Determination Keyed Tech Win

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

THE WAY JAMES Hadnot tells it, not even the National Guard, much less a little thing like the Houston defense, was about to keep him from scoring the biggest two points in quite some time for Texas Tech.

The entire armed forces might have had its hands full with the 236-pound fullback from Jasper who, after taking a pass from quarterback Ron Reeves, on second effort alone crossed the double stripes to give the Raiders their stunning 22-21 upset over Houston Saturday afternoon.

Hadnot, with an ice pack taped to his ribs and hobbling from a knee injury he sustained early in the game, explained the play this way: "I went past the end for two counts and then turned for the pass. I saw some people in front of me. I spun out of the way and just tried to keep my legs going."

About eight steps later, Hadnot had a Grade A smile on his face and the Raiders had their seventh win.

Spectators mobbed the field as time ran out.

In the Raiders' locker room, head coach Rex Dockery, appearing to have taken a shower with his clothes on, said he never hesitated about going for the two points instead of settling for an almost sure tie.

"We knew if we had any shot at the Cotton Bowl we would have to win," smiled Dockery. "A tie wouldn't have done us any good at all."

Although it may be hard to believe, the Raiders do have an outside shot at a trip to Dallas on New Year's Day. But, there are a couple of hurdles.

First the Raiders must beat Arkansas next week in their season finale, then hope Rice somehow manages to upset Houston and Texas defeats A&M.

That would bring about a three-way tie among Tech, Houston and Texas, all

Cult Toll Reaches 910

Survivors To Be Airlifted To U.S.

GEORGETOWN, Guyana (AP) — American soldiers completed the grisly task of removing bodies from Jonestown Saturday and determined that 910 persons, 500 more than originally estimated, died in the mass suicide-murder, U.S. officials said.

They said this was a preliminary final count but approximately correct.

The count leaped from 408 to at least 775 on Friday when searchers first realized that many bodies had been stacked atop each other. Then on Saturday, State Department officials in Washington and at Dover Air Force Base, Del., where the bodies are being sent, got word of the higher toll.

Few Unaccounted For

It was beginning to appear that few, if any, Jonestown residents remained unaccounted for.

Thirty-two survivors had emerged from the jungle around the agricultural settlement after the bizarre death rite last Saturday, and 46 more were at the Georgetown headquarters of the Peoples Temple sect at the time.

One survivor, who had been detained for questioning by police, said Saturday he had been told shortly before the suicides to deliver a heavy suitcase to the U.S. Embassy, but when he found it was packed with money he dropped it and fled into the jungle.

Searches have produced no indication that any others escaped and remain in the dense jungle around Jonestown, 150 miles northwest of this South American capital. State Department lawyer Michael White said in Dover that all the newly discovered victims were found in the camp clearing and not in the jungle. The last of the bodies was flown out of Jonestown Saturday afternoon.

Survivors Delayed

The State Department had announced Saturday the survivors would be flown to Charleston Air Force Base, S.C., over the weekend and would be given money for airline tickets home. But it said later the departures apparently wouldn't start until later in the week because permission had not been granted by Guyana.

Guyanese police sources said the only survivors who would be permitted to leave would be those who were not involved or were not material witnesses to the suicide-murders. One source said five Americans, who he did not name, had been cleared and might leave today.

Two of the 78 survivors have been formally charged with murder and will continue to be held in Georgetown.

At Jonestown, American troops in surgical masks and rubber gloves continued the grisly job of removing the badly decayed bodies of the sect members, called to their deaths a week ago by cult leader Rev. Jim Jones' summons, "The time has come for all of us to meet at another place."

The camp's medical team had doled out lethal doses of cyanide poison. It was administered to infants and force-fed to some adults who resisted, but most took it willingly, survivors said.

At the Delaware air base, which houses the Air Force mortuary, specialists were trying to identify the bodies and prepare them for shipment and burial. More than 500 had arrived by Saturday afternoon.

Eighteen FBI experts at Dover were checking fingeprints at the rate of about six bodies an hour. Army Maj. Brigham Shuler said it will take "much longer" than the two or three weeks originally estimated to finish the airlift, identification, preparation and shipment of the bodies.

The State Department said no further partial lists of victims will be released, but a full list will be provided when all of the victims who can be identified have been and next-of-kin are notified. A list of 170 tentatively identified victims was released last week.

A spokesman said the final lists will not be issued soon because of identification problems and expected trouble in locat-

Goodfellows Launch Christmas Campaign

THE ANNUAL CAMPAIGN of the Lubbock Goodfellows is being launched today for children of the city who might otherwise be missed this Christmas.

The anonymous masked Santas already are organizing in preparation for the distribution of about 10,000 Christmas packages to needy children this year in Lubbock.

The Goodfellows, composed of Lubbock men and women who have remained anonymous since 1934, will need $15,000 to finance this year's campaign.

At this point, however, the major need is for names of boys and girls residing in Lubbock who would qualify as recipients of Goodfellow packages.

Names, ages and addresses of children may be submitted using the coupon provided for that purpose in today's paper.

The names received will be screened to determine if residential and other qualifications are met.

Last year, generous Lubbock residents gave $15,483.39 to meet the challenge of providing Christmas to more than 9,000 youngsters.

The 1978 Chief Goodfellow stressed that inflation has even sifted into Goodfellow plans and more money will be needed this year than ever before for the Christmas morning visit that means so much to children.

"We must not let out youngsters down," Chief Goodfellow and his masked band stressed. Lubbock never has failed, he observed, in its part of the effort to enrich Christmas for many boys and girls less fortunate than others.

If you know of a child or children who may be missed at Christmas if the Goodfellows do not find them, then clip and fill out the coupon titled "BE A GOODFELLOW" on Page 15, Sec. A, in this edition of The A-J and mail as soon as possible to Chief Goodfellow, P.O. Box 491, Lubbock 79408.

Bus Riders May Choose To Continue

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

LUBBOCK school officials have good news and bad news about the flip-flop of elementary students for the second half of the 1978-79 desegregation plan.

The good news, school administrators say, is that a new academic record-keeping system is expected to minimize any disruption for youngsters changing schools (and thus changing teachers) at midterm.

The bad news is for students already being bused crosstown who opt for the same next semester. School officials say that if many children exercise this second-half option — instead of returning to their neighborhood campuses — certain buses may be overloaded.

Some routes may encounter "severe space problems," should a large number of students choose to continue attending their "sister schools," the Lubbock Independent School District board of trustees has been told.

At the elementary level, the court-ordered desegregation plan involves busing about 2,000 students a semester. Minority children will remain in their sister schools for the full year, but white students — unless they request otherwise — will switch at midterm.

The last day of the first semester is Jan. 19. The second semester begins Jan. 22.

When the approximately 1,200 whites now being bused to sister schools return to their neighborhood schools for the second semester a new group of about the same number of whites will be given sister-school reassignments.

Each predominantly white elementary school is sending one or two grades to a previously minority sister school. Children whose last names begin with the letters A through L are being bused this semester. M through Z students will be bused the second semester.

At a meeting this month, the school board received reports on the status of the upcoming flip-flop. "We're not just concerned with busing, enrollment and numbers. We're concerned mainly with instruction," Superintendent Ed Irons said.

Water Conservation Proposal May Put Farmer In Jeopardy

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

PROPOSED regulations to implement President Carter's national water policy may put some South Plains farmers out of business, an area water conservationist says.

Although details of the proposed regulations are sketchy, the requirements designed to force farmers in water-short areas such as West Texas to cut down on water use could spell economic doom for area farmers, said A. Wayne Wyatt, manager of the High Plains Underground Water Conservation District No. 1.

Some of the regulations propose to "limit or refuse loan assistance to farmers who frequently violate water conservation practices," discourage irrigation through "measures that would result in lower crop prices or higher production costs" and "disallow crop insurance for water intensive crops in water-short areas."

Other regulations would "disallow emergency relief which increases the level of water utilization in water-short areas" and "require a metering system and pricing structure that promotes water conservation."

Although Wyatt agrees with the water conservation aims of the Carter administration, he said the method is wrong.

"We want water conservation — we spend most of our time promoting it," he said. However, conserving water shouldn't put farmers out of business, like the proposed federal regulations, Wyatt said.

Eliminating insurance on certain crops grown in West Texas could hurt farmers required to have the insurance as a condition of financing, he said. "Some of them just couldn't take the risk" of planting a crop without insurance," Wyatt added.

How many farmers are affected by the regulation will depend on the government's definition of "water intensive crops," which could be written to include corn, soybeans and cotton, Wyatt cautioned.

Requiring farmers to place meters on all wells would be a great financial burden, Wyatt said, asking rhetorically what would happen if "we told everybody they had to have a $500 meter on 70,000 wells?"

Wyatt speculated that a farmer whose crop is hailed out might not be permitted to plant a second time because of the ad-

Fog Blanket Ripped By Area Cold Front

A COLD FRONT that moved into the South Plains from the northwest Saturday brought cooler temperatures and an end to Lubbock's London-type fog.

Skies are expected to remain dismal and cloudy under 60-degree temperatures, but fog that blanketed the city and held visibility to the zero end of the scale for seven hours ending at 5 a.m. Saturday should be out of the picture.

Late Saturday, scattered thunderstorms developed on the South Plains from 10 miles southeast of Slaton to Tahoka to 15 miles northwest of Lamesa. Most area residents reported only light, drizzling rain despite a vivid lightning display. However, Tahoka police reported heavy rains there and some pea and marble-size hail as the storm moved through that area. Only traces of rain are expected in the area today.

Caroline, Famed Mother Display Similarities, Differences, Too

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Monday, Caroline Kennedy will celebrate her 21st birthday. As the world watched, the only daughter of the murdered President John F. Kennedy grew up from the cute little "Buttons" he nicknamed her in the White House, through turbulent teen years, into womanhood. Now, five days after the 15th anniversary of her father's assassination on a winding Dallas street, she has reached the traditional passageway into adult years. What is she like? How does she look, act, think, manage her life? What are her thoughts, ambitions, relations with her world-famous mother? Here is an intimate look, very up-close, at one of the most talked-about yet least known young woman of our time.)

By LESTER DAVID
United Feature Syndicate

PARENTS AND THEIR DAUGHTERS everywhere will recognize the most significant aspect of Caroline Kennedy's personality as she rounds 21: she has rebeled against most of the wishes, tastes and teachings of her mother.

Remarkably, there has been no alienation. Although Caroline has resolutely become her own woman and gone her own way despite everything Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis could do or say, mother and daughter are extraordinarily close.

This fact emerges from close observation of Caroline and talks with dozens of her friends over the past three months.

Caroline is now in her junior year at Radcliffe College, which has been coordinated with Harvard University. She rooms in Winthrop House, now a coed dormitory, the same house in which her father and uncle Bobby lived when they attended Harvard. Her uncle Ted Kennedy and her cousin Kathleen, Bobby's eldest daughter, were there too. Winthrop accomodates 350 students and is one of 12 residential buildings at Harvard.

Over the years Jackie has attempted to mold Caroline in her own image, to breed her for a life of sophistication among the Beautiful People. Her mother tried to cultivate Caroline's palate to enjoy the ultimate in French cuisine, to teach her to love ballet, art and music, and to instill a sense of style and an appreciation of haute couture. Some of it stuck; in 1974 and 1975, Caroline devoted nine months to studying art history at Sotheby's, the London art auction house, and emerged with a deep love for painting and sculpture.

But much of it went in one ear and out the other. As one prime example — Jackie wanted Caroline to be introduced to society at the age of 18 in the traditional manner at a debutante ball. Jackie herself had had a spectacular coming-out party in Newport and had been named Queen Deb of the year by Cholly Knickerbocker of the Hearst newspapers, the leading society writer of the time. Jackie pleaded with Caroline but her daughter adamantly refused. Jackie finally gave up and there was no coming-out party for Caroline.

Other areas of difference between mother and daughter established the pattern of Caroline's defiance. In the matter of cuisine, despite consistent exposure to the most exquisite dishes, Caroline still prefers a sausage pizza to quenelles de sole au gratin and beer (swigged from a can) to vintage champagne.

Dress is of highest importance to Jackie, who is fashion's empress; Caroline pays little attention to what she wears and generally avoids the boutiques of Boston, New York, London or wherever she travels. Recently her aunt Eunice Shriver was

DAYS TO CHRISTMAS

Bulgarian Town Renowned For Stingy Citizenry

GABROVO, Bulgaria (AP) — When Gabrovonians go to sleep, they stop their clocks to save wear on the gears.

Or so it is said.

Gabrovonians entertain in the dark, it is also said, since there's no reason to pay for light just to talk.

Besides, in the dark you can take your pants off to save wear on the seat. And guests have a harder time finding the food.

Most could probably still find their knives, since tradition says Gabrovonians heat them so guests can't eat the butter.

Renowned through Bulgaria as about the stingiest town there ever was, Gabrovo was founded by a mountain blacksmith named Racho.

Gabrovo is now an industrial center of 50,000 people, and it keeps a statue of Racho on a scraggly island in the river that runs through town. It saves, they say, more valuable space on the banks.

The jokes, tall tales and lies people tell about Gabrovo have history behind them, says Stefan Furtonov, director of Gabrovo's new humor museum. "People here have a long tradition of being very industrious," he says. "But the region has never been generous and one had to be frugal."

In the 19th Century, Gabrovo craftsmen roamed Russia, Wallachia, Moldavia and parts of the Austro-Hungarian empire selling their goods.

They cooked communal stews on their travels, legend says, but each man tied a colored chip to his own piece of meat.

Their town in Bulgaria's central mountains began, it is alleged, with houses smaller on the bottom than on the top, to save on taxes.

Gabrovonian renters always try to find an apartment with a window near a lamppost. And the story is told of the man who went hunting for cheap lodging because he couldn't afford a room in his own house.

Still, the Gabrovonians also acquired a reputation for hospitality. Strangers were welcomed and told to bring along a piglet "or at least a goose" so their hosts could recognize them at the station.

Not much in Gabrovo escapes ridicule.

Gabrovonians, it is said, buy just one wedding ring. And take turns wearing it.

Dead Gabrovonians, the untruth goes, are buried standing up. Under used tombstones. Live Gabrovonians use their cemetery plots to grow potatoes.

Though the city is renowned for its electric trucks, men's shoes and computers, all Bulgarians know that narrow trousers, short skirts, and the glider were invented in Gabrovo.

Gabrovonians allegedly drop cats down their chimneys to save the expense of a chimney sweep, and cut off the cats' tails so the door can be shut sooner when they go outside in the winter.

Gabrovonian cats appear intact, but short-tailed felines have become the trademark of the town's biennial humor festivals and the seven-year-old museum, the House of Humor and Satire.

"We wanted to avoid the word museum because it sounds so dead and dry," says Fortonov.

Located in a renovated fur-processing plant, the museum is a sleekly designed bright and roomy home for permanent and rotating displays of humor in cartoons, writing, film, theater, even sculpture.

It has works of some 3,500 artists from about 80 countries and Fortounov says he is trying, without much success, to get more Americans to contribute to the museum, where New Yorker cartoons share showcases with Mark Twain, Kurt Vonnegut and Woody Allen.

"Not everyone believes us," he says. "They don't know how their work will be displayed, how it will be used."

The museum sends researchers out into the countryside with tape recorders to gather jokes. It has asked village officials around the country for the names of the best local joke tellers.

Gabrovo's own city hall once posted a five-leva reward for any new Gabrovo jokes, Fortounov says.

"They were able to determine that all the jokes were variations of old ones," he says. "And it didn't cost them a thing."

Nurse Murdered, Set On Fire

NEW YORK (AP) — A convicted murderer on parole was sought Saturday in the death of a 25-year-old New Jersey nurse who was shot, stripped and set afire in an abandoned tenement. Police said witnesses had seen her dragged to the site.

Police said witnesses identified the suspect, identified as Nathaniel Giles, 32, of New York, from several photographs.

The body of Bonnie Bush, of Fairview, N.J., was found Friday on the third floor of a building on Manhattan's Upper West Side. She had been shot twice in the head.

Detective Richard Serpa said investigators were working on the possibility that Giles and Miss Bush knew each other.

Miss Bush was apparently on her way to a seminar at Mount Sinai Hospital, where she had been appointed senior clinical nurse in the obstetrics ward just three weeks ago, police said, when witnesses reported that they saw a "tall black man with a gun" dragging a woman into the building by her hair just before the body was found.

They quoted her as screaming: "Somebody, help me!"

The police Internal Affairs Division was investigating a report that a security guard near the scene saw a woman being dragged from a car and told nearby police, who failed to act.

Police said Giles was released on parole about three months ago after serving 14 years of a 20-year-to-life sentence for a murder.

That's No Lady; That's A Coal Mine Owner

By JULES LOH
AP Special Correspondent

HAY GULCH, Colo. (AP) — A small embroidery hangs on Violet Smith's kitchen wall: a grandmotherly touch. It is a nosegay of wild flowers and the injunction: "Love never faileth."

"Hell no, kid, I ain't going soft," the lady reassured. "Had to kick a rear end just the other day. Some s.o.b. raised his damn voice at me. Kicked him right out the door.

"But yeah, kid, I guess I'm slowing down. Hell, I'm 73."

Violet Smith, as admirers of rugged individualism and undeleted expletives may recall, is the salty lady who chased a succession of federal coal mine inspectors off her property several years ago and bloodied a few noses in the process.

The report at the time was that she stood out front with a shotgun. Violet hastens to correct that impression.

"I never drew my gun. I run 'em off with a pick handle once, and a two-by-four, and, oh yeah, I chased one little s.o.b. with a butcher knife. But I never drew my gun."

Violet Smith, incidentally, does not abbreviate s.o.b.s.

Her gentlest reference to mine inspectors is unprintable and her dispute with them arose when they endeavored to enforce mine safety rules which, Violet allows, were written by jackasses and anyhow couldn't apply to the modest coal mine she and her husband and a few occasional hired hands have operated without federal advice since 1936.

"They wanted me to do things like build a bathhouse next to the mine, for God's sake. My house is next to the mine. What the hell do I need with a bathhouse?"

Quite. The added irony is that the state, that very year, had presented her with a citation: not one major accident or injury since the mine opened. That record still stands.

So does her sign. It says: "No inspectors allowed on this property. This is our property. We are capable of minding our own business. King Coal Mine. This way please."

"They haven't come back, so I guess I won. The guy with the subpoenas hasn't come back either. I told him to cram 'em.

"The top dog in Washington never did come down. His name was Rogers Morton. He phoned me, said I would obey his rules if he had to come out here himself. I told him to get his rear end on out here if he thought he was big enough."

Violet Smith, 6 feet tall, 185 pounds, also does not say rear end.

Well, Morton and his men should have known. Violet Smith hasn't taken guff from anybody since the day she packed her clothes in a sack and ran away from home at age 13.

When her cousin tried to fetch her, she leveled a pistol at him and told him to get lost. Waiting tables, a masher got fresh and she scalded him with coffee. Her refusal of favors to another man included smashing his windshield with a tire iron so he would not be mistaken. Don't cross Violet Smith.

"Hell, kid, them feds have never scared me.

"One time when I was running a little grocery store in Durango an internal revenue agent came in and said I hadn't paid my taxes. I had. I flattened the s.o.b. with my fist and kicked his rear end out the door."

Mob Driven From U.S. Consulate

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — About 1,000 persons opposed to the rule of Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in Iran tried to storm the U.S. Consulate here Saturday but police drove them from the front gate with water cannons.

At least 200 police and protesters were injured in several hours of rioting around the consulate and in the university district several blocks away, authorities said.

The fighting broke out after 7,000 to 8,000 Iranians, Turks and West Germans had marched through downtown Frankfurt to voice opposition to the shah's government and to West German and U.S. support for the Iranian ruler.

The march, which had been sanctioned by Frankfurt city authorities after Iranian organizers had promised it would be orderly, suddenly turned violent.

One thousand protesters — roughly half of them German and half foreigners — broke away from the main group and ran to the consulate, a half-mile from downtown, a police spokesman said.

Seventy policemen manning steel barriers on the streets in front of the building were injured in a hail of cobblestones as the rioters tried to charge the building, officials aid. Most had to be taken away in ambulances for treatment of bruises and abrasions.

Several hundred riot police reinforcements then managed to drive the protesters away from the front of the multi-story steel-and-glass building using nightsticks and jets of water laced with tear gas spraved by armored water cannons.

"There was no damage done at the consulate," said U.S. spokesman William Pugh. "They didn't get closer than 100 yards to the building."

The fighting spread over a wide area of the university district several blocks from the consulate. Autos were burned, telephone booths demolished, office windows smashed and a police precinct building stoned.

"Of several hundred police at the scene, hardly any escaped injury," Frankfurt Police Chief Knut Mueller told a news conference. Later, the police revised the estimate downward to "about 200" police and demonstrators injured in all.

Pugh said German officials told him there had been 113 police and at least 250 demonstrators injured. He said police had detained 32 persons and were still holding 12 of them.

Cpl. Scott Zelanka, a U.S. Marine guard on duty in the consulate, said the water cannon decided the battle, although numerous police were injured in the melee.

"Ambulances came and took away injured police," Zelanka, 21, of Hollywood, Fla., told The Associated Press by telephone. "I can see some police outside now limping around."

The marchers shouted anti-shah and anti-American slogans and denounced Iranian-West German cooperation while they paraded through the business district.

At a news conference, Mueller singled out the Frankfurt University student government, ASTA, for allegedly making inflammatory statements to spark the violence. He said a handbill distributed by the leftist-dominated student government had urged marchers to "make this a memorable Saturday, not only through a large number of demonstrators."

The Iranian Students Conferation of West Germany, the march organizers, issued a statement claiming it had not sought backing from ASTA. Mueller said the confederation's parade marshals had tried to intervene when the violence began but were powerless to control the mob.

New Zealand's Party In Power Retains Control

The count showed the moderately conservative National Party with 49 seats, the opposition Labor Party headed by Bill Rowling with 42, and the Social Credit Party with one seat.

Before the election, the National Party had 53 seats, Labor 31, Social Credit one and independents two. Since Parliament was dissolved in October for the campaign, five new seats were created for a total of 92.

Recounts are likely in seven districts where the winner won by fewer than 300 votes. Of these, four were won by National and three by Labor.

There was a swing of 4.5 percent of the popular vote in favor of Labor, more than public opinion polls had indicated. Muldoon ousted Rowling's Labor Party three years ago.

The Social Credit more than doubled its vote of three years ago and edged Labor out of second place in a half-dozen districts. This trend, which had been predicted, was seen as a protest vote against the government.

Muldoon and Rowling kept their seats by comfortable majorities, but two Cabinet members were defeated.

During the campaign Rowling accused Muldoon's party of failing to stop or reverse the rise in New Zealand's foreign debt and of being responsible for the highest unemployment rates here since the Depression of the 1930s.

In 1977, Pennsylvania led all the states with a total of 960 days of thoroughbred racing on various tracks.

Substandard Housing Recommended Removed

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Instead, the substandard structures are kept from the shadow of giant grain elevators nearby.

But this year may bring some sunshine back to residents of the narrow strip of houses sandwiched between the city cemetery and a sewage treatment plant — this year residents may get their ticket out of the slum.

The addition has been recommended for $1.8 million in Community Development funds to begin the five-year, $2.2 million relocation and total clearance of the area.

The city staff recommendation will be considered by the Community Development Advisory Committee when it convenes on Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. to formulate its recommendation to the Lubbock City Council.

For years the city and the Urban Renewal Agency have resisted spending money on Phyllis Wheatley, believing it would not be "cost effective."

However, as the frustration of the trapped residents grew and it became apparent no federal funds to clear the area were forthcoming, it was plain something would have to be done.

Of the $3.8 million the city will receive for 1979-80, $2.4 million or 63 percent will go for rehabilitation. Arnett-Benson is recommended for the largest amount — $643,877 — during the year.

Rehabilitation projects are recommended for 55 percent of the $3.3 million the city expects to receive for 1980-81 and for 38 percent of the $3.3 million the city should be allocated for 1981-82.

Parks projects recommended for funding the first year total $154,000. They include the development of the area around the Manicapelli house on the banks of the Canyon Lakes, the renovation of an East Broadway party house also on the banks of the Canyon Lakes and paving and parking at Rogers Community Center and Copper Rawlings Community Center.

Handicapped citizens of Lubbock would benefit from curb and ramp revisions in the city, as well as a feasibility study on handicapped living facilities in Lubbock.

The city's hottest fire station, located at Third Street and University Avenue, would get a face-lift and an additional fire truck if the city staff recommendations are adopted.

Fire Chief Tom Foster said the station, built in 1949, has only one shower stall for the nine men per shift. The pumper truck he hopes to replace with the CD funding is 25 years old.

In the second year of the three-year plan, the staff called for $296,877 funding of parks projects. Four parks would get new irrigation systems, the George Woods Community Center would be renovated and land adjacent to Canyon Lake No. 6 would be purchased and developed with the recommended funds.

A second day care center in Arnett-Benson is recommended for $250,000 in CD funds and the renovation of an emergency shelter for battered women is recommended for [illegible]

The recommendations follow the funding priorities enunciated by the 320 persons who attended neighborhood CD meetings recently. They named housing rehabilitation as the first priority, followed by sidewalks, street improvements, code enforcement and traffic control.

Blacks Plan Counter-Rally Against KKK

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Despite pleas from Mayor Ernest Morial, black activists say they will counter-demonstrate at a planned Ku Klux Klan march on Sunday and police said they would be prepared for any clashes between the groups.

About 100 robed Klansmen, meeting here, plan to parade from the French Quarter to Liberty Monument, site of a Reconstruction-era battle between white supremists and police. The black Committee for Accountable Police, which alleges police brutality, said it would hold an "educational rally" at the statue and await the Klan's arrival.

Morial, the city's first black mayor, had asked blacks last week to devote their energies to something better than counter-demonstration.

Police Superintendent James Parsons said he would have enough police on hand to maintain order.

The Liberty Monument was erected to commemorate a confrontation that took place Sept. 14, 1874. About 400 members of the White League and a citizens militia fought a 15-minute pitched battle with the Reconstruction Era's Metropolitan Police.

It was a bloody prelude to the end of the Reconstruction period imposed on the South after it lost the Civil War.

Figures vary, but by the best accounts 21 White Leaguers were killed and 19 wounded. The Metropolitan Police had 11 killed and 60 wounded before breaking into wild flight.

After the battle, the White League took over the statehouse, then in New Orleans, only to have to relinquish it a week later when President U.S. Grant moved in more federal troops and the Navy.

Originally, the only inscription on the statute was the names of the dead. But in 1932 the Liberty Monument Commission added an inscription that said in part, "... the national election in November 1876 recognized white supremacy and gave us our state."

In 1974, shortly before a convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the city added a plaque which said the inscriptions "are contrary to the philosophy and beliefs of present day New Orleans."

Normally, a KKK march attracts little notice. This one happened to coincide with the Bayou Classic football game, matching the nation's biggest black schools, Southern and Grambling.

Police Pursue Girl Reporter After Robbery

The sweater, it seemed, completed the picture for police, who were looking for a young woman with curly brown hair in the robbery of the First Federal Savings and Loan office here Friday.

The bank robbery suspect, who made off with $1,500, also wore a striped sweater.

Miss Austin is 22, and has curly brown hair. But she was at work Friday as a reporter for radio station WTAN of Clearwater.

She was on her way to a house fire with program director Roger Shulman when police arrived at the radio station.

"As we pulled away," Shulman said later, "five or six policemen burst into the [illegible] asking where the girl with the curly [illegible] was."

Miss Austin was covering the fire when a detective approached, saying, "I have to read you your rights."

"I was astounded," she said later. "I was laughing. When he started talking about bank robberies I got really upset."

"What I'm trying to figure out now is how to get home," she said. "I know they're going to stop me all the way home."

Election Winners Add To GOP Governor Rolls

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Buoyed by the strong showing of GOP gubernatorial candidates this fall, the Republican Governors Association is convening in this restored colonial capital with its roster of state chief executives 50 percent larger than last year's.

The conference which begins Sunday is attracting more attention and drawing more national party luminaries than any Republican governors' meeting in years. The agenda includes Senate Minority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee, House Minority Leader John Rhodes of Arizona and Bill Brock, the GOP chairman.

Republicans now claim only 18 of the 50 governorships, which brings their ranks roughly into the same underdog proportions the party holds in Congress. The congressional situation was improved only slightly in the Nov. 7 elections.

However, the net gain of six governors, including some in big states and Democratic strongholds, was one of the high points of 1978 for a party that has been struggling ever since the Watergate scandal forced the resignation of its president, Richard M. Nixon.

And the electoral victories on the state level represent the area in which Brock has been placing his emphasis since he took command of the GOP at its low-water mark two years ago.

The Republican National Committee gave $500,000 to gubernatorial candidates this year, not to mention an extensive effort aimed at recruiting attractive candidates and training them to run.

But the larger — though less noticeable effort — was at the lower level of the state legislatures, where the national party spent $2 million, half in cash and half in support activities. This financial aid was accompanied by an unprecedented candidate recruitment campaign.

As a result, as of the latest count, the GOP picked up 201 new seats in state legislatures. Including off-year and special elections since 1976, the net gain is better than 300.

Although the counting, recounting and official canvass of votes continues, the Republicans expect to control 10 more state legislatures, come January.

This is a dramatic shift in focus as well as strength for the Republican Party, whose recent history has concentrated on the presidency, often to the neglect of lower offices.

"In every single election since 1966, we have lost ground at the state level," Brock said in an interview. "That's just devastating to a party. And now we have turned that around, and that has just enormous significance."

One reason it's important is that some of the governors and legislators elected this year will be around when the states reapportion their own houses and congressional seats after the 1980 census.

Continued Democratic dominance of the kind that has characterized state-level politics in recent years could see the GOP gerrymandered out of business, Brock said.

Another important consequence of the GOP resurgence at the state level is the direction the party is likely to take in the 1980 presidential election.

Most of the 300 or more new grassroots or state-level Republicans just elected were recruited by adherents to the Brock philosophy of moderating and broadening the base of the party.

No better example can be found than in the fact that of the net gain of 65 newly-elected women in state legislatures, 63 were women recruited in Brock's "outreach" program. In addition, there was a significant improvement in the GOP share of the black vote.

"These are new, very positive and creative people," Brock said of the GOP troops recently elected to office, "and they are going to be the leadership of the future.

"I think we've set a new kind of foundation," he said. "It's more positive and it's going to lead us in a new direction."

Agent's Wife Has Detective Check Body

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — The wife of John A. Paisley has hired a Washington lawyer and a private investigator to verify that the body identified as that of the former CIA official was really his, the Wilmington News-Journal reported Sunday.

Maryann Paisley says she believes it's possible that her estranged husband may still be alive, the copyright story said.

"Bringing all this up may not be in my financial interest, but I have to live with myself five years from now," Mrs. Paisley said.

Dale Peterson, a CIA spokesman, said the agency "has no reason to doubt that Paisley is dead." He said Mrs. Paisley's claim for death benefits has been forwarded to the Civil Service Commission for processing.

The 55-year-old former deputy director of strategic research at the CIA was last seen alive last Sept. 24, when he sailed out of Lusby, Md. The next day, his sloop, Brillig, ran ashore in Chesapeake Bay.

The body later identified as that of Paisley's was found floating in the bay near Lusby on Oct. 1. Two diving belts were strapped around the body and there was a gunshot wound in the head.

Maryland state police investigated the death and concluded that it was probably self-inflicted. Dr. Russell K. Fisher, the Maryland state medical examiner, has listed the cause of death as undetermined but said he agreed with the finding of a probable suicide.

Fisher identified the body as Paisley's on the basis of fingerprints furnished by the CIA and dental records.

Paisley, who retired in 1974, still worked for the agency as a consultant at the time of his death.

Mrs. Paisley said she hired attorney Bernard Fensterwald — an old family friend — and investigator Kenneth Smith because of the CIA's involvement in the identification of the body and because of "the lies the CIA told about John."

Mrs. Paisley, who didn't elaborate on what she meant by CIA "lies," said she told Fensterwald and Smith to "find out what the hell happened to my husband."

Sentencing Set For Convicted Ex-CIA Clerk

HAMMOND, Ind. (AP) — William Kampiles, the former CIA clerk who was convicted of selling a top-secret satellite manual to the Russians, will be sentenced Dec. 22 in federal court here.

U.S. District Judge Phil McNagny, who presided over the eight-day trial, set sentencing for the 23-year-old Chicago native on Friday. The maximum sentence Kampiles could receive is life in prison. His attorney said the conviction would be appealed.

Since his arrest in August in Munster, Ind., Kampiles has been held in the Metropolitan Correctional Center in nearby Chicago. Bond remains at $100,000.

The Hammond Times, quoting "highly placed Justice Department sources" in Washington, reported Friday that Kampiles is suspected of having taken other classified documents from CIA headquarters in Virginia.

According to the Times' sources, FBI agents searched the Munster apartment that Kampiles had shared for seven weeks with his lifelong friend, Fuzzy Felecos. The search, however, failed to turn up any classified material, the newspaper said.

The government would not reveal when the search took place, nor what was sought. Felecos, a Munster policeman, said he found a copy of a search warrant in the apartment, but does not recall when he found it, the newspaper said. Felecos still lives in the apartment.

Kampiles, a graduate of Indiana University in Bloomington, was convicted Nov. 17 on four espionage-related charges and two counts of theft. The government said he received $3,000 last February from a Soviet agent in Athens for a technical manual on the KH-11 satellite.

Kampiles worked from March to November 1977 as a watch officer in the operations center of the CIA's covert intelligence-gathering section in Langley, Va., and had access to the KH-11 manual.

Carter Staff Proposes Major Reorganizations

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's reorganization staff is preparing a proposal that would eliminate the Commerce Department and spin off its functions to other agencies, for an estimated savings to taxpayers of $30 million a year.

Also under consideration is a plan to help the U.S. Forest Service from the Agriculture Department.

The proposals, none of which have yet reached the president for his consideration, also would create a new Bureau of Natural Resources by enlarging and renaming the Interior Department.

And they would transform the present Department of Housing and Urban Development into a larger and broader agency named the Department of Economic Development.

Some reorganization advisers in the Office of Management and Budget are urging that these and other major renovations of the federal government's structure be made a top presidential priority next year, according to OMB officials who asked not to be named.

The officials stress that Carter has not yet been presented with the proposals, and that any decision on whether to seek major reorganizations is still weeks away.

Advocates point out that Carter campaigned on a promise to make the federal government more efficient by reorganizing it, and that he pledged to reduce drastically the number of federal agencies.

Although Carter has trimmed a number of relatively insignificant "advisory committees," he has actually enlarged his Cabinet, creating a new Energy Department and pressing for creation of an Education Department.

Scuttling the Commerce Department would allow the president to say he also eliminated at least one Cabinet-level department. But some staff members argue against such dramatic proposals and are pressing instead for such initiatives as Carter's civil service revision plan, which Congress passed overwhelmingly this year.

These skeptics say large-scale reorganizations generate political controversy and just shuffle boxes on an organization chart without improving the product of the agencies inside the boxes.

The proposal to dismantle Commerce is strongly opposed by its boss, Juanita Kreps, whose job would be eliminated.

OMB staff members estimate, however, that getting rid of the department would save $30 million a year in overhead expenditures, including salary and staff for the secretary.

"What do we get for that $30 million? Not very much," one official said.

Advocates of the plan picture Commerce as a collection of disparate agencies with no logical relationship to each other. "What's the weather bureau got to do with the census takers?" the official said.

Under the proposal, the Commerce Department's Economic Development Administration (EDA) would be moved to HUD, shifting its focus from housing program to job creation and renaming it the Bureau of Economic Development to reflect this shift.

The EDA administers grants and loans aimed at stimulating private jobs and public works in areas suffering high unemployment and low income.

Also, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration would be moved from Commerce and would be absorbed by a new Bureau of Natural Resources, formed from the Interior Department.

Under another plan, the Forest Service would merge with the present Bureau of Land Management (BLM) and become part of the new natural resources agency.

Advocates say the Forest Service, which manages 28 million acres of national forests, is closely related to the BLM, which administers 473 million acres of government land mainly in the West and Alaska.

The Census Bureau, presently part of the Commerce Department, could be left "free-standing" as an independent organization, one official speculated.

Reorganization staff officials say they believe eliminating the Commerce Department would cause relatively less political controversy than attempting to scuttle other agencies, such as the departments of Agriculture or Labor, which have well-organized constituencies who would fight hard to keep them.

"There aren't really very many people who would go out on a limb to keep Commerce," a reorganization staff member said.

Taking anything away from the Agriculture Department probably would draw fire from farm groups, who raised a storm of protest more than a year ago when a Senate report urged that meat and poultry inspection be moved to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Private food processing companies also have complained, for years, that meat inspection is duplicated by inspection of other kinds of foods.

But government reorganizers also have been talking for more than a year about transforming the Agriculture Department into a department of natural resources, or food, or agriculture, or food and agriculture, or something else, depending on who is talking.

No Progress Reported In Paper Strike

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Representatives of the Pulitzer Publishing Co. and striking pressmen met with a federal mediator for about five hours Saturday, but no progress was reported in the 6-day-old strike that has shut down the city's two major daily newspapers.

A spokesman said no new talks were scheduled. The company owns the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and prints the St. Louis Globe-Democrat under contract. Combined daily circulation of the two papers is more than 500,000.

The pressmen, members of Local 38 of the St. Louis Web Printing Pressmen Pressers' Union, set up pickets Monday at the Post-Dispatch after negotiations failed to produce a settlement. The pressmen and 10 other unions at the newspaper have been working without a contract since Aug. 31.

Spokesmen said a proposal by the newspaper to reduce the number of journeyman pressmen at the paper from 154 to 140 is the primary issue. A similar dispute led to an 88-day strike at two of New York City's dailies.

The St. Louis pressmen's union opposes the reduction, even though the Post-Dispatch, an afternoon paper, has said it would be accomplished through attrition and would not affect any pressmen currently working.

The federal mediator's office said representatives of nine of the other Post-Dispatch unions will meet with the Post-Dispatch and federal mediators Tuesday to discuss economic issues of their negotiations.

Those unions are not on strike, but their members are honoring the pressmen's picket lines.

About 300 Newspaper Guild members at the Globe-Democrat — primarily reporters, editors and clerical employees — have been laid off pending settlement of the Post-Dispatch strike. The Globe-Democrat is owned by the Newhouse Newspaper group.

A statement said troops had been watching the house because of suspicious activity. The dead man was identified as Patrick Duffy, 50. The IRA said he was an auxiliary member and was unarmed.

Legal Sparring To Get Heavier In Davis Trial

HOUSTON (AP) — The prosecution, with the use of audio and video tape recordings and testimony from law enforcement agencies, will attempt to weave a tighter web of evidence around Fort Worth millionaire Cullen Davis this week.

The defense apparently will renew its efforts to discredit those testifying against Davis in the solicitation-of-murder trial while laying the foundation for an argument that the Fort Worth industrialist was the victim of a frame-up by his enemies and law officers.

To date, the defense has failed to break the testimony of David McCrory, an FBI informant and former friend and employee of Davis.

Chief defense attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes jabbed, punched and exchanged verbal haymakers with McCrory last week but got nothing more than several "I don't remember" answers.

On a couple of occasions State District Judge Wallace Moore warned Haynes to speed up his cross-examination and to stop "following some rabbit trails" in his questions.

Davis, 45, is accused of soliciting the murder of Fort Worth Judge Joe Eidson, the jurist who presided over the bitter 4-year divorce trial of the millionaire and his estranged wife Priscilla.

McCrory testified he was asked by Davis to hire a hit man to eliminate the judge and at least 14 other persons who had become involved in the defendant's numerous legal problems.

Each time Haynes left a doubt as to the credibility of a witness and hinted of a frame-up, the prosection, led by Jack Strickland, came back with a counter-attack.

After McCrory, FBI special agent Joseph Gray was called to the stand and he swore that the tape recordings made of conservations between Davis and McCrory had not been doctored and were identical to the ones he first heard in late August.

When the defense hinted it might question the accuracy of the tapes, Strickland threw a counter-punch, getting permission from the judge to replay the tapes so the FBI agent could determine if any changes had been made.

This meant the jurors heard for a second time the recordings, considered the most damaging evidence against Davis.

Gray also testified how he burned three small holes in an old T-shirt and sprinkled it with catsup to set up a fake picture showing the Fort Worth judge dead from the bullets of a hitman.

After the FBI stepped into the case Eidson removed himself from the Davis divorce trial.

Haynes apparently has what he considers solid reasons for an appeal should Davis be convicted.

Judge Moore allowed the jurors to read a transcript of a tape recording that prosecutors said linked Davis to the kill-for-hire plot.

Judge Moore said he was certain he was on firm legal grounds by allowing the jurors to read the transcript while listening to the scratchy and at times inaudible tape. He offered defense lawyers the chance to give the jury their own transcript, but they declined.

Haynes said two earlier rulings in Texas statecourts had denied the use of transcripts.

And another state district judge, after a brief conversation with Haynes, said, "Racehorse thinks he has a trial error."

Satellite To Aid Weather Monitors

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Oreanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) is operating Tiros-N, the first in a new series of environmental monitoring satellites aimed at providing more accurate information from outer space to meteorologists and other scientists.

The satellite was launched Oct. 13 by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, but its operational control was taken over last week by NOAA.

The spacecraft is carrying sensing instruments that represent major technological advances, the government says.

Experts Pondering Christmas Profit Scales

NEW YORK (AP) — At the official start of the best retail sales season, experts are divided on how profitable this Christmas shopping season will be.

But this year, analysts say, a variety of factors make trends unusually difficult to project.

"I think everybody is up in the air about Christmas," says Suzanne Holmes, a retail analyst at Loeb Rhoades Hornblower & Co. She notes that retailers, with some exceptions, are paring back on inventory increases.

After three years of strong Christmas sales, she believes industry sales in the final quarter this year will slow, along with the general slowing of the economy.

The investment firm projects that retail sales, adjusted for inflation, in the quarter including the Christmas season will increase about 2 percent above the level of 1977, far less than the 9 percent jump a year earlier.

Despite increases in prices and projections for a slower economy, recent government reports also indicate a substantial rise in personal income and an apparent willingness of consumers to continue buying and going into debt to do so.

But whether reports based on October and November figures will hold true for December is questionable. Economists at J. Henry Schroder Bank & Trust Co. note that consumer installment credit has continued to increase, but the rate of gain has slowed from 1.2 percent in August and September to 1.0 percent in the week of Oct. 11 and 0.6 percent during the week of Nov. 11. "If in fact we are seeing a meaningful trend, it should indicate some softening in the outlook for consumer spending," the Schroder Report notes.

Leo J. Shapiro & Associates, a research firm in Chicago, which annually conducts monthly surveys of Christmas spending plans, says its latest results show that people are planning to spend more than ever on Christmas shopping. Its survey of 5,000 people in October showed that 29 percent planned to spend more this year than last, up from 25 percent who gave that response in a year earlier survey.

Still, Leo Shapiro notes than all but 9 percent of those who said they planned to spend more explained it was because of higher prices, not increased quantities of purchases.

Thirty-five percent of those polled said they planned to spend less this year than last, down from 36 percent last year.

But from past years' experience, Shapiro notes that shopping plans often do change substantially as shoppers move from thinking to looking to buying.

Shapiro believes that consumers, wary of higher prices and perhaps a possible economic slowdown, are likely to be careful money managers this year.

"The consumer is playing it very cool ... They are under no real pressure to buy but they are under no real pressure not to buy. It is easier for the consumer to make quick decisions. They have more flexibility than the retailer," he said.

In business developments this past week:

—The cost of borrowing continued to rise. Major banks increased their prime lending rate from 11 percent to 11 1/2 percent — the 14th time this year the prime has been raised. And there were indications the Federal Reserve Board had further tightened the rate it charges member banks for loans. The Fed has been squeezing credit in an effort to slow the economy and reduce upward pressure on prices.

Stock Market Gains Moderate During Week

By J.L. HUTCHESON
Schneider, Bernet & Hickman, Inc.

The stock market held its own this week and managed to post moderate gains from the previous week's trading. Trading was quiet in pre-and post-holiday sessions. Many analysts said that the most traders and investors were hesitant about making commitments during this holiday week.

Many analysts are looking for the market to form a short-term bottom in the 780 to 810 area. They maintain that given the probability that the economy is in a marked slowdown, the stage is being set for peaking of short-term interest rates by year's end. Although some analysts look for a resumption in the interest rate rise sometime after the first quarter of next year, any sign that the interest rate rise might abate earlier could trigger a broad-based rally, particularly with the amount of cash that is sitting on the sidelines.

Traders point to the loss of liquidity in the market as having created a "technical vacuum" which will exist on the upside as it has on the downside. Stocks that have plummeted on low volume will not need much buying interest to reverse the process, once any buying has begun.

Analysts continue to perceive the institutional cash reserves are at record levels, with some placing the total private pension-fund equity cash reserves as high as $8 to $10 billion. They feel that with this much cash ready to invest in equities, the stage is certainly set for a strong rally, but much will continue to depend on the inflation rate and the direction of interest rates.

Economists are divided at this time over the direction the economy will follow, but most feel that there is a 50-50 probability that the economy will enter a recession by mid-1979 with interest rates climbing to 12 percent in 1979's second quarter. Many are forecasting interest rates as high as 14 percent in the coming year.

Higher interest rates and an economic slowdown will reduce the need for mandatory wage and price controls, which are always bad for the stock market. The Carter administration continues to maintain that it will not impose wage and price controls, but this is the same statement that has come from Washington before, just prior to imposing such standards.

Mart Performs Sluggishly

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market appears to have returned to some semblance of normalcy after the huge-volume days and violent price swings that have characterized trading in the past several months.

Things have settled down almost to the point of boredom on Wall Street, which last week turned in one of its slowest weeks in months — aided, no doubt, by extended Thanksgiving vacations.

Volume Wednesday just managed to break 20 million shares, and Friday didn't even get that far, with only 14.50 million shares changing hands. The average day during the week saw volume of just 19.95 million shares, the slowest week since February.

The Dow Jones industrial average didn't generate much momentum either, ending the week at 810.12 — a net gain of 12.39, most of which came Monday.

Other indexes were also quiet, compared to their recent volatility. The New York Stock Exchange common stock composite index added .90 to finish at 53.44, and the American Stock Exchange's market value index rose 5.21 to 148.50.

Does all this mean that the stock market's roller-coaster ride has come to an end?

For the time being, yes, analysts say, while the market regroups.

"At this stage, it is now probable that a series of minor swings in a trading range perhaps between 790-830 (for the Dow industrials) will occur while a base of support is built in order to launch a solid recovery," said analyst Charles Jensen in his market letter for MKI Securities Corp.

"It is likely that into the middle of December, at least, most equities will make little progress in either direction, although any surprises should be on the upside," he said. "Once the foundation is laid, an intermediate recovery lasting well into the first quarter of 1979 could commence."

Analysts looking for psychological reasons to explain the market's stability point to resistance in the Dow Jones at about the 780-point level, an apparent barrier in the Dow Jones transportation average at 210 and stabilization of the number of stocks reaching new highs and lows among other factors.

Some analysts, though, are worried that continued light volume and a lack of participation by many issues could be detrimental to chances of a recovery in late December and early 1979.

City Leaders To Preview 1980 Carter Budget

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The nation's city officials, working in a fiscal straightjacket imposed by citizen tax-cut demands, gather this week to gauge the Carter administration's 1980 budget strategy.

Word that Carter wants to cut between $18 billion and $30 billion from the $500 billion federal budget has "lit up our phones like a carry-out pizza place," says one White House urban aide who asked to remain anonymous. "Everyone assumes that the cities are No. 1 on the hit list."

For good reason. White House budget officials are feverishly searching for budget targets, and aid to cities and states comprises a huge and vulnerable bloc of federal money.

For example, the mayors may face an uphill struggle to win full funding for transit and employment programs (both $11 billion items) authorized earlier this year. And a sure victim of the spending-cut effort is comprehensive welfare reform, a key goal of state and city officials.

Carter aides have refused to publicly discuss preparations on the new fiscal 1980 budget, which will go into effect next Oct. 1. The budget is being worked over at the department level, but speculation will surely pervade the "Congress of Cities," the annual meeting of the National League of Cities. Carter will address the group on Monday.

The congress, which runs through Wednesday, is expected to attract 3,300 delegates — mayors and city council members — a surprisingly big crowd considering local pressures to pare spending on non-essential activities.

"People understand that they have to rely on meetings like this to grapple with Washington's spreading impact on the cities," says Alan Beals, who runs the league headquarters a block from the White House. He noted that many California officials, with Proposition 13 tax cuts exerting day-to-day spending limits, are not attending the congress.

"People are here to discuss strategy, to compare notes. The cities have a huge, growing stake in federal programs," said Beals.

Washington provides 33 percent of the revenues spent each year by state and local governments — double the 16.5 percent share recorded in 1963. Grants to state and local governments total $80 billion. This represents a big chunk of all "discretionary" federal spending — spending over which Congress has control, unlike Social Security costs which are locked in by previous congressional action.

Moving into 1979, federal aid is especially crucial for the cities for three reasons: tax-cut movements that limit budget flexibility at home, efforts to balance the federal budget in Washington, and the specter of a new recession sometime in the next 12 months.

Cities generally rely on local property taxes for their basic revenue, and inflation has sent property taxes through the roof in some areas where citizens will approve no further tax hikes.

Meantime, federal dollars, so important at pulling the cities through the 1974-75 recession, appears to be waning.

The Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) public service jobs program, built up to 725,000 jobs in 1976 to help fuel the nation's economic recovery, was cut back to 660,000 jobs in October. And it will be in jeopardy again when the 96th Congress begins to consider Carter's new budget plan for fiscal 1980.

Though the old Congress has authorized 660,000 jobs, it is up to the new Congress to appropriate the necessary funds. If Carter opposes the appropriation, in part or in full, CETA could have a rough ride through Capitol Hill.

New provisions of the CETA bill are meant to wean cities from their dependency on the federal manpower program, but it remains true that some cities pay up to one-third of their workforce off the CETA payroll.

All this against the backdrop of a possible recession. For cities, an economic downturn spells increased unemployment and declining tax revenues.

EFFIGY OF SHAH — Demonstrators drag an effigy of the Shah through downtown Frankfurt today during a protest demonstration agains the Iranian leader. 7,000 people took part in the demonstration that later erupted in violence, causing hundreds of persons to be injured (AP Laserphoto)

Central Bank Of Iran Workers Go On Strike

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — White-collar workers at Iran's central bank, nerve center of this strife-torn country's monetary system, went on strike Saturday demanding that the military government be removed within a week. New anti-shah violence was reported in Tehran and the provinces.

The walkout appeared to be the first in a general strike called for by Moslem religious leaders and the National Front, a key political group in the opposition to Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. The general strike was set for Sunday.

The official Pars news agency, meanwhile, said rioters bombed the government arts and culture center in the Persian Gulf town of Bushehr and set fire to other buildings.

In downtown Tehran, 200 refinery workers stormed the headquarters of the state-run National Iranian Oil Co. protesting the arrest of leaders of a 15-day strike that crippled Iran's vital oil industry earlier this month. Troops fired shots to disperse the protesters but no casualties were reported. Across town, agents of SAVAK, the shah's secret police, stormed the offices of the National Association of Lawyers to rip down anti-shah posters.

No casualties were reported in these incidents. But in Frankfurt, West Germany, authorities reported at least 200 policemen and protesters were injured when anti-shah demonstrators tried to storm the U.S. Consulate and were driven back by police firing water cannons.

The clash occurred after an estimated 7,000 Iranian, Turkish and West German demonstrators marched through the city. The United States has steadfastly supported the shah during the current political crisis in Iran.

Thousands of civil servants said Saturday they will join the general strike Sunday, quitting work to bring government machinery to a halt. Tehran's teeming bazaar, launching pad for many anti-shah protests, also began closing down Saturday.

The looming strikes rekindled faltering opposition to the 59-year-old shah and the government under Gen. Gholam Reza Azhari, who the monarch appointed Nov. 6 to restore order after 10 months of bloody protests led by his political foes and Moslem religious leaders. Workers in many industries and government offices staged strikes in September and October to back opposition demands.

Official sources said the closure of the central bank would seriously impair government functions and state-run industries. The bank controls payments to government workers, state contracts and most official business.

The bank workers demanded that the military government resign by next Saturday, start of the Moslem holy month of Muharram, a period of mourning that officials fear will bring renewed violence to Iran.

A high-ranking Iranian army officer warned that the imperial army will "mercilessly" quell any street protests, underlining Azhari's determination to keep the lid on the smoldering anti-shah opposition.

"The rioting, arson and looting we saw in early November will not be allowed to take place next month," the officer said. "While the utmost endeavor will be made to avoid the use of arms, if tear gas and other measures do not prove to be enough and demonstrators disobey orders, firearms will definitely be used to protect life and property."

The political violence that began early this year has claimed as many as 2,000 lives.

Besides demanding the ouster of the military government, the central bank strike committee, representing 600 workers, also called for the return from exile in Paris of Ayatullah Ruhollah Khomainti, religious leader of Iran's 32 million Shiite Moslems and symbol of the anti-shah movement, for the removal of press censorship, and for the release of hundreds of persons arrested since martial law was imposed Sept. 8.

Deadline For Uprising Passes Without Incident

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — A 36-hour deadline for the start of a Sandinista guerrilla offensive expired Saturday with embattled President Anastasio Somoza predicting the rebels would fail to oust him.

"Whatever the guerrillas do won't be successful," Somoza told reporters at a noon news conference in his tightly guarded presidential compound in Managua known as "The Bunker."

"It's only propaganda," he said of the Sandinista warning issued Thursday that "in 36 hours all the people of Nicaragua will rise up." The warning mentioned no specific hour, but the latest it could have meant was noon Saturday.

There was no word of any major guerrilla attacks, though some bombings and gunfire shook Managua and some provincial cities after a U.S.-proposed peace plan was rejected by Somoza and his opponents Friday night.

A Managua radio report said at least one civilian was killed by the gunfire. The report was not immediately confirmed by government officials.

Though most observers had discounted the 36-hour deadline as part of a Sandinista psychological campaign, the rejection of the U.S. peace proposal did increase tension in the Central American nation.

Most Nicaraguans feared the breakdown of the peace efforts would signal the start of another civil war, like the one in September that killed more than 1,500 people, mostly civilians.

But sources close to the envoys from the United States, Guatemala and the Dominican Republic trying to mediate a peaceful settlement between Somoza and his opponents said they would try to revive the effort.

"We are certainly not packing our bags," one high-ranking diplomatic source said.

Somoza restated to reporters that the U.S. proposal — a plebiscite on whether he should quit — was unconstitutional and reaffirmed his own offer of a plebiscite on whether to allow the opposition to share power in his government.

Somoza also denied reports he has launched an emergecy weapons-buying campaign for his 8,100-man National Guard, but admitted he has been buying Israeli small arms to replace the Guard's World War II-vintage M-1 rifles.

Airlift Of Jonestown Bodies Continues

DOVER AIR FORCE BASE, Del. (AP) — The stench of death blew across the runway at this Air Force base Saturday as volunteers unloaded the bodies of hundreds of religious cultists from the Guyanese jungle.

With the death count from the mass suicide-killings a week ago at Peoples Temple doubled and then revised upward again to more than 900, a military spokesman said it would take much longer than the original estimate of two to three weeks to identify, clean and embalm all the bodies.

A C-141 cargo plane, the seventh flight on the 3,000-mile airlift, landed on a gray, blustery morning in an isolated area of the base. Inside were packed the 110 bodies in 108 aluminum cases, crammed four-high and three-abreast. Two cases carried two children each.

An eighth flight carrying 197 bodies in 87 cases arrived Saturday night, bringing the total to 729. A crew member said some cases contained the bodies of as many as five infants and children.

A Pentagon spokesman, Army Maj. Brigham Shuler, said Saturday night that 323 bodies had been fingerprinted and five positively identified by their prints, including that of the cult's leader, the Rev. Jim Jones. He refused to release the other names because relatives had not been notified.

State Department lawyer Michael White said the government will fly survivors of the mass suicide-slayings to Charleston, S.C., after Guyanese officials are finished questioning them in their investigation of the tragedy, which occurred after Rep. Leo Ryan, D-Calif., three American newsmen and a cult member were killed in an ambush at an airstrip in Guyana.

State Department spokeswoman Mary Anne Baxter in Washington said there were 82 survivors.

Saturday's flights exceeded the earlier cargo limit of 81 cases because of "the enormity of the task that lies ahead," Shuler said.

As the cases were rolled onto two flatbed trucks, the smell of putrid flesh, which lay decomposing in the tropical sun for nearly a week, blew across the runway, escaping from the vinyl body bags and casket-like cases.

"I don't know how the crews are standing it, to tell the truth," said a Lutheran chaplain, Lt. Col. Richard G. Eisemann, who offered a brief prayer before the unloading.

Reporters and photographers were kept behind a rope 60 yards away. The flatbed trucks then drove to a small, unused hangar, a half-mile away and backed in with military precision.

Other cases were stacked in a storage shed; still more, removed from the transfer cases that were sanitized and returned to South America for more bodies, lay in rented refrigerated tractor-trailer vans.

Shuler said that by Friday night five bodies were embalmed and fingerprints were taken from a total of 202 bodies by 18 FBI fingerprint experts.

Forensic pathologists, radiologists and dentists were being brought in from an Armed Forces institute in Washington to help identify the dead from medical records.

The rented vans were needed because the mortuary, a nondescript single-story building, has no refrigerators of its own.

Bodies are usually not embalmed here because military personnel who die overseas usually are embalmed before shipment back to the United States.

Although the mortuary, built in 1969 to accommodate Vietnam War casualties, is said to be the largest on the East Coast, the large-scale deaths in Jonestown clearly were taxing its facilities.

The mortuary handled 337 bodies after the jumbo jet collision at Tenerife Airport in the Canary Islands in March 1977.

Only a handful of families had arrived here by Saturday. Although the base itself is off limits to the families, facilities at the nearby Air Force golf course have been arranged to handle inquiries.

After embalming, the bodies will be wrapped in a white winding sheet, in clear plastic, and placed in a new steel coffin at government expense.

It will then be up to relatives to claim the bodies through the State Department and pay for shipment and burial.

Shuler said it would cost $300 to $400 to ship a coffin to the West Coast, plus hearse fees to the airport.

"The bodies will be weighed and will go based on standard freight costs, so a child is going to go for a lot less than a 215-pound adult," he noted.

Dixie Heroes Get Belated Recognition

VICKSBURG, Miss. (UPI) — About 1,600 soldiers who died defending this Mississippi River city during the Civil War finally will get grave markers, more than 100 years after the conflict ended.

The markers began arriving in October and are part of a goverment project to mark the graves of southerners who died in the historic Battle of Vicksburg.

The struggle for Vicksburg, won by the North, was a key battle; the victory split the Confederacy and gave the North almost complete control of the Mississippi River.

Elizabeth Taylor, of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, said the shipment of markers was expected to continue through the winter.

Yankees who fell during the bloody struggle for Vicksburg, and one stray Texan, are buried in a national cemetery operated in conjunction with the National Military Park. But the Rebels have been consigned to a three-acre plot in city cemetery.

Since the South surrendered, the only tribute to the fallen southerners in Vicksburg was a statue at the city cemetery, known locally as Soldiers' Rest.

The Ladies Confederate Memorial Cemetery Association dedicated the plot where the southerners are buried in May, 1866. But North-South relations were so strained there was no provision for individual headstones for the men in gray.

Reporter Recounts Tragedy Of Father's Death

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Associated Press San Antonio Correspondent Greg Thompson, 24, lost his father in a tragic, head-on car wreck Nov. 17 near his hometown of Paris, Texas. What follows is an account of his family's first few days of life without Father. The experience has been endured by countless families through the ages and will, regrettably, be endured by countless more.)

By GREG THOMPSON
Associated Press Writer

"Your dad's dead, Greg. He was killed in a car wreck. I'm sorry."

I'd often wondered how I would react if I ever heard those words I had always dreaded. And strangely enough, when they came all I remember feeling is very sorry for my boss, who had the awesome task of telling me.

Then, with the reporter's instincts my father had groomed for years, I wanted to know the facts — everything. Where did it happen? How? When?

It wasn't until later, when the news sunk in, that I began asking the darkness, why? It's a question I still ask. I guess I always will.

Bill H. Thompson, 49, editor of The Paris News for 14 years and director of communications for Texas Power & Light Co. of Dallas, was happier than he had ever been in his life. He had been promoted in May and had gained the respect and friendship of congressmen, legislators and top utility executives across the nation. Although he was already 43 when he joined TP&L, his destiny was a vice presidency.

Middle age danced gracefully with him. Daddy was a handsome, brilliant, witty man in superb health — just note the TP&L doctor's report now on the kitchen counter next to a stack of sympathy cards.

He no longer had to spend the long hours grinding out a daily newspaper and hustling freelance articles and photos to provide a better life — and future — than my two younger brothers and I ever had a right to expect.

My youngest brother, Todd, had reached 16 and my parents, both TP&L executives, finally were free to enjoy each other again at a time in life when many marriages wear thin. They looked forward together to vacation trips — or just to their late evening strolls through the pleasant, suburban neighborhood in Plano.

Todd had become Daddy's constant hunting, fishing and camping partner, now that my father had the time and money to do those things with him. It made me happy for them to be together. Daddy was openly thrilled about the 85 acres of Lamar County wilderness he had recently purchased "to leave something to the boys."

Although he lived near Dallas, Lamar County, in Northeast Texas, was his home and he always wanted to own a piece of it. He was headed there that Friday evening for the opening of deer season when this unending nightmare began.

Two elderly men, whom the police say were drinking heavily, were driving their rattletrap pickup truck too fast, without lights and on the wrong side of the two-lane stretch of U.S. 82 my father and I had driven maybe a zillion times.

I like to think Daddy never knew what hit him. The grinding collision was head-on and only one of the other men survived. Barely. My father was pronounced dead 20 miles away at a Paris hospital, but they tell us death was instantaneous. The deer rifles and the camera with which he hoped to photograph a trophy buck were battered. His smashed wristwatch was stopped at 6:18 p.m.

Todd, following about 20 minutes behind Daddy, came upon the horrible scene and tried to help free my father's trapped body. I pray that he'll forget that awful moment. I wish, as I've never wished for anything before, that it had been me there instead of Todd.

I was surprised that I didn't weep when I first heard the news, alone in my San Antonio apartment. I guess I was too busy trying to contact my mother, call friends and make plane reservations. My mother and brother Mark were crying only slightly when I first talked to them, matter-of-factly giving me the details. There was little bitterness in my mother's voice, just resignation.

In the confusion, it was difficult to remember the last time I was with Daddy. Then I remembered that it was nine days earlier, the day after the tight Nov. 7 elections, and we were talking politics, our favorite subject. That thought brought the first tears. They continue even as I write this.

Later that night, as I lay alone in the darkness, I was wracked by gut-wrenching sobs, of a kind I had never before experienced. There was no sleep that night and there's been precious little since.

The next three days had an unreal, foggy quality to them and even now, a week later, I find myself not believing they really happened. But there are countless little things around my father's house to remind us that those days were quite real.

The day after the accident dawned crisp and clear — perfect deer hunting weather. But we were inside a dark funeral home making arrangements and selecting a coffin.

Hundreds of my father's friends filed past his body Sunday, most of them openly weeping. One of Daddy's best friends, who had flown home a burning bomber in World War II and stood calmly a few years later as they cut his arm out of a cotton gin, broke down unashamedly. My father would have loved to see them all together, but he would have ceased their weeping with a joke.

I couldn't bear to see my father's body until just before the funeral on Monday — and then only for my mother's sake.

Daddy looked pale and peaceful, only a small chip in his eyeglasses and heavy morticians' makeup on one hand betraying the violence of his death. His face was unmarked and I thanked God for that.

But I never want to see the remains of his car.

My iron-willed, 72-year-old grandfather — who lost a leg at 22, survived a ruptured appendix at 30, brushed aside brain surgery at 71 and spit in the eye of the Great Depression — couldn't bear to see my father's body. The loss of his beloved son-in-law — the son he never had — folded him up inside. I awoke two mornings to the sound of his weeping and I think that hurt me more than anything.

It was the most crushing of a lifetime of heartaches for my father's gritty, invalid, 75-year-old mother, who always sacrificed her comfort to rear alone her two sons. Tranquilizers eased the shock, but she could not understand why the God she loved so dearly would take her oldest son.

My grief-stricken mother is showing courage I hope is coursing somewhere in my veins. I worry about the long, lonely nights she must endure, but I am thankful she has her career and no money worries. My father, always a meticulous, devoted planner, made sure of that.

There's more love and closeness in our family now, but the future still frightens me.

Hundreds of Parisians turned out on the gray, raw Monday to bury one of their own. The funeral director said there were more than 600 there, the biggest funeral he could remember staging. The congressman and the state representative showed up. There were other local dignitaries, close friends and just plain folks who had been entertained for 14 years by my father's award-winning editorial column.

"It was sure some swell funeral," as Daddy often joked about other big funerals he had attended. His obituary was sent nationwide and he was praised in a Paris News editorial. It wasn't what he would have wanted, but it was what he deserved. It made me proud.

They took my father to Evergreen Cemetery, which he had immortalized years ago in a prize-winning article entitled "The City of Sleeping People." Afterward, people again told me how much they admired him. I realized what my brothers and I must live up to. It wasn't just funeral praise; I've heard it all my life.

My father's friends exhausted just about all the elaborate words of admiration. The glowing terms march through my mind as I sit here at my father's typewriter.

My dad neither needs nor wants an elaborate eulogy. He was simply a kind, loving, unselfish and decent man — one of too few in the world today. That's about the best I can do. Daddy was always a better writer than I am and if he were here, we could polish this up a little bit. I miss him.

Authority Of Governor Over Parole Challenged

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas governors no longer should have any say in whether a prison inmate makes parole, a special legislative study committee recommended Saturday.

"In the past, governors have sort of used that role to demonstrate that particular governor's philosophy about certain types of crime," said Sen. A.R. "Babe" Schwartz, D-Galveston, a member of the special Senate interim committee studying the state parole system.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe seems to have vetoed decisions from the State Board of Pardons and Paroles involving crimes committed with weapons, Schwartz said.

The governor, who appoints the pardon board, has constitutional authority in pardon and clemency cases. Gubernatorial veto in parole decisions originates in a state law.

At an earlier meeting, the committee heard that approximately 85 percent of paroles recommended by the board are turned down by governors. An estimated 13,000 parole cases reach a governor annually.

The decision to strip governors of parole veto powers was unanimous of committee members present: Schwartz; Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, committee chairman; and lay members Leroy Melcher of Houston, with U-Totem stores; Bill LaRowe of Austin, of the Center for Correctional Services; and George Beto of Huntsville, former director of the Texas Department of Corrections and now at Sam Houston State University.

A final report of the committee's recommendations will be presented to the 66th Legislature in January.

In addition to recommending abolition of the governor's veto, the panel also suggested that parole supervision be moved from the state parole board to another agency.

The three-member parole board hears cases of inmates eligible for early release. The agency also has responsibility for keeping track of paroled prisoners.

It is unfair to make the board take the blame for what happens after a person is paroled, Schwartz said.

Although the committee agreed to spin off the supervisory functions, it differed on where to assign that responsibility. Some members favored merging parole supervision with similar probation duties. Others felt the Department of Corrections, the state's prison system, should take the job.

"I think you're asking too much of a single agency," Beto said of assigning the task to the corrections department.

"Probation operations have undergone a pretty severe change in the last two years," Jones said. "I think maybe we shouldn't disturb them yet."

The committee also voted to make the six parole commissioners equal to board members in parole matters. The commissioners are appointed independently of the board and assist in reviewing cases.

The board should be moved from Austin to Huntsville, the committee also recommended.

ROAD WORK SLATED

The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation has announced that Monday, the contractor on the project from New Deal to Abernathy portion of Interstate 27 will begin construction of a culvert across the northbound roadway just to the north of New Deal. This will necessitate restricting the northbound traffic from just north of New Deal for about one-half mile to one lane of traffic.

U.S. REP. SHIRLEY CHISHOLM

Shirley Chisholm To Speak At Tech

U.S. Rep. Shirley Chisholm, D-N.Y., the first black woman elected to Congress, will speak on "The New Thrust of Education Today" at 8:15 p.m. Thursday in the University Center Theater at Texas Tech University.

Chisholm was elected in 1974 to represent what comprises perhaps the nation's largest black ghetto, New York's 12th Congressional District. She recently was elected secretary of the House Democratic Caucus and vice-chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus.

Sometimes labeled a maverick by her colleagues, Miss Chisholm, in 1972, became the first woman from a major U.S. political party to actively run for the presidency. Although she did not receive her party's nomination during the Democratic national convention, she did receive 152 delegate votes.

The one-time school teacher is a specialist in early childhood education and child welfare. She serves on the House Education and Labor Committee and on the Select Education, Post-secondary Education and Elementary, Secondary and Vocational Education subcommittees.

In May 1973, Miss Chisholm was selected to be the first recipient of Clairol's "Woman of the Year" award for outstanding achievement in public affairs. She has been on pollster George Gallup's list of the most admired women in the world for the past five years.

Her appearance is in conjunction with the Speakers Series sponsored by Texas Tech's Cultural Events office. Tickets are available at the University Center Ticket Booth. Admission is $2 for Texas Tech students and $3 for the general public.

Hip Measurements Linked To Grades

GREENCASTLE, Ind. (UPI) — The hip measurements of college coeds may be an indication of their grade-point averages, a Depauw University computer student has discovered.

The conclusion: the bigger the hips, the better the grades.

James George, who teaches computer programming, said one of his woman students this week found a correlation between hip size and grade point average. The assigned programming project was to correlate two quantities.

George said the student asked her sorority sisters to list their grade- point averages along with bust, waist and hip measurements.

She found no correlation between the upper two measurements and grades, but the larger the hips were, the better the grades.

George declined to comment on the significance of the finding but a colleague said the coed "took her figures seriously."

Proposal Would Limit Use Of Capitol Rotunda

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Recently, the University of Texas at Austin, in one of its newsletters, quoted a Kalahari Desert Bushman's question to a field anthropologist about "this thing they call the government."

"Is it," he asked, "a piece of paper or a person?"

Talk about getting to the heart of things in a hurry.

It would be nice if there could be a quick simple answer to that query — but the more one thinks about it, the less sure is the answer.

That problem has been raised in another form by the Stae Board of Control, which has published a proposed rule restricting the use of the Capitol Rotunda and Capitol grounds to only "governmental" functions.

In the past, the Rotunda has open to a variety of uses — nearly all of which, it appears, would be banned under the proposed Board of Control regulations.

Analysis

Couples have been married there.

One troubled man leaped to his death there.

It has been the scene of performances by Greek dancers, Mexican dancers, folk dancers, square dancers and just plain old dancers.

It's been used for displaying bluebonnet paintings, and golden eagles.

High School and university choirs have sung in it — and high school cheerleaders have performed in it before state championship football and basketball games.

What a shame that all would apparently have to go.

Don't think, however, that the Board of Control is composed of Grinch-like characters who wander around looking for ways to, as the song says, put folks in jail for "having too much fun."

Actually, they're pretty nice, normal people — who generally return telephone calls promptly and come over to pressrooms to fix air conditioners and heaters, and to locate sources of noxious odors.

Most also are members of the Texas Public Employees Association — which annually has put up a Christmas tree in the Rotunda, and has come around singing carols before heading off for their holidays.

That tree, and a Nativity scene set up last year, came under attack by atheist leader Madalyn O'Hair, who filed a Federal suit (which died an unlingering death) contending that the display was unconstitutional.

There will be a Christmas tree again this year (although it won't be as large as in previous years, reportedly), which will come down before Christmas to allow a Jewish group to put up decorations for a Hanukah ceremony.

Under the Board of Control's proposed rule, to be considered Dec. 15, no "religious" or "pagan" activities would be permitted in the Rotunda.

Most Texans don't seem to have any great objections to Christmas trees. (Most of those in the Capitol haven't objected in the past, even though the big cedars dragged — literally, with ropes — into the Rotunda in recent years haven't been great news for allergy sufferers.)

But under our governmental system paper and/or people even the "Bah! Humbug!" — sayers have their rights.

Understandably, the Board of Control doesn't like being caught in the middle of controversies, and doesn't like the prospect of being sued.

Nor can there be much argument against commercial activities — which the Board has kept out successfully.

One of Texas' top attorney, arguing a case a few months back, contended the attorney general doesn't represent "the people," but represents "the state."

The Capital and its ground belong to everyone — and to no one. So do they belong to the people — or to the state? And how should they be used?

No one should throw brickbats at the Board of Control for trying to do a difficult job.

But the board needs to keep in mind the Bushman's question — because they're part of the answer.

Lubbock Desegregation Reviewed

Dr. George Henderson, associate professor of sociology and chairman of the human relations department at the University of Oklahoma, will return to Lubbock this week to evaluate the progress made in desegregating city schools.

In August, Henderson conducted an in-service training workshop to aid in the implemetation of Lubbock's desegregation plan. This week's visit will include human relations and evaluation sessions at each of the 15 schools involved in the desegregation order.

"His first visit was enormously successful in motivating our people so we invited him to come back to give us a booster shot," said Mike Bennett, public information officer for the Lubbock Independent School District.

Henderson's itinerary includes visits to Hutchinson, Slaton and Atkins junior high schools on Monday; Wheelock, Posey and Martin elementary schools on Tuesday; Stewart, Stubbs and Guadalupe elementary schools on Wednesday; Maedgen, Hardwick and Mahon elementary schools on Thursday; and Brown, Overton and Wheatley elementary schools on Friday.

Because Henderson's schedule is so tight, individuals wanting to discuss matters with the OU professor are encouraged to attend three evening sessions, Bennett said.

The special sessions will start at 7:30 p.m. Monday at Atkins Junior High School, 5401 Ave. U; Tuesday at Iles Elementary School, 2401 Date Ave.; and Thursday at Mahon Elementary School, 2010 Cornell St.

Hijacker Commits Suicide By Hanging In Cell At Hospital

CHESTER, Ill. (AP) — Gregory Lamar White, who was charged with hijacking a jetliner and killing one of its passengers in 1971, hanged himself in his cell at the Chester Mental Health Center, a coroner said Saturday.

Randolph County Coroner Gary McClure, who ruled the death a suicide, said White's body was found Friday night hanging by a bedsheet from an overhead heat register, which supposedly was designed to give way under the weight of a human body.

Hospital officials could not be reached and the death was not reported to police. The Southern Illinoisian newspaper in Carbondale learned of the death through a routine check for obituaries at the Weige Funeral Home in Chester, where funeral arrangements are pending.

Black Leadership Fears Cutbacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Black leaders are expressing alarm that the views of many Americans are being ignored in the Carter administration's move to cut federal spending.

"We are deeply concerned over indications that budget and program decisions may be in process which will deeply and disproportionately affect the poor and minorities in the most hard-pressed urban and rural areas," the Black Leadership Forum said in a telegram sent to the White House.

The black leaders asked for a meeting with President Carter to discuss the situation. But there was no immediate comment from administration officials Friday.

Carter has voiced his determination to hold the federal budget deficit to $30 billion in the fiscal year 1980, which begins next Oct. 1.

Apartment Dweller Robbed At Knife-Point By Bandit

A Lubbock woman told police she was threatened by a man with a knife early Saturday before the suspect took her purse and fled.

Rose Savala, 33, said she was getting out of her car about 3:15 a.m. in the parking lot of her Duke Street apartment complex when a young, black man stuck a knife at her side.

She said the suspect told her to give him the purse, which contained $40 cash, an $84 check and a pearl ring valued at $140.

She described the bandit as 18 to 25 years old, about 5-feet-8 with a medium build. He was wearing a white T-shirt and jeans.

In burglaries reported Saturday, Charles Evans, owner of Household Supply at 2111 Ave. Q, told officers whoever threw a bumper jack through a window of his store early Saturday made off with four televisions valued at $1,347.

Evans said the intruders also caused $500 damage to the window, $75 damage to curtains and $400 damage to an oven which they overturned.

William Michael Robinson of 3708 97th St. said someone entered his home between Wednesday and Saturday morning through a window and took $2,000 worth of property, including a television, silverware, tools, diamond jewelry and $45 cash.

Burglars entered Jess Newton Brown's 3201 32nd St. home late Friday through a broken bedroom window and made off with $700 worth of goods, according to reports. Brown said two televisions, an adding machine, movie camera and three pool cue sticks were taken by the intruders.

Holly Holzgraf told officers she returned to her vehcile that she had parked near the Livestock Pavillion at the South Plains Fairgrounds Saturday morning and discovered a $500 diamond ring and $11 cash missing from the vehicle. Burglars who entered an automobile firm at 4718 Ave. Q through a roof air-conditioning vent made off with $80 cash from the cash register and $200 worth of tools, according to firm owner Robert M. Blacker.

Lindal Nelson, owner of a service station at 3112 50th St., told police that since Nov. 16, the daily cash count at the station had been short. Nelson said that since that time about $326 has been taken from the business.

Harold G. Pemberton of Frisco, Texas, said that while his 1978 Chevrolet station wagon was parked in the lot of the Ramada Inn at 5845 S. Avenue Q Drive Friday night, someone took a $300 television from the vehicle.

Cancer Patients Receiving Trial Drug Treatment Die

BALTIMORE (AP) — Medical experts at the Baltimore cancer research center report that a second of nine cancer patients undergoing trial treatment with the drug thymidine has died.

She also had a fungus infection, the likely result of earlier chemotherapy. A man in his mid-30s died of a deadly skin cancer. Wiernik said the drug had produced no change in the man's condition.

hostess at a fund-raising dinner for the Joseph P. Kennedy Jr. Foundation at Anthony's Pier 4, a large harborside restaurant in Boston. Women guests donned long dresses and the men wore vested suits. Caroline flouted convention and showed up in plaid cotton shirt, a sweater tied over her shoulders and corduroy pants.

She prefers picking up the things she needs around Harvard Square. As a result, her dress is indistinguishable from most other students. A friend cofirms, saying: "She shops in the same places all of us shop, and that's why we all end up looking the same. Some girls cultivate that carefully casual look and spend a lot of time and money on it. Caroline couldn't care less."

Jackie's compulsive lifelong habit of overspending has plagued her marriages. As a reporter-photographer for the now-defunct Washington Times-Herald, she earned only $60 a week but spent double that on clothes. The president blew up regularly when he saw her bills for paintings, furnishings, antiques and clothing. Her personal expenditures amounted to $125,000 annually during the White House years, causing a ticked-off J.F.K. to ask a friend ruefully: "Isn't there a Shopper's Anonymous?" Jackie's spending zoomed into high gear after her marriage to the late Aristotle Onassis, when she got a $30,000 monthly allowance but always seemed to run short.

Caroline in her attitude toward money is far closer to her father and uncles than her mother. She is not a spender. John Kennedy rarely carried cash; often his friend Dave Powers would have to put a bill in the church collection plate for him. Powers cannot estimate the amounts he laid out over the years for a moneyless J.F.K. Teddy had charge accounts and credit cards at Harvard but rarely used them. He drove an ancient Pontiac, a hand-me-down from Bobby, and bought only the clothes he needed, often not even those. He wore roommate Ted Carey's shirts so often Carey once exploded: "What's the matter? Can't you afford to buy your own?" Bobby also rarely carried money, amazing his middle-and working-class friends on the football squad — not to mention irritating them when they had to shell out for his share of late night coffee and sandwiches.

Caroline's allowance and personal checking account is generous but she spends little on herself. In the local Harvard Square eating places she is known as a poor tipper, exasperating waitresses.

A friend discloses: "It's not that she's cheap. She simply has little awareness of money. Some days she'd have a lot of it in her pockets, other days not enough. She doesn't calculate carefully."

Yet she can be very generous. She writes large checks for charitable causes. On one occasion, a classmate told her about a male friend, a dropout from another school, who was drifting penniless around Harvard Square. Even though she did not know the young man, Caroline gave him several large bills.

Caroline's friends still chuckle over a hilarious incident involving money. Last fall, Mrs. Onassis, after a year of intense negotiations between teams of opposing attorneys, finally won a settlement of the estate of her late husband from his daughter Christina. Jackie received $20 million plus an additional $6 million to help pay taxes on the sum in return for dropping all future claims to the vast fortune. In news of the huge settlement boggled minds around the world, Caroline Kennedy, undaunted, went to Long Lecture Hall at Harvard for a series of four lectures by Prof. John Kenneth Galbraith, the famed economist and former ambassador to India, on "The Nature of Poverty."

When Jackie visited Caroline at Winthrop House on several occasions she was not recognized. Despite her global travels and preoccupations, Jackie is a devoted mother and rarely has been away from either of her children for more than a few weeks at a time. Often she would fly from Skorpios, the Greek island Onassis owned, to visit them at prep school and make it an outing, taking them to dinner and the theater.

Caroline, like all the Kennedys save Jackie, has developed a strong social conscience. She can build up a full head of steam over injustice. She pores over books on history, political science and international relations, reading them carefully. She is conversant with every responsible book written about her famous father's political career, although she skips the lurid accounts of his personal life.

Her intense interest in liberal politics began in adolesence. At 16, she rang doorbells around Concord on behalf of the congressional candidacy of John Kerry, a bitter foe of the Vietnam War. Later, she campaigned for Sen. George McGovern, the Democratic nominee for president.

She often attends campus meetings and lectures on social issues, which provide further discussion for hours with her friends. Last April, she was part of the 3,500 shouting and chanting students who marched around the campus to protest against the Harvard Corporation's ownership of stock in American companies that do business in South Africa. It was the largest protest rally at Harvard since the Vietnam War.

Demonstrators bore lighted candles and torches as they marched and listened to speakers. Caroline, also with candle held aloft, chanted with the others: "One, two, three, four, throw apartheid out the door. Five, six, seven, eight, don't support the racist state." The demonstration lasted until dawn and Caroline stayed until the end.

Jackie's lifelong influence has taken strong hold in one area — the arts. After her year at Sotheby's Caroline's interest deepened, and now at Radcliffe she has elected to major in fine arts. The major is a concentration of historical courses in visual and environmental studies, classical architecture, humanities, anthropology, Afro-American studies, language, history and philosophy.

Raiders Keep Hopes Alive For Trip To Cotton Bowl

with two conference losses. Tech, then, would go to the Cotton Bowl, taking precedence over Houston because of Saturday's win and over Texas because the Raiders have never made the trip.

Whew.

Had Houston beat Tech, though, the Cougs would have been undisputed conference champions. Houston and Tech tied for the title two years ago.

This time it wasn't to be, though.

Dockery said the two-point play was one the team had worked on all week. And one they planned to go with if the need arose, which it did.

"We had run it three or four times already in the game," said the head coach, standing in a Raider locker room that resembled rush hour traffic in New York. "So we weren't sure (it would work) because I was afraid they would be looking for it. But then I thought what the heck, let's go with it."

So what the heck. The Raiders did and came up smelling like a rose.

Egypt Vetoes 'Ultimatum,' Asks Talks' Resumption

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Egypt will ask President Carter to seek a resumption of the Mideast peace talks with Israel, Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil said Saturday.

He said Egypt considers Israel's "take-it-or-leave-it approach" to the U.S. draft treaty submitted to Cairo and Tel Aviv as an "ultimatum." Such an "intransigent attitude does not serve the cause of peace at all," Khalil told reporters.

Earlier, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat hinted he may not go to Norway Dec. 10 to accept the Nobel Peace Prize he won jointly with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin unless the impasse in the Washington peace negotiations is broken.

The Cairo newspaper Al Ahram reported today that Egypt plans to reassert its efforts to achieve a treaty provision ensuring self-rule for Palestinians. The newspaper said that message will be delivered to the United Nations next week by Egyptian U.N. delegate Esmat Abdel Meguid at a U.N. celebration of the "day of international solidarity with the Palestinian people."

The Egyptian-Israeli peace talks in Washington bogged down when Israel refused to accept an Egyptian demand for a timetable on giving autonomy to Palestinians on the West Bank of the Jordan River and in the Gaza Strip.

Khalil's remark about an ultimatum referred to Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan's statement Thursday that Israel sees no need for further negotiations. He said the U.S.-proposed draft treaty could "be signed or not signed."

Khalil said if Israel refuses to join in another round of talks "they would be breaking the negotiations."

Egypt seeks a modification in a clause in the U.S. draft that Khalil said would bar Egypt from committing itself to any arrangements — military or economic — with other Arab countries.

Israelis has argued that the planned treaty must supersede Egypt's agreements with Arab states such as mutual defense pacts and economic boyott regulations directed against the Jewish state.

Khalil said the lack of agreement over "specific steps" for Palestinian autonomy raises the eventuality of dispute and thereby does not permanently settle the 30-year-old Mideast conflict.

"A comprehensive peace would put and end to Israel's fear Egypt might put into force a common Arab defense pact," he said. "If there is peace between Israel and its neighbors there would be no necessity for a common Arab defense pact."

Sadat told reporters after meeting with a U.S. Senate delegation his decision about going to Oslo "may in a small way depend on the status of negotiations" in Washington.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., said after the closed-door, one-hour session the "climate is good" for an agreement but not before Dec. 10.

"I think the mood is still favorable," Jackson said. "I see an agreement, but I don't think it's going to come before Oslo." He said that was his "reliable" judgment.

During the Camp David summit meeting, Sadat, Begin and President Carter set a target date of Dec. 17 for completion of negotiations on a peace treaty. Egyptian diplomats have suggested the talks may go on beyond that date.

Another member of the delegation, Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said he believed differences between Sadat and Begin would be reconciled "soon" but refused to predict when.

"It's like a soufflé," Javits said. "When it's ready, it's ready, and I think it is nearly ready."

Government Action On Cult Questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — While they lived, the cultists of Jonestown seemed beyond the reach of the government that now is ferrying home their corpses.

Some who escaped the horror of the Rev. Jim Jones' jungle compound, and some whose families did not, had urged that the U.S. goverment do something long ago.

"Nobody believed me," said Debbie Layton Blakey, a Jones adherent who defected and fled.

"We're not babysitters," said a State Department official, in defense of the goverment.

There the matter does not rest. Congress plans an investigation of the Jones colony, its grim ending and what the U.S. government might have done to avert the mass suicide and murder that left about 900 dead.

Five Shot To Death

Those deaths came after Rep. Leo Ryan, D-Calif., three newsmen and a defector from the Peoples Temple were shot to death as they tried to leave a jungle airstrip five miles from the Jones colony.

Ryan and his party had gone to Guyana, where Jones had led his flock from the United States, to investigate reports that people were being mistreated and held against their will.

The suicidal reaction to Ryan's inquiry raised the question of what Jones might have done in response to any earlier government intervention.

He had, after all, told his followers they must prepare for death in case of interference. Mrs. Blakey said Jones held suicide drills as often as once a week.

Warnings In Washington

There were, undeniably, warnings in Washington that something was wrong in Jonestown before the killing began. Indeed, the State Department said Ryan was cautioned about the trip that ended in his death.

John A. Bushnell, who heads the State Department task force created after the Jonestown slayings, insists that Ryan had at least as much information about the jungle colony as did State.

Bushnell said Ryan was told that armed guards were posted at the encampment, that it was difficult to reach, that Guyanese law enforcemnt was minimal, and that the U.S. Embassy had limited powers there.

But Joe Holsinger, Ryan's top aide, said the congressman did not get adequate warning of the danger. "The only thing of which I'm aware is they cautioned us about the inadequacy of accommodations," he said.

Considered "Benign"

Holsinger also said the indications from the State Department were that the Jones colony was considered to be a benign settlement.

At least three U.S. government agencies had some dealings with the Jonestown situation in advance. The State Department was chief among them, and officials there insist that it performed properly.

Bushnell says consular officials of the U.S. Embassy in the Guyanese capital of Georgetown systematically checked out complaints of physical, mental and sexual abuse at Jonestown, but came up with nothing to substantiate them.

Most of that was handled by Richard McCoy, who said he interviewed 40 to 50 residents of the colony. McCoy said he talked to persons whose relatives or friends complained to the State Department about mistreatment.

Death Threat Reported

One letter, signed by 57 parents and families, said Jonestown was a concentration camp and that its residents were held under threat of death.

McCoy interviewed the residents in an open field, away from buildings, with a clear view in all directions, said Bushnell. He said McCoy had a getaway car at the edge of the field for anyone who wanted to leave.

"None indicated any interest in taking him up on that offer," Bushnell said.

Bushnell conceded to reporters that the State Department was "circumspect" in its questioning. "There is obviously a difference between the visit of a consular official and a congressional delegation," he said.

Congressman Not Bound

In other words, a visiting congressman is not bound by the diplomatic niceties that might constrain an embassy representative in dealing with American residents abroad.

Bushnell said the embassy conducted an additional 25 to 35 interviews of Jonestown residents in buildings in the compound.

Mrs. Blakey said she sought to warn the State Department last June 15 that the people it was interviewing were "drilled thoroughly prior to each visit on what questions to expect and how to respond."

She said the people of Jonestown feared retaliation if they didn't follow orders.

Responsibility Disclaimed

Bushnell said it was not up to the State Department to tell Ryan he should or should not go to Jonestown. "It was proper for us to leave to him the choice of whether or not to make the visit and the arrangements for doing so," he said.

The Justice Department was a second agency alerted before the killings.

Ryan and Rep. Robert Giaimo, D-Conn., asked the department last year to investigate charges that several religious cults controlled their members through brainwashing.

The two congressman said they also had heard that some groups were illegally taking government benefits sent to their members.

But the Justice Department said it could not act. Benjamin Civiletti, then chief of the criminal division, said an investigation might infringe on constitutional guarantees of freedom of religion.

Civiletti also said he doubted that brainwashing or similar thought control assertions would "support a prosecution under the federal kidnapping statute."

"Certainly there are constitutional problems involved," said Robert Havel, a Justice Department spokesman. "If the person is an adult and not being held against his will, there is not much we can do."

The possibility that government benefits were being improperly diverted involved a third agency, the Social Security Administration.

It said that 200 people in Jonestown were Social Security recipients, getting a total of about $40,000 a month.

"We've been looking at the situation for about a year," said Michael Naver, a spokesman for that agency. "But we couldn't find any evidence that the recipients were being coerced to turn over their checks to the temple."

Naver said they were being influenced and encouraged to do so, but the Social Security inquiry produced no evidence of duress.

Social Security checks cannot be transferred from the intended beneficiary to another person or organization. But the government can't tell recipients how to spend their money once they cash the check.

Naver said State Department inquiries at Jonestown indicated that elderly Temple members were cashing the checks and giving Jones the money.

But the Social Security Administration kept receiving complaints that there was more to it, and asked the State Department to investigate further.

Before a new inquiry began, the people of Jonestown, the infants to the aged, were dead.

South Carolina Disputes Sect Survivors' Cash

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Gov. James B. Edwards insisted Saturday that the federal government reimburse South Carolina for $25,000 in cash the state was ordered to rush here for relocating survivors of the mass suicides and killings in Guyana.

Edwards denied, through an aide, that he was angry over the way state funds had become involved.

But, in a statement, he added: "I am sure a lot of South Carolinians feel no tax money should be used at all. But I want to stress that this decision was made by the federal government."

The State Department confirmed on Saturday that an unspecified number of about 100 survivors of the Jonestown commune of the Peoples Temple would be airlifted to Charleston Air Force Base. The announcement said they should arrive within 48 hours.

Late Saturday, State Department spokeswoman Mary Ann Bader said the returnees were not expected on Saturday, and she declined to estimate when they would arrive.

She said the survivors would be met by officials from the departments of Justice, State, Defense and Health, Eduction and Welfare and they would be "subject to normal re-entry procedures for Americans abroad."

A source, who declined to be identified, said Edwards and other state officials involved were "boiling mad" about the federal request but went along with it, partly because a number of children were expected to be among the survivors sent to Charleston.

The source said the $25,000 figure was based on about 60 survivors arriving in Charleston, with each receiving an average of $400.

In his statement, Edwards said: "This program was initiated by the federal government. I insisted and received word in writing that all South Carolina funds involved would fully be reimbursed.

"Certainly we have compassion for the survivors, but our South Carolina taxpayers should certainly not foot the bill for this federal program."

The $25,000, which came from state welfare funds, was transported from Columbia to Charleston, about 120 miles away, by agents of the South Carolina Law Enforcement Division.

Busing Program's News Good, Bad

have been "on top of the situation to be sure there are no gaps between schools involved in exchanging students," Irons said.

Besides conducting in-service meetings for sister-school faculties, consultants have developed various forms, records and procedures to keep tabs on students during the exchange.

For instance, along with regular permanent records, a "desegregation exchange form" — listing the student's textbook and general progress in 11 subject areas, from handwriting to health — will be sent with each youngster.

In reading and math, teachers will be filling out more in-depth checklists, detailing which skills a child has mastered and which still need more work.

Such intricate records, explained elementary math consultant Ila Curry, give teachers an instant profile of each youngster and thus "save a lot of the guesswork when a student moves from one school to another" or one grade to the next.

Despite the district's preparations, some parents fear the midterm flip-flop will disrupt students' education. For them, the school district is offering an option.

Children being bused to a sister school the first semester may elect to continue riding the bus to the sister school the second semester, pupil personnel director Bill Parker said.

Students taking such an option probably will have the same teacher for both semesters, Parker said. The only exceptions, he said, would be if a teacher resigns or takes a leave of absence, or is reassigned unexpectedly due to enrollment or staffing changes.

Parker said that on Dec. 4 schools will send parents forms allowing them to exercise the second-semester option. The forms must be returned by Dec. 11, he added, "so we can begin planning for student materials and records" for the second half of the school year.

But there may be a problem for the option-takers. Bob Wyett, the school system's safety coordinator, said that even without voluntary transfers, some of the district's desegregation buses will be close to capacity.

Wyett fears that if many A-through-L students take the second-semester option, overcrowding will occur on certain buses.

For that reason, Dr. E. C. Leslie, assistant superintendent for administration, said parents "should probably check with their schools first before they make the decision" to opt for second-semester busing.

No one will be denied the option, Leslie said, but some parents "may feel that if the bus is going to be crowded, they might not want their child" taking the option.

Cult Deaths Reach 910

ing survivors of some victims.

The second man formally charged in connection with the weekend of violence was arraigned Saturday.

Charles Edward Beikman, 43, of Indianapolis, Ind., was charged with murdering four sect members at the cult's temple in Georgetown.

The victims, identified in court records as Sharon Amos, 42, and her three children, Martin Amos, 9, Christa Amos, 7, and Liane Harris, 21, were found with their throats cut the day of the suicides. Earlier it was reported that they, too, commited suicide.

Details of the alleged murders were not available.

Last Wednesday, Larry Layton, 32, of San Francisco, was charged with the murders of Rep. Leo J. Ryan, D-Calif., three newsmen and a defecting member of the cult.

They were gunned down on a jungle airstrip, apparently on Jones' orders, after visiting the settlement to investigate reports of abuse of settlers there.

Carter's Water Conservation Proposals Hit

ditional water requirements.

"That can put you out of business," he said. "If you're hailed out (now) you can come back with another crop and pay back the loan at the bank."

The proposed regulations "might not be so bad, but people are not in very good financial shape," he said. "If the regulations are passsed it will cost a lot of money.

"If farmers are not able to buy crop insurance, it may put them out of businss and surely hurt the area."

Wyatt praised area farmers for their water conservation efforts and said "with the high price of energy to pump water, there's not a whole lot being wasted."

However, Wyatt said, he'd "like to see people conserve water of their own free will — not because they're forced."

The proposed regulations will be the subject of public hearings Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in Washington.

Although many of the proposals could be implemented by presidential edict, they are expected to be subjected to congressional scrutiny before becoming effective early next year, said Pat O'Meara, executive vice president of the National Waters Resources Association.

O'Meara plans to testify against the proposals because "I look at most of them just as additional steps to go through to get a water project.

"Nothing in the work plans give me any reason to be pleased," he said.

Longtime Abilene Demo Retiring From House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although he represents an area larger than five states, voters outside his Texas congressional district would probably ask: "Omar who?"

But to the people around Abilene and Big Spring, Omar Burleson has been a household name since the end of World War II.

For the last 32 years, Burleson represented the 17th district in a manner peculiar to the modern-day politician.

Rather than fight for the lime-light in a town noted for its headline makers or use his House seat as a springboard to higher office, Burleson quietly tended to the folks back home and, in doing so, experienced more job security than any congressman during the last 12 years; he's been elected without opposition since 1966.

In January, however, Burleson, 72, will step into voluntary retirement, leaving his constituents under the care of fellow-Democrat Charles Stenholm, a 39-year-old Stamford rancher.

"This is one of the most interesting jobs any one could lead," the former county judge, FBI agent and Naval intelligence officer said last week surrounded by boxes filled with files and memorabilia awaiting the movers in his Rayburn House Office Building office. "I've always tried to take care of my constituents...knowing that the problems they relate to me are the most important things on their minds that day."

"I look at the job as a challenge," he continued. "I'm not an activist, never was. I don't like having a high profile. I did what I've done in an orderly, quite sort of way. I've just been a little allergic, shall we say, to making speeches on the floor and this sort of thing.

"Most of what I do is for home consumption."

His low-key House career has been highlighted by an unselfish desire to serve where he thought he was most needed.

In 1966, for example, he decided to step down from a committee chairmanship — a post cherished by most congressmen. He left the House Administration Committee and sought a seat on the crucial Ways and Means Committee because, "I simply thought I could accomplish more, serve the constituency better and, frankly, serve the country better."

His chairmanship was taken by Wayne Hayes of Ohio who used the postition as a powerbase until the Elizabeth Ray revelations two years ago led to his scandalous departure.

'We condemn bureaucrats but we have to have 'em to administer the laws we've passed. So I place the blame on the Congress.'

The Ways and Means Committee, with its far-reaching influence over tax legislation, had been on Burleson's mind since "the day I got here but younger members didn't serve on the committee and the leadership was always careful with who they put on the committee."

Burleson's conservatism didn't curry the most favor with the House hierarchy, particulary the legendary former Speaker of the House and fellow Texan Sam Rayburn.

"I never resented it," he said. "I suppose you can just sum it up as saying that's the way you have to run a railroad. Mr. Rayburn wanted someone on the Ways and Means Committee that would not be anathema to the oil and gas industry but not committed to vote for every piece of legislation for oil and gas but not always against it either. On some of the other legislation, he thought I was too conservative."

Burleson would wait until John McCormack's days as speaker to make his move toward the Ways and Means committee after a retirement left Texas without its seat on the committee so important to the petroleum industry.

But even after leaving a precious chairmanship — "I don't know of anyone in the history of Congress that's given up a chairmanship willingly just to go on another committee" — Burleson suffered a short setback.

His bid in 1966 for the committee was defeated in the growingly-liberal Democratic Caucus by one vote since the Mississippi delegation had returned home to see a former collegue sworn in as governor on the day the caucus voted.

In 1968, however, he attained the seat he had wanted for 22 years.

His retirement will not leave the traditional Texas seat on Ways and Means up for grabs since Reps. Jake Pickle, D-Austin, and Bill Archer, R-Houston, already sit on the committee.

Burleson's conservative voting also made him an oft opponent of another powerful Texan — Lyndon Johnson.

"The Great Society sort of catapulted us into this activist era that caused the government to grow and expand," Burleson said when asked to explain the birth of Big Government. "But I first place the responsibility squarely on the Congress.

"We condemn bureaucrats but we have to have 'em to administer the laws we've passed. So I place the blame on Congress.

"When we complain about a huge costly program, the inclination is when we see them failing to pour more money in them to get them bigger. It's become a natural process.

"I have voted against a great number of these vast programs," he continued. "It's not very comforting and I'm not saying they are all bad but they expand...we can't spell out every detail in the bill so we have a mail-order catalogue in the fine print — 'under such rules and regulations as may be promulgated' by the director or secretary or that agency head.

"I tell my people and have for the last few years that we can just count on being promulgated to death."

Part of Burleson's tremendous popularity in his district can be traced to the newsletter he writes and is printed "regularly in about two-thirds" of the distict's 67 newspapers.

His "As It Looks From Here" columns reflects — and has reflected — a disgust with the federal government's fiscal policies that spawned the tax revolt voters staged this election year.

On April 20th he wrote: "Millions of dazed taxpayers staggered to their mailboxes last week to deposit their damp tax returns. Perhaps it is just as well that there was little publicity about a report of the Inspector General of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in 1977 between 6.3 and 7.4 billion dollars was lost by fraud, abuse and waste.

"The overburdened taxpayer, already unhappy, would and should, graduate to irateness...For the future, the remedy is for Congress not to appropriate these huge sums for those programs which have obviously failed or were not justified in the first place."

Burleson's congressional lifestlye and views, perhaps, on his own retirement, were penned in August when "As It Looks From Here" dealt with a recently-departed television superstar.

"Morris was different. Really, he is our kind of celebrity. He never flew to Hanoi during Vietnam; never espoused causes or signed petitions on issues on the left or the right.

"He did not appear on television in behalf of the League for Bean Curd Protection or the Alliance for Stomach Relief. The well-known cat took no position on nuclear power generation or human rights in Bellanschransky. He issued no press statements on the condition of the world or its cures and never made the gossip columns.

"Morris simply sold cat food and was a premier salesman for more than a decade...It is reported that a replacement has been found and is being trained. Perhaps he should be warned that he will have a hard act to follow. Not particularly true with human celebrities — there's always a replacement who is as good or better — records are made to be broken."

Burleson's departure comes at a time when Texas' seniority in the House is being glutted. Only six House members have more seniority than Burleson and three of them are Texans — George Mahon, W.R. "Bob" Poage and Olin E. "Tiger" Teague. Collectively, the quartet represents 152 years of House experience.

"I thought I'd come to Congress for three or four terms and then go back and pick up my law practice," said Burleson. "But you find it fascinating...never routine. You don't let it become routine if you do the job adequately.

"And fortunately my wife enjoys activities associated with our lives here. She's been both secretary and president of the Women's Congressional Club and the fact that she's felt a real interest helps me stay interested."

He and Ruth will leave their Washington apartment next month for a townhouse in Abilene. "I have had some tentative inquiries — not offers — to be a tax consultant and some tentative offers to lecture on political science at a few universities (namely Abilene Christian) back in the district."

Ex-Employee Gets Sympathy, But No Job

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Sandra Cahill had "something to kick about" when she refused to work in a smoke-filled room. But the City Civil Service board isn't going to reinstate her as a fire department radio operator.

Mrs. Cahill, 38, was fired for taking excessive sick leave. She told superiors she couldn't stand to work in the smoke-filled radio room.

At a reinstatement hearing last week, Mrs. Cahill got plenty of sympathy but no job.

"A lousy place to be and work," Fire Department Lt. James Cowie said of the dispatcher's room. "It would be like you spent a night in a night club. You were glad to get out of there."

Several co-workers confirmed that the 20-by-30-foot radio room was always obscured by a haze of tobacco smoke.

Chairman Jack Fried of the Civil Service Board agreed that "the preponderance of the evidence was that she had something to kick about." He said the board would have banned smoking in the room if it had the authority.

The board said Mrs. Cahill's 50 allergies may have been aggravated by the smoke. Mrs. Cahill said she doesn't think she's allergic to the smoke — just that it hurt her throat and lungs.

"I would start to cough to such a degree that I would become nauseous and have to run out and regurgitate on many occasions," she told the board.

Her lawyers argued that the city had failed to provide a safe and healthy working environment, and that her firing was unjustified.

Though she didn't get her job back, Mrs. Cahill thinks her fight may have done some good.

"I am hopeful now," she said. "It will be cleaned up. It won't do anything for me ... (but) I don't regret" making the protest.

Equal Opportunity Enforcement Eyed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House panel will hold hearings next week on federal enforcement of equal opportunity laws.

The first witness before the House Education and Labor's subcommittee on employment opportunities will be Eleanor Holmes Norton, director of the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

In announcing plans for the hearings next Tuesday and Wednesday, Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., the subcommittee's chairman, noted that Ms. Holmes last year initiated internal reforms at the EEOC to streamline case processing and backlog procedures.

"Additionally," Hawkins said, "President Carter's reorganization of the federal enforcement of equal employment opportunity programs has had a substantial impact on the duties and responsibilities of the EEOC. The oversight hearings will explore how the EEOC operates with these new procedures and new authorities."

COURT ON TELEVISION

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — The New Jersey Supreme Court will make its television debut in a special program next month that could lead to televised trials across the state. A court spokesman said New Jersey Public Television will carry the proceedings in Trenton Dec. 12 and a newspaper photographer also will be allowed in the courtroom. Television cameras are prohibited in New Jersey courtrooms, but in 1930 photographers were permitted at the Lindbergh kidnapping trial in Flemington.

SCENE OF THE CELEBRATION — Texas Tech fullback James Hadnot (86) holds aloft the football as Tech fans erupt. Houston players arrive too late, and the official on the goal line signals a score. The score was worth 2 points, the decisive points in Tech's 22-21 upset of nationally ranked Houston. At left for Tech are center Kim Taliaferro (53) and guard Joe Walstad (50). Arriving too late to stop the screen pass are Cougars Gerald Cook (10), tackle Leonard Mitchell (70), and strong safety Tommy Ebner (5). The play came with 3:40 left in the game and followed a Hadnot-to-Michael Morris pass for a touchdown. Hadnot rushed for 111 yards in the game. (Staff Photo by Milton Adams)

Defeat Shocks Cougars

Reservationists who had nationally should make their holiday plans to advance for the best results.

So, maybe the Houston Cougars shouldn't in Jones Stadium Saturday afternoon because they studied too many Cotton Bowl activity brochures while playing against weak off.

Whatever the reason, the disappointment was evident in the Cougar locker room after losing a 22-21 squeaker to the Red Raiders Saturday afternoon. If that, you could hear a ball of cotton hit the floor.

"No, no, the week off didn't have anything to do with the way we played," said a convinced Houston coach Bill Yeoman. "Tech really played well and I congratulate them on their effort.

"I don't care how we get it (the Cotton Bowl berth), said the Cougar coach. "I'll take it anyway I can get it."

Yeoman refused to use it as an excuse, but he did point out the fact that his team has played tough opponents the past two games.

Tech Rally Catches UH 22-21!

Ledger it among the great ones. . . Engrave the score in gold. . . Spare not the superlatives. . .

And preserve the script and cast of performers for posterity. . .

Texas Tech cut down mighty University of Houston 22-21 Saturday afternoon, at a time when the Cougars were a step away from the Cotton Bowl, and suddenly, amazingly, unbelieveably, the Raiders have a shot at that holiday classic.

Really.

Tech, a solid choice three months ago for the second division in the Southwest Conference — even the cellar — pulled out the decision over the nation's fifth-ranked team in one of the year's top shockers, and, in the process, moved into a tie for second in the SWC.

Tech is tied with Texas and Arkansas with 5-2 records, behind Houston's 6-1. UH is still awaiting that official invitation to the Cotton Bowl. Field Scovell was here Saturday with the envelope in his pocket, but he walked away with with it still there.

But, fullback James Hadnot, a converted tight end; Ron Reeves, a freshman quarterback with a painful rib injury; Michael Morris, a sophomore walkon; Willie Stephens, an alert cornerback with a penchant for thievery; and Don Kelly, an overlooked linebacker, led the Raiders in the uphill struggle.

And the Cotton Bowl is just over the hill — albeit a rocky one. With a surprising six-game winning streak, the Raiders could tie for the championship and go to the Cotton Bowl . . . IF they defeat Arkansas in the Ozarks next Saturday, and IF Rice could upset the Cougars.

But, Saturday, Tech has seldom clawed harder or at a higher opponent in history. As the seconds ticked away with Tech nursing that 1-point lead, up popped visions of 12 years ago about this time of year when the Raiders shocked nationally ranked Arkansas and knocked it out of the Cotton Bowl.

Raider coach Rex Dockery wasn't thinking about any past history in the final minutes; he was just thinking about escape.

And only when that gigantic scoreboard at the south end of Jones Stadiu, just a few yards from where the action was taking place, could Dockery breathe free air.

It was drama only in the second half for the Raiders, who had fallen behind 7-0 only to bounce back and lead 14-7. And with the game running into the late and desperate stage, and UH in command 21-14, the game took a sudden turn.

It started with defense, too, as has been the case so often this year. UH, threatening from the Tech 18, went to the air, instead of staying safely on the ground when in four-down territory.

Quarterback Danny Davis' third-and-11 shot over the middle found its way into the hands of cornerback Mike Patterson at the 5, and Patterson brought it out to the 26. So, instead of being in range for a field goal (and a 12 mph trailing wind), the Cougars were on defense.

A clip (one of 13 penalties against Tech during the game) shoved it back to the 12, with 5:54 remaining.

Reeves wheeled out and hit Brian Nelson, first for 12, then for 48 as the senior from Wichita Falls got 3 yards behind the secondary.

After Hadnot picked up 6 on two thrusts, Reeves tossed back to Hadnot going right, and the Cougar defenders — smelling blood with Hadnot unprotected and 7 yards behind the line — charged in wildly.

That charge included the cornerback opposite Tech's right side, and wide receiver Morris was all alone at the goal. Hadnot floated a pass to Morris, and the non-scholarship athlete from Wilmer-Hutchins caught it at the 1. He backed into the end zone, but he had had to kneel to catch the low throw, and his kenee touched at the 1.

Reeves then took the next snap, rammed his 220 pounds toward the goal behind center Kim Taliaferro, and it was now Houston 21, Tech 20.

Two points for a win, 1 for a tie, or none for the gamble?

"There was never any doubt," Dockery said later. "We had never beaten them, and we wanted to win. We didn't even think about going for 1 point."

The only question was which play to call.

It turned out to be a wide screen to Hadnot.

Reeves sucked in the defenders as he retreated, then flipped the ball to Hadnot headed toward the left sideline. The big fullback headed upfield, and ran into three defenders at the 5. He was stopped momentarily before driving out of the grasp of cornerback Kenny Hatfield at the 3 and barging on into the end zone, as the partisan crowd of 36,691 fans exploded in celebration.

But, up with the cheers went a yellow flag, and for a few seconds, the Raiders and their fans could see the play being wiped out by a penalty, a situation Tech had faced all afternoon.

The infraction was a clip, but the officials ruled it occurred after Hadnot had crossed the goal.

Thus, with the 22-21 lead and 3:40 left to play, Tech had to kick off from its 25. Bill Adams' kick went to the slippery Eric Herring at the 19. Herring, who had opened the game with a 72-yard, punt-return TD, got the kickoff back only 5 yards before being dumped.

Tech had the ball, 2 1/2 minutes remained, and UH had three timeouts. Three plays gained but 7 yards, and in came Adams to try a 38-yard field goal.

Adams' try into the wind was good, but UH had 12 men on the field, a no-no. Up went the officials' signal for the 3-pointer, but Tech yelled, "Hold it. We want the penalty, not the points."

"We wanted the ball," said Dockery, and finally, the refs conferred with both coaches, and with 1:06 left, Tech had a new set of downs instead of 25 points.

It was Hadnot three straight times for 7 yards, and finally, with six seconds, Reeves just fell backwards to run out the final six seconds.

And the Raiders, who a month ago were reaching for a break-even season, were thinking Cotton.

It appeared as if the afternoon would be long for the homefolks when Herring zipped 72 yards through Tech's defense

Baylor Bombs Longhorns 38-14

WACO (AP) — Baylor Coach Grant Teaff told Mickey Elam last Monday that if things worked out right, he would see action at quarterback Saturday against Texas.

"Nervous? You bet I was. I've taken snaps in practice, but I'd never taken a snap in a varsity game since high school in Irving," said the 5-foot-9, 175-pound junior who led Baylor to a 38-14 upset over the ninth-ranked Longhorns.

Elam gained 86 yards and completed three of four passes in leading Baylor to only its third victory of the season. He ran two yards for one touchdown and threw a pass for another score.

Teaff said the win helped wipe out some of the pain of the long string of losses that preceded the triumph. Baylor had suffered an embarrassing loss to Rice a week ago.

"I don't think many people can realize what kind of job our players did to bounce back from that loss, going through all the muck and talk that follows a game like that, and then play the type of game they did today against this type of team," Teaff said.

Texas lost three fumbles and six interceptions to the inspired Bears, leaving Longhorn coach Fred Akers to say: "I am not sure I can describe exactly what happened. We certainly gave them enough help, not that they needed any."

Rick Churchman, who returned an interception 52 yards for one Texas' touchdowns, said Baylor "capitalized on our mistakes, and we failed to capitalize on theirs. They blew our defense all over the place."

Texas quarterback Donnie Little suffered a torn ligament in his left thumb and team officials said he may have to undergo surgery.

Joe Campbell, Baylor defensive lineman, said, "This has made our whole year. And it showed everyone we were capable of beating a championship team. It's been a long year, but now they (Texas) have got the same feeling we had against Rice. You can take a picture of that and see how it feels. I tell you, it doesn't feel good."

The 5-foot-9, 175-pound Elam, who originally signed with Texas Tech, came in for Greg Wood late in the first quarter and sparked the lethargic Bears into life.

He scored on a two-yard run and passed three yards to split end Mike Fisher to give Baylor a 14-0 lead. From there, the aroused Bears demolished Texas, both offensively and defensively.

The victory raised Baylor's record to 3-8 for the season and 3-5 in SWC play. Texas fell to 7-3 overall and 5-2 in SWC.

Wood, who returned to the game, later ran one yard and passed six yards to Raymond Cockrell for two Baylor touchdowns and freshman runningback Walter Abercrombie went 36 yards on a Statue-of-Liberty play for another TD.

Baylor turned two Texas fumbles and an interception into touchdowns en route to a 28-0 halftime lead. Texas scored twice in the third period on Randy McEachern's 27-yard pass to Les Koenning and Rick Churchman's 52-yard interception return.

Robert Bledsoe kicked all five conversions and tacked on a 37-yard field goal in the fourth quarter for Baylor.

Elam, recruited as a defensive back by Texas Tech, was red shirted his freshmen season and saw only spot duty the next year before transferring to Baylor. After sitting out a year to establish eligibility, he had gained just 60 yards in 20 carries this season as a runningback. But by halftime Saturday, he had 51 yards on the ground and was three-for-three on the only collegiate passes of his career.

Baylor had lost 26 turnovers in its last four games but performed almost flawlessly Saturday with just two turnovers on a fumble and Churchman's interception, both in the third quarter.

Texas has not won at Baylor since 1972.

Baylor intercepted Texas six times Saturday with cornerback Kirk Collins picking off two of McEachern's passes in the third quarter. Defensive end Andrew Melontree sacked Texas quarterbacks twice for 19 yards in losses to lead a swarming Baylor defense.

Elam took Baylor 62 yards in 13 plays for its first touchdown, but Texas mistakes figured in the next three Bear scores.

Elam's TD pass to Fisher came nine plays after cornerback Steve Brothers hit Texas' Johnnie Johnson on a punt, forcing a fumble that Steve Howe recovered on the Longhorn 29.

Wood's TD came the fifth play after Doak Field hit Leroy King, resulting in a Baylor fumble recovery at the Texas 27.

A-J Poll Has 'Horns On Top

By DON HENRY
Executive Sports Editor

Back in the fall, Playboy Magazine picked the University of Texas basketeers as one of the top teams in the nation.

"I don't know anything about it," commented Abe Lemons, a cigar clamped in the corner of his mouth. "I'm not supposed to read those kind of magazines."

Humor drips from Lemons' lips, but victories follow his words, and this year, after winning the NIT championship, Lemons' Longhorns have been selected the preseason choice for the Southwest Conference basketball championship in the 14th annual Avalanche-Journal poll of sports writers who regularly cover the SWC.

But, the selection of the Longhorns is nothing unexpected. From the time they stepped off the court in Madison Square Garden with that NIT trophy with four returnees last March, the Longhorns have been under the gun.

Even with that returning talent and the good 1977-78 season, the Longhorns weren't the unanimous choice of the 11 writers.

Texas was named first on seven ballots and shared the top spot with Arkansas and Texas A&M on another. Arkansas, which shared the SWC crown with Texas a year ago, got the favorite's tab from two, and the Aggies were named on one ballot, in addition to the three-way tie.

Pointwise, on the basis of 9 points for first, 8 for second, and on through 1 for last, Texas garnered 95 points.

The Aggies and Arkansas shared second with 84 1/2 points, followed by Houston with 55, Baylor with 49 1/2, Texas Tech with 48, SMU with 45 1/2, Rice with 21 1/2, and TCU last with 11 1/2.

Texas, which opened the season with a loss to Long Beach State Friday night, returns starters in forwards Ron Baxter and Tyrone Branyan and guards Jim Krivacs and John Moore.

But, while the Longhorns drew the favorite's tag, the Razorbacks furnished the No. 1 player in 6-4 all-America Sidney Moncrief.

Moncrief was one of the Razorbacks' Triplets of a year ago that led them to third place in the NCAA tournament.

Now, Moncrief and 6-11 Steve Schall are the only returnees from that team.

Moncrief lacked half a vote of being unanimous in the voting for the projected player of the year. He shareed one ballot with Baylor's Vinnie Johnson, the league's most prolific scorer of a year ago.

Johnson, a 6-1 guard, joined Moncrief, the 6-4 Baxter, 6-0 Moore and Aggie freshman Rudy Woods on the all-conference team.

Woods, the 6-11 freshman from Bryan, was a solid choice as the newcomer of the year. Only Aggie teammate Tyrone Wilson, a 6-1 guard who transferred from Kansas State and sat out a year, and Houston's Victor Ewing, a 6-6 transfer from Pontiac, Mich., received votes for newcomerka honors.

Woods and a cast of veterans created the high position for the Aggies who were 5-11 last year in conference.

Texas and Arkansas shared the conference crown with 14-2 records.

In addition to the five players named to the projected all-SWC contest, receiving votes were Krivacs, Rynn Wright of A&M, Reggie Franklin of SMU, Schall, Aggie forward Vernon Smith and Ewing.

Sooner Greg Roberts Wins Outland Trophy

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Lightning-quick Oklahoma offensive guard Greg Roberts has won the Outland Award, presented by the Football Writers Association of America to the player chosen as the outstanding interior lineman in collegiate football, it was announced Saturday.

"I think I'm going to go out and whoop it up," the 6-3, 240-pound senior from Nacogdoches, Tex., said on learning of his award. "I really hadn't given any thought to winning it. From just hearing about it, all the winners I remember were defensive linemen, so I thought a defensive lineman might get it."

Roberts is the 23rd winner of the Outland. His win makes Oklahoma the first college to have four Outland recipients.

Roberts was honored with the Outland over nine others eligible as a result of making the Football Writers' All-America team, announced last Tuesday. His closest competition came from Penn State defensive tackle Bruce Clark and Southern California offensive lineman Pat Howell.

Roberts said winning the Outland "was a goal. I think every lineman in college football's goal is to win the Outland. It means as much to me as the Heisman does to a running back."

A&M Claims 53-49 Win Over Indiana

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — David Britton scored 13 of his game-high 19 points in the second half Saturday as Texas A&M handed 10th ranked Indiana its second straight loss, 53-49, in the consolation semifinals of the Sea Wolf Classic college basketball tournament.

Britton, a 6-foot-4 junior guard, hit seven of nine free throw attempts in the second half as the Aggies rallied for the victory.

Pepperdine met 12th ranked North Carolina State, and fourth ranked Louisville faced Lamar in Saturday's championship semifinals.

Turnovers continued to plague Indiana, as the Hoosiers repeatedly were unable to beat the Aggies' press. Still, Indiana had a 31-30 halftime lead on an eight-foot bank shot by Scott Eells.

Texas A&M took the lead for good on Britton's driving layup that made it 45-43 with eight minutes remaining in the game. The Aggies later stretched the lead to eight, 53-45, on a pair of free throws by Britton with 3:11 to go.

Texas A&M missed several foul shots in the final minutes to give the Hoosiers a chance, but no one on the Indiana team could hit consistently from the field.

Tigers Take 33-21 Win

SNYDER (Special) — Ricky Davis rushed for 150 yards and four touchdowns as Slaton defeated Colorado City 33-21 in a Class AA bidistrict contest Saturday night.

The win was Slaton's second of the year over the Wolves.

Slaton trailed 14-13 at the half, but Davis came up with a a pair of TDs in the third period to shove the Tigers into the lead for good.

Jesse Titus added an insurance score in the final period on a 4-yard run.

Davis got the game's first TD, dashing 67 yards in the initial period. But, Gary Hulme's 6-run run and Gene Carter's 5-yard scoring play boosted the Wolves into a lead in the first period. Davis helped Slaton narrow the margin 14-13 at the half.

Ricky Sanchez paced the Colorado City offense with 120 yards, and Hulme added 84.

Slaton, which came out of District 5-AA's four-way tie, will take on Kermit in next week's regional round.

Cincy Bears Down To Defeat Tigers

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Quarterback Tony Kapetanis ran for one touchdown and threw for another Saturday as Cincinnati overwhelmed Memphis State 34-14 in college football.

The victory gave the Bearcats a 5-6 record while Memphis State ended 4-7.

The host Tigers were in the game only briefly early in the fourth quarter when they struck for two quick touchdowns to narrow the score to 20-14.

But Cincinnati retaliated with two more touchdowns, including a 13-yard Kapetanis pass to wide receiver Mike Cummins and a 53-yard run by tailback Howard Hill.

After a scoreless first quarter, Cincinnati got on the scoreboard with two quick field goals totaling 28 and 26 yards by Steve Schultz.

LSU Tigers Smash Rival Green Wave

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Quarterback David Woodley scored three touchdowns on 1-yard runs and tailback Charles Alexander raced 64 yards for a clinching touchdown as LSU buried arch-rival Tulane 40-21 in a college football game Saturday night.

Alexander finished the night with 156 yards on 28 rushes, setting a Southeastern Conference record for career rushing yardage. Alexander now has 3,980 yards for his career at LSU, eclipsing the mark of 3,835 yards set by Sonny Collins at Kentucky.

Woodley scored in each of the first three quarters. Tulane had narrowed the gap on third quarter touchdowns and back-to-back blocked punts. With the score 27-21 in LSU's favor, Alexander burst through the middle for 64 yards to clinch the game for the Tigers.

New Deal Tips Vega In Upset

By ALFRED WHITE
Special Correspondent

The New Deal Lions shocked heavily favored Vega Saturday night with two first-quarter touchdowns and then used a very stingy defense to defeat the Longhorns 14-8 in a Class A bidistrict game at Lowrey Field.

New Deal will now move on to the regional round when it tangles with Stratford, a 3-0 winner over Wellington Friday night.

The win stretches the Lions' record for the season to 8-3, while Vega ended its season with an identical mark.

New Deal jumped out on top on the first play of the game as quarterback Lance Waggoner hit Martin Adams on a 56-yards pass-and-run play with 11:44 remaining in the first quarter. The Lions' kick failed, leaving them with a 6-0 lead.

The Lions then made it 14-0 when, with 7:56 to go in the first stanza, Tony Howell scored from 8 yards out. New Deal scored 2 more on the conversion as Waggoner hit Eric Hammock.

Vega finally got in the scoring act in the second quarter when quarterback Randall Galbraith scampered 8 yards on a busted play for a touchdown. Galbraith then was holding for the extra point when he decided to go for 2 and ran for the end zone.

Vega had an opportunity to tie the game and possibly take the lead in the fourth quarter when Galbraith headed for the goal from 5 yards out and fumbled into the end zone where New Deal recovered.

The play created some controversy between officials and the Vega coaches who thought Galbraith had crossed the imaginary plane of the goal before fumbling.

Adams led all rushers with 82 yards on 14 carries while Joe Rodriguez led Vega with 37 yards on 13 carries.

Leading receivers in the game included Adams with 62 yards on two catches for ND, while Jesse Rodriguez gained 46 yards in receptions on two catches for Vega.

Dickey Gains 230 Yards In A&M Rally

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Defensive end Jacob Green threw Texas Christian quarterback Steve Bayuk for a 12-yard loss then blocked a punt out of the end zone for a game-breaking safety as Texas A&M defeated Texas Christian 15-7 Saturday.

Green, a 242-pound junior, had numerous other big defensive plays as A&M raised its season record to 7-3.

A&M already has accepted an invitation to play in the Hall of Fame Bowl at Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 20.

Texas Christian finished its season with a 2-9 record, including eight straight Southwest Conference losses.

A&M led 6-0 at halftime on 24 and 52-yard field goals by Tony Franklin who holds the NCAA record for most career field goals with 56.

Texas Christian grabbed Curtis Dickey's second fumble at the A&M 32 yard-line, however, and Bayuk passed to Mark Renfro at the A&M 15. Renfro sprinted for a touchdown.

After Kevin Moody recovered A&M quarterback David Beal's deflected pitchout at the Texas Christian 13, Green broke through and threw Bayuk to the ground within the 1. Two plays later, Green raced through and blocked Cameron Young's punt out of the end zone for an 8-7 A&M lead.

The safety forced Texas Christian to kick from its 20. On third down, Dickey shook off two tackles and raced 55 yards for a clinching touchdown.

A last-ditch Texas Christian drive in the final minute was halted when Leandrew Brown of A&M intercepted freshman quarterback Steve Stamp's pass at the A&M 1.

Dickey, a 205-pound junior who had started since he was a freshman, became the third A&M player to gain over 1,000 yards in a season as he ran for 230 yards on 34 carries for a season total of 1,135 yards.

It was Dickey's best game as a running back. His old mark was 175 yards against Texas Christian last year. He ranked 15th in the nation in total rushing.

Franklin's 52-yard field goal was the longest this season in the SWC. Encouraged by a screaming crowd, coach Tom Wilson let Franklin try a 66-yarder, but it was 8 to 10 yards short.

The attempt — one yard short of the NCAA record — came with 3:28 left in the second quarter.

Green threw Stamp for a 15-yard loss late in the third quarter and had at least three outstanding defensive plays in the first half. He pressured Bayuk into a 7-yard loss and forced a punt in one series.

After Texas Christian had made its deepest first-half penetration to the AM 24, Green grabbed Bayuk's fumble in the air at the A&M 32. Later, with a screen pass set up for Texas Christian, Green tipped the ball incomplete.

Dickey's offensive performance was marred by three fumbles. The final one came at the A&M 49 midway through the fourth quarter, but Texas Christian could not take advantage of the bobble.

Hogs Corral SMU 27-14

DALLAS (AP) — To hear Southern Methodist linebacker Putt Choate tell it, the 12th-ranked Arkansas Razorbacks frittered away the first quarter Saturday trying to decide whether they wanted to play. Fiesta Bowl officials are no doubt delighted with the Hogs' decision.

Arkansas, which plays UCLA in the Fiesta Bowl, could manage only 16 yards while falling behind SMU 14-0 in the first quarter, before rebounding for a 27-14 Southwest Conference victory.

"The first quarter they were pretty much deciding whether they wanted to play today. They finally decided..." said Choate, the leader of the gritty SMU defense.

"The first quarter went perfect for us," said SMU coach Ron Meyer. "Then they got to playing like they were capable and they just moved on us when ever they wanted to.

The Razorbacks, directed by quarterback Ron Calcagni, scored on five of their first six possessions after the disasterous first quarter.

It was reserve quarterback Kevin Scanlon, sent in at the beginning of the second period to spell Calcagni, who ignited the Hogs on their first touchdown march. When Scanlon left with an injury, Calcagni returned to cap the 71-yard drive with a one yard touchdown plunge.

Calcagni then whipped the Razorbacks, now 8-2 for the season and 5-2 in the SWC, on two crucial touchdown drives in the third quarter, climaxing one with a 22-yard touchdown pass. He finished the game with 86 yards rushing and completed eight of 12 passes for 99 yards.

"We realized before the game the type team SMU is, we could behind 14-0 like we were," said Arkansas Coach Lou Holtz. "It was important for us to stay with our game plan. During the last 40 minutes we played about as well as we are capable of playing.

The lethargic Razorbacks, who are headed to the Fiesta Bowl, could manage only 16 yards and no first downs in the first period as Mike Ford guided the Mustangs to a 14-0 lead.

But Arkansas roared back to score on five of next six possessions in the final three periods.

When Scanlon left with an injury, Calcagni returned to cap the 71-yard, 14-play march with a one-yard drive and trim SMU's lead to 14-7.

Calcagni then whipped the Razorbacks, now 8-2 for the season and 5-2 in the SWC, on two crucial touchdown drives in the third quarter. Roland Sales climaxed a 71-yard, 12-play march early in the period with a 17-yard touchdown jaunt and Calcagni connected with Robert Farrell on a 22-yard scoring pass to cap a 63-yard drive and put Arkansas ahead 24-14.

The next Arkansas thrust was blunted when Calcagni fumbled into the SMU end zone and the ball was recovered by the Mustangs' Choate. Ordonez added the 19-field goal early in the final period after Arkansas recovered an SMU fumble at the SMU 32-yard-line.

Michigan Ends Up Smelling Like Roses

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Michigan quarterback Rick Leach wasn't going to let a hamstring injury keep him from his greatest moment, a third straight victory over Ohio State and another shot at the Rose Bowl.

"I was in a lot of pain in the second half," the Wolverines' star said Saturday after a 14-3 victory over the Buckeyes. "I knew this was it. I didn't want to got to the Gator Bowl."

Despite his injury in the second quarter, Leach stayed on the job and gave Art Schlichter, his freshman Ohio State quarterbacking counterpart, a playing lesson.

"Leach played on one leg in the second half. It just meant our option was pretty much out," said Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler.

Schembechler had just watched his team hold Ohio State without a touchdown for the third straight season. Someone wondered if he had the number of his old boss, Woody Hayes.

"No," replied Schembechler. "I don't have anybody's number, but I never thought that would happen. I just hope the touchdowns don't come in flurries now."

It was a new low for Hayes in his 27th meeting with Michigsn. The 65-year-old disciplinarian never had lost three straight times to his arch-rival.

How did he feel? "Oh, just happy as a lark," replied Hayes sarcastically.

Sixth-ranked Michigan earned a share of the Big Ten Conference championship with Michigan State and will carry a 10-1-0 record against Southern California in the Rose Bowl on New Year's Day at Pasadena, Calif. Michigan State, on probation and ineligible for the Rose Bowl, beat Iowa 42-7 Saturday.

A second-period hamstring injury to Leach could have been costly. But the senior quarterback, who has guided the Wolverines to 38 victories in his career, stayed on the job to pitch a pair of touchdown passes that ran his unprecedented total to 81 scores running or passing.

"He got a hamstring pull high in his leg early in the second Quarter," said Schembechler. "That meant we just couldn't do what we wanted to do. It meant the option was pretty much out."

But Leach kept on playing. "I was in a lot of pain in the second half, but I knew this was it. I didn't want to go to the Gator Bowl," he said, knowing a win would have given his team a Rose Bowl berth, while a loss would have sent them them to Jacksonville, Fla. for the Gator Bowl.

Hayes was realistic after watching Schembechler take a 5-4-1 lead in their coaching rivalry. "We just weren't good enough to win," he said.

Hayes, sitting on a bench in an interview room, answered all questions, but bristled over one from David Israel of the Chicago Tribune.

Israel asked if Hayes realized his team had not scored a touchdown in the last three years against Michigan.

"Yes, I know that. And I thought you would be the one to bring it up," said Hayes, rising to his feet and taking a couple of steps toward his questioner.

"You're the guy who wanted to get (Notre Dame Coach) Dan Devine fired three years ago. I read your articles where you cut up Devine. They were the most vicious I ever read. I don't need to respond to you."

With that, Hayes stalked from the interview room.

"I don't know why he brought up something like that. It happened in Devine's first year. He just didn't want to answer the question," said the writer.

Kyle Field Work Work Scheduled

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Construction will begin Monday to enlarge Texas A&M's football stadium from a seating capacity of approximately 54,000 to 71,600.

The expansion of Kyle Field will make it the third largest football stadium in Texas. Memorial Stadium, where the Texas Longhorns play in Austin, is the largest and the Cotton Bowl at Dallas is second.

Kyle Field will be enlarged by adding a third deck to each side of the field.

Because of the construction, A&M's home opener Sept. 8 against Brigham Young will be played at Rice Stadium.

Raiders Surprise UH 22-21

with a punt return. But, the Raiders played the alertness game when on defense. Going into the game, Davis had been intercepted but three times; Tech picked off four in 60 minutes. And the Raider defenders recovered three of UH's four fumbles.

These turnovers more than offset the 346 yards total offense the Cougars registered. Stephens led the way with two interceptions and a fumble recovery. Rusty Maroney got the other got the other theft, and Curtis Reed and Jim Verden were the fumble magnets.

And although he didn't touch the football, Kelly was in on 17 tackles from his linebacker spot, 14 of them unassisted.

It was Stephens' fumble recovery at its 35 which started Tech toward its first TD. The Raiders went 65 yards in ten plays, and from the 11, freshman tailback Mark Olbert hit left guard on a trap and exploded into the end zone with 57 seconds left in the first period.

First play after the kickoff, Maroney grabbed a deflected pass at the UH 37, and seven plays later, Hadnot dived a yard over right guard for the score.

UH evened it in the final minutes of the half, using Davis' passes and the old face-mask-on-hut play.

After Adams missed a 49-yard field goal, UH went 68 yards in seven official plays. Tech donated 35 yards on penalties.

Davis hit tight end Garrett Jurgatis at the 2, after looking for several receivers. No one was around Jurgatis, when he stepped into the end zone on the 4-yard play, and with 48 seconds left in the half, it was all even.

That didn't keep Dockery from confronting the officials on the field at the half, arguing and gesturing back toward the field before he ripped a program from his back pocket, point it at them, then trotted for the dressing room.

Midway of the third period, UH hooked up on a short drive after strong safety Tommy Ebner recovered a Hadnot fumble at the Tech 20. With Davis finding reserve tight end Hubert Miller for 21 yards over the middle, UH got it close, and Love, with a second stretch, got the TD over right tackle for a yard with 8:27 left in the third.

Tech had a scoring chance two possessions later, as it moved from its 29 to the UH 1. But, Reeves went out with the bruised ribs, and Hadnot left the field after being shaken up. Freshman tailback Phil Weatherall missed the handoff and UH noseguard Theodis Williams recovered in the end zone.

All night long, the big scoreboard at the south end of Jones Stadium, which had blinked that go-ahead point earlier in the afternoon, beamed out the same margin. . . along with the words, "We Win."

Victories such as this are not easily forgotten.

Tyler Remains Unbeaten, But Plano Advances

By The Associated Press

John Tyler is still undefeated, but it's defending state AAAA champion Plano that is advancing in the playoffs on the strength of a first down.

Tyler had a chance to win with 4:45 left to play, but Johnny Speake's extra point attempt sailed wide right, leaving the game deadlocked at 13-13.

With teams dead even in penetrations, the ticket to continue in the playoffs rested with the team that garnered the most first downs. Plano reeled off three in a row on their final possession and then held on to take a slim 19-18 first down margin when the final gun sounded at Texas Stadium.

"Give our kids credit," said Plano coach Tommy Kimbrough. "They drove right down the field when we had to have it. They sure looked good under pressure."

Plano will meet top-ranked Temple in the next playoff round. Elvis Walker and Carl Robinson sparked Temple to a 28-0 thrashing of Conroe Friday. Walker collected 165 yards rushing and scored on a 44 yard run. Robinson picked up 110 yards rushing on his way to two touchdowns.

Arlington Heights exploded for four fourth quarter touchdowns Friday to wallop sixth-ranked and previously unbeaten Arlington Lamar, 35-0.

Third-ranked Houston Stratford bombed Houston Madison 44-6 Friday and fourth-ranked San Antonio Churchill crushed San Antonio Burbank 30-6.

Lubbock Estacado outscored all of Fort Stockton's previous opponents this year put together to defeat the third-ranked class AAA team 21-7. Until Friday, Fort Stockton had allowed just 13 points all season.

Jeep Shanks ran for 152 yards and Mike Northcutt scampered for two touchdowns as Muleshoe avenged an earlier loss by whipping Idalou 21-6. In October, Idalou ruined Muleshoe's homecoming with a 21-7 Friday the 13th win.

Two other playoff contest ended in ties Friday. Luling and East Bernard, both AA, were knotted at [illegible] advances with a 5-5 [illegible] In class B, Wortham and [illegible] 8-8. Wortham will advance [illegible] 2-1 advantage in penetrations.

Penn State Linemen Up For Lombardi Trophy

HOUSTON (AP) — Two Penn State defensive tackles, an offensive guard for Oklahoma and a UCLA linebacker are the finalists for the 1979 Lombardi Award, which goes to the nation's top college lineman.

Bruce Clark and Matt Millen of Penn State, Greg Roberts of Oklahoma and Jerry Robinson of UCLA were named Sunday by a nationwide panel of coaches, sportswriters and broadcasters.

The winner of the annual award is to be announced Jan. 18 at a $100-a-plate dinner given by the sponsor of the award, the Downtown Rotary Club. Proceeds from the dinner go to the American Cancer Society.

All four finalists are on their way to post-season games this year as Penn State goes to the Sugar Bowl, Oklahoma meets Nebraska in the Orange Bowl and UCLA confronts Arkansas in the Fiesta Bowl.

Roberts, the sixth Oklahoma player to make the Lombardi Award finals, will travel from his hometown of Nacogdoches for the dinner. The senior is considered by his coaches as the Sooners' fastest lineman ever.

Robinson, also a senior, finished the season with 146 tackles in 10 games and led UCLA in tackles in each of the final eight games. The Santa Rosa, Calif., native has been the Bruins' top tackler the last three years.

Clark and Millen are both two-year starters for Coach Joe Paterno, who'll be glad to have the Pennsylvania tandem playing for the Nittany Lions one more year.

With one game left this season, Millen, of Hokendeuqua, and Clark, of Newcastle, had similar statistics. Clark had 49 tackles, 31 unassisted, and seven quarterback sacks. Millen had 48 tackles, 26 of them on his own, and eight quarterback sacks.

Other players in the top ten picked by the panel included defensive tackle Mike Bell of Colorado State; offensive tackle Keith Dorney of Penn State; linebacker Bob Golic of Notre Dame; defensive tackle Dan Hampton of Arkansas; defensive end Al Harris of Arizona State; center Dave Huffman of Notre Dame; and defensive tackle Marty Lyons of Alabama.

Bean Retains 3-Stroke Lead In Japan Meet

MIYAZAKI, Japan (AP) — Andy Bean of the United States, third on the 1978 money winning list, fired a 3-under-par 69 Saturday and kept a 3-stroke lead after three rounds of a $312,000 international golf tournament.

Bean, 25, winner of three major U.S. tournaments this season, had earlier rounds of 67 and 70, giving him a 10-under-par total of 206.

He collected two birdies against one bogey on the front nine and two birdies on the back nine on the 6,987-yard par-72 Phoenix Country Club course.

Graham Marsh of Australia and Bob Byman of the United States were tied for second with 7-under-par 209s. Byman had the best score of day with a 5-under 67 while Marsh shot a 70.

American Bobby Wadkins, this year's European Open winner, scored a 70 and was next at 4-under 212 after shooting a 70.

Defending champion Seve Ballesteros of Spain, the recent Japan Open winner, was in a seventh-place tie with Japan's Yoshitaka Yamamoto at 215. Ballesteros and Yamamoto each shot 73s on Saturday.

Southern Cal Squeaks By Notre Dame

"It's the greatest game I've ever seen," said a jubilant Robinson after his third-ranked Trojans downed Notre Dame 27-25 on a 37-yard field goal by Frank Jordan with two seconds left to play. "But then," Robinson added, "maybe every USC-Notre Dame game is."

"That was one of the most remarkable comebacks in the history of the game," Devine said after the eighth-ranked Irish rallied for 19 fourth-quarter points but fell short.

"I really wasn't thinking about anything at all," Jordan said of his dramatic kick that climaxed a drive that started at the Southern Cal 30-yard line with 46 seconds left. "I was saying to myself, 'Keep your head down, keep your head down.'

"I really wanted to kick it through after I had missed those first two. And I really wanted to beat Notre Dame."

Quarterback Paul McDonald, whose 35-yard pass to Calvin Sweeney was the key play in the Trojans' final drive, said the USC huddle in the final seconds was unified by determination.

"No way were we going to quit. We knew we were going to score," said McDonald. "We said to ourselves that this team does not panic."

On the play following McDonald's long pass to Sweeney, tailback Charles White ran for four yards, then Jordan, who had missed an extra point and a short field goal attempt earlier in the contest, made the deciding kick.

Devine was asked about a controversial call on the final drive in which the officials allowed Southern Cal to retain possession by calling an incomplete pass on a play that might have been called a fumble by McDonald.

"If the official made a mistake on that call, I'll work to see that he'll never work another game. He caused my kids bitter disappointment."

But Devine added, "If I'm wrong, then just forget it."

Notre Dame scored three touchdowns in the final period, two on passes by Joe Montana, the last coming with 46 seconds to play which gave the Irish a 25-24 lead.

McDonald hit 17 of 29 passes for 281 yards and two touchdowns and White rushed for 205 yards and a score on 37 carries.

McDonald threw a 30-yard scoring pass to Kevin Williams late in the first quarter, hit Dan Garcia on a 35-yard touchdown strike in the second period and Jordan kicked a 39-yard field goal as Southern Cal built a 17-3 halftime lead.

A 1-yard dive by White in the third quarter was the Trojans' only second-half score until Jordan's dramatic field goal.

Montana completed 20 of his 41 passes for 358 yards, including 17 of 26 for 286 yards in the second half. He fired a 57-yard touchdown bomb to Kris Haines early in the fourth quarter to begin Notre Dame's comeback and marched his team 98 yards to set up a 1-yard scoring run by Pete Buchanan with 3:01 left to get the Irish within five points.

Notre Dame got the ball back on its 43-yard line after a Southern Cal punt, then Montana marched the Irish to the Southern Cal 2-yard line where he hit Holohan to put his team ahead for the first time.

The Rose Bowl-bound Trojans raised their record to 10-1 while the Irish, who will play in the Cotton Bowl, are 8-3.

Haines, the man Montana was looking for during the second-half surge, finished with nine catches for 179 yards. On what turned out to be a crucial play, however, Notre Dame's two-point conversion try following its last touchdown, Haines could not work his way free and Montana threw incomplete.

Sweeney had five receptions for 105 yards for the Trojans, while Williams caught three for 60 yards.

White, in addition to his running chores, caught four passes for 37 yards. His 205 yards rushing against the Irish gave him 1,608 for the season and Southern Cal still has one game remaining, at Hawaii next Saturday night.

The Trojans' defense, led by noseguard Rich Dimler and tackle Ty Sperling, effectively shut down the Notre Dame running game.

Cougars Dismayed By Defeat

said Yeoman. "We just weren't intense enough to win. I guess it was just our turn to have a letdown."

Yeoman remained calm while answering reporters' questions, until asked about the Cougars' offsides problems.

"I don't know," said a firmer Yeoman. "Some of our kids said that their (Tech's) defense was going on "down." That's our offensive snap count."

Yeoman was impressed with Tech runningback James Hadnot and quarterback Ron Reeves.

"I saw him (Hadnot) run over a couple of our players en route to the end zone for the 2-point conversion," recalled Yeoman.

In regard to Reeves, the Houston mentor said, "He's a fine athlete who should get better."

Though nobody thought about it at the time, a key play in the contest occurred on the first punt of the game.

Tech punter Maury Buford kicked a wobbly, line-drive boot which Cougar return man Eric Herring calmly fielded at the Houston 28. Herring then dashed up the middle, and after he beat the oncoming pursuit, cut down the left sideline and into the end zone to put the Cougars on the board quickly.

Herring's 72-yard punt return matched the third longest effort in Houston history.

"Looking back at it, the punt return hurt us," recalled Herring after the game. "We were definitely up, but getting on the scoreboard so quickly sort of relaxed us."

Of course at the time, Herring didn't realize he was hurting the Cougars' cause.

"The return was designed up the middle, because we noticed that Tech in some times will fan out when coming down to cover," said Herring. "That's why we designed the return to go up the middle."

And when did Herring realize he was going to be able to go the distance?

"When I got by the last defender," he quipped.

Besides Hadnot's determined 2-yard point conversion late in the fourth quarter, Yeoman had trouble pointing out a key in the game.

The Cougars and Tech stayed within a touchdown of one another the entire day. At the half, the two teams were deadlocked 14-14.

"We didn't make any adjustments at the half," said Yeoman. "We had so many mistakes in the first half that I didn't know when Tech stopped us or when we stopped ourselves."

The only question that remains now is, will the Cougars stop themselves from going to the Cotton Bowl?

Wolfpack Gets By Cavaliers 24-21

Moments before Rein's run, which came with 4:57 remaining, Virginia had staged a magnificent goal-line stand to hold onto a 21-17 lead gained under the direction of freshman quarterback Todd Kirtley.

BOSTON COLLEGE FALLS

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — Senior Dennis Dent rushed for 206 yards and two touchdowns to become the first 1,000-yard ground-gainer in Massachusetts history Saturday in leading the Minutemen to a 27-0 football victory over Boston College.

Sims Takes Pragmatic View Towards Success

NORMAN, Okla. (UPI) — University of Oklahoma running back Billy Sims, considered the favorite to win the Heisman Trophy, takes more of a pragmatic view of football than many of his teammates do.

To Sims, football is not just a game to be played win or lose, it's his profession. He likes to do other things in his spare time, even if it's just listening to jazz records on his stereo system.

"It's just another job," Sims said during interviews last week. "Of course, there's no cash salary involved yet, but it's still just another job." While football is not exactly a nine-to-five routine for the Oklahoma star, he says preparing for games is hard work, much of it the disagreeable kind. "I hate practice, in fact, everybody hates practice," Sims said, noting that a day last week was the first one he had had "off" since coming to OU in 1975.

To break the pressures of the game, Sims takes to drag racing and riding horseback at his great-grandmother's farm in Hooks, Texas. He lives with his great-grandmother during the summer months and says he will never really enjoy city living again after life on the farm.

Sims grew up in St. Louis, but he says he is glad he left. For example, someone tried to rob him while working a newspaper route for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. He said he held onto his money and ran, leaving the newspapers behind.

"Maybe that's why I got so fast," Sims said, noting he always preferred to run than fight in the tough St. Louis ghetto.

Even though he dislikes the practices and long hours that cause him to see football as work, he says it's worth it if it pays off.

This year, it has.

Sims' meteoric rise to the top ranks of college running backs is somewhat of an anticlimax for Oklahoma fans. His rise to prominence comes two years after the Hooks, Texas, high school star was among the most heavily recruited athletes in the country, but he failed to show any of his acrobatic aerials in his first two years with Oklahoma.

Sims' first two years were disappointing for many Oklahoma fans, who now often modestly describe him as the best running back in history.

Oklahomans take pride in their football players.

But even Sims admits this was a good year for him — he was finally able to shake off leg injuries that stifled his performance for his first two seasons.

He broke the Big Eight and Oklahoma rushing records for a single season with 1,762 yards, a figure four times as great as his 1977 rushing total. He led the nation in rushing with 163.4 yards per game, averaging 7.8 yards per carry.

Adding to those accomplishments, he scored 20 touchdowns and romped for more than 200 yards in four games this season.

Two factors will be working against Sims in winning the Heisman. First, he is a junior and only five juniors have ever won the award. Second, Sims fumbled twice against Nebraska. The last fumble allowed the Cornhuskers to score a fourth-quarter field goal.

Even though he played well against Oklahoma State the following week, scoring four touchdowns and gaining over 200 yards, the Heisman committee may not be able to forget the nationally televised Nebraska game.

"I have my bad days and my good ones — I'm human just like everyone else, but when you play football, people seem to forget," Sims said.

The standout yardage figures have brought the modest 6-foot junior some publicity, but Sims sees the attention as another distasteful part of his job.

"Sometimes you get too much publicity," said Sims, who claims he likes to spend much of his time alone, "just to think things out."

He says he even goes into hiding sometimes, heading for a friend's house where he cannot easily be found.

Sims may appear ungrateful for the publicity, but he says he is not.

For example, during a 25-minute interview session, television camera crews moved into his spotless dormitory room for a later interview, a local civic club president "dropped by" to ask Sims for a speaking engagement and the telephone rang six times with various callers, including an Oklahoma student who wanted to know if Sims was related to any of his West Coast relatives.

"I kind of wish the Heisman would be a surprise, without all that publicity," Sims said.

Sims says he is a somewhat private person, even though he does like to party with his roommate, teammates and friends.

He said he is prepared for a career in professional football "if I get the chance," but he is also ready to work in his academic field of recreational therapy.

He said he may have been influenced to work with recreation for the handicapped by an older brother who has a mild handicapped.

In his free time, Sims is often seen "spinning the wax," or playing disc jockey at a local night spot for friends; he does not get paid for his impromptu performances, but says he enjoys playing the disc jockey role.

Lineman Greg Roberts has been Sims' roommate and friend since they were freshman — a room any college coach would not mind moving to his school considering Roberts won the Outland Trophy today, naming him the country's outstanding lineman.

Spartans Get Share Of Big Ten Crown

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — The fact that Michigan State cannot go to a bowl game failed to dim the pleasure Saturday for Coach Darryl Rogers, whose Spartans routed Iowa 42-7. Michigan State wound up the season 8-3.

Meanwhile, Iowa Coach Bob Commings was understandably discouraged as he reviewed his team's sad performance and his own chances at staying at the helm for another year.

Rogers has long accepted the fact that MSU's NCAA probation would keep it out of a bowl game even if it managed to win the Big Ten title. The Spartans clinched a share of the championship with the first Michigan-MSU crown since 1966. Rogers wasn't too frustrated.

"We would love to go to the Rose Bowl, but we knew at the start we wouldn't be going," Rogers said. "Our goal was to win the Big Ten and we have. I'm very pleased with our team.

"We got off to a very good start today. If we hadn't dropped the ball a whole lot, it would have been better."

Rogers had strong praise for his rifle-armed quarterback Ed Smith, who set a Big Ten single-season record for touchdown passes with 16. Smith ended his career at Michigan State by hitting on 53 percent of his passes for a record 5,606 yards and 43 touchdowns.

"He's as good as any quarterback in the country," Rogers said. "I don't think there's a quarterback in the Big Ten as impressive as Eddie Smith. All our touchdowns today were audibles he called."

Smith himself downplayed his records. "We wanted the Big Ten title and we got it," he said. "This is the greatest feeling in the world."

Commings called Michigan State "the best team in the Big Ten. We thought that coming in, we thought that for a while.

"We saw a great football team win, but we think we could have played them if we played them a little better defensively. It was a lousy week to prepare a football team for a great team like Michigan State," he said. "We just weren't alive."

But Commings had no news about his future, following reports he might be fired after the Hawkeyes' dismal 2-9 season.

"I don't feel real good about anything right now," he said. "My future is up to the powers that be, but I will keep on fighting."

The defeat dropped Iowa to 2-6 in the Big Ten and 2-9 overall.

The game was never a contest, as Michigan State scored the first two times it had the ball and built up a 35-0 halftime lead.

Although the Spartans' league-leading offense sputtered at times, particularly in a lackluster second half, it ripped off several big plays to set up touchdowns.

Iowa, meanwhile, had little luck moving the ball. Throttled by their own mistakes and a rugged MSU defense, the Hawkeyes never threatened to score until late in the third period.

Michigan State scored on its third play from scrimmage, as Smith found flanker Kirk Gibson open up the middle and he outran the Iowa secondary to complete a 54-yard touchdown pass play.

The next time they had the ball, the Spartans moved 67 yards in seven plays to score. Fullback Lonnie Middleton charged for two big gains and Steve Smith — no relation to Ed — went around end for a 1-yard touchdown.

MSU scored again on the final play of the first quarter, Steve Smith sweeping eight yards for another TD. Tailback Leroy McGee set it up with a 33-yard gain.

Steve Smith set up the fourth score with a brilliant 55-yard punt return to the Iowa 6. After MSU lost yardage on a fumble, Ed Smith flipped a 10-yard scoring pass to Eugene Byrd.

Steve Smith dashed 33 yards off tackle after MSU got the ball back later in the second quarter, then swept around end for 38 more to set up the fifth Michigan State score. Ed Smith tossed one yard to Byrd for the tally.

Iowa finally got on the scoreboard late in the third quarter, moving 50 yards in 10 plays with quarterback Jeff Green passing 10 yards to fullback Jon Lazar for the score.

Freshman MSU tailback Derek Hughes added an 11-yard dash for a fourth quarter score.

Then the game was marred by a brief third-quarter fight, after which Gibson and Iowa cornerback Mario Pace were ejected from the game.

Rebels Bop Miss. St.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Freshman quarterback John Fourcade passed for one touchdown Saturday and guided Mississippi's opportunistic Rebels to a 27-7 Southeastern Conference football victory over a Mississippi State team plagued by fumbles and mistakes.

Fourcade completed a 57-yard pass to flanker Les Kimbrough, and the Rebels used a fumble recovery, a short punt and an interception to set up other scores.

State's favored Bulldogs cooperated in fashioning the upset by fumbling away three "sure" touchdowns of their own.

The Bulldogs also drew penalties that killed one other promising drive.

The keyed-up Rebels took field position early in the first quarter, registering a 44-yard margin on one punt exchange. Barefoot kicker Jim Miller boomed a 61-yard punt that put State in a hole, and State punter Tee Turner got only 17 yards when he tried to kick out.

He added a 43-yarder in the final quarter to boost his school record total for the season to 11.

Ole Miss got its first touchdown midway the second quarter after end John Peel recovered a Bulldog fumble at the State 26.

Fullback Leon Perry burst the final six yards for the first of his two touchdowns.

He got a fourth-quarter score after Ole Miss intercepted a desperation pass by State quarterback Dave Marler and returned it to the Bulldogs' eight.

Perry pushed the final three yards to the end zone.

State narrowed the gap to 17-7 in the [illegible] quarter when James Jones threw a [illegible]d halfback pass to split end Mardye [illegible]ole.

The statistics showed how the Bulldogs virtually beat themselves. They suffered three interceptions, four fumble losses and 120 yards in penalties while Ole Miss had no interceptions, two lost fumbles and 40 yards in penalties.

Fourcade, in his first starting role, completed six of 13 passes for 108 yards and added 58 more on 23 rushes. Perry led Rebel runners with 90 yards.

Marler completed 23 of 44 passes for 306 yards but there were the three interceptions. Jones led State runners with 67 yards.

In all, the Bulldogs piled up 449 yards in total offense to 342 for Ole Miss.

State lost its first big scoring chance shortly before intermission when Jones fumbled at the 5. The Bulldogs lost another in the fourth quarter when Marler fumbled at the Rebel 11 and minutes later Jones fumbled again at the Rebel 1.

Clemson Tigers Roar By South Carolina 41-23

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — An aggressive Clemson team went for touchdowns twice on fourth down, and both times tailback Lester Brown scored, as the 10th-ranked Tigers defeated arch-rival South Carolina 41-23 in a nonconference football game Saturday afternoon.

After scoring two 1-yard touchdowns in the first quarter, Brown added a third in the second half as Gator Bowl-bound Clemson ended its regular season at 10-1. Independent South Carolina finished the year at 5-5-1.

Clemson, which won the Atlantic Coast Conference championship last week over Maryland, dominated the first period, taking a 21-0 lead.

Brown became the second runningback in Clemson history to rush for more than 1,000 yards in a season. His first-half touchdowns were set up by fumbles by South Carolina's Zion McKinney on a kickoff return and Rick Sanford on a punt return.

Also scoring for Clemson were quarterback Steve Fuller on a one-yard run and fullback Tracy Perry on a six-yard burst. The Tiger's Obed Ariri kicked a 49-yard field goal three seconds before halftime, after a Rex Varn interception. Ariri also kicked a 23-yard field goal in the third period.

Three Clemson runningbacks gained more than 100 yards. Besides Brown's 121 yards, Fuller rushed for 108 and fullback Marvin Sims gained 104.

South Carolina's touchdowns came in the second quarter on a 41-yard pass from quarterback Garry Harper to freshman split end Horace Smith, and a one-yard keeper by Harper. The Gamecocks also scored in the second half on a 20-yard field goal by Britt Parrish and a two-yard run by tailback Johnny Wright.

Fuller, the ACC's offensive yardage leader, passed just two times in the first half and three times in the second half. He completed four passes — two of them to split end Jerry Butler, who finished the season with 54 receptions.

Clemson's David Sims was credited with a 71-yard punt when his third period kick sailed over South Carolina return men and bounced into the end zone. But he also had a 13-yard punt.

Fullback George Rogers led the Gamecocks with 123 yards rushing. Harper and Wright added 67 and 64 yards respectively.

Colgate Brushes Rutgers In Upset

PISCATAWAY, N.J. (AP) — Junior quarterback John Marzo engineered two second half drives as Colgate rallied to upset Rutgers 14-9 in college football action Saturday.

Rutgers jumped out to an 9-0 lead at half-time on three field goals by junior Kennan Startzell. The third was Startzell's 13th of the season, a school record.

Marzo, who had started the game and was replaced in the second period, directed his team 82 yards on Colgate's first possession in the second half, scoring himself on a five-yard run.

As the fourth period began, Marzo found wide-reciever Dick Slenker open and connected for a 28-yard scoring play. The touchdown concluded a 12-play, 99-yard drive that began after Rutgers' punter Deron Cherry trapped the visitors deep in their own territory.

The Scarlet Knights, who completed the regular season with a 9-2 record, had two opportunities to score late in the game, but a hard-hitting Red Raider defense stiffened.

Mid-way through the final period, Rutgers linebacker Jeff Blanchard intercepted a Marzo pass at the Colgate five-yard line. However, Rutgers was stopped as quarterback Bob Hering was sacked in a fourth down pass attempt.

Late in the fourth period, Rutgers took over again near mid-field but a desperation pass by Hering was intercepted by Colgate's Paul Lawler at the Red Raiders 16-yard line.

Rutgers now will have until Dec. 16 to prepare for its first bowl appearance when it will open the Garden State Bowl against Arizona State at Giants Stadium in the Meadowlands.

Plainview Bulldogs Blast Amarillo High 28-0

By RUSS PARSONS
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

AMARILLO — At Dick Bevins Stadium here, they sound a siren at the end of each quarter.

When the Amarillo Sandies heard the [illegible]ine at the end of the first period Satur[illegible] afternoon, they should have taken [illegible]er. They should have evacuated the premises. They should have packed into the bus and headed for the nearest air raid shelter. . .

Anything but what they did — stick around.

Because Plainview overcame a scoreless first period to bomb the Sandies 28-0 and advance into the regional championship game of the state AAAA football playoffs.

The blitz began when Bulldog quarterback Scott Sherwood looped a 59-yard touchdown pass to end Jay Miller on the first play of the second period.

And it didn't stop until Sherwood connected with another receiver, Arnold Pardo, on a 25-yard score with only two minutes to play in the game.

The first score brought the Plainview fans (a word which is derived from the word "fanatics") out into the open with rising-sun banners blazing.

Actually they represent the Bulldogs' "Angry Red" slogan, but any veteran of Pearl Harbor or more than one John Wayne movie knows what they look like.

But Plainview's win was anything but a sneak attack. The Bulldogs had already beaten the Sandies 34-6 once before this season.

"We did two things today that we didn't do last time," coach Greg Sherwood said. "We played good defense and we passed the ball."

Actually, Scott Sherwood (the coach's son) only completed two passes, but Bert Jones couldn't have been more effective. Both went for touchdowns, totalling 84 yards.

The real hero offensively was sturdy fullback Royce Coleman. He picked up 134 yards on 24 carries and scored simply, it seemed, by running over anyone who was unfortunate enough to stand in his way.

The Plainview defense also played well, holding Amarillo to only 157 yards total offense.

Sherwood lost the flip of the coin following the game, so his troops will travel to El Paso to play in the Sun Bowl against Andress High School next Saturday afternoon at 2 p.m.

"They were a tough team," Sherwood (the coach) said of the Sandies. "We had to fight the whole game. I'm really impressed with the way they got after us. The most hurt us some but it hurt them too."

Purdue Flattens Indiana 20-7 In Game For Old Oaken Bucket

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Indiana Coach Lee Corso personally delivered the Old Oaken Bucket to the Purdue dressing room Saturday and said the Boilermakers, "just beat us fair and square."

The bucket, symbol of the long football rivalry between the two Indiana schools, will be housed here for at least a year, thanks to the Boilermakers' 20-7 victory.

"There's no question about it, they were the better team," said Corso, whose Hoosiers had beaten Purdue the past two years. "Strategy didn't win this game, execution did."

Purdue Coach Jim Young, who will take the Boilermakers into battle once more this season against Georgia Tech in the Peach Bowl on Christmas Day, said the keys were the running of junior Mike Augustyniak and freshman Wally Jones, plus the defense against Indiana's ground game.

"Defensively, we did an excellent job of stopping the run," Young said. "Last year, they ran up and down the field on us. This time, we forced them to pass and they did a pretty good job, but that really isn't their game."

Augustyniak, who had 135 rushing yards, and Jones, who wound up with 103 — both career highs — were pressed into action because of ankle injuries to starters John Macon and Russell Pope.

"Augustyniak ran well last week at Michigan," Young said. "A runner who goes like that ought to have a chance. Maybe we should have looked closer at him earlier. I'm proud of the way Jones and Augustyniak ran the ball, hard and tough."

Purdue's sophomore quarterback Mark Herrmann, who injured his neck in the loss at Michigan, started against Indiana and passed for 135 yards. That gave him 4,191 for his career and moved him into third place behind Mike Phipps and Bob Griese among Purdue's career leaders.

"I felt pretty good," said Herrmann, who practiced for the first time last week on Thursday, wearing a neck collar. "I took some shots (from Indiana), but none affected me. Our trainers did a tremendous job. They got me well."

Young said he had not thought much about the Peach Bowl "because we didn't want to get distracted from this game. But we'll definitely take the next week off."

The two teams were scoreless after one period, but Purdue took the lead on McCall's 1-yard touchdown run on the second play of the second quarter. Macon left the game after the second play of that drive that began at the Purdue 29.

The Hoosiers, held to just one first down in the first period, got excellent field position with a 56-yard kickoff return by Darrick Burnett to the Purdue 34, but the drive ended four plays later when Willie Harris intercepted a fourth-down pass at the Boilermaker 14.

Purdue was unable to advance on its next possession, but the Boilermakers got the ball back midway through the period and went ahead 10-0 on Sovereen's first field goal, a 20-yarder. A 43-yard pass from Herrmann to Mike Harris and three runs totaling 19 yards by Jones set up Sovereen's field goal on fourth down.

Indiana then launched its only touchdown drive from its own 17-yard line. Clifford passed for 57 yards during that drive, including 22 to Mike Friede on fourth down that set up his 4-yard touchdown pass to Friede three plays later.

Purdue struck back quickly, however, and moved to the Indiana 25 in three plays — a 23-yard run by Augustyniak, a 17-yard pass to Bart Burrell and a holding penalty on Indiana. It took five more plays to get to the Indiana 14 before Sovereen kicked his second field goal, a 31-yarder, with a minute remaining in the half.

Indiana had one more chance to score, moving from its own 25 to the Purdue 30, but a fourth-down pass by Clifford was incomplete in the end zone with two seconds left before intermission.

Permian Advances With 17-7 Victory

ABILENE (Special) — The Permian Panthers showed once again that their bite is worse than their purr as they took a second-quarter, 7-0 lead away from the Lewisville Fighting Farmers in the fourth period to win the Class AAAA bi-district duel 17-7.

It looked as though the Farmers were going to boycott Permian as Lewisville halfback Dale Brown took a 1-yard run into the end zone to put the Farmers on the board early in the second quarter. Clay Flannigan kicked the PAT to make the score 7-0 in favor of the Farmers.

However, the Farmers' toil on the field was all for nothing as the Panthers struck back in the opening minutes of the fourth quarter.

The Panthers were hungry for a score and Vic Vines put the meat on the table when he rifled a 16-yard pass to tight end Tom Strickland for a Permian score. Robert Orosko made the point after and the game took a different outlook in the manner of 7-7.

Then after a Lewisville fumble and a stymied Permian offense drive, Orosko added 3 more points to the Panthers' tally with a 46-yard field, hiking the score to Permian 10-7.

The Panthers finally filled their hungar for points late in the fourth period as fullback Rodger Lightfoot dashed 17 yards for a TD to give the Panthers a commanding 16-7 lead late in the fourth period.

Orosko made the PAT good for the second time and the final score showed that the Lewisville Fighting Farmers had lost their hopes for a successful crop in a 17-7 loss to Permian.

The Panthers' victory advanced them to regional play and they will meet Fort Worth Arlington Heights here next Friday night.

Vols Trip Kentucky By 29-14

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Alan Duncan booted five field goals, four of them from 40 yards or more, to hand Tennessee a 29-14 victory over Kentucky in a Southeastern Conference football game Saturday.

The 175-pound sophomore opened the scoring with a 48-yard field goal in the first quarter and added four more in the second half as the Vols and Wildcats matched each other with two touchdowns apiece.

The only attempt Duncan missed, in an effort to set an SEC record, was from 54 yards with a minute left. His five successful scores tied the previous record set by Auburn's Jorge Portela last year against Florida.

Duncan's other field goals covered 40 and 42 yards in the third quarter and 36 and 42 yards in the final period.

The loss pinned Kentucky with a season-ending record of 4-6-1 overall and 2-4 in the SEC. Tennessee, 4-5-1 overall and 2-3 in the conference, has a chance for a break-even season by beating Vanderbilt in the season finale next week.

Frank Foxx put Tennessee on top 10-0 in the second quarter with a 1-yard touchdown. Kentucky came back with 1:11 left in the first half when split end Chris Hill took a 9-yard pass from quarterback Larry McCrimmon for an 11-yard touchdown.

Wingback Randy Brooks narrowed Tennessee's margin to 16-14 at the end of the third quarter with a 1-yard touchdown plunge following a 67-yard drive in nine plays.

Tar Heels Nip Duke In Rally

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Running back Amos Lawrence sprinted 11 yards up the middle with 13 seconds remaining and tight end Bob Loomis scored on a touchdown pass from quarterback Matt Kupec within the last three minutes to lead North Carolina to a 16-15 thriller over Duke Saturday and the season finale for both teams.

With 2:46 left to play, Kupec hit Loomis for a touchdown and a drive that went 66 yards and 10 plays. Kupec connected with split end Jim Rouse with less than a minute remaining as a screaming crowd of 40,000 rose to its feet.

Lawrence, who gained 167 yards rushing, got his second consecutive 1,000-[illegible]rushing season with 1,043 yards.

[illegible]-point conversion after Lawrence's [illegible] score failed as the Tar Heels improved to 5-6 and evened their Atlantic Coast Conference record at 3-3.

Flying Eagles Make Visit To Cardinal Nest

By The Associated Press

The Philadelphia Eagles, having received the season's biggest gift last Sunday, are looking for a way to avoid offering the St. Louis Cardinals a present this time out.

A week ago the Eagles were less than half a minute away from their sixth loss. Then the New York Giants fumbled the ball away, defensive back Herman Edwards picked it up and ran for the touchdown for a 19-17 victory to put the Eagles' record at 7-5 and keep alive their playoff hopes.

Now the Eagles face the Cardinals — birds of prey as far as Philadelphia is concerned. St. Louis has beaten Philly nine times in a row, most recently 16-10 for the first of what has become four straight triumphs by the previously winless Cards.

In Sunday's other National Football League games it's Los Angeles at Cleveland, New Orleans at Atlanta, the Giants at Buffalo, New England at Baltimore, the New York Jets at Miami, Cincinnati at Houston, Minnesota at Green Bay, San Diego at Kansas City, Tampa Bay at Chicago and Seattle at Oakland. Monday night's game is Pittsburgh at San Francisco.

On Thursday, Detroit defeated Denver 17-14 and Dallas demolished Washington 37-10.

"I know from talking to some of their players in the off-season that the Eagles really believe we have the hex on 'em," says tackle Dan Dierdorf of St. Louis. "It's one of those things you try not to think about."

Philadelphia, beaten in the teams' first meeting on Jim Hart's touchdown bomb to rookie wide receiver Dave Stief, a play covering 55 yards, was perhaps one play away from pulling out another victory. A last-minute end-zone interception by St. Louis cornerback Roger Wehrli of a Ron Jaworski pass nailed down the Eagles triumph.

"They were a play from beating us. They were inside the 10 ... and we were fortunate to stop them," said Coach Bud Wilkinson. "The Eagles have great incentives. They can get a playoff spot if they keep winning."

Even if they don't win all their remaining games (the Eagles play Minnesota, Dallas and the Giants again), Coach Dick Vermeil believes his Eagles are legitimate contenders for a wild-card playoff berth.

"I would say 10-6 would definitely do it," he said. "Nine and seven has a slight chance. Now it's only a four-game schedule."

Los Angeles has a chance to become the first team to wrap up a divisional title. The Rams, the National Conference's winningest team at 10-2 (tied for the league's best record with Pittsburgh of the American Conference), lead Atlanta in the NFC West by three games. If the Rams beat Cleveland and the Falcons lose to New Orleans, LA will have a four-game edge with three to go.

With the exception of the Steelers' two-game lead over Houston in the AFC Central Division, the rest of the races are very tight — New England leading Miami by a game in the AFC East, Denver and Oakland separated by one-half game in the AFC West, Dallas and Washington one game apart in the NFC East and Minnesota and Green Bay tied for first in the NFC Central race.

Cincinnati Battles Houston, Campbell

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers, coming off a big Monday night performance for the second time this season, host Cincinnati in the Astrodome Sunday, and this time around the Bengals will have the Oilers' undivided attention.

The Oilers, campaigning for their first playoff berth since 1969, upset Pittsburgh 24-17 Oct. 23 on Monday night, but were caught napping six days later when Cincinnati beat them 28-13 for its first victory of the season.

The rematch is scheduled for a 3 p.m. kickoff in the Astrodome, and Oiler wide receiver Ken Burrough says there will be no sneak attack this time by the Bengals.

"We're on a winning streak now and that's just what it's going to take to get into the playoffs," Burrough said. "We remember what Cincinnati did to us, and I promise it won't happen again. The Oilers aren't going to lose in the Astrodome."

That's strong talk, but the Oilers had plenty of strong play Monday night when they came from behind in the final 12:20 of the game to defeat the Miami Dolphins 35-30.

"It's unusual to be playing the same team that we played after our last Monday night game," Oiler Coach O.A. "Bum" Phillips said. "But I think we'll be ready to play them. This might sound silly, but I think we were ready the last time."

Houston goes into the game with an 8-4 record and a good chance at a wild-card playoff spot in the American Football Conference's Central division. The Bengals, at 1-11, can only play a spoiler's role.

The Oilers have three of their remaining four games, including the rematch with Pittsburgh, in the Astrodome, and Phillips said the local fans play a big part in Houston's chances.

"It's encouraging to see 35-and 36-year-old guys coming off the field all fired up because of the crowd," Phillips said. "There's no way we could have lost that game (Miami). And we couldn't have won it in Miami."

Sunday's game will be a return to Houston for Bengal Coach Homer Rice, who resigned as head football coach and athletic director at Rice University early this year to become quarterback coach at Cincinnati. He replaced Bill Johnson midway through the season.

The Oilers will be fueled by rookie Earl Campbell, who rushed 199 yards on 28 carries and scored four touchdowns last week against the Dolphins. He leads the NFL in rushing with 1,143 yards.

Houson's come-from-behind defeat of Miami marked the seventh time in eight victories the Oilers overcame deficits to win the game.

"Before, we didn't have the talent," explained Oiler quarterback Dan Pastorini. "But now we go into our games with confidence. Having Earl varies our offense tremendously. Before, we would pass on third and four. Now we run or pass."

Nebraska Regent Against OU Game

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb. (AP) — University of Nebraska Regent Robert Prokop of Wilber, Neb., wants the Board of Regents to vote against the Cornhuskers' contract to play in the Orange Bowl on New Year's Night.

Prokop told the Nebraska City News Press he has asked Ed Schwartzkopf of Lincoln, Neb., regent chairman, to call a special session so the regents can vote on the contract.

Prokop maintains a contract has not been approved by each Big Eight governing board and lacks validity, since the Nebraska regents have not formally approved the contract.

Nebraska was scheduled to play in the Orange Bowl game after its upset of the Oklahoma Sooners and there were indications the Huskers would play Penn State.

However, Nebraska lost the following week to Missouri, Penn State looked elsewhere for a team to play and the Oklahoma Sooners were scheduled in the Orange Bowl for a "rematch."

Some Hi-Fidelity tips on buying Stereo equipment

If you have between $449 and $759 to spend on a component system, invest in one with Advent speakers. Find out why theirs is the best-selling speaker in the country.

THE SALESMANS CHOICE

If you're planning to spend more than $750 on a stereo system, make sure it sounds better than this one (above) THE NEW ADVENT LOUD—SPEAKERS, THE TECHNICS SA-400 AM-FM STEREO RECEIVER and the Technics SL-230 AUTOMATIC BELT DRIVE TURNTABLE WITH BASE and DUST COVER. SHURE M-91ED STEREO CARTRIDGE...

HI-FIDELITY PRICE $759

THE STARTER

TECHNICS SA-200 AM-FM STEREO RECEIVER, with the TECHNICS SL210 BELT DRIVE TURNTABLE WITH BASE & DUST COVER. THE SHURE M70 EJ CARTRIDGE AND ADVENT-3 SPEAKERS.

MORE PEOPLE BUY THE ADVENT LOUDSPEAKER THAN ANY OTHER SPEAKER IN AMERICA.

When they were first introduced in 1969, no one had ever heard of Advent speakers. No one would believe that an inexpensive, two-way speaker could sound terrific, even though it did. But word-of-mouth advertising has changed all that. Now the Advent Loudspeaker is the best selling speaker in America and has been for over 4 years now. There's a good reason. It accurately reproduces every sound your records, tapes, or FM broadcasts have to offer. And the Advent/2 and Advent/3 speakers deliver everything the Advent Loudspeaker delivers except for the very bottom one-half octave of bass response.

Advent speakers are smaller in size as well as in cost. But they sound big and detailed and accurate. In fact, Advent makes the only small speaker that can reproduce all 10 octaves of music. So you can still have a roomful of sound without a roomful of gadgetry.

THE REAL THING

HI-FIDELITY PRICE $499.00

WE COULD SELL THESE SYSTEMS FOR LESS MONEY WITH CHEAPER COMPONENTS.

But we've made sure the components are perfectly matched. We've selected only those name-brand components that would give maximum performance, complement the other components, and come as close as possible to the high standards of our more expensive systems. We chose receivers to drive the speakers smoothly, pull radio stations into your living room by the bundle and keep them there. We chose turntables that take care of your records, yet don't let their sound go unexplored.

YOU CAN SPEND MORE (AND GET MORE) BUT DOLLAR FOR DOLLAR, YOU WON'T.

A lot of people who own medium low-cost stereo systems have had to settle for mediocre sounding radio-phonograph set-ups because of all the other things money has to go for. Like food.

One Year Speaker Exchange means that one year from purchase date, you can exchange the speaker system or systems for any speaker or systems with a selling price of $150 or more each.

5 yr. Five Year Protection Contract is in addition to the regular manufacturer's warranty. All electronic components are covered for 5 years on parts and 3 years on labor. Record and tape equipment is covered by a full 3 year warranty on parts and labor.

20-Day Exchange Privilege assures you of satisfaction after you buy. You may exchange any piece of equipment for another regardless of price within the 20 day period. If you happen to purchase a defective unit this exchange eliminates you owning a "lemon".

It's easy to get price deals on stereo equipment these days. Just look through this paper and you'll see stereo equipment marked down page after page. But most deals on stereo systems are like any other kind. Pay a cheap price and get a cheap product. In the long run, it's not going to satisfy you, and it's more likely to break down.

AT HI-FIDELITY, we aren't trying to give you the lowest possible price on stereo systems, we're trying to give you the best value, dollar for dollar. We've put together good sounding stereos in the $750 to $1000 range...and that's an art.

DON'T TAKE OUR WORD FOR IT.

Talk to someone who owns a pair of Advent speakers. Then listen to a pair. The only way you'll be able to hear the detailed, natural, clear sound of these systems is with good old fashioned listening test.

To let you compare the Advent speakers to other speakers, we've installed new speaker comparison devices in our Sound Rooms. It lets you compare two speakers of varying efficiency at the same volume level. Which is the only way to tell which one actually sounds better. Any other way can misguide you. Especially if you're a novice. Visit our Sound Rooms. Bring a record you'd like to hear more from. See why we say that you can't buy a better sounding stereo system for less money. Not from us, not from anyone.

Controversial Carp May Enter Lakes

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The weed-eating Chinese grass carp: (a) may have no significant effect in eliminating lake-clogging hydrilla, (b) could strip every plant from the bottom of the state's waterways, (c) maybe a and b.

The answer, according to scientists with the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, seems to be (c). And this paradox has led the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission to postpone a decision on whether to allow the introduction of grass carp — banned in more than 30 states — until January.

The proliferation of the hydrilla and related lake-bottom plants has, in recent years, led to pleas from many quarters for some means to control the vegetation.

In the past, chemicals have been used with limited success in contolling hydrilla. The importation of nutria several years ago in hopes the rodents would stuff thenselves on hydrilla turned out to be a disaster as the rat-like critters displayed a greater affinity for lake-side lawns than in-lake weeds.

Only a few years ago was the grass carp — also known as the Chinese white amur — brought stateside from behind the Bamboo Curtain.

It was immediately established that the grass carp does indeed eat lake vegetation. In some experiments where the carp were turned loose in closed ponds, they chewed their way from two pounds to up to 65, eradicating every sprig of vegetation in the water.

There is evidence that would indicate that the fish nibbled at tree roots when the weeds ran out — and some unverified complaints the carp chewed up several inches of grass growing out of the water on the banks.

Yet, in other experiments, the carp apparently have proved to be only moderate eaters, making no significant dent in waterway vegetation.

Bill Provine, TPWD fisheries scientist, told the commission at a recent meeting his investigation of the grass carp has revealed the fish has been utilized with mixed results — from the complete stripping of a pond of all vegetation to no substantial control at all.

Provine noted the grass carp can reproduce only under limited conditions similar to those necessary for reproduction of the striped bass. Since the stripers have been known to reproduce in several Texas streams, scientists fear the carp could escape from experimental reservoirs, making their way into other Texas rivers and destroy game fish habitat by razing the state's waterways.

A Lake Conroe citizens association, concerned about the proliferation of hydrilla in that reservoir over the past three years, is asking the commission to allow the use of grass carp in the lake on an experimental basis.

Commission members acknowledge they have received dozens of letters asking for some help with the hydrilla problem in that lake, but said they are reluctant to allow the introduction of the grass carp due to the risk of infestation of other streams.

Alternatives to the grass carp — chemicals and mechanical harvesting — are expensive, Lake Conroe association members complained. They also countered TPWD staff estimates that stocking Lake Conroe with adequate grass carp would cost $1.5 million, saying that they had quotes from Arkansas fish farmers putting the stocking price at about $240,000.

Commission members yielded without any apparent reluctance a request by the Lake Conroe group to withhold a decision on the grass carp until the next meeting in January.

"We're deeply sympathetic with you people," Commission member Louis Stumberg, San Antonio said. "We just don't know what could happen."

Road Construction Cost Program Aired

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Transportation Department is unveiling a program aimed at holding the line on rising highway construction costs.

Transportation Secretary Brock Adams says he has instructed all Federal Highway Administration regional and division offices to work closely with state agencies to ensure that the federal-aid highway construction program is examined for potential cost-reduction methods.

"I have ordered that in cases where bids exceed estimated cost by as much as 7 percent that such projects be re-examined to determine if contract proposals should be modified ...," Adams said. He said the move is an effort to support President Carter's anti-inflation program.

SUPERSTITIOUS COWBOYS — While they may not tie rabbit's feet to their boots, even rough-and-tumble rodeo riders have good luck charms. For instance, a clean white shirt and mismatched socks supposedly are very lucky. Kary Reid, a Texas Tech sociology graduate student, explored the idea of superstitious cowboys and came away with some interesting facts. His efforts won him the first Mid-South Sociological Association's Undergraduate Paper Award for 1978. (Staff Photo by Milton Adams)

Rodeos Have Own Type Of Black Cats, Four-Leaf Clovers

By RHONA SCHWARTZ
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Rodeo riders are unique individuals. Some call them brave, some foolhardy, but all admire them for the skill and courage they display.

The idea that these seemingly fearless riders rely on superstitions and rituals to help maintain the courage to climb into the chute time after time is a paradox which fascinated a Texas Tech sociologist.

Kary Reid, now a graduate student in sociology, explored this phenomenon in a paper which last month won him the first Mid-South Sociological Association's Undergraduate Student Paper Award for 1978.

Reid's enthusiasm for rodeo life differs sharply from his appeareance. During a recent interview he sat in his office chair, casually dressed in jeans and western shirt. His long, reddish beard, abundance of turquoise jewelry and, most of all, the stud earring in his left ear, made rodeos seem an unlikely interest for such a person.

"I wrote this paper as part of an individual statistics class requirement last fall. I wanted a subject in which I could get my hands dirty, something new and different," he explained.

"I also have always liked the rodeo, having grown up here in the good old cultural hub of the South Plains, and thought it would make a good topic. I originally thought to do something on rodeo clowns, but couldn't find enough information.

"I started interviewing people and hit upon superstitions. It seemed to be a pretty important part of (rodeo) activity since more than one or two people were familiar with them," he said.

In his paper Reid said the rodeo participant may feel that by abiding by certain superstitions and practicing certain rituals, he or she will be brought closer to the goal of winning. He defined rituals as "personalized ceremonies" to which the rodeo person consciously adheres.

Some of the rituals described to Reid include wearing the same shirt (or sometimes the same pants, socks and underwear as well) while on a winning streak until a loss occurs; putting on boots, chaps, spurs, hat and vest in a particular order before each event; and "hexing," a ritual which hints of black magic and is performed mainly "among ropers of either sex and female barrel racers."

Hexing involves drawing a circle in the dirt, writing the initials of the party to be hexed in the circle and stabbing the initials with a knife, Reid was told.

Other rituals described to Reid include spitting and tapping the left shoulder three times and kissing one's horse behind the left ear.

Reid defined "superstitions" as those acts commonly recognized by rodeo participants as a group.

These include never wearing yellow or eating popcorn or peanuts in the arena and never borrowing or even playing with someone's crutches.

"If this occurs, the owner must burn them as soon as possible after he uses them, or he will meet with disaster," Reid learned.

One superstition ardently believed in is passing an ambulance on the way to the rodeo grounds. If this happens, Reid was told, "He (the cowboy) may as well return to his hotel room or leave for the next rodeo because doom is 'only a ride away.'"

Rodeo life at this point looks pretty grim, but there are things to do for good luck. Cowboys advised Reid "to wear different colored socks, tie one's rope onto the saddle with three knots and always place the hat with the brim up to keep the luck from running out."

A good haircut and a white shirt also are considered good luck charms, Reid said, as is visiting the neighborhood massage parlor.

Why are these so important to rodeo participants?

"Rodeo is a stress-seeking activity. The cowboy or cowgirl is out for a bit of adventure. It's a psychological high," Reid said. "They're out for this stress, this excitement, but they need these superstitions to keep from going over the edge.

"They'll help explain a bad ride, a broken arm or the loss of money. They won't have to say, 'I just rode bad,'" Reid said.

He joined the Tech Rodeo Association and worked behind the scenes, pulling flanks off bulls and shovelling dirt in the arena.

"The rodeo guys were really nice and helpful, and they accepted me," he said, recalling that at the time his hair was longer than its present shoulder length. "I helped prepare and participate in the all-school rodeo last year as the participant-observation part of my study."

Reid also rode a bull last year for the first time. This in sociological terms is what is known as "going native," when the observer is no longer objective. It is considered strictly unprofessional, he said, but a lot of fun.

"I felt I had to prove myself. I figured that if the guys thought I was interested enough to get my hands dirty and get in there and work, then maybe I wasn't such a bad kid after all," he grinned.

HEAD OVER HEELS TO JAIL — After being alerted that someone who wasn't supposed to be in a construction trailer at El Centro College in Dallas, was rummaging around inside, police surrounded the trailer and waited for the would-be burglar's exit from the building and into custody. The suspect was handcuffed but police were presented with the problem of how to get him over a wall. The answer: head first. Officer I.D. Phillips gently lowers the suspect, then drops him. Police said the suspect uttered appropriate words of appreciation. (AP Laserphoto)

PEOPLE — PLACES — THINGS

Boy Inherits Fortune

LONDON (AP) — Four-year-old Peregrine Cust woke up Saturday to find himself a national celebrity — and a millionaire.

"The boy worth 3 million pounds" said one of the many headlines in Britain's tabloid press.

Peregrine had just inherited $6 million dollars in his grandfather's will.

Grandpa in this case was the late Baron Brownlow, former lord-in-waiting to King Edward VIII, the Duke of Windsor.

Baron Brownlow, who died in July, named his young grandson as principal heir in his will, which was published Friday, although the toddler will have to wait until he is 25 before he can touch the money.

The baron was a central figure in the abdication crisis of 1936 when he escorted American divorcee Wallis Simpson to France just before the king told the nation he was giving up the throne to marry her.

Said Lady Brownlow of her millionaire son: "We haven't even tried to explain to him about the inheritance ... after all he's only 4½."

'Quiet Town' Chief Shaken

SEDALIA, Mo. (AP) — A street-wise former New York cop who came to the Midwest to take a small town police chief's job is finding out Sedalia is not as peaceful as he might have hoped.

"They told me it was a quiet town," said Philip H. Schnabel, "and I believed them."

Since he took the job just eight weeks ago, the 44-year-old former Harlem foot patrolman has had to cope with four homicides, an arson fire, an armed bank robbery, an attempted bank robbery and, to top it off, allegations of political corruption in City Hall.

Schnabel says he took the job because he was tired of commuting to the Manhattan office where he was a $31,000-a-year lieutenant commander of 200 officers, and preferred to be a department chief.

But he didn't really count on the crime he's encountered.

"My belief was what most Easterners share," he said. "That the Midwest is very law-and-order-conscious and that the public really backs up the police department. I didn't think you had that much violent crime here.

"I was wrong. I've had an education on that."

Abandoned Steeples Sold

ROCHESTER, Minn. (AP) — Two southeastern Minnesota families have discovered the ideal outdoor playhouses for their children — abandoned church steeples.

The steeples, once towering above the Bethany Moravian Church in Altura and the United Church of Christ in Grand Meadow, were purchased when the churches voted to build new facilities.

John and Mary Benedett of rural St. Charles bought the Moravian Church steeple at a church auction for $70 and moved it to their family farm.

In Grand Meadow, Randall and Mary Vanatta bought the vacant United Church of Christ building, transformed it into a house and removed the steeple.

Santas Given Instructions

NEW YORK (AP) — Garlic and onions are out and you must stay near your chimney if you want to be a successful sidewalk Santa, according to the Volunteers of America.

Launching its 82nd annual Christmas campaign Friday, VOA officials gave final instructions to some 40 men who will wear the familiar red suit and white beard and ring their bells for Christmas contributions along New York City's sidewalks.

Don't

—Don't lean on your chimney.

—Don't eat, smoke or drink on duty.

—Don't visit with friends or other Santa Clauses while on duty.

—Don't overdo the "Ho, ho, ho" bit. Be jolly with taste.

Do:

—Call attention to yourself. Wave to passers-by. Wish everyone a Merry Christmas. Mean it.

—Ring your bell so it can be heard. A free-swinging up and down stroke adds a little zest.

—When asked by children why there are so many other Santa Clauses around, explain that you all are Santa's helpers.

Language Found Slipping

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — U.S. Commissioner of Education Ernest L. Boyer says telephones, television, computers and other inventions should share the blame with schools for the decline of language.

"Written language has declined because of our inventions and today, because of new technology, millions of people can quite literally go through life never having to write more than their signatures at the bottom of a credit slip," Boyer told the annual convention of the National Council of Teachers of English on Thursday.

Boyer said schools also deserve blame for misuse of the language and educators must again give top priority to English.

Vesco Arrival Probed

HONOLULU (AP) — U.S. Marshals and FBI agents are investigating unconfirmed reports that fugitive financier Robert Vesco has arrived on the island of Kauai, possibly to surrender himself to authorities.

VESCO

The unconfirmed reports, which surfaced in newspapers on Friday, said Vesco and three others flew from Honolulu to Kauai's Lihue Airport on Monday in a Cessna-172 aircraft. The airport tower is closed at that hour.

Such an aircraft did land in Lihue at the time Vesco reportedly arrived, said state airport Director Owen Miyamoto. A security guard logged the landing, but there is no record of the passengers' names, he said.

Vesco, 42, is wanted by federal marshals on warrants issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission. He fled first to Costa Rica, then to the Bahamas to escape five criminal indictments charging him with embezzling more than $200 million dollars in a series of stock schemes.

He also is charged with making an illegal $250,000 contribution to Richard Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

Audit Called 'Too Much'

SEATTLE (AP) — Is the IRS giving you headaches? Consider the case of Darrell and Gloria Lester. Their income tax returns have been audited every year except 1976 for the past 23 years.

In all those audits since 1955, Mrs. Lester says the IRS has found only one mistake — worth $180, which they paid, with interest. That mistake, Mrs. Lester adds, was made by their accountant.

Mrs. Lester, 50, decided enough was enough when she received an IRS directive to appear on Dec. 5 with last year's financial records to answer questions about deductions less than $50.

"Twenty-three years of it is too much," she said Friday. "I'm just not going to do it. They can do whatever they will to me, but I'm just not going in to see them again."

Lester is a Greyhound bus driver. His wife is a nurse.

Dennis Tsujimoto, branch chief examiner for the Revenue Service in Seattle, said he had no knowledge of the Lesters' ordeal and could not discuss a specific case, but that the Lester's complaint would be looked into.

"Every year it's something else," said Mrs. Lester. "With all those millions of people, you'd think they wouldn't pick on one couple for so long," she said.

Tennis Buff Fiddles Around

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — While others are trying to serve aces at the Flamingo Park tennis courts, Phillip Aaron is likely to be serving up a helping of "Fiddler on the Roof" or "Swan Lake."

Aaron, 39, is a tennis buff and also a professional violinist with a penchant for early morning practice.

So, a few years ago, local tennis players were surprised to hear the strains of violin music. They found Aaron beneath a tree, playing while he waited for a doubles game.

Since then he usually arrives at the courts with two tennis rackets and one violin.

Aaron says he spends part of each year in Miami Beach and part in Milwaukee, where he performs an act called "The Talking Violin" in hotels and social halls.

HELD IN PEOPLE'S TEMPLE SLAYINGS — A man identified by authorities as Charles Edward Beikman, 43, of Indianapolis, Ind., is led Saturday from the Georgetown Magistrate's Court in Guyana by security personnel. Beikman was charged with the slaying of four members of the People's Temple at the sect's Georgetown headquarters on Nov. 18. (AP Laserphoto)

Man Charged With Four Cult Killings

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Charles Edward Beikman, accused of murdering four fellow members of the Peoples Temple cult, was a "God-fearing, law-abiding man" when he lived in the Beech Grove section of Indianapolis, his brother recalled Saturday.

"He was just an average American boy," Dale Beikman, 52, the oldest of 12 children, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

Charles Beikman, 43, was arraigned on murder charges Saturday in the deaths of four persons at the sect's Jonestown commune in Guyana. The dead, earlier thought to have been among the more than 900 suicide victims Nov. 18, were found with their throats cut.

Charles Beikman joined the Rev. Jim Jones' movement when it began in Indianapolis in 1952, his brother said.

"He was in it from the very start," the elder Beikman recalled. "He got married and was buying a house. Then they just up and sold their house, started with the temple and moved to California, all in the name of religion."

Beikman said there's "no damn way" his brother could have killed anyone.

"He rode quite often at night with the policemen out here," Beikman said. "He was a very law-abiding citizen. He was well-liked by the community."

After Charles Beikman, his wife, Rebecca, and their two sons moved to California, the brother said he received a card saying, "We're going as missionaries to South America."

"That was quite a while ago," the elder Beikman said.

Beikman said he blames his brother's current situation on Jones, whom he described as "that fanatic madman."

Now, the relatives are awaiting word on the fate of Beikman's family.

"The wife and the youngest boy are unaccounted for. They're neither on the death list nor the survivor list," the brother said the family was told.

Firm Changes Name Due To Purported Link With Temple

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A Portland transportation company said Saturday that it changed its name because the public was confusing it with the religious cult involved in mass killings and suicides in Guyana.

Robert Knee, assistant director of the firm, said the name of People's Transit System has been changed to Travelmate.

The firm provides low-cost air and ground transportation to members, who pay a $15 fee annually.

About 900 members of the San Francisco-based Peoples Temple have been found dead at the group's Jonestown farming commune in Guyana.

"It's crazy, they're ruining us," Knee said. "it started last week and we've had hundreds of calls tying up our lines.

"People are ranting, reading Scriptures to us — one person threatened to come down and blow the place up," he added. "Just because we had the name 'People' in our title.

"We have nothing to do with religion," Knee said.

He said no calls have come from the Portland area, but the company's toll-free telephone number, which is publicized in national advertising, has been jammed.

Bodyguards May Have Killed Jones

CHICAGO (UPI) — Peoples Temple cult leader Jim Jones may have been killed by his bodyguards during the mass suicide at the cult's Guyana commune, the Chicago Tribune reported Saturday.

The newspaper, quoting a high-ranking U.S. Army officer who asked not to be identified, said U.S. officials doubt Jones committed suicide with some 900 of his followers.

The officer said the gun that killed Jones was found in a store some distance from the cult leader's body, leading to strong speculation Jones did not take his own life as first reported.

An American Embassy spokesman told the Tribune authorities he had not gained positive information on how Jones died.

Helpful Window Washer Douses Burning Foot

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Mrs. Leonard Canning was driving home from a shopping center when she smelled something burning.

She saw a man washing windows, pulled up, jumped out and shouted, "Sir, my car is burning! Can you help me?"

The man took one look. "It isn't your car, lady," he shouted back. "It's you."

Sure enough, the wooden frame that supported a shoe cast she wore for a fracture in her foot, was smouldering. Apparently, someone's hot cigarette ash had landed on the cast while Mrs. Canning was at the shopping center.

Guyana Government Apparently Allowed Jones To Bend Rules

GEORGETOWN, Guyana (AP) — Socialist Guyana is the most closely controlled country in the Caribbean next to Cuba.

So how could American cult leader Jim Jones amass a weapons arsenal at his remote agricultural commune, run his own international communications operations, use three ocean-going boats with a minimum of customs surveillance and often have hundreds of thousands of dollars in foreign currency in his possession?

These privileges are denied Guyanese citizens, and critics of the government of Prime Minister Forbes Burnham, in the wake of the Jonestown mass suicides, are demanding answers in a developing scandal that one opposition news sheet labeled "Templegate."

The critics charge that the Peoples Temple settlement in Guyana's northwestern jungle was a "state within a state" and Jones was its emperor.

Government officials have made little comment. Few details of the shocking event have been presented to the Guyanese through the government-controlled press. Pictures of the stacks of bodies that stunned the world have not been shown here.

But in a special parliamentary session Friday and in the streets of the capital of Georgetown, unhappy Guyanese are making themselves heard.

Most comment centers on the special privileges the Americans in Jonestown enjoyed. The government admits to giving the Temple licenses for four weapons but more than 40 reportedly were found at the massacre site. Most were semi-automatic rifles, which are forbidden to private citizens here.

Armed patrols of cultists often were visible at the entrance to Jonestown but the government apparently did nothing about it.

There were other special privileges enjoyed by Jones' followers that were denied to Guyanese citizens:

•The Temple operated a radio-telephone link between headquarters in Georgetown, the Jonestown settlement and the United States.

•Customs supervision was superficial or waived on shipments entering Guyana for Jonestown and three ocean-going boats serviced the settlement, sailing 60 miles upriver to Port Kaituma and then sending the goods by road to the commune.

•Jones was known to be holding hundreds of thousands of dollars in cash and checks at any one time, according to defectors from the settlement. Large sums of U.S. dollars and other foreign currencies reportedly were found after the mass suicides. Guyana require stict supevision of foreign currency holdings.

•The temple was allowed 30 minutes per week on Guyana National Radio to talk of the settlement's activities. Jones often spoke during these sessions and regularly extolled the virtues of the government.

Critics say all opposition leaders are denied radio time in Guyana.

The government has declined detailed comment on these charges. It has said that when the commune was established in 1974, settlements in the virgin forest were encouraged and the Americans [illegible] the established rules.

A government spokesman said let[illegible] of praise for Jones signed by many prominent Americans, including first lady Rosalynn Carter, Vice President Walter Mondale and others, helped officials decide on Jones' application. But in 1974, Mrs. Carter was not a national figure and Mondale was a senator.

Jones has been photographed with Burnham and other leading political figures in Guyana, leading the harshest critics to suggest a conspiracy of some kind. The extreme leftist Working Peoples' Alliance charged in a pamphlet that farming and religion at Jonestown served as a mask.

"Guyanese find themselves ruled by a group of persons closely related to international criminals of a very sinister breed who carry on their crimes behind the cover of social concern and in the name of socialism," the pamphlet said.

But other Guyanese said Jonestown may have been given special privileges because it was the only farm of its kind that was working. Thirty similar ventures by the government have failed in the past 10 years.

'Nutcracker' Enchants Children Of All Ages

By DALE RAYMAN
Family News Staff

When it comes to sugarplums and holiday fantasies, Clement Moore and Peter Illyich Tchaikovsky might well have combined their imaginative efforts.

When it comes to making 'visions of sugarplums' dance in children's eyes, though, Tchaikovsky and the Lubbock Civic Ballet have combined their creative resources and efforts (with a certain time lapse, of course) in a sparkling offering for area residents.

'The Nutcracker,' that most beloved of all ballets, will be presented in performances at 8 p.m. Saturday and 3 p.m. Dec. 3 in the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center Theatre.

The story of 'The Nutcracker' has been told often, and in many languages. It is a tale of a broken Christmas gift for little Clara, an unfortunate wooden soldier nutcracker which comes to life in her dreams and carries her to the world of Christmas fantasy.

The stage will be filled with many toys that come to life, while visions of candy, sugarplums and snowflakes literally dance around the Christmas tree.

Written by Tchaikovsky specifically to include the music-box tones of the celeste, a keyboard instrument, the music is delightful, and more than once members of the audience will hear multiple exclamations of, "So that's where that comes from!"

Lubbock Civic Ballet is combining efforts for the production with the 19th annual Children's Christmas Concert by the Texas Tech Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Paul Ellsworth. For years the orchestra has performed a special program just for children, but this year the program will be for children of all ages.

Neil Hess is artistic director for Lubbock Civic Ballet, and Suzanne Akers is ballet mistress. Most of the artistic effort, from the glittering costumes to the talented dancing of young people in the 'pool' of 'apprentices,' or aspiring members, of Civic Ballet, will be from local individuals.

A portion of the proceeds from 'The Nutcracker' will go toward scholarships for orchestra students at Tech.

Garry Anderson, a spokesman for Civic Ballet, emphasized the cooperation of the many individuals responsible for bringing 'The Nutcracker' to life.

"The amount of work, the enormous cooperation of so many people, will ensure the enjoyment of the ballet-loving audience," he said.

Tickets are $8, $6 and $4, half-price for children and students, and are available at Hemphill-Wells at South Plains Mall until Nov. 29, when all remaining tickets will be moved to the box office by the theatre in the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

REACHING FOR A STAR — Hours of effort have been spent to give South Plains audiences a special holiday treat. Tickets for both performances of 'The Nutcracker' are still available at Hemphill-Wells in the South Plains Mall.

COSTUME EXPERTISE — Enid Racz, left, head of the committee responsible for the colorful, glittering costumes which are so much a part of 'The Nutcracker,' and Annalea Celid take a look at two of the examples of the committee's expertise. All costumes for the production, most of which require considerable detail work, have been made by the committee.

CONCENTRATION — Dancers in the Lubbock Civic Ballet-Tech Symphony Orchestra production of 'The Nutcracker' concentrate on instructions from Suzanne Aker, ballet mistress of Civic Ballet. The performance's sponsors hope to make it an annual event, and initial response "has been excellent," said Jim Toland of the Lubbock Cultural Affairs Council. The performance is a combined effort of the ballet and the symphony's 19th annual Children's Christmas Concert.

In My Corner

By FRANCES LOWE

Weekday mornings, four different alarm clocks rouse the four human members of our household, each of whom is tuned to the sound of his or her own call to arms.

C. Moore responds to only one of them.

She has been sleeping lightly since midnight in her favorite chair. Poised, tidy, all loose ends tucked in, she rests without moving, a carved statue of a cat from some ancient Egyptian tomb.

Near her Chabaka sprawls manlike in a great orange blob on the rug.

C. Moore never moves. She is the picture of containment. The step of the milkman evokes only the slightest twitch of one ear; the thump of the paper against the door is of no interest. The jays in the trees outside taunt "Cat, cat!" in vain.

Then the one alarm clock in the house in which she is interested sounds; her master's hand reaches out from beneath the covers to shut it off, and before he can withdraw it she is beside him.

Groaning, he crawls out of the bed, finds his way to the bathroom, washes, shaves, dresses.

She stays with him, rubbing against his legs. Fascinated by the sound of running water, she sits on the sink to watch him shave. She gives him advice about brushing his teeth and hair; she helps him find clean underwear.

Once he is dressed and settled at the kitchen table with paper and coffee, she visits her dish for a light breakfast and returns to her chair, satisfied that her day's work is done.

"Who assigned this cat to me?" he asks in mock despair.

He finds it impossible to break her of her dedication to getting him to work on time. If he closes the bedroom door she will open it; if he locks it she will sit on the other side, crying.

We had another cat once whose relationship with the Master was also uncertain. She didn't like men, and made no secret of the fact that she was happiest when he was away and the house reverted to "us girls."

She referred to him, disrespectfully, as "Big Foot." At the sound of his footsteps she would run and hide. The girls and I, moving catlike through the house in our bare feet, were more to her liking.

When he returned from a trip she would give me a look which said clearly, "What need have we of him?"

He was the only one in the house who made any attempt to discipline her. He put her out at night because nobody else would do it. It was, to her, a nightly battle. She would hide on one of the wide window sills, behind the drapes. Her tail, hanging down below the curtain, betrayed her.

She never could understand how he found her. She didn't consider her tail an integral part of her. Often I would see her studying it with surprise; sometimes she pounced it.

Eventually she solved the problem. One night the Master came to bed with a strange look on his face.

"Did you put the cat out?" I asked.

"No," he said in a bemused way. "There was an old man with whiskers and a long tail, who said the cat had already gone out."

Mrs. Cat was a lady in every respect, resilient and resourceful. We lived in the woods, which were full of small animals. When we went away it was useless to ask somebody to feed her; she would have nothing to do with strangers. We left her to fend for herself and would find her fat and contented and not especially overjoyed at our return.

She had a curious cry, more like a bird than a cat, and the two times she disappeared we were able to find her because of it. Just as the builders completed a new house in the neighborhood she failed to come home for dinner, and the Princess and I went out looking for her. She responded to our calls and we were able to follow that curious sound to the new house, where she had been closed into the attic of the carport. We had to call the builder to come and get her out.

Once we returned from a long vacation to find her gone. From the patio I heard a bird call, and then realized that it was her strange cry. She was in a tree in a neighbor's yard; beneath her paced a huge German Shepherd. I had to ask my neighbor to take the dog in so I could climb the tree to rescue her. She was not overcome with gratitude, and clawed me unmercifully all the way down.

We had planned to move her with us to Texas, but worried about how she would adjust to a new home. However, she suddenly became ill and died, just before the move. I felt that she willed it somehow. A friend wrote me then that the death of a cat signalled a significant change in the life of a family.

Now, more and more, C. Moore resembles her. Dignified, distinguished, she guards the house, disciplines the children and other animals, and undertakes to get the Master to work on time.

I discuss family matters with her and am reassured by her attentiveness and philosophical grasp of things and events. Sometimes I address her as Mrs. Cat by mistake, and she seems not to notice. Probably as they say, cats have many lives to live.

Douglass Set As Leader Of Council Staff

Jim Douglass, executive director of Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Lubbock, was elected president of the Region X Professional Staff Council of BB/BS of America at the recent regional conference in Scottsdale, Ariz.

As president, Douglass will serve a two-year term representing the association's agencies in Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Colorado, Montana and Wyoming. His term of office will begin officially in June, when he will be installed at the BB/BS of America national meeting in San Francisco.

In addition to his regional duties as president, Douglass will also serve on the national board of directors of BB/BS of America.

In Lubbock, BB/BS has served over 1,-000 single-parent children since its inception in 1970. There are over 370 agencies nationally.

By matching children on a one-to-one basis with an adult volunteer, the program provides a mature, non-family friend for a child who really needs one. Through a careful screening process, each volunteer is matched to a child with similar interests so that the relationship will be as compatible as possible.

"We have a continuing need for volunteers," Douglass said, "especially now at the holiday season."

For information about volunteering to become a Big Brother or a Big Sister, call the office at 763-5618.

By FRANCES LOWE
Family News Editor

Home economics education, especially in food and nutrition, is experiencing exciting changes in response to increased public awareness of matters related to health and diet and discoveries being made by researchers.

One emphasis which is receiving considerable attention from professionals in health care and related fields lies within the general discipline of home economics but is related to both dietetics and medicine, and has been given the name biodietetics.

Dr. Leon Hopkins, chairman of the department of food and nutrition at Texas Tech University's College of Home Economics, sees biodietetics as a response to the growing interest by both the general public and professionals in the management of individual nutritional care.

"Whereas dietitians have tended to think in terms of groups or populations, the current emphasis is more on individual nutritional management," he said. "This has come about partly because the public is more informed about, and more interested in, diet and health."

Much of the information the public receives is inaccurate or misleading, Dr. Hopkins says, adding that professionals have often underestimated the need for public education in this area.

Dr. Hopkins announced a course to be offered this spring at Tech, to provide the kind of information nonprofessionals can use to better understand and manage their own diets.

Food and Nutrition 1301, "Nutrition for Today," will be taught by Dr. Mike Crews from 6 to 9 p.m. Tuesday evenings and will be a strictly non-professional approach to diet and nutrition for the average person.

"It will, for example, explore such terms as 'low density' diet or 'anemia 'in language that the average person can understand," Dr. Hopkins said. "It will provide basic, non-technical information on nutrition, which is to say how the body uses food, and might interest anyone who wants a better grasp of what diet and nutrition is all about."

The increased interest in the field of biodietetics is reflected in the the growing emphasis on the part of Tech students in receiving practical training in this area in addition to academic coursework.

Dr. Hopkins pointed out that the field is attractive because it is a helping profession in the field of health care. "But it also contains some of the dangers which face any health-care practitioner; there is for example the possibility of malpractice suits, and thus people working in this area need the best professional training they can get," he said.

Prof. Mary Ann Kight of the University of Arizona, who was in Lubbock this fall to consult with faculty and students, is a pioneer in the field of biodietetics.

Biodietetics, as Prof Kight described it,"deals with the management of nutritional care, and thus has a direct and vital bearing on individual health."

"The practicing biodietitian, a highly-trained and clinically experienced person, would be prepared to deal with diet management in a therapeutic sense and on a highly individual basis," she said.

Dr. Kight cited the example of the traditional hospital dietitian in a hospital setting, who picks up the doctor's instructions and makes up an individual diet for the patient.

"The biodietitian would go one step further: he would study the patient's charts (to which he would, as a member of the health care team, have access); order additional tests if necessary to determine the patient's nutritional status; and then prescribe a diet, much as the doctor prescribes medicine."

The most obvious setting for such a professional would be in a hospital or medical care facility, but Dr. Hopkins pointed out that community clinics are being established to which people can come, on the recommendation of a physician, for nutrition counseling. Dr. Kight is the head of such a clinic at the University of Arizona.

Although there is at least one nutrition clinic in operation in Lubbock, Tech is not yet able to provide graduate level training in this area, Dr. Hopkins said. However a few upper-level undergraduate students in food and nutrition are enrolled in a program which will include clinical training in local hospitals.

Dr. Hopkins is hopeful that Tech can establish a nutrition clinic within a few years. The facilities of the new wing of the College of Home Economics, dedicated this fall, are well suited to the purpose, and space has already been set aside for this use.

Such a clinic would provide practical training for students in this area, as well as providing a service to the community. Patients would be referred by physicians, perhaps because of an illness requiring hospitalization, or perhaps because of a health problem for which the doctor has been consulted.

The client would bring with him the results of whatever medical tests the doctor has ordered. The clinic would be prepared to supplement these with fairly simple, non-technical tests such as weight and height, blood pressure, skin fold thickness, etc.

The clinic would serve a threefold purpose, providing training to home economics students in the field of health and nutrition (who would always work under the supervision of senior staff members); serving in a health service capacity to clients in need of nutritional counseling, and contributing to general knowledge about nutrition and health.

Why put a rack underneath a roast of beef? It keeps the meat out of the drippings and increases circulation of heat. With a rib roast, however, the rib bones can serve as the rack.

PINEAPPLE CRISP PUDDING

1 (1 lb. 4 oz.) can pineapple chunks
1 (1 lb. 2½ounce) pkg. yellow cake mix
1 cup flaked coconut
½ cup sifted all-purpose flour
1 cup melted butter or margarine
Sour cream, whipped cream, thin cream or ice cream

Generously butter a baking pan (9x9x2 inches) or a shallow 2-quart baking dish. Turn undrained pineapple into pan. Combine cake mix, coconut and flour and mix well. Sprinkle dry mixture evenly over pineapple. Pour melted butter over top. Bake in center of moderate oven (350 degrees) 50 to 55 minutes, or until top is crisp and golden brown. Serve warm or cold topped with sour cream, whipped cream, thin cream or ice cream. Makes 9 servings.

If oven glass baking dish is used, reduce baking temperature to moderately slow (325 degrees).

BARE FLOORS

When it comes to cleaning bare floors, you'll be glad to have a polisher-scrubber handy. Sturdy brushes scrub dirt, built-up wax and heel marks off tile and stone floors. Dried, waxed floors will glisten after they're buffed with soft, lambswool buffing pads.

THOUGHTS ON LOVE

Love is not all: It is not meat nor drink
Nor slumber nor a roof against the rain;
Nor wet a floating spar to men that sink.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: My husband thinks I'm jealous, and I think I have a right to be. Here's the situation: Ralph is 58 and works for a large company. There is a woman in his department he keeps talking about. She's 50, married, vulgar and loud-mouthed. Ralph tells me she has a crush on him but he claims he treats her like she's one of the guys. They talk about sex, how many times a week, and a lot of other garbage.

When Ralph was home sick for a week, this hussy phoned him every day to see how he was. He laughed and hung on the phone like a teenager while she told him the latest dirty jokes that were going around the office. It was disgusting!

She nicknamed him "Mr. Wonderful," and now he has such a swelled head he's unbearable.

I have high blood pressure and she isn't helping it any. What should I do, if anything.

JEALOUS

Dear Jealous: Tell Ralph that you aren't interested in listening to all that garbage, and if he insists on telling you anyway, walk away and let him talk to himself. You may raise his blood pressure a few points, but at least you'll keep yours down.

DEAR ABBY: I have a question which I am sure has bothered many men in my stage of life.

I am 70, healthy and still sexually virile. Having been married to the same woman for 36 years, sex has become something of a humdrum affair. Yes, I know what the sex manuals say — "Bring variety into your sex life...try different positions, localities, etc." — but the fact remains, the best aphrosidiac is (and I hate to admit it) a new woman, willing and eager.

From time to time, such a woman enters my life, and even though I know I am being unfaithful and have some mild pangs of conscience, I find it difficult to resist an occasional extra-marital affair.

To be prefectly candid, if my wife had an outside romance occasionally, as long as the man was discreet and clean, and, of course, if I knew nothing about it — as I'm sure my wife knows nothing about my occasional flings — it wouldn't bother me too much.

What do you think, Abby?

VIRILE AT 70

Dear Virile: I think you have very neatly rationalized your occasional infidelity, and you're looking to me for a nod of approval. But the best I can do is "understand." Everyone is accountable to his own conscience.

DEAR ABBY: Just read the letter from the motel worker complaining about people who strip the rooms of sheets, pillowcases, etc. My mom has always maintained that it's okay to take the small ashtrays provided by restaurants and motels if the name of the establishment is on it. She says, "It's good advertising."

Is this accepted? It seems to make sense. But it also seems like stealing. What do you say, Abby?

PALM SPRINGS

Dear Palm: I say that taking anything without first asking the owner is stealing. If you want an ashtray — or anything else — ask to BUY it.

• • •

Do you wish you had more friends? For the secret of popularity, get Abby's new booklet: "How To Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old." Send $1 with a long, self-addressed, stamped (28 cents) envelope to Abby, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Hospital Provides Parental Classes

PERTH AMBOY, N.J. (AP) — A six-class series on parenting, "Infancy to Adolescence. The Role of Parenting," is being offered by Perth Amboy General Hospital.

"The main idea we try to convey is that parents should teach not just control their child," says nurse Paula Ross, Pediatric Clinical supervisor and instructor in the course. "Setting limits is one way of teaching, but reality is the best teacher because children learn by doing."

Calling All Homemakers

By SYD MOORE, A.S.I.D

We have something pleasing for you to think about in these days when the price of everything—especially basic necessities—seem to be rising.

Did you know that there's still one basic necessity that's very much a value? That one basic necessity about which there's good news is furniture—and just for fun we though we'd bring you the figuring of a prominent furniture manufacturer.

He says that he did some checking on sofas for examples, and discovered that an average sofa which retails for, say, $280 costs the shopper only $1.65 a pound! He points out that's a lot less than sirloin steak—and certainly lasts longer and gives more continued pleasure!

Then he said to consider it another way. If a family purchased the $280 sofa and kept it for only 10 years, it would cost less per day than a newspaper!

We thought we'd pass this along to you because it's good to know that there still are bargains today, and in all seriousness, your money can go far if it's invested wisely in furniture. Furniture is something you buy for both pleasure today and for years to come.

'Fragrance,' Flavor Celebrated During National Onion Month

AUSTIN — Onions have been called "lilies of the kitchen" for good reason. Their pungent flavor graces dishes from the humblest to the most elegant. Practically everyone cooks with onions — but they are such an inexpensive staple that most cooks take them for granted.

No longer. At last the onion is being honored. November has been designated National Onion Month, and the spunky vegetable is getting some overdue attention.

"Texas is the biggest producer of spring onions in the country," said Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown. "We want to give our praises to the sweet yellow and white onions that grow here and the other 499 species that help to make eating such a pleasure."

Though plain yellow onions, available from storage all winter, are the most familiar to Americans, some onions are as unusual as a Japanese variety that grows to be a foot long. Delicate shallots, leeks, garlic and chives are just a few members of this diverse family that numbers 500 different types.

Onions have been credited with curative properties, and at one time they were worn on the person to ward off disease. They contain a substance called allyl aldehyde that is antiseptic and attracts and destroys certain bacteria. At least one study has shown that raw or cooked onions help to lower cholesterol.

As for the odor of raw onions, it can be erased from the breath with a few springs of parsley, a good source of vitamin A, vitamin C and iron.

To celebrate National Onion Month, try a recipe tested in the Texas Department of Agriculture kitchen. These are nothing to cry about.

ONION WRAPPED IN BACON

6 medium onions
6 slices bacon
6 pats butter
1 cup brown sugar

Skin onions and score tops; place butter on top of each. Wrap each onion in bacon slice and fasten with wooden toothpick. Arrange in center of a double thickness of aluminum foil. Top with brown sugar and close foil. Bake at 350 degrees 1 hour. Makes four servings.

CREAMY ONION DELIGHT

1 10 1/2-ounce can cream of celery soup
¼ cup buttered bread crumbs
¼ tsp. paprika
2 lbs. sliced onions

Cook onion slices 10 minutes in slightly salted water. Drain. Blend soup and paprika in 1½-quart casserole. Add onions. Sprinkle crumbs over top. Bake at 425 degrees 20 minutes until crumbs are golden brown. Note: add milk if a thinner sauce is desired.

Clip 'n' Cook

SUPER SANGRIA

2 med. oranges
½ cup superfine sugar
2 limes, sliced
2 apples, sliced in wedges
2 bananas, sliced
4 cups orange juice
8 oz. orange liqueur
2 bottles wine

Peel the oranges in single long spirals and put the rinds in a large 4-quart pitcher. Add the sugar and muddle it with the orange peels to release some of the oils in the rinds. Slice the oranges and add them to the pitcher along with the remaining ingredients. Let the mixture stand for 15 minutes, then remove the orange peels. Place the pitcher in the refrigerator for several hours before serving. Pour the sangria into tall glasses or large wine glasses, half-filled with ice. Add some fruit to each serving.

By Jessie Lee Sharpley

Is it time in your life for something different? Are you eager for a change? I personally would like to do a complete "make-over" for the individual who is ready for something different.

Now that your children, who have required all of your time and energy, are away from home, you can take the time to look in the mirror. I mean really study your reflection!

Look at your face. Does your skin show lines sooner than you had expected? Do your hands reveal your age with dark spots and short, unglamorous nails? I can help you with these problems.

Do you have gray hairs peaking through your hair color? This is nature's way of telling you that lighter colors are going to be a more flattering frame around your face. It is not wise to cover them with a dark color, even if your hair was originally dark. Dark tints have a tendency to look dyed more readily than lighter tones. Besides, the dark shades draw attention to the lines in the face. We need to consider your eyes, skin tone, and personal preferences in choosing the just right color for you.

I have a little time for such an exciting project. I would like to study your needs before setting the appointment so we could both know the particular services to schedule. I would like a little length in the hair in order to faciliitate a different cut and to determine whether a perm will be necessary to compliment the desired style. If nails are required for beautiful hands, we could schedule that and a complete make-up to suit the new you.

After we have completed your new look, I can write instructions and make sketches of the cut, style, and any other services which you have received. In that way you will have a record which can be used by your regular hairdresser or one of our students when you are ready to have the procedure repeated.

It's time you considered your overall appearance, and if you need a lift and would enjoy an adventure into Jessie Lee's world of "Being Beautiful," call us at 792-6311. 11-26

Ancient Appeal Of Fiery Opals Continues

By LYNN HOHERTZ
Family News Staff

The opal has been a 'mystery' gem throughout the ages.

During a recent Lubbock opal exhibit, Norman Cornell, New York opal importer, revealed some of the lesser known facts about this fashion gemstone, which is rapidly gaining in popularity. Cornell also provided insights into the selection and care of these rare stones.

According to Cornell, the opal is the alpha and omega of colors — the only gem that reveals every hue of the rainbow. "Each stone has its own special color combination, color dominance, individual color pattern and shape," he added.

"The opal is composed of little spheres of silicone dioxide which provide the various hues," Cornell said. Smaller spheres produce colors from the low end of the color spectrum while large spheres produce the upper end of the color spectrum. The upper end, which contains the red hues, produces the more expensive stones.

There is variety in the types of opals as well as in their colors, Cornell said. The stones fall into three basic categories.

White opals, which are the most familiar, are characterized by white, blue, green or almost any other color except dark gray or black.

These gems are usually found in South Australia. Although these stones are the least valuable, they account for the largest volume of sales.

Black boulder opals are the brightest opal and also one of the most durable. These stones are found in ironstone boulders and occasionally have some of the boulder left in the face as well as on the back of the stone. This provides an interesting pattern on the stone. The colors are usually clearer and livelier than those found in white opals.

Black opals are the rarest, most expensive and richly colored opals. Stones of this type usually are found in private collections and museums. Black opals have dark gray or black backgrounds caused by a natural backing of dark opal which has no color. This backing acts as a dramatic backdrop for the colors displayed within the stone. Only a few of the these finest quality gemstones are found each year.

Almost all of the opals currently being mined are from Australia. Over the years, ocean water has been trapped in sandstone, forming silicone dioxide deposits from which opals are formed. Ninety-five percent of all opals mined come from Queensland, Australia, and all boulder opals are mined there.

Cornell suggested checking on the origin of the stone before buying. "Some opals are mined in Mexico," he said. "These stones have been formed in igneous rock and may have a tendency to crack."

Cornell also provided other tips for potential opal buyers.

"In addition to checking for the order of the color spectrum which determines the value, brillance (glistening effect) also increases the stone's value."

Many opals have patterns and depict 'scenes' such as landscapes or animals. These images are produced by light striking the numerous spheres and also add to the stone's value.

The scarity of the stone is also important. "It isn't wise to try to judge a stone yourself unless you're an expert," Cornell said.

Opals are occasionally cut into a free form or carved; however, they are usually presented in one of three forms.

Many opals are cut in cabochon form — an oval shape which is flat on the bottom and rounded on top.

Opal doublet is a form where a thin layer of opal is glued to a thick layer of some darker material, usually 'potch' (a dark opal which has no color). This form is often found in mounted jewelry.

Opal triplet is the same as a doublet, except that a dome of glass is glued to the top. The glass protects the opal layer while giving the stone an appearance similar to a solid one.

Synthetic opals have also appeared on the market but do not have the value of natural stones.

"The opal should receive special respect," Cornell said, "and care is essential for longlasting beauty. Don't assume opals are indestructable," he added.

An opal contains up to 13 percent moisture and once a month should be soaked overnight in distilled water.

"Opals should not be exposed to extreme temperatures or worn when washing dishes."

Due to the interesting colors, opals have been surrounded by myths and superstitions. According to Cornell, it was once believed that if a pickpocket carried an opal, he couldn't be seen.

The ancient sage Marbodus contended that opals would fade on evil, dishonest persons and that the opal's colors and life get stronger and brighter in the presence of goodness.

Bad luck has also been associated with opals especially those mined in Hungary.

Since Australia has started mining opals, stories of good luck have prevailed.

"In addition to being the October birthstone, the opal is the symbol of hope and is often referred to as the gem of Cupid and Venus," Cornell said.

GETTING READY — Taking time out from the Lubbock Arts Festival community support campaign and looking over plans for the April event are, from left, fund raisers Joe McKay, John Tedrow, Mrs. Alan Henry and Bob Nash. A drive to raise $50,000 in community support for the event, which has already evoked national interest, is now under way. For information or to make a contribution, call the Lubbock Cultural Affairs Council at 763-4666. (Staff photos by Paul Moseley)

PLANNING AHEAD — Although the Lubbock Arts Festival is already on the schedule for April 27-29, 1979, plans are in motion to raise enough money to make the affair a self-perpetuating annual event. Taking a look at sketches of what the 'hoped-for' $50,000 will help carry on annually are, from left, Jim Toland, Joe McKay and Betty Lou Mahone. Contributions to the fund are being accepted at the Lubbock Cultural Affairs Council, a division of the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce.

CELEBRATING THE ARTS — In recognition of the increasing awareness and supports of the arts in Lubbock, the first Lubbock Arts Festival has been scheduled for April 27, 28 and 29, 1979. A spokesman for the Lubbock Arts Council, the sponsoring agency, reports that interest in the festival already has been shown from as far away as Michigan. To ensure the event's permanence on the Lubbock arts calendar, a goal of $50,000 has been set for the preliminary fund raising drive. Charley Pope, finance chairman for the festival, and Berniece Spears, festival co-chairman, take a look at the 'friendly, fat robin' which has been designated as the festival's symbol, and encourage community members to add their support. For more information about the festival or the fund raising drive, call the Lubbock Arts Council at 763-4666.

CANCER / ANSWER LINE

A middle-aged woman writes: "I use a face cream that contains estrogen, and I know that there is talk about that hormone and cancer. But can it hurt me to just use the cream on my skin?"

ANSWERline: Hormone creams have to be carefully used, and your own individual situation is something to discuss with your physician. You should know that the estrogen in the cream can be absorbed into your body where its action will be the same as if you swallowed an estrogen pill by mouth. This kind of cream is not a good idea for anyone with a cancer history.

A policeman writes: "I am a heavy cigarette smoker and up until now, I haven't been impressed by the anti-cigarette people enough to quit. But now a friend tells me that he read that cigarettes have poison gas in them. Is that true?"

ANSWERline: Yes. Approximately 92 percent of cigarette smoke is composed mostly of a number of lethal gases including carbon monoxide. This means that even though a cigarette is low in damaging tar and nicotine, it can still be dangerous to health. In fact, Sweden, a nation with a high rate of cigarette-related diseases, has just passed a law requiring the listing of carbon monoxide content on cigarette packages to let the smoking public know just what it is getting. Cigarette gas has been getting increased attention since the Third World Conference on Smoking and Health which was held in 1975 in the U.S. with the support of the American Cancer Society. This is just one more reason for a cigarette smoker like yourself to give thought to quitting. Your local ACS unit can help.

Real To Reel

By William D. Kerns

During a recent one-day stop in Dallas, I joined a friend and headed on out to the Preston Two theater to watch an under publicized, overly sentimental, thoroughly old fashioned love story for chronic romantics called "Slow Dancing In The Big City." And being an occasional fan of under publicized, overly sentimental, thoroughly old fashioned love stories for chronic romantics, I found myself thoroughly entertained. The picture has heart.

Unfortunately, though, it apparently does not have an audience.

Perhaps it was the title (which I have found intriguing for months, by the way). Or perhaps it was the soppy ad tagline of "Slow dancing is falling in love." Or perhaps the blame lies with the many over-critical local and national reviews. But the fact remains the theater was only a quarter full for the 10:30 p.m. show on a Saturday night, with at least 80 per cent of the audience comprised of unescorted women.

Paul Sorvino and Anne Ditchburne
Stars of "Slow Dancing In The Big City"

What all this boils down to is the distinct possibility Lubbock will not see this film at all. Sure, it's presently booked to appear here in early 1979, but it is becoming increasingly apparent that the number of people standing in line to see a movie in Dallas or Houston influences bookings elsewhere in the state. All this, despite the fact Lubbock is one of the highest grossing movie markets in the country. Our theater bookers, whom I sometimes envision taking night classes in competitive strategy, nevertheless peruse the bottom lines elsewhere in the nation before making their decisions.

For example, why do you think the Fox Theater kept holding "Hooper" over after the crowds had played out? According to theater manager Harold Lieck, "Judging by the grosses 'Who Is Killing The Great Chefs Of Europe' has brought in elsewhere, we just figured we could make more money with another week of 'Hooper' than we could by bringing in a new picture like 'Chefs.'"

But that's not all the movies Lubbock's missed this year. "Bloodbrothers" lasted only a week at Showplace, thanks to nobody in the city knowing what it was even about. "The Last Waltz," one of the best rock statements ever filmed, was given an unfair test in Lubbock of just four midnight showings at Showplace. The Fox had John Milius' "Big Wednesday" booked, a surfing picture starring Gary Busey and coming on the heels of the actor's newfound popularity in "The Buddy Holly Story." But the picture was not a big money maker in the major markets, and thus never saw the light of day in West Texas.

"Go Tell The Spartans" was first booked to make its Lubbock debut over two months ago. This picture has even earned favorable reviews as the most honest Vietnam film to date and an excellent acting vehicle for Burt Lancaster. Heck, I think it would be worthy of note as the first decent flick directed by Ted Post. But after checking the bottom lines in other cities, the Fox bookers thought it too chancy to risk the picture in Lubbock. And then there's Broderick Crawford in "The Private Files Of J. Edgar Hoover," a film so dismal it is now probably slowly rotting away in the private files of some movie mogul's closet.

But alas, Lubbock movie-goers were not allowed to judge for themselves.

Robert Mitchum's "Amsterdam Kill" was granted only a one-week run at a local drive-in. The fascinating "Fingers," starring noted thespian Harvey Keitel, never played Lubbock. Elizabeth Taylor's "A Little Night Music" bombed across the country, but Lubbock was never allowed to form its own opinion. Showplace once had one-sheet posters up on the wall promoting "A Different Story," which was even entered in film festivals. But the posters were all we got.

The American International release "Our Winning Season" hasn't made it here yet. And whatever happened to "A Hero Ain't Nothing But A Sandwich," the Robert Radnitz film which took a strong stand on the issue of drug abuse among teenagers? The film was initially given an R rating. But Radnitz, known for his dedication to family films, argued before the film classification board about the import of the film's statement to the youth audience. In a rare case, the initial rating was overturned in favor of a PG. Will this be booked in Lubbock?

I finally made it to a theater showing "Days Of Heaven" while visiting Minneapolis, and found it one of the more interesting and certainly the most gorgeous visual effort of the year. So when will it make it to the Winchester or Showplace or any other Lubbock theater?

Mind you, most of this is more than understandable. Lubbock does indeed get the brunt of the major releases, with the exception of foreign films, and theater owners are trying to make a living like anybody else. But the true movie fanatic is still denied the full catalogue of available film. That's why I get so upset when theater owners explain their booking of re-issues of re-issues with the copout statement, "Well, there's just no product available." That's bull, and always has been here. What they mean is, "Well, there's not enough product that we think will make more money than these old hits."

Which brings us back to "Slow Dancing In The Big City." If the audience turnout continues to be poor in, say, Dallas and the rest of the bigger cities, West Texas may never see the film. And we are not talking about some low-budget, throwaway picture here. The film is a love story concerning a New York newspaper columnist and an ailing ballerina. It is unique in that the two never kiss or hop into bed together during the course of the picture, and yet the emotion and feeling is well evident. And it marks the first starring role for Paul Sorvino, whose undeniable talent has been saddled too long in character roles.

"Slow Dancing" is also directed by John G. Avildsen, who is now best remembered as the director of "Rocky." Much of the same "love of people" spirit is present in the new picture. And if you've been keeping up with Sylvester Stallone's ef-

EXPERIMENTAL THEATER APPROACHES — Lubbock does not have that many chances to enjoy experimental, multi-media theater. So many might want to take note of the approaching production of Steven Peters' "The Equestrian Assassination Of Billy The Kid," to be performed at 8:15 p.m. Dec. 7-9 and 15-16 at the Texas Tech University Theater. The Zapruder film, the clip which captured the fatal gunfire in Dallas which left a president dead, also will be screened during the course of the film. In the above scene, a character called Suzy reverts to being Jackie Kennedy and berates Billy for not being Jack Kennedy, while a horse silently watches from behind. Suzy is played by Michele Whitfield, Billy by Ron Quade and the horse by Mark Dean. Call the Texas Tech University Theater box office for reservations and ticket details. 'Brave New Workshop' Plans Tech Appearance

Sponsored by the UC Cultural Events department, the Minneapolis-based theater group called the Dudley Riggs Brave New Workshop will perform at 8:15 p.m. Dec. 7 in the Texas Tech University Center theater.

The New York Times called the Workshop "an adornment to the night life of any time." And the newspaper at St. John's University described it as candid, quick-paced and intelligently professional, saying, "The satire lover, the seasoned theater goer and especially the college student will find themselves quite at home."

Dudley Riggs' Brave New Workshop, one of the oldest and most successful satirical revues in the country, is a product of 16 years of continuous production and much experimentation with the art of improvisation. The Workshop's founder and guiding light, Dudley Riggs, a former circus performer who "ran away from the circus to join a family," has done everything from juggling to vaudeville to early network television. All of this has given him the patience and tenacity to watch the Brave New Workshop grow and evolve into the fine professional theater that it is today.

Through his experience, Riggs has also gained a high regard for the audience, and this regard is reflected in the quality and creativity of each actor's work at the Brave New Workshop.

In return, the audience is asked to participate in a unique way in the productions. The Workshop, a presentational rather than representational theater, uses only lights, sound effects and pantomimed props to set the scene and create the mood. So like the listeners of old time radio serials who were asked to use their imagination in envisioning the action and setting of each particular story, the audience is challenged to use their imaginations in the creative process of a production.

This special relationship with the audience does not happen automatically. The Brave New Workshop actors make it happen through their skill. Many talented actors and writers, currently working on both coasts, are alumni of Dudley Riggs' Brave New Workshop. The present cast, which performs nine shows each week, uses the improvisational sessions held after regular performances to sharpen their skills in a pressure situation.

Besides performing the year round to enthusiastic audiences in their Minneapolis theater and touring, the Workshop also produces satirical radio sketches for Earplay, a regularly scheduled highlight of All Things Considered, broadcast weekly across the country by national Public Radio Stations.

Out of this work, which began in 1973, came a comedy album on the ASI label called "Radio Comics."

The Minneapolis Star wrote, "It is a rare and unusual treat to attend a theater and be able to unreservedly laugh as well-aimed satiric darts hit their mark. Such is the case at Dudley Riggs' Brave New Workshop: a thoroughly professional and amusing entertainment."

NOTED THEATER GROUP TO APPEAR — The Dudley Riggs' Brave New Workshop, concentrating on improvisational humor, will perform at 8:15 p.m. Dec. 7 at the Texas Tech University Center theater. This Minneapolis-based theater group has earned rave reviews and promises to be a most unique entertainment offering. Call the Tech University Center for ticket information.

Beatles Return To Greatness

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER
United Press International

The Beatles won't go away.

It seems as though ages have gone by since that fabulous foursome put together "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club" album, the record that entrenched their position as the greatest of the rock groups.

Now, these many years later, the current favorites of rock are starred in a Beatles movie extravaganza, "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band."

And Robert Stigwood has spared no expenses in pushing production of the sound track of Sgt. Pepper (RSO Record RS-24100), featuring Peter Frampton, The Bee Gees, Aerosmith, Alice Cooper, Earth Wind and Fire, Steve Martin, Paul Nicholas and Billy Preston on 29 Beatles compositions.

The intial order was reported by Billboard to be around four million, which automatically makes the album gold and platinum.

Frampton stands out on "With a Little Help from My Friends," and Aerosmith puts a biting edge on "Come Together." There is a change of pace from the original "Oh Darling," which Robin Gibb handles in a slow-moving, almost ballad-like styling.

And even though young Sandy Farina does not get star billing, she has a couple of winning solos on "Strawberry Fields Forever" and "Here Comes the Sun."

George Burns is cast as "Mr. Kite." He joins Maurice Gibb, Frampton and the Bee Gees on "Being for the Benefit of Mr. Kite."

Earth, Wind and Fire's big number, "Got to Get You Into My Life," released by Columbia Records, is the first single taken from the Sgt. Pepper movie and it should go high on the pop-hit charts.

If it were not for the homogenized build-up of the Sgt. Pepper album, the original soundtrack of "National Lampoon's Animal House" (MCA Records MCA 3046) might be the talk of the trade.

The movie starring John Belushi should have an appeal for the teen-ager and stir memories among those who have passed the once-dreaded age of 30.

ART SHOW APPROCHING — An art exhibition featuring the works of Carroll Collier, Ray Knaub and Helen Rumpel will take place Dec. 3-31 at the Baker Gallery in Lubbock. The artists will be present at a Dec. 3 reception. Among the works exhibited will be the above watercolor by Knaub, titled "Chama Railroad."

Gallery Features Three Artists Work

The works of artists Carroll Collier, Ray Knaub and Helen Rumpel will be featured throughout the month of December at the Baker Gallery, 1301 13th Street. The show will open with a reception from 1 to 4:30 p.m. Dec. 3, with all three artists planning to make appearances to greet the public.

The three artists are from three different areas and plan to exhibit in three different media. Collier, a Texan, conveys his artistic talents in oil. Ray Knaub, of Colorado, works in watercolor. And Helen Rumpel, of New Meico, expresses herself through stitchery, pottery and painting.

Collier grew up knowing the aspirations of wanting to become an artist. After more than 25 years of working in the commercial art field as an illustrator, Collier turned his talents to the field of fine art painting.

The sensitivity of his paintings are depicted through his impressionistic style and approach to color, form and design. He has gained wide acceptance through his paintings of Texas and New Mexico countrysides.

Knaub experiments with a wide variety of techniques, media and subject matter, but his recent paintings are executed in the difficult and elusive transparent watercolor medium. Knaub is always on the lookout for a "passing life style," which he finds in everything from the arid New Mexico pueblos to the vertical walls of Canyon de Chelly, northward to Colorado and the rugged sea coast of Maine.

Knaub has been quoted as saying, "It is an incredible thing to have eyesight and experience the joy of seeing and experiencing the world. My philosophy or manifesto of painting could be summed up quite simply: personal interpretation of my life experiences. Perhaps that is all any artist can communicate to another human being."

Helen Rumpel believes that "art is a celebration of life," where creativity is an approach, a developing inspiration toward a vision. Her artistic creations are apparent in her stitchery, pottery and painting, all of which enable her to express a meaningful enrichment and communication through aesthetic elements.

Miss Rumpel was selected in September as one of the American Crafts Council's delegates to the World Crafts Council convening in Kyoto, Japan. She teaches workshops across the United States and Canada, as well as at the College of Santa Fe.

She is represented in numerous private and public collections, and her stitchery has been noted in several books and publications.

The Baker Gallery will also be displaying works by James Butler, Betty Lynch, Frank Gervasi, Bill Harrison, Ed Jagman, Barbara Harmon and Patti Canaris.

Voight Holds 'Liberal' Marriage Views

NEW YORK (Special) — Twice-divorced actor Jon Voight recently asserted, "If you're going to have marriage, you might as well have bigamy. Then anybody can marry anybody they fall in love with and people won't get hurt, because divorce today is supposed to mean the end of love, which is ridiculous."

Voight said in the December issue of Ladies Home Journal that he still loves his former wife, model Marcheline Bertrand. "I don't think anybody would be hurt by bigamy," the actor stated, "but who's going to take advantage of it? People sleep with each other anyway, right? Nobody gets put in jail for it. . .Listen, if people want to live together, fine. If they want to separate, so be it. That's their business, not the lawyers'.

People should work out the financial arrangements between themselves instead of involving an outsider. You can't really protect the kids in a court of law. Probably the opposite happens. You create such a rift between the husband and wife that you lose the ability to deal with the children. If you decide to have children, take responsibility. Be the best parents you can."

Voight, 40, has two children: Jamie, 4, and Angie, 2. Both live with their mother, Miss Bertrand. The actor described her as "a terrific lady and a great mommy."

Voight has starred in such films as "Coming Home" and "Midnight Cowboy." His next movie, "The Champ," will be released next year.

Hubert Ross To Direct 'Nijinsky'

NEW YORK (Special) — Herbert Ross will produce and direct motion pictures and his company will produce television for Paramount Pictures. The first of his film projects will be "Nijinsky," directed by Ross from a screenplay by Hugh Wheeler and set to commence filming in February.

Ross produced and directed "The Turning Point" and directed "The Goodbye Girl" last year, gathering a total of 16 Academy Award nominations. His films have received a grand total of 26 Oscar bids.

For television, Ross' Hera Productions will produce two "gothics." The first will have a screenplay by Gavin Lambert and the second by Matt Crowley. Four additional movies are projected.

Also being prepared is a pilot for a TV series concerning the life and adventures of four young scholarship students at a New York ballet school.

Detroit Cops Use 'Horse Power'

DETROIT (UPI) — Police scout cars may have several gears, but they can't compete with the horses of the Detroit Police Mounted Division. They have all the regular moves, plus sideways and pivot capability.

Besides, "Nobody stops a scout car and pets it," says Lt. Patrick Muscat, head of the mounted division.

Formed in 1893, the mounties' division controls traffic in congested areas and patrols city parks. Each of the unit's 70 men takes an eight-week training course in the care and riding of his steed.

Horses train three to six months, learning basic gaits, how to walk sideways and backwards, how to pivot and stand still while a rider writes a ticket.

Disney Develops Special Effect Camera

BURBANK, Calif. (Special) — Walt Disney Productions has developed Hollywood's most sophisticated camera system, ACES (Automated Camera Effects System), for use on the studio's $17 million film about science's ultimate phenomenon, "The Black Hole."

Producer Ron Miller said ACES represents "a quantum leap in the state of computerized cameras." It was developed for special effects director Peter Ellenshaw by the Disney studio, with close cooperation between the Academy Award-winning special effects wizards Eustace Lycett and Art Cruickshank, and a team of technicians headed by Don Iwerks and WED Enterprises "imagineers" David Snyder and David English.

The new system will allow more flexibility in movement in front of the camera than ever before with maximum optical precision, Miller said. The camera's computer banks are housed in a separate shed that has been built on the Disney sound stage next to the set.

Lycett said, "We'll have more control over the quality of the film. The movements of objects on screen will be smoother and will look more realistic than in other films where less sophisticated equipment was used."

Director Gary Nelson began principal photography October 11 at the Disney studio in Burbank, where all the sound stages are occupied and closed to visitors during the six month shooting schedule. Another eight months will be required for special photographic processes.

The film, written by Jeb Rose[illegible] and Gerry Day from a story by [illegible]brook, will star Maximilian Schell, Anthony Perkins, Robert Forster, Joseph Bottoms, Yvette Mimieux and Ernest Borgnine.

MGM's Musical 'Riviera' Slated

CULVER CITY, Calif. (Special) — "Riviera," a contemporary musical set in the south of France, will be produced for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer from a screenplay by Bronte Woodward. The project reunites Woodard and producer Allan Carr, who combined forces for "Grease."

Carr entered film production in 1975 as creative consultant to the Robert Stigwood Organization in the marketing and promotion of the hit rock opera "Tommy." He and Stigwood were jointly responsible for the 1976 film "Survive!" Carr also produced the 50th annual ACademy Awards show.

Woodard has also written the screenplays for Paramount's "Ruby Red" and Universal's "A Lonely Lady."

"Riviera" will go before the cameras on location next summer.

Hard Rock On 'Downgrade' Past Six Years

By DOUG PULLEN
A-J Rock Correspondent

Hard rock wasn't so bad six years ago. That was a time when groups like Black Sabbath, Uriah Heep and Deep Purple made it listenable. The form has degenerated since the time those groups dominated it.

True, groups such as Black Sabbath are responsible for the form's seemingly perpetual crudeness. But Sabbath had a job to do — filling a void for those people not content with most rock and roll. And it did it. The group's self-titled 1970 debut album is a hard rock classic.

Black Sabbath has never matched that album for its freshness and earthy vigor. But new album "Never Say Die" (Warner Bros.) is the closest the group has come since then.

Black Sabbath is still bound by the evil image it created in the early '70s. The group's music created an aura of its own, and managed to translate that aura onto vinyl.

But successive LPs of basically the same music made some listeners wary of Black Sabbath and many of its counterparts, and so hard rock fell by the wayside in the middle of the decade. Not many people took much notice of the form, save the teenagers. Only recently has hard rock begun to become extremely popular again.

And in the middle of it all is Black Sabbath. Its new album "Never Say Die" is the most assertive hard rock album on the market today. "Never Say Die" does not fall victim to the temptation of making the music more commercial. Black Sabbath has refrained from the gimmickry that marked its earlier years and is now approaching audiences solely with its music.

Sometimes the music works, sometimes it doesn't. "Never Say Die" is a surprising album in that it offers more experimentation by the band without the clumsy mistakes.

The group is celebrating its tenth anniversary together — a long time for any rock group, regardless of its musical leanings. The confidence the group apparently has gained is never more apparent than on "Never Say Die."

The album opens with the title track, a defiant song. This is Black Sabbath shaking its collective fists at the skeptics (myself included) who thought the group would dissolve after its initial splash.

Black Sabbath has stripped away most of the satanic connotations of its formative years for a more straightforward format. The move was inevitable; it's one most long-lasting hard rock groups take (witness Deep Purple's "Machine Head.").

Experimentation is the key to the album's durability. The group probably realizes that throwing in a keyboard application to break up the monotony of Tony Iommi's guitar does not mean the music will sound any better. (That's like the Aerosmith tactic of using more volume to make the music sound better.)

Perhaps the most out-of-character song on the LP is "Air Dance." The group makes use of the instrumental abilities that any band will inevitably develop after 10 years together.

Guitarist Iommi's work takes on a more diverse character. He can play more than the repititious and droning chords with which he has been associated. "Never Say Die" shows that, and "Air Danee" in particular exemplifies Iommi's newly expanded horizons.

The guitarist leads the song through a conventional introduction. Once Ozzy Osbourne's vocal line is half-complete, Iommi shifts the band into a lucid instrumental segment, one that is heavily reliant upon a crossover into basic jazz.

The experimentation doesn't stop there. The group has found other elements into its sound — a harmonica that is used for emphasizing track "Hangman's Chain," and a saxophone is used in the preceding track called "Swinging."

But longtime Sabbath fans should not be disappointed. The album contains plenty of rockers bearing the Sabbath trademark. The chords still come heavy and hard: a style Iommi can't abandon because he helped develop it.

"Johnny Blade" is the strongest of Black Sabbath's straightforward rockers. The song has all the impact of a semi-truck plowing into a rock wall. But rather than putter out in the endless monotony of past Black Sabbath songs, "Johnny Blade" assumes a demonic character reminiscent of the first Black Sabbath album.

"Never Say Die" is indeed a transitional album for Black Sabbath. Listening to the album reminds one of "Volume 4," another Black Sabbath album aimed at advancing the group's sound. I loved that album when it came out, but quickly lost interest within a few months of buying it.

I've hardly played it since I bought it in 1972.

Hard rock is just such predictable music anymore. It's refreshing to hear a hard rock band tinker with its sound, especially when that band has been around for a long time.

Black Sabbath may no longer be the sort of day-in, day-out, dull group we writers tend to sweep under the proverbial rug. If "Never Say Die" is any indication, Black Sabbath may be looking forward to a whole new career.

LINER NOTES. Ozzy Osbourne: lead vocals. Tony Iommi: guitars. Geezer Butler: bass. Bill Ward: drums. Written and produced by Black Sabbath.

Derain—Painter, Sculptor, Illustrator—Subject Of Art Seminar

The art of Andre Derain (1880-1954) expresses the wide range of artistic pression that marked the first half of the 20th century. And Derain — painter, scuptor and illustrator — will be the subject of an art seminar at 10 a.m. Tuesday at the Texas Tech University Museum.

The Women's Council of the West Texas Museum Association has sponsored the seminars for 19 years. Rabbi Alexander Kline is the lecturer. There is an admission charge.

Derain, noted for his etchings and portraits as well as his paintings, came to the fore in 1903 with his "Christ Carrying The Cross." He joined the fauves, noted for brilliant, primitive color, and then moved on to a preoccupation with form and structure. He joined the cubism movement briefly, then moved on to archaism and a Gothic period of stylization. His classicism, more Roman than Greek, marked a later stage of his career.

His yellow London sky in "Big Ben" (1905) offended critics of the period, but the painting became one of his masterpieces. "Blackfriars" (1907) is another from hs period in which primitive form and bright colors dominated his work.

In his later years Derain tended to keep to himself, apart from other artists, and it was in this period that his portraiture flourished.

NATIONAL BALLET

TORONTO (UPI) — The National Ballet of Canada is presenting two new additions to its repertory during its Nov. 818 fall season at the O'Keefe Center: Sir Frederick Ashton's "Les Patineurs" and Kenneth MacMillan's "Elite Syncopations." The season also features five performances of "Giselle."

Generics Called Passing Fancy

ITHACA, N.Y. (UPI) — No frills groceries in plain wrappers may be just a passing fancy, say two agricultural economists at Cornell University.

In a recent study of such foods in metropolitan area supermarkets in New York State, Prof. Brian How and Gene German found some retailers losing interest in offering them. German said most retailers were dropping items and very few are adding new ones.

German and How said the many consumers who attribute the low prices to lower advertising and packaging costs are only partly right. Nor does the lower quality of the products explain the cost differential, they said.

ART TALK

Workshops

By LA WANDA MURFEE

When your name gets on a mailing list you can expect some surprise. My own best one come from sponsors of art workshops and they are many. Several companies have organized groups that travel over the world with nationally acclaimed artist-instructors, offering plenty of time for instruction as well as free time to sightsee or to work alone on paintings.

Although those are international in scope, others are offered right here at home. As soon as you can manage, leave the family to work uninterruptedly with professional artists for a week or two, associate with people of similar interests, where you converse on art related subjects all day. A workshop away from home means more to your development as an artist than a year's study locally. You will work, you will be frustrated and confused. When each day's work is examined by the group you will feel inferior. Not many people turn out good work in a workshop, but the stimulation you take back home will bring pleasing results. Remember the professional in the group can be as intimidated as a lesser experience participant.

New work, new experience, new thoughts will exhaust your mind and body until at night when you fall into bed to mull over the day's accomplishment, you will quickly fall into a sound sleep.

Besides all that you will have fun and meet the most interesting people. There was one very accomplished young woman whose husband is a retired professional man. He does not paint goes along to enjoy the people. In his former profession his associates bored him to death. He found the free spirits of the artists in workshops enthused him as much as his companion.

Watercolor workshops seem to be popular because the finished paintings are easier to transport than oil paintings. Watercolor is quickly becoming the number one medium because of its ease in handling, versatility, quickness and permanence.

A workshop program offers a lecture-demonstration each morning, assignments each afternoon. Several group criticisms are conducted during the week. Painting is either on location or in a studio. If you have never attended a painting workshop, seek some brochures at your local art store or libray, or a professional artist, sign up, learn and have the time of your life.

STEAMY STUFF

WASHINGTON (AP) — An exhibition at the Smithsonian Institution, called "Loose the Mighty Power," traces steam power in this country from the 18th to the 20th century. The focus of the exhibition is the steam-powered mills, locomotives and steamboats, which dotted the landscape in increasing numbers during the era in which the United States shifted from an agricultural to an industrial economy.

Drama with a West Texas flavor will be presented at 8:15 p.m. Dec. 1-6 when Texas Tech University's Lab Theater will offer its production of Oliver Hailey's "Who's Happy Now." Hailey himself grew up in the Texas Panhandle, and Lab Theater director Brad Williams and his crew have made "field trips" to the regions with which Hailey was most familiar.

The play concerns a successful songwriter speaking to his mother (who is seated in the audience), trying to offer his recollections of his childhood. Actor Sam Thompson is given the demanding assignment of portraying one character at three different ages.

The rest of the cast is equally experienced, with the names recognizable to even casual theater-goers: Lynn Mathis, T.H. Maynor, Toni Cobb and Freda R. Williams.

Photographs from the play are printed on both this page and 5-F. Reservations can be made by calling the Tech University Theater box office.

Record Firms Honoring Bernstein

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER
United Press International

Leonard Bernstein is celebrating his 60th anniversary this year and the whole musical world is wishing him a happy birthday.

So it is only proper that the record industry should commemorate the event.

One company has come forth with a box that includes Bernstein's three symphonies, (Deutsche Grammophon 2709 077).

In the box are his Symphony No. 1 ("Jeremiah"), with soprano Christa Ludwig, Symphony No. 2 ("The Age of Anxiety") with Lukas Foss at the Piano, and Symphony No. 3 ("Kaddish") with soprano Montserrat Caballe and the Vienna Choir Boys. Bernstein conducted the Israel Philharmonic on each disc.

Although the prolific composer-musician gained fame with "On the Town," "Candide" and "West Side Story" on Broadway and in Hollywood, Bernstein's stature probably will be judged by future musicologists on his three symphonies.

While separate and independent, the three works form a musical trilogy that expresses the composer's feeling about faith in man as well as in God, a philosophy that extended itself to "Chichester Psalms" in 1965 and "Mass" in 1971. "Chichester Psalms" is included in the disc containing the first symphony.

Although there is a Biblical tie-in, the music does not need program notes.

Rodd, Walken Join Cast Of 'Last Embrace'

NEW YORK (Special) — Marcia Rodd and Christopher Walken have been signed to join the cast of "Last Embrace," a film which stars Roy Scheider and Janet Margolin and is now before the cameras in New York City under the direction of Jonathan Demme.

In films, Marcia Rodd has starred in "Little Murders," "T.R. Baskin" and "Citizen's Band." On Broadway, she was seen in the original cast of Neil Simon's "The Last Of The Red Hot Lovers," as the only American actress in Joan Littlewood's staging of "Oh! What A Lovely War," and in the musical called "Shelter," for which she received a Tony Award nomination.

Christopher Walken has starred on Broadway opposite Irene Worth in the American Bicentennial Production of "Sweet Bird Of Youth." Last year he was seen as Diane Keaton's brother in Woody Allen's "Annie Hall," and in James Ivory's "Roseland." His previous film credits include Paul Mazursky's "Next Stop Greenwich Village." He will soon be seen with Robert DeNiro in "The Deerhunter."

"Last Embrace" will be released by United Artists.

forts in "F.I.S.T." and "Paradise Alley," you may be more aware of Avildsen's contribution to "Rocky." Suffice it to say he deserved his Oscar.

So what happens now? Well, if "Slow Dancing" continues to flop (I wince as I type that word), its releasing company, United Artists, may pull it out of circulation and give it a second chance with a new advertising campaign. But this technique is no sure thing. I can still remember seeing a powerful drama about drug addiction called "Speed Is Of The Essence" in the early '70s. The picture starred Michael Sarrazin and Jacqueline Bisset — and it flopped in test screenings. So it was given a new angle by the PR boys. The title was changed to "Believe In Me," the plot was billed as a love story and the public didn't bite. The re-release still flopped.

On the other hand, "Walking Tall" was initially released as a blood and guts action flick and went nowhere. It was then re-released with the photographs in the ads playing up the love and family angle and, despite the fact none of the violence was cut, the profits soared through the roof.

But how will the PR boys change the ad campaign for "Slow Dancing In The Big City?" One of the characters is a newspaper columnist. But he's concerned with finding the good in a negative world, and you can't make that into an "All The President's Men." The other character is a Canadian ballerina who learns she may have to give up dancing; but dance remains a risky subject on film and there's no way this can be sold as another "The Turning Point."

There are horribly sticky-sweet lines in "Slow Dancing." And yet there are also the occasional beautiful moments of insight. It's not a great film. But it is good, solid entertainment. And yet in our movie world of sex and nudity and violence, of powerful distress like "Midnight Express" and successful hype like "Grease" and "Saturday Night Fever," this little love story may get lost in the shuffle. I don't know whether the filmmakers or the potential audience would be the biggest losers. Nevertheless, we must face the sad possibility of that happening.

And it won't be the first time. Or the last.

Judging by the phone calls at my desk and the rate tickets are disappearing at local outlets, it appears the Kris Kristofferson & Rita Coolidge concert Dec. 8 in the Civic Center exhibition hall will be playing to a large gathering. Lubbock has a regional reputation as a "last minute town" — that is, a city where music fans wait until the last minute to purchase tickets — and yet over 1,700 tickets have already been sold for the Kristofferson show.

That concert is not the only one looming in the future. Just remember that you read it here first that Boston, one of the hottest rock bands around these days, has been booked to play the Lubbock Coliseum on Feb. 8, 1979. That's definite. The Coliseum has already received the necessary signed contract. And Lubbock Auditorium-Coliseum director Vickie Key told The A-J recently, "We've also had a lot of promoters calling for information about open dates in January, February, March and April. So we expect we'll be announcing some more big shows soon."

Holiday months are big record-selling months and, perhaps because of this, a great many artists turn out more BEST OF or GREATEST HITS albums during this part of the year. Those who have recently released such anthologies include Barbra Streisand, Barry Manilow, Norman Connors, Emmylou Harris, Johnny Cash, David Allan Coe, Billy "Crash" Craddock, Johnny Duncan, Donna Fargo, Freddy Fender, Sonny James, Johnny Paycheck, Charlie Rich, Marty Robbins, Leon Russell, Joe Stampley, Tammy Wynette, David Crosby & Graham Nash (and who even knew they HAD a "greatest hit?"), The Sylvers, Dave Mason, The Band, Deep Purple, The Marshall Tucker Band and Earth, Wind & Fire. And those are just the ones I've seen over the past couple weeks...

While in Dallas last Saturday, I also managed to catch Ralph Bakshi's cinematic version of J.R.R. Tolkien's "Lord Of The Rings." Despite having tickets waiting for me, there was still an hour wait in line and the movie itself started very late because of the huge — and I mean that literally — crowds circling the theater. Despite what you read in the press releases, the movie buffs who neglect to read the Tolkien trilogy are going to have some trouble during the initial half hour or so as characters start whizzing in from every direction. But the animation technique is nothing short of fascinating at times, and you may groan when the narrator leaves you hanging at the end by saying something like, "So ends Part One of our story of The Lord Of The Rings."

Tentative plans are for the second half of the film to be released next summer.

A very excited George Bannan, regional publicity director for United Artists Pictures, happily related the first week's Dallas grosses over the phone to me last week. He has every right to be excited. As he put it, "This picture is starting off like another 'Star Wars.'

So you can expect some crowds and long lines at Showplace at Christmas. Not only will all the Tolkien fanatics be out in force, but the theater also has two other major releases in "The Wiz" and "Superman."

• • • • • • •

Robert Hurley said the crowds at the midnight screenings of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" last weekend were "the best since opening night." Then he hung up, probably heading off in search of some wood to knock on...

• • • • • • •

Let's close with an update on the Christmas film bookings in the city. Dec. 15 will see "Oliver's Story" open at the Fox and "Superman" at Showplace. On Dec. 20, "Pinocchio" will open at the Fox and "Lord Of The Rings" at Showplace. Then on Friday, Dec. 22 every movie-goer in town will have tough decisions to make with the following pictures slated to open: "King Of The Gypsies" at the Winchester; Neil Simon's "California Suite" at the Cinema West; "Paradise Alley," "Brass Target," "Moment By Moment" and "Invasion Of The Body Snatchers," all at the South Plains Cinema; "Force Ten From Navarone" and "The Wiz," both at Showplace; and "Magic" and Clint Eastwood's "Every Which Way But Loose," both at Fox.

That leaves two Showplace screens, the Backstage screens, the Lindsey, Arnett-Benson and Village yet to book pictures.

Zeffirelli To Direct 'Peter And Paul'

NEW YORK (Special) — "The Story Of Peter And Paul," an epic motion picture drama spanning the first four decades of Christianity, will be produced and directed by Franco Zeffirelli for Paramount Pictures.

The motion picture will focus on the two men responsible for the spread of Christianity throughout the known world just after the time of Christ — Peter, the simple fisherman from Galilee who would become the first pope; and Paul of Tarsus, the feared persecutor of the first Christians who became the most fervant defender of the new faith.

A third major characterization in Zeffirelli's film will be that of Nero, the emperor of Rome, with the filmmaker portraying him as an insecure dreamer who invented desperate methods to remain in power. The infamous fire that destroyed most of Rome was the result of one of his political maneuvers, but he shrewdly implicated the Christians to avoid his own downfall. The subsequent persecution of the Christians not only saw many of them die in the public arenas, but also would bring on the cruel deaths of Peter and Paul.

With "The Story Of Peter And Paul," Franco Zeffiell returns to the Biblical genre that brought him internatonal acclaim for his "Jesus Of Nazareth." His new film will cover 40 years — from the first Pentacost in Jerusalem in which thousands declared their faith as a result of Peter's preaching, to the Holocaust of Madsada in which the last survivors of the destruction of Jerusalem took their own lives rather than live in bondage under the Romans.

Columbia Film Reports Good Boxoffice Gross

BURBANK, Calif. (Special) — Columbia Pictures' "Midnight Express," currently playing at the South Plains Cinema in Lubbock, has grossed $7,013,973 at the box office after the first two weeks of its national release.

The figure includes the $529,284 rolled up by the film in its first three weeks of pre-release engagements at six New York theaters.

Significantly, second week grosses nationally surpassed its opening week figures.

The motion picture was produced by Alan Marshall and David Puttnam, and directed by English award-winning filmmaker Alan Parker. The screenplay is by Oliver Stone. The production stars Brad Davis, Randy Quaid, Bo Hopkins, John Hurt, Paul Smith, Mike Kellin and newcomers Norbert Weisser and Irene Miracle. Peter Guber is executive producer.

The Youth Theater is taking over the 253-seat theater which the PAF (Performing Arts Foundation of Long Island) main company has abandoned in favor of a new 520-seat thrust stage facility.

Work Starts On 'Alcatraz'

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (Special) — With the cooperation of the City of San Francisco and the Golden Gate National Recreation Area, the film "Escape From Alcatraz" has started filming on location at Alcatraz in San Francisco Bay. The film stars Clint Eastwood, and is the first to be shot at Alcatraz since Eastwood's "The Enforcer."

The picture also marks the re-teaming of Eastwood with director-producer Don Siegel, who previously helmed four of Eastwood's films. The screenplay is by Richard Tuggle, based on the book by J. Campbell Bruce.

Following six weeks at Alcatraz, the company will travel to Los Angeles for an additional seven weeks of interiors to be shot at Paramount Studios in Hollywood. The film is scheduled for a summer 1979 release.

MAX PERKINS, EDITOR OF GENIUS. By A. Scott Berg. (Dutton, $15)

Max Perkins, probably one of the most talented literary editors of his day, had the good fortune to live and work at a time when an outstanding crop of American writers were on the scene.

His publishing house, Scribner's, was at the head of its field and attracted the best authors. And Perkins was uniquely fitted to serve them.

He was blessed with the proper proportions of humility, intelligence and understanding. He nursed not only his writer's ego, but also his emotional problems. Listen to this description from Berg's excellent biography: Perkins worried "that Hemingway would do something dangerous, that Fitzgerald would not write his book, that Thomas Wolfe would require increasing expenditures of energy and emotion..."

Perkins was an Episcopalian brought up in Yankee strictness that left him with an aloofness and a tendency not to display any outward feelings. One aspect of this was reflected in his preciseness. He held to a rigid schedule, always lunching in the same restaurant and catching the same commuter train.

A more interesting characteristic was his ability to live through his authors. He could absorb emotions foreign to him through a writer's work -- Hemingway's macho attitude, for instance.

Robert Ryan, the late actor and once a newspaper reporter, used to watch Perkins engrossed in his manuscripts on a commuter train.

"He plopped down without looking around, then reached into his briefcase... I noticed that he moved his lips when he read. He always looked a little lost. I guess he was just living vicariously through some writer's work."

FOR JERUSALEM — A LIFE. By Teddy Kollek. (Random House, $10)

Teddy Kollek is no ordinary mayor and his political memoirs named for the city he heads are racier than the fare presented by Moshe Dayan, Golda Meir and even the articulate Abba Eban.

Kollek, Jerusalem's mayor for 12 years, has enjoyed his political life of "dabbling in a bit of everything."

His thesis is that he is not a politician and the first public office for which he ran was the mayor of the venerable city that is holy to three religions and claimed by two peoples.

Earlier, at age 11, he became a Zionist because he "liked the movement activities better than going to school."

In between, Teddy's dabbling included fund raising, obtaining arms for Israel's fledgling preindependence army, saving Jews from Hitler, and serving as the director general of the prime minister's office — the highest civil service position in the Jewish state.

Teddy's "summing up" is not all politics. He tells of marital difficulties, hinting at dalliances, and describes his early lack of communication with his son, Amos, a novelist and co-author of his father's book.

He admits a fondness for food, talks of the photo showing him sitting next to Marlene Dietrich's famous legs, and acknowledges a grasshopper approach to his Zionist political career — moving from one area of inexpertise to another but learning along the way.

As mayor of Jerusalem, he has met every important visitor to the Jewish state, from Marc Chagall, who could be testy, to Adlai Stevenson, standoffish and somewhat hostile, to Frank Sinatra — doing things "his way" with a pied piper brigade of followers.

Kollek was born into the dusk of the Austro-Hungarian empire but his passion has become Jerusalem. He "united" the city after the 1967 Middle East war by tearing down the wall that divided it for 19 years. And he aims to keep it one city.

"I am deeply convinced," he writes, "that within the united city, the capital of Israel, we can fashion solutions to all the problems of the three religions and the two peoples (Arab and Jew). And as long as I am mayor, at least, that aim will be our top priority."

BY THE RIVERS OF BABYLON. By Nelson De Mille. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. 391 Pages. $10.

Two airliners carrying Israeli diplomats, aides and military attaches are bound for New York for an unprecedented peace conference with Arab leaders at United Nations headquarters.

The mission is a challenge Arab terrorists cannot ignore. If it succeeds, all they stand for is destroyed and they will lose face into the bargain.

The challenge is accepted by Ahmed Rish, a brilliant psychotic whose one goal in life is the extermination of Israel. Despite elaborate security precautions taken by the Israelis, Rish actually manages to hide two radio-controlled bombs in the wings of the two airliners.

The flight has hardly gotten under way when Rish appears in a small jet plane and notifies the skippers of the two airliners that he can blow either ship up by pressing a button. He orders them to send their fighter escort home and to follow him. The pilot of one liner tries to speed out of range of the radio control beam and is promptly blown up with some 50 persons aboard. The pilot of the second plane reluctantly follows Rish to a rendezvous in historic Babylon.

The rest of the book deals with attempts by Rish and his commandos to storm the grounded Israeli ship whose occupants are much better armed and prepared for an emergency than the terrorists had expected.

The Israelis are led by Jacob Hausner, the airline chief of security, and Isaac Burg, head of an Israeli anti-terrorist group whose capture would be a triumph for Rish.

Author Nelson De Mille has had no first-hand experience in the Middle East, but he did command troops in Vietnam and knows guerrilla tactics which apparently are pretty much the same the world over.

MY ENEMY THE QUEEN. By Victoria Holt. Doubleday. 348 Pages. $8.95.

Victoria Holt has written another of her Gothic novels that will thoroughly satisfy her fans.

This one focuses on the Elizabethan era and specifically on Queen Elizabeth and her relationship with Robert Dudley, the Earl of Leicester, as seen through the eyes of a third party.

Dudley is deeply in love with the queen and she with him. But she never marries him, although always giving rise to hope that she will. Dudley chances her wrath by marrying one of her ladies-in-waiting.

Because Dudley is such a charismatic figure and so loved by the queen, he is out of good graces only briefly. But his wife, Lettice, who also is a cousin of the queen, is banished from court and constantly referred to by Her Majesty as the "she-wolf."

The banishment is the equivalent of the death sentence for Lady Leicester because she had been an intimate part of the court entourage in her young adult life.

It is this desire to be among the chosen and her separation from fulfilling that desire that forms a conflict running throughout the novel.

It becomes amplified when her husband remains the queen's favorite and is supplanted upon his death by Lady Leicester's son.

Throughout her adult life, her loved ones are not only accepted by Queen Elizabeth, but fawned over while she is not. The separation becomes a haunting paranoia.

Not that "The Lady From Boston" is dull throughout. It does have its moments in which McHale once again demonstrates the fine writing he is capable of. And it is studded with very funny bits of black humor that enliven some otherwise dreary stretches. But a "School Spirit" — McHale's previous and very good novel — it is not.

Perhaps it is because "The Lady From Boston" is more like a very long shaggy dog story than it is a well-told novel. The beginning is most promising but as the author goes on and on the reader's interest flags and then, after a few more very sharp twists in an already convoluted plot, it flickers and dies.

The story, what there is of it, concerns an opportunistic character named Dwight David Aldrich, the "inevitable victim of the sad clash of his really shameless posturings for universal moral reform and just plain low-down greed."

Aldrich is a naturally conservative type, but he can, and does, change allegiance when he thinks it will profit him to do so. Thus, he embraces radicalism when the leader of a radical student movement turns out to be a beautiful rich girl Aldrich decides he wants to marry. When a commune in which he is living promises to be profitable, Aldrich sells out his fellow communards to the authorities. And so it goes.

There are, as mentioned, some excellent bits in this book, but taken as a whole it doesn't make the grade.

Ramblin' Rhodes

By Don Rhodes

FANS AND FRIENDS of Donna Fargo have been deeply concerned about the singer's recent medical problems involving numbness on one side of her body.

She has been suffering from transverse myelitis, an inflamaion of the spinal chord.

DONNA FARGO

The illness forced her to cancel many concert dates. Her husband and personal manager, Stan Silver, observed, "Donna is generally weak and unstable, and it's not safe for her to perform on stage under those conditions."

Recently she returned to her Nashville home to recuperate.

Prior to the illness, the singer has completed taping "The Donna Fargo Show," a syndicated television variety series to debut this fall. Her latest single, "Ragamuffin Man," has been climbing on the country music charts.

Slightly more than five years ago, I had the opportunity to interview both Donna and her husband, Stan. It was shortly after she became the first female country music singer to produce back-to-back million selling singles with "Happiest Girl in the Whole USA." and "Funny Face."

She is still one of the few female country artists who pens the vast majority of her material including such hit singles as "That Was Yesterday," "You Were Always There," "Little Girl Gone," "Superman," "U.S. of A." and "I'll Try a Little Bit Harder."

DONNA WAS BORN Yvonne Vaughn in Mt. Airy, NC, and lived there until she was about 15. She said during our conversation, "My father raised tobacco. I began working the tobacco when I was real little, and I used to stand on an orange crate to handle the tobacco leaves. I also worked part-time in a clothing store in Mt. Airy and during the summer I babysat some."

From high school, she went to High Point College in Greensboro, about 50 miles from home. She majored in English and received a bachelor of arts degree. The day she graduated from college, she went to California to teach. Prior to her graduation, she had attended summer courses at the University of Southern California campus in Los Angeles.

She taught ninth grade English at Covina, Calif., 30 miles from Los Angeles, during the day, and sang at small clubs in the L.A. area at night.

One Saturday night in September 1971, she wrote her first hit record. "I didn't know it was going to be 'Happiest Girl' until I got down to the end of the second verse," she recalled.

During our conversation, I got Donna agitated when I asked her why an English teacher would make a two-syllable word out of "girl," as she does in her 'Happiest Girl' hit.

SHE RESPONDED quickly saying, "If I'm talking or writing a song, I'm going to write according to the level I'm trying to reach. A lot of my songs in my albums have grammatical errors, and I'm proud of them. Very often grammatical errors can be used for certain emphasis. If anyone studied my writing, they would see I write naturally. The song 'Me and Jesus' should be 'Jesus and I' to be correct, but how stupid that would sound! Language should not be a stifling sort of thing."

At another point she mentioned, "I've always wanted to do two things in life: to teach and to sing. When I accomplished my first goal of teaching, I started to sing."

Perhaps, however, the remark I remember best was when she said, "I think in life three main things are most important: to have someone to love; to have someone love you and to do something worthwhile. The praise, the money and the success are not the only things that are important. Don't get me wrong, though. I'm tickled with the success I've had. I just think you can't let the material things in life screw your head up."

JAGGER LOSER—Mick Jagger, lead singer of the Rolling Stones was awakened by an intruder in his Beverly Hills, Calif., home recently. The intruder escaped with $13,000 in cash and jewelry. (AP Laserphoto)

Keep Extra Set Of Keys Handy

NEW YORK (UPI) — Lost keys are not a major cause of "no go,"' but when it happens it means a lot of inconvenience and possibly a costly visit to a locksmith unless a second set of keys is handy, says the Automotive Information Council.

AIC advises motorists to keep a duplicate ignition and door key in their wallet or purse. Some might want to give a friend or family member a spare set of keys, which can be brought to the stranded vehicle. Some car owners purchase small magnetic key boxes which can be hidden under a bumper or in the engine compartment.

Alec McCowen Has Big Hit

By WILLIAM GLOVER

NEW YORK (AP) — Alec McCowen has hit big with an unusual acting venture.

The British star stands alone on stage for two hours, reciting St. Mark's Gospel.

After a four-week run in New York that was a boxoffice sellout before it started, he is off on a tour that will circuit from Harvard University to such drama citadels as Cleveland, Hartford, St. Louis, Minneapolis and Aspen, Colo.

In December he returns to the scene of his original solo triumph, London, to perform in Westminster Abbey. Later he will record the stint for telecast over the ABC network. Then he may be back for another round of cross-country travel.

"It all started," he reports with a touch of irony, "because I wanted to find out if I could hold an audience all alone."

Although he has been acting with notable success for 35 years, McCowen has always felt that the lone entertainer ranks higher in the theatrical pantheon than an ensemble performer. Ahead of an Olivier or a Gielgud, his personal favorites are such comedians as Max Miller, Jack Benny and Frank Howard.

While busy three years ago in the original production of "Equus" and then in "Antony and Cleopatra," the debonair actor started searching for a one-man script.

"I discovered that just about everything suitable in literature but the Bible had been done — Dickens, Shaw, Wilde, Mark Twain, among others," he says.

McCowen considered Matthew, Luke and John also, then decided that Mark's account of Jesus, actually the first written, most suitable.

"He gets on with the story straight off. His account is the most active and is full of incident."

During the 16 months that he spent memorizing the text, the 53-year-old actor kept the project superstitiously secret.

McCowen tried out inauspiciously in the north of England — the local clergy said people were too busy preparing for Christmas to attend. His first London appearance sold only four tickets in advance, but the critics came and the audience avalanche began.

A West End engagement followed. Producer Arthur Cantor, who does shows on both sides of the Atlantic, decided to bring McCowen to New York. Actress Greer Garson joined him as co-sponsor.

"This has given me more joy than anything I've ever done," McCowen declares. "I had intense pleasure working it up and anything from now on is a bonus."

Although he regards himself as a man "without strong religious leanings," the star acknowledges that some of his most successful roles have been theological.

He enacted a priest in "The Deputy," a bishop in "The Agony and the Ecstasy," a pope in "Hadrian VII," an ambiguous Deity in "After the Rain," and "just to give the other side a chance," a stern Protestant reformer in "Luther."

At last year's Edinburg Festival his lone slip into deviltry was portrayal of Mephistopheles in "Paradise Lost."

HY GARDNER HAS THE ANSWER:

Glad You Asked That!

Q: What do you think Leon Spinks will miss the most now not being heavyweight boxing champ? — Johnny Ruffeo, Trenton, N.J.

A: Muhammed Ali answered that question when he said, "The title is power!" And Spinks agreed. "If it wasn't," Spinks told the press (while he was still champ), "all you wouldn't be out there asking me questions."

Q: My grandmother wants to start taking the 'pill' — because she heard it would help her arthritis. Is she right? — Mrs. Estelle T., Tulsa, Okla.

A: According to researchers at the Mayo Clinic in Minnesota and the Royal College of General Practitioners in England, women who take the pill are about 50 percent less likely to contract rheumatoid arthritis than women who don't. Whether or not it helps the condition once it exists, remains to be seen.

Q: I claim Jimmy Dean died of an overdose. My friend insists he was killed in a motorcycle accident. Who's right? — Annamarie Smith, Albany, Ga.

A: You're both wrong. It was a car accident that took the life of "The Rebel Without a Cause," on Sept. 30, 1955. Jimmy was racing down the highway in his new Porsche, which he'd christened "The Little Bastard." He ran into another car — and Jimmy Dean was dead.

Q: With all of the bizarre things people do to get into the Guinness Book of Records, is there anything that the Guinness people refuse to consider? — Jaimie R., Burlington, Va.

A: Yes. In their "eating records" category, Guinness will not list any records involving the consumption of more than two quarts of beer — nor any at all involving liquor. Nor will they list records for potentially dangerous categories such as consuming live ants, quantities of chewing gum or marshmallows, or raw eggs in shells. "While no healthy person has been reported to have succumbed in any contest for eating or drinking non-alcoholic or non-toxic drinks," they caution, "such attempts from a medical point of view must be regarded as extremely inadvisable — particularly among young people."

A: Yes. But Jimmy got even with one TV interviewer. After answering several such questions, Connors commented, "Aren't you going to ask me about my tennis?" "OK, Jimmy," said the interviewer. "How's your tennis?' With a wicked smile, Connors lobbed, "I don't want to talk about it."

NOT EXACTLY— Two angels with broken wings, Toots Shor and Jackie Gleason. The famous drinking partners did not get hurt hand-wrestling: Jackie sprained his wrist in rehearsal while Toots broke his arm falling off a bar stool.

KEEPING BUSY—Lainie Kazan: Between other headlining appearances, the striking singing star helps book talented friends into two Playboy Clubs named after her.

Q: Watching the Jackie Gleason Show, my dad recalled the time Gleason and his drinking pal, Toots Shor, both broke their arms hand-wrestling to decide who'd buy the drinks. Did this ever happen? — Jerry D., Jamaica, N.Y.

A: Not exactly. Though each sported injured arms at the same time, Jackie insisted he sprained his in rehearsal. Toots, on the other hand, claimed he broke his falling off a bar stool.

Q: What's singer Lainie Kazan doing these days? You don't hear much about her lately. — F.L.R., Las Vegas, Nev.

A: Among other things, Lainie's busy commuting to her "Lainie's Room West" at the Playboy Club in Los Angeles, and the new "Lainie's Room East" in New York's Playboy. When she's not performing in one of her rooms, she's selecting which of her entertainer friends should be booked into them.

We like Woody Guthrie's definition: "A person who's been out of work so long, he's learned to do something else."

Send your questions to Hy Gardner, "Glad You Asked That," P.O. Box 11748, Chicago, Ill. 60611. Marilyn and Hy Gardner will answer as many questions as they can in their column, but the volume of mail makes personal replies impossible.

Data Provided French Tourists

PARIS (UPI) — The French Culture and Communications Ministry has set up a special bureau to keep track of the hundreds of exhibitions that take place in museums around France all year and to provide the public with information about them.

To get this information write La Reunion des Musees Nationaux, Bureaux des Expositions, Palais du Louvre, 75001 Paris, France, or call 260-3926 Ext. 3181 in Paris. Protest Rewarded For Kanin

NEW YORK (UPI) — Garson Kanin's protest over a TV news program editorial brought the author a contract for a new book.

After "screaming back at the box" when the commentator concluded that mandatory retirement makes sense if the age chosen is a reasonable one, Kanin demanded and got TV time to reply.

His answer on a subsequent show was "Working men and women should retire for two reasons only: if they want to or if they are unable to function. These conditions may occur at age 62, 36, 38 or 87. Setting precise age is folly. I know many young people in their 70s and a few old foggies in their forties.

"As a man condemned to death reckons his remaining days, a man who told that on his 60th birthday he will no longer be useful, has thrown the same sort of sputtering countdown that shows a silly system of immutable life overnight into a meaningless nonentity."

When Kanin's publisher heard of the incident, the author was commissioned to do a book on "age-ism."

COFFEE'S ORIGIN

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Contrary to popular belief, that indispensable American item, coffee, originated in the Old World. Its introduction to the Western Hemisphere, however, vastly increased the crop and gave rise to a European intellectual institution, the coffeehouse.

Prediabetic Restrictions On Diets Helpful

FARO, Portugal (UPI) — Preliminary findings in animals support the theory that individuals genetically predisposed to diabetes should limit their diets before symptoms of the disease appear.

These findings were presented by George C. Gerritsen of The Upjohn Company Research Laboratories at the IV International Symposium on Early Diabetes in Faro.

Gerritsen said he and his colleague, Margaret C. Blanks, restricted the diets of very young Chinese hamsters whose genetic background guaranteed that they would spontaneously develop diabetes. None developed elevated blood sugar levels, the major clinical sign of diabetes, during the study. Their prediabetic siblings who were allowed to eat as much as they wished became diabetic.

He said normal or nonprediabetic, control animals — whether on restricted or umlimited diets — showed no sign of the disease.

Gerritsen said test results were too preliminary to be directly translated to humans but added the results suggest a foundation for new concepts and discoveries they hope will lead to prevention of diabetes in humans.

Life On Farm May Not Be Safe As Some People Think

By NORMAN D. SANDLER

IOWA CITY, Iowa (UPI) — Life on the farm, often romanticized as the healthy alternative to urban living, may not be as safe as some people believe.

Preliminary research at the University of Iowa suggests there may be unseen hazards in the serene setting of rural America which could make farmers more vulnerable than their inner-city counterparts to prostate cancer, stomach cancer, leukemia and a few other types of cancer.

"Farmers aren't as healthy as we'd all like to think," said Dr. Peter Isaacson of the Iowa Cancer Epidemiology Research Center. "There appear to be certain types of cancers they contract more frequently, but it's an area that's fairly new and we don't have enough information to know for sure."

To pursue the suspected link between farming and cancer, a team of researchers working under the direction of Dr. Leon Burmeister is starting a two-year study funded by the National Cancer Institute in an attempt to identify environmental factors that may make farmers more susceptible to the disease, and to take steps to reduce farm-related cancer deaths.

The work, Burmeister said, is slow and tedious.

Without clinical data to guide them, the researchers will examine thousands of death certificates — matching causes of death with occupations — to verify existing suspicions that there is a correlation between farming and certain types of cancer.

Burmeister said the task of establishing or disproving that link — proposed on the basis of research conducted at Iowa and Washington State University — is made difficult by the inconsistent nature of information available from death certificates.

In some cases, he said, cancer may not be listed as primary cause of death but still present in the body.

Another problem is identifying cancer victims whose primary occupation was farming. For an individual who lived on a farm and later moved to the city, the occupation listed on the death certificate may not provide clues that would lead researchers to suspect an agricultural background.

"Up until this point it's been pretty exploratory," Burmeister said. "The incidence of cancer in farmers found so far is high enough to be statistically significant, but we don't know exactly how high. That's what we'll be trying to determine by looking for clustering (high cancer rates among certain groups)."

But Burmeister shunned suggestions that the research indicates farm life may constitute an undue risk to human health. Basically, he said, it comes down to a question of relative risks.

"I'm not so sure I'd want to say life on the farm isn't good," he said. "In a way, it's kind of like saying everybody dies of something and no matter what occupation you have there may be certain risks that are relatively high in relation to other occupations.

Lone Diners Given Company At Dinner

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — Guests traveling alone can opt to join other unaccompanied diners at the "Captain's Table" in the Marriott Hotel's Kings Wharf Restaurant.

The concept has been an overnight success, with the eight-place table filled almost every night, reports Marty Hehman, food and beverage director at the hotel.

"We've taken them out of the corners, brou;ht them together in the middle of the restaurant and they love it," Hehman said. "We ask if they'd like to join the group, and if so our Maitre 'D introduces them to everyone at the table.

"We tried the concept for breakfast, and it failed miserably," Hehman explains. "Everyone was too grouchy in the morning."

Major Film Companies Taking Stock Of Hits, Misses For Summer

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Now that the first faint chill of autumn invades the air, the major American film companies are figuring up the hits and misses of the all-important summer season.

The hits include John Travolta, Burt Reynolds and Warren Beatty. The misses include the O'Neal family and recycled Beatles and disasters.

Movie companies once shielded their profits and losses as carefully as star's salaries, except, of course, during times of runaway hits. The industry has entered an era of refreshing fiscal candor, and so it is possible to compare performances of the 30-odd films that fought for the summer box office.

"Grease" is the champion of the new films, amassing $102,377,413 in its first 70 days in release. It is destined to be Paramount's No. 2 all-time champion, behind "The Godfather."

Note: All the figures herein are theater gross for the United States and Canada. Rentals — the amount which the film company actually recieves — usually amount to 60 to 65 per cent of the gross.

Paramount is enjoying its finest season. Besides "Grease," starring John Travolta, the company has released "Heaven Can Wait" for a $47,560,115 total in 58 days, and "Foul Play" with $19,390,471 in 37 days. Obviously there is much more life in all three movies.

Furthermore, another Travolta film, "Saturday Night Fever," continues its happy disco beat. From June 1, it has racked up $21,240,000 gross, bringing the total since the Dec. 16 release to $121,060,575.

Burt Reynolds also scored with two bonanzas. United Artists' "The End," which was released May 26, collected $33,583,777 in 16 weeks. A few weeks later Warner Brothers brought out "Hooper," which already has drawn $34,800,000.

There is good news and bad news for movie sequels. United Artists figures "Revenge of the Pink Panther," with a gross of $27,168,350 in almost seven weeks, is 38 per cent ahead of the previous "The Pink Panther Strikes Again."

Universal has reason to be pleased with the performance of "Jaws II" with more than $70 million alreay collected from chilled customers. It's not as big as "Jaws I," but what is?

"Damien: Omen II" performed ably with $19,896,000 so far, and "The Bad News Bears Go to Japan" will show a handsome profit with a $12 million gross.

But "International Velvet," starring Tatum O'Neal, proved a major disappointment for MGM. No figures available. Likewise, father Ryan's "The Driver" hit a roadblock; 20th Century-Fox reports only $5 million so far.

The Fox gamble in re-releasing "Star Wars" with a mammoth new campaign paid off with almost $40 million since the drive's start July 21. That brings the total domestic gross to an almost unbelievable $260,421,049.

Columbia has kept "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" in continual release, the latest gross being $120 million. The company had a big summer hit with "The Cheap Detective" — $31,118,249 so far.

Warners had a pleasant surprise with the space landing hoax, "Capricorn One" ($24.6 million) but was whammied by the surfing elegy, "Big Wednesday" ($3 million). Also, "The Swarm" ran into a beehive of trouble; the $11.5 million gross indicated disaster movies are on the wane.

Walt Disney Productions did handsomely with the first "Jungle Book" reissue ($30 million) and satisfactorily with "The Cat from Outer Space" ($17.5 million) and "Hot Lead, Cold Feet" ($20 million).

Two modest offerings have produced big bucks: MGM's "Corvette Summer" ($12 million) and "National Lampoon's Animal House" ($1 million), with both them still building. But the pretentious "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" struck a dissonant note with $13 million.

BURT REYNOLDS: Scores With Two Bonanzas

Taxidermist's Home Adorned With Wide Variety Of Animals

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The 8-foot Alaskan brown bear in Max Shipley's home is a little like a Sherman tank.

Even if it doesn't move or make noise, it's awfully hard to ignore. That is, unless you've seen the pouncing African lion in his garage.

Both beasts are beyond causing harm. Shipley is a taxidermist.

It's an art he admired as a child. In high school he sent away for a correspondence course on taxidermy.

It set his career.

The first thing he mounted was a pigeon. Since then the list of animals he has worked on might make Noah envious. There have been hundreds of deer, penguins, mountain sheep, lions, tigers, gazelles, moose, bears and birds.

He doesn't take every job offered him. He won't mount pets.

"We can't make them look the same as the owner remembers them," he said.

Shipley, a short man with glasses, who speaks softly, chuckled as he told about one of the weirdest jobs he was asked to do. A man called to say he had killed a bobcat and wanted it mounted. When the hunter arrived, Shipley saw that the man had "somebody's big Angora cat."

But it's deer that really keep the wolves from his door. Mounting deer hunters' trophies is a major part of business. His son, Max Eugene, who works with him, has done all the deer and antelope for the last 12 years, Shipley said.

When he receives an animal, Shipley immediately ships the skin to Colorado to be tanned.

"All we do is taxidermy, we don't do any tanning," he said. "That's an art in itself. An individual can't do both."

When the skin is returned, Shipley soaks it to make it flexible and mounts it on a frame. The skin has to be sewn and molded to fit the frame.

Shipley, 63, is himself a hunter and his prize trophy is "Old Moe," the Alaskan bear that adorns his den.

"I've wanted a big bear since I was a little kid," he said. "It took me 60 years before I got it, but I got it."

Shipley said he shot Moe on an Alaskan hunting trip. Sometimes he hunts with a gun; other times with cameras. He uses pictures to guide him in his taxidermy work.

Although he's been at it for 33 years, Shipley has no plans to retire and there is still one trophy he wants — a full elephant head.

If he gets it, Ole Moe may have to move

Paper Pooch Easy To Make

By SHARI LEWIS

This looks like an awful bare rug, all spread out on the page, doesn't it? But if you'll cut along the doggie's outline, col- patch in the center of its back, fold f and plop on ears, you'll have a pet pooch! (Do you think this doggie is born papertrained, just because he's made out of a newspaper?)

Yesterday's Brain Twister: How many fruits can you think of that have pits (not seeds)?

Answer: I can only think of avocadoes, plums, peaches, mangoes, cherries, apricots and nectarines.

Readers' Suggestions Used In Designing Unusual Home

By HIAWATHA ESTES

We constantly receive suggestions from readers regarding features they would prefer we incorporate in the design of our homes. We have made a special effort to include a number of these features in this particular home.

There is space for three cars. If you only want a two car garage, the extra space could be eliminated during construction or utilized as an extra room. The garage is at the front of the plan to decrease the width so the home can be constructed on a rather narrow lot.

The dining and living room have been combined in one large room without any offsets. This allows more flexibility in the furnishing and use of this space. To visually enlarge this room and the entry, only a partial wall separated the two. A similar wall separates the family room from the nook. Placing this area at the rear of the home will increase the family use and enjoyment of informal outdoor living. The kitchen features a huge nook for family meals, cabinets placed so that traffic will not interfere with meal preparation and an unusual amount of storage including a wide pantry and broom closet.

For privacy, the master bedroom suite is at the rear of the house and includes a private bath and a spacious dressing area. With additional privacy in mind, only two of the bedrooms have a short, common wall. Laundry facilities are in the bedroom wing to eliminate the carrying of clothes back and forth across the house.

Complete working drawings for plan 31248 can be purchased for only $18.50 for the first set and $9 for each additional set ordered at the same time. This plan will be available at these special prices until March 26, 1979. Please allow at least three weeks for delivery. A large reproduction rendering of the exterior is available for $3. Also available are six home plan books illustrating in excess of 950 plans — a $9.75 value — for only $7.75 plus $1 for postage and handling. Send all orders to: Hiawatha Estes, P.O. Box 404-J, Northridge, California 91328.

Realtor Installation Fete Set

The Lubbock Board of Realtors has scheduled its annual officer installation banquet at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Lubbock Civic Center, according to Camille Berry, public relations chairman of the organization.

Officers to be installed include: Darryl Berry, president; Bill Stinson, first vice president; Johnny Gamble, second vice president; Roy Middleton, secretary-treasurer; W. F. "Brownie" Brownlee, executive officer.

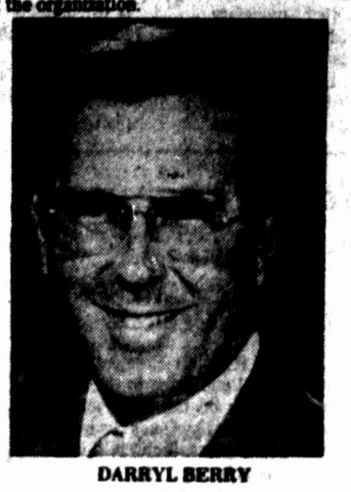
Special awards for outstanding achievements and service will be presented along with recognition of the "Salesman of the Year" and "Realtor of the Year."

Benny McMahan of Dallas, treasurer-elect of the Texas Association of Realtors, will administer the oath of office.



DARRYL BERRY

Guest speaker will be Air-Vice Marshall Gilbert Peake of England. He was a Spitfire pilot in World War II and served in the British Parliament two terms. He is in the United States on a reciprocal speaker's program of distinguished citizens.

The Lubbock Board comprises the local organizational arm of the National and Texas Association of Realtors.

Mrs. Berry said the pledge of realtors nationwide includes the following:

"To protect the individual right of real estate ownership and to widen the opportunity to enjoy it; to be honorable and honest in all dealings; to seek better to represent my clients by building my knowledge and competence; to act fairly towards all in the spirit of the Golden Rule; to serve well my community, and through it my country; to observe the Realtors Code of Ethics and conform my conduct to its lofty ideals."

Farm Experts Visit Russia

PLAINVIEW (Special) -A significant chapter in the history of Soviet-U.S. agricultural relations was recorded recently when Dr. Delbert Hess, director of Cotton Research for ACCO/Paymaster Seed, visited the U.S.S.R. with a team of leading U.S. cotton breeding specialists.

The trip was made as part of an agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union to exchange ideas and cooperate in agricultural research and development. The objective of this trip, which was arranged through the USDA Foreign Agricultural Service, was to study methods of cotton breeding and pest control.

"Cotton is one of the most important agricultural crops in the U.S.S.R.," reported Dr. Hess. "In fact, in recent years the Soviet Union has produced essentially the same amount of cotton as the United States. The value of the export of cotton is important in the balance of trade, and Soviet officials are very interested in increasing cotton production.

Accompanying Dr. Hess on the three-week trip were Dr. P. A. Miller and Dr. Richard Ridgeway, staff scientists for USDA at the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center, Beltsville, Md.; and Dr. Luther Bird, Cotton Plant Pathologist at Texas A&M University.

The U.S. emissaries were met in Moscow by officials of the U.S.S.R. Ministry of Agriculture. They then traveled to the Vavilov All-Union Research Institute of Plant Industry, the Institute of Plant Protection, and the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences Library, all in Leningrad.

In Tashkent, they met with officials at the All-Union Scientific Research Institute for Cotton, the Institute for Cotton Genetics and Breeding, and the Central-Asiatic Scientific Research Institute for Plant Protection. Their final stop was the Tadzhik Scientific Research Institute of Agriculture in Dushanbe.

"We feel this exchange of ideas between the world's two leading cotton producers was very productive," said Dr. Hess. "We hope that it is just the beginning of a continuing relationship."

ACCO/Paymaster Seed has been in the cottonseed business since 1928, producing certified cottonseed for farmers around the world. Ranking as one of the world's largest seed companies, ACCO/Paymaster also markets corn, sorghum, and forage hybrids world-wide.

WHAT YOU DON'T KNOW...

DIXON SPRINGS, Ill. (UPI) — Some ewes at the Dixon Springs Agricultural Center spend several days in the "headlock" pen in the interest of orphaned lambs. Normally ewes will not willingly adopt the orphans. But in the headlock for several days, the ewe can neither see nor smell the orphan and eventually accepts the orphan as well as her own for nursing.

Monetary Growth Must Be Slowed

NEW YORK (Special) -Optimism about the government's latest attempt to curb inflation will evaporate quickly unless the administration outlines a specific plan to slow the rapid growth of the money supply, according to economists at Citibank.

"The impression that monetary growth will be slowed was strengthened when the President announced a one percentage point hike in the discount rate the Federal Reserve charges on borrowings by banks and some increase in reserve requirements," the bank said in its November economic letter.

"But these moves were obviously triggered by the decline in the value of the dollar and may be viewed as only temporary. What we need to know is whether they signal a sustained effort to curb substantially money supply growth."

Pointing out that initial reaction to President Carter's inflation battle plan speech was skeptical, the bank said that Carter might have achieved more "by spelling out" just what he meant by "responsible" monetary policy.

The letter added that while the President may have implied a need for a slowdown in monetary growth.

"It seems more likely that the speech helped to crystalize the realization that things are not likely to get better very quickly or painlessly. . .the future seems to hold many price increases in store.

"Scheduled increases in the minimum wage and Social Security taxes will push up wage costs and the cost of energy is likely to rise under the combined impact of OPEC and the recent legislation affecting natural gas.

"All of these are formidable obstacles to overcome for the Carter Administration program of voluntary restraint. The President's good intentions won't slow inflation until they are bolstered by monetary and fiscal restraints," the letter concluded.

THE U.S. AND YOU

William Steif

THIS YEAR, for the first time since 1973, the nation's traffic death total may reach or exceed 50,000.

That's the word from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

In the first eight months of this year almost 32,000 people died on U.S. roads, more than 3 percent above the same period in 1977.

Nancy Stubbs, a NHTSA statistician, says "this year will be up."

There were 54,052 fatalities in 1973, a year that closed with the world oil crisis. In 1974 traffic deaths fell to 45,196 and folks were cheering the 55 mph speed limit. Since then the toll has risen year after year, reaching 47,671 last year, a 4.7 percent rise over 1976.

Why? Mrs. Stubbs lists these reasons:

— More vehicles. We now have over 150 million.

— Increased speed. The 55 mph speed limit is being exceeded routinely.

— Smaller cars. The demand for fuel efficiency is being fulfilled by the auto makers, but the NHTSA considers smaller cars less protective of occupants.

— More and heavier trucks, a result of Congress lifting the overall truck weight limit from 73,280 pounds to 80,000 pounds in 1974 to "conserve" fuel.

— An aging population. Older people are more susceptible to accidents.

— A decline in seat belts use to well below 20 percent. NHTSA surveys showed that 25 percent of drivers used seats belts in 1974.

— Failure of motorcyclists to wear helmets. Cycle deaths showed "a phenomenal increase" in 1977, Mrs. Stubbs says, largely because half the states shifted from making use of helmets mandatory to making it optional.

— More travel. After the oil crisis, auto travel dropped. Now it's rising fast.

ALL OF THIS HAS a great deal to do with you, the driver, says NHTSA Administrator Joan Claybrook, because it is your decisions that make auto travel safe or unsafe.

Alcohol is involved in about half of all fatal accidents, she says. Use of seat belts is an individual decision, or non-decision.

"Compliance with the 55 mph speed law has produced beneficial results," she says, yet auto accidents remain "the leading cause of death for those under the age of 25. They account for more than half the nation's paraplegics, and are a major cause of epilepsy."

Mrs. Stubbs cites not using motorcycle helmets as a particularly stupid individual decision, and adds: "We're trying hard for passive retraints because people obviously don't restrain themselves."

There is a passive restraint regulation on the books. Starting with larger 1982 models, auto makers will have to install airbags, which inflate on collision to cushion the vehicle's front-seat occupants. Alternatively, the auto makers will have to install automatic belts that retrain the passenger as he settles into an auto seat.

NHTSA is eager to tell you more about how to save your life — or your passenger's life. It has produced a series of pamphlets that can help you. One, for example, is entitled "How to Talk to Your Teenager about Drinking and Driving." There's another entitled "Safe Driving in Winter." Others of general interest are: "Child Restraint Systems for Your Automobile," "Motorcycle Helmets, Claims and Facts," "Automobile Passive Restraints Systems and What They Mean to You," "How to Deal with Motor Vehicle Emergencies," "Motorcycle Safety," and finally. "55 Saves," which is about the speed limit.

New Fiber Glass Plant To Be Built At Midland

PITTSBURGH, Pa. (Special) -PPG Industries has announced it will purchase 420 acres of land six miles west of Midland for the planned construction of a new fiber glass plant.

The plant will produce fiber glass for the plastics reinforcements market, according to Robert A. McLaughlin, vice president and general manager of PPG's Fiber Glass Division.

"Now in the preliminary planning stage is a facility with an ultimate production capacity of about 250 million pounds of continuous filament fiber glass per year," McLaughlin said. "Employment eventually could range from 1,000 to 1,200 persons."

Located in West Texas, between Midland and Odessa, the 420-acre site is bordered on the north by U.S. Highway 80 and the Texas and Pacific Railroad. Interstate 20 borders the southern property line.

McLaughlin noted that among other reasons, the location was selected for the desirable labor base in the area and a plentiful supply of natural gas, a fuel that is important to the fiber glass manufacturing process. In addition, the plant would be well located to serve the West and Midwest markets for plastics reinforcement products.

If approved by PPG's board of directors, construction of the plant could begin next year, with initial start-up occurring sometime during 1980. Purchase of the land was negotiated with the Industrial Foundation of Midland, Inc.

PPG's Fiber Glass Division has manufacturing facilities in Shelby and Lexington, N.C., with a combined employment of more than 3,000 persons, and a research and development center in suburban Pittsburgh.

The division is a major producer of fiber glass for textiles and plastics and rubber reinforcements.

The price of houses is so high nowadays that mobile homes make up about 16 percent of new one-family dwellings, according to the National Geographic Society.

Red 'Free Enterprise' Disclosed

NEW YORK (Special) -Free enterprise is alive and well and living in the Soviet Union, especially on the black market, according to a report by Dun's Review.

Frisbees, blue jeans, T-shirts, lipstick, pantyhose, bubble gum, the craze for American consumer goods, used or new, permeates Soviet society. Because of this, the black market has become a way of life.

The black market tells more about the true worth of a currency or object than the official rates or prices. The official Soviet line has the ruble worth $1.40. On the black market, it is never worth over $1, and often will bring only 50 cents. The dollar may be going down in some areas, Dun's Review says, but it is in robust health in the Soviet Union.

Much of the cause for this discrepency in monetary value lies with the Soviet government itself. Inflation is rampant in almost all Communist countries—inflation worse than in the U.S.—although the official party line insists that nothing as bourgeois as inflation would be allowed to exist.

The facts are that the subsidization of necessities costs the Soviet government more than $40 billion a year, or 7 percent of the national income. Essentials in the Soviet Union—housing, food, transportation, clothing and the arts—are reasonable. However, keeping the prices down on basics has placed an unreasonable pressure on non-essentials.

The theory of inexpensive necessities is good, Dun's Review says. The practical result is that nobody buys Soviet-made consumer goods. They are shoddily produced and totally lacking in style. Economists place the blame on a number of factors—excessive centralization, inefficiency, worker apathy, distribution bottlenecks—but the bottom line is that people are not buying the national output.

With few attractive consumer items to purchase in the stores and with living materials relatively inexpensive (an apartment with all utilities can run as little as 16 rubles per month or $22.40) the middle-class Russian can do two things: save his money—which Russians are doing in increasing numbers—or buy what pleases him wherever he can find something attractive, normally from an American, and usually on the black market.

Why do they buy so much American material? Because, according to one city guide, America is the only exciting country in the world. In addition, Russians find a practicality in American goods that cannot be found in Soviet products, clothes in particular. Blue jeans, the heavy, canvas-like ones, will wear for years, always look good, do what they are supposed to do, and most important, they are "in."

Quite simply, Dun's Review says, a Soviet office worker making $250 a month can exist on two-thirds of that. Buying a pair of American jeans says, "I have the money, and I have the connections." It's part style, part investment, part personal statement.

Although Soviet authorities may frown on such ad hoc international trade, they know well that the injection of a few visible consumer items improves the attitude of the nationals. There is no ruble loss because the money must be spent in the country.

ALL THOSE GOOD NUMBERS TO YOU, BUDDY... I'M PICKING UP A STRONGER SIGNAL!

Better 'Talk Power' Tip Given

By MIKE WENDLAND

"Talk power" is a phase often being heard these days on both the CB and ham bands.

For CBers, forced to operate on a tiny band of 40 channels congested by millions of operators and made all the worse because of a steady pounding by almost around-the-clock skip, talk power just may be the most important factor in getting out.

And hams, whose electronic know-how gives them greater operating privileges, realize too just what a difference it can make. Hams, who can and do legally talk around the world, are begging exotic new countries on the airwaves by improving their rigs' performance through the use of speech processors.

CB Break

For there is only one real way to improve talk power without increasing the wattage output of a CB or ham transmitter. And the processor is the way.

How much of an improvement? A lot. We found out by hooking up our TS 520 S Ha transceiver to one of the newer processors offered on the commercial market these days — the Alpha/Vomax SBP-3 Split Band Speech Processor.

That's a mouthful of a name and the pricetag, at $185, is, too. But our experience with the processor taught us graphically what can be done to boost the range of a single sideband transceiver — be it CB or ham — without having to add on an amplifier.

Hams, of course, can legally use linear amplifiers. CBers can not. So for serious CB sidebanders, a processor may be the next best thing.

In our on-the-air evaluation of the unit, we found that the unit, in effect, tripled our talk power. In other words, the effect of using the processor on the receiving end was the same as if I had tripled my power.

The theory behind speech processing is complicated and confusing. The waveform that comes out of a radio transmitter is made up of many parts. Then, there is the human voice itself. Some, for reasons for pitch and amplitude and various other aspects not yet fully understood, simply "modulate" or carry through better than others.

Essentially, though, the output of a sideband rig goes up and down as the voice does. Sometimes, on voice "peaks," it's loud. On other voice "lows," its output power is but a fraction of what it is on "peaks." The average power is somewhere between the two.

In its simplest definition, a speech processor smooths out the waveform, "clipping" the peaks and boosting up the lows so that the average talk power is constant and as high as possible. It compresses the intelligibility of a voice signal, getting the most possible "oomph" out of it.

And that "oomph," or talk power, carries through for more distance, better coherence in crowded channels and frequencies and clearer reception.

Don't confuse a processor with a power mike. All a power mike does is increase the volume going in to a transmitter. A speech processor increases the volume going out by boosting the average power output, as compared to the Peak Envelope Power (PEP). The PEP is the output measured on voice "peaks," or the loudest part of the transmission.

On my tests, done on the crowded 20-meter ham band, I talked from Michigan to an amateur in California. Without the processor, he read my 100 watt PEP signal as an S7. With the Vomax switched on, I jumped to S9.

Then, I turned off the Vomax and turned on my amplifier, boosting my real outpower to 300 watts PEP. I got the identical S9 reading I received without the amplifier but with the Vomax.

On CB, no such long-range tests were conducted. But in local contacts, I consistently received an additional couple of S units by using the speech processor.

Theoretically, every time you double your output power, you get a 3 db increase in loudness. Tripling your power gives 6 db. Translated into S unit readings on a CB or ham receiver, a 3 db improvement gives one extra S unit, a db boost gives two.

For more information on speech processing, contact Ehrhorn Technological Operations, P.S. Box 708, Industrial Park, Canon City, Col. 81212.

Q. I keep hearing CBers talking about using VFOs. What is this and does it help a CB get our further? — J.H. Richmond, VA.

A. A VFO is the abbreviation for Variable Frequency Oscillator. It will help you get out better and could result in a fine and revocation of your CB license if the FCC catches you with one. VFOs move your transmit frequency, just as the tuning dial on a conventional broadcast receiver moves the receive frequency. Illegal CBers use VFOs to talk on frequencies outside or between the regular CB channels. For a full discussion on legal and illegal CB devices, see my 180-page book, THE WENDLAND CB GLOVE COMPARTMENT BIBLE, available postpaid for $3.95 from Shaul Andrews and McMeel, 6700 Squibb Rd., Mission, Kan. 66202.

CB Static: Readers Air Gripes

Dear Mike: Your readers write a lot about their CB gripes. I'd like to share by biggest ham gripe. I used to like chasing DX. But ever since I got my Advanced license and took to 20 meters, I've heard nothing but rudeness. CBers aren't the only people who can't stand a little discipline. And some of the big guns I'm sure are running more power than the 2,000 watts PEP allowed by the FCC. Hams have big problems with violators, too. — R.D. Pueblo, Colo.

Dear Mr. Wendland: I've had a ball building and using my own CB antennas. I have a wire dipole and a homemade Yagi beam that work as good as anything you can get in a CB shop. CBers can't build their own transmitters, but the FCC does allow us to make our own antennas. It's easy to do and sure can save money. — H.Y., Erie, Pa.

• • •

Dear CB Static: How come every time you see CB used on a TV show, nobody ever identifies with FCC callsigns? That's a rotten example to set. — M.D., St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Mike: I'm a handle collector. In a little over a year, I've heard 3,428 different handles. I wonder if any other readers have the same hobby to CB. — T.R., Saugerties, N.Y.

The Voice of Business

WASHINGTON — Like Dr. Frankenstein's monster, yet another environmental program created with good intentions threatens to get out of control and cause a lot of harm.

The program is the identification and designation of certain public lands as "wilderness areas," which will therefore remain closed to virtually all human activities. It is known as RARE II, for Roadless Area Review and Evaluation, phase II.

The Wilderness Act of 1964 was passed to direct federal land managing agencies to set aside certain lands as areas "where its earth and its community of life are untrammeled by men, where man himself is a visitor who does not remain." As of April 1, 1978, there were 175 areas classified as "wilderness," totaling more than 16.6 million acres. Another nine million acres are awaiting congressional designation as wilderness.

If this "wildernessification" stopped there, the economic impact would be limited. But in the last Congress, the House passed and the Senate was considering legislation adding 66 million acres for possible inclusion in the sytem and the Bureau of Land Management — which was not even covered by the original Wilderness Act — is studying its lands for suitable wilderness areas. An estimated 120 million acres of BLM land meet basic wilderness area requirements.

By way of background, it's important to know that the Federal Government owns about one-third of America's land, and that from this land comes much of our timber, natural gas, patroleum, and other minerals. The land is also used for recreational purposes, grazing and as a source of water for irrigation. If too much of this land is withdrawn from its traditional "multiple use" designation, then there will be shortages of many valuable commodities. And shortages mean higher prices.

— There are 488 million acres of production timberland on the country. The Forest Service manages 18 percent. The nation harvests 66.2 billion board feet of timber per year. In 1977, almost 10.5 billion board feet came from the National Forests. RARE II areas contain 26.5 million acres of commercial land with the ability to produce an annual programmed harvest of 3.075 billion board feet (nearly 25 percent of the National Forest System total) and a long-term potential yield of 5.956 billion board feet of sawtimber and wood products. Under the worst case assumption (if all 62 million acres were designated as wilderness), there would be a loss in programmed output of nearly three billion board feet annually.

— The National Forests and National Grasslands supply 103 million acres, or almost 41 percent of the country's publicly owned rangeland. The inventoried roadless areas contribute over 20 percent of the total grazing use of National Forest System lands. Grazing is allowed in wilderness areas. But fewer range-management improvements are permitted in roadless areas recommended for wildreness designation, resulting in a reduction of the intensity of the grazing that may continue. Worst case: a 30 percent decrease in grazing.

— Of the inventoried 2,686 roadless areas, 137 have proven or producing mines for critical minerals, and 81 have proven or producing energy fields of oil, natural gas, coal or uranium. There are also 461 roadless areas with a high potential for critical minerals and 398 acres with a high potential for oil, natural gas, coal or uranium.

— Recommendation of roadless areas for wilderness status virtually precludes the chance (short of a Presidential order) for intensive development of domestic water supplies, irrigation water sources, and hydroelectric energy sources.

— A wilderness area may be designated as a Class I area under the Clean Air Act. Such action could mean that large land areas around a wildreness area would be precluded from development to protect the wilderness area from air pollution.

Slipping Off Shoes? Blame Buying Error

KOKOMO, Ind. (UPI) — If you slip off your shoes periodically to rest your feet, you've bought the wrong pair, says the president of the Washington-based American Podiatry Association. Dr. Theodore H. Clarke of Kokomo offers these tips for foot comfort:

— Shoeboots are a better choice in snowy areas than galoshes over shoes.

— Be sure socks are long enough. If not, they will bunch together and the resulting friction can cause a painful corn or blister to develop.

— Any time you have to stand on line, keep moving. Shift your weight from one foot to another or take a few steps to the side of the line. "This promotes circulation and relieves the numbness and strain of overworked feet," Clarke says.

OUR PLEDGE

We pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands; one Nation, under God, indivisible, with Liberty and Justice for all.

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

Allegiance--To Whom Paid?

THE SHOCKING events of the past few days in Guyana, South America, point up a situation which to some degree poses a major dilemma around the world today.

The rapid rise of extremist groups, cults and splinter organizations of all kinds, whether religious, political or economic, is threatening to fracture the broader and more standard forms of society and government.

While operating under the implied protection of various governments, members of such groups often pay their highest allegiance to other ideas, philosophies, aims and leaders.

THE IDEA OF independent thought, freedom of expression, peaceful assembly—all have been part and parcel of this nation's history. And in fact are guaranteed by the Constitution.

However, not only in the U.S., but in many nations around the globe, "freedom of expression" has been expanded to include everything from highly organized and financed terrorist gangs, which think nothing of assassination as a means of achieving their questionable goals, to religious groups and cults, which not only preach their own lifestyles, but insist that society bend its rules and laws and in some instances morals to fit those ideas.

In brief, self-anointed leaders and their followers proclaim their "rights" as superior to those of the millions of citizens and nations in which they operate, often with tax-free status.

THE TRAGIC events surrounding the religious settlement in Guyana points up the need for a closer look at such organizations, even at the risk of "infringement" on religious beliefs.

While the Constitution guarantees freedom of worship and assembly, it does not guarantee those who claim asylum under such guarantees the right to impose their wills on others, to set up what amounts to mini-governments, to use this nation as a base to further aims and practices which may be inimical to the best interests of its members or the overall good of the nation.

Any such organizations which have nothing to hide should have nothing to fear from public inspection and scrutiny of their operations.

ON A BROADER scale, we feel that some sort of international method must be set up, through agreement by as many governments as possible, to control worldwide terrorist groups.

At some point in time, such an organization conceivably could come up with a weapon, nuclear or otherwise, through which it could blackmail either an entire city or nation.

Political asylum and religious freedom are one thing. Use of such claims to further plans to defy constituted authority and to hold others in what amounts to bondage is something else, and is the concern of society at large.

IN THAT RESPECT, we might note that there also is a danger on the other end of the spectrum. Many persons may be falling into a "thought trap," which also can be dangerous.

All organizations and leaders are not suspect. It has become fashionable in some circles, especially the far left and far right, to take a broad brush and paint the organization or person with some outlandish charge. Then, without taking the trouble to see what the motives of those might be who make such charges, many take up the charge and repeat it as gospel truth.

Actually, some of those who make such charges might in turn be surprised to know that they themselves are also suspect in the eyes of other citizens. The process can be a vicious merry-go-round which feeds on rumor, gossip and unfounded claims.

RECENTLY, WHEN Dr. Henry Kissinger spoke in Lubbock, this newspaper received letters, pamphlets and phone calls, accusing the former Secretary of State of everything from being a buddy-buddy of Moscow to a one-worlder.

Dr. Kissinger's comments here, and elsewhere of late, have been far more critical of Soviet policies, in Africa and in Iran, than we have heard from the Carter Administration. He has been far more harsh in his assessment of Cuba and Fidel Castro, both on Cuba's involvement in Africa and in permitting MIG-23s in the island, than has most others, including the present administration.

The point of all this is that our first allegiance in this nation should be to God and Country. Most important, there is no reason for conflict in such allegiance.

In the final analysis, it makes no difference whether those with whom we are dealing are individuals or organizations, their aims, their goals and the manner in which they go about achieving it increasingly must be responsive to society as a whole.

ART BUCHWALD:

Pinto's Meanest Hoss Soviets Could Corral

WASHINGTON—I have good news for all of you who were wondering how you were going to survive World War III. President Carter has a plan.

At least he's given the go-ahead to the civil defense people in the government to come up with a plan, which would protect 140 million Americans in the event of a Soviet nuclear attack.

The cost of "designing" the plan, (as opposed to the plan itself), is $2 billion, and unlike previous civil defense ideas this one does not include building bomb shelters.

Instead the emphasis will be on evacuating people from the large cities to the countryside as soon as hostilities begin.

THIS IS NOT a joke—this is not a drill—this is a real, bona fide plan which the President is asking Congress to finance.

According to Pentagon experts, all the U.S. would need is warning of a Soviet missile attack, and it would then put its evacuation plan into effect.

The Pentagon says we need the plan in the worst way because the Soviets are going ahead with their civil defense plans, and we must maintain a "crisis stability" with them.

This means that if the Soviets "thought" we could survive an attack by them, they wouldn't dare to try to kill us.

OKAY. BUT before we spend $2 billion on an evacuation feasibility study, I have one favor to ask of the President. And that is, the next time he decides to spend a weekend at Camp David in the Maryland mountains, he go by car instead of by helicopter.

As soon as the President nears the Beltway surrounding Washington, he will realize that there is absolutely no way of getting out of the city on a Friday night, much less if we have a real live nuclear alert.

The truth of the matter is the Soviets know that we could do more damage to ourselves through civil defense than they could ever do by starting a war.

This is the scenario that the Russians have planned for us.

THEY AIM A series of dummy missiles, with condemned Pintos as warheads, at the major cities in the U.S. We go on red alert and the sirens start whining, ordering everybody to leave at once.

People pile into cars, taxis and trucks and head for the outskirts of town. The Pintos are pinpointed to land on the arteries to every major expressway, tying up traffic for miles.

The panic-stricken city dwellers jump out of their cars and start beating up the people in the vehicles in front of them. Other drivers attempt to push stalled autos off the road.

Still other start running across the roofs of the cars to get away from what they believe are mushroom clouds, which are really autos that have overheated.

UNDER PRESENT American driving conditions, it is my belief that the Soviets could do more damage with 100 Pintos than they could with 100 nuclear warheads.

Therefore, before the President tells Congress that civil defense is the moral equivalent of war, I urge him to get behind the wheel of Billy's pickup truck, and drive from the White House to Alexandria, Va., during rush hour.

If he can make it in less than an hour, I'll give him the $2 billion out of my own pocket.

Tech Grid Fan Has High Praise For Coach Dockery

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

We all owe Rex Dockery, his staff, and the entire Texas Tech football team a big pat on the back for a winning season and a tremendous effort in winning Nov. 18 over SMU.

The wolves were howling at the door before the season began; the critics were vocal and numerous; Tech was surely going to have a losing season! Regardless of the outcome of the next two games, the Red Raiders are assured a winning season and, hopefully, this season of surprises is not yet over!

Dockery assumed the head coaching job under less than favorable circumstances and has done the seemingly impossible with a young inexperienced squad. He overcame all the difficulties, the lack of support, the doubting Thomases, and the preseason pollsters by sheer determination, perseverance, and a willingness to search for the right combination of players.

Rex Dockery is a fine example of fulfilling the American dream. He got the opportunity to be his own boss and made a success out of something nobody thought was possible. His intensity, his enthusiasm, his gambles, his faith in himself and his players has paid off. In fact, I think he really deserves to be "Coach of the Year" for the Southwest Conference.

All of Lubbock and all Red Raider fans owe him a sincere thank you and hats off for showing all of us the value of "I think I can."

"If you think you are beaten, you are,
"If you think you dare not, you don't
"If you like to win, but you think you can't,
"It is almost certain you won't.
"If you think you'll lose, you've lost
"For out of the world we find,
"Success begins with a fellow's will—
"It's all in the state of mind.
"If you think you are outclassed, you are,
"You've got to think high to rise.
"You've got to be sure of yourself before
"You can ever win a prize.
"Life's battles don't always go
"To the stronger or faster man,
"But soon or late the man who wins
"Is the man WHO THINKS HE CAN!"

Transit Head Explains Purchase Of New Buses

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

As Transit Coordinator for the City of Lubbock I am responding to a recent letter by Mr. R. G. Ward which questioned the purchase of "39 45 passenger buses."

First, let me say the source by which Mr. Ward received the information made a drastic mistake. The City is applying for 15 new 39- to 45-passenger buses.

The only buses to be replaced are those primarily in use on the Texas Tech campus which presently are leased from American Transit Corporation. By the City owning these buses City Hall will save taxpayers $38,000 a year in lease fees.

The reason 39- to 45-passenger buses were requested is obvious to any Tech student trying to find a seat or at least a place to stand.

It was also stated "10 percent of this purchase would come from local funds." It is an approved fact that the local share is 7 percent.

The City will not be out any additional monies, because the Urban Mass Transportation allowed the City's in-kind match to be an old building which was purchased some time back.

I would like to point out the fact that the U.S. Congress allocates specific amounts of Capital improvement funding each year. These funds are available for reducing the local cost of our transit system.

If Lubbock fails to use their allotment, the funds are not returned to the U.S. Treasury as a savings, but used by other larger cities.

Lubbockite Sees New Threat In IRS School Proposal

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

The IRS is now taking it upon itself to interpret the law. Which as we know is the duty of our Supreme Court.

The IRS says they have the right to lay out the guidelines for Tax Exemption Education for both private secular education and private church funded schools. The guidelines that they suggest are as follows:

1. Availability of and granting scholarships...on a significant basis to minority students.
2. Active and vigorous minority recruitment programs.
3. An increasing percentage of minority student enrollment.
4. Employment of minority teachers or professional staff.

If the schools do not meet these standards it will not be the schools alone that lose the tax exemption but, also our churches. After our churches lose their tax exemption all who donate to the church will lose their tax deduction. Stop and think this through as to what will happen to the hospitals etc. that are funded through churches.

If the silent majority do not get up off of their silent rear ends and get involved in the political process and in groups like "Citizens For Tax-Free Private Education" they will be the ones to blame when 50 percent, 60 percent, 70 percent or more of our income goes for taxes.

If people get involved in writing their President, Vice President, Congressmen, and Senators of the United States they will make an impact.

Now is the time for the Silent Majority to stand up and be counted by the elected officials and, for those who do not take an active part have effectively said, Whatever the State or Federal government do is fine with them by their silence.

Ralls Man Takes Issue With Mayor's 'Attitude'

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

Quite often we see people elected to public office, who decide they are bigger, and more important than the people who elect them to office.

I feel this is the case with Lubbock's Mayor Dirk West.

It is alarming to note West's attitude toward the people in the community he is supposed to be serving. Here are three quotations from his letter to the editor, in the Sunday, Nov. 12th issue of your paper:

"I couldn't care less about these people who are mad about this program."

"To those people who resent radar traps, I have no consolation. Those who say this is just another way of raising money are squirrels."

"If this program is unpopular with some, who cares? I don't."

The people elected him to office, and perhaps they deserve him. But, if they don't like him, they can vote him out of office. But how about the thousands of people, who live outside the city limits of Lubbock, who drive in every day to spend their money with Lubbock merchants?

Most people who go to Lubbock are far more afraid of getting mugged, robbed, murdered or raped, than they are of getting run over by a speeding car.

Reader Waxes Poetic On How To Pronounce Lubbock

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

I have always believed that, as a sign of courtesy and respect to others, we should endeavor to enunciate their names as nearly correct as possible, no matter how strange or unusual they may seem. This, I feel, should also be applied with place names.

More and more often I hear the name of our home town miscalled and, as a gentle reminder, offer this:

PRONOUNCEMENT

We don't call a rock a "rick";
We don't call a lock a "lick";
The rule's the same for our city's name.
It's Lubbock, please, not "Lubbick"!

HENRY J. TAYLOR:

Pope On A Rope

POPE JOHN Paul II faces a dilemma. Italy's population of more than 56 million is about 99 percent Roman Catholic. How can Communism threaten Italy?

The Roman Catholic Church is the Reds' powerful spiritual and moral opponent. How that "Vota Communisti" grips Italy and the Western world?

The Church makes heroic attempts to buttress the situation. Pope John II heads the Pontifical Relief Agency. It conducts a massive nationwide relief, health and vocational network. These are welfare centers, conducted on an immense scale in all of Italy's 94 provinces.

In addition, the Pontofical Relief Agency cares for more than 500,000 children in about 33,000 summer camps and day centers. And you find at the diocese level many Catholic organizations.

YET COMMUNISM rages throughout Italy and the Western world.

Bloody-fisted Enrico Berlinger leads the Partito Communista Italiano (PCI), the largest political party in the Western world. Although the party claims independence from Moscow, Berlinger is an absolute, 100 percent Soviet stooge.

So is PCI chief economist Luciano Barco, likewise appointed by Moscow and a member of the Communists' ruling politburo.

I found Berlinger one of the most detestable people you would wish to avoid and Barco a very close second. Their resentments are furious and implacable and both seek power with a capital "P."

Their political pitches come in all shapes and speeds—the wide-breaking curve, the tantalizing knuckler, the beanball, the fast one—saved chiefly for the Italian government.

BOTH ARE, AS the Italians say, "camaleones," chameleons—one minute you see them plain as day, the next minute you lose them in the undergrowth.

And their purpose is as clear as that of a fox in a hen house—the fall of the Italian government.

In fact, Berlinger told me that his CPI does not need a majority in Italy's parliament. Already it has achieved in the parliament a blocking position, accomplishing Moscow's objective.

Berlinger actually told me that no legislation whatever of which the USST disapproves can be passed.

Berlinger's face is wily and is sharp enough to split logs. His head gives him an aerodynamic look; he might have been born in a wind tunnel, as if he had arrived from outer space and was heading right back.

IN SHORT, I found Berlinger a thoroughly reprehensible thug. Barco is the same.

Including the PCI, you find eight major parties and an appalling 31 additional parties. There are so many parties that only the factional interests are represented: the Italian people are not represented at all.

Nearly every local Communist leader claims that he is a Catholic. Obviously, this is untrue. Communist Party law abolishes belief in God. Every Communist Party member any place in the world is an atheist.

Otherwise, by Gommunist law, he could not be a Communist.

ACCORDINGLY, AT THE village meetings the local Communist leader shouts: "I am as good a Catholic as you are. I go with you to church. I believe in Pope John Paul II should run the Church.

"I believe the priest should run his parish. But not our village."

Countless Italians say "Si, si" to this. For, although the religious feeling remains, the soul of Italy, as in France and Spain and much of the Catholic world, you find an intense anti-clerical feeling when it comes down to how much the Church should have to say in the government.

If the Church intensifies its political action, the Communists flame with righteousness.

They roar: "Just as we said. The Vatican is trying to run the government."

AMONG MILLIONS, the Church's intervention boomerangs and the young, especially, are alienated. On the other hand, if the Church backs away, a political vacuum results.

And the Communists fill that vacuum. For they have made it their business to supercharge this anti-clerical feeling to checkmate the Church.

Pope John Paul II is boxed in.

Q. "HOW MANY state capitals do you recall that were named in honor of women?"

A. Can only come up with two. Annapolis, Md., was so called after Queen Anne of England. And Augusta, Maine, was identified in that manner as a tribute to Pamela Augusta Dearborn, the daughter of Revolutionary War Gen. Henry Dearborn.

What town in the U.S.A. has the longest name? Possibly, Washington Court House, Ohio, no?

Nursing Student Jo Harmon Helped From Disaster Scene By Reese Firemen

Disaster Procedures Tested In Simulated Plane Crash Drill

If Methodist Hospital learned anything from its simulated plane crash disaster drill last Monday, it's that the next time the "disaster" should be even bigger, and involve more hospitals.

"No question about it," said Ed Ramsey, chairman of Monday's drill, "we need a city-wide drill to test the coordination of all the hospitals in Lubbock."

Ramsey said Wednesday that "if no one else takes the initiative next spring, this hospital will send a letter to every Lubbock hospital inviting them to participate in a city-wide drill."

All hospitals accredited by the Joint Hospital Accreditation Committee, which accredits all eligible hospitals in the U.S., must test their disaster plans twice yearly to retain accredited status. Monday's drill, conducted jointly by Methodist Hospital and Reese Air Force Base, was much like the ones directed every spring and fall according to Ramsey, "only on a larger scale."

In Monday's drill, two Air Force buses simulated the broken fuselage of a downed plane, and 40 Methodist Hospital School of Nursing students posed as "victims." Disaster crews from both the Reese Fire Department and Lubbock Fire Department assisted at the scene, and ambulances from several private services carried the "wounded" to Methodist's and Reese's emergency rooms for treatment.

Locating the "bugs in the system" was the purpose of Monday's drill, and as such the exercise was lauded a success. During a critique session, representatives of the planners and participants presented suggestions for improvement. "We encountered fewer problems than we'd expected," said Col. Allen Moore of Reese, "and none of them is insurmountable."

Remembering the 1970 tornado, when he was associated with West Texas Hospital, Ramsey said it's important to remember that in a real disaster people's actions are more spontaneous and lives are saved by quick thinking rather than planning." That's something no drill can duplicate.

National Family Week Observed Throughout U.S.

National Family Week, declared by President Jimmy Carter, ended Saturday throughout the United States.

"Families are the building blocks of civilization," President Carter said. "Our social and individual achievements, be they great or small, can generally be traced to early family influences. Family values are our most fundamental and lasting heritage."

The president noted that changing social patterns have threatened family stability.

Spencer W. Kimball, president and prophet of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons) reemphasized his position regarding the family. "Let parents everywhere be worthy models and give the time necessary to become close to their children. Let children honor and respect their parents and may that respect be returned."

One Lubbock family that has heeded President Kimhall's advice and observed Family Week is the Bruce Hatch family. Hatch, a U.S. Air Force major stationed at Reese Air Force Base, and his wife, Betty, are members of the Mormon church and strictly follow their church's advice to spend at least one night a week together as a lamily.

"Actually when we started, 14 years ago, we'd get together as a family around the piano, then get in bed and tell stories," said Mrs. Hatch. "As the kids got older we cut back to once a week, however, we still read to the little ones every night."

The Hatchs, like most Mormon families, reserve Monday night for Family Home Evening, a program of the church. Their church supports them by providing a manual with lessons, games and stories.

Maj. Hatch related a typical Family Home Evening: "We start with a song and prayer. Next comes the lesson, followed by a family discussion or council. We usually end with a game, family prayer and refreshments."

How do they keep a 17-year-old and a one-and-one-half-year-old interested in each other? Mrs. Hatch explained that the older ones help teach and take care of the younger ones.

Steve, age 17, and Erin, age 16, both agreed, saying, "We give a little and they give a little." Erin readily admitted that good refreshments help. Both boys agree that the Family Home Evening program works and both intend to continue the practice in their homes.

President Carter will be in Salt Lake City, Utah, Monday to participate in a special salute to the American family, sponsored by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, according to a church spokesman.

Sponsors of the National Family Week resolution signed by Carter have indicated they would like to see a permanent annual tribute to family solidarity established.

OBSERVE SPECIAL WEEK—Members of the Maj. Bruce Hatch family of Lubbock were among the many families and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons) who observed National Family Week this past week. President Jimmy Carter signed a proclamation recently designating the week of Thanksgiving as National Family Week, and endorsed by the Mormon church. Participating in a Family Home Evening program were, from left to right, David, four; Mrs. Hatch; Mindy, six; Brett, eight; Maj. Hatch; Tracy, 14; Erin, 16; and Steve, 17.

Revival Services Set At Monterey Baptist

Monterey Baptist Church, 30601 50th St., is holding a series of revival services today through Wednesday with Dale Freeman as evangelist and John Glover as special singer and music director.

Services today are at 1n:45 a.m. and 7 p.m. with weekday services at 11:30 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. daily.

Freeman is a native of the Pacific southwest and was born in Yakima, Wash. He attended Central Washington Bible Institute and Northwest Nazarene College and has served as a staff member with Youth for Christ International.

The guest evangelist pastored Southern Baptist churches in Idaho and North Dakota 12 years and is a veteran of more than 150 evangelistic endeavors in 20 states. He recently joined Outreach Evangelism, Inc., in Lubbock as an associate evangelist.

Freeman preaches many crusades each year and is in great demand for ministries on college and university campuses throughout the nation. A professional magician for many years, he uses mentalism in his services to entertain and inspire.

The guest evangelist's presentations combine a complete state of mentalism and illusion as it relates to the realities of today's rapidly changing world. One of his presentations, "Close Encounters with the Third Mind," is well received by college students across the nation, a church spokesman said.

A new book of his, "Encounter I," will be released in the spring of 1979.

In addition to his appearances in the United States, he has been invited to tour India with a crusade in 1980. While there he will address a youth leadership congress on the campus of a Christian college.

Glover lives in Gober near Sherman. The graduate of Austin College in Sherman played basketball while attending the Sherman college.

He is a graduate of Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth and has been a staff member at the First Baptist Church in Pampa for five years. He formerly was minister of music at Monterey Baptist Church here for five years.

Film Being Shown At City Church

"Pilgrim's Progress," a feature-length motion picture based on the famous book, is being shown at 6 p.m. today in the First Church of the Foursquare Gospel, 3115 2nd St.

Second only to the Bible itself in volume of sales, "Pilgrim's Progress" was written three centuries ago by John Bunyan. A common man by trade and lifestyle, Bunyan nonetheless became an astute student of the Bible. As a result of his studies, he voiced sharp disagreement against many of the religious practices of his day. Although never brought to trial, he spent 12 years in prison. It was while he was in prison that he wrote the book.

Scenes along the route of the film story include the Slough of Despond, the Cross, Vanity Fair, the Delectable Gardens, Shepherd's Fields and, finally, the Celestial City.

"Pilgrim's Progress" was filmed just outside of Belfast, Northern Ireland, where terrain and facilities for production requirements were found to be ideal.

The public is invited to attend the admission-free showing, according to Rev. Phil Demetro, pastor.

Positive Thinking

By Norman Vincent Peale

DRIVING ACROSS New Jersey recently I saw a lighted railroad train streaking through the night. For an old timer the sight still has magic in it and brought to mind an incident that happened many years ago on a wild, wintry night. I was traveling upstate in the club car of a train talking with a fellow passenger. "Where are you headed tonight?" he asked.

"I'm getting off at Hornell," I replied, "to spend the night with my mother and father who live nearby at Canisteo."

The man sat silent for what seemed a long time. Then he said, "I hope you are thankful that you can spend a night with your mother and father. You see, I can't do that. My parents are gone from this world. So," he added, "you ought to be thankful, my friend, that you can spend the night — particularly an old fashioned snowy night like this — at home with your mother and your father."

Arriving at Hornell, which is in the snow belt of upstate New York, there was a driving storm blowing and the snow lay deep in the fields. But the roads had been kept clear, for they knew how to handle snow up there. I arrived at the village of Canisteo — I can see it yet — my parents' house, on a hill, a white colonial house with white pillars. And every window was ablaze with light because one of their sons was coming home.

I SAT WITH Mother and Dad in front of a big open fire. We drank cider and ate doughuts and talked until one o'clock in the morning. By that time the storm had ceased and the moon was shining on the snow which lay eight inches deep on the ground. Mother came into my room and kissed me goodnight like when I was a child. My father came in and punched me in the chest and said they were mighty glad to have me there.

Now, like the man on the train, I can't do that any more, for they have both gone on to heaven, but I am thankful I can still remember such nights with them. Actually, we all ought to be grateful at Thanksgiving time and indeed every day for the wonderful, fundamental values, the simple basic things. We have so much to be thankful for that Thanksgiving Day should be full of meaning for every American.

This Thanksgiving Day we would do well to think of the great people who gave us our heritage. When I get to thinking of the meaning of this day in the midst of all the complexities of modern society, I find myself giving more and more thought to the kind of men and women who built this country. It seems to me that often the Pilgrim Fathers have been greatly maligned by some sophisticated ultra ultra characters who could hardly be in the same league with them. There were only 102 persons on the Mayflower when they crossed the Atlantic Ocean in the autumn gales.

Have you ever been on the Atlantic Ocean in stormy season? In the old days I crossed on the biggest ships such as the Old Queen Mary, the United States and others and there were nights when, believe me, I would have given anything to get off and onto solid dry land. Even huge ships are tossed around by the mighty Atlantic. Can you imagine what happened to a little ship, only about 100 feet long, like the Mayflower? And the Mayflower crossing took many, many days. People did not have pampered seven-hour air crossing back then.

WHEN THE PILGRIM Fathers got to Massachusetts, it was cold November. There were no motels on Cape Cod to take them in, and provide each one with a nice room and bath. There was nothing but an impenetrable forest, full of wild animals and strage men.

Before they landed on Plymouth Rock, the Pilgrims wrote out an agreement known as the Mayflower Compact, distilling in eight sentences the political philosophical thinking of three hundred years. They agreed that they would elect men to rule over them and would respect their rule. Thus began American democracy, government of the people, by the people, and for the people. Foreshadowed in that little document were the Declaration of Independance, the Bill of Rights, and the Constitution of the United States. They were smart, good people, the Pilgrims, and they were plenty tough. They had a stern philosophy of life and an equally stern morality. A great nation could hardly have been built on soft people in those rugged times. And for that matter, you can't keep that kind of nation going on soft people today, either.

So, on Thanksgiving Day, be thankful for the United States of America, for the kind of people who made this a great country, and for those who are still making it great today!

Kids Taught Fire Safety Practice

MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — About 1,400 children will die in residential fires this year, says a manufacturer of smoke detectors.

Fire experts agree most such deaths could be prevented by educating children about fire safety, says Edward J. Roach, a Honeywell executive.

Roach said the best proven means of protection is devising and practicing a family fire escape plan and installing smoke detectors in the home.

United Methodist Bishop Alsie H. Carleton, resident bishop of the Northwest Texas-New Mexico Area of the United Methodist Church, heads a team of four United Methodist bishops addressing the Convocation on Missional Priorities, slated Monday and Tuesday at the First United Methodist Church.

Representing 157,148 members in an 80-county region of West Texas and the state of New Mexico, the Area Convocation reviews local projects and calls for recommitment to the denomination-wide attempt to combat world hunger, evangelize communities and empower ethnic minority local churches.

Bishop Scott Allen of Charlotte, N.C., will speak on the Ethnic Minority Local Church; Bishop Leroy C. Hodapp of Springfield, Ill., will detail Evangelism; and Bishop C. Dale White of Princeton, N.J., will address World Hunger.

Clergy and laity from 416 local United Methodist Churches in the two-state region are expected to reaffirm their support for the three Missional Priorities adopted by the denomination's 1976 General Conference, according to Bishop Carleton. In a pastoral letter to church leaders, Bishop Carleton has urged every pastor in the two annual conferences and one representative from each church to attend the convocation.

The convocation begins at 7:30 p.m. Monday with a rally in the sanctuary of the First United Methodist Church, 1411 Broadway. Tuesday's events will begin at 9 a.m. and continue to 3 p.m.

Local Government Tax Reform Needed To Weed Out Inequities In Systems

TAXATION

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the 12th in a series of 15 articles exploring "Taxation: Myths and Realities." In this article, Roy W. Bahl of the Maxwell School, Syracuse University, discusses why the property tax has aroused such opposition and suggests reform measures that might meet some of the problems. This series was written for Courses By Newspaper, a program developed by University Extension, University of California, San Diego, and funded by a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Local tax systems in the United States suffer, to varying degrees, from three shortcomings.

First, they are inelastic. They fail to grow adequately in response to growth in personal incomes, prices, public service demands, or costs of public service. This failure leads to highly visible increases in the tax rate that stimulate taxpayer revolt.

Second, they are inequitable on three counts: treating taxpayers differently when their situations are similar (such as homeowners with equally valued homes); placing proportionately heavier tax burdens on those with low income; and, in some cases, favoring suburban governments over cities.

Third, they lead to undesirable economic choices, for example, urban sprawl and disincentives to rehabilitate structures.

In response to these problems, local government revenue reform has taken two directions: reform of the property tax, which dominates the local revenue system and embodies all the undesirable features mentioned, and greater use of sales and income taxes and user charges.

The property tax is by far the most important local government revenue source, accounting for 60 percent of general revenues raised by local governments and nearly 100 percent of school district tax revenues. Recently it has declined in relative importance, but in 1975, it still accounted for about one-third of all revenues received by local governments — including state and federal aid.

BY ALMOST ANY test for a good tax, the property tax fails. It is based on a form of wealth that may not reflect ability-to-pay. It taxes actual rather than optimal land use, and structures as well as sites, which makes it undesirable for promoting better land use or stimulating reinvestment in urban structures. It does not readily respond to local economic growth. And it is costly to administer.

Nevertheless, the property tax remains the major revenue source of local governments. Efforts have therefore been directed to improving the tax rather than replacing it.

The slow growth in assessed property values relative to growth in personal income and prices, plus the necessity, in most cases, of getting voter approval to raise rate limits, make the property tax a poor source for financing expanding urban public service needs.

The problem may be particularly acute for older central cities, where much new construction — usually a major source of growth in assessed value — is tax-exempt (government buildings, public housing projects, freeway interchanges). Furthermore, housing values in the central city are growing slowly, if at all, because of residential abandonment and white flight to the suburbs.

The other source of growth in assessed value comes from updating existing assessments. But it is difficult to adjust values upward on a year-to-year basis when there is little objective evidence of property value changes for individual parcels. Consequently, assessed values are infrequently revised and don't keep pace with property value increases.

Reforms to improve the revenue growth of the property tax have concentrated on bringing rapidly growing suburban areas within the local property tax base. This has been done through city-county or metropolitan governmental consolidations — often highly unpopular with citizens who prefer small communities; through creation of specific purpose governments; and — in at least one case, Minneapolis — for the specific purpose of tax base equalization.

A SECOND REFORM aims at keeping assessment rolls current by using mass appraisal techniques. The most promising are computer-based analyses that relate physical characteristics and location of a property to its selling price.

A more recent reform movement, initiated in California, limits the level as well as the growth of property taxes. Whether such restrictions will be limited to states such as California — where the state surplus is high and property tax increases have been enormous — remains to be seen.

The property tax is accused of being unfair and inequitable because (1) it taxes families with homes of equal value in the same jurisdiction at different rates; (2) it places a greater tax burden on city than suburban residents; and (3) it places a greater tax burden on low-income families than on others. Evidence suggests the first two charges are true: the third is debated among economists.

Partly because the appraisal process depends on individual judgments and partly because of failure to update property values annually, the ratio of assessed value to market value varies widely, even within the same community.

In some states, variation in assessed to full value is deliberate, usually involving heavier assessment of commercial and industrial property. Where variations result from error, states have started to monitor assessments by comparing them to sales figures and to increase the professionalism of assessment staffs.

The second inequity is variation between jurisdictions: taxpayers in poorer jurisdictions may have higher tax burdens because the overall taxable capacity of the jurisdiction is lower. This disparity arises partly from fiscal zoning — higher income communities using zoning laws to exclude low income or "high cost" families, such as those with children who need educational facilities. Reform initiated by state courts may eliminate such disparities by requiring that school finance be made independent of the property base.

THE PROPERTY TAX burden can be particularly heavy on low income homwowners, especially the elderly, whose income does not increase with inflation and rising property taxes. Approximately half the states have therefore introduced circuit breakers — property tax relief for low-income groups that takes the form of direct reduction in the property tax bill, a refundable credit against state income taxes, or a cash refund.

By penalizing investment in structures, the property tax may slow urban development. Because the tax is based on structures as well as on land, it increases whenever a property is improved, thereby reducing the return on such an investment.

Theoretically, a tax on land only — such as that proposed by 19th century social reformer Henry George — would not affect investment incentive. Such "site value" taxes or differentially higher rates on the land component of the property tax are not uncommon elsewhere. In the United States, however, there seems to be little sentiment for changing the land-and-improvements base.

The current property tax also may encourage urban sprawl by assessing actual rather than highest-and-best use. Property assessed as farmland on an urban fringe, for example, may carry a low tax, and therefore may be withheld from urban development, encouraging land speculation. Plans to eliminate such speculation include assessment at highest rather than actual use, and payment of a land value increment tax, based on increase in property value due to conversion to urban use.

Primarily because of the inadequate yield of the property tax, local governments increasingly have turned to faster-growing, nonproperty taxes, including sales and income taxes and user charges.

Retail sales taxes often are levied county-wide so as not to discourage sales in a particular area, and are shared among the local governments of the county by a formula — as in New York State.

Local income or earnings taxes may be of three kinds. They may be levied on local residents, discriminating in favor of untaxed commuters, as in Washington, D.C. Or they may tax central city residents and commuters, though the rate on commuters is often lower, as in New York City. Or, third, county-wide income taxes may be levied as surcharges on state income taxes, as in Maryland.

User charges — charging people directly for public services as if they were private goods — and general benefit taxes have the appeal of tying tax burdens to beneficiaries. Their applicability is limited, however, by the problems of allocating the charge or tax on the basis of benefits received from the service.

Nevertheless, these charges, like local sales and income taxes, are growing rapidly as the property tax proves inadequate to meet the revenue needs of local governments. One possible side effect of Proposition 13 — the California tax initiative — is an increasing reliance on user charges by local governments to make up for lost property tax revenues.

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

GAME OF PURE INTELLECT?

Chess has the reputation of being the most cerebral of games. But superstition is rife within it. Some players believe they can win only if they are the first (or the last) to sit down. Others insist on wearing a certain coat or necktie. Master Alexander MacDonnel of Great Britian absolutely refused to play without the left hind foot of a rabbit securely tucked in his pocket. And Paolo Bol of Italy made wax figures of his opponents and cast evil spells upon them.

NEW WOMEN'S WORLD CHAMPION

Maya Chiburdanidze, a 17-year-old girl from the Soviet Union's Republic of Georgia, recently took the Women's World Championship from fellow Georgian Nona Gaprindashvili, who had held the title for 16 years. The score was 8½ to 6½ and the match was played in Pitsunda, Georgia, in late September and early October.

Like other youngsters in Georgia, the power center of women's chess, Maya had been reared on the games of the champion she defeated. Maya, at 17, is young to be champion. She started playing at 7. In Moscow, the idea is gaining credence that women mature more quickly than men in the game but that their ability declines sooner. The defeated champion won the title at 21. Here the two square off.

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS ARE CONSIDERING establishment of a cotton reserve program similar to that for grain.

Howard Hjort, the USDA's director of economics, policy, analysis and budget, revealed the idea at the department's annual outlook conference earlier this month in Washington.

He gave no specifics of the program under consideration. Purpose of the program would be to absorb excess supplies in the event that good weather or other factors made U. S. supplies burdensome.

A USDA spokesman later said the program could be implemented without new legislation but indicated industry comment on the idea would be solicited through the usual rule-making procedures.

DR. ARLIE BOWLING, ECONOMIST with the National Cotton Council, told the conference the Occupational Safety and Health Administration underestimated the costs and overestimated the benefits of its cotton dust standards when winning approval of them from President Carter in May.

Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall overestimated the number of indstry workers affected by cotton dust and cited costs based on regulations not nearly as severe as those finally issued, Bowling said.

Bowling said Marshall told Carter that 600,000 to 800,000 workers in the cotton industry risked harm from cotton dust.

But, Bowling said, only about 535,000 jobs in the United States actually require handling of cotton. And, he added, about 160,000 of those belong to farmers, who are not covered by the standards.

AN INDUSTRY-CONNECTED STUDY FOUND less than 1 percent of 37,000 textile workers tested have medically detectable symptoms, Bowling said.

If that frequency rate were applied to cotton workers, only about 3,000 would have any respiratory problems possibly attributable to cotton dust, Bowling said.

The industry's compliance cost would approach $2 billion, Bowling said, and the standards would force the closing of 62 of the 82 active oilseed mills.

The low cost estimates Carter was given probably were a major factor in Carter's approval of the standards, Bowling said.

A District of Columbia court has delayed enforcement of the standards indefinitely while appeals cases are heard.

SAM EVANS, USDA ECONOMIST, told the conference cotton plantings next spring are estimated at 13 million to 14 million acres, assuming no cotton set-aside and stable price relationships between cotton, soybeans and grain sorghum.

Plantings this year were about 13 million acres. The range of yields for seven of the last 10 years — 430 to 510 pounds per acre — would indicate a 1979 crop of 11 million to 14 million bales, Evans said.

Evans estimated domestic mill use next season at 5.8-6.6 million bales, compared with this year's projected 6.3 million bales. But he said exports could be hurt by this year's higher cotton prices, which may lead to greater world production and lower consumption.

On the whole, he said, production in 1979 at present appears likely to exceed disappearance and U. S. cotton stocks on Aug. 1, 1980 seem likely to be slightly higher than the 4.4 million bales seen at the end of this marketing year.

No-Iron Cotton Shirt Developed

This is a true story. It happened somewhere in the Cotton Belt last year. A cotton grower went into a department store to watch women shopping for men's shirts. The women would pick up and look at 100 percent cotton shirts, lay them down and move over to the polyester shirts. They would buy a 65 percent polyester or a dacron and cotton blend.

After three hours of observation, the farmer identified himself and asked a woman, "How can you live in a cotton town and buy polyester shirts?" And the woman replied, "I don't care if we sell cotton, or if we don't sell cotton, I am not going to iron my husband's shirts."

And that, until a few years ago, was a sad fact of life. Sad especially for areas that depend on cotton for a living.

Don't misunderstand. Women like cotton. Especially its softness and comfort. But they dislike ironing even more.

This was a problem Cotton Inc., a New York based corporation charged with the job of promoting cotton, faced several years ago.

Then someone at Cotton Inc. came up with a brilliant idea. Why not make a shirt that is 60 percent cotton (for comfort) and 40 percent synthetic (for easy care).

Unfortunately, the textile mills weren't ready for a change. And the textile manufacturers yawned because it hadn't been proven that such a product would sell.

But Cotton Inc. kept hacking away. One day it approached a major shirt manufacturer, Manhattan Industries, with the idea.

"What you need," it told the shirtmaker, "is something new. And the idea of a 60 percent cotton-comfort shirt is new."

The idea struck a responsive chord.

Recalls Reed Hanks, director of apparel marketing of Cotton Inc.: "Manhattan had a new president, Henry Grethel, a very, very bright, capable salesman, just an unbelievable man. So we took this idea to him and said you've got the same thing Arrow has, you have the same thing that Van Heusen has, you have the same thing that Penney's has, you have the same thing that Sears has except they cost less.

"Why do they need you? You need something different. He said you are right."

And so the Natural Blend shirt (60 percent cotton and 40 percent polyester) was born.

Soon, other shirt manufacturers followed suit. Today, cotton is regaining a good portion of the market it lost years ago to synthetic manufacturers.

"What we really did," says Hanks, "was change an industry. We changed the men's dress-shirting industry from a 65-35 synthetic base to a 60 percent cotton, 40 percent cotton alternative to give the man a choice. If he wants a permanent press with more cotton you have got it. And you never had that before."

Cotton Inc. is financed by contributions from cotton producers. So it is important to cotton growers for Cotton Inc. to be successful in promoting the widespread use of cotton.

"Cotton at one time represented 35 percent of the men's dress-shirting market," says Hanks. "What we were trying to do is change that to 60 percent to increase cotton's share of the men's shirting market. We did it with the Natural Blend shirt."

Cotton has since gone into pajamas, sheeting, curtains, draperies, men's slacks and dozens of other fabrics.

"It has been a very successful program," Hanks said. "It has given the consumer a choice. More cotton with performance. The Natural Blend sheet that was introduced this year has probably been the most dramatic happening in the textile industry in the last 10 years. I don't think any of this would have happened if there wasn't a Cotton Inc.," he concluded.

Manhattan Industries was the first shirt manufacturer to sell the Natural Blend (60-40) cotton shirt. It was highly successful and set the trend other shirt manufacturers followed.

"In the shirt business you are always looking for something new," said Bruce Fogwell, vice president of Manhattan Industries. "In 1974 we decided that we wanted to have something new the following year and this would help us with our competition. Sometimes it's a new collar story. It could be a fabric story, and other times it is a color story. Well, in 1974 the shirt business was very, very bad."

So Fogwell was receptive when Cotton Inc. approached him about a new cotton blend.

"I told them if we could get a shirt that was permanent press and was mostly cotton we would love to do it."

"We showed the retailer that we were going to make this thing successful. I would say it was probably the most successful introduction that we have ever had in the history of Manhattan."

Hank Jaeger, national merchandise manager of men's furnishings for Montgomery Ward, said consumer surveys indicated a strong need for a natural fiber dress shirt. But there was no such product on the market at the time.

Working with Spring Mills and Cotton Inc., Montgomery Ward began selling the 60 percent cotton and 40 percent polyester shirt.

"This gave us all of the advantages of cotton and it gave us the advantages of synthetics for easy care and little or no ironing," he said.

"The acceptance of the product far exceeded anything that we had ever imagined. At the end of the second year from a start of zero, it became the second largest single selling item in the entire department. It has remained as one of the two biggest selling styles in the entire line of dress shirts."

The Montgomery Ward executive gives Cotton Inc. much of the credit for its successful introduction and subsequent sales of the 60 percent cotton shirt.

"They showed a great deal of enthusiasm and gave us the marketing support and help we needed," he said. "The 60-40 shirt has filled a very definite need in the market. Cotton is growing; it is not decreasing.

"No question about it, Cotton Inc. played a very, very important part in our Natural Blend program and continues to play an important part. We are more sensitive to the use of mostly cotton fabrics and we're looking for them and trying to develop them constantly."

NEEDS NO IRONING — Bruce Fogwell, vice president of Manhattan Industries, displays the new 60-40 Natural Blend cotton shirt. "It's more comfortable and needs no ironing," he explains.

APPAREL DIRECTOR — Reed Hanks, director of apparel marketing of Cotton Inc., says the Natural Blend cotton shirt "changed the entire shirting industry. It went from a traditional 65-35 synthetic base to a 60-40 cotton base."

Land Use Maps Benefit Rural, Urban Residents

By ROBERT HANEY
Texas Agricultural Experiment Station

Land use or land cover mapping using remotely sensed data is very popular these days. However, its full potential has not yet been utilized and it is little understood by the average citizen.

Land use maps can provide a relatively economical information source for sound land resource management decisions.

At the national level, through the very productive and carefully coordinated Land Use and Data Analysis (LUDA) Program, maps showing two levels of land use-land cover will have been published for over half the country by Fiscal Year 1979.

State programs in land use and land cover mapping have been coordinated with the LUDA program and are consistent, for the most part.

Since he primary purpose of most land use-land cover maps is to provide information to guide decisions concerning land resource management, such a system must respond to the needs of decision makers.

Because of the varied problems which face resource managers, such as environmental impact studies, zoning enactment, taxation assessment for use-value, works planning for flood routing, strip mine monitoring, and numerous other local needs, the nature and detail of land use-land cover classification systems can vary greatly from project to project.

There appears to be little likelihood that a single classification system will ever be developed which will meet the demands of all planners for all situations, according to Dr. Robert D. Baker, professor of Forest Management with The Texas Agricultural Experiment Station and Texas A&M University.

However, the U.S. Geological Survey has provided a system, carefully devised to accomodate virtually any classification of land-use cover, that can provide a first step.

The standardization of maps prepared in the LUDA program even allows for comparisons of land use data collected at different times.

Baker says that before an organization begins a land use-land cover mapping program based on interpretation of aerial photographs, it should review basic information about aerial photographs, their interpretation, and mapping from them.

This review is necessary if the work is to be done "inhouse" and is advisable if the job is to be contracted.

Too often, Baker adds, resource managers may become overzealous in their attempt to collect land information; the data may be far in excess of that which is needed to make prudent decisions.

Furthermore, those who are unfamiliar with photographic interpretation may be unaware of the constraints imposed by the data needs; the photography to use and its cost of acquisition; the time available for the study; how the data will be acquired, presented and analyzed; and numerous related problems.

Photographic interpretation projects for land use-land cover data should include a combination of trained and trainable aerial photo interpreters; recent aerial photographs of the type, interpretation; base maps on which to portray the categories interpreted; and an evaluation of the accuracy of the work.

On the basis of several photographic interpretation contracts for land use-land cover data, performed during the period 1975-1978, a routine has been developed for their conduct in minimum time by Experiment Station scientists.

Baker says information on the system is available to anyone needing to plan such projects.

Study On Byssinosis Problem Conducted By Tech Professor

Byssinosis is a formidable term with formidablie potential impact on the cotton industry unless researchers can find ways to help prevent its occurrence among workers.

Byssinosis, or brown lung disease, has been asssociated with presence of cotton dust, generated by various cotton processing industries, particularly textile milling.

Dr. Philip R. Morey, professor of biological sciences at Texas Tech University, is conducting research to provide starting points for medical, engineering and plant breeding scientists in fighting byssinosis.

His research has two aspects. First is an investigation to determine exact botanical components present in respirable cotton dust generated in cotton textile mills. Second is a study of dust emitted by the garnetting trade. Garnetting is the manufacture of batting, upholstery filling and felt.

"One of the problems is that, although we know cotton dust is the cause of byssinosis, we do not yet know the dust's exact botanical composition," Morey said. "We suspect, but have not yet proved, that bract and leaflike particles are the culprits."

If scientists are able to find which plant trash part is the disease's major cause, they will have established starting points for elimination of this trash type in cotton breeding or processing or the finding of means to reduce its effect on workers. One result might be development of a cotton variety without bract, Morey explained.

Morey and his associates are using graded cotton samples and separating trash particles in order to classify them. General trash types include leaflike, stem, bur, bract (present on the underside of the cotton boll), bark, seed and grass. One or more of these trash materials in baled cotton is the source of the harmful dust.

Once the trash has been separated, each type is put through simulated milling processes and ground up.

These processes will enable researchers to predict the percentage of each botanical trash type present in breathable dust.

Scientist have determined that leaflike particles (bract and leaves) not only make up the largest portion of the trash, but also cause more than 50 percent of breathable dust.

Though the relative proportion of leaflike particles in the dust did not vary greatly from grade to grade, the total amount of dust produced by each did vary. Morey explained that, for example, the middling grade of raw cotton generated only about one-fifth the amount of lealike dust generated by the low-middling grade.

Leaflike trash particles present in raw cotton and in inhalable cotton dust seem now to be the main toxic factors in the incidence of byssinosis. However, research results remain inconclusive.

The second aspect of Morey's research involves comparing dust emissions of the primary cotton textile industry with that in the secondary garnetting trade.

Cotton garnetting uses waste fibers produced by gins, textile mills and cottonseed oil mills. Although the garnetting industry also produces a significant amount of cotton dust — more in some cases than cotton processing because the raw materials are dirtier — the number of byssinosis cases and their severity are considerably less than in the cotton textile trade.

Morey said there may be three explanations. First, there is apparently a reduced amount of leaflike trash present in some garnetting raw materials.

For some as yet unexplained reason, leaflike trash present in garnetting materials is less likely to produce breathable dust than trash in raw baled cotton.

Also, the fiber and seed fragments found in most garnetting raw materials entangled in the processing may form a filter above the process machine, which prevents escape of the dust.

Cotton dust standards for the garnetting industries have been temporarily suspended by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration pending determination of health hazards.

Morey will present his final results in two months at the Beltwide Cotton Conference in Phoenix, Ariz. His work on the primary cotton textile industry is being funded by Cotton, Inc., while the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare is funding research on the garnetting industry.

Farmers, Ranchers To Convene Wednesday-Friday At Roswell

ROSWELL (Special) –Several hundred farmers and ranchers are expected to attend the 59th annual meeting of the New Mexico Farm and Livestock Bureau in Roswell Wednesday through Friday.

Bruce King, newly elected governor of New Mexico, will speak to the group as will Dr. Gerald Thomas, president of New Mexico State University and Allen Grant, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation. Topics for discussion will range from energy, the environment, public land policy, government agricultural programs and over-governmental regulation of the private sector of our economy.

Election of officers and adoption of new policy will highlight the meeting of the state's oldest and largest agricultural organization. Members are expected to consider a resolution calling for the establishment of an Agricultural Political Action Committee, which would allow organized agriculture to become involved in partisan politics in the state.

The Outstanding Young Farmer-Rancher in New Mexico and the Agricultural Family of the Year and the Special Friend of Agriculture awards will be presented at the awards banquet Thursday.

Southern Farmers Check Planting Of Sunflowers

By TOM MADDEN

JACKSON, Miss.(UPI) — Southern farmers, recently wedded to the successful soybean and for years dependent on king cotton, are checking out the potential of a new cash crop — the sunflowers.

Dr. James Jordan, an agronomist with the Mississippi Cooperative Extension Service, said a number of farmers across the South are planting sunflowers. He said about 3,500 acres are about ready for harvest in Mississippi.

"From what I have been able to gather there are about 35 farmers in Mississippi producting sunflowers," Jordan said. "There is a large sunflower operation in Texas and some are being planted in Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia."

Jordan said sunflowers were grown on a limited scale by southern farmers about 10 years ago and the new interest can be linked to recent publicity given the plant.

"Sunflowers are not a new crop. There is quite an acreage in Minnesota and out West. Russia is also a large producer of sunflowers," he said. "About 10 years ago southern farmers tried them and were not successful."

Jordan said, however, new markets throughout the South were creating the interest in the plant.

He said seeds from the sunflower plants being grown in Mississippi are not the type that are packaged and sold in stores for snacks. The variety under cultivation is high in oil and competitive with soybean and cottonseed oil.

"It is an unsaturdated oil and good quality oil that can be used in salad dressings and a number of other things," he said. "It is a good oil — a premium oil."

Lamar Roberts of Durant, Miss., said he tried about 50 acres of sunflowers because of the potential and because dry weather hurt his soybeans.

"It's getting to where a man has got to do anything to make a living and the sunflowers looked good," Roberts said. "I hope to harvest about 1,000 pounds per acre."

Roberts plans to take his crop to a cottonseed oil mill in Amory, Miss., that currently is paying between 10 and 12 cents per pound.

"I'm told I can plant two crops a year. I think the sunflowers might have a place," Roberts said.

Ike Franklin of Lowndes County said he planted a 10-acre test strip.

"It seems to have real potential. But, we have to have a market close by. If enough people get interested in the crop, I think the market will remain with us," Franklin said. He said it was relatively easy to convert soybean harvesting equipment to sunflowers.

"I don't think it will replace soybeans, but it is another crop we can add," Franklin said.

Thomas Greer of the Amory Cottonseed expects farmers to begin looking to sunflowers.

"There are a number of national companies interested in sunflower oil," Greer said. "I do not see it replacing soybeans, but it is an additional farm crop that farmers will begin to look at."

ELECTRIC HEATING. IS IT BEST FOR ME?
If you are considering electric heat, you have a wide choice: electric baseboard, radiant ceiling, heat pump, electric boiler, electric furnance; all of them requiring less space in your home than other systems. For another thing, since electric heat requires no vents, you can really insulate your home, button it up tight against winter's chill, thus using less energy to heat your house.
As for installation, if it's a new home, electric heat will probably be cheaper to install than other systems.
The power supply from the electric cooperative is dependable. And you already know how clean and safe flameless electric heat can be. So, if you are planning a new home, see about installing electric heat. With dependable power from the electric cooperative, the chances are good that electric heat is your best choice.

GAS FLARE—Natural gas was flared from Marathon Petroleum Ireland Ltd.'s platform "A" during the testing of wells in the Kinsale Head field prior to the construction of a pipeline. Production from the field is expected to reach 80 million cubic feet per day by the end of this year. Additional wells planned by the company will eventually bring the combined output from two platforms to 125,000 cubic feet per day.

Ireland's Petroleum Reserves Now Linked To Shore Facility

The Kinsale Head field, discovered in 1971, is estimated to contain reserves on the order of 1 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. The field, in water depths of about 300 feet, is located in the Celtic Sea 30 miles southeast of the Old Head of Kinsale.

Marathon Petroleum Ireland, Ltd., a wholy-owned subsidiary of Marathon Oil Co., has set two permanent platforms to develop the field. Seven wells, one vertical and six deviated in a hexagonal pattern, will be drilled from each platform. To date, four wells have been completed from Platform "A" and drilling is continuing. Drilling from Platform "B" is expected to begin next spring.

Production from the two sands in the field, located at depths between 2,700 feet and 3,100 feet, is expected to reach about 80 million cubic feet per day by the end of this year. As additional wells are completed, output from the two platforms will reach the projected rate of 125 million cubic feet per day.

A 20-year agreement signed by Marathon Petroleum Ireland and Bord Gais Eireann (Irish Gas Board) in 1975 originally called for gas deliveries to commence in mid-1979. At the request of the Minister for Industry, Commerce & Energy, Marathon accelerated its development program and Ireland is now able to use indigenous natural gas well ahead of schedule.

Marathon Petroleum Ireland first began its search for oil and gas in Ireland in 1961, 10 years prior to discovery of the Kinsale Head field. Since then, the company has drilled six wells onshore in the Republic and 18 offshore in its 100 percent licensed area.

Under an agreement with the Irish government, as amended in 1969, Marathon Petroleum Ireland was granted exclusive oil and gas exploration rights to 27,137 square miles of the Irish onshore area and 36,720 square miles of its offshore area. Marathon now holds exclusive rights to approximately 25 percent of the area formerly held under exploration rights.

Marathon's initial efforts in Ireland consisted of onshore seismic and detailed field geological mapping. Beginning in 1962, considerable exploratory drilling was carried out by Marathon in Ireland's onshore area, but hydrocarbons in commercially producible quantities were not found.

Since 1969, Marathon Petroleum Ireland has focused its attention on thie offshore continental shelf of Ireland. That shift was due to four significant developments: new theories about continental drift and its effects on Ireland's geological history; the results of regional seismic lines in the Celtic Sea; the discovery of gas in the North Sea; and the improvements in marine drilling and offshore prouction technology.

These developments ultimately led to negotiations with the government resulting in the award of the first offshore petroleum lease to Marathon in 1970. The company has earned an interest in 17 offshore petroleum leases on which 29 wells have been drilled by Marathon and another firm.

Ireland's first two exploratory wells offshore in the Celtic Sea were completed in 1971. Although neither of the tests contained hydrocarbons in commercial quantities, they proved the presence of favorable sediments under the Celtic Sea.

Tenneco Announces Offshore Platform Is Producing Gas

HOUSTON (Special) -Tenneco Oil Co. has announced that it has begun producing natural gas from its South Marsh Island 61-C platform in the Gulf of Mexico.

The platform will be Tenneco's most prolific gas producing platform in the Gulf of Mexico once full production is reached. It is located about 80 miles southeast of Intracoastal City, La.

Tenneco is producing natural gas from five wells at an initial sustained rate of 90 million cubic feet per day and by early 1979 expects to be producing 220 million cubic feet per day from 11 wells.

The six wells yet to be brought on production have been drilled and are now in the process of being readied for production.

Tenneco Oil will deliver all of the new production to Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co., which is already receiving the 90 million cubic feet per day of initial production.

Both Tenneco Oil and Tennessee Gas are major operating units of Tenneco Inc., all based in Houston.

The South Marsh Island 61-C platform complex was completed in 120 feet of water over a two-year period at a cost of $46 million. Production is from Pliocene sands at depths ranging from 8,000 feet to 12,000 feet. Tenneco holds 10,000 acres of leases around the platform.

Tenneco, one of the leading producers of oil and gas in the Gulf of Mexico, operates 343 wells from 94 platforms off the Louisiana coast, producing 1 billion cubic feet of gas and 35,000 barrels of oil and condensate daily.

THE ROUSTABOUT

By RAY WESTBROOK

AMOCO PRODUCTION CO. is studying the possible development of carbon dioxide reserves in New Mexico as a tertiary oil recovery device in Permian Basin fields.

The carbon dioxide reserves are contained in the Bravo Dome area, a 1-million-acre portion of northeastern New Mexico.

Currens told the hearing that Amoco has already drilled 32 carbon dioxide wells in the Bravo Dome area, 22 of which are capable of production.

The most likely targets for carbon dioxide reserves are in Permian Basin fields, which are some 300 miles from Bravo Dome. Amoco estimates transportation would cost up to $300 million in the form of gas pipelines.

"It may be the early 1980s before the tertiary recovery system has been sufficiently tested to permit large-scale injection programs in the Permian Basin," Currens said.

The work is expected to take up to three years for drilling of the wells and for pipeline construction.

Sales of the gas are not likely to occur until about 1984, according to Amoco.

AS A STARTING POINT for the project, Amoco has proposed that a unit of more than 1 million acres be formed for development and production of carbon dioxide. The company has submitted its application for preliminary approval of the unit to the State Land Commission and initial meetings with other leaseholders in the area have been held.

Currens says the marketing of large volumes of carbon dioxide is several years away, however, and that the market will have to be created by proving the technique really works.

Amoco is conducting eight different oil field pilot tests in various stages of completion that have cost more than $16 million to date.

In addition to confirming the process, plans for the complex logistics of development and transportation must progress if carbon dioxide is to be delivered when it is needed, according to Currens.

The Amoco official pointed to a tremendous "front-end" cost related to the project. "Obviously, more wells will have to be drilled at a cost of between $250,000 and $300,000 for each well and its associated gathering facilities."

Currens said there are many factors involving the project for which there are no precise answers yet. "One thing we do know is that we must start the process or this latent resource may never be fully developed. That's what we are doing now."

MARATHON OIL CO. economists estimate 1985 oil imports will be in the range of 11 million barrels per day.

Howard H. Harris, vice president of corporate external affairs, told a recent meeting of the Ark-La-Tex Association of Petroleum Landmen that an improved balance between supply and demand is the only legitimate justification for any government energy policy.

On that basis, Harris said, "The 1978 Energy Act is a failure because it guarantees that. . .our 1985 oil imports will be significantly higher than today.

According to Harris, the act does nothing to encourage the finding and development of domestic crude oil—currently the most important energy source.

Any rational policy must recognize the vital role domestic oil must play in preserving the nation's economic welfare from now until at least the end of the century, Harris said.

The Marathon official predicts that external pressures will eventually compel the nation's leaders to implement rational and effective energy policies, adding that they must "ultimately avoid energy starvation."

MARATHON MADE the following assessments on different parts of the final energy package:

"Congress was wise to eliminate the proposed taxes because they are disincentives. . .which produce no energy.

"The conservation measures will promote some energy savings but many of them are likely to be economically wasteful and not cost-effective.

"The program on coal conversion is sensible and helpful, but less than the best. True market value pricing of all fuels and removal of all unrealistic constraints would be more likely to promote construction of new and conversion of old facilities for coal usage.

"Legislation on natural gas is likely to do the country more harm than good in the long run because it calls for ultimate decontrol of only four of 23 arbitrarily established categories of gas; extends controls to the intrastate market; will be extremely difficult to administer, and extends eventual phase-out of controls over too long a period."

High Prices Produce Response In West Germany's Energy Use

TULSA, Okla. (Special) -West Germany's energy consumption pattern is changing in response to higher prices.

Especially attentive to the changes, according to the Oil and Gas Journal are strategists for the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which will meet in Abu Dhabi next month to fix the global price of crude oil.

The strategists need to know how much higher oil prices can go before industrialized countries cut their oil demand growth even more than they already have. West Germany can serve as a good guide.

The country has Western Europe's strongest economy and a dire need of imported energy. In addition, it has a detailed national energy plan, implemented quickly in 1974 to cut its dependence on oil.

The West German government's energy policy calls for a reduction in petroleum's contribution to total energy supply to 46 percent in 1985 and 27 percent in 2000 from 53 percent this year.

To accomplish those goals, the nation is pushing production of coal and lignite. German coal is deep and expensive and is subsidized by taxes on electricity from generating stations using heavy fuel oil.

Even with increased coal output, nuclear power—now furnishing 3 percent of energy requirements—must be boosted to meet 10 percent of requirements in 1985 and 27 percent in 2000.

But there is strong opposition to new nuclear generating stations in West Germany, and the problem of disposing of nuclear wastes has not been resolved.

Any long delay in nuclear energy development will increase demand for heavy fuel oil.

West Germans are beginning to realize that they haven't felt the full effects of global crude oil price increases. That's because world prices are established in U.S. dollars, which have been weak against the Deutsche mark.

The world price of crude jumped nine-fold during 1970-77 but increased only six-fold in German farms. And, because of transportation and crude quality factors, the price actually paid in Germany only quadrupled.

Petroleum product prices, meanwhile, have been depressed because of the refining capacity surplus that has plagued Germany as well as the rest of Western Europe.

During the first nine months of this year, refinery utilization has been about 60 percent, but refiners, especially those who can convert to lighter products think utilization and prices will increase.

There is a growing theory in Germany that high crude prices following the Arab oil embargo of 1973 actually have been good for the country.

According to this theory, the cash that flowed into the hands of Arab oil producers has increased Arab spending for German industrial goods.

One major West German bank estimates exports due to this increased purchasing power have created 200,000 jobs.

North Sea Reserve Placed On Stream

HOUSTON (Special) -Pennzoil Co., as operator for N.V. Noordwinning K-13, has announced that a third gas field on Block K-13 in the Dutch sector of the North Sea has been placed on stream.

Natural gas deliveries to Nederlandse Gasunie, the Netherlands' natural gas distribution company, from Block K-13 are approximately 245 million cubic feet per day. This rate is about double the previous daily production.

The field discovery well was drilled in January, 1977. Subsequently, a four-pile drilling platform, a six-pile production platform, production facilities and a connecting 20-inch pipeline were installed. The gas is transported to shore near Den Helder via a previously constructed 36-inch pipeline.

The moon is between its last quarter and new phase.

The morning stars are Venus, Jupiter and Saturn.

The evening stars are Mars and Mercury.

Those born on this date are under the sign of Sagittarius.

John Harvard, founder of Harvard University, was born Nov. 26, 1607.

On this day in history:

In 1789, President George Washington set this day aside as one of national thanksgiving for adoption of the United States Constitution.

In 1832, the first streetcar railway in America started public service in New York City from City Hall to 14th St. The car was pulled by a horse and the fare was 12½ cents.

In 1930, one-fourth of all office space in New York City's skyscrapers was vacant because of the Depression.

In 1940, the German Nazis forced half a million Jews in Warsaw to live in a ghetto surrounded by an 8-foot-high concrete wall.

Airfield Requests Private Fuel Tank

A-J Correspondent

CHILDRESS — City officials are taking a hard look at "how much municipal regulation is too much" as they deal with a controversial request by three local ranchers.

The discussion surfaced when J. Frank Inman, Dean Decker and Claude Andrews, all of Childress, asked city officials for permission to install a private aviation fuel tank at the municipal airfield. They gave financial savings and quality control as reasons for wanting their own fuel supply.

City councilmen were in agreement that granting such a request would financially hurt the lease operator at the airfield, Caddell Aircraft Co. The operation's owner, Bob Caddell, told officials he seldom sells more than 5,000 to 6,000 gallons of fuel per month.

The three ranchers said they use about 400 to 450 gallons of fuel monthly.

Caddell Airacraft currently leases the facility from the city, and provides 24-hour-per-day emergency aircraft repair and fuel service. The company has a mechanic on its staff as well as pilots and a certified flight instructor.

"We've been steadily increasing our aircraft sales and repair business in recent months, but we need fuel sales too," Caddell said.

Officials feared granting the request for the private tank would result in more requests from other local pilots.

"But if we don't grant permission, are we overregulating as a city government?" asked alderman Larry Moore.

"Yes, I think so," Mayor Walter Lockhoof responded, "but it's for the good of the city."

Alderman Pat Steed asked the three ranchers if they would be willing to pay a lease for the city property upon which the tank would be installed.

"I wouldn't want to pay much of anything," Inman answered, "we live here and pay taxes."

Congressman Wants OSHA Abolished

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Idaho congressman is calling for abolition of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration following a government report showing a surge in job-related deaths and injuries.

The report, issued earlier this week by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, shows "that OSHA is the government's most outrageous, unnecessary and counterproductive agency ...," said Republican Rep. George Hansen.

The bureau reported that occupational deaths jumped 21 percent in 1977, marking the first rise in on-th-job fatalities in four years.

Black rolls 6-2. How should he play?

ANSWER TO BACKGAMMON PROBLEM

Here's another example of the principle we put forward last week. White has made his 5-point and started his blockade of the Black runners. The question is whether Black should play his opening roll the same way as if it were the first move in the game.

Had Black rolled 6-2 as the game's opening number, there are several ways to play. The method I like is to bring a runner to White's bar-point with the 6 and drop a builder to the 11-point with the 2. That creates action on both sides of the board.

But that is not the best move once White had made his 5-point. The man on White's bar-point is a favorite to get hit — to be precise, 24 combinations hit and only 12 miss. The fact that White owns his 5-point makes it more difficult for the man to re-enter, and leaves Black with a number of awkward rolls. In addition there is the possibility that White might make a key point while hitting the Black blot.

In this this position, I would use the 6-2 as a running number, bring a man to the White 9-point. True, this still leaves a blot in White's outer board, but now White must roll 4 to hit, and there are only 14 numbers that hit while 22 miss. If White does not hit, I will have thwarted part of his blockade by escaping with one runner.

The difference between 6-2 as an opening roll and 6-2 after your opponent has made his 5-point is simply that it is more difficult to re-enter after you have been hit. White is trying to contain the Black runners, so Black should escape when he has a reasonable chance to do so.

Alcoholics Who Quit Drinking In Danger Of Floating Off On Pink Cloud Of Euphoria

By Brian Sullivan

NEW YORK (AP) — Alcoholics who quit drinking are in danger of floating off on a "pink cloud" of euphoria, according to a three-year study by the New York City Affiliate of the National Council on Alcoholism.

The euphoria inevitably collapses with a shock that may send people back to the bottle, says Charles E. Shirley of the affiliate. The finding is based on an analysis of the behavior of 3,000 people counseled through the early stages of sobriety at a Long Island hospital.

"Practically every alcoholic who stops drinking becomes euphoric either over the prospects of a wildly wonderful new life or because of the sudden release from the depressant effects of years of alcohol abuse," Shirley says.

"One problem drinker, who came into a substantial inheritance shortly before he gave up liquor became so convinced after he quit that he could do no wrong that he lost $50,000 in reckless stock market speculation."

Shirley said any alcoholism treatment must recognize the danger and provide the support needed to get through that period.

Hail the horseshoe crab. The Food and Drug Administration has approved the use of an extract from its blood as a tool to detect bacterial poisons that may contaminate vaccines and intravenous fluids.

The extract is called LAL, for limulus amebocyte lysate, and is the most sensitive known detector of bacterial poisons called endotoxins, says The Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions, where the discovery was made.

Endotoxins are normally present all around us, in our food and water, on our skin, in the gut, says Dr. Jack Levin of Johns Hopkns. Only when they enter the bloodstream or other body fluids do they become harmful and cause fever, shock or death.

The FDA requires that all substances injected into the body be tested for endotoxin contamination. The horeshoe crab blood to be used for this purpose is collected from crabs caught on beaches as the tide goes out. The crabs are then returned unharmed to the sea.

The National Cancer Institute plans to increase its $16 million budget for studies of the relationship between diet, nutrition and cancer.

The director of NCI, Arthur Upton, says many scientists agree that "factors in diet and nutrition appear to account for a large number of human cancers."

Cancer of the colon, for example, is more common in developed countries where people have a higher fat intake. Within the United States, religious groups that avoid meat and animal fats have a lower incidence of colon cancer.

"Although many other differences between rich and poor countries and within countries could explain the correlations between diet and cancer rates, nutrition is one of the most promising areas for future research," says David Rose of the University of Wisconsin-Madison Clinical Cancer Center.

A new research program by the National Foundation-March of Dimes is aimed at determining to what extent premature birth and low birthweight may impair mental development.

The March of Dimes has awarded $247,000 in grants to research scientists around the country for the program.

"A major thrust of the new program," says Dr. Samuel J. Ali, vice president for research, "is to develop better means to assess and predict mental performance, and evaluate the success of attempts to improve it in children at special risk.

"Eventually, if the findings point to low birthweight as an important factor in learning disabilities or general intelligence, we may see wider interest in attacking the birthweight problem directly," he says.

The March of Dimes says 80,000 babies a year are born in this country with markedly low birthweights, defined as four pounds, six ounces or less.

The return of high-heeled shoes may be bad news for some women, according to podiatrists at a recent meeting in Portland, Ore.

The shoes place the foot in an abnormal position, said Dr. Nancy Lu Conrad, a foot specialist from Circleville, Ohio. They throw the body's weight, putting excess pressure on the ball of the foot, she told the American Podiatry Association meeting.

"The shoe is usually fitted a bit short and narrow to keep it from falling off the foot," she said, "and the resulting toe cramping predisposes the wearer to hammertoes, bunions, nail problems and other foot ills.

"Select the lowest heel you can," she advised, "and wear them only for dressy occasions — not for shopping."

the ¢oin BOX

By NORMAN M. DAVIS

Dear Mr. Davis:
I have a ten dollar gold piece in perfect condition dated 1894. I would like to know its value. Thank you. — M.K.

In Extra Fine condition an 1894 eagle ($10 coin) would retail for about $150 to $160. What you could get for the coin depends on who buys it, how nearly "perfect" it is — an extremely important factor, and how anxious the buyer is to have the coin.

A coin dealer with a lot of similar coins might not want this one; another who does want the coin would pay a higher price. A dealer who is interested, and who agrees the coin grades EF, might pay $80 to $100. But you could be offered either more or less.

That's why it's smart to visit several dealers. You'll get a better idea of your coin's market value and have a better chance of finding a dealer interested enough to pay a good price.

Dear Sir:
I have the following coin in my collection (a sketch was included), but can't seem to find anything about it. Can you help? Thanks. — W.M.

You have a halfpenny issued by England's King George the Third, whose name is shown in Latin as "Georgius." The harp and "Hibernia" on the reverse tell us this coin was made for use in Ireland.

I don't have the mintage figure for the 1805 halfpenny, but it is fairly common. It usually costs $2.50 or so in Fine condition. The coin is copper and was minted in Birmingham, England, at the Sohe mint. That was one of the privately owned mints which helped the Royal Mint supply Great Britain with coins.

Dear Sir:
I have two 20 dollar bills, 1950 year, but do not have In God We Trust on them, and also under Jackson, it says Will Pay to Bearer on Demand, Twenty Dollars. Can you tell me why In God We Trust is missing, and why the words under Jackson are there. Any information on these I will be very thankful for. — H.S.

"In God We Trust" isn't exactly "missing." This motto wasn't authorized for use on paper currency until 1955. It first appeared on $20 notes with the 1963 Series.

Wording under Jackson's portrait is a holdover from earlier types of paper money. Those notes represented gold or silver actually held by the treasury Department; they sometimes promised to pay the bearer in gold or silver.

Puzzled by a coin? Your questions are always welcome. Please enclose a stamped self-addressed envelope for a personal reply.

Skateboard High On Hazard List

NEW YORK (UPI) — A thin board on four silver dollar-size wheels was responsible for 25 deaths in the United States last year and 106,000 accidents serious enough to require hospital emergency room treatment.

These figures are from the Insurance Information Institute, w ich says skateboard accidents now are seventh on the federal government's ranking of hazardous products in the home.

The institute says all 25 deaths involved head injuries; one third of the injured skateboarders had been using the board for less than a aeek and most were seriously hurt the first time they tried skateboarding.

The most frequently injured were 10-14 years olds.
