has been a godsend for financial publishers.

"The high attraction to books and computer programs is because consumers are worried about planners' agendas," says Barbara Roper, director of investor protection at the non-profit Consumer Federation of America. "Financial planning tends to be extremely sales-driven — which creates a substantial conflict of interest."

The inability to find objective financial help is all the more frustrating as individuals face increasingly complex choices. More employees are being forced to take responsibility for saving money for their retirement as well as deciding how to invest it.

Regardless of the issue to be tackled, the short length of newspaper and magazine articles can lead writers to oversimplify complex issues.

For example, articles horrify parents with the expected cost of a four-year college education. The typical advice: Start saving early so that you don't have to tell junior that you can't afford to send him to college.

Completely overlooked and ignored are the tax and financial-aid consequences of the recommended savings strategies. For example, if parents don't take advantage of tax-deductible retirement accounts and instead save their money outside of such accounts, they not only would pay more in taxes but their children would qualify for less financial aid.

Sound financial planning decisions require a holistic approach that acknowledges that people have limited money and must make carefully considered trade-offs.

So educate yourself and be selective. If you're considering subscribing to a financial publication, go to the library first and review some old issues. Was the information and advice useful and error-free? Shy away from publications that claim to prognosticate the future.

Start by evaluating advice in the areas that you know the most about.

Read bylines and biographies, and get to know writers' strengths and weaknesses.

Any writer or publisher can make mistakes. Some make many more than others

Furs come out of Hibernation

Newly affluent Chinese are embracing Western trappings of wealth, including jewelry, luxury cars and furs. As well, China is emerging as a leading fashion capital. Fur and fur-trimmed designs by famous-name designers are "hot" and are taking China by storm.

NEW YORK — China has emerged as a leading fashion capitol, as millions of newly affluent Chinese embrace Western trappings of wealth — jewelry, fine motor cars and furs can be seen in profusion from Shanghai to Beijing. Already, China is the second leading fashion market for textiles as well as furs and, according to the China Textiles Economic Research Centre, is expanding at a rate of 18 percent per year.

The urban Chinese, who have seen their average monthly incomes double in just two years, see luxury goods as a reward for their hard work; evidence of a new, free market mentality that is driving the current boom of the fur industry there. The Chinese fur industry, which has existed for 3,000 years, is "Westernizing," to capitalize on the tremendous interest in international fashion trends. This year there were many major fur fashion events in Chinese cities including a million dollar extravaganza staged by Saga Furs of Scandinavia in Beijing. Saga showcased the work of a dozen leading fashion designers from New York, Paris, Milan and Tokyo and threw the largest fashion show ever held in China. There were over 4,000 guests.

Fur and fur trim designs by such names a Karl Lagerfeld, Fendi, Yves Saint Laurent, among others, dazzled an audience of Chinese designers, manufacturers, press and VIP's. Most Chinese entrepreneurs are aware that fur is "hot" now in the West and that this fact will drive Chinese fur sales even higher in the months to come.

According to L. Boe Hansen, president of Saga, "China will soon be the largest fur consuming market in the world, so it's important that we continually inspire their consumers with the best in fashion design." Saga Furs of Scandinavia, the world's largest international marketing association, has been nurturing the fur industry in China since 1986, when it organized the first fur fashion show ever held there.

At that time, approximately two million Chinese consumers could afford a mink trimmed garment. Today, over 120 million Chinese consumers have the funds to purchase a fur. The Chinese fur industry is already leading the way in production, with over two-thirds of the world's fur garments being produced in their free trade zones.

The ever-expanding Chinese market, more fashion and luxury driven now than most mature Western markets, will continue to embrace and more importantly, help fuel, Western fashion trends.

In fashion, not all fur is intended to be worn for warmth

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

Not every woman who has a fur expects it to keep her warm.

Some have just enough to make them fashionable. There are fur-trimmed sweaters and cloth coats; mufflers to nuzzle the neck, collars to frame the face. Hats, cuffs and wraps.

Steve Gold, North American marketing director for Saga Furs of Scandinavia, says designers tell him that if they put fur trim on a garment, it sells.

Stephanie Kenyon, assistant executive director of the Fur Information Council in Washington, says that price is a factor. Fur is normally considered a luxury item, she says, and that means a limited market. So the industry reached beyond the well-heeled.

"Adding fur trim to a wardrobe, such as a stole, a scarf or a collar on a coat, is really appealing to a younger consumer who can't afford a full fur garment," Kenyon says.

It also creates interest, which the industry needed after several seasons of a clientele that seemed to be hibernating.

"Fur has been in and out of fashion since fashion was first fashion," Gold said in New York. And this year, he says what's in is fur trim. "We're seeing that fur stoles are also making a comeback, as are a variety of small fur pieces."

Michael Kors, who resumed designing fur this season for Polo Georgis, says women once again are ready for luxury. But he says they need something that will wake them up.

"One of the things I kept hearing is, 'I cannot find a fur coat or fur jacket that I don't feel matronly in, that isn't heavy, that is not so '80s in feeling,'" Kors says.

As a result they're snapping up what he calls "casual-minded versatility." One example is his fur-trimmed cashmere cardigan, which retailed for $1,500 to $2,500. "It can be thrown on with a pair of jeans," he says. "It's not so precious but is still very luxurious."

Kors says some of the appeal may be price, since many women today pay for their own fur, but he also believes that they're buying a look, not a long-term investment.

"She's not buying it thinking she's going to wear it for 40 years," he says. "I remember going with my mother to buy her firt mink coat. It was a major event. You'd get it remodeled every four years. That is so finished and so over."

Among the small fur pieces is an ascot, $1,500 in black or brown mink from Birger Christensen, which operates the fur salons at Saks Fifth Avenue stores.

"You wear it in place of a scarf," sales director Jack Pearson says. "The fur scarf seems to be very important, and the most important is worn like an ascot."

At 2 feet long and 6 inches wide, it slips through a slit to tie and, according to Pearson, "is almost like a piece of jewelry because it adorns the neck over the bare shoulder or neckline."

Furs of Fashion

SAGA Furs of Scandinavia staged a million dollar extravaganza style show in Beijing, China, this year catering to the revival of the popularity of furs. The show was presented in China due to the country's emergence as a leading fashion capital — it is the second leading fashion market for textiles as well as furs. The Chinese fur industry, which has existed for 3,000 years, is "Westernizing," to capitalize on the tremendous interest in international fashion trends. Shown here are three styles that were presented in the fur fashion show in Beijing. At right is a cream leather jacket with mahogany mink trim by Byron Lars. Below left, this red sheared mink short coat is by Hanae Mori. Below right is a broadtail and black-dyed fox jacket by Jean-Louis Scherrer.

It appears tide has turned on anti-fur people

By Rowland Nethaway
N.Y. Times News Service

You can only push rich women so far. Beyond that point, rich women throw on their mink coats, sable stoles or fox jackets and go shopping, which is how rich women flip off people who push them too far.

No less an authority than the New York Times, which prints all the news that fits, reports that rich women fed up with animal-rights, fur-protesting tormentors are fighting back by packing the sidewalks along Fifth and Madison avenues with sisters of the fur.

"All my friends have started wearing fur again," Joy Rosenthal, the president of a jewelry concern, told Carol Lawson of The Times. Rosenthal said she used to be "a little afraid" after being hassled by fur protesters on Fifth Avenue. Now Rosenthal says she wears her three sable coats and a red mink coat "daringly — I don't care."

I'll daringly say that I don't care, either. I'm on the side of the rich women because they don't go around shouting at people.

It appears that the tide has turned against the anti-fur, animal-rights people who picket, curse and hurl jars of blood or red paint in an attempt to intimidate women into not wearing animal furs.

In a backlash against the politically correct fascists, the Fur Salon at Saks Fifth Avenue reports that business has tripled over the same period last year. The Fur Information Council reports that business is brisk. Upscale stores are expanding their fur salons. They all sense that the actions of intolerant animal-rights extremists have boomeranged.

The animal rights group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals maintains that the only practical accessory for a fur coat these days is earplugs, which must portend a continued shouting campaign against women in fur coats.

In the pursuit of gender equity, anti-fur activists need to give equal abuse to men who wear fur coats, nearly all of whom are professional wrestlers, football players and heavily armed anti-government survivalists.

It's not clear to me what the difference is between wearing a leather coat with the hair removed and a leather coat with the hair still attached. What is it about hair that offends the anti-fur militants?

Would it be equally offensive if manufacturers left the animal's hair on the hides used to make baseballs, footballs, soccer balls, belts, car seats, saddles, shoes and Madonna's underwear?

If not politically incorrect, I concede that an unmatched pair of brown and white Guernsey shoes might be socially incorrect on formal occasions.

Perhaps anti-fur activists only oppose animal hair products when the hair is soft and luxurious. If not that, perhaps the fur protesters would feel better if women wore full-length mink coats with all the hair removed. Would leather coats made of mink, sable and fox hides with no hair be politically correct?

Americans long ago stopped making fur coats out of wild, endangered animals. The minks, sables, fox, fishers and such used for today's fur coats now are raised on farms the same as cows, pigs, sheep, horses and such.

When anti-fur activists protest rich women who wear beautiful coats made of mink hides and they do not protest manual laborers who wear work boots made of cow hides, they must be protesting the fact that people eat the cows raised on farms and they don't eat the minks raised on farms.

My solution to stop all the protests and hard feelings is to introduce low-fat mink burgers at McDonald's. Tasty Omaha fox-kebobs at the next neighborhood barbecue would be a hit. "Good Morning America" should show viewers how to prepare chinchillas over wild rice.

There you have it. Problem solved.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem and need your advice. My husband wants me to lie to his parents, and I would feel uncomfortable in this lie. He says this "white" lie is necessary if we are to maintain a harmonious relationship with them. We don't see them often, so perpetuating the lie would not be too difficult, but I feel guilty about it just the same, and I wonder if the web of deceit we are weaving will entangle us one day.

Van Buren

We have been attending a church that is not the same faith as my in-laws. If they knew it, they would be very hurt — especially since they want their grandchildren to grow up in their faith.

Both churches are Christian churches, and there are more similarities than differences. Because of these similarities, I think my in-laws would get over our attending this church if they knew; my husband disagrees.

I like this church, especially the programs for our children. My husband, however, feels a loyalty to the religion in which he was raised. Because of this ambiguity, he does not want to tell his parents because they might believe he has abandoned his faith, which would not be entirely true.

Abby, do you think it would be OK to tell a lie if it prevents hurt feelings and friction within the family? My husband thinks so. — ANYTOWN, U.S.A.

DEAR ANYTOWN: You and your husband are adults and should not feel it is necessary to lie to his parents for any reason. "Oh, what a tangled web we weave when first we practice to deceive!" (Sir Walter Scott)

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend and I recently bought a house together. We share all the cooking and cleaning. Prior to "us," he was living with a girl for 10 years, and I was married for 15 years.

His former girlfriend was completely domestic, and I'm totally the opposite. I'm a successful small-business owner with a very busy schedule.

Recently he asked me to hem a pair of his work pants. I said that I'd have my seamstress do it, but it would cost $5. He refused to pay for it, saying his former girlfriend would be happy to do it for nothing.

I am furious! I'd rather pay $100 than allow her to think she's taking care of my man's needs. He refuses to fight over this and is ordering a new pair of pants. What should I do? — SUZIE IN CANADA

DEAR SUZIE: When the new pants arrive, if they solve the problem — give him a hug. However, if they don't solve the problem, don't needle him. Since sewing is not one of your many talents, when the new pants arrive, quietly take them to your seamstress. Five dollars is a small price to pay to let sleeping dogs lie.

DEAR ABBY: I hope "A True Friend" reconsiders trying to help her friend who wears heavy makeup by telling her about it "for her own good."

I have an attractive, intelligent friend who also wears very heavy makeup. I had often wondered why she didn't realize that the shade was too dark and was applied a little too thick, but thank God, I was never so bold as to mention it to her.

One afternoon I went to her home unannounced, and she came to the door without makeup. Much to my surprise, she had a bright-red port-wine birthmark that covered half her face.

Abby, instead of suggesting that they go together for a professional makeup to learn the "latest tricks," your suggestion to accept her for the inner qualities that make her special would have been sufficient ... and is darn good advice for all of us. — A TRUE FRIEND, TOO

DEAR ABBY: I have read your column for many years, but this is the first time to write.

When my mother was getting old and in poor health, I would see friends of hers and they would say, "I would call your mother, but I'm afraid she might be sleeping or resting." Abby, that is not the way she wanted it to be.

Now that I am getting old, my greatest joy is for someone to visit or call me. Wake me up! I have plenty of time to sleep. Please call me any time of day or night — early or late. Just call me. It would make my day. — WAITING FOR A CALL IN TUCSON, ARIZ.

DEAR WAITING: I can think of few things as depressing as isolation. Stop waiting for your phone to ring and make some calls to others. You don't say how old you are, or the condition of your health, but if you're able to leave your dwelling, a wonderful way to meet people and stay involved is to volunteer your time for a worthwhile cause. Please consider it.
