In good race, MC places second

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

HUTCHINSON, Kan. — Second place was not what Midland College was playing for. But for players and fans alike, this year's runner-up finish in the National Junior College basketball tournament will only make them try harder next year.

Southern Idaho ended the Chaps' championship dreams with a dramatic 69-68 victory Saturday at the Hutchinson Sports Arena, but only for this year.

Midland College was aiming for its second NJCAA championship. The Chaps and Coach Jerry Stone won the title in 1982.

"It's disappointing, but we're going to come back and have a great team next year," said reserve forward Matt Sears, a Midland High graduate.

Many of the Midlanders among the 7,800 in attendance echoed Sears' sentiments — and there were many Chaparral fans on hand.

The Green and Gold faithful began the trek to this basketball-crazed community early in the week, just as the Chaparrals began their march to the title game. About 50 or 60 Chap fans have spent the entire week here, but by week's end more than 200 Midlanders had made the 12-hour trip.

And after Midland's upset of No. 1 ranked and undefeated San Jacinto on Wednesday, the hordes of Chap boosters smelled a championship.

But despite the second place finish, most of the MC fans had only good things to say about the Chaparral fans and their season.

Carter expects Syrian help to free hostages

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter said Saturday he expects the Syrian government to share information with the United States on the fate of American hostages in Lebanon and to exert influence to free them.

Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, are on a private five-nation tour of the Middle East and North Africa. The Carters, who will spend three days in Syria, were greeted at the airport by Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa.

Carter said he was pleased to be accorded such a warm welcome, but added that he was "not a representative of the United States government."

He said he expected to discuss "every conceivable subject" when he meets Sunday with President Hafez Assad. It was Carter's second visit to Damascus since he handed over the presidency to Ronald Reagan in 1981.

"We do not have an agenda," Carter said of his talks with Assad. "I've always had in past meetings a very frank and thorough analysis of issues. We've discussed worldwide problems, bilateral relations and issues of that kind."

Asked if he would officially request Syrian intervention on behalf of the eight Americans held in Lebanon, Carter said: "No, I have no official role to play at all."

However, turning to al-Sharaa, seated next to him in the airport's VIP lounge, Carter added: "When and if there's information or influence that can be exerted, please do so, and I expect this to be the case."

"Of course my prayer is that all the American hostages will be afe and will soon be released. These are innocent people of any crime against anyone...and I know in the past when information has been available, it's been shared with our country," he said.

Before leaving Cairo, Egypt, for Syria on Saturday, Carter told reporters that he would seek Assad's help in freeing the hostages.

"I am not here carrying any message from my government...but I'll certainly urge President Assad, if and when he has any information about the hostages, to add his influence to seek their release."

Twenty-four foreigners, including the eight Americans, are missing in Lebanon and are believed held by various underground groups. Also missing is Anglican Church hostage negotiator Terry Waite.

During Carter's presidency, 52 Americans were held hostage by the fundamentalist revolutionary government of Iran for 444 days. The issue plagued his failed candidacy for re-election.

Once in Syria, Carter again criticized Reagan's Middle East policy, saying that when he was president, the Arab-Israeli conflict was a "constant high priority."

"I don't think that level of emphasis has been apparent in the past six years. Obviously, the current administration is ready to move when an opportunity arises, but it hasn't taken a leadership role," he said.

Florida man's $1.3 million will meet Roberts' goal

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Oral Roberts, facing what he calls a deadline from God to raise $8 million by March 31 or die, said he planned to fast and pray for the remaining money, but a Florida man says he'll donate final $1.3 million.

Jerry Collins, who owns two greyhound racing tracks, signed a personal check to Roberts on Saturday morning at his office at the Sanford-Orlando Kennel Club, said publicist Phil Denis.

"He saw a story in the Orlando Sentinel this morning out of Tulsa saying Roberts was $1.3 million short of his goal and he was going to retreat to a prayer tower and fast until he raised the money," Denis said. "He was touched by it. He gave me one of his personal checks and said to make it out for $1.3 million."

The track publicist said he spoke with Oral Roberts' son, Richard, Saturday afternoon.

"Richard said he will be flying in first thing tomorrow," Denis said. "We've set up a luncheon meeting to actually hand over the check."

"I don't think religion enters into this," he said. "It's the education thing."

Collins, of Sarasota, was away from his office and unavailable for comment Saturday, Denis said.

He has given money in the past for educational causes. Several years ago, he bought the Clyde Beatty-Cole Brothers Circus and donated it to Florida State University. Recently he helped New College, an alternative school in Sarasota, pay for a $1 million new library.

No one from Roberts' organization could immediately be reached for comment on Collins' donation. Telephone calls Saturday afternoon to Roberts spokeswoman Jan Dargatz were answered by a recording that said the evangelist would have no comment on the situation until April 1.

Earlier Saturday, university officials prepared to close the gleaming 200-foot tower to the public and promised to keep the media away from the 69-year-old Roberts during what is expected to be a weeklong series of visits to the tower.

The pioneer television evangelist has been at the center of controversy since he said on his national television program Jan. 4 that God told him his life would end at the close of March if the money for medical missionary scholarships is not raised by then. At that time, he said he was $4.5 million from the goal.

It was in March a year ago Roberts first said that God had given him one year to raise the money for scholarships so Oral Roberts University medical school graduates could afford to be missionaries in Third World countries.

Week will spotlight oil industry

From Staff Reports

Today marks the opening of the first-ever Energy Appreciation Week — a seven-day celebration to turn around the negative attitudes hindering progress in the Permian Basin.

Sponsored by the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, Energy Appreciation Week will highlight the numerous and varied contributions of the petroleum industry and its economic impact on West Texas and southeast New Mexico.

"Many of the continuing economic woes of the oil patch are the result of a negative attitude problem," according to Charles Perry, president of the PBPA.

The Odessa oilman, who heads the 1,400-member petroleum association representing independent oilmen in the Permian Basin of West Texas and Southeast New Mexico, said statistical analysis of rig counts and oil prices show that the rig count should be much higher than it is.

"With oil prices averaging around $15, the nationwide rig count should be around 1,400 instead of 800 where it now stands. This indicates to me that we have had a negative over-reaction to the situation, and it is time we started looking up, and let the rest of the country know that this is one oil-producing area that isn't gonna take it lying down any longer."

Water park now 'eyesore, nuisance'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A trip to the once-teeming Wild River Canyon water park unmasks an ugly sight splotched with graffiti-covered, rotten timbers. It has become filled with bicyclists and skateboarders, and periodically, fire engines.

The park, just east of Loop 250 and south of Andrews Highway, has fallen victim to legal disputes involving the owner, T. June Melton, the First National Bank of Midland (now RepublicBank First National), and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The park has become an eyesore and a nuisance, and it may be left untouched as long as the legal battle continues, according to those involved.

The first sight at the park is the trio of ticket windows, covered with graffiti. The entrance is not blocked, and any "no trespassing" signs have disappeared or been torn down.

Across a covered gangway, the main building is littered with pieces of burned timber and bits of sheetrock. Nearly a fourth of the roof is gone, and floor is matted with insulation.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Wild River Canyon, once a popular recreational spot in Midland, has been heavily damaged by vandals in recent times. Officials say until the case is handled through litigation, not much can be done to improve the situation.

Midland Fire Chief James Roberts remembers the park's closing, and the aftermath.

"The thing was in good shape, and they just closed it down one day," Roberts said. "Shortly after that time, we started getting calls. After we started going out there, it would just shock you the things that were torn up and vandalized. Boats, different equipment, concessions, everything.

"It was really pitiful."

Roberts said the department is called to Wild River "sporadically" to put out fires, usually at night and usually set by juveniles. He said none of the fires so far have been serious, but he is concerned.

"The (main building) is made out of concrete tile and has poured concrete between the first and second floor, but on top are wood rafters, and if fire ever gets up there, it is going to destroy it," he said.

Roberts said firefighters are careful when fighting a fire there.

"We are very careful about sending people into a structure like that," he said. "We go in and put it out, sure, but we take the time and examine the structure before we go in."

Roberts said he has discussed the situation with Melton and the FDIC, but he said he was told nothing will happen as long as litigation continues.

Midland Police Chief Richard Czech said no calls for service at the old park have been received since last August. In 1985, only five calls were received, he said, and in 1984, officers answered "bunches" of calls.

Is intrastate trucking deregulation just around bend?

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — With broad-based support from farmers, wholesalers, small business and others, legislation to ease regulations on intrastate trucking may be just around the bend.

Supporters say the strong backing, which includes numerous Texas chambers of commerce, and the dismal state of the economy could convince lawmakers this time around that partial deregulation of the state's trucking industry will spur competition, lower costs to consumers and promote some badly needed economic development.

"The ultimate benefit would be lower rates, more competition and more service to all of Texas," says Kent Caperton, D-Bryan and sponsor of the proposal in the Senate. "I think it would be a good economic development issue."

The Texas Railroad Commission has regulated intrastate trucking — trucking within the state's borders — since 1929. The issue of trucking deregulation has been kicked around the Legislature for as long as anyone can remember, and the farthest any proposed legislation has traveled appears to be to a House floor debate.

But a formidable opponent, the 700-member Texas Motor Transportation Association, is packing some powerful guns to again try to shoot down legislation aimed at establishing a maximum rate under which truckers can do business.

SMU trustees say they had 'no choice' but to scrap board

DALLAS (AP) — For most of its 75 years, Southern Methodist University has been run by the big guns in Dallas' business and social circles.

But after an explosive backfire sparked by a pay-for-players scandal in the school's football program, the way things are run there are undergoing a profound change that is dismantling the old network of power.

The school's Board of Trustees voted Friday to scrap the Board of Governors, saying that smaller, more elite group suffered from a crisis in credibility that would only continue to hurt the Southwest Conference school.

The trustees said they had no choice after Gov. Bill Clements startled the state by claiming that at least half of the 21 Board of Governors knew about improper payments to SMU football players and decided to phase them out gradually instead of stopping them cold.

The 71-member Board of Trustees decided to replace the governors board with an interim executive committee whose roster doesn't include most of the high-power names caught up in the messy melee.

Absent from the list are some of the university's most prominent backers whose financial contributions are symbolized in buildings at the university that bear their names — Edwin L. Cox, Robert Dedman, Ruth Collins Sharp, George M. Underwood Jr.

"A few months ago I was really skeptical about the leadership," student body president Trevor Pearlman said Friday. But "the good ol' boy network I think that has existed in the past has been dealt with."

STATE

The recommendations represent a shift of power to the trustees who in the past have virtually abdicated their power to the smaller board, said the Rev. Leighton Farrell, chairman of SMU's Committee on Governance and a United Methodist pastor.

"We wanted to send a clear signal that the board of trustees is the group charged with the responsibility," Farrell said. "It will be a more powerful group. The executive committee simply acts at the direction of the board of trustees."

Dennis E. Murphree of Houston, a trustee who was named to the interim committee, called the new group "younger and more diverse."

"This executive committee is a completely different animal from what it was," he said. "I'm real bullish on the future of the school."

The old Board of Governors had served as an executive committee of the Board of Trustees, which runs the university. SMU is owned by the United Methodist Church.

The replacement interim committee will serve until the trustees meet May 8 to consider a permanent restructuring plan, which is expected to include a permanent executive committee of 12 voting members, with the presidents of the student body and alumni association serving as non-voting members.

On Feb. 25, the NCAA abolished football at SMU in 1987 because of a booster slush fund that paid $61,000 to 13 players after the school was placed on its sixth probation in August 1985.

Clements, who resigned as chairman of the Board of Governors before taking office in January, revealed March 3 that he and several other board members knew of the payments.

The ensuing controversy led to the plan adopted Friday that Farrell said would also reduce the number of trustees to 41 — 36 elected members, SMU's provost and the presidents of the university, faculty senate, student body and alumni association.

The trustees would meet every other month, leaving day-to-day administrative duties to the university president.

Verdict may change how wills executed

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Returning a verdict that could dramatically change how wills are administered in Texas, a probate court jury sided with a San Antonio widow who sued the executors of her husband's $34 million estate for negligence.

Although exact damages have not been tabulated, it is estimated Emma Elizabeth Willeford, 57, widow of San Antonio developer B.R. Willeford, will recover between $14 million and $20 million if the jury's findings are upheld.

The jury found negligence on the part of the San Antonio law firm that drew up the will, provided one of the executors and acted as attorney for the estate, Austin attorney Frank Ikard said.

Lawyers said the case's most significant feature was a ruling by Probate Judge Keith Burris that an exculpatory clause, standard in Texas wills to shield executors from liability, does not provide legal protection.

"This is the first case where a judge has said that an exculpatory clause is just not valid to protect the executor of a will from being sued for charges of liability," Ikard said.

Ikard's assessment was confirmed by an opponent in the case.

"If the judge is correct, potentially this will wreak havoc on the practice of probate law," said Ralph Langley, a member of Foster, Lewis, Langley, Gardner and Banack, the law firm sued by Willeford.

"Nobody is going to serve — banks, trust companies or individuals. Would you, if every time you made a move, sold a property or collected a debt, you knew you might be sued for negligence?" Langley asked.

A judgment will not be entered until Burris rules on the verdict that was returned Friday. He has authority to accept it, modify it or throw it out and set a different judgment.

The case, filed in 1985, pitted Mrs. Willeford against one of San Antonio's most respected law firms and the two executors of her husband's estate, Jim Willingham, who practices with Langley's firm, and David Bynum, one of her husband's ex-partners.

In finding for Mrs. Willeford on all points, the jury determined the defendants had been negligent in how they drafted the will, selected its executors and administered the estate.

Central to Mrs. Willeford's case were allegations of conflicts of interest among the defendants. The law firm, for example, was accused not only of drafting the will and then acting as attorney for the estate but also of naming one of its members as an executor.

The suit did not accuse any of the defendants of stealing assets of the estate, but alleged they violated their fiduciary duties in protecting Willeford's interests.

She sought actual damages of $6 million.

According to the will, Mrs. Willeford was to be paid income from the estate as long as she lived. She said she decided to sue because she suspected she wasn't getting her due.

"I felt I wasn't getting a fair deal from the trustees taking care of the estate. At the time my husband drew up his will, he wanted me to trust them but they let me down," she said.

Prison system to get relief soon

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The Texas prison system, closed eight times this year because of overcrowding, should get some relief soon, a prison official said.

Meanwhile, state officials have declined to trigger emergency declarations that would have speeded up paroles and enabled the Texas Department of Corrections to accept convicts for longer periods. The prison system has been operating under an open-shut cycle of being open two days and closed five.

"There's a whole series of things that hopefully will come together in the near future to help get us out of this cycle," John Byrd, executive director of the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles, said Friday.

He said the overcrowded conditions will ease between now and the end of this fiscal year with the addition of 800 beds to the prison's legal capacity and the budgeting of $4 million to develop another 1,000 pre-release transfer beds, which should be available by Aug. 31.

Budgeted construction also calls for trusty camps for 2,000 convicts and a new 2,550-inmate prison at Palestine, Byrd said.

The prison system is required by state law and a federal court order to keep its population below 95 percent of capacity.

Transforming politician into statesman 'slow'

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

Levine

AUSTIN — The big dictionary next to my desk defines a "statesman" as someone who "shows wisdom and skill in conducting state affairs and treating public issues," whereas a "politician" is merely "a person holding or seeking political office."

Sometimes it takes a heavy dose of reality to convert a Texas politician into a statesman. That transformation tends to come in painfully slow increments.

In a back hallway of the state House of Representatives Wednesday, we saw one small step in the process for Speaker Gib Lewis. Commenting on the precarious state of the Texas budget, Lewis pulled back a bit in support of a constitutional ban on state income taxes but held firm in his dislike for the tax itself.

"Personally I'm opposed to it, but at the same time I realize I have a certain degree of responsiblity in keeping this state going," Lewis told a gaggle of reporters. "It may be a change, it's certainly a softening in my position, you may say.

"Sometimes reality makes you soften those positions." Hooray for reality.

Reality in this case is a state revenue stream dammed by the economic downturn to the degree that it flows about $3.1 billion shy of maintaining current state services. It'd take another $400 million just to bring higher education appropriations back to 1985 — that's 1985 — levels and do something about our unconstitutional prison system in 1988 and 1989.

The Legislature is rapidly running out of options. It can accept a short-sighted reduction in state services. It can further burden the poor and middle class by boosting the regressive sales tax or forcing cities, schools and counties to raise property taxes. It can prey on those who can least afford it by going into the gambling business — read "lottery" here.

Or it can take the logical step of creating a revenue stream that will better track economic activity in the state and provide the resources necessary to do its job. Comptroller Bob Bullock estimates that replacing the corporate franchise tax with a 7-percent corporate profits tax would bring in $1.6 billion over the 88-89 budget cycle. He says a graduated 2- to 4-percent personal income tax would raise $4.6 billion.

That's enough to allow lawmakers to reduce the sales tax rate or finance economic development plans or improve its shameless record of caring for those Texans who truly need it.

Earlier this year, the "liberally oriented" Citizens for Tax Justice released a report that placed Texas among "the 10 very worst states, where the middle class are taxed at twice the rate of the rich,...where the very poor pay five times as much of their income in state and local taxes as do the rich."

Let's put that in some hard numbers. If your family of four earns $10,000 a year, you pay 1.49 percent of your income on state sales taxes. With a $24,000 annual income, the figure falls to 1.1 percent. With $100,000 coming in per year, you give up 0.58 percent to the tax that supplies about 46 percent of the state's tax collections.

OK, so it's not going to happen this session. It'd never make it past Gib, let alone Governor Bill. But folks who several years ago considered "the I word" on par with a friendly tornado are starting to come around. One state rep is talking about using the income tax to eliminate local school property tax. One senator admits it would be political suicide, but he's thought about it enough to figure out what the tax form would look like.

Last year's federal tax reform package added a bit of impetus that might bring along those who would have to pay the most through a state income tax. Taxpayers who itemize deductions — that's usually the richer — no longer may write off state sales taxes. They can pick up that deduction for state income taxes though.

"I think it's going to take a few years to sell personal income tax to the citizens of this state," Lewis said. "I think the political implications of the thing is one reason....

"You have to be responsible sometime in your life."

Bishops meet with Pope to discuss upcoming visit

DALLAS (AP) — Catholic bishops in Texas say they hope that Pope John Paul II will project the image of a loving shepherd as well as that of disciplinarian and teacher when he visits the United States.

Bishops from nine cities on the tour, which includes San Antonio, are meeting with the Pope and other Vatican officials this week to discuss the visit.

The meeting follows the March 10 document issued by the Vatican condemning most forms of scientific intervention in human reproduction and the crackdown last year on Seattle Archbishop Raymond Hunthausen and theologian Charles Curran for liberal teachings.

Archbishop Patrick Flores, the San Antonio-based spiritual leader of Texas Catholics, is among those meeting in Rome.

Some Texas bishops said the pope has had an image of a disciplinarian and teacher in recent months and they hope that he will project the compassionate side of his papacy during his visit in September.

"The church has many faces," said Bishop Leroy Matthiesen of Amarillo, "and right now it's choosing to present a face of a very authoritative teacher. We need that. But that's not the only face of the church."

Matthiesen noted that John Paul reached out to children and people in wheelchairs during his 1979 visit to the United States. He said this visit also needs to project the nurturing aspect of the church.

STATE IN BRIEF

TI to build 'major' plant

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Instruments will start construction next month on a major defense electronics plant north of Denton that will employ as many as 1,500 people, officials said.

Military electronic products will be the focus of the 380,000-square-foot plant, TI Senior Vice President Jim Houlditch said Friday.

When the facility starts production in late 1988, between 600 and 700 people will be employed there. That number will increase to between 1,000 and 1,500 the first two years the Denton plant is open, Houlditch said.

Most of the plant's initial work force will come from TI's plant in Lewisville, which employs about 4,200 people, Houlditch said. Those moved to Denton would be replaced with new hires at Lewisville, he said. The company has about 34,000 employees in North Texas and about 78,000 worldwide.

The new plant will be built near Interstate 35 and U.S. 77 on 193 acres Texas Instruments has owned since 1979.

976 numbers charged

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Southwestern Bell has launched an ad campaign to remind customers they will be charged when they dial special services such as sports scores, horoscope information or dial-a-joke.

The newspaper and radio ads begin Sunday and will explain that each of the phone numbers for the services have a 976 prefix.

Southwestern Bell spokesman Marco Gilliam said Friday the company ran an ad campaign informing customers of the costs when the popular services were introduced last November. However, he said, many people have not gotten the message.

The state Public Utility Commission permits Southwestern Bell to lease a 976 number to a company that provides a tape-recorded information service such as sports scores, Gilliam said.

Southwestern Bell charges the company approximately 15 cents for each call, but bills the caller a price determined by the company. The price can range from several cents to $5.

Farm loan interest to fall

AUSTIN (AP) — Interest rates on long-term farm and ranch related loans will be reduced in June, the Federal Land Bank annonunced.

Don Rogge, president of the Federal Land Bank of Texas announced the rate change Friday at the bank's annual meeting of 500 delegates representing 100,000 Texas farmers and ranchers.

New variable rates will be 10.25 percent on farm and ranch loans and 10.50 percent on rural residence loans and farm related business loans, Rogge said.

Rogge also announced a new loan program the Federal Land Bank hopes to start in the next 60 days. The program would offer lower interest rates for loans to buy rural real estate.

The Federal land bank makes loans for 35-year terms. The new program would provide a fixed rate for the first 10 years of the loan, the land bank said in a news release. The rate will be set at about 8⅞ percent and will only be available for a limited time, Rogge said.

Brownsville shaken by city indictments

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Government officials in this Texas border city are reeling from a spate of indictments within their ranks that some say has left city hall paralyzed.

An investigation into the awarding of a lucrative garbage contract prompted indictments last week to accompany ones handed down in January and February against two-term Mayor Emilio Hernandez.

Also indicted are a city commissioner, a present and former administrator, two employees of the transit system and the municipal judge.

The Texas Rangers have carted off volumes of records from most city departments to investigate the possibility of irregular bidding practices.

The mayor, up for re-election this fall, claims the investigation is politically motivated and he says it only adds to the troubles of a city burdened by a faltering economy.

"The city is paralyzed because no one knows who will be indicted next," says Rey Cantu, Hernandez' lawyer and a former district attorney. "A member of the opposition is calling the city gleefully, saying, 'You're going to be indicted next.'"

Acting City Manager Steve Fitzgibbons disagrees.

"Since Jan. 1, I have been acting city manager and I am very pleased with all the progress the city has made in a number of areas," he said. "The city has made some good moves and I'm confident that the movement will continue to get better."

He said most employees aren't afraid of being the grand jury's next victim but realize "we have quite a challenge in front of us and there has to be one heck of an effort put out."

Texas Ranger Rudy Rodriguez says he and two other Rangers have "seized records from just about every department we've investigated."

"We have to deal with a lot of records in this type of investigation. It's not like working a homicide or a robbery, when a person goes into a store and robs it," Rodriguez said. "This type of crime is committed and concealed with paper."

Rangers have taken records that go back to 1978 — records that employees of the Brownsville Public Utilities Board rely on regularly, says utilities general manager Bill Towers.

Robert Preston and Shirley Jones appear in a scene from "The Music Man."

'Music Man' Preston dies of lung cancer

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — Robert Preston, the fast-talking song and dance professor who conned small town River City in "The Music Man," died Saturday of lung cancer. He was 68.

Preston had been ill for some time, and died around 4 p.m. at Santa Barbara Cottage Hospital, said nursing supervisor Lisa Stotser.

Preston was born Robert Preston Meservey in Newton Highlands, Mass., on June 8, 1918, and moved to California during his childhood. After high school he joined a repertory company headed by Tyrone Power's mother and took part in 42 productions before being signed by Paramount Pictures at the age of 19.

Preston proved his gift for comedy in Broadway revivals of "Twentieth Century" and "The Male Animal" before his biggest hit as the fast-talking band instrument salesman who cons River City in "The Music Man."

That role earned him a Tony and cinched the 1962 film role for him.

Preston also starred in several other films, including "How the West Was Won," "Mame" and "Victor-Victoria."

In her review of "Victor-Victoria," noted film critic Pauline Kael wrote: "Preston, with his thick, curly mane and his broad smile, brings an unholy glee to his work. He has often been the best thing in a movie."

"He had lung cancer, he has been ill for several months," said John Springer, Preston's longtime publicist, in a telephone interview from New York.

Though he had appeared in more than 30 films since "King of Alcatraz" in 1938 and numerous stage productions, it was the role of Professor Harold Hill that was the enduring classic.

On Broadway, "The Music Man" closed only after 1,375 performances.

"If you're going to do the film version of 'Music Man,' you get the best Harold Hill," Preston said in a 1961 interview with The Associated Press as he prepared to do the movie with Shirley Jones and Buddy Hackett. "At this late date, there's nobody who can do it better than I can. The role is a part of me, and I'm a part of the role."

Preston's last regular movie role was as a sort of intergalactic talent scout in "The Last Starfighter."

DEATHS

Hester Stegall Stilwell

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Hester Stegall Stilwell, 96, of Phoenix, formerly of Midland, died Friday after a long illness.

Mrs. Stilwell was one of the very earliest settlers in Midland County. She was preceded in death by her husband, Henry Stilwell and two sons, Linley and James Stilwell.

Survivors include seven grandchildren.

Richard Horchler

Memorial services are pending for Richard Horchler of Midland who died Saturday at a local hospital.

Local arrangements are being handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

Horchler was born Jan. 4, 1938, in Lexington, Ohio, where he was reared. He graduated from Ohio State University with a B.S. degree in petroleum engineering. He married Kaye Bryant Aug. 10, 1968, in Lubbock. They lived in Houston for three years before moving to Midland in 1971. He had worked for Texaco since 1960 and was in charge of the computer division at the Midland location.

Survivors include his wife; one son, Jonathan Horchler of the home; two daughters, Marcie Horchler and Kimberly Horchler, both of the home; and several aunts and uncles.

The family requests memorials be directed to the Arthritis Foundation.

TRUCKING

Deregulation of intrastate trucking would actually increase the total cost of moving goods, hurt rural areas and benefit only a small group of large shippers, who would have the muscle to corner the market and dictate rates and levels of service, claims the association, whose supporters include small shippers and the Teamsters union.

"Trucking deregulation could have a direct and adverse affect on the Texas economy," says David Huff of the Graduate School of Business at the University of Texas at Austin. "Freight costs would increase for hundreds of thousands of small Texas businesses on whom the overall Texas economy depends."

Huff says federal deregulation of interstate trucking in 1980 has led to increased monopolies, not more competition, and that that also would occur on the state level. A dropoff of vehicle maintenance typically occurs in an unregulated industry, creating unsafe conditions on the roads, says Huff, who the TMTA hired to do a study on trucking deregulation.

Rep. Bill Hammond, R-Dallas and sponsor of the bill in the House, feels the opposition's presence.

"This is their bread and butter," Hammond says. "They are a strong, well-organized, powerful lobby that has been around a long time.

"But I think we can override them."

Hammond says companies are either leaving Texas or choosing not to locate in the state because of artificially high freight charges. For example, he says, a company that produces feed and grain products can send a shipment from Dallas to Houston at a rate of $21.18. A competitor in Ardmore, Okla., a small town north of Dallas 38 miles from the Texas border, can transport the same shipment to Houston for $14.

Hammond's bill was sent to a subcommittee after the House Committee on Transportation heard more than six hours of testimony in a jam-packed public hearing Tuesday night.

The trick, he says, will be to get the bill out of committee.

"I think the committee looks good at this time, although it is not certain," Hammond says. "I think we have the votes on the floor. I think we are in better shape on the floor than in the committee."

The bill is faring better across the rotunda, where the Senate State Affairs Committee approved the proposal and sent it to the Senate floor following another lengthy hearing Wednesday evening.

Bill sponsor Caperton says support in the Senate is growing. "I think we can get the votes," he says. "I don't think we are there today, but I think we can get them."

Caperton says the current bill presents a better case for deregulation than previous legislative attempts. "It's a very limited bill that simply opens the door to competition," he says.

The proposal has gained the support of the governor's office. "I am going to support deregulation of trucking," Gov. Bill Clements said Tuesday. "Because I think that (trucking regulations are) impacting on our economic well-being in the state."

Rumors of a compromise, supported by Clements and House Speaker Gib Lewis, are premature, both sides say. Several informal meetings have taken place in the past month between the trucking industry's TMTA and the Texas Association to Improve Distribution, or TEX-AID, which represents shippers.

"We have had some discussions on it, but they never have reached the negotiations stage," says TMTA President Robert Floyd. "The possibility of a compromise exists, but we still have a lot to go. We're still quite far apart."

Ed Emmett, executive director of TEX-AID, says the two sides have made some progress, but "I hesitate to say that we are close to a compromise." He says the talks are "beyond the exploratory stage, but not yet to the final stage."

Emmett said supporters of the bill already have compromised by leaving intact the Railroad Commission's authority to regulate a trucker's entry into the Texas market. Current law requires a trucker to obtain a certificate by proving that the market he wants to enter is not being adequately served.

Another provision in the bill intended to ease the opposition outlaws predatory pricing; the practice in which a large shipper could lower its prices below costs until it drives smaller competitors out of business.

But Floyd says that provision doesn't go far enough.

"Deregulation is a ploy by some of the state's largest shippers to gain economic advantage at the expense of smaller business people," Floyd says.

"Such a (deregulated) rate structure would benefit large shippers alone. They would be able to negotiate special and discriminatory rates based on their frequency and volume of shipments," he says.

VANDALS

Melton said the park was opened in early 1980, and was operated through 1982.

"At the beginning of the '82 season, our problem with First National Bank developed," he said. "We filed a suit against the bank; due to the legal hassles that took place, we completed the season, but found it impossible to spring any money loose for repair and upkeep."

Melton said in 1983, he tried to sell some of the park's equipment, but was unable to get the bank's cooperation, he said.

Melton said the suit was filed because of a dispute over the financing of the park.

Melton, a consulting engineer who moved from Midland to Austin in 1984, said he is aware the park has become a nuisance.

"I'm aware of the vandalism problem out there," he said. "And it makes me sick.

"We have found it extremely difficult to work with the FDIC, not because they are a group of bad people, but because of the ongoing litigation."

Melton said the suit against FNB is pending at the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, and he said it is likely the Supreme Court will be asked to review the case.

"The problem is these appeals will probably drag on for many years," he said. "And that makes it virtually impossible to do anything."

Melton said he has not seen the dilapidated park for a year.

"Let me say this: I think I am in a position right now to say that if it is becoming this much of a nuisance, then something should be done.

"We can't afford to have anyone hurt out there. If it has deteriorated to the point that it is dangerous, then I feel like that part of it should be demolished."

If the litigation ever winds up, Melton said he would like to re-open the park.

An official with the FDIC in Midland who asked not to be identified said the government has a lien on the property.

"Melton still owns it, but he is in bankruptcy proceedings," he said. "It has been tied up in litigation for five years."

The official said he was aware the property had become a nuisance.

"There are serious problems with vandalism out there because there is just no way to secure it," he said. "Numerous attempts have been made, but to no avail."

CHAPS

"There's nothing to say about these kids except they are super," said superfan Betty Holland. "Yes we're disappointed, but not to the point where I want to cry about it. There is nothing to be ashamed of. We'll just come back and get it all next year."

"Second place in the nation is nothing to feel bad about," said Stuart Winn, one of the nine MC cheerleaders here this week. "We're just glad to be here. We played a great game against San Jacinto our state rival, that was a high point of the season."

Fans in Midland will be welcoming the Chaps back home at 4:30 p.m. Monday at a reception at Centennial Plaza. Everyone is urged to greet the team at that time, according to sponsors of the event.

The Chaparrals were adopted by many of the junior college basketball fans in Hutchinson, rallying behind the underdogs Wednesday. Many of the fans, who have followed this tournament religiously over the 39 years of its residence here, remember Midland College from the Spud Webb days in 1982. The Chaps' 93-88 double overtime win over Miami-Dade is still widely considered the best game this tournament has ever seen.

But Saturday's Southern Idaho victory will rank near the top for most exciting finishes. Even though the outcome was not what Chaparral fans had hoped for.

"Our fans are the greatest anywhere because of all the support they've shown us all year and every year," said Midland College Athletic Director Delnor Poss. "Coming all this way for the tournament, these people are just tremendous."

Texarkana authorities round up 31 drug suspects

TEXARKANA (AP) — Authorities have rounded up 31 drug suspects named in 88 sealed indictments and will continue the search Monday, police said Saturday.

Officers found seven of the 58 suspects on the job at the International Paper Co. plant in Domino, Texas, and marched them out in handcuffs Friday afternoon, Cass County Sheriff Paul Boone said.

He said his officers will resume the search Monday for the remaining 27 suspects named in the indictments handed down by a grand jury last week.

"I just don't have the men to keep it going this weekend," Boone said. "If a few want to come in and surrender, we'll take them, but we're not out looking for them this weekend."

An undercover officer had secured a job at the paper mill during the investigation, which started last October.

WEEK

To get the Permian Basin oil industry looking up again, the oil association has planned a full week of oil appreciation activities to begin with church services this morning. Local clergy have been encouraged to incorporate petroleum into their messages.

Monday and Wednesday are reserved for various civic meetings and luncheons, where industry personnel will enlighten area residents.

A keynote speech by former Arco chairman of the board Robert O. Anderson will address optimistic approaches to industry challenges during Tuesday's Energy Appreciation luncheon. It will be followed by two hour-long seminars featuring Arlen Edgar and Gerald Bennett.

Texas Railroad Commission Chairman Mack Wallace will meet with the PBPA's executive committee and board of directors at a Thursday luncheon.

The week will be capped by a "Blow Out" on Saturday.

Said Perry: "The Blow Out is a coming out party for optimism. Pessimists are not invited."

A day full of family entertainment has been planned, including: the World's Ugliest Roughneck contest; a barbecue brisket cook-off; battle of the bands; dancing exhibitions and a country and western concert with Gene Watson.

The mayors of Midland and Odessa have proclaimed March 22-28 as Energy Appreciation Week.

While Perry acknowledges that a positive attitude can do little to change the price of oil, he is convinced that many oil prospects are not being drilled simply because of an overly negative attitude brought about by the crash of oil prices in 1986.

"There are still wells that can be profitably drilled, even at $15 a barrel," he said, "and safe investments that will return 20 percent, but nobody is looking at them because of pessimism."

Deciding where to drive 65 becoming real 'head scratcher'

WASHINGTON (AP) — All ye motorists who can practically feel the sensation of pressing down the accelerator to 65 mph: Take heed.

Even if the legislation allowing states to set higher speed limits becomes law, the federal bureaucracy will still have to decide precisely where the faster speeds will be allowed.

"It's a tricky amendment," says Thomas Klimek, a Federal Highway Administration highway engineer who is among those trying to define exactly where the higher speeds would be allowed. "You can get your head scratching over this one."

Highway administration officials seem to have a pretty good idea of where 65 mph driving would be permitted. It's the refinements that have to be worked out.

"You're talking about whether you put up a 65 mph sign here or a mile down the road," Klimek says.

The head-scratching is caused by the wording of the legislation passed by the House on Wednesday and the Senate on Friday.

The provision, an amendment to the highway bill that Reagan has threatened to veto, says states would be allowed to raise speed limits to 65 mph on stretches of interstate highways outside urbanized areas with populations of 50,000 people or more. Sen. Steven Symms, R-Idaho, wrote the measure, and he says it means that faster driving would be possible on 33,910 of the 43,291 miles of interstate highways.

It is the term "urbanized area" that bureaucrats are already examining under their regulatory microscopes.

NATION

Symms aides got the term from the Census Bureau. And it refers to a city or cities and any surrounding territory with a population density of about 1,000 people per square mile, says Gerald McManus, chief of the geographic standards section of the Census Bureau.

The periphery of urbanized areas follow either political boundaries or geographic features, such as rivers, McManus says.

"A Census bureaucrat could go onto the freeway and take their Crayola and draw a line on the highway," says Tom Lowery, Symms' press secretary.

But it is not that easy. The Department of Transportation — which includes the highway administration — will apparently have the final say as to what definition is used.

And the highway administration has its own creature called a federal aid urban boundary.

Like the Census Bureau's urbanized area, the federal aid urban boundary is used to help decide how money will be distributed under various government programs.

That boundary is drawn around the so-called urbanized areas, by agreement between Washington and the state and local governments involved.

"The boundaries should be fixed so as to smooth out irregularities, maintain administrative continuity of peripheral routes, and to encompass fringe areas having residential, commercial, industrial and/or national defense significance," highway administration regulations say.

Right now, there are 367 urbanized areas — and the federal aid urban boundaries ringing them — in the 50 states, and seven more in Puerto Rico.

The smallest urbanized area in the states is at State College, Pa., which is 14 square miles. The largest is the New York City-Northeastern New Jersey area, which has 2,808 square miles.

"There's usually not much difference," says Klimek of urbanized areas and federal aid urban boundaries. "The question would be, how do we use urban boundaries. Do we say speed must be reduced when you pass the urban aid boundary or the urbanized area?"

FBI post hopefuls now at five

WASHINGTON (AP) — The list of candidates for FBI director has been narrowed to five men, including three judges, a prominent private lawyer and a federal administrator, knowledgeable sources report.

The sources, both inside and outside the executive branch, said the FBI has been asked by Attorney General Edwin Meese III, head of the search effort, to do background checks on the men on this short list.

The sources, who declined to be identified, said late last week that the list includes U.S. District Judge D. Lowell Jensen of San Francisco and four other white men. The sources said none of the other four has been named as yet in any published or broadcast speculation about whom President Reagan will nominate to succeed William H. Webster, who has been nominated to take over the CIA.

The other two judges on the list also work outside Washington as does the private attorney. The federal administrator works in Washington but not in an investigative, law enforcement agency and not in a job appointed by the president.

Meese is holding the names under tight security, the sources said, because he is under pressure from various people who have suggested candidates.

One source said that the secrecy allows administration officials to avoid telling these outsiders that their candidates did not make the final list. At the same time, this source said, the names of several men who are out of the running were leaked to mollify some of the outsiders.

The sources said six men prominently mentioned in published speculation about candidates either never have been or no longer are under consideration.

These six were identified as:

Supreme Court Justice Byron R. "Whizzer" White; Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.; former top-level FBI official Lee Colwell; U.S. Circuit Court Judge William W. Wilkins Jr.; unsuccessful Michigan gubernatorial candidate William Lucas; and Detroit Police Chief William L. Hart.

The sources said Jensen — for decades a close friend and associate of Meese — has expressed reluctance to take the post.

But the sources said that the FBI background check on Jensen has continued because Meese plans to make another appeal to him to take the job.

The sources said Jensen's wife has objected to returning to Washington, where Jensen served as deputy attorney general before Reagan named him to the federal bench in San Francisco.

Jensen, for many years the elected Democratic county prosecutor in Oakland, Calif., where he once worked with Meese, has declined to say flatly he would not accept the FBI post when asked about it by reporters.

The sources said Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, has been trying to promote Wilkins, a judge on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

But one source said Wilkins has been ruled out at least since he voted last week, as head of the U.S. Sentencing Commission, against restoring the federal death penalty. The panel is revamping the system for sentencing federal prisoners.

Egg ritual marks vernal equinox

ROME, Ga. (AP) — About 50 people celebrated the vernal equinox by balancing eggs on steps to the city clock tower in what they say is an ancient ritual to celebrate the arrival of spring.

Even though the celebrants say the eggs stand on end due to the gravitational pull of the sun when daytime and nighttime hours are equal, a professor at nearby Berry College has maintains that the eggs will stand up any time.

"I'm not a scientist," said Susan Harvey, who organized the two-hour event. "I just am into celebratory rites of spring."

Spring officially arrived at 10:52 p.m. EST Friday.

In pre-Christian times people celebrated the coming of spring with fertility rites involving eggs and these rites were adopted by Christians to celebrate Easter, she said.

Malcolm W. McDonald, associate professor of physics at Berry, had his class balance eggs on May 21 last year to prove it had nothing to do with the equinox.

He said the clock tower steps probably had more to do with the ability of Ms. Harvey to balance nearly 20 dozen eggs.

The MOODY blues

EDITOR'S NOTE: A photograph of billowing white clouds caressing a pale blue sky decorated the cover of the $400 million Moody Foundation's 1985 annual report, suggesting peace and serenity. It was an illusion. Before 1986 ran its turbulent course, one of the foundation's three trustees was dead, a second was under indictment and the third was moved to declare: "I was not part of any conspiracy and whoever said it is a damn liar."

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

A soft summer rain added a misty sparkle to the fleet of coal-black limousines assembled that August morning at Galveston's old and stately Trinity Episcopal Church.

Gov. Mark White and a 1,000 mourners gathered inside for an elegantly somber farewell to a woman named Mary Moody Northen, 94, matriarch of the Moody family and once crown princess of one of the great Texas fortunes.

No one noticed the stranger outside. He had not come for the funeral.

Closed circuit television beamed the Anglican rites from the main auditorium to a satellite hall while a local radio station broadcast the services live across the island and beyond.

A bit much, perhaps, but the Moody family's ties to Texas would rival those of the Longs to Louisiana or the Rockefellers to New York.

Portraying Mary Moody Northen as "one of the great American women of this century," the Rev. Asbury Lenox declared:

"In industry and commerce, she was a giant. In philanthropy and the arts, a magnanimous patron."

The rain stopped.

As the mourners filed from the chapel and descended the steps, the stranger approached Shearn Moody Jr., nephew of the deceased, and thrust a document into his hands.

The man was a deputy U.S. marshal and the paper was a federal court summons.

Later, writer Steven Long, an astute Moody watcher, observed that an era ended with the death of Mary Moody Northen while another began with the subpoena bestowed on Shearn Moody Jr.

It was a bullseye on both counts.

"Can you believe the bad taste of those people?" grumbled Shearn Moody, 53, as he clutched the surprise summons that rainy summer day in 1986.

He was furious.

A flawed business genius and courtroom antagonist, Moody had the well-earned reputation as an artful dodger of such legal manuevering. Says Houston lawyer Will Wright, who once won a $6 million judgment against Moody:

"Next to Howard Hughes, this is the most elusive man in litigation."

But time and money were running out for the this unconventional and enigmatic member of the colorful Moody clan.

Federal, state and private investigators soon would be digging into his tangled financial activities and his role as a trustee of the charitable foundation that bore his family name.

A federal grand jury in Houston seemed uncommonly curious about Moody's alleged foreign bank accounts and a judge last September ordered him jailed briefly for contempt when he refused to release his bank records.

Meanwhile, the Texas Attorney General's office appeared as interested as grand jurors about a string of Moody Foundation grants funneled to, among others, a convicted con man and a former Maryland congressman accused in 1980 of soliciting sex from a teen-age boy.

An investigation by a tenacious one-eyed private eye named Clyde Wilson indicated that $3 million in foundation funds might figure in a kickback scheme designed largely to finance Shearn Moody's vigorous legal wars.

Moody's blues could be traced back to the loss of his Alabama insurance company in 1972, a subsequent $6 million fine by a federal court and his descent into bankruptcy in 1983.

But bankruptcy and kickbacks aside, the real stakes involved control of the $400 million Moody Foundation and its substantial holdings in American National Insurance Co., a multi-billion dollar enterprise founded by Shearn Moody's grandfather.

It all added up to a nasty little scandal reported with restrained gusto by the Houston and Galveston media and capped in February by a spicy Newsweek article dealing in part with an alleged murder plot and rumors of Shearn Moody's homosexuality.

"A saga of sex, violence and money, Texas style," proclaimed Newsweek.

"Hell," snapped Clyde Wilson, "they've only scratched the surface."

As the Civil War moved to a close, Galveston was the most sophisticated of Texas cities and among the largest seaports on the continent. It was an ideal spot for Virginia-born W.L. Moody and his wife Pherabe to start a family and build a fortune.

Col. Moody wasted little time doing both. The money came through cotton, railroad and banking investments, and a son and namesake was born in 1865. Young Moody attended school in Virginia and studied law in Texas and soon joined his father in business, eager to perpetuate both the family name and growing family fortune.

He would be historically successful.

He married a third-generation Texan, Libbie Rice Shearn, whose grandfather fought in the Texas Revolution and stuck around to see Texas become an independent nation.

W.L. and Libbie Moody added newspapers, ranches, hotels and insurance to the family financial interests while producing four children, all born before what is known in Texas as the 1900 Storm.

On a September night that year, a hurricane knifed in from the Atlantic and killed 6,000 people on Galveston Island. That storm remains the greatest natural disaster in American history, islanders contend.

Historians suggest that Moody was not one to let disaster interfere with opportunity, and as Galveston struggled to recover and rebuild Moody used the distressed circumstances to add to his already considerable holdings.

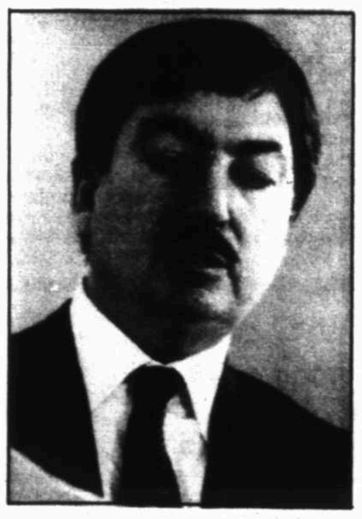
One acquisition was described as a "huge, garish mansion on Broadway" which Moody bought for "10 cents on the dollar."

On March 17, 1905, W.L. Moody Jr. organized the American National Insurance Co., perhaps the most significant move by any member of this illustrious family. ANICO would become the largest life insurance company west of the Mississippi and its assets would be used in 1942 to establish the Moody Foundation.

It also would provide the battleground for subsequent family power struggles and a controversial source of funding for what most Americans refer to now as "The Las Vegas Strip."

At the time, a lawyer called it the bank of "The Mob."

Despite his many successes, old W.L. did not win all the time. Galveston's In Between magazine recounts the time a boat full of Houston businessmen tracked Moody down on a fishing trip near his private island and invited him to join in a proposed oil venture.



Douglas Caddy

Norman Revie

William R. Pabst

"No," said Moody. "I'm not sold on the oil business."

The group went on to form the Texas Company. Today, folks just call it Texaco.

Libbie Moody died in 1943, a year after the foundation was established, but W.L. lived on for 11 years to profit from Galveston's glorious gambling era. This was a little odd since Moody frowned on alcohol and wagering.

Whatever his personal views of local vice lords Sam and Rose Maceo, Moody was hardly unaware that his five hotels prospered from the gambling and red light revelry that lured thousands of funseekers to the island.

"I am not in the casino business," he sniffed, "and they are not in the hotel business."

At his death in 1954, old W.L. left an estate estimated at $440 million and a will that a family member described as a "sad joke."

Reportedly, little more than a million dollars went directly to family members, in the following manner:

Mary Moody Northen, then 62, assumed control of Moody's empire and, as her father's favorite, received $250,000 and the red mansion on Broadway.

Mary's sister, Libbie, got $200,000. A brother, W.L. III, received a token $1, which he framed and hung in his San Antonio office. Mary's other brother, Shearn, the father of Shearn Jr. and Robert Moody, preceded W.L. in death.

The bulk of W.L.'s estate, including a third of ANICO's 33 million shares of stock, went to the Moody Foundation. That stock is worth about $230 million today, according to one estimate.

In 1986, 22 years after his death, W.L.'s daughter, Mrs. Mary Moody Northen, was chairman of the board of the Moody Foundation and widely admired for a spirit of generosity that largely had eluded her father.

Under her regime, the Moody Foundation distributed more than $100 million to charitable and civic causes in Texas, including $18 million in 1985 alone.

At her death, in August 1986, control of the foundation passed totally to her two nephews, the grandsons of founder W.L. Moody, the embattled Shearn Jr. and his younger brother Robert.

The two Moody heirs moved quickly to avoid "outsider" intrusion on the foundation board, filling the vacancy with one of the few people both trusted — their mother, Francis Moody Newman, 72.

But the sounds from behind closed courthouse doors were foreboding.

Shearn's days in power were already numbered.

The first hint of trouble within the House of Moody came symbolically enough on Halloween 1985 from a bit player in a bigger scandal, a lawyer named Douglas Caddy who had represented Watergate figures Howard Hunt and Gordon Liddy.

Caddy, 48, threatened to sue the Moody Foundation over alleged funding irregularities unless it continued to provide grants for organizations he represented, including the Investigative Research Foundation of Houston.

The ploy backfired.

Authorities suggested later that Caddy's threat smacked of "extortion" and targeted $1.6 million in Caddy-related grants for official scrutiny.

Subsequently, Texas A&M University quietly returned $100,000 of a $300,000 grant obtained from the Moodys for a Caddy-inspired project.

After the Moody Foundation denied a $250,000 grant request last year, Caddy complained publicly that he was being discriminated against by the Moodys because he blew the whistle on rampant misuse of funds.

"Apparently the trustees decided to shoot the bearer who brought the bad news," he told the Houston Post.

"In retrospect, it is apparent I stumbled upon a wasp's nest of self-interest and self-dealing that continues to be covered up."

Caddy accused Robert Moody of conspiring with older brother Shearn Jr. to use foundation grants to finance Shearn's legal battle in what amounts now to a $12 million bankruptcy affair.

"I was not part of any conspiracy and whoever said it is a damn liar," fumed Robert.

Indeed, investigators told The AP the worst that could be said of Robert Moody is that he permitted Shearn great latitude in selecting some of the more questionable grant recipients.

Caddy's accusations did not stop with the Moodys. He also accused Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox of aiding in a purported "cover-up" of the Moody scandal and called on a federal prosecutor to look into the attorney general's ties to the Moodys and their friends.

"It is indeed ironic that Attorney General Mattox's office is conducting an investigation into the Moody Foundation scandal when a true investigation would have to focus on the role of Attorney General Mattox in attempting to cover up the scandal," Caddy said in a letter to Assistant U.S. Attorney Steve Shaw.

Shaw headed the federal grand jury investigation into possible perjury, bankruptcy fraud and misuse of charitable funds by Shearn Moody and others.

Caddy suggested that Mattox benefitted from foundation grants through his relationship with Shearn and a mutual friend, Moody publicist Marta Karpan, who was linked to a $50,000 foundation grant.

Mattox, a bachelor, surfaced occasionally in Galveston as Ms. Karpan's escort and accompanied her once to an opera ball in Austin as a representative of a project funded by a foundation grant.

Mattox largely ignored Caddy's comments but aide Elna Christopher said of the attorney general, "He is not close friends of the Moodys, but he has met some of them."

Mattox defended a legal brief he once filed on Shearn's behalf in a fraud case, insisting his intervention in that affair was in no way linked to a $20,000 fee paid by Moody to his former law partner, A. Don Crowder of Dallas.

Meanwhile, as the Moody scandal spread, foundation officials yielded to pressure from Assistant Attorney General John Vasquez and hired a private investigator to look into the charges.

They chose Clyde Wilson, whose exposure of high-level chicanery at Houston's Hermann Estate led in 1985 to perhaps the biggest scandal in that city's history. Now it was Galveston's turn.

Asked months later what Shearn Moody Jr. had in mind by hiring him, Wilson said:

"I'm sure Shearn thought, one, it would be a whitewash, and two, I think he was probably of the opinion I couldn't find anything. Had Shearn known what was going to happen, he damn sure wouldn't have hired me."

Before accepting the job, Wilson returned a $10,000 check he received from Moody to look into the death last August of "Aunt Mary," the matriarch Mary Moody Northen.

Shortly after agreeing to conduct the foundation inquiry, Wilson told The AP, Shearn offered him grants totaling as much as $500,000 for a vague "investigative project."

The private detective did not consider the offer a bribe but when pressed as to what he might possibly investigate that would merit such grants, he replied:

"Maybe I could write a book on the sex life of a cockroach."

Acting in part on the results of Clyde Wilson's inquiry, a federal grand jury dropped its long-awaited bomb Dec. 2 on Shearn Moody and his adminstrative aide, Norman Revie, 48.

The panel named the longtime associates as "co-schemers" in a 14-count indictment accusing them of misuse of foundation funds and hiding more than $200,000 from creditors in the bankruptcy case.

The indictment alleged mail, wire and bankruptcy fraud and focused on $500,000 in grants awarded two Washington-based organizations headed by former Maryland Congressman Robert E. Bauman.

It did not go unnoticed in the Texas media that Bauman had just published a book about his life in the nation's capitol as a conservative homosexual.

Bauman was named as an officer and director of the two organizations, the Texas Civil Liberties Foundation — not to be confused with the Texas Civil Liberties Union — and the Foundation for Education on Free Enterprise.

The indictment accused Bauman of no wrongdoing but claimed Moody and Revie received kickbacks from the two groups to pay personal debts, including money owed to Moody's lawyers.

"This is just a smear job," Moody said in denying the allegations.

The Moody affair took a new twist in mid-December when Douglas Caddy submitted affidavits to Steve Shaw, the assistant U.S. attorney, claiming he had received bomb threats on his life and that his office telephone had been illegally tapped.

He declined to identify the source of the wiretaps "for reasons of libel and slander" but told Shaw that he and an associate had seen fugitive con man William R. Pabst running out of their office building during the period of the purported bugging.

Caddy's claims came on the heels of revelations by Wilson, the private eye, that he had affidavits alleging that Pabst and Shearn Moody once attempted to bug the U.S. Supreme Court building in Washington.

As outrageous as that sounds, litigation involving Moody's bankrupt insurance firm, Empire Life Insurance Co. of Alabama, was before the court numerous times.

Pabst, meanwhile, emerged as a major but missing player in the Moody saga. Just how major became known on Dec. 29 when grand jurors in Houston indicted Moody and Revie a second time.

In a 30-count indictment, jurors accused Moody, Revie, Pabst and two others of fraud through the misappropriation of $1.5 million in Moody grants to other foundations.

All were set up at least in part by Pabst, 44, a fugitive con man convicted in 1985 of stealing $38,600 from Atlantic Richfield Corp. in a charity scam.

Authorities believe Pabst fled to Mexico along with an associate, Vance Beaudreau, 53, one of the five named in the second indictment.

Houston residents remember Pabst as a 1976 American Party candidate for state representative and the plaintiff in a federal lawsuit to halt the 1980 Super Bowl because of a disputed call in a Houston Oilers-Pittsburgh Steelers football game.

The Dec. 29 indictment accused Moody of abusing his power as a foundation trustee in awarding the three grants and alleged further that the grant money was kicked back to Moody and others to pay personal and legal expenses.

The grant recipients were:

— The M.T. Carlson Foundation, run by Wharton County Republican Party Chairman Merle T. Carlson.

— The Earl Foundation, run by Houston dentist Robert Earl.

— The Hamilton Law Institute, based in the Dallas suburb of Lewisville and headed by Howell C. Willis.

Willis and Carlson were indicted. Earl was not.

So ended 1986.

"Frankly, this whole thing is a scam and a smear job," Moody told reporters. "It is absolutely ridiculous ...."

He seemed unaware or at least unconcerned that investigator Wilson and others were gathering an arsenal of "smoking guns" from major and minor figures in the affair.

The AP learned that a woman named Diane Simons and a lawyer named Leonard Bradt, among others, had provided investigators detailed accounts of the alleged juggling of grant money by Pabst, Moody, Revie and recipients of the Moody largesse.

In a bizarre sidelight, both Bradt and Ms. Simons told of a plan to use grant money to fund an attempt by an Illinois psychologist to "disrupt Norman Revie's obvious control of Shearn Moody."

Both said in their sworn statements that Moody agreed to such a project but would not give final approval until he discussed it with Revie.

Ms. Simons, who reportedly is now in hiding and in fear of her life, was quoted as saying Moody needed his "daily fix" from Revie. Bradt told how Moody once became agitated and got the "shakes" while separated from his aide and "was like a man suffering from an addiction."

Investigators figured it was a fairly safe bet that Moody also became agitated after a former aide, James Wohlenhaus, told the Houston Post and later Newsweek that Moody and James Stoker, a companion of 20 years, live together as "husband and wife."

Stoker, a former Las Vegas dancer, is a producer, director and choreographer at Galveston's Mary Moody Northen Amphitheatre.

Stoker did not return telephone calls to his office at the Mary Moody Northen Amphitheatre. He has, however, been identified in bankruptcy court proceedings as Moody's "boyfriend" and "longtime personal companion."

"I am not a homosexual," Moody told reporters before his criminal attorney, Marian Rosen, cut off interviews and appealed to a district judge to issue a gag order on principals in the case.

No doubt Shearn Moody was glad to see 1986 come to and end, however unmerciful. But 1987 started out even worse.

Moody was free on bond and clinging stubbornly to his seat on the three-member foundation board when the case took on a decidedly more sinister tone.

On Jan. 9, Dianna Hunt of the Houston Chronicle entered Clyde Wilson's office as the private detective was taking a statement from a former policeman named D. Michael Hollaway, 30.

The Chronicle's front page headline the next day told the story:

"Explosives Expert Accuses Shearn Moody of Bomb Plot."

According to the affidavit, Moody and former crony William Pabst had approached Hollaway with a proposal to "blow the legs off" Douglas Caddy, the Houston lawyer who first raised questions about the foundation's funding activities.

Hollaway said Moody later upgraded the proposal, suggesting that he kill rather than maim.

Moody denied the charges.

A former military explosives expert, Hollaway said Pabst made the first overture about planting explosives in Caddy's car.

"William R. Pabst just talked to me about using enough explosives to scare Caddy, but Shearn Moody wanted him either dead or his legs blown off," Hollaway said in his statement.

"Shearn Moody was not kidding about this, but was very serious.

Hollaway said when he turned down the explosives request Moody "told me that possibly I could get a sniper rifle with a silencer and just blow him away."

While Moody denied the charges, Ms. Rosen, his lawyer, took the denial a step further at the time:

"This is absolutely absurd. Shearn is not the type. He is a very gentle person and would never do harm or violence to anyone."

Ms. Rosen said Moody is a target for "character assassination" and suggested there was an attempt to "convict him in newspapers and other media, and that conflicts with our system of justice...."

She predicted the truth will emerge when Moody stands trial.

Hollaway said Pabst and Moody made the proposals shortly after Caddy met with Moody Foundation officials on Oct. 31, 1985, to protest the awarding of grants to competing recipients, primarily the Pabst-related groups.

Caddy told the Chronicle he knew nothing of the purported murder plot but was scarcely surprised.

"...Strange things happen in cases where family fortunes and family dynasties are involved," he said.

The FBI entered the case that same day.

On Jan. 15, Francis Moody Newman and son Robert Moody reluctantly and tearfully ousted Shearn from the foundation board on which he'd served more than 25 years.

The action came under intense pressure from Texas Attorney General Mattox's office and only hours after a U.S. district judge rejected an appeal by Shearn to block his removal on constitutional grounds.

Robert's son, Ross Rankin Moody, 24, a New York financial analyst, succeeded his uncle on the powerful and prestigious three-member board.

"This was probably the toughest decision Frances Moody Newman and Robert Moody ever had to make," said foundation attorney Irwin "Buddy" Herz.

"To remove a son and a brother is not an easy task. Mrs. Newman and Robert are both very upset."

Prior to a closed door meeting described as tense and emotional that day, Mrs. Newman accused the media of printing lies about her elder son, declaring:

"They've been allowed to say many vicious things about Shearn that aren't true...I want justice done to my son."

Still, Shearn's ouster ended whatever remnants remained from a reported struggle with Robert for control of the Moody empire.

Shearn did not speak with reporters at once but attorney Herz said Moody voted against the ouster and expressed anger and sorrow when he was overruled.

That night, a despondent Shearn told Joel Kirkpatrick of the Galveston Daily News that his fortune, once rumored to be $126 million, was wiped out and that he might apply for unemployment compensation or food stamps.

Gone, he said, were his ranch home, his private bank, two insurance companies, a share of the Libbie Shearn Moody Trust, his cash and his cattle. Removal from the board severed even his $32,000 annual stipend.

"That means I've got nothing. Zip. ...The (bankruptcy) lawyers are involved in dividing up my estate," he said.

Moody blamed Clyde Wilson for the "groundswell of adverse publicity" that drove him from the board and maintained again he had done nothing improper.

"You know," he told the Daily News, "I have participated in making over $200 million in grants to the people of Texas in my 25 years on the foundation board.

"And you know, I think the state has treated me horribly. I've got nothing. My homestead has been stolen, my money has been tied up. I am only living at 16 Cedar Lawn South at the sufferance of my mother. And she is paying my legal fees."

He left then to join his mother for dinner, explaining that he had no choice.

The ex-millionaire said he could no longer afford to eat out.

Clyde Wilson's investigation formally drew to a close in late January. He said he'd gone as far as he could without subpoena powers.

Additional indictments, he predicted, would come through the efforts of U.S. Attorney Shaw and Galveston District Attorney Mike Guarino. He said he anticipated efforts by the Texas attorney general's office to expand the foundation board to include trustees other than Moody family members.

"The show's not over 'til the fat lady sings, and the fat lady, in the person of Steve Shaw, has only started to sing," he said.

"I might add that when Shaw finishes his song, the other fat lady, Mike Guarino, has got a song to sing."

North said to have given Contras $10,000 monthly

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Contra leader based in Costa Rica said Lt. Col. Oliver North provided his party and another group with $10,000 per month for about a year, according to a report published today.

Alfonso Robelo told The Washington Post in a telephone interview that North arranged for the payments to be deposited in a bank account in Costa Rica, beginning in the fall of 1985.

He told the newspaper the payments ended just before it was disclosed that North was involved in diverting profits to the Contras from the sale of arms to Iran.

North was fired from his post on the National Security Council staff after the disclosure last November.

Robelo told the Post the money was used to cover office expenses and telephone bills for his party, the Nicaraguan Democratic Movement, and the Nicaraguan Democratic Union, a group headed by Fernando Chamorro.

Robelo said he had given that information to FBI investigators working for Lawrence Walsh, the independent counsel investigating the Iran-Contra affair.

"I don't want to hide anything," Robelo told the newspaper. "There was nothing wrong in what I was doing."

Monet thief faces problems

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa (AP) — Whoever cut a painting by French impressionist Claude Monet out of its frame and fled as police closed in will have a hard time selling it, officials said.

"I find it hard to believe that it could be sold on the black market," said Steve Ward of the Chamber of Commerce, which runs the community center from which the painting, valued at $175,000, was stolen Thursday night.

The painting, "Les Bargues Depeche Devant Les Falaises D'Etretat," or "Fishing Boats in Front of the Cliffs at Etretat," was done around 1891.

It was rigged to an alarm in the police department, and Chief James Wilkinson said officers arrived "within the same minute" of the alarm.

"Any art museum would know it was stolen," said Peg Buckley, librarian at the Des Moines Art Center.

Quake hits Aleutian island

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adak Island in the Andrean Islands of the Aleutians was rocked by a strong earthquake early today, the U.S. Geological Survey reported.

The tremor was recorded at a preliminary magnitude of 6.2 on the Richter scale and was reported felt strongly on Adak. An earthquake of that magnitude can cause severe damage.

The island is populated, USGS spokesman Don Finley said, but he had no information about possible damage.

USGS earthquake scientists in Golden, Colo., said the tremor was centered about 50 miles northwest of Adak and occurred at 12:42 a.m. Alaska standard time, or 6:42 a.m. EST.

Dogcatcher nabs 'Sam the Hermit'

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Sam the Hermit, an abandoned and injured German shepherd that lived along a country road, shunned human contact and attracted donations from well-wishers across the nation has been nabbed by the county dogcatcher.

"When they put him in the cage to take him away, he didn't fight, and I had to leave because I was crying so hard. I petted him for the first time. He was stiff as a statue," said Eunice Bandoni, who plans to keep the dog.

Sam the Hermit was the name given to the dog by the 2,000 residents of the town of Tranquillity, 30 miles west of Fresno. Bandoni and Donna Blackwood, who spearheaded efforts to care for the once abused animal, said there was no choice but to end Sam's freedom.

Besides numerous complaints that authorities were ignoring the stray, Bandoni said that Sam recently began chasing cars and lying in the middle of the road.

But some still think the dog should be set free.

"I hope he is returned back to the wide-open fields of the San Joaquin Valley, where he had really found a happy home," said Jennifer Quails of Berkeley, who said her children sent money after reading about the dog in January.

"If he wanted or needed to be confined for the rest of his life, he wouldn't have kept his distance from people for so long," said Doug Simpson of Fresno, who heard about the dog's plight in a television report.

People began noticing Sam about five years ago lying alongside the main road into town. He slept beneath a tree in a ditch and peered into cars from the roadside, leading residents to speculate he was looking for his departed master.

Trial of Demjanjuk 'agonizing' to Ohio's Ukrainian community

CLEVELAND (AP) — The daily news from Israel on the war crimes trial of John Demjanjuk, accused of being the brutal Nazi death camp guard Ivan the Terrible, is stirring frustration and agony in the close-knit Ukrainian community that counts Demjanjuk as a member.

"This is just a show trial, a history lesson, so the memory of the Holocaust doesn't die with the survivors who have lived through it," said Jack Burscu, an active member of northeast Ohio's Ukrainian community and a friend of the Demjanjuk family.

"John Demjanjuk is not on trial in Israel. Ivan the Terrible is on trial in Israel. As time goes by, more and more evidence will surface as to John Demjanjuk's innocence, and that's the feeling in this community," Burscu said.

Demjanjuk, 66, a retired Ford Motor Co. worker from Cleveland's Seven Hills suburb, could face execution if the three-judge panel finds he was the man known as Ivan the Terrible at the Nazis' Treblinka death camp.

Demjanjuk contends he is not Ivan, that he was drafted into the Soviet Red Army, was captured in 1942 and was imprisoned by the Nazis before eventually serving in a unit that fought the Russians.

The U.S. government said in 1977 that Demjanjuk hid his past at Treblinka when he came to this country in 1952. After a trial, his U.S. citizenship was revoked and he was eventually extradited to Israel.

During his 1981 trial, demonstrations on his behalf were common outside the federal courthouse and at the city's Public Square.

Burscu said he has known Demjanjuk since the early 1960s through their membership in St. Vladimir's Ukrainian Orthodox Church.

"It was very hard to believe these type of charges could be brought up against that man, because of the man's nature," Burscu said. "The man is very kind."

"If the charges were true, then in 30 years-plus of living here in Cleveland, someone somewhere down the line would have noticed some sort of strange, unnatural behavior in the man. Kicking the dog, hanging his cat, being sadistic with his family, stuff of that nature. But never, ever of John Demjanjuk. He couldn't even hurt a fly, for all the years I have known him," Burscu said.

The trial has caused the Ukrainian community to reflect on its own suffering, he said. Elders in the community have become more outspoken about how they endured famine under Stalin and brutality under Hitler.

George Kulchytsky, a professor of history and Soviet studies at Youngstown State University, recently put together an exhibit on the plight of Ukrainians during the war.

"I felt the time had come to show this exhibit, because there was so much negative news. One was getting the impression the Ukrainians were really the people responsible for the Holocaust, but they were victims, and I wanted to show the other side of it," Kulchytsky said.

Kulchytsky was a translator during Demjanjuk's 1981 trial. He said he has believed since then that Demjanjuk is not Ivan the Terrible.

Kulchytsky is a member of a community panel of the United Ukrainian Organization of Greater Cleveland which recently began meeting with a group from the American Jewish Committee to ease tensions between the Ukrainian and Jewish populations.

Those tensions have included emergence recently of anti-Semitic literature.

"This is one of the side effects of the whole case. Some people may be gullible and read this material, which is unfortunate," Kulchytsky said.

Steamboat revolutionizes river travel

Associated Press

Thursday, March 22, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The Pennsylvania Assembly today passed a bill giving John Fitch an exclusive right for 14 years to make and sell steamboats. Fitch, a Connecticut native, had operated a brass and silversmith business in Trenton which was destroyed in the Revolutionary War. For the past two years he had resided in Bucks County where he had been building his steamboat. New Jersey has granted him exclusive privileges for his boat last year and he had petitioned New York, Delaware, and Virginia for the same right. He planned to launch and test his steamboat within the next few months.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Congress had a quorum present today and conducted business. But the members did not do very much. They directed the commissioner of army accounts to settle two claims on the Treasury and that was all.

William Tinney, who as a clerk in the Treasury office was one of the few federal bureaucrats, wrote to his brother from New York today. His brother had asked for information on public affairs. He responded that things were "by no way pleasing, wearing a very gloomy aspect, (and) public finances (are) so low that there is not a shilling in the Treasury."

Gov. Edmund Randolph of Virginia wrote to his state's delegates in Congress to inform them that Gen. Thomas Nelson, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, had declined to serve on the Virginia delegation to the Philadelphia Convention. Nelson retired to Offley Hoo, his Hanover County estate. His health had declined and he felt that he could not make the trip and conduct the rigorous business before the convention.

DELEGATES TODAY

Buckner Stith, an acquaintance of George Washington in his youth, wrote the general today. He started the letter saying he had intended to write for the past four years, and at just that moment, "after smoking three full pipes, which you know inebriates a good deal if the tobacco be strong," he decided to pen the letter. The epistle was full of non-stop jibberish. He did, however, have the courtesy to close the letter by asking the general's "pardon for the trouble I have given you in reading the above stuff."

Edmund Randolph wrote another letter to James Madison today. He reported that Gen. Nelson had declined the appointment to the Constitutional Convention and that Richard Henry Lee had been selected in his place. Randolph was afraid that Lee would refuse to attend as well, since he was not entirely in favor of the meeting. If Lee declined, the governor thought no replacement would be named.

LOOKING BACK

John Fitch and His Steamboat

The United States in 1787 was a vast territory, spanning from the Atlantic Ocean to the Mississippi River and from Canada to Spanish Florida. During the 1780s, scores of pioneers were settling the hinterland, but the transportation systems — either by water or land — were abominable. It was difficult to ship produce to the East or manufactured goods to the West. To further complicate matters, the one available water course, the Mississippi River, was closed off at the mouth to American shipping by Spain. Thus, many inventors and investors were trying to solve the transportation problem.

John Fitch envisioned a steamboat as the solution. For, even if the Mississippi was opened to traffic, barges and other boats could go in only one direction — south. A steam-powered vessel, on the other hand, could travel in both directions and greatly improve transportation. He began working on his boat in 1785 in a workshop in Bucks County, Pennsylvania. He experienced some difficulty raising money for the project, but gradually he designed and built a successful steam engine, and was able to raise money from several prominent Philadelphia businessmen.

Fitch finally finished his boat in 1787 and tested it on the Delaware River in front of delegates to the Constitutional Convention on Aug. 22. It was an odd-looking contraption — 45 feet long and propelled with a series of six paddles on each side. But the test was successful, and Fitch began immediately to develop an improved model. One year he designed and built a 60-foot boat, propelled with a paddlewheel, that could carry 30 passengers. He used this vessel on regular trips from Philadelphia to Trenton, and in one trip made the upstream journey in just over three hours.

Fitch's invention, though, never caught on in the United States. He went to France to try to peddle his invention there, but was equally unsuccessful. Eventually he settled in Kentucky and farmed for the remainder of his life.

Although Fitch's inventions operated successfully, he did not devote any attention to public relations or demonstrating the potential economic benefits of his boats. Thus, he was unable to keep investors interested in his product.

Robert Fulton, on the other hand, invented a successful steamboat, secured the necessary investments, and was credited with the revolution in river transportation.

One dies, eight injured in balloon accident

SUMMIT PARK, Utah (AP) — A hot air balloon collided with electrical wires Saturday and its gondola plunged 50 feet to the ground, killing one person and injuring eight, authorities said.

The balloon, owned by Balloon the Rockies Inc., apparently lost altitude for unknown reasons about 11 a.m. and blew into the high wires about one mile east of this town in the Wasatch Mountains, the Summit County sheriff's department said.

"Apparently, they got into some electrical wiring and somehow detached the basket, which fell to the ground," said sheriff's dispatcher Christy Moore.

The injured were evacuated by air medical helicopters to several area hospitals, Moore said. A woman was in critical condition with head and internal injuries, and the other seven victims had less severe injuires, according to hospital spokesmen.

The dead man's identity was withheld pending notification of relatives.

The accident triggered scattered power outages in Summit Park, 20 miles east of Salt Lake City, and nearby Park City, but electrical service was restored by early afternoon, authorities said.

Italian general's assassins sought in 'huge manhunt'

ROME (AP) — Police raided suspected terrorist haunts on Saturday in a huge manhunt for the killers of an air force general known as Italy's "Star Wars" expert.

Interior Minister Oscar Luigi Scalfaro linked Friday's assassination of Gen. Licio Giorgieri with what he termed a new "red terrorism" with "close ties with foreign countries."

Scalfaro told reporters the attack "has the trademark of European terrorism" and that investigators were checking the possibility that Giorgieri was slain according to "a decision made outside our country but executed by professional killers."

No reports surfaced of arrests in the assassination, which Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini described an attempt to undermine this NATO member country.

Giorgieri, 61, was killed in a fusillade of pistol fire by two men on a motorcycle as he rode in Rome in his car. An anonymous telephone caller said a leftist group believed linked to the terrorist Red Brigades was responsible.

Officials said hundreds of policemen searched the homes of terrorist suspects and sympathizers in Rome overnight.

Anti-terrorist security officers were posted around government buildings and at key intersections. Police were also searching cars at roadblocks around Rome, officials said.

Giorgieri was an engineer in charge of buying and maintaining arms, missiles and aircraft, according to the Defense Ministry.

Italian newspapers said he was known in military circles as the nation's "Star Wars expert" because he had been involved in Italian efforts to obtain research contracts under the U.S. Strategic Defensive Initiative. The SDI is aimed at creating a space-based defense system against nuclear missiles.

WORLD

The U.S. Embassy issued a statement Saturday condemning the assassination as a "barbarous act of terrorism."

Premier-designate Giulio Andreotti called the shooting an "evil act" aimed at striking "our society and the system of international relations of which Italy has chosen to be part."

Spadolini said Friday the killing "constitutes a new blow in the plan launched to destabilize the country, a plan which will find, on the part of the state, a firm and decisive reply."

An autopsy showed the general was shot five times — twice in the neck, twice in the left shoulder and one bullet through the left ear.

He was in a chauffeur-driven air force car late Friday afternoon when two men, their faces covered by the shields of their white helmets, pulled alongside on a motorcyle and fired, according to investigators.

The motorcyle was later found about a half mile away.

About an hour after the attack, an anonymous woman caller to the Milan office of the Rome newspaper La Repubblica said in a statement:

"This evening we took care of Licio Giorgieri, the top man in charge of constructing arms and air force and space armaments. Fighting Communist Union."

Terrorism experts said the Fighting Communist Union was a hard-line splinter group of the leftist Red Brigades, many of whose members were arrested in the terrorist crackdown in the early 1980s.

Spadolini said the assassination recalled that of French Gen. Rene Audran, the officer in charge of France's arm sales to other countries who was shot to death outside his home in suburban Paris on Jan. 25, 1985. The leftist terrorist group Direct Action claimed responsibility.

A week later in West Germany, Ernst Zimmermann, chairman of a company manufacturing aircraft engines for North Atlantic Treaty Organization defenses, was killed in his home near Munich. The Red Army Faction claimed responsibility.

Giorgieri's assassination came amid political crisis.

Khomeini appeals for Iranian unity

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini on Saturday appealed for Iranian unity, "particularly among those in charge," in an address broadcast live over national television and radio to mark the Persian New Year.

The spiritual and revolutionary leader of Iran said the nation is at "a big and sensitive juncture."

"Those living in this country, from whatever stratum and tribe they may be, particularly those in charge, should safeguard their fraternity and remain brothers," he stressed.

"Should we maintain our fraternity and should the armed forces, the (Revolutionary) Guards Corps, the volunteers, other forces and tribes, safeguard their fraternity, then we shall reach prosperity.

"God forbid that they...confront each other," said the white-bearded, 86-year-old patriarch of the Islamic Revolution.

Khomeini did not mention any specific discord among authorities or institutions of the Islamic Republic. But foreign observers noted indications in recent months of a power struggle between a faction aligned with the speaker of Iran's Parliament and one backing the cleric designated as Khomeini's successor.

Tehran Radio's broadcast of the speech, delivered in Farsi, was monitored and translated by the British Broadcasting Corp.

Khomeini has been reported in poor health recently. In the telecast, monitored in Nicosia, he appeared frail but otherwise in good health. He spoke slowly in a soft voice as he sat on a platform in the Jamaran mosque beside his north Tehran residence.

He raised his hands to acknowledge the cheers of the crowd. Many were in military uniform. The crowd chanted "long live Khomeini!" and jabbed clenched fists above their heads.

President Ali Khamenei, in a speech carried by the state-run radio right after Khomeini's, hailed what he called Iran's victory in a "propaganda and political war waged by the Great Satan" — Iran's name for the United States.

"Alert officials were able to neutralize the plots and make the enemy retreat," Khamenei said.

He did not elaborate, but clearly referred to the controversy surrounding secret U.S. arms sales to Iran and the problems that disclosure of the sales caused the Reagan administration.

Khamenei on Friday accused Reagan and other U.S. leaders of lying about White House dealings with Iran, but did not spell out the purported lies.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said the ayatollah called on dissidents seeking to overthrow his regime to halt their campaigns in order to promote the spread of Islam.

His call came three days after Iranian authorities announced the arrest of 700 activists of the outlawed Marxist Fedayeen Khalq group in Tehran and other cities.

Another leftist faction, the Iraq-based Mujahedeen Khalq, or People's Warriors, claimed Wednesday its guerrillas killed more than 100 Iranian security personnel in three major clashes in western Iran.

The government claimed 1,000 Mujahedeen infiltrators were captured this month.

Saturday was the second time in a week Khomeini has appealed to his countrymen to stand together. On March 14, he warned government leaders that big power conspiracies were aimed at dividing them and weakening the 8-year-old Iranian revolution.

Reports have surfaced of anti-government demonstrations in several Iranian cities and of intensified attacks by dissident forces on troops.

The Mujahedeen said that Khamenei's brother Hadi, chairman of the parliamentary committee on economic affairs, was wounded in one ambush in Mashhad in northeast Iran.

Iran has been at war with neighboring Iraq for 6½ years and has suffered an estimated 250,000 dead and 600,000 wounded. The war costs Iran an estimated $1 billion a month and analysts believe it could eventually undermine Khomeini's government.

Dissident sources claim anti-war sentiment is mounting as the casualty toll climbs. Even so, there has been no apparent focus for discontent that would threaten the government.

However, signs persist of a power struggle between Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani, a key Khomeini aide, and the patriarch's designated successor, Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri.

Mehdi Hashemi, a relative of Montazeri and a former head of Iran's Liberation Movements Bureau, was arrested last October on charges of murder and treason in what was seen as part of the power struggle.

President Khamenei hailed the just-concluded year as one "of victory and pride for the Iranian people" in the war against Iraq.

He pledged further successes in the New Year, 1366 according to the Persian solar calendar. Neither he nor Khomeini mentioned the "final offensive" that Iranian leaders said last summer would be launched before the Persian year ends.

Khamenei declared: "Next year will be the year of great endeavors and, God willing, great successes and victories."

Gadhafi reported ready for peace talks with Chad

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — A newspaper reported Saturday that Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi will soon hold peace talks with the president of Chad, where Libyan soldiers and Chadian rebels are fighting against the government.

A top Sudanese official denied the report. Sudan has been trying for weeks to mediate between its two North African neighbors.

In N'djamena, the capital of Chad, the military said Saturday that it killed 786 Libyans and captured 121 in two days of fighting in northern Chad. The government put its losses at six dead and 30 wounded.

The Sudanese newspaper al-Siassa, quoting high-ranking political sources, said Sudanese government officials arranged a meeting in Khartoum between Gadhafi and Chadian President Hissene Habre. It did not provide details.

The governments of Libya and Chad did not comment on the report.

But Ali Hassan Taj Eddin, head of a Sudanese mediation delegation, told Sudan's official news agency SUNA the report was wrong.

Taj Eddin also said Sudanese Prime Minister Sadek el-Mahdi sent messages to Gadhafi and Habre as part of the mediation effort, but would not elaborate.

Al-Mahdi has been trying for weeks to stop the fighting in Chad, which began after the country won indepedence from France in 1960.

Earlier this month, he arranged lower-level talks in Khartoum between Libyan and Chadian officials, but the talks collapsed on the first day.

A Chadian official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the talks failed because Libya only wanted to discuss problems involving Chadians and claimed that "there is no problem between Libya and Chad."

Libya on one side and Chad and Western countries on the other side differ on who is involved in the fighting.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Bomb scare forces Soviet jet into emergency landing

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — A bomb scare forced a Soviet jetliner carrying 113 passengers and a crew of 11 to make an emergency landing in Budapest, state radio said Saturday.

The official MTI news agency had said the Aeroflot IL-62 made the unscheduled landing Friday after the pilot asked for clearance because of "suspicious" circumstances.

It made no mention of a bomb but said the passengers and crew were evacuated and a police search of the jetliner did not find anything unusual.

The brief state radio report did not say if the bomb scare was caused by a telephoned threat or give any further details.

MTI said the plane was on a flight from Rome to Moscow and departed for Moscow with the passengers and crew late Friday after remaining at the Budapest airport for 6½ hours.

Europe to get Disneyland

PARIS (AP) — The government said Saturday it will sign a final agreement this week with the Walt Disney Company on building Europe's first Disneyland amusement park.

The park will be built in Marne-La-Vallee east of Paris for about $2 billion and is scheduled to be completed in 1992.

The office of Premier Jacques Chirac said in a statement the agreement will be signed Tuesday at the premier's office.

"This signature is the successful conclusion of negotiations between the French partners and the Disney group," the statement said.

"The premier had...asked the negotiator to assure the definition of the financial guarantees of the Disney group and taking into account the European and French cultures for the realization of the project," it said.

The French say they expect 20,000 jobs to be created during the construction phase and at least 30,000 jobs when the park opens. The French expect more than $665 million in additional annual foreign currency earnings.

Retirement home poisoned

SAN CRISTOBAL, Venezuela (AP) — Two more people died early Saturday after drinking insecticide-laced punch at a retirement home luncheon, raising the toll to 17, and officials said dozens of additional deaths might occur.

Eight people, including a 105-year-old woman, died Thursday afternoon following the luncheon at the San Pablo Home for the Elderly, and seven died Friday.

"We have to be realistic...More will probably die," Health Minister Otto Hernandez Pieretti said after visiting hospitals Friday night.

Officials said 117 people, including six nuns, were in serious condition at three hospitals, and about 30 might die over the weekend.

The blizzard conditions in western South Dakota abated during the day, but an advisory for snow and blowing snow remained in effect.

The northern Black Hills got the brunt of the storm, with 20 inches of snow wind gusts to 65 mph.

An advisory for blowing snow also was in effect for northeastern Wyoming, where strong northerly wind reduced visibility to near zero at times in blowing snow.

In North Dakota, a snow and livestock advisory was issued for the extreme southwestern corner of the state.

More than 100 attend business workshop

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — More than 100 Odessa-Midland residents turned out Saturday for a day-long conference and workshop designed to help entrepeneurs seeking to develop or market business ideas.

The conference was sponsored by the Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce and the UTPB Small Business Development Center.

In remarks Saturday morning, M. Ross Boyle, an economics-business development consultant from Reston, Va., explored the general subject of Finding Business Opportunities in Today's Changing Economy.

In a luncheon address, Dr. George Kozmetsky, executive associate for economic affairs with the University of Texas System, told those attending the conference, "You are the largest group of entrepeneurs it has been my pleasure to address in the State of Texas. That makes me feel extremely proud to be here today."

Kozmetsky recalled when he first came to West Texas about 21 years ago there were a few leaders in the region who wanted to do something about building companies.

He termed it "an extremely interesting period," when banks were foreclosing on homes. Moving vans were brought to these homes, he said, and the vans were loaded up and moved to other communities in West Texas.

"That was a period when the word entrepeneur was looked upon as impossible to do here," he stated. "It's kind of rewarding to see that we have put part of the infrastructure in place in West Texas for an occasion that you are having here today." He recounted how the downturn in the economy has impacted private companies he is associated with, noting one of the companies was forced to lay off 5,000 people in the course of a year.

Kozmetsky observed that, in today's changing world, even small companies must become global because "the world has been transformed. We are in no position," he said, "to think the good old days are coming back. What made this country and what made West Texas was unfortunately a war. It's no problem to compete, it's no problem to succeed in business when you destroy a European continent and you destroy an Asian continent and then you're the only producer left," he stated.

But, Kozmetsky said, "None of us in this room want such a period to come back again. What the Permian Basin needs, and what our country needs and what the world needs are entrepeneurial managers, managers who are both creative and innovative at the same time," he stated.

Moving to specifics, Kozmetsky said, "Things are not going to go back. The only thing price is going to do for the State of Texas, in terms of oil and gas, is fairly simple. It's going to make it a lot easier for our legislature," he said.

"It's not going to make your life any easier at all because the tax revenue for so long was a function of price and the function of price was a function of OPEC. Prior to that," he said, "it was the Texas Railroad Commission, but the Texas Railroad Commission has had nothing to say about price for over three decades. So when the price (of oil) comes back, it will only help in terms of the taxes we have to pay,"

"It isn't going to do a darn bit of good in terms of employment and in terms of community growth. And lets get more specific. I've had a long time interest in the Permian Basin because," he stated. "In my vision I would like to see human kind, for the first time, when it exploits the natural resources of a region to stop leaving it as a ghost town."

Priesthood couldn't call Leonard away from fields

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

There's the old story about the farmer who was called to preach.

He saw a sign written in the sky, laid down the reins, kissed his team good-bye, left the plowed field, and became a Bible-thumping "man of the cloth."

He no longer sweated in the field.

Hoot Leonard was down on the farm when he was called into the priesthood in 1951. He was 27.

"It wasn't anything spectacular about it," he said. No sign in the sky.

But he didn't quit farming. He kept on plowing and harvesting. Still is. And he's doing a whole lot more than tilling the soil and preaching. But he plans on pulling the reins back just a bit.

Leonard, a 62-year-old farmer-stockman, is giving up his role as general manager of the Midland Farmers Cooperative.

"It's been real rewarding," Leonard said of his 20 years with the co-op and with "rubbing shoulders with the customers."

"I suppose the last 20 years at the gin have been an outstanding part of my life. Working with the board of directors at the co-op has been most enjoyable," he said.

Leonard was born in 1924 in the Stith farming community in Jones County northwest of Abilene. "There was a cotton gin, post office, and grocery store," Leonard said. "That's about all there ever was there."

In 1929, his family moved to the Walcott area of Martin County to farm. Leonard went to school there and at Tarzan and Courtney. "The school house was the community center," he recalled. "They would have preaching every Sunday and singing Sunday nights."

"WE FARMED COTTON and feed (for the teams)," he recalled. "It took about half of the farm to raise feed for the horses and mules."

"It was drudgery back in those days," he said. "It was sure hard labor. My dad got up at 4:30 every morning, rain or shine. My dad didn't think you could feed the horses and milk the cows after sunrise. Then, you had to eat breakfast and go to the field before daylight."

Leonard, who was named after his father, Carl Leonard, got his nickname from an early-day cowboy movie star.

"Dad was a fan of Hoot Gibson — the left-handed cowboy," Leonard said. "When I came along, he hung 'Hoot' on me."

On the farm, Leonard said his father had a "pretty good work force" — three sons and five daughters. "I'll tell you right now, those girls were mean. We had a hard time growing up."

They worked hard.

"My dad didn't think it was healthy to stay around the house. He felt we needed to take in that sunshine," Leonard recalled. "When we came in (from the field), we milked the cows, fed the horses and pigs, and usually got in the house in time to eat supper by dark."

In 1942, Leonard left the farm to serve in the U.S. Army Air Corps in India. "I didn't see any combat." But he did have a yearning.

"My ambition was to come home and farm."

"It (farming) is something that gets in your blood," Leonard said. "You enjoy it to a fault."

LEONARD, WHO projects an optimistic aura, said farmers always are looking "to do well next year. We keep looking for a better crop next year. I suppose it's kind of a way of life. You're working for yourself. Pride gets involved. It's challenging."

After the war, he become a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and later accepted a calling into the priesthood.

"It just appealed to me," he said of the church. Leonard is a self-sustaining minister.

ECISD survey indicates high levels of illicit drug use

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A survey of about 17 percent of Ector County school students concerning illegal drug use showed "the overall levels of illicit drug use is high" among those attending junior high and high schools in the county school system.

The survey was conducted during a three month period by Drug Education/Intervention Task Force appointed last year by Ector school trustees. The 18-member task force consisted of school board members, administrators, teachers, parents and students.

According to Superintendent Hugh Hayes, the figures developed regarding drug use among Ector County students are somewhat higher than the national average the task force study indicated, he said.

The report states, "Experimentation (with drugs, including alcohol) begins at an early age and students in Ector County are no different than their national counterparts. However, the age group of 12-to-15, the junior high years, is the most prevalent for experimenting with alcoholic beverages and drugs, including so-called hard drugs like cocaine and hallucinogens."

The task force report goes on to say:

— Eighty percent of local high students, compared to 78 percent nationally, have tried beer, with 47 percent locally and 46 percent nationally saying they consume beer monthly or on a more frequent basis.

— Forty percent of local high school students, compared to 44 percent nationally, have tried marijuana, with 17 percent locally and 15 percent nationally using marijuana monthly or on a more frequent basis.

— Sixty-nine percent of local high school students and 63 percent nationally have tried hard liquor, with 37 percent locally and 34 percent nationally saying they consume hard liquor monthly or on a more frequent basis.

— Ten percent of local high school students, compared to six percent nationally, have tried cocaine, with four percent locally and three percent nationally saying they use cocaine on a monthly basis or more frequently.

The task force report went on to say, "The availability of alcohol and drugs appears to be of no consequence. Only 11 percent of high school and junior high students said they could not obtain controlled substances, while 20 percent said they were not sure where to get it. Liquor was only slightly more difficult to obtain," the report said. "Fifteen percent said they could not get liquor and 24 percent said they did not know. More than 45 percent of the high school students said marijuana was either fairly easy or very easy to obtain in Ector County and 20 percent maintained that cocaine was easy to obtain."

The report termed local survey results "sobering," and went on to observe that "there is no historical data to ascertain whether drug usage is increasing or decreasing among students in ECISD. The fact remains however," the task force stated, "that overall levels of illicit drug use is high. Research indicates that adolescents will continue their drug usage into their 20s as they enter the work force," the task force concluded.

Because of this, Lloyd McKee, ECISD deputy superintendent said drug education programs probably will be targeted at elementary school students.

Chaired by Jim D. Moore, ECISD director of instructional services, the group surveyed 2,669 high school and 1,812 junior high students. Survey questions were based on those used in an earlier survey conducted nationally by the Parents' Resource Institute for Drug Education (PRIDE).

The PRIDE survey contained 108 questions dealing with ethnic origins, student age, sex, family makeup, parent educational levels, student's school and social status, with the bulk of the questions designed to determine drug use and availability of drugs.

The task force developed 16 recommendations from the questionnaires, which were presented to the ECISD Board of Trustees March 17.

Board president Mickey Jones has indicated it may take as much as two years before all of the recommendations could be implemented.

One of the recommendations called for closing school campuses so that all students would be required to eat lunch on campus.

Board members ordered a feasibility study of this proposal to see if it would be physically possible. Board member Jim Nelson has indicated that, given current capabilities of school lunch facilities, lunch periods in some instances would have to begin about the same time students, especially high school, are beginning their first classes.

McKee said Friday the task force recommendations represent the first time in his 10 years with ECISD that the district has taken a serious look at possible drug abuse problems among students.

McKee said a recent trip to New York opened his eyes to the problems of illegal drugs use and abuse among students.

He said he brought back a wealth of material from the seminar he attended, which he turned over to the task force.

Some of the methods used in New York schools to combat drug problems were incorporated in the recommendations made by the task force to school board members.

Concerning the task force recommendations, McKee and chairman Moore both agreed that they represented, what might be described as, "adoption of a bold, aggressive approach" by board members to the resolution of drug problems among Ector County school students.

Lower license fee could draw more deer hunters to Texas

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Texas could see more out-of-state hunters when deer season opens Nov. 14 if a proposal to lower their license fee is passed in time.

State Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, introduced legislation last week in Austin that would give those who aren't from Texas a break when they go to pay for a hunting license.

Last year, an all-season license to hunt cost $200 if one wasn't a resident of the state, said Paul Israel, a license supervisor for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission.

Those same privileges could be bought by a Texan for $10, Israel said.

A non-Texan could not purchase anything less than the $200 license, he added.

"The people in my district notified me they were losing out-of-state hunters," Sims said.

Of the 38 counties Sims represents, he said three-quarters of all deer hunting in Texas is done in one of those counties.

The state senator has proposed a modest change in the licensing structure which would enable a non-Texan to purchase a one-time, seven-day license for $37.75, an arbitrary figure he said he "just picked."

The $200 license fee for the entire deer season — which runs from the second Saturday in November through the first Sunday in January — would still apply to non-Texans who wanted to hunt all season, Sims said.

In fiscal year 1984-1985 (September to August), Israel said the non-resident hunters could buy the season license for $100.75.

However, the commission raised that figure in fiscal year 1985-1986 to the present $200.

Though Sims said some of his constituents claim they're losing money because of the flat $200 fee, Israel noted Texas hasn't seen huge numbers flocking to Texas to hunt.

Less than one percent of all hunting in Texas is done by those from out-of-state, the supervisor said.

Of the 1,130,582 hunting licenses issued last fiscal year, just 10,710 were bought by out-of-state hunters, Israel said.

The year prior, Israel said, 12,931 out-of-state hunters bought the licenses.

Non-resident fees comprised $2,063,732 of the $15,516,230.25 the state made from the issuance of all hunting licenses last year.

Skeptics claim Sims' bill will cause the state to lose $1.8 million if implemented.

But Sims said he doesn't see it that way.

The senator does acknowledge the decline in out-of-state hunting revenues could partially be due to a sagging regional economy — the corporations aren't bringing the big hunting parties down as often.

However, Sims said he feels if the license fees are lowered for the non-Texans, more will come to hunt.

Sims said he believes the out-of-state hunter spends at least $65 a day while in Texas.

And while the senator said Pennsylvania may have a larger deer hunting population than Texas, he said the Lone Star state still makes the most money off the late fall and winter sport.

I'd rather hear a blues master or master the putting green

Ott

Here's a list of things, at least the ones I can mention in a family newspaper, I'd rather be doing right now instead of sitting here in the office staring blankly at a video terminal screen.

— Being in a smoke-filled bar in New Orleans listening to someone like B.B. King sing the blues.

— Standing on the 18th green at Burning National looking over a three-foot putt to win The Masters golf tournament. On second thought, make that a six-inch putt. Those three-footers are meaner than an out-of-work lawyer looking for an alimony case.

— Driving cross-country in a car that won't break down, stopping along the way to talk with unusual people who have interesting stories to tell while avoiding those long-winded boors who last said something witty when Eisenhower was running for re-election.

— Having lunch with Woody Allen and his cast of New York neurotics.

— Sipping wine at a sidewalk cafe in Paris.

— Being the guest on a TV talk show and saying to the host, "That, without a doubt, is the dumbest question I have ever heard in my entire life. How'd you get this job, anyway? By sleeping with the producer?" That last line, by the way, works nicely if the host is male or female.

— Sitting down at one of those sissy vegetarian restaurants in southern California and ordering chicken fried steak smothered in cream gravy with a cold beer on the side.

— Giggling uncontrollably when the waiter's face turns the color of a polar bear and he performs an indignant pirouette before disappearing into the kitchen.

— Lounging around a quiet little out-of-the-way fishing hole doing nothing but daydreaming and talking to the insects.

— Leaning across the table in an elegant restaurant and lighting a cigarette for Jessica Lange. If she doesn't smoke, I would just gaze at her.

— Playing a round (no pun intended) of golf with Jan Stephenson.

— Having 30 minutes of one-on-one time with Oral Roberts and trying to figure out where in the world he's coming from.

— Boarding a 747 for some little island in the Carribean where the sand is white, the water so clear you can see your feet and the women golden brown.

— Sitting around the dinner table at my family's house listening to mother ramble on about a bunch of subjects I have no interest in. Just hearing her voice would be nice, just the same.

— Seeing a celebrity appear on a TV talk show without once mentioning his drug, alcohol or emotional problems.

— Reading the results of a government study that reveal all of my vices are actually good for me and will prolong my life if I just keep on doing them.

— Hearing a politician, after winning the election, say, "Thanks for the votes, folks. Now I want you to know right up front that some of my key advisors have been involved in, shall we say, some shady business deals in past, but they're damn good at what they do so get off their backs and let them wheel and deal. They'll make us all a fortune if you goody-goody two shoes will just leave them alone."

ECISD

In past years, school administrators have sought to handle student drug problems within the school system, seeking outside help from area law enforcement agencies only rarely.

It is only recently that board members adopted a policy that allowed the use of drug-sniffing dogs on school campuses.

At one point, a student caught using or possessing drugs on campus was subject to a 5-day suspension the first time and expulsion if caught a second time. This policy was later amended to include assignment to the ECISD Alternative Education Center.

McKee noted that the task force specifically addressed the question of law enforcement involvment in resolution of school district drug problems.

One of a total of 16 recommendations states: "Cooperation with local law enforcement agencies is viewed as critical to the reduction of substance use. To this end, it is recommended that mandatory referral be made to a law enforcement agency to avoid side-stepping the criminal justice process in any instance in which current law has been broken."

The first task force recommendation stated, without reservation, that "The Board of Trustees and the administration of the Ector County Independent School District should take a stand of 'zero tolerance' toward the use of drugs, including alcohol, by students enrolled in the district, and must be unequivocal in this philosophy in providing a drug-free school and school-related environment."

Noting that all ECISD policies, regulations and operational procedures should be revised to accomplish "zero tolerance," the task force said such new "policy should be enforced unilaterally throughout the district without regard to extracurricular participation, academic standing, personality and position. Consistent enforcement is requisite to success in building a drug-free school environment," the task force stated.

Additionally, the task force recommended board members "direct the administration to adopt/develop a drug/alcohol education and prevention curriculum."

Task force members observed such a curriculum "should be implemented as soon as possible" and should be directed toward all seniors, with emphasis given to 6th grade classes, 7th grade life science classes and 10th grade health classes.

The task force observed that "high school students that use beer, liquor and marijuana do so predominately on the weekend at a friend's house. The next most common location for illegal consumption is in an automobile. Alcoholic beveraged for junior high students," the report stated, "are most commonly consumed in their own homes, but hard liquor, marijuana and hallucinogens are consumed at a friend's house."

The task force survey of ECISD students showed that "considerably more students, 13 percent, first tried beer before they were 10-years-old, while only only eight percent had tried cigarettes before their 10th birthday." The task force observed this was comparable to national averages.

Toward resolving the problem of alcohol and drug use in automobiles and at friend's homes, the task force has recommended closing campuses and closer liaison between school officials and parents and the community in general.

The task force also has recommended development of student-based organizations with the primary goal of reducing "peer pressure to use drugs, including alcohol."

Additionally, the elimination of all smoking areas for student and faculty is recommended with the beginning of the 1988-89 school year.

"This is advocated in view of the detriment to health posed by tobacco and in view of the role model that adult employees provide to students," the task force said.

In addition to hiring two TEA certified counselors, the task force has recommended ECISD should give all employees training in substance use prevention and identification to facilitate referral to the campus teams. This should extend to include all employees who may have contact with students, such as bus drivers, custodians, office personnel, cafeteria workers, etc., the task force said.

LEONARD

Leonard farmed in good years and lean years. In the poorer years, such as the drought of the 1950s, he became a carpenter and built houses to keep the farm going. He was farming north of Stanton until 1954, when he started farming in Midland County.

In the early 1960s, Leonard co-owned a John Deere farm tractor dealership in Stanton.

"Of course, times were hard," Leonard recalled, "and people were struggling to stay in the farm business." Leonard's good-hearted nature precluded him from high pressuring farmers to pay their bills. Most couldn't then, and his business went into a slump. After he left the dealership, farming picked up and so did the tractor business.

All the while, the 6-foot-4 Leonard still was farming.

In March 1967, he was named general manager of the co-op, which under his management began to prosper even more and began paying dividends to its members.

IN THE EARLY 1980s, Leonard was injured in a ginning accident.

An over-flow feeder which was being installed fell on his left foot. Later, the leg was amputated below the knee.

"It was one of those things — a man got careless," he reflected. "It was carelessness on my part. It hurt like the dickens."

Soon, he was back working and wearing his old cowboy boots.

Leonard, a gentleman who always speaks kindly, has a strong following.

"He's one of the most giving people I have ever meet in my life," said Frances Lewis, the co-op's cotton clerk. "He always tries to look at the brighter side of agriculture — in everything he has ever done."

"All we can say is that he's a great guy — a good boss to work for," said Leona Hall, the co-op's office manager. He never turns anybody aside.

"If you need $20," she said, "hit Hoot. He's a most generous man."

"He's No. 1 plus," said Peck Hale, a retired farmer. "There's not a minus. He gets disturbed when things don't go right on the farm," Hale said, "but he doesn't say much about it."

He has helped out many a down-and-out man.

J.D. Crawford, former co-op director who's into farming, ranching, banking and insurance, said he has seen Leonard upset, "but I've never seen him blow his stack — never a curse word."

"I'll tell you what," Crawford said, "he lives it (a good life). He's a good Christian. Hoot has always been real positive. He's helped more drunks and dead-beats in trying to straighten their lives out."

AND HE OFTEN has called upon other farmers in rallying to help a neighbor who has fallen to misfortune by illness, accident or circumstance.

"He was always the first to help — to get things organized," Crawford said. Leonard and other farmers have planted crops and harvested crops for farmers who needed help in emergency situations.

Under Leonard's management, the co-op has developed into "a modern plant that has a real strong financial statement — one of the strongest ginning financial statements in the country," said Gene Jones, a farmer who is chairman of the co-op's board of directors.

Jones said that Leonard has "managed to keep it (the co-op) going and viable" throughout the years. And in business meetings throughout those years, there has been "never a cross word" from Leonard.

Jones noted Leonard's varied but agriculture-rooted background. "He's herded sheep, fixed windmills, punched cattle, planted many a row of cotton and feed, and operated a John Deere (tractor-farm implement) dealership."

Old-time farmer Newt Locklar, who lost his left leg in 1946, said of Leonard: "I don't know of anybody who could take his place. You're not going to replace him. You've got to do the best you can." At 87, Locklar is still farming.

After he retires from the co-op, Leonard said he, if asked, would be a willing adviser to the co-op. But, he said, "There's nothing like an old ex sticking his nose in the business."

LEONARD SAID he plans to take his wife, Colleen, a music teacher, poet and writer, on vacation. They have six children: Guy Leonard, a Midland farmer and oilfield pumper; Jackie Carter, executive director of High Sky Children's Ranch; Don Leonard, who works in computers in a Washington nuclear-fuel plant; Elaine Leonard, a field gauger in Ardmore, Okla.; Jo Ann Darley, a registered nurse in Midland, and Gail Stratton, a juvenile probation officer for Midland County.

Leonard seems imbued with good will.

"He's the finest man I have ever known," said Charlie Wright, superintendent of the co-op's cotton gin, "and the best man I've ever worked for. I feel almost like his brother."

"Hoot lives what he teaches," said Wright, 50. "He's big hearted." And sometimes he "gets taken advantage of. I'm not necessarily that way."

Martin County Sheriff Dan Saunders said he has known Leonard since he was six years old and picking cotton at Walcott.

"He's one of the finest Christian gentlemen I've ever met in my life," Saunders said. "If everybody was like Hoot Leonard, you could close all the sheriffs' and police offices."

City street improvements top Tuesday's council agenda

From Staff Reports

Consideration of a list of city street improvements and rights-of-way purchases to be made in 1987 tops City Council's agenda for Tuesday's 10 a.m. meeting at City Hall.

The list of eight projects all would be funded from the city bond monies, with a little more than $2.6 million currently available, Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said Saturday.

Included in the list is the reconstruction of a large portion of Wadley Avenue in a two-phase process.

The Wadley reconstruction would begin at I Street and continue to Garfield Street at an estimated cost of $525,000. The project's second phase would start at Ward Street and continue to Godfrey Street at an estimated cost of $830,000.

Also included among projects for this year is the placing of the last 1½ inches of blacktop on a one-mile stretch of Midkiff Road from Golf Course Road to Wadley Avenue and the reconstruction of a 1,000-foot section of Michigan Avenue between Big Spring Street and Main Street.

Total cost of the two projects are $330,000, according to the list.

Other projects are the almost $400,000 reconstruction of the Midland Drive and Illinois Avenue intersection with the addition of new traffic signals.

The list also recommends construction of a drainage channel from Fairgrounds Road to County Road 1150 at a cost of $100,000 and the $250,000 re-alignment of Lamesa Road to allow connection to Loop 250 at a later date.

McGregor said that project could be delayed until 1988 depending on negotiations with the Midland Soccer Association.

Because the realignment will cut through a section of the association's Hogan Park playing fields, the city wants to coordinate with the group to complete the project outside the soccer playing season, McGregor said.

Also up for completion this year is construction of a low water crossing at the I Street entrance to Midland College. Of the $100,000 estimated cost of the project, the city will contribute $30,000, McGregor said.

Other items up for council consideration Tuesday include:

— awarding an almost $260,000 bid to the Johnny Johnson Insurance Co. of Midland for city fire and disaster coverage,

— a request for establishment of an almost 8-mile-long bike route in northwest Midland, and — an $4,300 write-off due to insufficient funds of checks written the city.

MS group staging battle of bartenders

From Staff Reports

The National Multiple Sclerosis Society is sponsoring an Ugliest Bartender Contest to raise money for its fight against multiple sclerosis.

Local restaurants and bars are joining in the fundraiser which began last Tuesday.

Multiple sclerosis is the leading neurological disease among adults and usually strikes people between the ages of 20 and 40.

Joe Dar, local chairman of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society , said "UGLY" is an acronym. He said that U stands for understanding, G is for generous, L is for lovable, and Y stands for you.

The West Texas chapter, in cooperation with Standard Sales, Inc., KNFM, KMID, Lamar Outdoor Advertising and United Express are asking patrons of local taverns to make their choices at 25 cents a vote.

The " Ugliest" bartender will win a trip for two to Colorado. Proceeds from the contest fund will go toward research of the causes and cure of multiple sclerosis and help provide services to area people with the disease.

A kick-off party for the competition was held March 9 by the West Texas Chapter.

The National Sclerosis Society is the only national volunteer health agency in the United States that supports worldwide research to find the cause of more effective treatments for a cure for multiple sclerosis.

SEMINAR

"The only resource that you have here and that is represented in this room," Kozmetsky said, "is the intellect and the brainpower that you represent with the desire to live, prosper, grow and develop your families here."

Kozmetsky went on to explain the importance of UTPB to the area, but referring to the amount of talent present for the conference, he stated, "Talent does not come out of universities. They are important and this university is a key. We've got to make sure the state legislature, the coordinating board, does not close it down. Secondly, we've got to make sure that the community supports it because we've got to keep our brainpower at home," he said.

From the standpoint of the state creating a pool of venture capital to encourage and finance entrepeneurial efforts, he stated, "There is no shortage of capital in the State of Texas. We have over $28 billion in public pension funds. Less than half a percent of that would be $1.4 billion that could be available to help start growth and expand companies in the State of Texas without taxing one dollar," Kozmetsky stated.

"The dream that I've been after since 1983 is to invest $5 billion in the new economic infrastructure of this state. I want it endowed," he said. "I don't want it to be a tax."

Kozmetsky suggested that property in Texas is worth hundreds of billions of dollars and if $5 billion can't be raised on that "then you don't have much imagination," he stated.

Boyle, in an interview following his opening session remarks, expressed the belief that labels currently attached to segments of the workforce, such as manufacturing and service, cause what might be described as a distortion of what is actually happening.

He contends that manufacturing jobs, rather than disappearing as indicated by employment figures, are simply taking another form.

Citing the practice of many manufacturing corporations that do away with accounting departments or other operational phases in favor of contracting for the same services from an outside firm show up in labor statistics as having done away with a certain number of manufacturing jobs.

The outside service doing the same job, he says, winds up perhaps showing an increase in "service industry" jobs when, in actuality, the people — sometimes the same people who were doing the job for the manufacturing corporation as manufacturing workers — now do the same thing as service workers.

Boyle said the Department of Commerce is in the process of overhauling its job index codes to more accurately reflect what is actually happening to the workforce.

"I believe," Boyle said, "that as much as 30 to 40 percent of growth in business services and some professional services in the last 10 years can be attributed to simply changing labels."

Concerning the retraining of displaced workers, Boyle says he doesn't particularly favor federally funded forced retraining programs "because they don't usually work too well."

He suggests, instead, that the nation's educational system should be able to cope with the problems of producing people capable of adapting to a changing workplace.

Boyle observes that teaching children in our schools to become "computer literate" will go a long way toward helping them adapt to changing demands for workers.

However, he said, computers are not being properly used in schools primarly because too many teachers don't know how to use them or are afraid of them.

There is the additional problem of union opposition to computers because of the fear they could eventually eliminate teaching jobs.

Boyle believes that, while economic changes occurring now are causing discomfort, quite severe in some instances, the marketplace will eventually correct itself.

He refers to changes that occurred in agricultural because of the advent of mechanization. Many farmers had to leave the farm and go to the cities to work in factories. What is happening now is not all that much different, he contends.

NARFE will launch drive for Alzheimer study fund

From Staff Reports

The National Association of Retired Federal Employees has entered into an agreement with the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association under which NARFE will participate in a self perpetuating endowment program with ADRDA, according to Leland L. Dupont, president of the Texas Federation of Chapters of NARFE.

The agreement calls for NARFE to launch a drive to raise $500,000 for a fund which will be used to support a faculty research scholar that would be selected on a peer review basis through the Medical Advisory Board of ADRDA.

Dumont said that NARFE's fundraising efforts on behalf of Alzheimer's victims and their families over the past year has indicated the group's special concern and interest in eliminating Alzheimer's disease as a threat to the country's aging population.

He said the research into the causes of the disease is especially important and that support of a research scholarship is "an exciting prospect."

Texas chapters of NARFE have already contributed approximately $25,000 to the project.

Luncheon-book review planned

A luncheon-book review at Pages and Prints Bookstore, 40 Plaza Center, is set for Thursday, featuring Dorothy Perkins and "The Accidental Tourist."

Macon Leary is a travel writer who hates both travel and strangeness. Grounded by loneliness, comfort, and a somewhat odd domestic life, Leary is about to embark on a surprising new journey. It is called love — and it arrives in the unlikely shape of a fuzzy-haired dog-obedience trainer who promises to turn him into a happy traveler.

A Book-of-the-Month selection, a New York Times Notable Book of the Year and winner of the National Book Critics Circle Award, Newsday calls it "delicious humor."

Ms. Perkins, since her retirement from Midland High School, devotes her time to community projects. President of the Midland Woman's Club, she also volunteers for the Midland Community Concert Association, and is a frequent book reviewer.

Prepaid reservations for the box lunch, catered by Foods Fantastic, may be made at the bookstore between 10 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. For additional information, call 687-5172.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Much on MC's agenda this week

By H.A. TUCK

Tuck

It's a bit difficult writing a column a week in advance, especially since the past week has been the college's spring break. However, there are things coming up this next week you should be aware of.

• • •

Before we get to those, however, we have to comment on attending Midland College's third appearance at the NJCAA national basketball tournament in Hutchinson, Kan. When we went up with the 1982 team, none of us had any idea of what to expect. But Midland won the first game on a last-second blocked shot, defeating the 1981 national champion. The Chaps took another game, a third one, and there they were in the finals. Miami Dade was top-ranked, undefeated, and had a 6-11 player who was awesome! A regulation game and two overtimes later, Midland College was declared the national champion, thanks to Jerry Stone, Spud Webb, Puntus Wilson, Lance McCain (who sat out the last two games with a cracked vertebra), Chester Smith, Jerome Crowe, Chuck Robinson, Justin Morett, Rodney McCristion, and David Thompson.

But it was the spectators, the citywide enthusiasm for the tourney, the organization of the sponsoring American Legion Post, welcome signs, smiles and talks on the streets, and the greatest news coverage I've ever seen which make it one of those special events.

That same feeling returned when the Chaps went back in 1985. The Chaps lost in the semifinals to the eventual champion, but everything else was the same. As we headed for Hutch again, we knew what to expect, but the feeling of anticipation was as great as ever. It's just a great event and we hope many of you can share it someday!

• • •

The Chaparral golf team today is starting play in the three-day Texas Junior College Championship at Del Lago near Austin. Coach Delnor Poss and his team will get an idea of what they can expect in regional competition later this spring.

• • •

Regular monthly meeting of the Board of Trustees was postponed until this Tuesday. The normal meeting time came during spring break and many of the trustees were following the Chaparrals.

This is the meeting when faculty members are recommended for teaching assignments in 1987-88. Their recommendations follow evaluations and individual meetings with their supervising Division Chairman, Dean, and the Vice President for Instruction.

EDUCATION

As a Student Activities entertainment feature, comedian Matt Rix is appearing at noon Wednesday in the Student Center.

• • •

Classes starting this week through the Continuing Education Department really offer subjects to stretch your mind or your muscles. It all depends on what you would like to learn.

The classes include: Speaking For Advancement, Stained Glass II, Cake Decorating II, Aerobic Dancing, Comparative Religion (Eastern), Bookkeeping Fundamentals II, Crochet I, Tole Painting II, and Concrete Masonry.

History instructor Dr. Charles Simmons is teaching the Comparative Religion course. With his diverse background, including a stint as a university department chairman and president of a community college, he's one of the more interesting folks on campus. This course is one he's presented off-campus previously that has been well-received.

To enroll for any of these courses, visit the Continuing Education Department in the Administration Building. More information is available by calling 685-4518.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

Good vote for city

Although only one political race on the April 4 ballot is contested in Midland, that one certainly merits the attention of voters in that city district. The race is for City Council District 2, a predominantly minority segment of the city, and a seat now held by first-term Councilwoman Oralia Corrales.

Ms. Corrales, who owns an insurance business, is being opposed in her bid for re-election by two individuals who have sought election to the City Council before — Barbara Harris, an outspoken advocate of minority interests in the city who also holds a degree in sociology, and Woodrow W. Bailey Jr., a local businessman and associate minister.

The election of an individual to represent the people of District 2 takes on particular import because of the heavy minority population in that sector of the city, primarily Hispanics but also a large number of Blacks, and because of the district's particular needs. When Ms. Corrales was elected to the position two years ago, just after the city had gone to a system of single-member districts, it was recognized that as Midland's first minority council member she would be facing enormous expectations to bring about change to an area of the community that had suffered from neglect and misuse as the city grew in other directions.

Midland's east and south sides still have needs that are largely unrepresentative of the city as a whole — more streets need to be paved and repaired, dilapidated housing still needs to be dealt with, the economy of that portion of the city needs special attention.

In discussions with the three candidates for District 2, it became clear that each is motivated by a strong concern for the people of the district. Each undoubtedly would bring to the position particular interests that would benefit the district and its people. They all are concerned people who care about Midland, District 2 and the people who call that portion of the city home.

Ms. Harris speaks of the needs in District 2 and says if elected she would form a "Progressive Minority Commission" intended to help her pinpoint the total needs of the district. That is a good suggestion and a good tool to be used by whomever is elected to represent the district. She also is a strong advocate for a multi-purpose center in that district.

Bailey also indicates he would solicit assistance from representatives of various groups to help him define the needs in the district. He also speaks of the need to seek businesses that could improve the employment picture in that district by utilizing the work skills now existing in the population, such as a sewing factory. That, too, is a valid idea.

While Ms. Corrales hasn't brought to District 2 all the changes many may had hoped for in her first term, she notes — correctly — it would be next to impossible to change overnight — or in a two-year term — what developed over a span of several decades. On the other hand, she has brought about important changes that clearly have benefitted the people of District 2.

She lists as accomplishments funding for a tutoring program administered by the Black Advisory Council, funding for Martin Luther King Jr. Park, funding for an economic diversification employee for the east and south side area, funding for the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, workshops to train people in the district to obtain city, county, school and federal government contracts, paving on several streets in south Midland and a few in east Midland, and funding for the east side Economic Task Force.

But her efforts go beyond that in many regards. Although some opponents have charged she represents the interests of Hispanics in the district moreso than Blacks, her actions do not substantiate that. She has nominated numerous minority individuals to the council for service on various city boards. Some of those she has nominated include Nicky Sanchez and Putty Zachery, parks; Tony Corrillo and James Ramsoure, crime prevention; and Conrad Coleman and Damas Salgado, street commission.

Overall, Ms. Corrales' record in her first term in office is a good one. She seems to be representing the best interests of all the district's residents. We believe a vote for her would be a good vote not only for all the people of the district, but the residents of Midland as a whole.

Another View:

The jazz of Kafka

A trial the other day in Prague provides a vivid example of how difficult it is to shift gears in a totalitarian system, and how difficult it is for outsiders to recognize change when it's happening.

Since 1968 and the crushing of the liberalizing "Prague spring" by Soviet tanks, Czechoslovakia has been among the most orthodox of the Eastern European Communist countries. So when Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev began his celebrated campaign for more glasnost (openness) in Soviet society, his Czech counterparts were put in an awkward position.

The trial of five leaders of Jazz Section, an officially approved unit of the musicians union which published both musical and literary works and became, in effect, the only vehicle for free expression in the country, offered confusing signals of what the Czech response to the Soviet model is likely to be.

The young publishers were put on trial for making illegal profits — a charge they denied — and for refusing to disband once they fell out of official favor. Two of them were given prison terms, but the judge handed down far lighter sentences than the prosecution demanded and was apologetic even for that. Indeed, he praised the young men for producing "works of high quality."

At the same time, however, testimony of an interior ministry official, whose recitation could have come straight from the pages of Kafka, sent another signal. In carrying out an order to disband Jazz Section after it began publishing works by officially disapproved artists, including Nobel Prize-winning poet Jaroslav Seiffert, the official failed to acknowledge a letter from the young publishers requesting clarification of the order. Why? Because, the functionary told the court, "we could not address letters to an organization that did not exist."

To confuse things even further, Czech authorities were sending still another, contradictory signal by allowing Western reporters to cover the trial and by tolerating an assemblage of about 200 Czech sympathizers of Jazz Section just outside the courtroom, from whence their clapping and chanting of support for the defendants could be clearly heard. Whether such maddening inconsistency is a harbinger of better — or worse — things to come in Czechoslovakia is, of course, impossible to know. After all, it is the land of Kafka.

Starving Haitians need U.S. assistance

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration wants to reduce economic aid and increase military assistance to Haiti, a nation on the brink of mass starvation. The proposal has appalled some members of Congress, who point out that the prostrate country is struggling desperately to recover from 29 years of systematic looting by the brutal Duvalier dictatorship.

Jack Anderson

Congress authorized $109 million in economic aid to Haiti last year, not nearly enough to feed its hungry people. Yet the administration is asking for only $88.5 million this year. Starving Haitians, meanwhile, are stripping bark off trees for food and cutting down the trees for charcoal.

Without trees to hold back the rushing rains, topsoil is now being washed into the sea. Some experts warn that Haiti could be turned into an uninhabitable desert in 25 years. Clearly, the need is for more economic help. Yet the Reagan administration has responded with a $4.55 million aid proposal.

This includes $30,000 for "crowd control," which sounds ominously like suppression to a populace that has been cowed by police for nearly three decades. The State Department has explained the proposed expenditure delicately. It would involve sending a team of 16 or 17 instructors to spend six weeks teaching the Haitian military what Foggy Bottom describes as "the use of minimal force in the face of demonstration and the ability not to overreact to peaceful demonstrations."

Of course, it was precisely the violent popular demonstrations early in 1986 that forced "President-for-life" Jean-Claude (Baby Doc) Duvalier to flee for his life.

There is a further point that concerns critics. Despite the blandly reassuring description offered by the State Department, the crowd control proposal has a disturbingly familiar ring for those with long memories. During the Nixon administration, U.S. experts provided "internal security" training to the military dictatorships of Brazil and Uruguay.

Congressional critics of the administration's Haitian aid package are led by Rep. Walter Fauntroy, D-D.C., who is chairman of a special Foreign Affairs Committee task force on Haiti. The critics have met several times with State Department officials; Fauntroy and his colleagues are trying to get the administration to drop or cut the military aid request and restore economic aid to last year's level.

According to an internal summary of one meeting, obtained by our associate Lucette Lagnado, the entire $4.55 million military aid request came under attack from congressional staffers on legal grounds. They pointed out that, under the law, the administration would have to "certify" that the Haitian armed forces have undergone comprehensive reform since the repressive Duvalier era before military aid can be provided.

The army helped drive out Duvalier, but certification might be difficult. The internal memorandum notes that the State Department representatives "could not adequately make a case that reorganization and reform had taken place," and adds pointedly: "Nothing was or could be said about the two (Haitian military) units most often involved in violent abuses, the Dessalines Battalion and the Leopards."

The memorandum points out, significantly, that the Leopards unit was organized and trained in the early 1970s by American contract advisers. It also notes that other governments wouldn't touch the crowd control proposal. Canada was approached, the memo disclosed, but "has no interest in getting involved in crowd-control training." France has indicated a willingness to train only a "gendarmerie" or police force.

The memo states that the Dessalines Battalion and the Leopards are dominated by notorious officers remaining from the Duvalier dynasty. In fact, the memo observed that of all the Duvalier-era holdover units, only the Presidential Guards can be said to have been genuinely reformed. "No staff participating in the meeting thought that a certification on the merits could be made," the memorandum concluded.

Gorbachev's 'glasnost' more of the same

WASHINGTON — On the same recent day a Soviet official acknowledged what the world has long known — that the Soviet Union has chemical weapons — and a Soviet agency acknowledged what no one ever doubted — that there is inflation in the Soviet economy — there was a third and comparably dramatic development on the glasnost front. It was reported that glasnost has a glittering pedigree: Lenin loved it.

George F. Will

It seems Lenin used the word "glasnost," meaning openness, 46 times. That is not a promiscuous use when spread through 55 volumes of his writings, and some uses are of almost delphic inscrutability: "Glasnost is a sword which itself can heal the very wounds it may inflict" and (Lenin loved martial metaphors) it is good to use "the artillery fire of party glasnost to combat vice and error." Of course the party alone defines vice and error.

Near the Kremlin a poster reads, "Even today Lenin is more alive than all the living." Lenin's texts are scrutinized the way theologians scrutinize scripture. Ten linguists toiling full-time have compiled 2,500,000 cards establishing that Lenin used 37,600 different words; he invented 4,000, few of which are still used. One that is still used is "chekist." It means "secret policemen."

Pravda recently published a long celebration of the 65th anniversary of the golden day when Lenin first used the word "perestroika." It means "reconstruction," and Gorbachev adores it. Two words Lenin used frequently were "bureaucraticism" (600 citations) and "discipline" (400). Lenin deplored bureaucraticism and praised discipline, as does Gorbachev, whose recent rhetoric praises "resolute struggle against negative phenomena, permissiveness, mutual protectionism, slackening of discipline."

A Gorbachev aide appearing on American television was asked how Gorbachev could promise more democracy, given that Soviet ideology for 70 years has said the Soviet Union has perfect democracy, defined by Lenin as "democratic centralism," meaning rule by the party, which as the vanguard of the proletariat always knows best. The Gorbachev aide explained: "We want to have more of the same. Democratic centralism is here to stay."

Glasnost is more of the same Leninism. It is the ostentatious "pardoning" of a tiny portion of political prisoners — the word "pardon" underscoring that dissent is criminal — combined with a more than countervailing crackdown on Jewish refuseniks. During Khrushchev's fall in the early 1960s, liberalization rose from below, and the line between permissible and impermissible behavior became blurred. Gorbachev's thaw is imposed from above, reasserting the regime's unbridled capriciousness. For example, "Dr. Zhivago" will finally be published, but the regime quickly squelched rumors that it would permit publication of Solzhenitsyn's "Cancer Ward."

Nowadays it is obligatory in polite society to say that if Gorbachev means what he says, we should hope he succeeds with his reforms. But is anyone listening to what he says? His reiterated aim is to make the Leninist system ("more of the same") more efficient. Why is that in the West's interest?

Gorbachev has been Soviet leader for more than two years and probably has been dominant for longer. Thus it is surely indicative of his values that the Soviet press is still full of Goebbels-like lies. One now being spread in Soviet "journalism" is that the AIDS virus was concocted by American biological-weapons scientists, and that AIDS outbreaks around the world "are as a rule represented in the areas near American war bases."

Vassily Aksyonov, who was expelled from the Soviet Union in 1980, recently went to a library to peruse some glasnost-era Soviet publications. He concluded: "What's new? Can I distinguish today's Soviet papers from those of yesteryear, which made me instantly nauseous? Yes, there are things that are new: the mention of some previously taboo problems, a certain critical intonation borrowed from dissident groups of the '60s, some steaming rebukes to the 'bureaucracy,' But...should I state it openly? The papers still make me nauseous."

Aksyonov is not talking about frauds like the AIDS story. He has other, subtler mendacities in mind:

"The First Thaw, back in the '60s, produced a group of people with a penchant for winking. Those who went beyond winking and dared to call a spade a spade were brutally kicked out of the country. Apparently those winking liberals are going to be in fashion again, with all their paraphernalia of euphemisms, hints, vague allusions, and ideological duplicity." He cites as a current example a piece of glasnost journalism in a Soviet literary publication. The article concerns a French novelist with a Russian background. The novelist's mother was Christian and the father "belonged to another religion." Aksynov notes that under glasnost, as usual, "the mention of Judaism in a positive mode is considered inappropriate."

When a new generation takes over an old neighborhood and makes tidying improvements to Victorian houses, while preserving their essential structures, the process is called "gentrification." Gorbachev's glasnost has been properly called the gentrification of totalitarianism.

RUSSELL BAKER

Difference in firing ability is 'Nancy Gene'!

Since President Reagan can't bear to fire anybody, his wife has to do it for him. A sensible division of first family duties, is it not? Yet when the famous firing of White House staff chief Donald Regan brought it to light, many people registered shock and loathing.

Russell Baker

What kind of man, they asked, lets his wife do the head chopping? A "wimpish" man, replied a colleague of mine named Bill, who really knows how to hurt a guy.

"Wimpish," eh Bill? The one policy in six years of Reaganism on which I see eye to eye with the president, and you call it "wimpish." Well listen, pal, no "wimp" could have taken the forceful stand I took on my wedding day when I threatened to call it off unless my wife-to-be promised to "love, honor and do all the firing."

Ability to do the firing doesn't separate the men from the "wimps." It is a genetic trait, like being able to curl your tongue. Some people have tongue-curling genes, others don't. Obviously, President Reagan doesn't have firing genes; obviously, Mrs. Reagan does.

This gives President Reagan a valuable administrative weapon: the Nancy option. Where he went wrong was not in using it, but in failing to use it sooner. Look at the case of Donald Regan:

Having sized up his boss, Regan realized he was working for a man with no firing genes. I have worked for men like that myself, so I have a good idea what went through Donald Regan's mind.

He probably thought, "I can make a tremendous mess on this job without getting fired, so why don't I let some of those nits down in the basement see if they can do something interesting with foreign policy?"

I once hired a house painter who thought exactly the same way after noting my own gene deficiency. In the basement we had, not a bunch of nits, but a lot of part-empty cans of paint left over from jobs of long ago. Seeing the painter bringing one upstairs, I inquired why. Realizing that I lacked the firing gene, he told me.

I told my wife. "He's going to put that old throwaway paint on the dining-room trim unless somebody speaks to him."

"Speaks to him! I'll speak to him," said she, firing him 10 seconds later, as I knew she would.

The painter didn't realize that, though firing-proof myself, I could call in heavy firing power if necessary. Donald Regan made the same error. He didn't realize the president had the Nancy option. How else explain his ignoring so many thunderous hints that his resignation would be enthusiastically welcomed by the president?

I don't know how President Reagan triggered the Nancy option. He kept acting as though he thought Donald Regan was the best buddy a president ever had. Still, he had to be worried. Maybe he and Nancy were stacking the dishwasher one night when she said, "Why do you look so worried?" to which he might have replied, "Don Regan's going to keep right on making a tremendous mess unless somebody speaks to him."

Some of the toughest executives can't stand firing. The meanest executive vice president I know tells me firing is the part of his job he hates. His company's chief executive officer — and this is a Fortune 500 corporation — can't be trusted with a firing.

On one occasion, this corporate dynamo, obliged to fire a department head, gave the fellow the impression he was being offered a better job and the man strolled away saying, "I'll think it over."

Presidents of the United States have to fire a lot of people, but rarely in person. Presidents attract hordes of hit men eager to bring grim news from the Oval Office. Only the most eminent candidates for the boot get it straight from No. 1, and even some of the toughest No. 1's could have used the Nancy option to advantage.

John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, for instance, both despised and feared J. Edgar Hoover. Both could have "fired" him by simply not reappointing him. Both reappointed him anyhow. None of their retainers pressed the obvious case for dumping the old ogre, as Mrs. Reagan pressed the case for being shed of Donald Regan.

The ace presidential firer of modern times was surely Harry Truman. In firing Gen. Douglas MacArthur, he gave the boot to the biggest enchilada of them all. Unlike Kennedy and Johnson, when Truman saw somebody who needed firing he was not deterred by fear that a fuss was bound to follow.

Was this courage or foolishness? Only history can say. When Richard Nixon acted with Trumanesque vigor to crippple the Watergate investigation with the firings of "the Saturday night massacre," it destroyed him.

This is another reason I have never become president. I don't want my wife having to make decisions like that.

No common ground between evolution, creationism

Modisett

The "debate" raging on the Reporter-Telegram's opinion pages concerning the theory of evolution and, on the flip side, creationism is interesting, but I have a sneaking suspicion that it is irresoluble.

You see, what the two sides are seeking to do is to present evidence that will convince the other side of the correctness of their particular argument. Since one side is essentially restricted to cold, hard facts and the other is based largely on faith, the two sides will never find a common ground. The reason is simple, at least from where I stand. That common ground doesn't exist and never will, if you subscribe to the Biblical account of Earth as a battleground on which the forces of good are pitted against the forces of evil. Scientific fact doesn't exist to prove some of what Biblical scripture asks Christians to believe; vice versa, some of what Scripture attests actually appears to contradict what the theory of evolution leads some scientists to accept as scientific indicators of what may have led to life on this planet.

I'm no Biblical scholar and certainly no scientist, but I can recognize and accept the difference between the two thoughts. The theory of evolution is nothing more than what the title indicates — a theory. Scientists necessarily deal in facts only. If something cannot be proven — for example, that the moon is made of Longhorn cheese (well, we are in Texas) — it is followed and espoused only as a theory until the evidence accumulates to either prove it or reveals it to be a fallacy.

Most of the Bible is not fact in a scientific sense. Sure, historians and archaeological evidence confirm that certain individuals and places mentioned in the Bible actually existed. We know for a certainty, for example that there really was a Herod the Great who ruled Palestine around the time of the birth of Jesus Christ. But as far as I'm aware, the religious teachings of Jesus Christ to the disciples can only be accepted on faith that, first, He lived as a man on Earth and, second, that the stories passed down by the disciples are accurate versions of His teachings.

True, the Dead Sea Scrolls give modern man the most direct scientific link with the earliest writers who penned the Old Testament, but how does one find evidence of anyone who talked with the Biblical Adam and Eve or who heard firsthand the account of the creation of this world?

Hal Lindsey, the author of "The Late Great Planet Earth" and numerous other books, has explored Biblical prophecy in depth and with remarkable insight. He asserts that much of what was prophesied in the Bible has come to pass.

But even the evidence that Lindsey presents still has to be considered as shaky on scientific grounds. There's not enough solid, physical evidence to turn it into scientific fact.

That doesn't mean, of course, that it isn't so; simply that it hasn't been proven to the point of quieting the skeptics. Skepticism is a healthy attitude from religion's standpoint because the acceptance of Christianity's teachings must come through faith, not through scientific evidence.

Biblically speaking, our life on this world is a time of testing. We are given a choice of light or darkness. We can only accept the light through our faith. That's tough to do if one can only be influenced by scientific fact.

In another day, another scientist — probably the best known American scientist — named Albert Einstein said of science and religion:

"Science without religion is lame, religion without science is blind."

Read Einstein's comment carefully. He's saying that full understanding of this world takes both religion and science, both faith and knowledge.

Did man merely become man over a span of millions of years or was there divine intervention? I know what I believe and accept. But the kind of debate that has been ongoing is important because it gets man to ask questions...questions that sometimes lead him back to the reality that answers won't always be forthcoming on the basis of scientific data.

Why aren't the answers forthcoming? Because where Christian religious doctrine is concerned, the answers can only be found in faith and not in earthly evidence.

Doctors committed to providing best care

Since 1933, March 30 has been designated Doctors' Day, to honor America's physicians. It was on March 30, 1842, that Dr. Crawford W. Long became the first acclaimed physician to use ether as an anesthetic agent in a surgical technique.

Since that date 145 years ago, many changes have been made in health care. Yet, the physicians' dedication to the science of healing hasn't changed. Whether serving patients in hospitals, private offices and clinics, or continuing the care in the home, physicians are committed to providing the best health care possible.

Our community is fortunate to be served by many doctors who work long and hard to better the lives of others. It is a pleasure for Upjohn HealthCare Services to pay tribute to them on Doctors' Day, and to say thank you.

Hispanic chamber thanks Midlanders

The board of directors and membership of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce wish to take this opportunity to publicly thank all those Midlanders that were so supportive of our Third Annual Installation Banquet held on March 7th.

The community of Midland as a whole has been a major source of encouragement to the Hispanic Chamber and therefore makes it not only a pleasure but an honor to serve the entire community. We continue to work towards the overall betterment of our way of life for the future of our families.

It is hard not to succeed when one can count on not only the support of the membership but also of the media. We could not have achieved all that we have in the past 2½ years without such friends and supporters as KWEL, KJJT, El Editor, KMID Channel 2, Channel 9 and the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Smoking restrictions have historical roots

As the battle between the smokers and the non-smokers continues to heat up, it might be of interest to examine the conflict from a historical viewpoint.

The Connecticut Blue Laws which governed the settlements of early colonial times (1600-1700) had the following to say about tobacco, the use of which was just beginning in the colonies:

"It was ordered that no person under twenty years of age, nor any other who had not already accustomed himself to the use of it, should take any tobacco until he had obtained a certificate, from under the hand of an approved physician, that it was useful for him, and until he had also obtained a license from the Court. All others who had addicted themselves to the use of it were prohibited from taking it in any company, or at their labors, or in traveling, unless ten miles at least from any company; and, though not in company, not more than once a day, upon pain of a fine of a six-pence for every offense. One substantial witness was to be sufficient proof of the crime."

In today's context these Blue Laws make for bizarre reading. However, they were designed in total to prevent, as far as possible, of allowing the individual to become dependent upon the public for their support.

Texas will need nuclear plants in the future

By DR. HERBERT H. WOODSON

Throughout most of Texas' history, natural gas and oil have been keys to our state's growth and development. Our state will continue to rely heavily on these resources. Yet, Texas is entering the nuclear age. El Paso Electric and Gulf States Utilities already are a part of the nuclear energy family. The first of two units at the South Texas Nuclear Project is scheduled to begin operating this summer.

Nuclear power isn't without controversy, because these plants cost more than expected. Critics have charged that they shouldn't have been ordered. Such a blanket indictment is both unfair and shortsighted. The decision to go nuclear should be judged on why the plants were needed, and placed into the perspective of the external circumstances that affected their costs. Furthermore, focusing on plant costs alone ignores nuclear power's lasting importance as an alternative to the burning of fossil fuels.

Energy has taken us on a roller coaster ride. A decade ago natural gas shortages loomed, and oil prices of $100 per barrel were predicted. The prospects of future shortages and spiraling prices led to drastic action. Although later repealed, in 1975 the Texas Railroad Commission ruled that natural gas couldn't be used in new power plants. Congress passed the Fuel Use Act in 1978, which in effect said utilities couldn't use natural gas as a boiler fuel after 1989. The law still prohibits the use of natural gas in new power plants. As a result, a major portion of Texas' generating capacity was effectively obsolete.

Either our utilities planned resource alternatives, or faced the prospect of industries shutting down and homes growing dark. Remember, Texas electric demand was growing at twice the national average. Furthermore, choosing nuclear power was both wise and prudent management, because it offered comparable construction and lower fuel costs than coal, and environmental advantages over both coal and lignite.

Nuclear was also a better choice than coal then, because coal's costs were escalating due to new mine, health and safety regulations, and the Clean Air Act provisions. The railroads, coal's principal transportation, were near bankruptcy. They didn't make a comeback until Congress passed the 1980 Staggers Rail Act. Let's don't forget that it was the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Country's price hikes that made coal competitive with cheaper oil and natural gas in the utility marketplace. Investors responded by pumping hundreds of millions of dollars into new mines and equipment, but long after the decisions to build new nuclear plants had been made.

Unfortunately, the "energy crisis" ushered in a tidal wave of inflation driven by two oil shocks, which skyrocketed material and labor costs at nuclear plants across the U.S. Billions of dollars in additional construction costs resulted from double-digit interest rates and thousands of new regulations after the Three Mile Island accident.

It's now good politics to use 20/20 hindsight, holding utility managers accountable for poor forecasting. "They should have known better," is a popular phrase these days. No doubt mistakes were made. But the underlying causes of escalating nuclear power plant costs — oil shocks, central bank policies and regulatory changes — couldn't have been foreseen by utility managers. Nor did journalists, bankers, energy experts, or political leaders from Texas or Washington see them coming.

The point is, the decision to diversify Texas' energy base is still in our best long-term economic interests. The purpose of energy diversification was to help our native energy resources — to insulate consumers from a repeat of the energy and economic chaos during the 1970s, which was caused by imported oil dependence.

It could happen again. The American Petroleum Institute reports that at present world oil prices and with sagging domestic production OPEC's monopoly power could be restored within five years. If domestic production runs short, there's no choice but to fill the demand gap with imports.

That's why energy diversification has to continue. Nuclear power plants will supply electricity at relatively constant costs for decades to come. The plants coming on line today will be serving the economic and energy needs of our children's children. What may appear to be expensive investments today will look like bargains in the years to come.

Dr. Herbert H. Woodson is director of the Center for Energy Studies, and associate dean, College of Engineering, at the University of Texas, Austin.

Readers' views on: Evolution, creationism

Evolution neither fact nor science

Five letters have appeared in your paper referring to the evolutionary theory of life as "fact" and "quality science." I would dispute both claims as fallacious.

If a frog is kissed and turns into a handsome prince, we'd all say that was a fairy tale. However, if that same frog turns into a prince over a million years, we call that "enlightened scientific theory." "From goo to you by way of the zoo," is how many creationists accurately sum up the fairy tale of macro-evolution. There is not any real scientific evidence for macro-evolution and this has been demonstrated in the arena of scientific debate hundreds of times during the past 15 years.

Scientists from the Institute for Creation Research have been involved in over 150 debates with professors from many prestigious universities. In the opinions of the student newspapers of these universities these have been clear victories for creationism. The creationists stick strictly to scientific arguments using the fossil record, the characteristics of mutation and natural selection, the laws of thermodynamics and the principles of probability to show that macro-evolution has not, is not, and could not occur at all.

The problems of Darwinism are still with us 127 years later. Operational science must show that micro-evolutionary steps add up to a macro-evolutionary change, and they cannot! The propagators of this faith now must say either you do not see evolution because it is too slow (gradualism) or you do not see it because it is too fast (punctuated equilibrium). Either way, the bottom line is you do not see evolution! Nevertheless, scenarios of how it might have happened (evolutionary foolosophy) are allowed to be taught as "quality science."

An example is that of the evolution of the whale which supposedly evolved from the cow. Apparently a cow wandered into the ocean, developed a taste for fish, then its tail turned into a fluke, it lost its legs and grew to enormous whale proportions in the ocean. (That explains why the cow to this day has such a craving for fish.) That is certainly the kind of "quality science" I want my children to be taught in school!

Creationism hasn't been disproved

I have read with interest the letters concerning creationism versus evolution. I see this as no controversy but a choice.

The theory of evolution is nothing more than a few scientific facts sandwiched with a great amount of speculation. Scientists have never been able to prove evolution, and creationism has never been disproved. No one has the knowledge or authority to classify the Book of Genesis as an exquisite piece of religious poetry. One definition of science is knowledge. The Book of Genesis is knowledge. Much of "quality science" has been disproved over the years; one thing in particular is the atomic theory.

If a person believes that each member of the human species has a soul, how can you obtain a soul through evolution? Let's not confuse the theory of evolution with quality science. Who knows, if science should progress far enough, maybe it will discover creationism.

Press conference shows Reagan once again in charge

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

SAN FRANCISCO — President Reagan proved once again this week he intends to be, and is fully capable of being, a vigorous commanding leader during the rest of his presidential term.

Democrats, Republicans, and even some of those TV reporters who aggressively tried to bait him into rashness, agreed he won the Thursday press conference confrontation.

Lest you think my confidence in the president tends to make me unduly supportive of him, let me relate to you the general reaction in Washington to what had been billed in advance as a crucial battle with the media for his credibility.

Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill.: He "really seemed to be in command."

Sen. George J. Mitchell, D-Maine: "Generally good performance. He was relaxed and appeared in control, though he made some misstatements of fact."

Democratic national chairman Robert Strauss: "It got the job done for him, and it will help him."

Describing the contrast between the president's calm and controlled attitude Thursday with his last press conference appearance in November, when he was grim and testy at times, the New York Times reported: "The president appeared in command and almost eager to provide the public with an explanation of his (Iran) initiative."

Although the president reiterated that the original purpose of his initiative was to try to restore a relationship with a country of strategic importance to the United States, get an end to the Iran-Iraq war, and secure the release of American hostages, he indicated he was still torn about the wisdom of the policy.

"If I had not thought it was right at the beginning, I would not have started (it)," he said.

Asked if he would do it again, the president added: "No, I would not go down the same road again."

Let us remember it was Iran that first approached the American government, craftily leading us to believe it wanted to improve relations and could help free the American hostages in Lebanon in return for some arms shipments. Imagine how the president would have been condemned by partisan Democrats and the liberal media if he had ignored that overture.

Sure, he can be criticized for placing too much trust in advisers who kept him in the dark and betrayed him in implementing the policy, but he cannot be blamed for not wanting, as he said, "to miss the opportunity" of exploring an opening to the Iranian regime that might safeguard our Persian Gulf interests and secure the release of our hostages.

In the deftness, wit and ease with which he handled the barrage of loaded questions from the TV network performers, the president displayed the characteristics that made him so popular before he was rocked by the Iran-Contra crisis.

The antagonistically adversary tone of the questions hurled at him Thursday backfired. A Washington Post writer said all three networks, "in their silliness and pretentiousness" had billed the press conference "as less of a journalistic exercise than a championship grudge match."

"If it was a fight, Ronald Reagan won it," the Post writer added. "He seemed clear-eyed, assertive, emphatic and confident from the very outset.

"The press, by contrast, occasionally came across as rude and self-important."

All in all, the president clearly came out of it the winner.

Data Processing Department provides services to most others

By LYN MILLER

Computers. Word processing. Terminals. Magnetic media. These are terms that evoke various reactions from potential computer users and the general public. Some express fear and dislike, some see computers as a challenge and others remain indifferent.

While Midland's Data Processing Department is less visible than most city departments, it provides support services to almost all departments. In October 1985, a new computer system was installed and, during the past two years, support services have been expanded by 50 percent. At present, 45 computer terminals are attached to the central computer. Approximately 18 micro computers have been installed in various departments.

In computer language, "systems" may refer to the machinery or hardware that is visible to the eye, as well as to the operating system or instructions that tell the computer what to do. It may also refer to a group of instructions, or program, that instructs the computer on how to manipulate the information that has been entered into it.

New systems for financial accounting, payroll and fleet management have replaced outdated in-house systems.

For example, the payroll system, in order to keep track of almost 900 city employees, is comprised of approximately 150 programs, which must be executed in the correct sequence at the correct time in order to produce accurate checks and reports.

The services and repairs performed on some 750 city vehicles is documented in the fleet services system and vehicles are automatically scheduled for preventive maintenance and annual inspections.

For general accounting, the financial accounting system includes budget, operating reports, accounts payable, fixed assets and purchase orders. Various departments may view this information via a terminal to ascertain the financial status of that particular department.

The water bill you receive each month has been produced by the Data Processing Department. The water billing system, which bills approximately 7,000 accounts each week, is currently in the process of being upgraded to take advantage of a recent computer systems improvements.

The processing of parking tickets is also done through Data Processing. Information regarding the ticket and payment thereof is entered into the computer from terminals located at the Municipal Court. Unpaid tickets are updated with information obtained from the Department of Public Safety in Austin. Notices are then sent to those who do not pay their tickets within a reasonable length of time.

Data Processing assists city departments in developing computer applications for specific needs. The most recent addition is a system installed in Animal Control whereby an animal owner may be located. It is also used for license renewal notices and the preparation of various reports.

Contrary to what some may think, the use of computers in city government does not eliminate jobs. Computers are tools that allow employees to perform their duties in a more efficient and expeditious manner.

Management is provided with more timely information and, all in all, computers aid in the improvement of services to the residents of Midland.

IN ADDITION
In the quest for more living space, it is a good idea to first look to the attic, basement or garage. If space requirements are not met in these places, the only alternative left is to construct an addition. A house on a small lot may have minimum setback limitations that will present problems. Local zoning and lot restrictions must be checked. The distance from the front of the house to the street is usually kept the same for all houses on a particular street. Expanding to the front, therefore, may not be permitted. Often, the house also has a minimum setback on the sides. This may prevent expansion on either side. Thus, the only alternative is to add on behind the house. Use the addition for the most critical need.

Hasek wins state backstroke

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN— Midland High's Michaela Hasek not only won the Class 5A 100 backstroke in the Texas High School swimming meet here Saturday, but the sophomore did it in style.

Her 58.35 seconds set a new school record, breaking the record she established Friday. And the time automatically made her a high school All-America.

Hasek also finished fourth in the 200 IM with a 2:10.01.

Sam Perry took a fourth in the 100-backstroke in 53.5 seconds for coach Jesse Marsh's Midland swimmers.

Shawna Vorhees took 7th in the 100-butterfly by winning the consolation heat.

In diving, Nate Neatherlin finished 12th with a 330 point total.

Allen Reed placed fifth in the 500-free with a 4:42.61, to set a new school record.

Perry's time Friday and Hasek's Friday time Friday in the IM both were good enough for high school All-American consideration.

"However, Michaela's 100-backstroke is All-America, without any wait," said Copach Marsh. "I was very happy with the way all our entries at state performed. Everybody was super. It was a fine finish for a winning season."

Perry, Vorhees, Neatherlin and Reed are all seniors, but Marsh will have Hasek back for two more years.

Lee Rebels rout Odessa High, 22-5

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The Midland Lee runs kept pouring in Saturday, not by ones and twos as much as by threes, sevens and nines.

When the Lee Field scorekeeper finally stopped putting up numbers on the left field board, the Rebels had an easy 22-5 District 4-5A victory over Odessa High. A come-from-behind victory at that.

Odessa's Chris Henson gave the game an early appearance of a highly competitive affair with his towering two-run homer over the left field fence off starting pitcher Joe Watters. However, it was a false prophesy.

The Rebels answered the challenge in the bottom of the inning with a pair of leadoff walks byDudley and Danny Jordan (not related) and RBI singles by Paul Bacon and Jason Logi for a 2-2 score.

After a three-up, three-down top of the second from Watters, theRebel attack, combined with one error by shortstop Richard Rengel, took control with a seven-run outburst on six hits. Danny Jordan's single to right drove home the first and what proved to be the winning run.

The rest of the game was more like batting practice than varsity pitching as first Shane Lunceford and then Craig Morgan served up fat pitches for hungry Rebel hitters to smash.

"They hit that bad pitching like they're supposed to," said Lee coach Ernie Johnson, who is enormously pleased with Lee's improvement at the plate. "It's getting a whole lot better, a whole lot better."

ONE EXAMPLE of the improvement is Dudley Jordan, suffering from an 0-for-7 streak in two district games. Then, when all Johnson wanted from him was a line drive, the Rebel second baseman blasted a two-run homer over the left field fence in the sixth.

Chaparrals' rally comes up point short

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

HUTCHINSON, Kan. - Midland College was just a pump fake away from winning its second National Junior College Championship.

But the Chaparrals' dream of a national crown ended in the final seconds as Southern Idaho's Joe Johnson blocked a last-ditch effort by Lincoln Minor that gave the Golden Eagles a 69-68 championship win.

"Maybe I should have pump faked him or something," second-guessed a dejected Minor. "But these guys will come back next year and win it, and hopefully I'll do it someplace else."

MINOR, a sophomore, led all scorers with 20 points and keyed an MC charge from 13 points down in the final minutes.

"We came back from a big deficit and we could've won," MC coach Jerry Stone said. "It was a tough way to lose."

Johnson, the brother of Boston Celtic Dennis Johnson, blocked six shots and intimidated the Chaparrals' three-point gunners. He also jammed home a pair of incredible dunks with his 50-inch vertical leap to halt the Chaparrals comeback momentum.

The Chaps played the entire game without All America point guard Mookie Blaylock who was sidelined with a stress fracture in his right foot. Blaylock, a 20 points per game scorer, injured his foot in Friday's semifinal win over Herkimer.

"I HATE to say anything like we lost because we didn't have Mookie, that sounds bad," said Stone, who was awarded the Coach of the Tournament award for the second time. "But he does give us a lot of leadership. But Southern Idaho is a great team and they played well tonight."

Without him, MC lacked offensive direction and fell behind by as many as 13 points late in the second half. But the Chaparrals, 32-4, staged a late charge that nearly stole the title away.

A tremendous stuff by the Eagles' Johnson put Southern Idaho up, 65-52 with 7:40 to play. But then MC got stingy on defense, but the Eagles were nearly as tough.

"We never did show our best offensive performance in this tournament," said Johnson of the Eagles and their 107-point average. "But you saw our best defensive effort tonight. That's the biggest part of our team."

SI didn't score again until just over a minute was left on the clock, and by then, the Chaps had clawed back within three. Minor led the charge, canning his only two three-pointer of the night on back-to-back bombs.

The teams traded baskets in the final minute until Johnson slammed another one home for a five-point Southern Idaho lead with just :33 left.

But the Chaps' three-point gun Todd Duncan, silenced most of the night, put together an amazing four-point play, sinking a 22-footer and getting fouled.

His free throw brought MC within one with :26 to go.

"We didn't have a timeout left because with the TV timeouts, we only get four so we couldn't set up a play," Stone said.

A missed Southern Idaho free throw gave MC the ball back with :07 left. But Johnson put a quick end to Minor's shot, and the Chaps' championship hopes.

"I knew I would have to block the shot because he had just buried two three-pointers on me," Johnson said. "I thought to myself, "I'm just going to have to work a little harder becasue this cat is for real.""

The title was the second for Southern Idaho, 37-1, but first since 1976. It was also the first for fourth-year coach Fred Trenkle.

"I felt like this was a team of desti-

13th man lends vocal support

Schurer

HUTCHINSON, Kan. - He sits at the end of the Chaparral bench, surrounded by his teammates, but isolated by his civilian garb.

He is Midland College's Wilbur Griffith, 6-2 forward, 13th man on a 12-man roster. A square peg trying to fit in a round hole.

Griffith, his shaved head bobbing with each Midland College steal or three-point bomb, is resigned to his new role. Or is that no role.

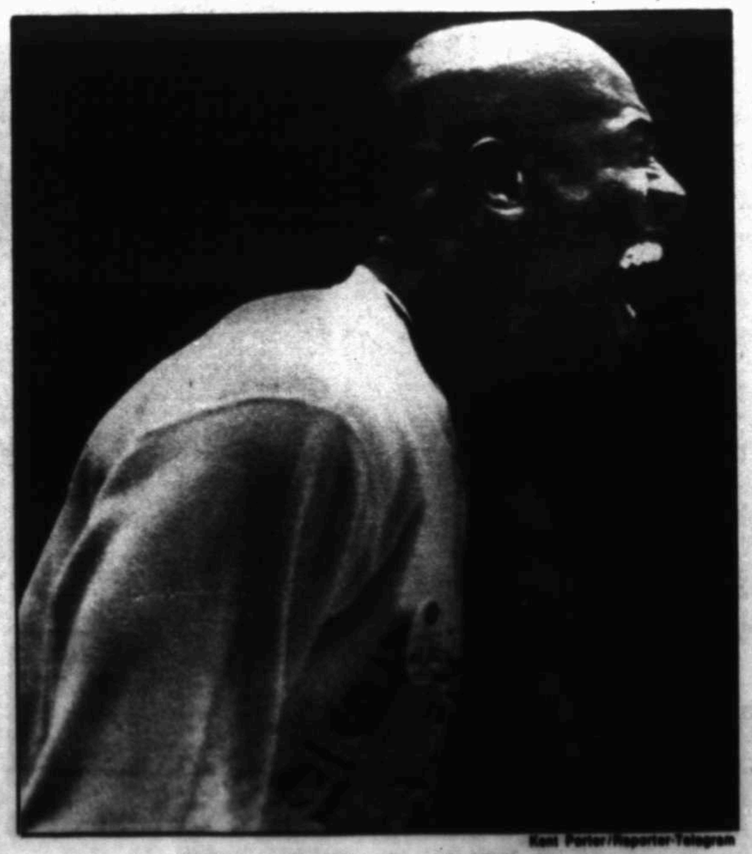
Griffith was caught in the numbers game. NJCAA rules allow just 12 players to suit up in the national tournament. So when MC coach Jerry Stone surveyed his needs, Griffith was the one left on the outside.

NOW GRIFFITH, who averaged just under one point per game in 16 appearances, is the Chaps' most vocal cheerleader. And should Midland College win its second national championship Saturday, Griffith will be as much a part of it as anyone.

He has adapted, albeit grudgingly, to the fact that he won't step on the court for a minute in the Chaps' four-game march to the NJCAA title.

In the waning minutes of Friday's 107-75 romp of Herkimer County College, it was clear-the-bench time. Freshmen Matt Sears, David Martin and Clifton Jones were all smiles as they mopped up what was left of the Generals from New York state.

During the regular season, Griffith would have been right there as well, earning valuable experience, stockpiling for next year. Instead, Griffith was screaming encouragement from the sidelines, his pride bruised but his morale never higher.



Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Wilburn Griffith...Chaps' 13th man.

ADMITTEDLY unhappy in his non-playing role, Griffith has remained loyal, both to his Chaparral teammates and to coach Stone. A graduate of El Paso Eastwood, Griffith plans to return for his sophomore season and play a more integral role for the Chaps.

In the meantime, there is some bitterness.

"I'm ticked, I would be lying if I said I wasn't ticked," Griffith says. "But I'm also rooting real hard for my teammates. I want to win the national championship as bad as anyone. I just wish I could be more a part of it."

But Griffith is a part of it, no one sweats out the close calls, listens more intently to Stone's sideline lectures, despairs at the bad breaks or rejoices more in victory than Griffith.

But the news of his omission from the playing roster came down hard on him.

"Coach just came right out and told me. It hurt. It hurt a lot," Griffith said. "It may look like I'm handling it well, but... I keep it on the inside. There are a lot of things I feel about it, but I just won't say them.

"I'm just looking forward to coming back to Midland next year, coming to Hutchinson and playing in the national tournament."

With that attitude, Griffith has more than earned his place as a champion on this year's Midland College Chaparrals.

Friars, Orange surprise favorites

From Wire Reports

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Syracuse, led by Rony Seikaly's 26 points, gained the NCAA Final Four for the first time since 1975 by holding off No. 2 North Carolina 79-75 Saturday for the East Regional title.

The 10th-ranked Orangemen, 30-6 and the No. 2 seed in the East, will play another Big East team, Providence, an 88-73 upset winner over Georgetown Saturday in the Southeast Regional.

Syracuse, which had a reputation of blowing big games in recent years, had to withstand a Tar Heels comeback, led by Kenny Smith.

The Orangemen never trailed and extended a 40-31 halftime margin to

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN— Midland High's Michaela Hasek not only won the Class 5A 100 backstroke in the Texas High School swimming meet here Saturday, but the sophomore did it in style.

Her 58.35 seconds set a new school record, breaking the record she established Friday. And the time automatically made her a high school All-America.

Hasek also finished fourth in the 200 IM with a 2:10.01.

Sam Perry took a fourth in the 100-backstroke in 53.5 seconds for coach Jesse Marsh's Midland swimmers.

Shawna Vorhees took 7th in the 100-butterfly by winning the consolation heat.

In diving, Nate Neatherlin finished 12th with a 330 point total.

Allen Reed placed fifth in the 500-free with a 4:42.61, to set a new school record.

Perry's time Friday and Hasek's Friday time Friday in the IM both were good enough for high school All-American consideration.

"However, Michaela's 100-backstroke is All-America, without any wait," said Copach Marsh. "I was very happy with the way all our entries at state performed. Everybody was super. It was a fine finish for a winning season."

Perry, Vorhees, Neatherlin and Reed are all seniors, but Marsh will have Hasek back for two more years.

Lee Rebels rout Odessa High, 22-5

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The Midland Lee runs kept pouring in Saturday, not by ones and twos as much as by threes, sevens and nines.

When the Lee Field scorekeeper finally stopped putting up numbers on the left field board, the Rebels had an easy 22-5 District 4-5A victory over Odessa High. A come-from-behind victory at that.

Odessa's Chris Henson gave the game an early appearance of a highly competitive affair with his towering two-run homer over the left field fence off starting pitcher Joe Watters. However, it was a false prophesy.

The Rebels answered the challenge in the bottom of the inning with a pair of leadoff walks byDudley and Danny Jordan (not related) and RBI singles by Paul Bacon and Jason Logi for a 2-2 score.

After a three-up, three-down top of the second from Watters, theRebel attack, combined with one error by shortstop Richard Rengel, took control with a seven-run outburst on six hits. Danny Jordan's single to right drove home the first and what proved to be the winning run.

The rest of the game was more like batting practice than varsity pitching as first Shane Lunceford and then Craig Morgan served up fat pitches for hungry Rebel hitters to smash.

"They hit that bad pitching like they're supposed to," said Lee coach Ernie Johnson, who is enormously pleased with Lee's improvement at the plate. "It's getting a whole lot better, a whole lot better."

ONE EXAMPLE of the improvement is Dudley Jordan, suffering from an 0-for-7 streak in two district games. Then, when all Johnson wanted from him was a line drive, the Rebel second baseman blasted a two-run homer over the left field fence in the sixth.

Chaparrals' rally comes up point short

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

HUTCHINSON, Kan. - Midland College was just a pump fake away from winning its second National Junior College Championship.

But the Chaparrals' dream of a national crown ended in the final seconds as Southern Idaho's Joe Johnson blocked a last-ditch effort by Lincoln Minor that gave the Golden Eagles a 69-68 championship win.

"Maybe I should have pump faked him or something," second-guessed a dejected Minor. "But these guys will come back next year and win it, and hopefully I'll do it someplace else."

MINOR, a sophomore, led all scorers with 20 points and keyed an MC charge from 13 points down in the final minutes.

"We came back from a big deficit and we could've won," MC coach Jerry Stone said. "It was a tough way to lose."

Johnson, the brother of Boston Celtic Dennis Johnson, blocked six shots and intimidated the Chaparrals' three-point gunners. He also jammed home a pair of incredible dunks with his 50-inch vertical leap to halt the Chaparrals comeback momentum.

The Chaps played the entire game without All America point guard Mookie Blaylock who was sidelined with a stress fracture in his right foot. Blaylock, a 20 points per game scorer, injured his foot in Friday's semifinal win over Herkimer.

"I HATE to say anything like we lost because we didn't have Mookie, that sounds bad," said Stone, who was awarded the Coach of the Tournament award for the second time. "But he does give us a lot of leadership. But Southern Idaho is a great team and they played well tonight."

Without him, MC lacked offensive direction and fell behind by as many as 13 points late in the second half. But the Chaparrals, 32-4, staged a late charge that nearly stole the title away.

A tremendous stuff by the Eagles' Johnson put Southern Idaho up, 65-52 with 7:40 to play. But then MC got stingy on defense, but the Eagles were nearly as tough.

"We never did show our best offensive performance in this tournament," said Johnson of the Eagles and their 107-point average. "But you saw our best defensive effort tonight. That's the biggest part of our team."

SI didn't score again until just over a minute was left on the clock, and by then, the Chaps had clawed back within three. Minor led the charge, canning his only two three-pointer of the night on back-to-back bombs.

The teams traded baskets in the final minute until Johnson slammed another one home for a five-point Southern Idaho lead with just :33 left.

But the Chaps' three-point gun Todd Duncan, silenced most of the night, put together an amazing four-point play, sinking a 22-footer and getting fouled.

His free throw brought MC within one with :26 to go.

"We didn't have a timeout left because with the TV timeouts, we only get four so we couldn't set up a play," Stone said.

A missed Southern Idaho free throw gave MC the ball back with :07 left. But Johnson put a quick end to Minor's shot, and the Chaps' championship hopes.

"I knew I would have to block the shot because he had just buried two three-pointers on me," Johnson said. "I thought to myself, "I'm just going to have to work a little harder becasue this cat is for real.'"

The title was the second for Southern Idaho, 37-1, but first since 1976. It was also the first for fourth-year coach Fred Trenkle.

"I felt like this was a team of desti-

13th man lends vocal support

Schurer

HUTCHINSON, Kan. - He sits at the end of the Chaparral bench, surrounded by his teammates, but isolated by his civilian garb.

He is Midland College's Wilbur Griffith, 6-2 forward, 13th man on a 12-man roster. A square peg trying to fit in a round hole.

Griffith, his shaved head bobbing with each Midland College steal or three-point bomb, is resigned to his new role. Or is that no role.

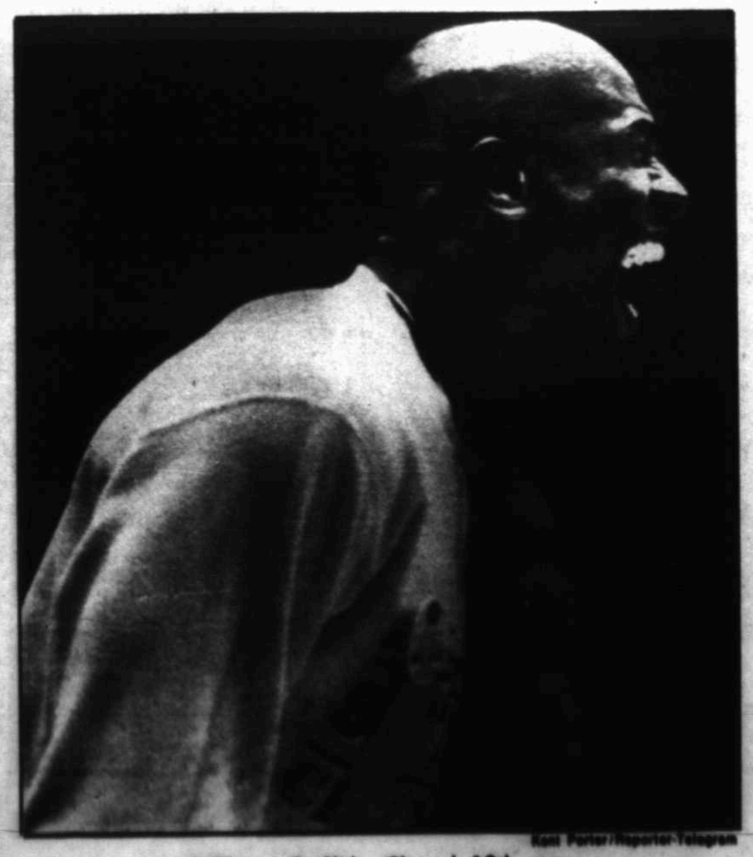
Griffith was caught in the numbers game. NJCAA rules allow just 12 players to suit up in the national tournament. So when MC coach Jerry Stone surveyed his needs, Griffith was the one left on the outside.

NOW GRIFFITH, who averaged just under one point per game in 16 appearances, is the Chaps' most vocal cheerleader. And should Midland College win its second national championship Saturday, Griffith will be as much a part of it as anyone.

He has adapted, albeit grudgingly, to the fact that he won't step on the court for a minute in the Chaps' four-game march to the NJCAA title.

In the waning minutes of Friday's 107-75 romp of Herkimer County College, it was clear-the-bench time. Freshmen Matt Sears, David Martin and Clifton Jones were all smiles as they mopped up what was left of the Generals from New York state.

During the regular season, Griffith would have been right there as well, earning valuable experience, stockpiling for next year. Instead, Griffith was screaming encouragement from the sidelines, his pride bruised but his morale never higher.



Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Wilburn Griffith...Chaps' 13th man.

ADMITTEDLY unhappy in his non-playing role, Griffith has remained loyal, both to his Chaparral teammates and to coach Stone. A graduate of El Paso Eastwood, Griffith plans to return for his sophomore season and play a more integral role for the Chaps.

In the meantime, there is some bitterness.

"I'm ticked, I would be lying if I said I wasn't ticked," Griffith says. "But I'm also rooting real hard for my teammates. I want to win the national championship as bad as anyone. I just wish I could be more a part of it."

But Griffith is a part of it, no one sweats out the close calls, listens more intently to Stone's sideline lectures, despairs at the bad breaks or rejoices more in victory than Griffith.

But the news of his omission from the playing roster came down hard on him.

"Coach just came right out and told me. It hurt. It hurt a lot," Griffith said. "It may look like I'm handling it well, but... I keep it on the inside. There are a lot of things I feel about it, but I just won't say them.

"I'm just looking forward to coming back to Midland next year, coming to Hutchinson and playing in the national tournament."

With that attitude, Griffith has more than earned his place as a champion on this year's Midland College Chaparrals.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Syracuse, led by Rony Seikaly's 26 points, gained the NCAA Final Four for the first time since 1975 by holding off No. 2 North Carolina 79-75 Saturday for the East Regional title.

The 10th-ranked Orangemen, 30-6 and the No. 2 seed in the East, will play another Big East team, Providence, an 88-73 upset winner over Georgetown Saturday in the Southeast Regional.

Syracuse, which had a reputation of blowing big games in recent years, had to withstand a Tar Heels comeback, led by Kenny Smith.

'Killer' slayed them in the aisles at TCU

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

FORT WORTH — You killed us, Killer.

Your foot-stomping, coat-throwing, referee-baiting bench escapades were entertaining.

Your quip-filled quotes made reporters look good with colorful stories.

The precisely coached teams you fielded made it a pleasure to attend a collegiate basketball game.

You had over 700 victories in 38 years of coaching the game at all levels and your expertise was without question.

With apologies to Bob Hope, thanks for the memories, Jim Killingsworth.

Texas Christian Athletic Director Frank Windegger said it best when Killingsworth retired this week for the peace and quiet of Starr Valley Ranch on the Idaho-Wyoming border: "I'd like to find another Killer, but there aren't any more out there. Intercollegiate athletics needs more Killingsworths."

INDEED, Killingsworth insisted that his kids attend class and get their degrees.

How's that for revolutionary thinking? Killingsworth assumed that most of his players weren't going to make an NBA team and might need a job someday.

He was as proud of Carven Holcombe graduating on time as he was his being named the Southwest Conference Player of the Year.

At his retirement day press conference, the Killer needled senior Larry Richard about his grades, saying, "Larry get with it or you're going to end up hot topping the road to my cabin in Idaho."

Killingsworth had winning programs everywhere he went except Oklahoma State. He started coaching in Oklahoma high schools but built his reputation with some great teams at Cerritos (California) Junior College.

AT IDAHO State, he fielded teams that terrorized the Big Sky Conference and knocked off UCLA in the 1977 NCAA West Regionals.

Things didn't mesh for Killer when he retured to Oklahoma. Two losing seasons had the natives grumbling at Oklahoma State. Windegger was smart enough to discover the Killer wasn't married to the Cowpokes.

"I just had a gut hunch so I asked him to consider coming to TCU," Windegger said. "He did and turned around a program that had won only 13 games in three years."

The 63-year-old Killingsworth had three 20-game winning seasons at TCU.

This year's team was his pride and joy, winning the SWC title by four games but losing out to Notre Dame in the second round of the NCAA by a point on a questionable call by the referees.

Killingsworth's retirement was something of a surprise except to insiders like Windegger.

"He could have had a 10-year contract if he had wanted it," Windegger said. "All he had to do was say the word."

KILLINGSWORTH had battled weight and blood pressure problems in the past but had those things under control.

"I'm not burned out," said the man who coached over 1,000 basketball games. "I just wanted to enjoy life while I had some good health."

Typically, he injected some humor into the moment: "I guess I'll be introduced to a lawnmower now."

Killingsworth was a funny man.

His false teeth fell out while he was yelling at an official this year but he caught them before they hit the ground and popped them back into his mouth.

"Chewed him out from two different directions," the Killer quipped.

At his retirement press conference, Killingsworth made it a point to shake hands with every writer.

"Try to get a real job," he kidded one.

Ryan, 40, nears end of long trail

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

KISSIMMEE, Fla. (AP) — Nolan Ryan knows the time is near when he'll be forced to end what is certain to be a Hall of Fame career.

Ryan is 40 years old and still throwing 95 mph fast balls and he knows it can't last too much longer even under optimum conditions.

But don't push him into a rocking chair just yet.

"I'm in a good situation," the major league's all-time strikeout and no-hit leader said. "My family enjoys the sport, I live at home.

"We're enjoying my career so I don't have any emergency to retire. I don't see why I can't pitch two or three more years as long as I feel good and don't have any more injuries."

After 19 years of throwing sizzling fast balls, Ryan's career was in jeopardy last season when he battled a painful elbow injury throughout the season, twice going on the disabled list.

Ryan sprained a ligament in his pitching elbow in spring training and pitched with pain throughout the season.

But it didn't destroy Ryan's effectiveness in the Astros' National League Western Division title drive.

After struggling to a 3-6 start, Ryan posted a 9-2 record in his final 18 starts of the season, including a 6-0, 12-strikeout victory over San Francisco Sept. 24 that clinched a tie for the title.

After the season, Ryan returned to his cattle ranch in hometown Alvin, near Houston, to rest his aching elbow. He decided against surgery that could have kept him off the mound for a year.

Now he's back without pain and determined to help the Astros take the next step beyond a division crown.

Pitching for Houston in a World Series is one of the few goals Ryan has yet to achieve.

"It was disappointing for us to get so close last year and not win it," Ryan said. "We've done that twice now since I've been here. I'd hate to think we got that far again this year and not get to the World Series."

Houston's chances of breaking tradition and repeating as Western Division champions may rest on Ryan's elbow.

Astros Manager Hal Lanier lists finding a left-handed relief pitcher as the team's No. 1 priority in spring training. But Ryan's status is high on Lanier's list of concerns.

"We need another good performance from Nolan," Lanier said. "If he can pitch this season without pain, it will definitely help our cause."

Ryan's first spring outing was painless.

"I'd almost forgotten what it was like to pitch without pain," Ryan said. "I hope it remains that way."

He has resisted the temptation of developing other pitches to take pressure off his pitching arm. He's experimented with a sinker pitch this spring, but he'll finish his career as a fastball pitcher.

"I still throw about 70 percent fastballs, and that's what I've thrown throughout my career," Ryan said. "To me, throwing breaking balls is harder on your arm than fastballs."

Ryan averaged 9.8 strikeout per nine innings in 1986, his highest average since a 9.96 average in 1978 when he pitched for the California Angels.

"If I got to the point where I wasn't effective and wasn't contributing to the ball club, I'd know it was time to quit," Ryan said. "But as long as I'm physically able and still enjoying the game, I want to keep pitching."

The years have not left Ryan without memories, like playing on the 1969 "Miracle" New York Mets and becoming the first pitcher to break Walter Johnson's career strikeout record in 1983.

"I wanted to be the first to break the strikeout record because I knew there would be several others with a chance at it," Ryan said.

Mav' Tarpley makes strong finish

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

A slow start ended any reasonable chance to win Rookie of the Year honors, but Roy Tarpley is finishing strong as a backup power forward for the Dallas Mavericks.

Much was expected of the 7-foot Tarpley after he averaged 15.3 points and 10 rebounds during a four-game preseason stretch for the Mavericks, but he shot 36.7 percent from the field in the first five games of the regular season and started to spend more time on the bench.

"I was a little disappointed because I wasn't contributing," said Tarpley, the seventh player chosen in last June's draft.

Dallas Coach Dick Motta said Tarpley should not have been concerned about his slow start.

"It's very rare for someone to step right in and make a big contribution," Motta said. "We were never down on Roy. He's worked hard and he's improved."

Gradually, Tarpley has gotten more playing time. On Jan. 29, he had 14 points, 12 rebounds, six blocked shots and three steals in a 132-102 victory at Denver and one night later he broke the team's rookie record with 20 rebounds to go with 12 points and five blocks in a win over Milwaukee.

In an eight-game stretch from Feb. 27 to March 13, Tarpley was in double figures in either points or rebounds seven times.

"I hope I don't give him too big of a head, but Roy has the talent to push up to that next level," Motta said. "He's playing like a basketball player now."

NBA NOTES

Life with Michael Jordan can be quite an experience, says Chicago Bulls Coach Doug Collins.

"I've seen people hyperventilate when they see him," Collins said. "I've been riding with Michael in his car and seen people almost have wrecks, trying to get a look."

Jerry Sichting of the Boston Celtics, a native of Martinsville, Ind., was asked by the Boston Herald to review the movie "Hoosiers," a story about a small-town Indiana basketball team.

Wrote Sichting: "I'm no movie critic, but I feel very comfortable about recommending 'Hoosiers' for a night at the movies. All basketball fans should like it, and people who don't particularly care about the sport will find their interest held by the acting and the relationship of the town to the team. In short, the movie fits its parts well together. I didn't have to pay to see 'Hoosiers,' but I certainly wouldn't have objected if I had."

T.R. Dunn of the Denver Nuggets, a starting guard for much of his 10-year NBA career, has never made a 3-point field goal in 13 career attempts.

The Dallas Mavericks tried 13 three-point field goals on March 13 and made only one, but that one was a record-setter.

Rolando Blackman's 3-pointer with 30 seconds left in the game gave Dallas 178 for the year, breaking the NBA record of 177 it shared with the 1979-80 San Diego Clippers.

The hiring of Dick Van Arsdale to replace John MacLeod as head coach of the Phoenix Suns caused quite a shakeup in the team's broadcasting lineup.

Midland Lee's Danny Jordan takes a healthy swing in Rebels win over Odessa High at Lee High Field Saturday.

LEE

In all, Lee collected 18 hits off the two Broncho hurlers led by Logi, who is on a terror at the plate. Saturday, the Rebel catcher ran his district hitting streak to 4-for-4 with his first at bat before reaching on a Rengel error. He then went on to finish the day 4-for-5 for a 7-for-8 effort after two games of play. He has yet to be kept off the base path. He also hit his second triple of the year.

Also, Bacon was 3-for-4 with a doubleand Freddie Dawson 3-for-5. Joe Eldridge added a three-RBI triple as a pinch-hitter.

AFTER THE two-run first, Watters settled down and allowed only one run over the next four innings, an RBI single by Danny Sarabia. He got into trouble in the sixth and allowed to runs to score on a Sarabia triple and Rengel single but was never threatened with a possible loss after the first inning.

In all, Watters allowed 10 hits and only one walk while striking out nine. Nicky Sanchez struck out two of the three batters he faced in the top of the seventh.

"I thought Joe pitched respectable," said Johnson. "He made a real bad pitch in the first inning to give up the home run. But, that's high school pitching I guess. I tell you what though, there are four or five hitters in their lineup and they're going to score some runs."

With the victory, combined with Midland High's 6-5 win over Odessa Permian and Abilene Cooper being idle, the Rebels move into sole possession of 4-5A first place at 2-0.

Cooper is in second at 1-0 and, Tuesday, will host Lee at 4 p.m. Johnson expects to throw Durian 'Cal' Jenkins at the Cougars. Jenkins pitched seven shutout innings at Midland High in the 4-5A opener Tuesday at Angels Stadium.

Bulldogs nudge Permian

4-5A Roundup

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A David Malone two-run homer in the top of the second inning, his second of the year, gave the Midland High Bulldogs a 2-1 lead they never relinquished as they went on to post a 6-5 District 4-5A 6-5 victory over 10th ranked Odessa Permian here Saturday.

The rally started with Eric Boyt collecting a single and scoring on Malone's homer. Craid Crawford followed with ground rule double and made it 3-1 when he scored on a throwing error by Permian's Daniel Bean.

In the top of the third, Tony Perez and Jim Werner collected back-to-back singles but Perez was forced out at third by Tommy Yorkman's fielder's choice. Boyt followed with an RBI double to plate Werner and Yorkman scored on Malone's sacrifice fly. Crawford singled to left to drive home Boyt for a 6-1 lead.

Permian fought back for two runs in the fourth and two in the fifth but couldn't bring home the tying run.

On the mound, Bulldog Joe Rendow pitched the final three innings in shutout fashion to gain the relief victory for a 4-1 record. Charles Carlson, 2-1, took the loss for the Panthers.

ELSEWHERE AROUND the league, Abilene High improved to 1-1 in league play with a near-perfect 14-1 thrashing of San Angelo.

The Eagles got seven innings of four-hit pitching from Peter Rodriquez, 2-0, and outhit the favored Bobcats 10-4. San Angelo also helped out the Eagle attack with five errors.

San Angelo starter Bruce Andrews took the loss.

In action Tuesday, league-leading Midland Lee, 2-0, will travel to second place and second ranked Abilene Cooper, 1-0, while Midland High hosts San Angelo and Odessa Permian hosts Odessa High. Abilene High has the day off.

Iowa State ends Iowa reign

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Iowa State, keyed by Bill Kelly's upset victory at 126 pounds, ended archrival Iowa's nine-year title reign Saturday by winning the NCAA Division I wrestling championship.

Four Cyclones won individual titles — two of them over defending champions from Iowa — as Iowa failed to become the first team in college sports history to win 10 consecutive national titles.

"I'm happy for us, it's great, but I feel sad for (Iowa) because they could have set the record," said Jim Gibbons, Iowa State's 27-year-old coach.

Iowa State finished with 133 points to 108 for Iowa.

"Iowa State wrestled well, give them a lot of credit. They peaked at the right time," Iowa Coach Dan Gable said. "And, we've got nine titles and they've got one. There was only team that could beat us and they did."

The Cyclones won all but one of their five title matches, with Kelly clinching the team title when he pinned returning champion Brad Penrith of Iowa with 29 seconds remaining.

"I didn't know my pin clinched it. One of our assistant coaches told me before our match that we had already clinched it," Kelly said. "It would have put a lot more pressure on me if I'd known I had to win."

With the score tied 2-2, Kelly, 28-2-4, caught Penrith, 14-3, in a cradle hold he calls "the spradle," and the referee slapped the mat 10 seconds later, officially bringing Iowa's title streak to a halt.

"I was getting tired of seeing those Xs all over Iowa," said Gibbons, referring to the Roman numeral that Gable used to represent Iowa's bid for a 10th title.

Iowa State's unbeaten sophomore, Tim Krieger, followed Kelly's victory by edging defending 150-pound champion Jim Heffernan of Iowa 2-1 in overtime. The Cyclones also got championships from Stewart Carter at 158 pounds and sophomore Eric Volcker at 190.

Iowa's champions were Royce Alger, a 10-4 winner over Iowa State's Kevin Jackson at 167, and 177-pounder Rico Chiapparelli, a 6-2 winner over top-seeded and previously unbeaten Darryl Pope, 44-1, of Cal State-Bakersfield.

"It really hurts that we didn't win," Alger said. "It hit me this morning that we weren't going to win. I feel bad we couldn't do it for Gable."

John Smith, 43-1, of Oklahoma State was voted the tournament's outstanding wrestler after hammering Gil Sanchez of Nebraska 18-4 at 134 pounds. Smith didn't have a close match in the three-day tournament and said, "Now my goal is to come back and win again next year."

Ricky Bonomo of Bloomsburg University won his third consecutive 118-pound title, beating sophomore Jim Martin of Penn State 8-4.

"My first one was the best; the last two titles, I just had a job to do and I went out and did it," said Bonomo, whose brother, Rocky, finished fourth at 126.

Penn State didn't have a champion but finished third in the team standings with 97¾ points as eight Nittany Lions finished in the top eight at their weights.

Texas women claim fourth title in a row

NCAA Swim

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Junior Betsy Mitchell, the world record holder in the 200-meter backstroke, defended her college championship and claimed the U.S. Open and NCAA records in the event Saturday as Texas won its fourth straight NCAA Division I women's swimming and diving championship.

Mitchell, voted the NCAA swimmer of the year for her performances at the Indiana University Natatorium, had a time of 1 minute, 55.16 seconds in capturing her fifth NCAA individual title and her third here. Freshman Andrea Hayes of Texas was second in 1:47.84, just under the NCAA mark set by her teammate last year.

The Lady Longhorns accumulated 648½ points, edging Stanford, which finished second with 631½. Florida, runner-up the past two years, finished third with 315, followed by California with 294 and Clemson at 243.

Mitchell, the U.S. swimmer of the year in 1986, finished first in the 200 individual medley and 100 backstroke earlier in the meet.

The 22-year-old found herself trailing Stanford's Michelle Donahue after 50 yards in Saturday's event, but took the lead for good with some 120 yards to go.

Mitchell, who has a street named after her in her hometown of Marietta, Ohio, was nearly two seconds faster than the former U.S. Open mark of 1:57.02, set by Tracy Caulkins on April 8, 1981.

Mitchell, who transfered from North Carolina so she could receive stiffer competition, finished with five firsts in the championship. She helped Texas set two NCAA relay records earlier in the meet.

Olympic gold medalist Mary T. Meagher of California, who skipped college competition to prepare for the 1984 Olympics, claimed her fourth NCAA title in the 200-yard butterfly in 1:55.54. Kara McGrath of Texas was second in 1:57.36.

Meagher, 22, who set the world butterly records for 100 and 200 meters back in 1979 when she was in high school at Louisville, ended her college career with six NCAA individual championships.

Sophomore Tami Bruce successfully defended her championship in the 1,650 freestyle, taking the lead from runner-up Patty Sabo of Texas about 750 yards into the race and building it with each lap to finish in 16:02.15 — more than eight seconds ahead of Sabo.

Stanford sophomore Jenna Johnson was another successful defending champion, taking the 100 freestyle in 48.82, with Cardinal teammate Aimee Berzins second in 49.55. It was the fifth NCAA individual championship for the 1984 Olympian, who won two golds on relay teams and also captured a silver medal in the 100-meter butterfly.

Senior Susie Rapp of Stanford, the 1984 NCAA champion in the 200 breaststroke, won the event for the second time and set an NCAA record of 2:11.93, with 100 breaststroke champion Tracey McFarlane of Texas finishing second. Defending champion Cindy Ounpuu of Florida failed to qualify for the championship final and placed second in the consolation final to take 10th place.

The Big Ten swept the top three positions in 3-meter diving. Kim Fugett of Ohio State won with 550.70 points and 1-meter runner-up Mary Fischbach of Michigan was second at 539.75. Karen LaFace of Ohio State, who won the 1-meter event and was voted the NCAA diver of the year, took third at 536.80 and 1986 runner-up Wendy Williams from Miami, Fla., was fourth at 527.55.

Ohio State's Vince Panzano was voted the NCAA diving coach of the year by his peers and California's Karen Moe Thornton received the swimming coach's award.

Stanford set a U.S. Open and NCAA record in winning the 400 freestyle relay in 3:17.69. Johnson teamed with Laurie McLean, Rappa and Aimee Berzins to claim the records set by Florida in 1984.

Stanford Coach George Haines, who was serenaded by his swimmers as they picked up the runner-up trophy, was satisfied with his team's finish.

"Swimming as good as we can," is what is important, he said. "We've done that all year."

He was more concerned with the condition of freshman Michelle Griglione, who won three individual championships in last year's U.S. Short Course National Championships and was considered a vital part of the Cardinal bid this year.

"Something's got to be wrong with Michelle," Haines said about the freshman, before she placed fourth in the 200 butterfly Saturday night. "She's not having a good meet. She's bothered by not swimming good. She's trying . . . she's one of the great swimmers in the United States.

Crenshaw leads by 2 strokes

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Ben Crenshaw took advantage of ideal scoring conditions and converted a fast start into a 5-under-par 67 and a 2-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the $500,000 USF&G Classic.

"I had a good start and that was the key to my round," said Crenshaw, who completed three rounds in 201, 15 under par.

"I feel very confident, very relaxed. I'm hitting the ball good. Just keep it going one more day," he said.

And Ronnie Black, who held second, had little doubt that he would.

"I've played the last three days with Ben. He's playing very, very well. And every putt he hits looks like it's going in the hole," Black said.

"He'll make us go catch him. "You might have to be six or seven under tomorrow to have a chance," said Black, who was within one stroke of the lead until he drove into the woods and bogeyed the 18th hole.

That finished off a 3-under-par 69 and gave him a 203 total.

"When I have good tournaments, I always seem to have one round that is a little suspect. This was it, and I still got out of it in the 60s," said Black, whose last victory came in 1984.

Tom Watson, a two-time winner here and trying to fight his way out of a long non-winning streak, moved up with a 66 that put him in a four-man group at 204, only three shots back going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $90,000 first prize.

Stephenson leads

TUCSON, Ariz. — Jan Stephenson shot a 1-under-par 71 Saturday to take a three-stroke lead after three rounds of the $200,000 Tucson Open with a 54-hole total of 8-under-par 208.

Stephenson, who had led by at least two strokes since her opening-round 67, allowed Sally Quinlan to close within one shot on the back nine after three bogeys in six holes but shrugged off the challenge as Quinlan failed to make up any ground.

Quinlan, seeking her second win since she joined the Tour in 1983, finished with an even-par 72 at 211 — 5-under on the 6,214-yard Randolph North Golf Course.

Betsy King chipped in from 30 yards out for an eagle-3 on No. 18 to finish the day the same way she started — tied with Sherrie Turner. Both players shot even-par 72 and were tied at 213.

Charles by two

INDIAN WELLS, Calif. — Left-hander Bob Charles survived gusty winds to fire a 1-over-par 73 Saturday, giving him a 2-shot lead over defending champion Dale Douglass after three rounds of the $300,000 Vintage Chrysler Invitational seniors golf tournament.

Charles had one bogey and 17 pars over the Vintage Club's 6,907-yard, par 36-36—72 Mountain Course. He had a 54-hole score of 215 entering Sunday's final round of the event for professional golfers 50 years of age and older.

Despite a 3-over-par 75 Saturday, Douglass is alone in second place at 217.

"The speed of the greens made it difficult," Charles said. "There was no moisture. They seemed to dry out and were quite quick. You could roll a 10-footer six feet past the hole. You putt in a negative way. I feel like I'm trying to just get it close."

Shriver advances

DALLAS — Second-seeded Pam Shriver won eight straight points during a first-set blitz, lifting her to a 7-5, 6-3 semifinal victory over sixth-seeded Lori McNeil Saturday night in the Virginia Slims of Dallas.

McNeil, of Houston, had broken Shriver's serve in the fifth game of the first set for a 3-2 lead. But Shriver broke back with a love game to even the match and held for a 4-3 advantage, winning eight straight points in the process.

Ferraro scores

NORTH OLMSTED, Ohio — Dave Ferraro rolled two clutch strikes in the 10th frame of the title game and knocked off top-seeded Brian Voss 211-204 to capture the $150,000 Miller Lite Open Saturday.

It was the second victory on the Professional Bowlers Association tour for Ferraro, both within the last four months.

"This one was a lot tougher than my first one," said Ferraro, who earned $27,000. "The last time all I had to do was keep the ball on the lane. This time I had to throw two (strikes) in the 10th."

A golf tournament is born in Midland

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland's Invitational Boys High School golf tournament is history, well, not exactly history.

It is hoped that this will become a regular event on the spring golf calendar, just like the District 4-5A stop here.

Amarillo High won it with Andrews second, but that was almost incidental to the reception the event received.

Everybody seemed pleased by it. George Boynton, Andrews High coach, reflected the general attitude.

"WE RECEIVED super treatment. I've been wishing they'd have one for years and it came at just the right time for us. We start district at Lamesa tomorrow."

So how did this event find its way on to the spring schedule?

"I figured if I was going to coach the golf team," said Lee Coach Ronnie Stephens, "I wanted to have a tournament and this was an open week."

It was an idea that was born last September. "And we had a lot of parents work their butts off to make it possible," said Stephens.

THE TOURNAMENT was held at Green Tree CC Thursday and then moved to Ranchland CC for the final round Friday. "Pros Bob Prichard (RHCC) and Larry Bishop (GTCC) and their staffs did a good job and the courses were in great shape.

"We hope to build this tournament into something special, like they've done with the Tournament of Champions baseball tournament," said Stephens, "maybe 30 teams or so. Half would play one day at Ranchland and Green Tree and then switch courses the second day."

This year's tournament wasn't as big as Stephens expected, 20 teams, but it was more competitive than he expected. His favored Rebels, winners of three tournamenents heading into this one, didn't play well and wound up a disappointing fifth.

"Like the Tournament of Champions we went for a class field. We invited all the district champions in West Texas. Del Rio had to pull out at the last minute and Fort Stockton, Monahans and Lake View were last minute withdrawals. We never heard from any of the El Paso schools."

Those who showed up weren't sorry.

So a tradition was begun, but Stephens had little chance to reflect on its success, there's a district race beginning at Abilene Country Club and Abilene Cooper, the third place team, made the best showing of the 4-5A teams.

"When they split up the school district down there, Abilene Wylie wound up with the kids that were making Cooper a state power," looking at the scoreboard, he added, "Maybe Wylie didn't wind up with enough of them, though."

North Park wins

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Power forward Michael Starks scored 30 points as fifth-ranked North Park of Chicago beat No. 7 Clark of Massachusetts 106-100 Saturday night in the NCAA Division III basketball championship game.

Starks, named the tournament's most valuable player, scored 13 points as North Park took a 55-30 halftime lead and added 10 early in the second half to help the Vikings go ahead 71-41.

Sparky Anderson labels Mauch best

By Phil Collier
Copley News Service

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — Detroit's Sparky Anderson is the only manager to win World Series in both leagues. Yet he regards California's Gene Mauch as the best in the business, though Mauch never has won a pennant.

Why Mauch? Because he has managed 25 years, won more games than any of his contemporaries and, Anderson said, has a quality found in all great managers.

"The great ones are clones," Anderson said the other day. "Look at Mauch, Earl Weaver, Billy Martin, Dick Williams, Whitey Herzog, Tommy Lasorda, Bobby Valentine. They all have different personalities, yet they're all the same — very arrogant. The others are all concerned when the phone rings. They're worried about how long they'll hold a job. The great ones don't give a damn; they want to conquer the world.

"You're not a good manager if there's a player on your club who is bigger than you are. If you think about the California Angels, who do you think of? Gene Mauch. If you think about Baltimore, you think about Earl Weaver. St. Louis, you think of Whitey Herzog. The Dallas Cowboys, Tom Landry."

Anderson said he asked a friend of Landry why Landry still coaches. "He said, 'Don't you know? It's because of the adulation he gets every Sunday when he walks across the field. It's what he lives for.'"

Anderson, who has won World Series titles with Cincinnati (1975-76) and Detroit (1984), said that if another manager disagrees with him about Mauch, "I tell him, 'Come talk to me when you've managed as long as he has and won as many (major-league) games (1,826).

"Gene Mauch has enough arrogance for five people," Anderson said. "Who else could go through what he's been through three times (losing pennants with Philadelphia in 1964 and with the Angels in '82 and last year) and still walk across the field with the arrogance he has? By the time he retires, he'll have more victories than every manager except Connie Mack and John McGraw.

"If you asked Gene on a lie detector if he was the best manager in baseball, the machine would break if he said no."

IMPRESSIONS

During the winter, the Expos asked new pitching consultant George Bamberger what he thought of Minnesota left-hander Neal Heaton. "I like him," Bamberger responded, not knowing Montreal was going to trade Jeff Reardon, one of the game's highest-paid relievers, for Heaton, who has not lived up to his promise. "I didn't like him that much," Bamberger said when he learned of the trade.

The Reds are impressed with Norm Charlton, the young left-hander they acquired in the deal that sent journeyman infielder Wayne Krenchicki to Montreal. Charlton, 24, may even move into the rotation in place of ailing right-hander Mario Soto, who is falling behind in spring conditioning. "I don't see how anybody could trade Norm Charlton for Wayne Krenchicki," Reds manager Pete Rose said.

Baseball Report

HIGH HOPES

Astros reliever Charlie Kerfeld said he laughed when he read that Mets infielder Howard Johnson is aiming for 20 homers and 100 RBI this year. "Heck, even our shortstop struck him out," said Kerfeld, remembering a July game in Houston when infielder Craig Reynolds pitched the last inning in a lopsided Mets victory and slipped a third strike past Johnson.

THE QUIET MAN

Texas has a silent man in rookie second baseman Jerry Browne. "If he doesn't make it in baseball, he could be a guard at Buckingham Palace," said minor-league director Marty Scott.

WEIGHTY MATTERS

The Orioles have been on infielder Floyd Rayford for some time about his weight and threatened to drop him from their spring traveling roster unless he reduced. Miami Stadium spectators watched Rayford run 45 laps across the outfield Thursday to get down to 213 and qualify for travel. He's lost 26 pounds since last season.

Left-hander Terry Forster was battling weight problems when the Angels dropped him last fall. Now Forster says he's thinking about pitching in Japan. "After games, he could be a Sumo wrestler," said Mark Polan, Forster's agent.

JIM MURRAY

Iron Will was key to Jack's success

Murray

Anybody who ever galleried an Open can tell you what made Jack Nicklaus a great golfer — character.

Oh, he hit the ball farther than anyone else when he first came along. But long hitters have appeared on the scene throughout golf history, drawing their oohs and aahs from the galleries without making much of a real dent on the scoring records or victory rolls.

In the case of Jack Nicklaus, it was not his long game that made him the greatest ever to play the game. Neither was it his short game, his putting, chipping, trouble shots — he never needed any. He couldn't do anything with a 5-iron that two or three dozen other golfers couldn't do. He didn't have any secret body turn, any mystery to his wrist cock or motion through the ball.

What made Jack great was enormous self-respect, the tunnel vision that all sports geniuses have from Ty Cobb to Babe Ruth to Jack Dempsey to Joe Louis.

THE GREAT thing about golf is, your opponent is never the sand, the water, the trees, the wind, the rough, or the slickness of the greens. It's yourself.

Before he ever beat Arnold Palmer or Oakmont or Pebble Beach or Lee Trevino or Gary Player, he had to beat Jack Nicklaus.

How well did he do it? Well, did you know that Jack Nicklaus smoked? And did for most of his career? Probably not. That's because you never saw him do it. Nicklaus never smoked in public. He didn't think it was a good image.

You ever see him throw a club? Curse a spectator? A marshal? You ever see him lose his temper? He's got a pretty good one.

You never saw him closing a bar, giving any kind of scandal. You never even saw him drinking from a can.

There are a lot of people who don't even know Jack Nicklaus was fat. That when he joined the golf tour he looked like a sausage in cleats. He didn't walk, he waddled. His clothes fit him like a tent. He moved down a fairway like a sack of potatoes.

Spectators hated him. That was partly because he was beating Arnold Palmer, who in those days was America's team, to golf what Dempsey had been to boxing or Musial to baseball.

But if Jack had looked like Ronald Trueheart — or even Ronald Reagan or Steve Garvey — the blow wouldn't have been so hard to take. If he'd had broad shoulders, a tiny waistline and movie-star good looks, audiences might have been mollified. As it was, this ill-fitted chunk of a kid who looked 45 when he was barely 20, outraged America as if he had been caught stoning stained-glass windows.

No one liked to eat like Jack Nicklaus. But he stopped. He gave up the oysters, the baked Alaskas, the pizzas with everything. He hired a color consultant — he's color blind — and he made over Jack Nicklaus. He went from looking like Herman Goering to looking like Lochinvar.

NOW, LOTS of guys have lost weight. Even on the golf tour. But not many keep it off.

Jack did. Jack does whatever he sets out to do. He took off the beef even at the risk of losing distance off the tee or losing tournaments because he had to drop one or two clubs down from his best shooting.

Jack Nicklaus never gave in an inch to Jack Nicklaus. If he was going to be in command of the play, he was going to be in command of the player.

You had to respect Jack Nicklaus. He became an authentic American sports hero on sheer will.

On Sunday, March 29, the ABC network will conduct an interesting retrospective on Jack Nicklaus and his career through the words of six men who were instrumental in fashioning it. Each mounted a challenge to Jack Nicklaus and either fell back or settled for a draw.

The six are Arnold Palmer, the man Jack supplanted as king of the golf hill; Gary Player, who shot at the king and missed; Lee Trevino, who beat Jack out of three major titles but who concedes that "Jack is over here by himself and we're over there —day-in-day-out we couldn't beat Jack Nicklaus;" Tom Watson, who wonders how Nicklaus turned a villain into a hero; Sevy Ballesteros, who can't believe that Nicklaus could handle 25 years of relentless pressure without burnout, and Greg Norman, the only one of the sextet who has not been sufficiently clawed by the Golden Bear to concede anything. Even Norman, though, got a sample of an attacking Nicklaus at last year's Masters.

IT'S A fascinating piece of Americana, demonstrating the extraordinary revealing powers of the medium.

It is evident, for instance, that, with Arnold Palmer, the wounds are still unhealed and unhealing. Arnold is the least accepting of the rivals, almost as if he were still hoping for one more playoff to settle the issue.

"The whole point is the competition (between them) is going to be there so long as we live, and maybe longer," says Arnold.

So far as Arnold is concerned, Palmer and Nicklaus are always going to be Macy's and Gimbel's.

The others in the program, called "Merrill Lynch Presents Jack Nicklaus and the Greatest of His Time," seem comfortable in Nicklaus' shadow.

Watson, as a man who, however briefly in one British Open and one U.S. Open, stomped on the Nicklaus legend, is more fascinated to learn how Nicklaus handled the public abuse attached to beating Palmer.

"I never noticed it," confesses Nicklaus. "I had blinders on. I never heard (the crowd). I didn't care what they said. I was going to get where I wanted to get."

Lady Longhorns spill Rutgers

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Andrea Lloyd sparked a second-half rally that propelled top-ranked and defending champion Texas into the NCAA women's Final Four Saturday with an 85-77 victory over Rutgers in the East Regional basketball championship.

Texas, 31-1, returns to Austin to defend its title, and will meet the Midwest Regional winner on March 27.

Rutgers ends the season at 30-3.

The Longhorns had trailed from early in the first half and fell behind by as much as 55-46 with 12:37 left after a basket by Rutgers' Telicher Austin. After a Kristen Foley jumper for Rutgers, Texas came to life and outscored Rutgers 13-2 to take a 73-67 edge with 4:10 remaining. Beverly Williams scored seven of the points and Lyssa McBride had four in the spurt.

The Lady Knights got within 75-72 with 2:26 left on Regina Howard's basket, but Lloyd scored six straight points to give Texas an 81-72 edge with 50 seconds left to play.

Clarissa Davis and C.J. Jones hit two free throws apiece to preserve the Texas victory.

Reserve center Ellen Bayer also aided the run by shutting down Rutgers' inside game.

Mavericks squeak by Detroit

NBA

DALLAS — Rolando Blackman scored 26 points, including two free throws with eight seconds left, to give Dallas a 122-118 NBA victory over the Detroit Pistons Saturday night.

Dallas, which led by 10 points, 101-91, with 8:31 left in the game, was outscored 17-6 over the next five minutes as the Pistons took a one-point lead, 108-107, with 3:33 remaining in the game.

Over the next two minutes, the lead went back and forth before Derek Harper, who had 23 points, hit one of two free throws to give Dallas the lead for good, 115-114, with 1:26 left in the game.

Harper, who hit two 3-point baskets in the final 2:28, scored nine of Dallas' last 13 points. Isiah Thomas, who led the Pistons with 24 points, scored Detroit's last eight points.

The Mavericks, who are on the road for the next five games, played the entire second half without their leading scorer, Mark Aguirre, who was ejected with 34 seconds left in the first half after drawing two technical fouls from referee Jack Nies.

Aguirre, who had complained all night about being fouled, had scored only 11 points when he was ejected.

Nies had to work nearly the entire game when fellow official Bill Saar suffered a hyper-extended knee when he attempted to break up a scuffle between Dallas' James Donaldson and Detroit's Bill Laimbeer with 11:05 left in the operning period.

Hawks 97, Knicks 85

NEW YORK — Dominique Wilkins scored 12 consecutive points to lead Atlanta on a 14-2 run points as the Hawks broke open a tight game.

The spurt by Wilkins, who scored 27 of his 36 points in the second half, helped the Hawks extend a 70-69 lead to 84-71 with 6:02 left in the game.

New York, operating without 7-footers Patrick Ewing, Bill Cartwright and Jawann Oldham, scored the next seven points to get within six.

Nuggets 117, Bullets 107

LANDOVER, Md. — Alex English scored 37 points to lead the Denver Nuggets.

Lafayette Lever had his 15th triple-double of the season for Denver — 27 points, 12 coming in the third period, 13 rebounds and 11 assists.

With Moses Malone sidelined with a neck injury for the sixth straight game, Terry Catledge led Washington's inside game, scoring 29 points. All-Star guard Jeff Malone had 22 for Washington.

Pacers 77, Cavaliers 76

INDIANAPOLIS — Chuck Person scored Indiana's first nine points of the fourth quarter and finished with 16 to lead Indiana.

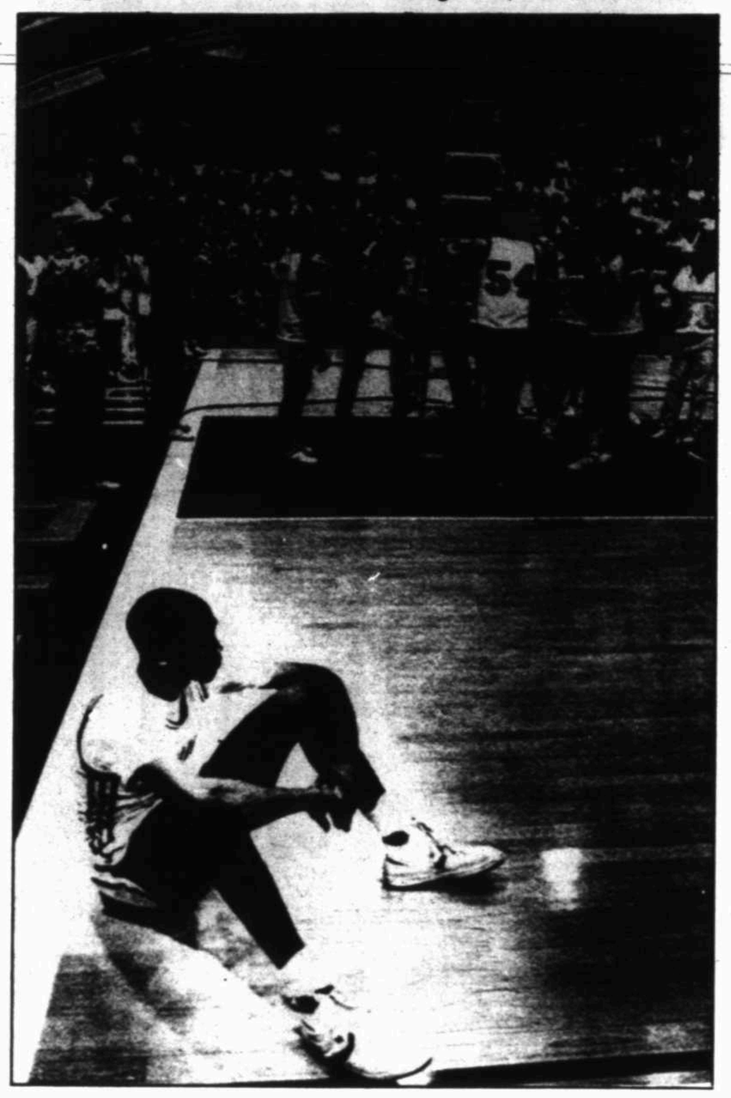
53-38 with 15:41 to go.

But the Tar Heels put on a 16-4 run, including 11 straight points, cutting the deficit to 57-54.



Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Lincoln Minor of Midland College is a picture of dejection as NJCAA champs cut down the net in the background.

Providence 88, G-town 73

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Providence proved it had more than the 3-point bomb in its arsenal using a strong inside game to beat Big East rival Georgetown, the nation's fourth-ranked team, 88-73, and advance to the Final Four.

The Friars, who had lived by the 3-point basket in winning three earlier tournament games, hit only five of nine attempts from long range Saturday, four by substitute Darryl Wright, who had a career-high 20 points.

"That weapon was not going to be available to us today," Providence Coach Rick Pitino said. "We only had one day to prepare, to change our entire philosophy in order to win.

"I told them that 90 percent of the time this team has to play a certain way, but today we have to change."

The Hoyas' defense had been designed to take away the 3-point shot in three earlier meetings between the teams this season, two of which were won by Georgetown.

Wright scored 11 points in a 28-11 burst late in the first half that helped the Friars build a 15-point halftime lead against a team that had thrived on comebacks this season.

"I wrote on the board at halftime, 'They're the best comeback team in America,' " Pitino said.

"Everybody was trying to get to New Orleans," he said of the site of the Final Four next Saturday.

"I think we saw Providence one time too many," Georgetown Coach John Thompson said. "They played with the kind of intensity that I'd expect.

The Friars, 25-8, built an 18-point second half lead over the Big East champions, and refused to give in to the Hoyas' relentless defensive pressure in claiming the championship in the NCAA Southeast Regional tournament.

Guard Billy Donovan, who had led the Friars to their three earlier tournament victories, served as a decoy for most of the game.

Midwest-Indiana-LSU

CINCINNATI — Unranked Louisiana State finds itself in some fancy company among the survivors in the NCAA Tournament, teams with all sorts of high rankings and high seedings in the tournament. Yet, it has a distinction that none of them could not claim.

"We're the only repeater in the final eight," Tigers guard Anthony Wilson.

Wilson, who played a key role in the latest advance when he scored 17 points Friday night in a 63-58 victory over No. 5 DePaul in the Midwest Regional semifinal, said his team was not awed by the company it is keeping.

SEATTLE (AP) — Top-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas and No. 6 Iowa, two teams that mirror each other with pressure defense and uptempo running games, play today, with the winner advancing to the NCAA Final Four.

UNLV, which has won its last 20 games by 10 points or more, will throw its stifling pressure defense at a team that plays much the same style. The game at the Kingdome is scheduled to start at as UNLV Coach Jerry Tarkanian tries to get his 36-1 Runnin' Rebels to the Final Four for the first time in 10 years.

ny all year," Trenkle said. "This team has known how to win, you don't go 37-1 by accident. Don't let anyone tell you that if they'd had so-and-so they would've won. We shut down their big guns down in Duncan and Minor."

HUTCH HAPPENINGS: Despite playing just three games, Blaylock was named to the all tournament team, as was Minor... Other members were MVP Jim Smith, Herkimer, Mitchell Williams, Herkimer, Joe Johnson, Southern Idaho, Mauro Gomes, Southern Idaho; Boo Harvey, San Jacinto; Michael Porter, San Jacinto, John Jerome, Mesa; Lee Campbell, Brewton-Parker; John Turner, Allegany; Willie McCloud, Allegany...

A Greet the Chaps celebration has been set for Monday at 4:30 p.m. in the Centennial Plaza downtown Midland...

"With three kids, we had to have more room."

"After Jenny was born, Mike and I knew we needed more room, but it was hard to part with our old home. We'd become really attached."

"Susan and I wanted and needed a bigger house . . . with room for a study and a big yard for the kids. But, to make it work, we had to get a good price for our old home."

"So, we went to Dene Kelly Realtors. We told our associate just what we wanted and she helped us find the perfect home. There's space to spread out and work, and the kids have plenty of room to grow."

"Our associate at Dene Kelly Realtors helped us get the best price for our old home, then showed us the most affordable way to buy our new one. If we ever need to sell a home again, we'll definitely call Dene Kelly Realtors."

We work for people, not properties.

LAND WANTED
Must stay within following counties: Mitchell, Nolan, Sterling, Coke, Runnels, Borden, Martin. Difficult to discribe, but here is an exaggerated version...I want an old rock house on 50 acres in the middle of 50 sections! Of the above counties, Sterling would be my favorite pick. Will not look at cultivated land unless house is situated on pasture. Need excellent set of working cattle pens or enough land to build them. Good road access and single line phone capability is a must. The ideal set-up would be someone who does not wish to sell off land, but has vacant house sitting on property. Absolutely NO MINI RANCHETTE SUBDIVISIONS!

Listen to the Music

Music is a fact of life. From a little girl who sings to her doll to a commercial jingle to the swell of a magnificent symphony, at some point music flows through everyone's life.

Music can inspire feet to move, spirits to soar, eyes to cry.

Music also can be used as a tool to break down emotional walls, according to music therapist Delaine Little-Faris.

"There is something inherent in music" that reaches people the way words do not, said Ms. Little-Faris, who has had a private music therapy practice in Midland for three years, working mostly with children. Many times a client will relate to the music and start crying, she said.

Emotional walls are often built because pain is easier to ignore than to deal with. "If there's something you can't handle, you just don't," Ms. Little-Faris said, adding that members of Alcoholics Anonymous call the phenomenon "stuffing."

"If you have feelings you can't deal with, you stuff them. ... My job is to go in and pull out all that bad stuff."

Breaking down emotional walls is the way to release all that "bad stuff." However, Ms. Little-Faris said, "bigger kids have stronger defenses (than younger children). Defenses are learned." Some older children will use denial, a "tough guy" image or "any one of a million masks they could wear. Almost any mask you see is a form of defense for something — it's easy to see and hard as the dickens to break," Ms. Little-Faris said.

"If a person has a well-formed defense mechanism, a lot of the time they can defend against me as a person — but they cannot defend against song lyrics if paired with a melody," Ms. Little-Faris said.

The textbook definition of music therapy is "using music to change behavior," Ms. Little-Faris said. "There are two schools of thought on that — one is when you work on behavior and nothing else; the other is when you work on attitude." When attitudes change, she said, behavior changes, too.

Although music therapy is not widely known about or understood, it isn't all that new, Ms. Little-Faris said. It has been used "since about World War II. It has been in psychiatric hospitals for a long time. It's new to family therapy, for sure."

Kelly McDonald is a beautiful 11-year-old girl, with dark hair, sparkling blue eyes and a smile that lights up a room.

She is also the only survivor of an airplane crash that killed her mother, her father and her brother, and left her paralyzed from the neck down.

At the time of the December 1978 crash, Kelly was just weeks from her third birthday.

Since last August, music therapist Delaine Little-Faris has been working with Kelly, who is a quadraplegic and cannot speak.

Kelly McDonald with Delaine Little-Faris

During her twice-weekly visits, Ms. Little-Faris said she works with Kelly on her motor functions and stretching exercises, and does "a lot of relaxation because she's very spastic."

Although not certified as a physical therapist, Ms. Little-Faris said there are a certain amount of rhythmic stretching exercises involved in her music program.

Marie McDonald, Kelly's grandmother and guardian, said that at first she didn't think Kelly was responding to the music, "but you can tell she is now. She moves her little hand more — her right hand. It just seems like she has a little feeling now in her arms and some in her legs." Kelly is able to use both hands a little, her grandmother added.

Kelly also has definite preferences in music, Ms. McDonald said. "Rock and roll — she likes that. That's the only music I can say she really pays attention to when music comes on. You can tell she likes that music — I don't care for it, but she does."

Ms. Little-Faris heard about Kelly from a friend. "Kelly's old aide in her school room several years ago is a very good friend of mine. She called me and told me about Kelly."

The first goal was to work on Kelly's breathing, Ms. Little-Faris said. "We're working right now on deliberate function movement, hopefully the function where she can feed herself.

"Then we'll work on speech. We're still working on her breathing, trying to develop her lungs a little bit."

Clifford Hickey and his bride-to-be, Nancy Greenberg, were honored at parties here last weekend. Other festivities are to follow in Dallas, the bride's hometown, and in Houston, where she is employed as a petroleum landman.

Clifford, who is working on his MBA at UT-Austin, is the son of longtime Midlanders, Andree and Bill Hickey. Both he and Nancy received their undergraduate degrees at UT. He was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity and the Cowboys, a service organization. Nancy was affiliated with Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority.

Guests were asked to wear beach attire to a "Cruise the Caribbean" party and "Around the Clock" shower given by lifelong friends of the groom. That theme was chosen as he and Nancy are planning a Virgin Islands honeymoon following their May 9 wedding in Dallas.

The guests brought gifts for the time of day indicated on their invitations. Midland artist Stan Jacobs was on hand to sketch caricatures of the party-goers as a memento of the happy occasion. A large picture of the honorees, which guests could autograph, was later presented to the couple for their new home.

Hosting the party in the home of Patti and Watson LaForce were Craig Aldridge, Cliffy and B.J. Beal, Kell Cahoon, Karen and Rick Davis, Sharon and Bobby Floyd, Rick Foster, Susan and John Nichols, Courtney and Chris Renaud, Lauren Ribbeck, Sidney and Brian Scarborough and Mary and Scott Thompson.

"Hats Off to Nancy and Clifford" was the theme for a cocktail party, where guests were asked to wear fun and outrageous chapeaux. Held at the home of Mary and Bill Kennedy, it also was hosted by Dyan and Kip Agar and Johnna and Sid Curle.

Festivities came to a close Sunday morning with a brunch at the home of Mary and Henri de Compiegne for family members and the out-of-town guests. Co-hosts were Jean and Buzz Banks, Frances and John Mills and Betty and George Moberly.

Nancy was joined by her parents, Alice and Marshall Greenberg; her brother, Neil, and sister, Julie, of Dallas for the weekend of parties.

All the Hickey clan also was here, including Cynthia and Bob Brown, Mary Margaret and Billy Hickey and Laura Hickey from Dallas, Michele and Rob Arnot of Breckenridge, and Patrick Hickey of Houston. A number of the honored couple's college friends also came in for the occasion.

WHAT THEY'RE READING — Being a book lover myself, I always find it interesting to know what others find so intriguing they can't put down, so I recently conducted an informal survey.

Attorney Darrell Smith is currently reading James A. Michener's "Poland." He recently finished Michener's "The Source" and "The Jews" by Howard Fast.

Eleanor (Mrs. Stephens) Harper just finished Susanne Morris' novel, "Wives and Mistresses," which spans several generations of two prominent families and is set against the backdrop of Eleanor's hometown, Houston. Ms. Morris also is the author of the bestselling 'Galveston," which Eleanor also enjoyed. She is now reading "Interwoven by Sallie Reynolds, a chronicle of family life of old-time ranchers in Shackelford County.

County librarian John Deats enjoys science fiction and is now reading "Lucifer's Hammer" by Larry Niven and Jerry Pournelle. He recently listened on audio cassette to the book, "The Word for World Is Forest" by Ursula K. LeGuin, which received a major Science Fiction award. (John points out that the library now has many books on cassettes, which may be checked out.) On his nightstand and next in line to be read is "The Day the Universe Changed" by James Burke, which is a PBS series and book on the technological breakthroughs in science.

Betty (Mrs. Bill) Sumner is currently reading "Through a Glass Darkly," a historical novel by Karleen Koen, and "White House Mess" by Christopher Buckley. She also enjoys mysteries by P.D. James.

History buff Harry Harrison is reading "Little Ship, Big War" by Cmdr. Edward P. Stafford, U.S.N. (Ret.), a day-by-day narrative of a destroyer escort in World War II's Pacific Theater.

Betty Lloyd (Mrs. Don) Ross is currently enjoying "The Joy of Reading," a collection of plays, books, poems and essays edited by Charles Van Doren. She recently finished Louis L'Amour's "Frontier," as well as "The Story of English, a text which accompanied the PBS-TV series written by Robert MacNeil.

Geologist Max Crunk is now reading "McKinley's Bulldog" by Sanford Sternlicht, a book about the battleship Oregon, which played a prominent part in the Spanish American War. He recently finished "The Beaver Men: Spearheads of Empire" by Mari Sandoz, which tells the story of the early fur traders.

Bess Friedman, a talented book reviewer and voracious reader, is currently reading James A. Michener's 1,000 plus page epic novel, "Texas." Books she recently enjoyed were "Cold Sassy Tree" by Olive Ann Burns, a delightful novel set in a small Southern town in the early 1900s; B.D. Hyman's "My Mother's Keeper" about Bette Davis and Pearl Buck's "Stories of the Bible."

KELLY

"We're trying to get some deliberate movement because when she moves most of the time now it's spastic movement — she's pulling up. I want her to move deliberately by herself."

Ms. Little-Faris has become more than a therapist to the McDonald family — she has become a friend.

"I love her," Mrs. McDonald said. "She's real good with Kelly — she has patience with her and you can tell Kelly loves her. If Kelly doesn't like you, she doesn't smile, she has a different expression. If she smiles and tries to talk, she likes you."

Mrs. McDonald said that at the beginning of Kelly's therapy, "Delaine told me it would be a long, drawn-out road, and I said if I can hang on for eight years ..." since the plane crash.

Kelly's music therapy will continue "as long as I can pay her (Ms. Little-Faris) and she's helping Kelly," Mrs. McDonald said. "She helps me about as much as she helps Kelly."

Book allows gramps to tell about past

Copley News Service

Every time a child is born, so are four grandparents, says Judith Levy, author of "Grandfather Remembers," a book that allows Gramps to "fill in the blanks" about his past.

She says all too often kids never see their grandparents as having once been children; that children seem to think that Grandma and Grandpa just "fell out of the sky."

"Grandfather Remembers" provides space for Grandpa to tell about his family tree, what he was like as a boy, a teenager and a father and how he met Grandma. Sentimentally, it ends with: "I wasn't always perfect; I got grounded for a few. But my Grandfather always loved me, and I'll always love you."

LOW BACK PAIN

Lumbago or low back pain has plagued mankind for many thousands of years. Descriptions of lumbago can be found in the early writings of Hippocrates, the "Father of Medicine" as well as ancient manuscripts found in Asia.

Low back pain may well be modern man's most widespread afflicition. The National Health Insurance of Sweden reported cases of low back pain in 64% of its workers employed in hard labor. A study conducted at Eastman Kodak concluded that lumbago was second only to upper respiratory infections in reasons for absence from work. The National Safety Council reports that some 400,000 workers are disabled each year due to low back injuries.

In cases of severe low back disability, the cause of lumbago can be easily determined. A fall or incorrect lifting procedures are the usual culprits. In most instences, it is hard to pinpoint just what caused the low back pain and everyday activities of living often aggravate the condition.

Misalignment or subluxation of the spinal vertebrae is the most common cause of low back pain. Chiropractic adjustments realign the vertebrae and thus relieve the attendent nerve pressure and muscle spasm of lumbago. Don't delay treatment, help is at hand.

'CSG' causes marital problems

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

During the last few years, genetics has taken the fall for a lot of diseases and weaknesses.

I come from a family where the "CSG" gene is dominant. We Can't Say Good-bye. It is characterized by standing at an open door letting the heat or refrigeration escape and repeating time after time, "It's really been great seeing you. We have to get together soon. Call me."

The deficiency is quite harmless but people with CSG should always marry those with CSG.

My aunt married a man who was quite incompatible. He went to the other extreme. When he was finished with dinner, he pushed himself away from the table, walked out the door, started the motor of the car and yelled only once, "Louise! I'm leaving!" No firm handshakes. No polite remarks about the ham or the cole slaw. No promise of ever seeing them again.

You would have thought I would have learned from all this, but no. I married a man who takes more time to sneeze than to say good-bye.

The other night I climbed into the car after a party and he was livid. "If you had stayed any longer, my suit would have gone out of style."

"All I said was, 'We really must go. It was wonderful. Let's do it again.' "

"But you couldn't let it lay, could you? You had to add, "Love you in that color. Where did you find that dress?' and that opened up another 30 minutes."

"How was I to know she made it herself and had swatches and a new sewing machine that did everything but toss a salad? After that, I just said, "Must go. Good-bye.' "

"To which you then added, "I heard a rumor about Steve and Bridget. I'll call you.' That added another 20 minutes."

The other day I drove my husband to the airport. By the time we got to the gate, we had 45 minutes to spare. "Why are we here so early?" he asked.

I said, "I know you hate long good-byes."

MUSIC

Ms. Little-Faris earned her degree in music therapy from West Texas State University. She plays piano, flute, guitar and percussion. "As a requirement of our degree, we had to learn how to play them all. I had to have 60 hours of music — the same hours as a band director or concert musician. You have to be able to handle instruments that you need to work." The music used in her practice is both live and recorded.

Because she works with so many children, about 150 all together, Ms. Little-Faris has developed an early childhood program which she presents at several local day care centers and preschools. "I work in audio training, movement, and beat and rhythm with 2-, 3-, 4- and 5-year-olds," she said, adding that recent studies found "a co-relation between a child being able to keep the beat and reading skills."

While working with preschoolers, Ms. Little-Faris is often able to spot children who may be facing hearing problems or learning disabilities.

Learning disabled children, she said, are not slow learners — in fact, to a large degree, students with such disabilities are extremely bright — but their self-esteem is shot down by feelings of frustration, guilt and anxiety. "Dyslexia is usually retrained and outgrown by the time the kid is 10 or 12 years old."

For younger children, the music she uses is "very basic stuff. Even getting a kid to admit he has feelings is challenging. A kid of about 3, when you ask him how it feels to get mad, he usually says 'Mama spanked me.' For preschoolers, they have to be taught when their face turns red, there's a label for that."

Elementary school-aged children are often faced with problems within the family, including their parents' separation or divorce. These children feel "guilty, angry, disconnected, afraid. And the older they are, the worse their feelings of guilt are — not necessarily guilt, but adjustment to a single-parent family."

Though all children are individuals, their feelings about family situations are remarkably similar, Ms. Little-Faris said. "Kids are funny, they internalize so much," taking all their families' troubles as their personal responsibility "no matter what kind of stress is in the family. ... Adults internalize an awful lot, too — not as much as kids, but an awful lot."

High school and junior high school students also face the problem of drugs, Ms. Little-Faris said. "When we deal with drugs, the first thing is to get rid of the symptom (the drug dependency). Then we go past that and deal with the core issues that made them turn to drugs."

If a student is also dealing with an alcohol dependency — "alcohol is the drug of choice," she said — he or she can often find help through AA and its related programs. Ms. Little-Faris has high praise for the AA program: "Anything related to Ala-something (such as Ala-Anon or Ala-Teen) is OK by me."

When working with older students, Ms. Little-Faris uses more popular music. "I work with Paul Simon — his 'Graceland' album. Huey Lewis is the best thing to hit rock-and-roll."

Working to change a child's behavior through therapy requires family changes as well, Ms. Little-Faris said. "In order for really successful therapy to take place, when the kid is making progress, the family is automatically involved. ... It's unrealistic to think you can change a child's behavior without a lot of family changes. Kids do what they see — if there's violence in the home, you'll see violence fom the kid. Usually. But that doesn't have to be."

Questions designed to make reading fun

Copley News Service

If you were an animal, what would you be?

If TV hadn't been invented, how would you spend your time?

Those are some of the questions parents should be asking their children to stimulate an interest in reading. So says communications expert Caroline Bauer, who has been working with Waldenbooks to create a Reading Personality Questionnaire.

Bauer says the idea is to make reading fun again.

While she says there's nothing wrong with "supermarket-bought books," Bauer says children should develop their own interests.

That's where the questionnaire comes in. She says a child who's interested in snakes won't give a hoot about horses.

By asking about favorite fantasies, sports, persons or animals, Bauer says children will turn on to reading rather than TV.

Issue of surname becoming serious problem

Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — In the mid-1970s, many brides — imbued with the zeal of feminism — elected to keep their maiden names after marriage. In most cases, when the children came along, they were given a surname that combined daddy's and mommy's last names, separated by a hyphen.

The son of Jennifer Kennedy and David Jones, for example, became Thomas Kennedy-Jones (or, on rare occasions when the mother got her way, Thomas Jones-Kennedy).

Establishment U.S.A. was concerned. Although the hyphenated surname has long been a tradition in Spanish cultures, it seemed to pose possible complications for future generations of Americans: When Thomas Kennedy-Jones decided to marry Alice Brown-Johnson, would their child be Jonathan Kennedy-Jones-Brown-Johnson? Or vice versa?

"Two generations down the pike, this surname business is going to really screw up the system," speculated a retailing executive. "We won't be able to make charge cards big enough to handle all those letters." Hastening to quell the trend toward the hyphenated heir and heiress, several states passed laws specifying that a child born to a married couple bear the father's last name, and one born out of wedlock bear the mother's.

THERE WERE more squawks than balks, and that seemed to be the end of that. But recently, according to a report in the Wall Street Journal, some parents have begun making use of little-known laws which allow them to bestow upon their children the surname of their choice, at whim. Thus, a couple who don't care for either of their own family names may christen the kiddies with other people's monikers.

Case in point: Pierce Barker and Carol Frost of Maryland gave their first born the last name "Roth-Tubman," after author Philip Roth and abolitionist Harriet Tubman. They named baby number two "Smith-Cook," after maternal and paternal ancestors, and their third child was surnamed "Woods" for her great-great-grandma.

In another instance, Christine Ledbetter and her husband, Dean Skylar, who live in Florida, named their son Sydney Anthony Skybetter. They thought at first of using the more conventional hyphenated "Ledbetter-Skylar," but considered "Skybetter" better.

Some states are fighting to tighten up their restrictions to prevent parents from plucking surnames out of the air and planting them on birth certificates, the Journal says. But Federal courts in three of those states have decided in favor of a couple's constitutional right to name their children as they see fit. The state of North Carolina claimed that free naming was messing up its indexing system, but Federal Judge Robert Merhige Jr. responded that as long as birth certificates bear the names chosen by parents, those parents don't care whether state registrars "call their children A-1, A-2 and A-3, or Huey, Duey and Louey." To restrict the right to name a child as one pleases, the justice decreed, "impinges upon decisions affecting family life, procreation and child-rearing — areas of human experience which the Supreme Court has long held must be accorded special protection."

SEEING THE signature on the wall, New Jersey is the latest state to rewrite its regulations rather than risk being challenged in court. The change is being effected to protect the right of a New Jersey couple, Mr. Greenberg and his wife, Ms. McBride, who want to name their baby "Greenbride." (Let's hope it's a girl.)

Survey: Wives have secrets from past

Associated Press

NEW YORK — More than half of the 104,000 women who responded to a magazine survey said they have guns in their homes, with 40 percent of the firearms strictly for protection, according to the Ladies Home Journal.

Forty-two percent of the respondents to "The Private Life of the American Woman" survey said they have been the victims of crime.

The results of the Journal's fifth annual readers' survey are published in the magazine's April issue.

More than half of the 85,000 married women who participated said there's something in their past they have not told their husbands.

Sixty percent said they also were hiding something from their children.

About 25 percent said their worst trangression was having an affair.

Half of those who replied said they've lied about something important.

The magazine said 31 percent admitted cheating a little on taxes and 58 percent admitted taking pens, paper and other supplies from the office.

As for a different kind of cheating, 71 percent said they would not tell a friend her husband was having an affair but 73 percent said they would want to be told if their husband was.

Seventy percent said they would favor their sons joining the armed forces and 58 percent would approve their daughters' signing up.

The respondents' median age was 38 and a total of about 85 percent were married. Sixty-seven percent of those were in their first marriage. The respondents had an average of two children. Seventy-seven percent work full or part-time and 52 percent said they attended college.

They lived primarily in suburbs and small towns across the country and have a median family income of $42,000.

Surf bar is newest California craze for beach people

By MARK SAUER
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — William "Billy B." Baxter is what might be called a "surfist."

He'd like to segregate the beach district from the Easterners, yuppies, Perrier-swilling investment bankers, Realtors and other subhuman establishment-types who threaten his mission of non-stop fun, sun, sand and surf.

"This bar is run by beach people for beach people. If you're a jerk, don't come in here; go to ... some jerk disco place," Billy B. says.

The owner of the new Kahuna's Surf Bar explains his world view in a somber, almost militant, tone, sounding more like a mercenary defending some jungle massacre than a laid-back beach bum.

"There are two kinds of people in the world — those who surf and those who want to."

CNS Graphic

HE PAUSED for dramatic effect then shifted his gaze toward the giant video screen, taking comfort in the footage of a bronzed figure in flower-print baggies ripping down the face of a 30-foot Hawaiian wave.

"We serve native Californian food at native Californian prices — where else can you get a half-pound surf burger, salad bar and a pitcher of beer and not spend five bucks? This place is real, man."

Billy B. found his truth in "The Endless Summer"; "Surfer Girl" still brings tears to his eyes; Brian Wilson and the Beach Boys are like Christ and the apostles to him.

"If I were a millionaire, I still wouldn't have long pants on," says Billy B.

For 10 years or so, he's had this dream of opening a surf bar near the beach, a gritty place for real surfers to park their boards at the door and hang out.

Now it's a reality — Kahuna's — and Billy B. couldn't be any prouder.

HE BOUGHT an old inn, a dingy neighborhood fixture since 1951, and gave it a complete face-lift for just $2,500, doing the work himself with a little help from his friends.

The place is painted sea-blue and is appointed with appropriate accoutrements: a jukebox with surf music; a half dozen TV monitors (plus the big screen) running continuous surf movies; wooden counters resembling antique Hawaiian paddleboards; vintage surfboards hanging from the ceiling; a wall mural depicting a perfect wave.

"We've got satellite TV and we can get sports from anywhere. But every time I turn something on, everybody yells, 'Put the surf movies back on,'" Billy B. said.

Then there is the waterless surfboard — Kahuna's answer to the mechanical bull in cowboy bars. It's a real surfboard mounted on foam cushion with electronic sensors underneath and the bar surfer tests his skill on a wave that appears on the TV screen. Patrons love it.

KAHUNA'S IS open at 6 a.m. and you can get the "Dawn Patrol" breakfast — two eggs, hash browns, sausage or bacon, toast and jelly — for 99 cents. Closing time is 2 a.m., naturally.

Billy B. figures it's a high achievement for a part-time lettuce loader and full-time surfer to have become a respectable saloon keeper. But more importantly, Billy B. finally has a place where he and his ilk feel at home.

Now they truly can live the gospel that Jan and Dean immortalized in "Surf City": "You know we're either out surfin' or we got a party goin'."

"I've spent more time at the beach than any man my age," Billy B. said proudly, although he wouldn't reveal his age. "I grew up in Mission Beach (a community of San Diego) and I've surfed all over the world. I've never lived more than half a block from the beach. I don't know anything but the beach."

Billy B. said the beach has never offered much of a living — you either sold surfboards or worked construction. But years ago that didn't matter.

BILLY B. used to rent out rubber rafts for 35 cents an hour in an Ocean Beach surf shop that he leased for $55 a month. He shared a house with other surfers and life was rad.

"But then all the developers and chain operators came in and bought up the beach and put the prices out of reach," he said. "And the California culture was lost.

"Every bar on the beach in California used to be like this one. Now you can't find one. We've sold our heritage."

In the few months Kahuna's has been open, Billy B.'s dream bar has earned the distinction of selling more kegs of Budweiser per week — up to 40 — than almost any bar around.

Billy B. has some big contest plans. Real surf-bar stuff, like wet T-shirt contests for the surfer girls and "white Speedo-trunks" contests for surfer boys (each involves soaking down see-through fabrics, of course), and a microphone swallowing contest (don't ask).

All of this planning would seem to be cutting into Billy B.'s surfing time, which would be a drag. But he doesn't let it.

"If the surf's up, if it's 6 feet breaking outside and the waves are great, I'll be there, even if I have to miss a dozen business appointments," he said. "I live for those days."

The man is real, man.

Leisure weekend replacing vacation

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The weekend jaunt has surpassed the traditional two-week trip as America's vacation preference, according to a survey commissioned by a major hotel chain.

Nearly three-quarters of all pleasure trips take three days or less, while only one in four was a longer trip, reported the research firm Audits & Surveys, Inc.

That survey of 1,513 people last November and December was commissioned by Marriott Hotels and Resorts. The results have a possible margin of error of plus or minus 3 percent.

"While the extended vacation will not disappear, it is being gradually replaced by an increase in shorter, more frequent weekend pleasure trips," said Jeffery J. Hallett, president of the consulting firm Trend Response and Analysis Co.

He said the growing number of two-earner families accounts at least in part for this change.

"This makes it difficult to go away for two weeks at a time ... where coordinating longer vacation time is a frustrating task," he said.

Overall findings of the study included:

■ During the past year 66 percent of Americans traveled overnight at least once. Of those, 73 percent of the trips were three days or less.

■ Most popular summer activities were sightseeing, 40 percent; swimming 36 percent; shopping, 18 percent; camping and hiking, 17 percent and dining, 15 percent.

■ In winter the top activities were sightseeing, 37 percent; snow skiing, 26 percent; shopping, 19 percent; dining, swimming and camping and hiking, 14 percent each.

■ The most often encountered problem was disappointing food, cited by 59 percent of people. Other problems listed included accommodations too expensive and disappointing accommodations, 46 percent each; unfriendly or poor service, 45 percent, and overcrowding or running out of money, 42 percent each.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Grieving openly beneficial

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Being with a loved one during the last days leading up to their death is a very difficult emotional experience. No matter how ready we say we are, the loss hits us with an impact.

Yet in many respects, how we deal with death tells a great deal about ourselves. This would include both what we've faced and what we've avoided.

Death is the supreme crisis, the continuing mystery. The death of one parent often leaves the other devastated and facing a number of adjustments.

When both parents are deceased the adult child finds himself or herself confronting feelings of emptiness and aloneness.

Psychologically, you are on your own. You are no longer someone's loved child, in the sense of having a strong reassurance through their physical presence.

The adult child is put on the line to stand on his or her own and to work through the various aspects of grief.

Adult children may mentally prepare themselves for the death of a parent. Yet no matter what you have imagined, when the death occurs, it is unique, overwhelming, elemental and powerful.

The child is filled with a kaleidoscope of emotional responses; love, hate, guilt, what you will miss, that which you are free.

Those who are able to grieve openly find it healthy. Some children repress the feelings, which makes grief that much more difficult.

Those who grieve too long find added problems and troubles occuring.

There has been a great deal of research on grief, particularly how it affects the mental health of survivors. Ethnic and religious groups differ in how they grieve.

Essentially though, the freedom to grieve openly is a key to good future mental health.

Freedom to cry without shame, to feel lost and alone, to express fear and love, to show resentment and anger, to express whatever it is that one feels, is the liberation from ceaseless mourning, prolonged repressed guilt and subsequent poor mental health.

If there is a surviving parent, children should try to understand his or her feelings as well as their own.

Having a knowledge of the various stages of grief is essential at this point.

For example, a child may be offended when a widow or widower expresses anger or hostility to the departed parent, and have no insight into the complex relationship that has just ended.

The child may not realize that the feelings of anger and abandonment are natural emotional responses and a part of the grief process.

Another illustration would reflect a surviving parent who imposes a burden of guilt on a child who expresses anger or resentment about his departed parent.

Relationships are complex and often in moments of high stress, members of a grieveing family may be too harsh in judging one another. Given time and an understanding of the grief process, conflicting emotions can be worked through.

A final aspect of the grief process is acceptance. Unless other conditions or events intervene, both the adult child and surviving parent will ultimately emerge from this period of grief and mourning to move forward with their lives.

In many families it is easier for the child to make the necessary adjustments and to go through the process in a shorter time period.

Older parents who lose a lifelong partner may never truly adjust and live their lives in a meaningful manner. If they have been particularly dependent upon the other partner, the loss is extremely difficult for them to accept at an advanced age.

In some cases the grief is too strong and the survivor may encounter a series of illnesses or even die.

If grief is unable to be resolved, the surving parent may become despondent, listless, too frail to maintain an independent lifestyle.

However, those individuals with strong emotional and physical resources, even older parents, can still find the motivation to pick up and go forward if they have a caring support system.

During such times of grief, family support and understanding is all important.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

DEAR ABBY

Dinner guests' behavior unacceptable

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I recently had five couples to our home for dinner. It was a lot of work, as an extensive menu had been requested. We spent the entire day preparing the dinner and were busy in the kitchen up until the time we served it. We didn't even have a chance to sit down and converse with our guests.

The dinner was delicious — everyone raved. But immediately after the dessert, one of the guests asked for a newspaper to check the movie listings!

Before we knew it, four couples were putting on their coats and running out the door so they wouldn't be late for the movie. I will say in their defense that they invited my husband and me to join them, but we declined.

I may be old-fashioned or too sensitive, but when people go to someone's home for the kind of meal we prepared, and then run away to a movie immediately afterward, I call that unacceptable behavior.

To add insult to injury, they telephoned us to say they couldn't get into the movie of their first choice, and would we check the listings for their second choice!

What do you think of such people? — TOO SENSITIVE IN N.Y.

DEAR SENSITIVE: The behavior you describe is not only "unacceptable," it's downright rude! You say the menu had been "requested," which would indicate that your dinner guests came primarily to eat. Well-mannered guests would have remained after dinner to converse. These folks obviously came only to eat, so all you missed was the company of a lot of "oink-oinks" to round out the evening.

DEAR ABBY: Your letter warning people about the hazards of riding on escalators recalls the time my husband and I were riding the escalator with our 4-year-old grandson.

Although we were aware of the emergency buttons at the top and bottom, we were in the middle of the staircase when "Jimmy's" shoelace got trapped in the teeth of the escalator. I tried vainly to pull the shoelace out of the teeth of the escalator while my husband quickly removed Jimmy's foot from the trapped shoe.

By the time someone stopped the escalator, the shoe was torn to shreds, but our grandson's foot was intact.

So in addition to knowing about the emergency buttons, adults should remember to get the child's foot out of the shoe as quickly as possible. — FRANCES LOONEY, SEAL BEACH, CALIF.

Attitude studied

Copley News Service

You've always heard that your attitude can make or break you — now it's been proven.

According to psychologist Dr. Martin Seligman, your attitude not only affects the way you handle adversity, but also determines your level of achievement in life and your overall state of health.

Seligman is using a specially designed questionnaire to determine whether someone is an optimist or a pessimist. He reports that optimists are twice as likely as pessimists to excel in competitive careers.

WAR RAGES ON

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of a three-part series on area Vietnam veterans.

Harry Austin, a Midland convenience store manager, took a puff off his cigarette and gazed at the floor. He adjusted his cap, emblazoned with "Vietnam Veteran, and damn proud of it!"

"I used to have flashbacks and bad dreams about the time my helicopter was shot down. I was about to jump out the door when the helicopter caught a rocket. I jumped and broke two disks in my back when I landed. No one else survived.

"The part in my nightmares is the two-day period when I drifted in and out of consciousness and pain. I heard voices but didn't dare call out to people that I couldn't see. It could have been the Viet Cong. Finally, I saw a man in a red cross helmet and got help," Austin said and shook his head.

"Vietnam is behind me now. I've put it away where it belongs," he said. "It's history, and I can't blame my Vietnam experience for anything that happens to me now."

Time has been a healer for Austin. His nightmares and flashbacks have decreased. He is one of the more fortunate veterans who has come to terms with the inner scars caused by fighting the Vietnam War.

Two million seven hundred thousand American soldiers served in Vietnam; more than 57,000 of them lost their lives. Many more came back "walking wounded," physically or mentally scarred. Unfortunately, even after 23 years, numerous veterans have not been able to make it all the way home from Southeast Asia. For them, the war inside rages on.

George L. Skypeck, in a pamphlet published by Disabled American Veterans (DAV), said that "By conservative estimates, at least half a million Vietnam veterans still lead lives plagued by serious war-related readjustment problems."

"Such problems crop up in a number of ways, varying from veteran to veteran. Flashbacks to combat ... feelings of alienation or anger ... depression, loneliness and an inability to get close to others ... sometimes drug or alcohol problems ... perhaps even suicidal feelings. The litany goes on."

CLINICALLY, THE readjustment problems these veterans suffer are designated as Post-Traumatic Stress Disorders (PTSD) in the 1981 American Psychiatric Association's "Diagnostic & Statistical Manual III."

The American Psychiatric Association characterizes this disorder as an involuntary re-experiencing of a catastrophic event. It has been found in natural disaster survivors, for instance, those who live through a devastating earthquake or survivors of concentration camps. It also is found in survivors of the Vietnam War.

What makes this type of stress unusual in the Vietnam veterans' experience, according to Goodwin, is that after the war, the incidence of neuropsychiatric disorder for combatants increased. Studies done after World War II and the Korean War show that disorders decreased after the war.

According to a study done in 1978 by the President's Commission on Mental Health, the number of veterans presenting neuropsychiatric disorders began a tremendous increase since 1973 (after the American troop involvement ended).

The adjustment problems come to the surface when men are depressed or something triggers a memory, according to Jim Goodwin, Psy.D., a Marine Corps Vietnam combat veteran and a volunteer counselor in the DAV Vietnam Veterans Outreach Programs.

Goodwin said, "It may be the sound of popcorn popping, (the sound is very close to small arms gunfire in the distance), any loud discharge, a rainy day (it rains for months during the monsoons in Vietnam) and finally the sight of Vietnamese refugees."

For local veterans, John Ferguson, a counselor at the Veteran's Readjustment Counseling Center in Midland, said, "The economic depression here has caused feelings of depression to escalate. Veterans lose their jobs, get depressed, and suddenly there are memories of the war, resulting in an avalanche of depression."

FEELINGS OF guilt, remorse, anger and depression that have been repressed for years come to the surface, according to Ferguson.

"Losing their jobs gives Veterans a feeling of 'it's them against us' again," Ferguson said. "Not only that, a big trigger for repressed memories has been the movie, 'Platoon," he said.

"Americans are finally seeing our side of the war," the Odessa veteran said, "what they didn't see was how bad it was for us when we came back home. We didn't get anything close to a heroes' welcome."

Nonetheless, the staff at the Readjustment Center, stress it isn't a heroes' welcome that veterans want. "We just want Americans to acknowledge that there is a problem," Ferguson said. "It isn't necessary for people to understand it. It's not our job to make them understand. We just want people to know that there is this mental disorder (PTSD)."

Veterans Centers have been established throughout the nation because, "the hospitals are not meeting the needs of the Vietnam veterans," said Carl Edwards, readjustment counselor for the local center.

But are the needs of Vietnam veterans different than veterans of previous wars? According to studies on PTSD, they are. Goodwin cites the facts that 1) Vietnam was an individual's war that wasn't fought as units 2) the ideological basis for the war was hard to grasp 3) it was America's first teenage war 4) drugs were readily available, and most important 5) soldiers returned home to a country of citizens that not only did not welcome them, but also questioned their motives for fighting in Vietnam.

The Vietnam War is referred to as an individual's war because of the strategy employed by military planners known as Date of Expected Return From Overseas (DEROS). Every individual serving in Vietnam, except general officers, knew before leaving the United States when he or she was scheduled to return. The tour lasted 12 months for almost everyone.

THE ADVANTAGE of DEROS was there would not be an endless period of combat for any individual. Some time elapsed before the disadvantages of having soldiers fight an individual war — which began the day they arrived and ended the day they left — were known.

Soldiers felt separated from those who were with them but on different rotating schedules. Goodwin said, "He feels no continuity with those who precede or follow him ... Because of this individual aspect of the war, unit morale, unit cohesion and unit identification suffered tremendously."

Studies from past wars suggest the concept of unit integrity acted as a buffer against the overwhelming stresses of combat. Many units trained together, went overseas together, and returned home together. Often the long boatride home gave them a chance to talk things over with their "buddies."

Soldiers in the Vietnam War experienced a much more abrupt arrival and departure. Jada Thacker, a former Odessan, went into Vietnam to cover for troops pulling out. "Within 72 hours, I had gone from San Francisco to Da Nang. By the time I got there, things were pretty bad. I was handed a body bag, two canteens, one machete, one poncho, and one helmet without the supply officer even blinking."

An Odessa veteran who participates in psychiatric group therapy sessions at the local veteran center experienced the same kind of arrival to Vietnam from the United States. "One day I was in Texas, the next day I was in the jungle and a few days later people were shooting at me," he said.

"Then when I returned home, people spit on me and threw me out of restaurants when I was in uniform," he said.

ANOTHER PROBLEM for many soldiers in combat, was identifying the enemy. "It was never clear cut. How could you tell who was North Vietnamese or South Vietnamese?" Austin asked. "The smoke would clear from a fire fight, and you would see your barber lying dead on the ground. The day before he had cut my hair! I thought he was a civilian, but the next day he was firing at me. To think that he had a razor at my throat shaving me the day before we shot him was too fightening to think about."

'Platoon' keeps vet center busy

The movie "Platoon," about one man's experience of the Vietnam War, has suddenly thrust America's least popular war back into the nation's consciousness.

The movie no studio wanted to make — it took author and director Oliver Stone five years to find backers — was the top-grossing movie in the U.S. for February, according to The Los Angeles Times News Service.

A Midland veteran said he saw a teenagers walk out of a movie theater with tears in his eyes saying, "I didn't know that that was the way it was."

VETERANS

One problem for American troops was that they questioned the morality of the war itself.

The Odessa veteran who attends group therapy sessions at the local veteran center, said, "We questioned what was right and what was wrong morally. There was a question of integrity also. You would ask yourself, 'Should I kill this person or not?' "

How can you be civilized in an uncivilized war?" Austin asked. "There was a My Lai, every day. On search and destroy missions on Cigar Island if anything moved, we blew it up. Who's to say we didn't kill as many civilians as Viet Cong?"

Carl Edwards, a counselor at the local veteran center, said the war experience for blacks was even more confusing. "Remember we were fighting during the turmoil of the 60s," Edwards said. "We wondered why we should fight for a country when equality wasn't preserved at home?"

Ron Boxmeyer, team leader for the local veteran center, agreed. "Whenever Kenny Rogers sings that song about 'things being so much easier 20 years ago,' I wonder where he was. Was it great 20 years ago? We had the drug culture, hippies, racial unrest and Vietnam. Yeah, it was sure great 20 years ago."

Moral questions were difficult enough to address without the added factor that most of the men were in reality just teenagers. A profile of the troops that fought in Vietnam from Stan Horton, director of the Houston Vietnam Veterans Leadership Program in VFW magazine, said, "Those who served in Vietnam were younger than their WWII counterparts. The Average age was 19, compared with WWII's 26. Two-thirds of those killed in Vietnam were 21 or younger."

"You have to understand, the 18, 19 and 20-year-old is developing morality at that age and puts into practice things that he has been socially oriented to do. Killing people is not something that we are taught is morally right to do," Ferguson said.

SANDRA HUPPENBAUER, a psychiatric nurse for a Veterans Administration Medical Center in Allen Park, Mich., said in the American Journal of Nursing, "Some veterans report they felt militarily impotent — that they were placed in a no-win situation in Vietnam. They were restrained militarily for what they consider to be political reasons and were unable to employ the available weaponry to win the war."

She said this resulted in a sense of helplessness that lowered morale and escalated feelings of anger and rage. In addition, the nature of the war made it increasingly difficult to justify the death of friends."

She said some soldiers adapted themselves to the situation by numbing their feelings and clouding their awareness with mind-altering substances — alcohol and drugs — which resulted in long-term addiction problems for some.

"Drugs were also a big part of the scene," Thacker said.

"Anyone that says they didn't see any drugs is crazy. We trudged through fields of marijuana on occasions," Austin said.

BUT DRUGS weren't the only problem. Apparently, the constant adrenaline high that men in combat experienced, caused a lot of stress. "Not only that," Thacker said, "But the adrenaline high was somewhat addictive. I think many veterans commit suicide as a result of trying to achieve this high again — racing cars, getting in fights, or drinking or taking drugs to excess."

"Some men had a real feeling of power after shooting machine guns in the jungle. Then they came back to the U.S. and suddenly they are just another guy without a GED," Edwards said.

Austin's experience was different than many local veterans. He trained, fought and returned home as a unit of Long-Range Re-Con (known as rangers in WWII) for 21 months until his helicopter was shot down. He stayed in the army for two years after he returned, stationed at Fort Hood.

"Martial Arts helped me learn to control pain and put my life back in order mentally and physically. It gets your adrenaline flowing in a positive way," Austin said. "I found ways to deal with my stress."

Stress problems were compounded for veterans who went through divorces shortly after returning to America.

"I think going through my divorce was more devastating to me emotionally than anything that happened to me in Vietnam," Austin said.

VETERANS ALSO found that there was a stigma attached to anyone who had served in Vietnam.

"I couldn't believe it when people called me 'baby killer,' Austin said.

The Odessa veteran had the same experience: "People have this image of the Vietnam vet as someone who will run down to your local convenience store and take hostages. The media is partly to blame for this. Any time a veteran loses control, no matter what else he did in his life, the emphasis will be on the fact that he is a Vietnam veteran."

Veterans who have suppressed feelings of guilt, anger or depression, or are dealing with delayed stress, can get help at the Midland Readjustment Counseling Center, which opened October 1985.

"Some people have been carrying anger inside themselves for 17-20 years," Burns said. "What we do here is allow them to be comfortable enough to release those feelings."

"At least they can talk here. It's a safe place to let their anger out," Ferguson said. "We are not an employment office. We can't get veterans jobs, although we can get them in touch with people that can help them financially. We are not a 24-hour crisis center and can't meet all the needs of people."

"Our center serves as a neutralizing element for the vet," said Carl. "If we think we have problems now with PTSD, just wait until 30 years down the road."

The problems with PTSD take on a greater importance in numbers than just the half a million veterans suffering from it. According to Ferguson, it affects the entire family and most of the people close to the veterans will be affected.

"Vietnam won't ever be over," Burns said. "We will just be able to diffuse the emotions of veterans, listen to them and try to understand them."

Another participate in the vet center's therapy group, said,"We came to the center to get help, not to tell war stories. People shouldn't let the stigma of 'getting therapy' prevent them from getting help. You are not alone."

Al Santoli, author of "Everything We Had: An Oral History of the Vietnam War By 33 American Soldiers Who Fought It," sums up the request of many veterans in his preface. Santoli wrote, "Please understand that we are not asking for a parade, a monument or pity. But we do ask you to remember in your own way the 57,661 Americans who died in the war. Perhaps all of them died in vain. But if we as individuals and as a nation learned something of human value for having been in Southeast Asia, their sacrifice ... was not futile."

'Kicking the habit' may have drawback, doctors say

BOSTON (AP) — Quitting smoking appears to raise the odds of contracting a serious intestinal disease known as ulcerative colitis, but the benefits of kicking the habit still far outweigh the risks, doctors reported today.

The researchers said their study appeared to be the first to find a health hazard related to quitting smoking. Cigarette smoking is believed to cause a variety of major illnesses, including cancer and heart disease.

The doctors found that smokers had a 40 percent lower chance than those who never smoked of getting ulcerative colitis. But reformed smokers had double the non-smokers' risk.

"The adverse health effects from smoking far outnumber any potential benefits to be gained from decreasing one's risk of ulcerative colitis," said Dr. Edward J. Boyko, who directed the study.

"Ulcerative colitis is rare, but cancer and heart disease are not rare," he added in an interview. "The argument simply can't be made that one should continue smoking to improve one's health, because that would not be happening."

Boyko, a researcher at the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center in Denver, outlined his findings in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The study seems to suggest that something in cigarette smoke protects against ulcerative colitis, Boyko said. Just why giving up the habit might increase the risk also is a mystery.

The researchers theorized that it might have something to do with weight gain, which is common after kicking the habit, or increased physical activity, but they cautioned these ideas were highly speculative.

Boyko said he and his co-authors "put their heads together and tried to think of (another) illness associated with quitting smoking, and we couldn't come up with anything."

About one in 1,000 Americans has ulcerative colitis, a chronic inflammation of the lining of the large intestine. No one knows what causes the disease, which usually strikes between ages 20 and 40, causing diarrhea, cramps and bloody stools.

Sometimes the illness goes away by itself. But if it lingers for years, the only effective treatment is removal of the diseased part of the large intestine.

He and colleagues identified 212 people with ulcerative colitis and compared their habits with those of 212 healthy people of the same age and sex. Those studied were enrolled in a Seattle health maintenance organization with 304,000 members.

The researchers looked for other explanations for the apparent connection between smoking and the disease but found none. For instance, smokers drink more coffee than do non-smokers, but coffee did not account for the link.

For instance, researchers have found that women who smoke heavily might have a lower risk of cancer of the uterus, possibly because cigarettes reduce their estrogen secretions.

Study: Smoking on airplanes hazardous

Copley News Service

The National Academy of Sciences issued a major new study of smoking on airplanes.

They concluded that because of the dual dangers of secondhand smoke and fires, smoking should be banned on all domestic flights.

According to the report, a ban on smoking is needed to protect the health and safety of crews and passengers and bring cabin air quality up to a reasonable level.

Cigarette advertisements criticized

BOSTON (AP) — A substantial increase in advertising for low-tar cigarettes may help convince smokers that such tobacco products are safe, a U.S. Centers for Disease Control doctor said.

"The heavy promotion of low-yield brands will continue to undermine the message that there is no safe cigarette," Dr. Ronald M. Davis wrote in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Davis said the ads for low-tar cigarettes may imply that they are safe. He cited a Federal Trade Commission report that said "such implied representations may mislead the reader about the safety of smoking reduced tar and nicotine brands."

Davis, a CDC physician in Rockville, Md., who analyzed trends in cigarette advertising said that in 1984, 64 percent of total advertising and promotional spending was on low-tar cigarettes. At the same time, these cigarettes accounted for 54 percent of the U.S. cigarette market.

In an accompanying editorial, Dr. Kenneth E. Warner of the University of Michigan School of Public Health urged the adoption of legal restrictions on cigarette ads.

"Given the uniqueness of the damage wrought by tobacco and a strong presumptive case that advertising and promotion do contribute to the initiation and maintenance of tobacco habits," he wrote.

Scott Stapf, a spokesman for the Tobacco Institute, said cigarette ads did not make health claims, and he denied the industry was trying to shift people's buying habits toward low-tar cigarettes.

Dating service says 'butt out' to smokers

Copley News Service

A dating service in Boston is snubbing smokers.

The service, called Lunch Dates, recently told smokers to butt out after discovering that 90 percent of its clients didn't smoke and 78 percent refused to date someone who did.

Spokesman Steve Penner says it seems no one wants to date a smoker these days. In fact, he claims it's harder to get a smoker a date than a person who is extremely obese.

Non-smoking clients give a couple of good reasons for snuffing smokers. First, single parents say they don't want to date smokers because they're afraid smokers will have a bad influence on their kids. Second, most clients claim kissing a smoker is like licking the bottom of an ashtray.

Behaviors that once were excused as discipline problems now no longer are acceptable to parents, teachers and others. To her family, home life has become strained and filled with frustration. They don't know where to turn for help.

Chronic sadness, inability to communicate with others or repeated school failure may indicate a serious emotional problem. According to the American Cancer Society, one out of eleven women in the United States will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 women die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancers are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate and a 90% 10 year survival rate.

A mammogram can detect a cancer this small, ● even before it can be felt.

Appointments may be made by calling 561-9999

The Mobile Breast Cancer Detection Unit from Odessa Women's & Childrens Hospital will be in Midland at the 1st Baptist Church parking lot-corner of Louisiana & Garfield St.

The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease). Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Academy of Family Physicians, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and The American College of Radiology. Those guidelines are:

I. 35-40 years of age - One baseline mammogram.

II. 40-50 years of age - A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.

III. 50 years of age and over -An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.

IV. Asymptomatic women under 50 years of age with significant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intervals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancer.

V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who is highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $50.00. The Unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

The UPC bar code system, once used only in grocery stores, is being utilized in many different aspects of business today, and its popularity as a time- and money-saving device is increasing.

Retailers cash in on nifty bar code system

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Escalating use of scanners with computers is allowing more businesses the opportunity to use bar codes, and local grocery store managers say it is a nifty system for controlling and evaluating inventories.

"The bar code really serves a two-fold purpose," says Larry Black, grocery manager at Skaggs Alpha Beta in Midland. "Not only does it speed customer check out, but it also is extremely helpful in tracking product movement."

Black says the code enables them to determine which brands sell best, thereby keeping customer-preferred products in stock.

Butch Thompson, store manager at Albertsons, agrees that the code has made the retail grocery business more efficient: "We use the code to track advertising loss and as a source of inventory control. For example, during the Christmas season, when we sell lots of chopped pecans, we can look at a printout, determine how many we sold the previous season and get a good idea of what we need to order."

Thompson says the code is a "great labor-saving device."

"We don't have to mark prices on every individual item and it eliminates problems we used to encounter with sale items and price changes."

Black says everything is computerized at a central location, and the price and product changes are sent in to the individual stores.

The Universal Product Code symbol allows use of automated checkstands. As items are presented to the checker, they are passed over an optical scanner which 'reads' the UPC symbol, decodes it to the UPC code number and transmits this code number to a small computer, which stores price and other information on all items carried in the store. The computer transmits back to the check stand the item's price and description, which are instantly displayed and printed on the customer's receipt tape, as well as sending relevant information on taxability and food stamp acceptance.

At the same time, the computer captures and stores movement information which can than be aggregated and summarized into a wide variety of control reports.

Although the bar code system has been around for more than 15 years, it is finally moving far beyond groceries as technology gets cheaper. Some examples: laboratories put bar codes on containers of blood and urine samples for accurate identification; libraries are using it for book check out and return; rent-a-car agencies are bar coding fleets in preparation for new inventory systems; airlines standardize bar codes to make sure luggage gets to the right city and for seat assignments; and, singles bars are using the codes to match people of similar interests.

The coding system has computerized the retail business, speeding customer checkout operations and allowing for collection of complete and accurate information on all aspects of a transaction.

The bar code is also a valuable tool in marketing research. Researchers can take the information from a store's computer, tracking trends and movement of products across the nation.

'The Car Book' picks best, worst of models

By MIREYA NAVARRO
Hearst News Service

Jack Gillis, who's shopping around for a car these days, knows exactly what he wants: a Volvo. He also knows that he wouldn't buy a Yugo, an Audi 5000 or a Buick Electra.

Gillis' personal car-buying preference is no trivial matter to those who for the last seven years have followed "The Car Book," Gillis' thumbs-up, thumbs-down review of new car models based on such things as crash test results, fuel economy and maintenance costs.

First issued in 1980 by the U.S. Department of Transportation and distributed free, it was the government's most popular publication. Two million copies were given away that first year, but the Reagan administration dropped the book. Consumer advocates maintain that opposition from the auto industry led to its demise.

Gillis, who first put the book together while working as a Transportation Department marketing analyst, has kept the book alive ever since. Now director of consumer affairs for the Consumer Federation of America, a coalition of consumer groups, Gillis says "The Car Book" aims at putting better and safer cars on the road by giving consumers the knowledge they need to buy only the best and safest available.

"We give consumers a direction to go in and help narrow their choices to two or three cars," he says.

Gillis says he found a number of positive trends in new car lots this year. One, he says, is better design, assembly and overall quality of American cars, with Ford Motor Co. models showing the most dramatic improvement.

"Fewer and fewer consumers are finding mismatched doors, poorly installed upholstery and dashboard knobs that just fall off," Gillis says, although he adds there is still a quality gap to close with Japanese imports. "It's clear that U.S. manufacturers are concerned about the quality of their product."

Meanwhile, Japanese cars, whose owners once traded off high quality and economy for safety, are now doing well in crash tests, Gillis says. Although the Toyota Celica failed to protect passengers in a 35 mph head-on crash according to 1981 test results listed in the book, this year's occupant protection rating for the Celica is "good," meaning that passengers would survive the crash without serious injury if they wore a seat belt.

Car buyers this year also will find shatter-resistant windshields and anti-lock brakes (which keep the car from skidding out of control when the driver slams on the brakes) in some luxury models, according to Gillis.

Also for the first time this year, a government standard requires 10 percent of all new models to be equipped with automatic crash protection such as air bags and automatic seat belts, Gillis notes.

Gillis rates cars by size and performance in five categories: safety, fuel economy and the cost of maintenance, repairs and insurance. The rating are based on data from the Department of Transporation, the Environmental Protection Agency, insurance companies, private automobile engineering firms and the Center for Auto Safety, an auto industry watchdog.

This year's overall best bets, according to "The Car Book," include 14 domestic models ranging from the Chevrolet Nova to the Ford LTD Crown Victoria.

Gillis also has come up with a "worst" car list made up of models that rated lower than other cars the same size and style. This category includes the Audi 5000, Buick Electra, Volkswagen Scirroco and Quantum, the Saab 9000T and Cadillac DeVille and Fleetwood.

The Yugo wasn't on the worst car list, but received poor safety ratings.

Four enshrined in Hall of Fame

From Staff Reports

The Petroleum Museum will honor four prominent oilmen at the Petroleum Hall of Fame Dinner on May 12. To be officially inducted into the Hall of Fame are Mac O. Boring Sr. (deceased), formerly of San Angelo, Midland and Ft. Worth; Fred T. Hogan, Midland; John J. Redfern Jr. (deceased), Midland; and Clayton W. Williams Sr. (deceased), Ft. Stockton.

Midland's Petroleum Hall of Fame is "dedicated to those who cherished the freedom to dare, and whose work and service helped build the Permian Basin." The Hall of Fame honors those persons who have made outstanding contributions to the development of the petroleum industry. It honors those who have served as worthy examples to those in the industry by their service, strength of character and achievement .

Boring began work with Gulf Oil in 1918. He launched Gulf's leasing program in the Permian Basin, opened Gulf's Midland office and then transferred to Ft. Worth as drilling and production superintendent for West Texas. Boring retired from Gulf in 1945 to join his son in forming Dixilyn Drilling Co. He died in 1966.

Hogan started an oilfield trucking firm in Wyoming before moving to Texas in 1924 as an oil scout. He negotiated the sales of the McElroy and Hendricks ranches and was involved, with his father — T.S. Hogan — in the construction of the Midland Petroleum Building. After the great stock market crash of 1929, Hogan began successfully drilling wells near McCamey and in Crockett County. Hogan was also a strong civic leader, serving as Midland's mayor and on numerous community boards. He and his wife Novadean make their home in Midland.

Business is blooming in Corpus Christi

By GRADY PHELPS
Corpus Christi Caller-Times

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A.C. Gilmore Jr. wants to be a millionaire some day.

He might make it before he's out of his 20s.

Gilmore, 25, started selling cut flowers from a rusty, 14-year-old Ford van 18 months ago to Corpus Christi retail grocery stores and floral shops.

"The first day I sold $50 and pocketed maybe $15," he said. "It was great. I figured there was no place for me but up."

Ordering fresh flowers by air express from Florida, Gilmore within two months was selling bouquets to 30 different stores and grossing $45,000 in sales.

When 1986 ended, annual sales at his Hicks Wholesale Florist surpassed $300,000.

Today Gilmore's customer base has sprouted to more than 130 shops and stores. He delivers to buyers in the Rio Grande Valley, Laredo, throughout the Coastal Bend and almost to San Antonio. He also has customers in Houston and Louisiana.

Gilmore expects sales to double in 1987, grossing "in the high six figures," he says.

The name Gilmore has long been familiar in the local floral industry. A.C. Gilmore Sr. has owned the Blossom Shop hre for more than 25 years. His father also was in the business.

So A.C. Jr. grew up in the flower trade. He graduated from King High School in 1980 where he was an all-district tackle on the football team. After earning a business degree from North Texas State University in 1984, he joined his father at the flower shop.

But he wanted to do something on his own. "I didn't want to take over my father's busness. My parents were behind me 100 percent," he said.

So, for $500 he bought an old delivery van his dad was replacing and started peddling flowers.

AP Laserphoto

A.C. Gilmore started selling flowers from rusty van 18 months ago, and now lists 130 accounts.

"I tried it as a lark. The van was pretty beat up but it ran. I used buckets of ice to keep the flowers cool and fresh. And I started calling on stores and trying to sell my cut flowers.

"There's a lot of competition here. There's at least three other wholesale florists and about 15 others from San Antonio who work this market.

"But I was young and willing to do anything to get the business," he said. 'I had confidence in myself because I knew I had a good product and the right price," Gilmore said.

He believes his attitude, sales aggressiveness, enthusiasm and personality were keys to his rapid success.

"I was persistent, but not offensive or pushy," he says. "I wasn't discouraged when people turned me down. And there were a lot of no's. I developed a thick skin.

"And I kept coming back. It was not piece of cake, no gravy train. Some stores didn't trust a young guy like me. Then others liked my style. I'm a go-getter.

"It was no 9 to 5 job. I worked about 14 hours a day. I wanted it bad enough. I fugured where there's a will there's a way," Gilmore said.

At first he was selling 10 to 15 boxes of cut flowers every two weeks. Now he sells an average of 100 boxes a day. A box contains 600 to 1,000 flowers.

"I think a lot of customers like me because if they have a complaint they can come right to me about it," Gilmore said. "I'm the owner, the salesman, the bookkeeper, the whole deal.

"I treat everybody like he's my No. 1 customer. I know all of them by their first names. I try to make my customers 100 percent satisfied and that's a full-time job."

His father's name and reputation in the floral profession helped him get his foot in some doors, but it had some drawbacks, too, Gilmore says. Some competitive retail florists he tried to sell to felt they would be contributing to his father's business profits, he said.

Gilmore now owns three delivery vans and employs four people to pick up, cut and deliver flowers. He handles 200 different kinds of flowers plus potted plants.

He buses some flowers to customers, sending them out as early as 4:30 a.m.

Profits range from 33 to 50 percent of sales, Gilmore said, with margins fluctuating with the season and demand.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Would trucking deregulation be a disaster?

Pitts

Want a study proving that the world is flat?

Somewhere, there is probably a Ph.D, who for a fat consulting fee, will defy all reason and produce such a report for you.

Lest you think I jest, the cigarette industry is still able to employ Ph.D researchers to produce studies to refute the notion that cigarette smoking is harmful to one's health. They do it in the face of overwhelming evidence to the contrary.

But professors are not alone. One psychologist will testify in court that the defendant is crazy as a bed bug, while another will testify that he is perfectly sane. So which "experts" do we believe?

Let's take the case of trucking deregulation in Texas. House Bill 707 and Senate Bill 407 to deregulate trucking in Texas were under consideration in Austin this week and proponents and opponents of the measure met in a capitol gunfight that saw each side firing salvos of expert opinion at the other side.

Trucking in Texas is now regulated by the Texas Railroad Commission, which determines how many trucking companies can operate in Texas and how much they can charge. A coalition of shippers and chambers of commerce in Texas, including Midland, Dallas, Houston and Fort Worth want to see these regulations repealed and the system opened to free enterprise.

To this end, the deregulation crowd is utilizing a report written by Bernard L. Weinstein, Ph.D and Harold T. Cross, Ph.D of the Center for Enterprising at the Edwin L. Cox School of Business at Southern Methodist University. The study looks at the deregulation of interstate trucking since the Motor Carrier Act of 1980 and concludes that deregulation has helped trucking and American business.

It notes that shippers rates for interstate hauling declined 11 to 25 percent following deregulation, that efficiency increased and service to smaller communities did not deteriorate.

Another study, The State of Small Business, prepared for President Reagan in 1985, comes to the same conclusion. It reads: "Deregulated trucking has had a strong positive influence on small business, since the second highest operating cost in some industries is the shipment of materials."

It also noted that this was a far cry from the regulated trucking industry before 1980 when the Interstate Commerce Commission required truckers to charge specified rates regardless of the quality or frequency of service. At times the ICC actually fined carriers for providing additional services without charging a higher price.

The SMU report also cites a Department of Transportation survey in which most shippers say they believe they are now getting better service following deregulation.

Now comes the expert testimony for the opposition. David Huff, Ph.D, a University of Texas researcher produced a study and concluded the exact opposite: "Trucking deregulation could have a direct and adverse effect on the Texas economy. Freight costs would increase for hundreds of thousands of small Texas businesses on whom the overall Texas economy depends."

A second study by William Brooks, Ph.D, a Kansas researcher, offers a survey of a "sampling" of 2,500 Texas shippers in which Brooks claims 100 percent of the small shippers and 50 percent of the big shippers favor regulated rates over deregulated.

I don't want to insinuate that Drs.Huff and Brooks were less than completely honest in their conclusions. But one must wonder how expert opinion can deny the vast evidence which is totally contrary to their findings.

There is a simple equation that goes like this: Deregulation equals improved service, plus lower prices, minus inefficiency, and it always works.

Since the breakup of AT&T and deregulation of telephone services, telephone options and service have improved for the customer and costs have generally gone down.

Since the airlines were deregulated, more airplanes are flying more routes than ever before and more passengers are flying for less money than ever before. Those innovative, efficient, well-managed airlines which found a niche to serve and learned to serve it well are making good money.

If there have been shake-outs and mergers within the industry, part of it is because a few have been unable to shake the bad business practices learned during an era of protective regulation and adapt to the rigors of a competitive market.

Deregulation a disaster? For a few of the unadaptables, yes. But, given time to fully shake out, deregulation and the competitive market has never proven to be a disaster for an industry or the consumer in this country.

Steel hard times

The chairman of USX says that competitive forces within the United States pose the greatest challenge facing steelmakers, not imported goods.

Recently the target of a Carl Icahn takeover, USX is moving to cope with the hard times facing its two primary businesses — steel and petroleum.

Should control of USX change hands, top executives could bail out with cash equal to as much as three times their base salary and most recent bonus. They would also get a cash settlementfor outstanding stock options and other benefit plans to insure that federal taxes on their golden parachutes don't reduce the net take.

John J. Redfern Jr. moved from Oklahoma City to Midland in 1939. A civil engineer and geologist, he was a partner in Redfern & Herd, Inc. from 1946 to 1961. Redfern Oil Co. was formed in 1956 and merged with Flag Oil Corp. in 1969 to become Flag-Redfern. He also formed Pennant Oils Ltd. in Canada, later Pennant-Puma Oils Ltd. Redfern passed away in 1986.

Clayton W. Williams Sr. was an oilman, electrical engineer, rancher, historian and civic leader. It was by his recommendation that Texon Oil & Land Co., Group 1, drilled the University No. 1-B in Reagan County. In 1929, it was the deepest producing well in the world. Williams died in 1983.

Under the museum's bylaws, no more than four individuals may be elected every other year. Teams or partners are considered individual entries. The current honorees were nominated from a list of candidates submitted by the public and were elected during a meeting of the museum's governing boards in October 1986.

The 1987 honorees will be inducted into the Petroleum Hall of Fame during the banquet at the Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center in Midland. The dinner and program will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Reservations for the gala induction dinner are available from the Petroleum Museum. Tickets are $50 per person. Contact the museum office at 1500 Interstate 20 West or call 683-4403.

He buys direct from California, Florida, South America, Mexico and other domestic and foreign growers, picking up flowers daily at Corpus Christi International Airport.

He hopes to open branch locations in other cities in the future.

"It's a lot of fun. I never thought I'd do half this good," he says. "But I like making deals, making things work and watching something grow.

"I think people are crazy when they give up and say they can't make a go of it because the economy is down. I did it in the worst of times.

"I started from zilch. I don't want to sound like I'm bragging. But now I'm a wholesale businessman to be reckoned with."

BAR CODE

It is designed to allow simpler and more accurate product identification as goods move from manufacturer to wholesaler to retailer.

New bar codes carry more data and will even store computer programs.

Kenneth Bosomworth of International Resource Development, Inc., a market research firm, says the availability of low-cost equipment has heightened the system's popularity. "A department control system now costs as little as $4,000, compared to as much as $200,000 when software work was done by consultants."

Beyond the so-called "hard savings" such as increased checker productivity and reduction in price marking and reprices costs, scanners have lead to a basic change in the nature of how retail businesses are run.

"For the first time, accurate information on what was sold is available since every item is uniquely coded and identified in the automated checkout process."

Bosomworth says savings from use of the data can be seen in terms of shrink identification by item, labor scheduling, direct store delivery control, shelf space allocation, instant price changes and improved merchandising decisions.

CARS

time compares warranties and provides prices and dealer costs for some 130 models.

Since no single car excels in every category, Gillis tells car buyers to consider safety first, then weigh the rest of the ratings according to individual needs.

"Of all the products that we're likely to purchase, it's the automobile (that is) the most likely to injure us," he says. "There's no question that consumers are being offered safer and better-built cars than ever before. But considering that the average price of a new car is now $13,000 and that it's one of the most expensive purchases that most of us will ever make, there's still a lot of room for improvement."

DISINFECTING SOFT CONTACTS

If improperly cared for, soft contact lenses can create eye problems. This is due to the fact that they are made with a soft, absorbent plastic that can easily soak up dirt and other contaminants. To avoid problems, soft contacts should be disinfected every day when in use. Either of two methods may be used. In one using cold or chemical disinfection, the lenses are placed in a solution with a chemical preservative for at least four hours. This method is both simple and effective. The second method uses heat disinfection. When using it, the lenses are soaked in a saline solution and heated within their case by an electric heating unit for at least 30 minutes. The saline solution is good for sensitive eyes, but must be mixed and stored carefully.

Basin rig count jumps 14, U.S. slips 5

HOUSTON (AP) — The number of working oil and gas rigs in the United States dropped by five this week to a total of 761, officials said.

Hughes' northern and western regions each lost seven rigs in the most recent count to pull the national count down despite gains of 21 rigs in Texas and 13 in Oklahoma.

The Permian Basin count jumped 14, primarily on the strength of three-rig gains in Ector and Pecos counties. King and Andrews counties, along with Chaves County, N.M. each saw two additional rigs go up during the week.

Lea County, N.M. countinues to be the most active drilling area in the region with 20 rigs at work, one less than a week ago.

Texas Railroad Commission District 8 has 51 rigs at work; TRC District 8A, 32; TRC District 7C, 8; and southeastern New Mexico 31.

Last year at this time, the national rig count was 1,127, while the mid-March 1986 count in the Basin was 153. Smith Tool Co. reports that rig utilization rates improved both locally and nationally during the most recent week. Local utilization hit 21 percent, up 1.7 percent from a week earlier. The national utilization rate rebounded from 17 percent to 18.1 percent this week.

Utilities increase oil consumption in '86

The nation's electric utilities increased their consumption of oil by more than 36 percent last year, the biggest single-year percentage since the 1973 Arab oil embargo, according to preliminary statistics prepared by the U.S. Department of Energy.

At the same time, U.S. nuclear power plants produced a record 414 billion kilowatt hours in 1986, and now provide nearly 17 percent of the nation's electrical supply. Nuclear generation last year increased eight percent over 1985.

U.S. electrical growth overall rose by only 0.8 percent in 1986, however.

Carl Walske, president of the Atomic Industrial Forum, deplored the sharp increase in oil usage. "Here we go again," he said. "Oil imports are rising, and it appears that America is in serious danger of forgetting the oil price shocks of the 1970s. OPEC has conceded that nuclear energy world-wide contributed sharply to their recent woes. It would be a pity if we allowed them to gain an advantage over us once again."

When the oil embargo struck in 1973, oil accounted for 17 percent of U.S. electricity production and nuclear for only five percent. The two sources have since reversed positions. Outside the United States, nuclear energy has accounted for far greater proportions of many national electricity programs: in France the nuclear component is approximately 70 percent and in several industrialized Western nations, it is one-third or greater.

The DOE figures also revealed that:

- The use of coal for power production dropped slightly last year, down to 55.6 percent compared with 56.8 percent the previous year.
- Consumption of natural gas, mostly domestic in origin, dropped 15 percent from the previous year's level and accounted for 10 percent of U.S. electricity in 1986.
- Hydropower gained by a modest 3.6 percent over 1985, and accounted for 12 percent of the total. Hydropower production varies with rainfall.

Americans went $536 million in debt in January

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans took out $536 million more in consumer debt than they paid off in January, up only slightly from an extremely small December increase, the government reports.

Analysts said the weakness in both months stemmed in part from changing borrowing patterns brought on by the new tax law.

The Federal Reserve said consumer installment debt advanced at an annual rate of 1.1 percent in January after a gain of $144 million in December, which had been the smallest monthly increase in six years.

By contrast, installment debt climbed 10.5 percent for all of 1986 as Americans borrowed heavily to finance purchases of cars and other big-ticket items.

Part of the slowdown the past two months was attributed to changes in the tax law, which phases out deductions of interest payments for anything but home mortgage loans.

Credit card debt fell by $366 million in January after a December increase of $552 million while the category which includes cash loans from banks dropped by $250 million after a huge $2.44 billion decline in December.

The Federal Reserve report on installment borrowing does not cover loans secured by real estate, such as home mortgages and home equity loans, which consumers have been turning to in order to qualify interest payments for tax deductions.

Consumer borrowing for car loans rose by $1.02 billion in January, down from a December advance of $2.06 billion.

Sandra Shaber, an economist with the Futures Group, an economic management firm in Washington, said that the slower growth in consumer credit provided further evidence that consumers, burdened with high levels of debt, will not be spending as much in 1987.

"People are borrowing less because of the economic environment," she said. "Pent-up consumer demand has been exhausted, the overall economy is sluggish and personal income growth has been meager."

Royalty owner calls DOE report 'national disgrace'

DALLAS (SWN) — An embittered royalty owner from Houston today told members of the Texas Railroad Commission that a government study of the nation's energy status released last week was a "national disgrace."

"In many countries, such a white-wash on the national security implications of a domestic oil crisis would amount to treason," charged Thomas W. Allen, past chairman of the 39,000 member National Association of Royalty Owners, Inc.

Speaking before the TRC's State of the Industry Meeting in Dallas, Allen said the long awaited Department of Energy report was not a blueprint for energy action, as promised by Department of Energy officials. "Instead, it is a smokescreen that ducks an import fee, minimizes the national security implications of our growing dependence upon foreign oil and tosses back a few campaign crumbs promised Texans earlier by White House spokesmen."

He said the tone of the report, which had been read in part to Allen by NARO's Washington representative, "indicated that the Department of Energy may have become more of a marketing arm for the OPEC nations than a defender and advocate of a sane national energy policy."

Allen stated his organization, active in 50 states, had been warned by its Washington legal representatives six weeks ago that the report would possibly understate problems facing the oil states. "We warned our members to expect such a lullaby and also sent letters to every member of the United States House and Senate to be on guard," he said, explaining NARO members had endorsed an import fee since 1983 as a deterrent against a downside price whiplash by OPEC, such as seen in recent months.

Allen, an oil investor and co-owner of a Houston financial planning organization, said the only near-term answer to getting energy support from Congress and the Administration is a "massive joint effort" among the producing states, led by Texas Gov. Bill Clements and ranking officials of the Texas Railroad Commission.

Dallas group closes Greyhound purchase

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Greyhound Lines, the nation's largest intercity bus lines, has officially been purchased by a Dallas-based investment group for more than $350 million.

GLI Holdings Inc. agreed to buy the 75-year-old bus line last December and the deal was completed at closing ceremonies at the bus lines' former headquarters here Wednesday.

John W. Teets, chairman and chief executive officer for the parent Greyhound Corp., said the sale price involved cash, securities, royalties and other considerations.

"In many ways, our sale of Greyhound Lines signals the end of a transportation era," Teets said. "Through a massive five-year restructuring, we are today primarily a consumer goods and services company. Since 1983, we have sold over 16 companies or subsidiaries which were yielding marginal returns or which simply did not fit the new profile. Today's closing transaction on Greyhound Lines completes that strategic restructuring of the corporation."

The Dallas investment group is headed by Fred Currey who ran Trailways Corp. — the long-time rival of Greyhound — from 1975-79 before forming BusLease Inc. The privately held company leases about 1,100 buses to independent operators nationwide, including nearly 500 in Greyhound's fleet of 3,000 buses.

Teets said Greyhound officials were "pleased to put the bus company in the hands of seasoned professionals who understand the business and who have the chance to restore some of its prominence as a transporation alternative."

Greyhound officials said declining ridership in recent years forced the sale of their bus lines.

Job injuries go unreported

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of on-the-job injuries are going unreported every year because of a Reagan administration policy limiting inspections to companies and industries with higher-than-average accident rates, Congress is being told.

The effects of that policy were dramatized in a hearing before the House Government Operations subcommittee on employment by meatpacking industry workers who have suffered injuries disabling them for life.

Even after acknowledging that the testimony may have arisen out of a current labor dispute at an IBP Inc. plant in Dakota City, Neb., several members of the House panel expressed outrage at the conditions that packinghouse employees work under.

"I have a feeling that progress has bypassed this industry," said Rep. Joseph J. DioGuardi of New York, the subcommittee's ranking Republican. "I've never had such a graphic description of what happens in a meatpacking plant. This sounds like a story out of Charles Dickens."

John A. Pendergrass, the assistant secretary of labor in charge of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, acknowledged that meatpacking has the highest injury rate of any industry in the country.

He disclosed that his agency launched a formal investigation Thursday into alleged unsafe working conditions at the Dakota City plant of IBP, a subsidiary of Occidental Petroleum Co. and the nation's largest meatpacker.

The last time the IBP plant was given a wall-to-wall OSHA inspection was 1983, he said.

Pendergrass disputed a statement by the subcommittee's chairman, Rep. Tom Lantos, D-Calif., that OSHA's enforcement policies are allowing companies that underreport their injuries to the government to escape wall-to-wall job safety inspections.

"We do not have an exemption policy," Pendergrass said. "We have a policy where a plant is evaluated to determine whether it is given a full inspection or not."

One of every 10 manufacturing plants with below-average injury rates is chosen at random for further inspection so that no company or plant can be assured that it will not be further inspected, Pendergrass said.

Citing fines totaling more than $1 million that OSHA levied last year against 14 companies — among them Chrysler Corp, Union Carbide Corp., and Monsanto Co. — for injury reporting violations, Pendergrass said his agency is taking steps to discourage underreporting.

The General Accounting Office, a watchdog agency of Congress, has begun its own investigation of OSHA's reliance on employer records for targeting inspection forces, Pendergrass said.

Lantos cited studies that use death certificates indicating that OSHA is recording only one-third of the estimated 11,000 job-related deaths that occur annually.

Bureau of Labor Statistics officials testified they have been concerned for years that the OSHA-required employer statistics inadequately reflect the number of job-related injuries and deaths occurring in the nation.

However, it was the meatpacking industry and IBP's plant at Dakota City that captivated the attention of the House panel.

Joseph Eck, a 20-year-old employee at the Dakota City plant for three weeks in January 1985, told how he was doing flips and somersaults as a member of his school pep team in 1984.

Now, Eck walks with a severe limp and testified Thursday that his physician told him he can expect to lose his right leg because of an on-the-job injury that IBP never recorded on its OSHA log.

Eck said he was hurt while working on a loin packaging line when his leg was banged repeatedly by flying 70-pound slabs of meat because a conveyer belt was broken. On his last day of work, he collapsed after "a direct hit to my knee popped the knee cap and it was all over."

"My friends helped me to the foreman's office so I could go home," he said. "The foremen sent me home for good — he fired me."

Other IBP employees now on strike told the House panel they have to work in pools of cattle blood on fat-slick floors, making four or five large swigns with giant knives every 20 seconds along a cutting chain. As a result, the witnesses testified, hundreds of workers are accidentally knived by coworkers.

USX golden parachutes may ease strain of the high cost of leaving

PITTSBURGH (AP) — USX Corp. executives who presided over sweeping pay and staff cuts shared in the financial sacrifices but got golden parachutes that will pay off handsomely in the event of a hostile takeover, according to the company's proxy statement.

Chairman David Roderick's cash compensation in 1986 was $735,382, a 27 percent cut from the $1 million he got in 1985, according to the proxy and notice of the USX annual meeting May 4 in Detroit.

Thomas Graham, president of the company's shrinking, money-losing steel division, took a 23 percent cut from $634,353 in 1985 to $485,402 last year.

William Swales, president of the Marathon Oil Co. subsidiary, took a 15 percent reduction from $649,715 to $552,987, and USX chief financial officer W. Bruce Thomas gave up 25 percent of his pay, falling from $601,437 to $452,477.

The average pay of nine other executives not named in the proxy was $270,000, 11 percent less than the 1985 average pay of $304,192 for ten executives not named in the previous proxy.

The 1987 proxy statement said an employment contract will pay Forest Hogland, president of the Texas Oil & Gas Corp. subsidiary, at least $550,000 per year plus incentives, stock options and special retirement benefits and guarantee his job until 1992. He took a temporary 10 percent pay cut Sept. 1.

The cuts were made as USX was racking up a company record $1.8 billion loss for the year while negotiating futher cuts in pay and jobs in its troubled steelmaking unit, the nation's largest, where United Steelworkers members were off the job six months in a contract dispute.

Management was also coping with a threatened hostile takeover by New York corporate raider Carl Icahn. He still holds an 11.4 percent stake in USX stock, although concern about a takeover has cooled since the withdrawal in January of his informal offer to buy the company.

The top executives, meanwhile, were granted severence benefits known as golden parachutes.

Should control of the company change hands, Roderick and the others would be paid cash of up to three times their base salary and most recent bonus. They would also get cash for any outstanding stock options due to them. Their life, disability, accident and health insurance benefits would be paid by the company for two years, and they would get a cash settlement of various retirement and savings plans and cash to insure that federal excise taxes on the golden parachutes don't reduce the net amount.

The golden parachutes are effective through 1988 and can be renewed automatically.

"Ours may be the most restructured corporation in America, especially while remaining the leader in what was its original core business," he said.

The former U.S. Steel Corp. now gets roughly two-thirds of its revenue from oil and gas businesses.

Can you add to your IRA, no matter what your status is, and still earn the interest tax-deferred?

Yes!

All the commotion from the new tax laws and the "last chance" headlines have left a lot of people confused. The fact is, the new tax laws only affect deducting your IRA contribution from your income (which you can and should do for 1986), not whether or not you can add to it. You can! And the interest earned will be tax-deferred, like any regular retirement account.

Howard Weil would like to show you a number of ways you may improve the performance of your IRA, through careful selection of investments. Mutual funds, GNMA funds and equities are just a few which are worth consideration.

Call a Howard Weil broker today, or mail in the coupon, for information on the IRA and alternative tax-deferred investments. After all, there's no law against saving for retirement.

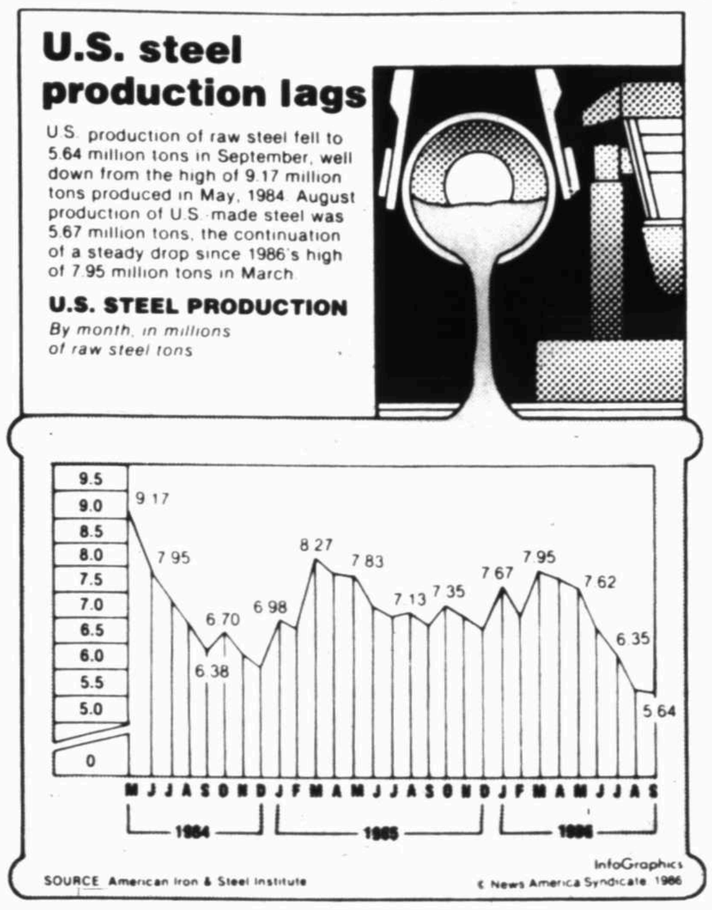
Domestic competition primary steel challenge



PITTSBURGH (AP) — Survival for America's integrated steelmakers is likely to depend more on fighting domestic competition than that overseas, says the president of USX Corp.'s steel division.

"The competitive race will be decided where it should be: in the plants, on the operating line. Not in government chambers or law offices," USS President Thomas C. Graham said.

The chief of the nation's largest steelmaking unit said that while domestic steel producers should demand that the Reagan administration enforce its import-restraint program, they must also "place appropriate perspective and emphasis on that government role."

"Nothing government does on trade will remove from our midst the mini-mill, a competitive reality perhaps more threatening to integrated producers than anything offshore," he said in remarks prepared for a dinner meeting of the Pittsburgh District of the Association of Iron and Steel Engineers here.

"No trade policy will protect us from the growing use of alternate materials such as plastics in applications where steel once held all the cards," he said.

"No government action will improve our own quality and consistency, increase our own productivity or lower own costs."

Graham called for a "skillful application of engineering and research technology" to make innovations like thin strip casting and so-called "endless" blast furnaces economically feasible for integrated, or ore-to-steel, manufacturers.

Illinois company applies to re-open Armco steel plant

HOUSTON (AP) — An Illinois firm wants to open a plant along Houston's Ship Channel that could lead to refiring Armco Inc.'s massive steel plant, which has been closed for three years.

Harris County Judge Jon Lindsey, who has offered a tax abatement on proposed expansions and modernization at the plant, said its reopening "ultimately could mean 2,000 jobs for the Houston economy."

Northwestern Steel & Wire Co., headquartered in Sterling, Ill., has applied for a Texas Air Control Board construction permit for a facility to produce wide produce wide flange products — structural steel used in construction, officials said.

Vic Newsome, chief of permits in the TACB Houston office, said the company's application indicated it plans "to construct melting and casting facilities to supply the rolling mill with continuously cast beam blanks."

Robert M. Wilthew, Northwestern's president and chief executive officer, refused to comment on the firm's Houston plans.

At its peak, the Armco facility employed 4,500 workers. In 1983, the firm began massive layoffs, and a year later the plant was closed.

Survey: 1995 car prices will average $13,800

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — The average price of a domestic-made car will rise to $13,800 by 1995 from 1985's $11,600, and average import prices will remain about $900 higher, according to a University of Michigan forecast released Wednesday.

Cars will tend to be smaller but carry more luxury options, and imports will have a larger share of the subcompact and compact market segments, researchers at the university's Office for the Study of Automotive Transportation predicted.

Meanwhile, complicated electronics and improvements in quality and durability will produce a decline in do-it-yourself car repair.

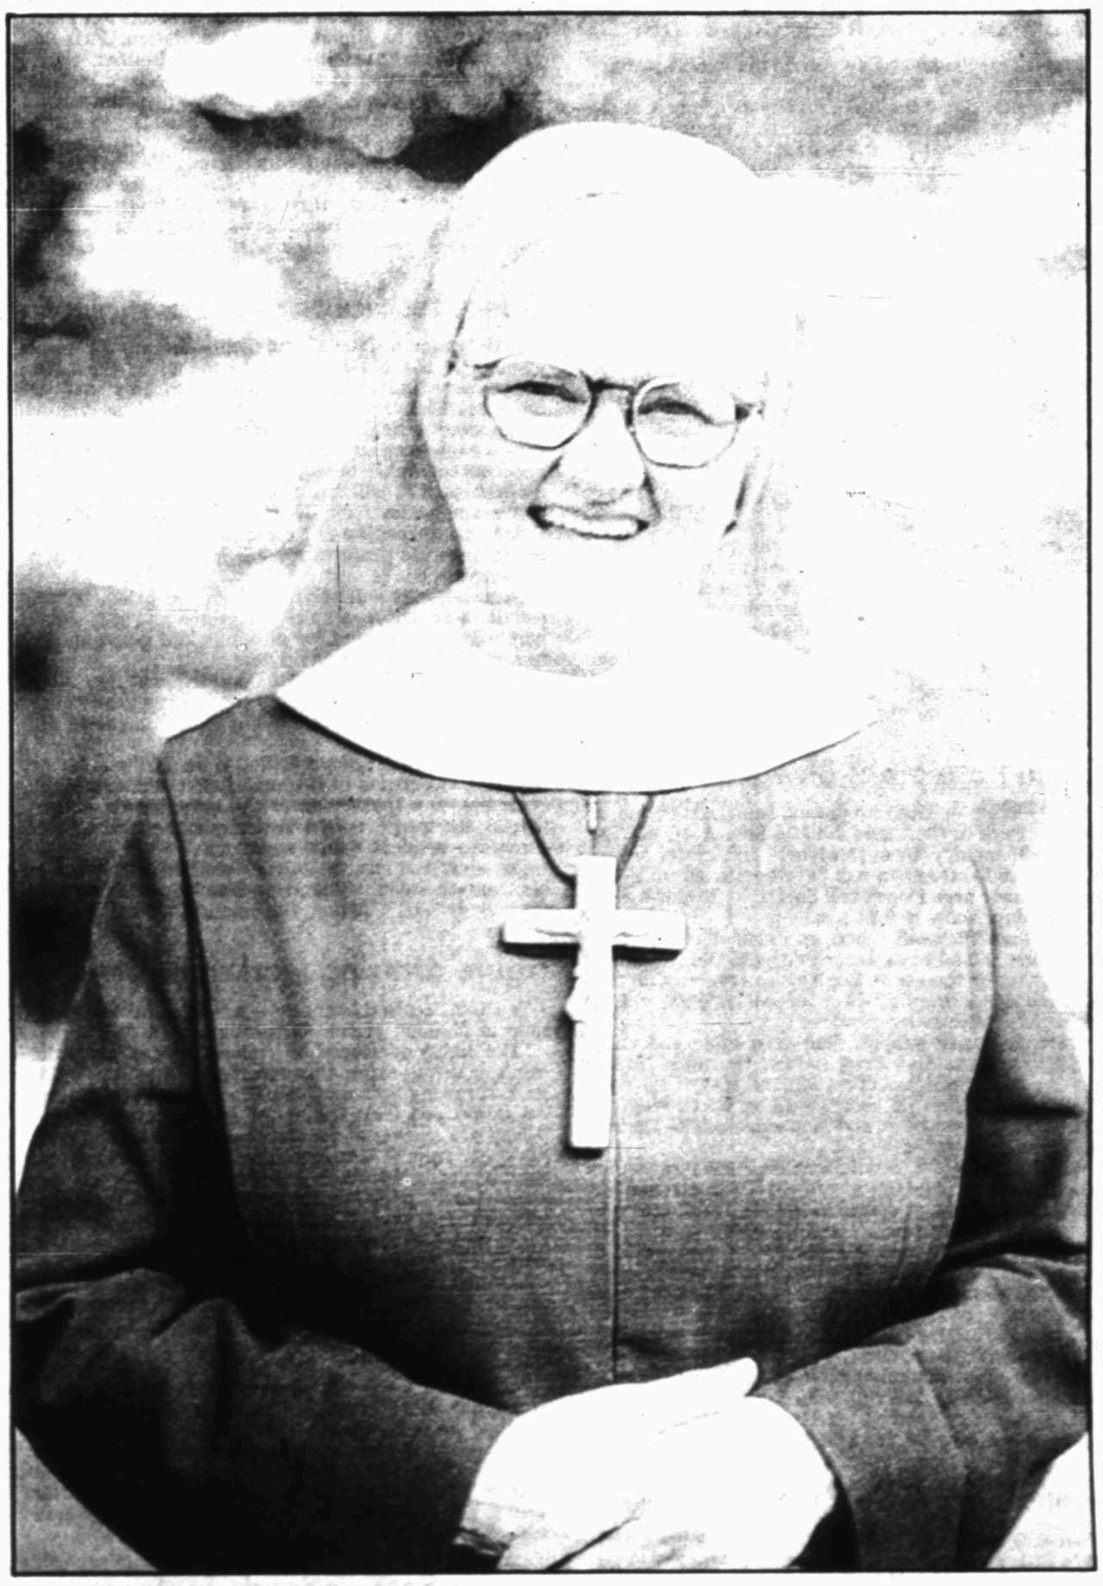
Mother Angelica



Mother Mary Angelica, the founder of EWTN, the first Roman Catholic satellite cable network, will speak at Chaparral Center at 8 p.m. Friday.

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

One of Mother Mary Angelica's guiding principles is — "Unless we are willing to do the ridiculous, God will not do the miraculous..."

"You know, so often we toss our good ideas to mental committees in our heads," she says. "We talk ourselves right out of doing what God really wants. The process of doing God's will is really quite simple.

"First, we determine the purpose of the action we believe has been directed by God. It is always to promote the church and further His kingdom. An inspiration suggests a way in which to achieve this.

"Then, I jump right in! I begin the process immediately. If the Lord keeps evolving the plan, I push on and look for the fruit, taking the risk of failure. I would rather fail by trying than fail totally by not trying at all."

Known for her wit as well as her faith, insight and ability to risk, Mother Angelica has demonstrated during her years as a Franciscan nun her unlimited trust in God and her burning desire to spread His message.

The founder of EWTN, the Eternal Word Television Network, Mother Angelica will be the guest of honor at a fund-raising luncheon Friday. At 8 p.m. Friday she will give a free talk at Chaparral Center. Her Midland visit, sponsored by The Knights of Columbus, Midland Council 3071, represents her first trip to the Permian Basin.

Born April 20, 1923, in Canton, Ohio, of Italian Catholic heritage, Mother Angelica's first encounter with God's grace came when she was 14. In his biography about Mother Angelica, Dan O'Neill recounts the episode.

As she started across a street, Rita Rizzo, the future nun, heard a woman scream. Looking back in the direction of the scream, Rita saw the headlights of a car bearing down on her with great speed. She had no time to get out of the way so she instinctively shut her eyes. A moment later she blinked and looked around in disbelief. Rita was standing on a sidewalk. She felt as through two strong arms had somehow lifted her to safety.

A bus driver who witnessed the event later reported to her mother, Mae Rizzo, that he had seen her daughter being catapulted high into the air, easily clearing the onrushing automobile in what seemed an impossible maneuver.

This experience would be drawn upon by mother and daughter in the hard times ahead.

Mother Angelica's childhood was quite severe. Her parents were divorced when she was 6, and her childhood was a struggle for survival for both. They supported themselves with a faltering dry cleaning business. Then, Rita helped her mother secure a job at City Hall, where she was working when a miraculous healing occurred in her daughter's life.

Rita had been in pain for two years. Then, X-rays taken in 1941, showed alarming abnormalities in her stomach and intestines due to a severe calcium deficiency. One day, when her pain had been great, her mother came home from work and told her the following story.

Rhoda Wise, who lived not far away on Harrisburg Road, had been told she had terminal cancer. She left the hospital May 8 and went home to die. Then, later that month, in the early morning hours, she said Jesus appeared in her bedroom.

"She was startled and amazed by the appearance which was repeated again on June 28, during which time she was miraculously healed of her fatal condition...The large open wound that would not heal had disappeared. Rhoda Wise laid much of her healing to the intercession of St. Therese, who accompanied Christ during one of the apparitions," writes O'Neill.

What particularily struck Rita was the report of the stigmata — the visible wounds of Christ — visible on Mrs. Wise's body. She was ready to go see her immediately. Mother Angelica calls that day, Friday, Jan. 8, 1943, a turning point in her life.

"I had been ill with this stomach ailment and obstruction in the mouth of my stomach," Mother Angelica says in a telephone interview. "I got very thin and couldn't eat.

"Rhoda Wise let us come in and gave me a little prayer. I sat on the little wooden chair that the Lord had set upon when he came to visit her and healed her."

Rita and her mother were at Mrs. Wise's no longer than 30 minutes. They spent the next nine days praying the novena.

"On the 17th of January, it was a Sunday, I got out of bed, and I realized I was healed. I wanted to eat — everthing I could get my hands on." Mother Angelica laughs then adds, "I walked to church, and I've been eating ever since."

From this experience, Mother Angelica learned that "God loved me personally. He knew me, and He knew what I was suffering, and He healed me. It was a wonderous occasion. I began, after work, going to our local parish."

Then, one evening as she knelt to pray at St. Anthony's Church, she knew she had a vocation to become a nun.

More than four decades later, she recalls in O'Neill's book, "What? A nun? I couldn't believe it! I didn't like nuns at all. In fact, I hated them. They seemed so strict and angry — I had a real problem with those people, and yet I knew I was to become one of them."

She entered St. Paul's Shrine of Perpetual Adoration, a Franciscan cloistered contemplative order in Cleveland in Aug. 15, 1944. She became a novitiate on Nov. 8, 1945.

Once again physical pain entered her life and directed its course.

An elderly couple from Canton offered their mansion and grounds to the Franciscan nuns if they would transform them into a chapel for adoration and a monastery, writes O'Neill. Although it was quite unusual for a nun to be sent to her home town, Sister Angelica was among those sent to Canton because she had been experiencing knee problems. She believes that God once again used physical pain to direct her path according to His will, because the day of her departure from the Cleveland convent, the swelling and pain in her knees vanished and has not returned.

On Jan. 2, 1947, Sister Angelica took her first profession of vows. Her final vows were taken Jan. 2, 1953.

The next turning point in her life came again through physical pain when she suffered an injury as the result of an out-of-control electric scrubber. Two years after the accident, she was hospitalized on orders from her superiors. In an effort to realign her spine, she underwent six weeks of traction. Finally, surgery was the only recourse. The night before surgery, the doctor told her there was a 50-50 chance she would never walk again.

In the early morning hours, she made God a promise that if she were able to walk again she would build a monastery in the South, knowing that the Bible Belt, Protestant South had only about 2 percent Catholics. This promise got her into the fishing tackle business.

Following her return to the Canton monastery, she was elected by the monastery's Mothers to the advisory council, thus becoming Mother Angelica. With the approval of her Mother Superior, she approached several nuns — Sister Raphael and Sister Joseph — about starting a new monastery.

It took years for their bishop to approve the venture and he did so only with the provision that they find a way to support themselves.

An investment of $5 put the sisters into manufacturing fishing lures, and St. Peter's Fishing Lures became the project on which the nuns began building a large, extended family across the nation which participated in building the future monastery. Once the nuns received permission from Archbishop Thomas Toolen of the Mobile-Birmingham Diocese to establish a monastery, a 15-acre parcel of land was found in Irondale, a suburb of Birmingham. The cost was $13,000, the exact amount netted from the sale of fishing lures.

Completed on May 20, 1962, Our Lady of the Angels Monastery was to be the site of several unique operations, not the least of which was the satellite dish that was to come in 1981.

However, television was still in the future. In the meantime, the Second Vatican Council of the mid-60s reformed religious life by allowing for more structural freedom and increased interaction between religious community leaders and the outside world. The church wanted to make the gospel more relevant to the world at large and one way to achieve that was to utilize the mass media. These changes had a profound impact on the course taken by the nuns at Our Lady of the Angels Monastery.

Symphony guest conductor, Revere masters of their crafts is month, in less than a week's , I had the opportunity to move the sublime to the risque.

nsider the difference between Blue Danube Waltz" and a song h had every teen-ager listening on a slower speed than normal if the lyrics really said what it umored they said? When the record was slowed down, it was possible to maybe catch a part of a word here and there, leaving one with the impression that the lyrics were decidedly off color. Were they? Who knows? "Louie, Louie" knows.

A week ago Tuesday, The Midland-Odessa Symphony's subscription concert featured guest conductor Kurt Woss, guest artist soprano Elfriede Mohrenberger and the symphony performing works by Mozart, Johann Strauss Jr. and Josef Strauss. Then Monday, rock 'n' rollers Paul Revere and the Raiders hit town in a St. Patrick's Day Eve concert/dance.

I found Woss and Revere to have more in common than one would think possible from what appears to be two people who come from such different worlds. They love what they are doing, and it shows.

Both concerts were excellent examples of their kind and showed what can happen when talent, enthusiasm and a love for what one does have the opportunity to unfold in front of an audience. The performances also demonstrated what the result of hard work when combined with the above can achieve.

Woss, who is in his late 60s, early 70s, has been conducting since he was 22. During his career, he has led the Vienna Symphony on a tour to Czechoslovakia, the Mozarteum Orchestra Salzburg to Russia, the Bruckner Orchestra to Poland, Germany and Italy, and the Johann Strauss Orchestra Vienna to South America twice. He has been invited annually for many years to conduct in the Far East, Europe, and the Americas. Considered to be an interpreter of the works of Anton Bruckner, Gustav Mahler and Johann Strauss, he is the author of "Advices for the Performances of Anton Bruckner's Symphonies."

Revere has been the guiding light behind the Raiders since he began the group in 1958. Now 49 years old, he has experienced attaining star status, riding the crest and coming back down. His group has 25 consecutive hit singles, 26 albums of which five are gold and 720 network appearances to its credit. I recall what he said in a telephone interview about fame — it was one of the best descriptions I've heard: "Fame is like a suntan. It looks nice when it's there, and then it fades away, and nobody can remember what it looked like."

Woss plays the violin, while conducting, just enough to let his audience know he is a player. Revere does the same with the keyboard.

Both spend their time and energy ensuring that the performance is perfectly orchestrated without it appearing to be so. Actions, which require timing, seem spontaneous.

Each understands its audience. Both are master showmen.

Just as Woss and Revere know the role they play, so do the other players. The talented Raiders — lead singer Carl Driggs, drummer Omar Martinez, lead quitarist Doug Heath, bass Ron Foos and keyboardist Daniel Krause — know how to play their instruments and when to play their lines.

It was obvious that the symphony's guest soloist, Ms. Mohrenberger, has worked hard to develop her talent. A 1974 graduate of the City Conservatory in Vienna, Ms. Mohrenberger has toured Italy, Ireland, England, Spain, Austria and Germany as well as appearing on radio and television in Austria and Germany.

Her flair for the dramatic was evident from the time she walked onstage. Her full length red dress, which was draped over one shoulder, was split up the front. Under its ruffled border flounced another ruffle — in black. Her encore was charming. She sang a selection which required that she appear to be tipsy.

The Raiders were, of course, clad in their Colonial soldiers garb. As Revere's three-cornered feathered hat, bobbed and bounced atop his head, his boundless energy onstage was amazing to watch.

When I walked out of the symphony performance, the fact that it was snowing in March seemed a fitting close to an uplifting evening. I felt like waltzing to the car, the strains of "The Blue Danube Waltz" still playing in my mind.

Likewise, when I left Paul Revere and the Raiders' mad tea party, I felt like dancing in the street.

Both left me on a natural high.

Agreed, they are very different types of music. And certainly the Raiders' sound was louder. However, it wasn't necessary to be a lover of the type of music being played to enjoy either performance. A person who appreciates showmanship would have found pleasure in both. Each contained nostalgia and the magic of bygone days.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

'A Night to Honor Israel' will celebrate nation's independence

Israeli Independence Day will be marked in Midland with "A Night to Honor Israel."

The event, slated for 7:30 p.m. Monday, May 4, at the Holiday Inn Convention Center, will occur as Israel begins its 40th year of statehood and on the 20th anniversary of the reunification of Jerusalem.

The cultural evening — part of Midland's annual Celebration of the Arts — also symbolizes a new spirit of unity moving through Jews and Christians in America.

"Representatives of both the Christian and Jewish communities began making plans for this historic evening in the Permian Basin" during organizational meetings in February, noted coordinators Jack and Judy Stone.

Among participants are Rabbi Tracy Kliirs of Temple Beth El, Odessa; Noah Fishman, president of the synagogue; and Stanley Saikin, chairman of American-Israel Public Affairs Committee.

Addressing the May gathering will be the Rev. John Hagee, pastor of Cornerstone Church of Castle Hills in San Antonio and founder of Global Evangelism Television, Inc., and "A Night to Honor Israel."

A musical salute will be presented by the Midland College Community Band, directed by Walter Osadchuck, and a local interfaith choir. Traditional Jewish dances will be performed by the Israeli Folk Dancers of Houston's Beth Yeshurun Synagogue.

Bringing greetings will be Midland's mayor and the Israeli consul from Houston.

Persons interested in participating are invited to call Jack or Judy Stone at 684-4052 or 694-3090.

Glenn Rose plans Bluegrass Picnic

GLEN ROSE — The 12th annual Bluegrass Picnic, at Oakdale Park in Glen Rose, will be held April 3-5. The event will include an outdoor arts and crafts fair.

Artists and craftsment will have booths set up in the outdoor stage area Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m.-6 p.m., and Sunday, noon to 5:30 p.m.

More than 70 booth spaces are available on a first come, first served basis, according to Mollie Bradbury, spokesman for the event. The cost to reserve a 10 foot by 12 foot space for one, two or three days is $20, plus $7 per day for electricity if needed.

Craftsmen must supppy their own table and chair and demonstrate their craft part of the time. No imports or manufactured items will be sold.

The park charges no commission on booth sales, according to Ms. Bradbury, and each artist will be allowed to set his own prices.

Wreaths, fiber art, needlework and woodcrafts plus denim aprons, sweatshirts, quilted products and oil paintings are among items to be demonstrated and sold during the annual fair.

Bluegrass music will be played at jam sessions throughout the weekend. The public is invited to listen or bring their instruments (except electric) and participate.

Cabins, 250 full hook-ups and tent spaces are available for overnight guests.

Some 20 nationally known jazz musicians open Midland's 11th Annual Jazz Classic Oct. 1 through 4 at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Many of the artists who appear have performed at the White House; some have performed for Asian and European royalty," says Bobby J. Crues, vice president of the Midland Jazz Association.

"Checks are being accepted and seating is assigned on a first come-first served basis outside the sponsor area," Crues says. "Good seats are assured by sending checks in early."

For more information call Crues, 683-5208. For reservations write to Midland Jazz Association, P.O. Box 4054, Midland, Texas 79704. Seating is limited.

Musicians invited to attend the 1986 classic include: Jack Lesberg, who is also the musical director for the event, Milt Hinton and Brian Torff, bass; Derek Smith, Ralph Sutton and Ross Tompkins, piano; Gus Johnson, Jeff Hamilton and Jake Hanna, drums; Randy Sandke, Snooky Young and Warren Vache Jr., trumpet and cornet; Carl Fontana, Al Grey and Bill Watrous, trombone; Kenny Davern, Jim Galloway, Scott Hamilton and Flip Phillips, reeds; and Howard Alden, guitar.

Dance festival to showcase talent

"Celebration in Dance" will commemorate the development of the regional dance concept at the silver anniversary festival of the Southwestern Regional Ballet Association in Beaumont April 2-5. This annual spring event is held in a different city in the southwest region each year and serves as a showcase for dance and choreographic talent.

"Festival '87" will provide the opportunity for 21 dance companies from five states, Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Arkansas and New Mexico, to come together to learn, and to perform for one another and for new audiences.

Dance experts will conduct classes in ballet, pointe, pas de deux, choreography, character and jazz. Seminars will be conducted for directors and guests in costuming, grants, and related topics.

The Beaumont Civic Ballet Company will host more than 700 dancers and directors representing their community dance companies. Among those companies will be Ballet Midland.

Southwestern Regional Ballet is an affiliate of the National Association of Regional Ballet. It is dedicated, according to a spokesman of the organization, to furthering the image, both artistically and practically, of America's resident dance companies.

For additional information or Gala Performance tickets, contact Ballet Midland at 686-0731, or Beaumont Civic Ballet, 3717 Calder, Beaumont, 77706.

Ted Seth Jacobs is conducting a figure drawing workshop in Midland March 30 through April 3.

Jacobs, a teacher at the Art Students League of New York City from 1977 to 1984, now teaches drawing and painting at the New York Academy of Art. His one-man exhibits include the Coe Kerr Galleries, New York City; The Drawing Shop, New York City; Galerie Mouffe, Paris; and the Francesca Anderson Gallery, Boston, Mass.

His work is included in the Museum of Modern Art, and he has done hundreds of portrait commissions, including portraits of William Shatner, M.R. Schweitzer, Gloria Swanson, the Fred Woolworth family, Jane Fonda and Abby-Ann Van Pelt.

The workshop will include instruction for all levels of experience. Enrollment is limited to 20 and will be accepted on a first-come-first-serve basis. The fee is $200. Jacobs will give daily attention to each student as well as lecture and demonstrate.

Entertainer instantly recognized as Barnaby the leprauchan

CLEVELAND (AP) — The distinguished-looking, white-haired man prepared to order breakfast. Before he could say he wanted bacon and eggs, his wide-eyed waitress volunteered her admiration.

"I always used to watch Barnaby on television. Now my kids do," the waitress said.

Linn Sheldon flashed the smile that makes his face so recognizable in Cleveland.

"I get that all the time," Sheldon told a table companion. "It's a very personal thing, but that's what Barnaby is. And I mean personal. They come to you, and then they go away and then one day they come back."

Sheldon, 66, has been the likable Barnaby character on Cleveland television about 30 years, by his recollection. In that time, the generation of children from his first television audiences became adults. Those with children of their own tend to rediscover Barnaby.

They find that after all these years, Barnaby still closes his program with: "If anybody calls, tell them Barnaby said hello. And tell them I think you are the nicest person in the whole world. Just you."

Having overcome more than a few personal problems, including alcoholism, Sheldon as Barnaby is low key and conversational in a grandfatherly sort of way.

Shortly after Sheldon was born in Norwalk in northern Ohio, his mother died, so he grew up living with relatives and friends. After duty in the Army during World War II, he returned to Ohio and found work in Cleveland as a stand-up comic.

A few months after WEWS, the city's first television station, opened in 1947, he became an on-air personality specializing in children's programs. He used various characters until he went on the air with Barnaby in the late 1950s.

The character was a leprechaun, with large pointy ears, a boater hat and a double-breasted sport coat with big buttons on the front. Sheldon took the Barnaby name at the suggestion of television station staffer who had a dog with that name.

He left Cleveland's NBC affiliate in 1971 and went to WUAB, where his work ever since has widened his character's audience. Cable viewers can see Barnaby in 43 Ohio counties, 13 Pennsylvania counties and parts of West Virginia and Kentucky.

Because of a bout with skin cancer, Barnaby has stopped wearing the large, pointy ears. He still wears the rest of the traditional Barnaby costume and plays the ukulele.

Children seldom appear on "Barnaby and Friends," on which Sheldon banters with several puppets and his companion of 25 years, Long John, an invisible parrot. He does all the voices except that of OT, "The Other Terrestial," done by a crew member.

Sheldon's shows are taped and shown in the mornings now, but in his early years as Barnaby he did a daily after-school show live. And at that time, he did not always overcome his urge to drink.

ANGELICA

At about the same time, another turning point occurred in Mother Angelica's life. A young Josephite priest, who visited the monastery on several occasions, told the nuns that they needed spiritual renewal and finally convinced Mother Angelica to allow him to pray over her. In his prayer, he requested the Holy Spirit to come upon her in a new and powerful way. A week later, Mother Angelica came down with a terrible cold.

"For some reason, I had decided to read the Gospel of St. John aloud, 'In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God and the Word was God...' I was suddenly overpowered in the Spirit; it was a totally new experience for me."

As a result, Mother Angelica prayed over each of the nuns at the monastery and each in her own way experienced a sense of renewal. O'Neill writes, "Mother Angelica began speaking and teaching on her own renewal process, balancing it against the critical need to adhere to the sacramental life and to remain rooted in the sound doctrine of the faith."

Books and mini-books loomed on the horizon.

Mother Angelica says, "I found that people needed to be taught the basics to provide them with an unshakable foundation for their faith. There was, and I think there still is, a tremendous need for instruction and teaching to go along with the power and excitment of the charismatic movement."

In 1973, Mother Angelica initiated a book apostolate, and the nuns have distributed more than 15 million books to 30 countries.

In the beginning, they hired out the actual printing. Then, the printer could no longer print the minibooks which had proved to be of such inspiration to readers.

"Faith is having one foot on the ground and the other up in the air waiting for the Lord to put the ground under it," Mother Angelica says.

By 1976, she had written 50 minibooks and recorded 150 audio-cassette teaching tapes. She could not forget the verse from the Gospel of John, "In the beginning was the Word..."

She had an answer to the loss of the printer.

"We'll just get our own press and print our own books," she says. "We didn't know the difference between a pound of ink and a ream of paper, but we were determined to go through with this thing. Sure, there's always the chance of failure — but look at Peter. He always had his foot in his mouth, and he made all kinds of mistakes and promises he couldn't live up to. But, every time he failed, he tried again. We had to do the same thing. Working on a sure thing is not working on faith."

The monastery had about $200 when Mother Angelica purchased a printing press that cost $9,000. She also had to buy a cutter and a stapler. In all, she needed $13,000. Although no bank would grant her a loan, a long-time friend, who happened to stop by one day, loaned her $10,000. The sisters had raised $3,000.

"We do all we can, and God does the rest," she says.

Then, in 1978, Mother Angelica's vision for communicating the gospel took another quantum leap.

Television. One of her first interviews was on Channel 38 in Chicago, a UHF television station owned and operated by evangelical Protestants.

"Here was this tiny television station on top of a large, downtown building," she says. "I looked around, saw the cameras and video equipment and a few people operating out of a tiny studio. I marveled at how many people were being reached by this ministry. As I walked into the studio I said, 'Lord, I gotta have one of these!' Of course, I did ask myself the question, what on earth would 12 cloistered nuns do with a television studio? But I quickly put these negative thoughts aside knowing that's the quickest way on earth to stifle the Spirit."

After praying, Sister Joseph, who was with her, agreed.

"You know, this is the really exciting part of any new ministry," Mother Angelica says. "Just plunging in out of obedience without the full knowledge of where to begin — it's wonderful! I am fully convinced that we have come to rely too heavily on corporate methods to get things done. We have to have everything planned out, all the money up front, all the talent lined up and all the capabilities nailed down in some kind of absolute guarantee of success before we ever begin. By that time, we forget what we started out to do in the first place! Now, where is the faith in that approach?"

Thus began the path which would lead on Sept. 18, 1980, to the ordering of a satellite dish and the application for a Federal Communications Commission license to broadcast.

"Her real desire is to feed the people of God — this had been her constant incentive," says Sister Raphael of Our Lady of the Angels Monastery.

In 1981, Mother Angelica founded the Eternal Word Television Network, a satellite cable network, now carried by 331 cable systems in 36 states and three broadcast systems to more than 10.8 million homes. Locally, EWTN is cable channel 39.

"There are three things the Sisters have proven through all of this," Mother Angelica says. "First of all, God always seems to take care of the bills when we are really trying to do His work — it has never failed us yet. Secondly, we can do His work, as busy as we might be, and still have time to pray. Finally, if we are not spending time in prayer as we should, we cannot do His work."

Comedy dispels fear of 'Evil'

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Those silly, mewling demons are back. Once again the Book of the Dead has loosed the demons from "Evil Dead," out of the woods and into "Evil Dead II: Dead by Dawn." Audiences that didn't know whether to laugh or scream in "Evil Dead" will find that the makers of "Evil Dead II" have solved the problem. The latter film is too darn silly to be frightening.

"Evil Dead II" opens with "Warning: this movie may have scenes too intense for those under 17." It should have read: "Warning: you'll die laughing."

Both films have an eerie sense of isolation. The plots are similar; characters stay at a cabin in the Tennessee woods and are terrorized by demons (seen and unseen) that have been unleashed by reading words from an ancient book, the Book of the Dead.

The low budget (less than $1 million) "Evil Dead" made its mark by receiving a standing ovation at the 1982 Cannes Film Festival. At the same festival, Horror mogul Stephen King called the movie "the most ferociously original horror film of 1982."

The biggest surprise was that it was written and directed by Sam Raimi, a Michigan college student who was 20 years old at the time. In fact, the entire crew of "Evil Dead" — producer, special affects team, and cameraman — were all under the age of 26. A somewhat gruesome film, "Evil Dead" has a grainy, but oddly effective documentary look to it, not unlike the great classic of all time, George Romero's "Night of the Living Dead," (the original black and white version).

"Evil Dead" was refreshingly original. The makeup of Raimi's zombies were derivative of "The Exorcist," and the plot borrowed some elements from Romero's "Dead" movies. But the most unique element of the film (the element that had the audience cheering at Cannes) was the amazing camerawork by Tom Philo, assisted by Raimi.

The camerawork in both "Evil Dead" and "Evil Dead II" has a nightmarish fluidity; it dips and slides through the woods and then zooms in on the characters so fast that you want to plaster your hands over yourr eyes. It's a regular visual rollercoaster.

Quite an accomplishment for some college boys who couldn't afford a $5,000 a day "Steadicam" (as was used in "The Shining"). Instead, these young entrepreneurs mounted a 16mm camera (the film was later transferred to 35mm film for distribution) on a two-by-four and "ran like heck," according to an interview with Raimi in "Twilight Zone Magazine."

Even though the camera method is used again in "Evil Dead II," it isn't as effective, thanks to a silly script. Many of the demonic antics border on the slapstick. Bruce Campbell, the star of both movies, is the best actor in either cast. When his hand becomes "possessed" in "Evil Dead II," and he winds up slapping himself continuously, it's downright silly.

Later, when demons possess his girlfriend, and he's forced to lop off his beloved's head with a shovel, another hilarious scene ensues. The head flies up and sinks its teeth into Campbell's hand and he bangs it all over the place, slams cupboard doors on it, and generally looks like something out of the "Three Stooges" as he tries to rid himself of the head.

Campbell's quizzical raised eyebrow and some deflating lines reassure us that all the film's disgusting messes are just jokes. "I'm fine," Ash tells his mirror reflection after one nasty bout with evil, and the reflection answers, "We just cut up our girlfriend with a chainsaw. Does that sound fine?"

The way he rids himself of his hand saying, "Who's laughing now?," is straight out of a pulpy EC Comic story. Despite the buckets of grue, (homemade glop that looked suspiciously like a mixture of corn syrup, soap suds and red dye), teen-agers were hooting in hysterics through most of "Evil Dead II: Dead by Dawn." Unforunately, the wit isn't sustained.

There is plenty of gore and violence, but no sex in this unrated film. The comedy (intended or not) dispels the fear that should have been instilled by the time the characters chant "Dead by dawn!" Nonetheless, Raimi has again created a unique film in the black humor horror category. He just wasn't able to top the originality or artistry of the original "Evil Dead," (available on video tape already). So, if you are into this kind of stuff and can stand the gore, forget the sequel and rent "Evil Dead."

"Evil Dead II: Dead by Dawn," is unrated, probably to avoid an X rating for graphic violence and gore galore (There is mild profanity, but no sex), and is playing at UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

'Lethal' predictable, humorous

From the opening credits — vivid blue and silver letters over a nighttime city lit by twinkling multi-colored lights in a fantasy setting, accompanied by the rollicking strains of "Jingle Bell Rock," — it was obvious "Lethal Weapon" wasn't going to be an ordinary action film.

And different it is. The camera zooms in from the panorama of the city to one apartment of a sensuous scene of a Christie Brinkley-like young woman lounging in a sky-high apartment above Los Angeles. She is scantily clad, a fan is churning, and she snorts cocaine before climbing the ledge of her balcony to skydive to her death.

This surprising scene shatters the cheery mood, and then it's "action time." Enter Roger Murtaugh (Danny Glover), a family man and a strait-laced older veteran cop. It's his birthday, and he is greeted by his family bearing a birthday cake while he is taking his morning bath. His teen-age daughter kids him about his beard turning gray, and we leave him contemplating his aging reflection.

Switch to a trailer house where Martin Riggs (Mel Gibson) falls out of bed late in the morning, traipses around in the altogether, and chugs a beer for breakfast.

Glover is a cop who has survived being on the force for 20 years with nary a scratch. Gibson is a maverick cop who has adjusted to his wife's recent death in a car accident by becoming a borderline psychotic who is suicidal and prone to crazy antics. So what have we got? Why we have two men who are destined to be partners! And therein lies the conflict.

Before long the partners (who meet in a most unique way) are up to their necks in trying to solve a drug deal involving Vietnam vets. However, Gibson and Glover are Vietnam vets too, and the more-skilled Gibson is able to follow the villains' trails. The biggest baddie of the bunch is (a newly peroxide blond) Gary Busey who does a perfectly sinister job of acting as Mr. Joshua.

The film is fast-paced and action-packed with the requisite number of car crashes. The big difference between "Lethal Weapon" and many other action films is that it tells a story with a sense of wit and wonderfully believable dialogue.

Even though I could see the devices working, it was fun. The fact that Gibson had a deathwish added to the depth of every action scene he wisecracked his way through. A sense of camaraderie began to develop between the partners and it was enjoyable to watch. Glover's family life presented a nice buffer to the cruel world on the streets.

Glover and Gibson play off each other effectively. You can't help but like the guys. Their banter as well as their delivery is clever. "Did you ever meet anyone you didn't kill?" Glover asks Gibson in a perfectly serious tone.

Director Richard Donner ("Superman," "The Omen," "Ladyhawke," and "Goonies") creates a fine film with a perfectly acceptable premise, even if its portrayal of Vietnam vets as killing machines or those who take unnecessary risks is stereotypical.

There are a lot of fresh touches of humor here. Even a tired old phrase like "Have a nice day" is used in a real laugh-out-loud way. "Lethal Weapon," is predictable but is performed with slam-bang vigor and directed with skill, and best of all, it's entertaining.

"Lethal Weapon," rated R for profanity, violence and sexual situations, is playing at North Park Cinemas.

'Witchboard' poor derivative of 'Exorcist'

Does anybody remember Ouija boards, those popular party items where everyone swore that the players were cheating and moving their hands to get the answers they wanted? Well, "The Exorcist" revived interest in the Ouija board when Linda Blair conversed with evil spirits through the aid of the board. Had "The Exorcist" been a made-for-televison movie with a slimmer budget and even slimmer talent, it might have resulted in "Witchboard."

Directed by Kevin S. Tenney, (who?) the horror film opens with Todd Allen (another big name) as a James Dean bad-boy type sulking around a party where the Ouija board, along with his girlfriend, Tawny Kitaen, has become the center of attention. The mood, the attire and everything about this scene smacks 60s. Allen chugs whiskey out of a bottle and tells his long-haired friends, "We're not underdressed, they're overdressed."

The owner of the Ouija board, Stephen Nichols, claims to be able to converse with the spirit of a young boy through the board. The following conversation ensues:

"It's a little spooky."

"It's a little stupid."

"It's a lot stupid."

Agreed. After this scintillating dialogue, Nichols explains that spirits are attracted to certain Ouija boards. Why is this? Well, with wonderful logic Nichols said, "Maybe the spirit died the day the board was made." If you find that explanation satisfactory then you may enjoy this silly romp as unseen spirits wreak havoc in a small California town.

There are many distractions in this movie from Cinema Group. After a party, the heroine's plush apartment is trashed. Popcorn, empty wrappers and garbage are everywhere. Why would a woman who looks like a model, and obviously has money put up with friends like these?

Immediately after the opening party, Nichols does a switch. It's only the next day, but suddenly we are in the 80s. Gone is the rough boy in a jacket, replaced by a clean-cut Nichols in a Polo shirt who appears much younger than he did in the earlier scene. Did we change directors since the last scene? Why was his original image dropped? Who knows? It's one of the jarring errors among many in this poor attempt derivative of "The Exorcist."

The photography is good enough, the acting fair, and a guest appearance by Rose Marie a total waste. The makers of "Witchboard" would have done well to scrap the horror theme and concentrate on the relationship between Nichols and Allen. Their relationship (estranged since childhood) was more interesting than anything else in the movie.

"Witchboard" has a light touch — too light — making it just another, wait-for-this-one-to-come-out-on-cable horror film.

"Witchboard," rated R for violence and lots of profanity, is playing at North Park Cinemas.

NBC offers version of woman who had son kill grandfather

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The murder of a Utah millionaire by a teen-age grandson operating under orders from his mother was recounted in two best-selling books, and both were turned into miniseries this season.

The first appeared on CBS in January. Starting Sunday, NBC airs the second, "Nutcracker: Money, Madness, Murder."

The six-hour miniseries recounts how Frances Bradshaw Schreuder, fearing she would be disinherited by her father, Franklin Bradshaw, sent her teen-age son to Salt Lake City to kill him.

Schreuder was sentenced to life in prison and her son to five years to life. They are confined to the same prison in Utah.

"Nutcracker" is based on the best seller by Shana Alexander. CBS told the same story in the four-hour miniseries "At Mother's Request," based on the book by Jonathan Coleman. Stefanie Powers played Mrs. Schreuder.

In NBC's version, Lee Remick stars as the self-styled New York socialite who was a patron of the arts and the New York City Ballet.

"We saw each other when the shows were in production and we giggled about doing the same role," said Remick. "I guess it was inevitable there would be two shows because there were two terrific books.

"I was fascinated to see another interpretation," Remick said of the CBS show. "There are a lot of differences. Ours is longer and we do a whole lot more about her life before the kids become teen-agers. It acquaints the audience with these people. Frances was always a strange woman. She could never have enough money, clothes or adulation. She manipulated people, got her two sons to steal for her and one to kill for her. You learn how they got to be the way they were.

"I made no attempt to make Frances sympathetic. I truly believe she's truly mad. She was self-centered and concerned only with herself."

The miniseries, which NBC will telecast tonighht, Monday and Tuesday, also stars G.D. Spradlin as Bradshaw and Tate Donovan as Marc Schreuder, the 17-year-old boy coerced by his mother to shoot his grandfather July 23, 1978.

The case remained unsolved until Schreuder reneged on a $3,700 debt to her friend Richard Behrens (John Glover), and he turned the murder weapon over to Frances' sister Marilyn.

Paul Bogart directed and William Hanley wrote the screenplay. Others in the cast include Daniel Hugh Kelly, Linda Kelsey, Frank Military, Tony Musante, Inga Swenson and Elizabeth Wilson.

Remick likens the story, with its elements of madness, malice and murder within a family, to a Shakespearean tragedy.

"I've never played a character this unsympathetic," she said. "I've never even been sent a script for one. It was fascinating to try to figure this character out and still make her believable. Frances functioned on the surface as an ordinary person. You couldn't pick her out as mad. But even when she was in college there were already indications she was unbalanced.

"This is so far away from anything I've ever tackled. That's one of the reasons I wanted to play it. I'm usually asked to be the heroine or the victim. So, as an actress, there was no way I could turn this down."

Remick, who's married to British producer Kip Gowans, divides her time between Los Angeles and their house on Cape Cod. They previously lived in London.

"We weren't interested in boats until we got to Cape Cod, but now it's a big thing with us," she said. "It's like gardening in England. You can't be in Cape Cod and not be into boats. We just bought a day sailer. We also have a Boston whaler. It's like a little car. We use it to get to the houses of our friends."

Ladd plays nurse who abused drugs

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Cheryl Ladd says she wasn't aware nurses had such a high rate of drug abuse until she started work on the CBS movie "Deadly Care."

The two-hour movie, which will be telecast tonight, tells of a critical care nurse whose abuse of prescription drugs and alcohol causes her to make a near fatal error in treating a patient.

"It's like police departments. They protect their own," said Ladd. "They don't confront each other and tend to sweep things under the rug. Sick nurses and sick doctors are not something you usually hear about. A person who deals with other people's illnesses tends not to face his own frailties."

Health care professionals abuse narcotics at a rate 40 times greater than the general public, according to published reports. The statistic is attributed in part to the ready availability of drugs.

Ladd stars as Anne Halloran, a nurse in a Cardio-Vascular Intensive Care Unit, who is forced to seek help in dealing with her abuse of drugs and alcohol. The character is based on a real nurse who helped set up a rehabilitation center for nurses and was instrumental in getting legislation passed that permits nurses who conquer their addiction to keep their licenses.

Jennifer Salt and Jason Miller also star in the movie, written by Lane Slate and directed by David Anspaugh. It was produced by Wendy Riche, Paula Rudnick and Jon Epstein.

"Wendy and Paula had me in mind from the beginning," said Ladd. "I read the script and it was very disturbing. It stuck with me and I kept thinking about the scenes. When it won't let you go, then you know it's something you want to do.

"The next thing, we went looking for a director and were lucky to get David, who was coming off 'Hoosiers.' It's unusual that he would want to do television."

Ladd also talked to the nurse whose story is told in the movie and to a doctor who treats addicted nurses. The nurse's name was changed for the movie.

"This (film "Deadly Care") is set in the 1960s, when Valium was prescribed like candy. If you had a problem, take a Valium. Doctors didn't know how dangerous or addictive it could be. Drugs were left all over hospitals. She was taking 80 milligrams a day of Valium and Percodan and other drugs. She built up a tolerance."

"This is set in the 1960s, when Valium was prescribed like candy," said Ladd. "If you had a problem, take a Valium. Doctors didn't know how dangerous or addictive it could be. Drugs were left all over hospitals.

"She was taking 80 milligrams a day of Valium and Percodan and other drugs. She built up a tolerance."

The movie is the first for Ladd since her starring role in the six-hour miniseries "Crossings" in February 1986. Prior to that she starred in "A Death in California" and "Romance on the Orient Express." She also appeared in the play "Anything Goes" in Santa Barbara.

"I've got a few things in development," she said. "I'm waiting for something wonderful to come along. I'm in a nice position because I only work when I want to. You always want the next Meryl Streep role, but you strive for better and better material."

She has been asked to appear on Broadway, but has put that off until her two daughters, Jordan, 12, and Lindsay, 10, are out of school.

She also gets frequent offers for another series, but has said no since "Charlie's Angels" ended six years ago. "I won't say never," she said. "Maybe when I'm 50 I'll want to do another series.

"But after playing the same character for four years I know that a series is not as inspiring as getting a new script and a new character. I prefer to work like crazy for three months, then be off for three months and be able to lead my life. When you do a series you live only to go to work. It's confining to your life and confining to your craft. I want to be able to stretch and do other things."

She is married to producer Brian Russell, who recently produced "From the Hip" with Judd Nelson. He also produced her movie "Grace Kelly" and her musical specials.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, MARCH 23, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Separate the real from the ideal and things should go swimmingly for you in the year ahead. Get more rest and your productivity will rise. Summer brings romance and, perhaps, a long-distance move. Investments produce hoped-for results. Education is the key to a brighter future. A child begins to make a positive contribution to family life. Maintain the relationships that have been good for you in the past.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Cincinnati Reds catcher Bo Diaz, actress Joan Crawford, actor-director Mark Rydell ("The River"), psychoanalyst-author Erich Fromm, quarterback Ron Jaworski, Philadelphia 76ers star Moses Malone, rocket expert Wernher von Braun.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Tackle difficult chores early in the day. Improvements can be made in your work. Be willing to listen to constructive criticism. New ideas lead to higher profits. Investigate a financial offer very carefully.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The next two days will be full of surprises. Do not let your emotions complicate a business deal. Influential person could play a major role in your professional and personal future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Joint ventures with your mate or a business associate are favored. New ties or contracts are in the spotlight. Your beliefs could be in conflict with those of an attractive member of the opposite sex.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Talk with people both near and far. You need to stay in close touch with overseas business contacts. Your optimism over a friend's activities is justified. Renew your passport and keep a suitcase packed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Look forward to a highly productive day. The emphasis is on upgrading a service or facility. A bit of luck and behind-the-scenes support make you a winner! Trust your hunches.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your financial position is clarified. A legal problem is likely to be settled in your favor. Renew contracts and sign agreements. Travel is possible. You seek variety, growth and change. Maintain old ties.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid negative people and situations and you will be more productive. Your associates are a stabilizing influence. The afternoon could bring several charmers your way. Take your pick! Romance enjoys favorable influences.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The start of the work week emphasizes financial and property matters. Distant business dealings come to the fore. A conservative approach helps you beat out your competitors. Romance begins to heat up.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Morning could present a problem connected with travel, joint resources or family security. Experts' advice helps you avoid hassles. Attending a cultural event will boost your spirits. Take a special friend along.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Work pressures should fade now, but the same may not be true at home. Compromise and tact will help you mend some emotional fences. Give mate's wishes top priority tonight. Welcome suggestions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Any attempt at reasonable communication can alleviate irritability. Resist the temptation to go overboard where food or drink is concerned. The pieces of a puzzle fall into place.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Financial matters and professional activities demand your attention. Get better organized at work and profits will rise. Teamwork is also needed. A platonic relationship takes on new importance. Keep secrets to yourself.

Opening lead: Four of ♡

If your opponents are sane, you don't expect to defeat a slam they have bid freely by more than a trick or two. Therefore, you won't get rich doubling for penalties. For this reason the late Theodore Lightner decided that the double could be used more profitably as a lead-director, usually of dummy's first-bid suit.

The convention has just one drawback it warns the potential declarer that he is about to receive a possibly killing lead. That might allow him to take evasive action.

This hand was played in a team competition. At both tables South was about to become declarer at six spades. His jump to two spades on a four-card suit was based on his huge fit for his partner's suit, not necessarily from any desire to play in the major. Where we watched, East chose to make a Lightner double. It did not take any great genius on South's part to realize East wanted to ruff a club, so South ran to six no trump. That contract proved to be unbeatable, declarer losing only a trick to the king of spades.

We do not know why East chose not to double at the other table. We can only report on the striking success of his action, thanks to an assist from declarer. West led his fourth-best heart against six spades, and East followed with the three!

Oblivious to any danger, declarer crossed to the king of diamonds and tried the trump finesse. In with the king, West realized that East's play at trick one was begging for a shift. His not to reason why, but clubs was the only return that made any sense. His partner's ruff was an unexpected but delightful surprise.

It did not need North to draw South's attention to the fact that ace of trumps and another would have guaranteed the slam.

Story told through elderly woman

"The Pianoplayers," by Anthony Burgess. Arbor House. 208 Pages. $16.95.

A Review

By JOAN BRUNSKILL
Associated Press

Anthony Burgess, with characteristic gusto, creates a distinctive voice for the narrator of his latest novel, "The Pianoplayers." The voice is an earthy one, with a north-country English accent. It belongs to a spirited elderly woman, Ellen Henshaw, who dictates the reminiscences that form the novel from a village in the south of France where she now spends her summers.

Ellen's own life has been tough and colorful. With minimal formal education, she first learned street smarts tagging along with her father, a pianoplayer in movie houses and small resort theaters. Then on her own, after his death, she became wise to the ways of the world by being ushered naively into a phase as a child prostitute which she parlayed into a successful career as an independent professional woman; she eventually became proprietress of her own establishments, which included a chain of "School of Love."

However, at the heart of the book and in sharpest focus are Ellen's father and his work, which she describes in passages of passionate and compassionate recall. Her vivid detail illuminates the period, the 1920s and '30s, and the seedy life of an entertainer in the Lancashire resorts, backed by echoes of the popular music of the day. Ellen absorbed a great deal about music from her father and later developed a theory about the similarity between making music and making love which was taught in her schools.

Ellen has a salty expressiveness befitting the story she tells, in a vernacular — not rendered in dialect — which gives the novel a consistent flavor of robust comedy. Burgess is a composer and jazz musician in addition to being a writer and occasionally that enthusiasm threatens to upset the balance of the novel — but overall the main theme, the story telling, holds its own.

In two instances, Martha Washington has appeared on U.S. coins. She was the model for the Liberty head on the 1792 half-dime and the 1792 cent. She has also been portrayed on pattern coins and experimental and test pieces struck by the U.S. Mint.

Nelson on the road for Farm AID III

Nelson

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Willie Nelson is on the road again, plowing ahead with plans for FarmAid III.

The bearded, bandanna-adorned performer has tentatively set Sept. 19 for the third concert extravaganza to raise money for the nation's hard-pressed farmers. It will be at the University of Nebraska football stadium in Lincoln.

"Naturally, there is not enough money raised to pay off a $225 billion farm debt," the singer-songwriter-guitarist-actor said. "We can't pay off people's notes. But we could send them a little money and we can call attention to the problem. And that's mainly what we're trying to do."

Nelson, whose ponytail makes him an unlikely hero in the more traditional farm belt, spearheaded the first two concerts that raised a total of $14 million. The first concert was in September 1985 in Champaign, Ill., and the second was last July 4 near Austin, Texas.

"We're still getting pledges," the 53-year-old Nelson said recently in an interview. "We're getting a few thousand dollars a week. And we're negotiating now with Del Monte, who's giving us $1 million.

"They want to do a farmer-awareness type of thing. I'm not really sure, but it's something like a percentage of the price that you pay for a can of Del Monte food will go to FarmAid."

His continued commitment to farmers comes as his movie, "Red-Headed Stranger," is released. It is based on his 1975 album by the same name and is his fifth theatrical movie. His other films were "The Electric Horseman," "Barbarosa," "Songwriter" and "Honeysuckle Rose."

"Acting has come easier than I expected," he says. "The lines we say in movies are like lyrics without melodies."

Once branded a maverick by the Nashville music community because of his unorthodox singing style (he always seems a beat behind), he now is a finalist for country music's ultimate laurel: the Country Music Hall of Fame.

Even after 25 years performing, he still does as many concerts in a year (300) as anyone in the business. He's recorded a dazzling array of duets with partners ranging from Spanish superstar Julio Iglesias to 72-year-old country pioneer Hank Snow.

His most recent No. 1 hit was last summer's "Living in the Promiseland," joining a bundle of others few can match in productivity or preeminence: "On the Road Again," "Always on My Mind," "Stardust," "Blue Eyes Crying in the Rain," "To All the Girls I've Loved Before," "Georgia on My Mind" and "Mamas Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to Be Cowboys."

His "Stardust" album remains on the country charts after a whopping eight years and his "Greatest Hits" is still on the charts after five. His closest rival in longevity is Hank Williams Jr.'s "Greatest Hits, Vol. 1," at two years.

Nelson, who raised hogs in the early 1960s on a 100-acre farm north of Nashville, said farmers need help in Washington.

"What's left for us to do is to get a farm bill that will guarantee farmers a better way of living," he said. "They can't make a living. They can't pay thir notes. They can't make a crop on the money they're getting for their products.

"The only thing that is going to change that is a farm bill. We've got to help them bail themselves out. They're not asking for charity. They just want a decent price for their work."

FarmAid evolved from the LiveAid concert that raised money for the starving in Africa. Proceeds went to food pantries, legal assistance, legislative matters, telephone hotlines, scholarships for agricultural students and other causes.

"Providing FarmAid III comes off as well as we all want it to, and I see no reason why it shouldn't, if it helps that farm bill to pass, then there shouldn't be any need for a FarmAid IV," Nelson said. "There shouldn't have been a need for FarmAid I, II and III."

He plans to ask rock stars John Cougar Mellencamp and Neil Young, and country singer John Conlee to participate in the concert.

"These guys were very instrumental in putting together FarmAid I and II," Nelson said.

FarmAid I presented more than 50 pop, rock and country stars during an all-day extravaganza. Seventy-five acts, most of them country stars, performed during a 12-hour festival at FarmAid II. He expects about 20 acts this year.

"We won't have as many acts as we did at FarmAid I and II," Nelson said. "We're going to try and hold it down to where each individual act can perform a little bit more. I think that would be better for them and better for the audience."

Opening lead: Four of ♡

If your opponents are sane, you don't expect to defeat a slam they have bid freely by more than a trick or two. Therefore, you won't get rich doubling for penalties. For this reason the late Theodore Lightner decided that the double could be used more profitably as a lead-director, usually of dummy's first-bid suit.

The convention has just one drawback it warns the potential declarer that he is about to receive a possibly killing lead. That might allow him to take evasive action.

This hand was played in a team competition. At both tables South was about to become declarer at six spades. His jump to two spades on a four-card suit was based on his huge fit for his partner's suit, not necessarily from any desire to play in the major. Where we watched, East chose to make a Lightner double. It did not take any great genius on South's part to realize East wanted to ruff a club, so South ran to six no trump. That contract proved to be unbeatable, declarer losing only a trick to the king of spades.

We do not know why East chose not to double at the other table. We can only report on the striking success of his action, thanks to an assist from declarer. West led his fourth-best heart against six spades, and East followed with the three!

Oblivious to any danger, declarer crossed to the king of diamonds and tried the trump finesse. In with the king, West realized that East's play at trick one was begging for a shift. His not to reason why, but clubs was the only return that made any sense. His partner's ruff was an unexpected but delightful surprise.

It did not need North to draw South's attention to the fact that ace of trumps and another would have guaranteed the slam.

Story told through elderly woman

"The Pianoplayers," by Anthony Burgess. Arbor House. 208 Pages. $16.95.

A Review

By JOAN BRUNSKILL
Associated Press

Anthony Burgess, with characteristic gusto, creates a distinctive voice for the narrator of his latest novel, "The Pianoplayers." The voice is an earthy one, with a north-country English accent. It belongs to a spirited elderly woman, Ellen Henshaw, who dictates the reminiscences that form the novel from a village in the south of France where she now spends her summers.

Ellen's own life has been tough and colorful. With minimal formal education, she first learned street smarts tagging along with her father, a pianoplayer in movie houses and small resort theaters. Then on her own, after his death, she became wise to the ways of the world by being ushered naively into a phase as a child prostitute which she parlayed into a successful career as an independent professional woman; she eventually became proprietress of her own establishments, which included a chain of "School of Love."

However, at the heart of the book and in sharpest focus are Ellen's father and his work, which she describes in passages of passionate and compassionate recall. Her vivid detail illuminates the period, the 1920s and '30s, and the seedy life of an entertainer in the Lancashire resorts, backed by echoes of the popular music of the day. Ellen absorbed a great deal about music from her father and later developed a theory about the similarity between making music and making love which was taught in her schools.

Ellen has a salty expressiveness befitting the story she tells, in a vernacular — not rendered in dialect — which gives the novel a consistent flavor of robust comedy. Burgess is a composer and jazz musician in addition to being a writer and occasionally that enthusiasm threatens to upset the balance of the novel — but overall the main theme, the story telling, holds its own.

Martha's head on coins

In two instances, Martha Washington has appeared on U.S. coins. She was the model for the Liberty head on the 1792 half-dime and the 1792 cent. She has also been portrayed on pattern coins and experimental and test pieces struck by the U.S. Mint.

Nelson on the road for Farm AID III

Nelson

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Willie Nelson is on the road again, plowing ahead with plans for FarmAid III.

The bearded, bandanna-adorned performer has tentatively set Sept. 19 for the third concert extravaganza to raise money for the nation's hard-pressed farmers. It will be at the University of Nebraska football stadium in Lincoln.

"Naturally, there is not enough money raised to pay off a $225 billion farm debt," the singer-songwriter-guitarist-actor said. "We can't pay off people's notes. But we could send them a little money and we can call attention to the problem. And that's mainly what we're trying to do."

Nelson, whose ponytail makes him an unlikely hero in the more traditional farm belt, spearheaded the first two concerts that raised a total of $14 million. The first concert was in September 1985 in Champaign, Ill., and the second was last July 4 near Austin, Texas.

"We're still getting pledges," the 53-year-old Nelson said recently in an interview. "We're getting a few thousand dollars a week. And we're negotiating now with Del Monte, who's giving us $1 million.

"They want to do a farmer-awareness type of thing. I'm not really sure, but it's something like a percentage of the price that you pay for a can of Del Monte food will go to FarmAid."

His continued commitment to farmers comes as his movie, "Red-Headed Stranger," is released. It is based on his 1975 album by the same name and is his fifth theatrical movie. His other films were "The Electric Horseman," "Barbarosa," "Songwriter" and "Honeysuckle Rose."

"Acting has come easier than I expected," he says. "The lines we say in movies are like lyrics without melodies."

Once branded a maverick by the Nashville music community because of his unorthodox singing style (he always seems a beat behind), he now is a finalist for country music's ultimate laurel: the Country Music Hall of Fame.

Even after 25 years performing, he still does as many concerts in a year (300) as anyone in the business. He's recorded a dazzling array of duets with partners ranging from Spanish superstar Julio Iglesias to 72-year-old country pioneer Hank Snow.

His most recent No. 1 hit was last summer's "Living in the Promiseland," joining a bundle of others few can match in productivity or preeminence: "On the Road Again," "Always on My Mind," "Stardust," "Blue Eyes Crying in the Rain," "To All the Girls I've Loved Before," "Georgia on My Mind" and "Mamas Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to Be Cowboys."

His "Stardust" album remains on the country charts after a whopping eight years and his "Greatest Hits" is still on the charts after five. His closest rival in longevity is Hank Williams Jr.'s "Greatest Hits, Vol. 1," at two years.

Nelson, who raised hogs in the early 1960s on a 100-acre farm north of Nashville, said farmers need help in Washington.

"What's left for us to do is to get a farm bill that will guarantee farmers a better way of living," he said. "They can't make a living. They can't pay thir notes. They can't make a crop on the money they're getting for their products.

"The only thing that is going to change that is a farm bill. We've got to help them bail themselves out. They're not asking for charity. They just want a decent price for their work."

FarmAid evolved from the LiveAid concert that raised money for the starving in Africa. Proceeds went to food pantries, legal assistance, legislative matters, telephone hotlines, scholarships for agricultural students and other causes.

"Providing FarmAid III comes off as well as we all want it to, and I see no reason why it shouldn't, if it helps that farm bill to pass, then there shouldn't be any need for a FarmAid IV," Nelson said. "There shouldn't have been a need for FarmAid I, II and III."

He plans to ask rock stars John Cougar Mellencamp and Neil Young, and country singer John Conlee to participate in the concert.

"These guys were very instrumental in putting together FarmAid I and II," Nelson said.

FarmAid I presented more than 50 pop, rock and country stars during an all-day extravaganza. Seventy-five acts, most of them country stars, performed during a 12-hour festival at FarmAid II. He expects about 20 acts this year.

"We won't have as many acts as we did at FarmAid I and II," Nelson said. "We're going to try and hold it down to where each individual act can perform a little bit more. I think that would be better for them and better for the audience."

Passage quite costly

One-way passage in one of the best suites of the doomed ocean liner Titanic, which sank in 1912 on her maiden voyage, cost $4,350, the equivalent of nearly $50,000 in today's funds.

Symphony, chorale, brass quintet will perform

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale and The Lone Star Brass Quintet will perform their annual Free Spring Concert at Midland's First United Methodist Church Tuesday and at Odessa's First Presbyterian Church Thursday. Both performances begin at 8:15 p.m.

The chorale, under the direction of Eugene Pierce, will perform the Durufle "Requiem," featuring Keith Ross, organist. Ross has appeared as a recitalist and accompanist for solo and oratorio performances, including Handel's "Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt," Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Haydn's "Creation," Honneger's "King David," and others. He has also accompanied in musical theater.

Also featured on the program will be the Lone Star Brass Quintet performing Bach's Brandenburg Suite as well as the "Fanfare" to "La Peri" by Dukas.

The Quintet, whose members are David Scott, Michael Santorelli, Barbara Adamcik, Robb Belcher, and Alan Harvey, is the resident brass quintet of the Midland-Odessa Symphony.
