Judge postpones capital murder trial until new jury wheel assembled

By LINDA HILL

District Judge Vann Culp today delayed a capital murder trial scheduled for Monday until after a new jury wheel is assembled.

The order came in response to motions from both the prosecution and defense in the case of 19-year-old Anthony Dewayne Scott, charged with capital murder in the August 1977 liquor store stabbing death of clerk Jackie Burleigh.

Both sides had agreed there were irregularities in the composition of the jury wheel, its maintenance and control and in names not being put back into the wheel.

Culp denied a defense motion to dismiss the charges against Scott because of the irregularities.

He granted a prosecution motion asking for a delay in the case, setting the trial date "on or before Sept. 11."

In the oral order issued today in court, Culp said the case will be continued until after the Midland County jury wheel is reassembled for the coming year by Aug. 15, or until a new list of persons legally entitled to serve on juries is constituted by some other means, such as a completely computerized system, whichever comes first.

Culp denied another prosecution motion seeking a change of venue in the case. The state had made that motion as a means of trying Scott without using the present jury wheel. The ruling did not deal with the legality of the present jury wheel.

The judge declined to rule on a request from the prosecution to deduct the time of the trial delay from the time scheduled set out in the Speedy Trial Act. Culp said the request was premature. That law goes into effect July 1.

The prosecution motions were presented Wednesday afternoon after a day-long hearing on the defense motion to dismiss the charges against Scott because of the irregularities concerning the jury wheel.

In the alternative, defense attorney Bill Smith said, the defendant wanted to have the wheel declared "spoiled."

In arguments on the defense motion Wednesday, Smith outlined what he called "eight big areas" of error concerning the wheel and charged county officials with "negligence or capriciousness or both" in the matter.

Assistant District Attorney Timothy Ann Sloan, speaking for the prosecution, told the court the state agrees "that there have been errors and irregularities shown," but argued against dismissing the charges.

The prosecution motions apparently came as a surprise to the defense. After presenting testimony from county employees and the computer firm which furnishes the cards with potential jurors' names on them, District Attorney Vern Martin presented the documents in rapid-fire order, as an assistant stood by to present the defense with copies.

The first motion was a request that the judge order the contents of the jury wheel destroyed and then "refurnished."

The first of three alternative motions called for the judge to order the sheriff to call additional jurors without using names now in the jury wheel. "The entire (jury wheel) may not safely be utilized for the trial of this cause," Martin said, so the county is "without a method by which jurors can be selected for the trial."

In the absence of approval of either of the first two motions, Martin said, he filed a third motion for a change of venue. Since the jury wheel in existence "cannot be safely utilized," the trial should be moved to an adjoining district in order to give Scott the speedy trial he has requested, the motion said.

The final motion asked for a continuance of the case, if none of the other requests are granted.

Martin said it is "highly improbable, if not impossible," that the jury wheel can be reassembled before the annual statutory period of Aug. 1 through 15. The delay would not "result in harm to the defendant" because Scott has consistently objected to the composition of the jury panel, he said. Also, Martin said, Scott has testified "that he does not really want a speedy trial, but rather wants his appeal" on the court's failure to dismiss the case because of what Scott alleged was his failure to get a speedy trial.

Scott announced in open court he plans to appeal the court's denial of an earlier motion for habeas corpus. Should an appeal on that point be successful, "any trial of this cause would be void or voidable," Martin said.

"Trial of this cause under this circumstance would involve great expense to the state in terms of time and money" and would disrupt "orderly disposition of other cases" in the county, Martin added.

The points on which the prosecution and defense have agreed in court are as follows:

(1) Testimony from all parties involved agreed that there was no meeting in August among the district clerk, county clerk, sheriff and tax assessor-collector, or their representatives, to "reconstitute" the jury wheel. Such a meeting is

Anti-filibuster effort falls short by two votes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Backers of labor law revisions are stalled just short of the 60 votes they need to break a long filibuster on the measure.

By a margin of 58-to-41 — shy by two votes — the Senate voted on Wednesday in favor of cutting off the Republican-led filibuster which is entering its 17th day.

With a fifth attempt scheduled today, both sides responded to the latest vote predictably.

"This is their high-water mark," said filibuster leader Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah. He called on Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., the majority leader, to concede defeat and withdraw the bill.

Labor Secretary Ray Marshall, who watched the vote from a seat in the Senate gallery, said there was "some reason to hope" supporters of the measure would come up with the 60 votes. But he also said further concessions might be necessary.

It was the fourth time opponents of the measure had won, and the vote, billed in advance as a showdown, was preceded by hard, last-minute lobbying of key senators.

New support for backers of the bill came from Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., who had missed Tuesday's unsuccessful vote against the filibuster, and three Republicans who had voted to support the talkathon previously. The three are Sens. John Heinz of Pennsylvania, Charles Percy of Illinois and Ted Stevens of Alaska.

In addition, sources said Sen. John Sparkman of Alabama was prepared to vote to cut off debate if a 60th vote could be found. But the best hopes the supporters had, Sens. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., and Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb., again sided with opponents of the measure.

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., appeared to be a focus of renewed attempts to swing the vote against the filibuster, sources said. Zorinsky and Bumpers also remain targets, according to the sources, who asked not to be identified.

The hard-fought contest is over legislation that is organized labor's top priority in Congress this year. The Carter administration strongly supports the bill.

In general, the bill would impose stiffer penalties against violators of labor laws, but it also would give the unions new leverage in organizing drives.

Safety of teens common concern along 'L' Street

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

Some residents are concerned about the speeding, others about the loitering. But, there is one thing which most of the residents living along North L Street have in common. They are concerned about the safety of teen-agers riding down the street at night.

North L Street is the gathering place for Midland's teens and problems evolving from that were voiced at the Midland City Council meeting Tuesday by residents in the area. Leading the list were speeding, vandalism and loitering.

In an effort to bring the situation under control, the council decided to place four-way Stop signs at every other intersection and No U-Turn signs at each intersection. They also are seeking to lower the speed limit along North L Street from 30 mph to 20 mph.

A poll taken Tuesday afternoon of residents in the L street neighborhood showed the people are optimistic the council's actions will help alleviate the problem, but some have their doubts. Their ultimate concern is not their property, but the lives of the teen-agers, several said.

"I think anything they (the council) can do to prevent a serious collision is most important," said Thornton Hardie Jr. of 1908 N. L St.

"I'm always concerned about the safety of the kids on the street," he said. "If the action can stop any injuries to the kids that run up and down L street or to anyone else, I'm for it."

Another resident remarked she is afraid a tragic accident will happen first before anything will stop the problem. "Those kids are horsing around on tops of cars while driving around and I'm afraid someone is going to get killed," Mrs. Wilfred Schulze of 2704 N. L said.

"One kid caused a wreck here by weaving in and out of cars." She added the No U-Turn signs may help because "they (the youths) just make that turn and keep coming back."

"If they will just enforce it and make the kids know it will be enforced," she added. "We really appreciate the concern of the council. If it doesn't stop the speeding, they (the police) will have plenty of people to stop."

Andrew Bianchi of 2615 N. L St. said the four-way Stop signs and lowered speed limit "will be more of a pain in the neck to myself. But, I think it definitely will slow down the traffic." It isn't the traffic, though, that has been his worry. It is the loitering and littering. "I'll take a 'wait and see' attitude and hope it (the changes) work."

Mrs. Al Routh of 2004 N. L St. agreed with Bianchi about the loitering. "When you can't pull into your own driveway because of broken glass, it gets discouraging. I don't think young people should be behind the wheel of a car after they get through throwing the bottles. They must be intoxicated according to the number of broken bottles we pick up," she said.

The woman voiced her doubts about the changes working. "They (the teens) have not observed any regular legal signs prior to this, so I don't know why any more would help. We have called (police) more than once, and a car is equipped with a radio (police scanner) and they scatter like quail."

Not all teen-agers drinking along North L Street are of age, she added. Mrs. Routh said she knew of a couple of girls she saw drinking and they

Braniff seeks route here

Braniff Airways announced today it is filing a brief with the Civil Aeronautics Board requesting permission to provide service to the Midland-Odessa area.

If successful, Braniff will be the fourth airline providing service at Midland Regional Airport.

Making the announcement today at a news conference were members of the chambers of commerce of Midland and Odessa. They also requested support from area individuals and businesses in a letter-writing campaign.

Braniff has proposed six flights daily between Midland-Odessa and Dallas-Fort Worth at times to connect with flights to points along Braniff's system, according to an announcement by the chambers. Single-plane service would be available from the Midland-Odessa area to Chicago, New York and New Orleans with one stop to be in Dallas-Fort Worth.

Single-plane, one-stop service also would be provided daily from Chicago, New York, and New Orleans to Midland-Odessa.

Braniff is filing the brief in response to an original petition from the city of Midland requesting expanded air service to the east and northeast. When the petition first was filed in 1975, Braniff was the only airline to show interest, according to Midland Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. Air travel has increased since 1975 and there is more reason now for the expanded service, he said. The increased air travel also is the reason why the cities are supporting Braniff in its application.

The added service of a fourth airline to the area is necessary with the June 1 discontinuation by Continental Airlines of four of its six daily flights between Midland-Odessa and Dallas-Fort Worth, according to the chamber release.

Joe Nuessle, Midland city attorney said this cutback in service is taking 500 seats a day away from the people. "We have been advised we may lose another 240 seats before the end of the summer," he said.

Nuessle went on to say that in June 1977 Midland Regional Airport recorded 432,000 people arriving or leaving the airport. Of that number, 315,000 were going to and from points included on the Braniff Airways lines, he said. This number does not include the Southwest Airlines passengers because Southwest is an intrastate carrier, he said.

Texas International has announced it will file in opposition to Braniff's brief, according to Bill Mewhorter, chairman of the aviation committee of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Officials of the Midland Chamber of Commerce said letters already have been sent to Midland businesses, asking management officials to write to the Civil Aeronautics Board. They should state their corporate or personal needs for expanded air service

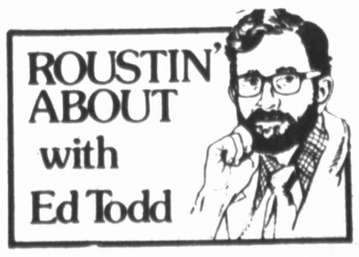
Old mesquite has stately quality



"I wonder how much longer it'll stand," the sister, Jessie May McWorkman, said of the grotesque and crooked mass of aging bark, wood and leaves.

Despite its stark and harsh qualities, the old mesquite has a stateliness about it.

"It's an old, old tree," commented the other sister, Evelyn Melear, who, like her sister and brother, Bob Estes, exuded affection for an old dependable friend who would not be moved.

In another setting, as on a range or pasture land, the more dimunitive, scraggly species — shrubs — of mesquite would be cursed and held in contempt as a nuisance.

But not this spreading mesquite, which has been a family pet, a symbol of strength and endurance, perhaps, for generations.

This warped and contorted tree was shooting toward its eventual spread of 50 feet and height of 30 feet years before Robert E. Estes and his wife in 1927 built a two-story frame house at 211 W. Kansas St. The tree and the house are companions.

"They cherished that old tree, doctored and watered it," Mrs. McWorkman said of her parents.

But what's so special about a special tree, other than the sentiment that's "carried on" over it and the memory of grandchildren swinging from a leathery limb and climbing amid thorns and foliage?

Well, sir, it's a big tree, particularly for a mesquite in a harsh climate that more often stumps growth.

By "string" measurements, this old twisted mass measured about 7½ feet at the girth and about 2½ feet in diameter.

Man killed in accident

A 49-year-old Odessa man died Wednesday afternoon in a one-vehicle accident on U.S. Highway 80, 5.2 miles east of Midland.

A spokesman for the Department of Public Safety said Edwin Arthur Nitsche Jr. of Odessa was eastbound on U.S. 80, in the westbound off-ramp from Interstate Highway 20. He apparently ran off the roadway and overturned 2.5 times, the spokesman said.

Nitsche was thrown from the vehicle, which rolled over him. He was pronounced dead at the scene by Peace Justice John Biggs.

Belgian government collapses

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Prime Minister Leo Tindemans' four-party government coalition broke up today, and government sources said he would submit the cabinet's resignation to King Baudouin later today.

The government collapsed when Tindemans' Christian Democrats and the Socialists, the two biggest parties in the coalition, could not agree on a new budget and tax bill. The Socialists refused to agree to a proposal by Budget Minister Marc Eyskens, a Christian Democrat, to limit unemployment allowances to the needy.

One of the two small language parties in the coalition, the Front for the Defense of the French-Speaking, also threatened recently to refuse to support the budget and tax bill unless the government zent ahead with a bill to divide the country along language lines, into a Flemish-speaking northern sector, a French-speaking southern region and bilingual Brussels.

Tindemans' coalition took office on June 3, 1977, following a general election six weeks before. For weeks it has been trying to work out financial legislation reducing government expenses and tapping new sources of revenue.

U.S. intelligence reports underscore Cuban role

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House, faring Fidel Castro's repeated denials that he abetted the Katangan invasion of Zaire, is outlining secret intelligence reports to back up its charge that Cuban troops accompanied the rebels almost to the moment of the attack.

The release of the summary of the highly classified reports came as President Carter reiterated his charge at a news conference Wednesday that the Cubans were deeply involved in the rebel invasion of copper-rich Shaba province last month.

Carter cited a list of steps Castro could have taken to block the invasion and contended that the Cuban leader's failure to stop the attack was, in effect, proof of Cuba's complicity.

The administration's summary, outlined to some of the news media on Wednesday, was described as similar to the intelligence material furnished to several congressional committees. It claims that Cuba had been assisting Angolabased Katangans as early as 1975 and at least until last month's invasion of Zaire.

Some members of Congress have described the administration's evidence as inconclusive although others have said they are convinced that the president is correct about Cuban involvement.

A senior White House official, who asked not to be named, said the president was not disturbed by lingering doubts over his claim that Cuba was involved in the attack.

"The president sees it as a legacy of what has gone on before," the official said, referring to what he called widespread public distrust of other recent administrations.

"It (the doubt) comes from a time when more credibility was given to other governments than our own no matter how spotty that country's record (for honesty)," he added.

The official said the administration's summary was based on "reliable intelligence sources," but — to protect the sources — they were not identified even in general terms.

The summary contends that Cubans helped reorganize Katangan troops in Angola as early as 1975 and provided equipment and planning for an abortive invasion of Zaire in March 1977.

After that invasion failed, the summary says, Cubans trained Katangan troops at five bases in northeastern Angola and accompanied them to the launching point for last month's attacks.

However, the summary does not contend — and neither has the administration — that Cubans actually took part in the incursion into Shaba, formerly known as Katanga. The invasion was driven back by French, Belgian and Zairian troops.

The summary also says Cuban and Soviet advisers asked Angola's Marxist government in 1976 to permit raids into Zaire. Cuba has an estimated 20,000 soldiers in Angola and, the administration contends, has considerable influence on the Angolan government.

The summary adds that early this year Katangan leader Nathaniel M'Bumba was claiming Angola's support for his effort to overthrow the government of Zaire.

Castro has said that Cuban forces had helped the Katangans but stopped two years ago. He insists that Cuba has rejected more recent requests from the rebels for support.

Castro also reportedly told a U.S. diplomat in Havana several days after the invasion that he tried unsuccessfully to head off the attack by contacting Angolan leader Agostino Neto.

At his news conference, Carter disputed that claim, contending that since Cuba effectively controls Angola's transportation system, Castro could have stopped the attack had he wanted.

"The fact is that Castro could have done much more had he genuinely wanted to stop the invasion," Carter said.

"He could have interceded with the Katangans themselves ...He could have notified the Organization of African Unity. He could have notified the world at large that an invasion designed to cross and to disturb an international border was in prospect. And he did not do any of these things ...

"So there is no doubt in my mind that just on the basis of these facts alone my statement if true."

Carter also suggested that Castro and the Angolan government pledge to halt future assaults on Zaire from Angola.

Meanwhile, Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., who interviewed Castro in Cuba three days ago, claims the Cuban leader said he would "reluctantly" use his forces to prevent another Katangan invasion of Zaire.

Solarz and Rep. Anthony Beilenson, D-Calif., who participated in the Castro interview, said Carter's call for Castro to restrain the Katangans was a proper suggestion.

High court holds for fish, blocks huge dam

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled 6-3 today that work on a $116 million dam project must stop in order to protect a rare and endangered species of tiny fish, the snail darter.

The court rejected arguments by the federal government and ruled that the Endangered Species Act bars completion of the Tellico Dam and Reservoir on the Little Tennessee River in Tennessee.

The law's language "admits of no exception," Chief Justice Warren E. Burger wrote for the court.

Now, it will take an act of Congress — an amendment to the Endangered Species Act — to bring about completion of the controversial dam.

"It may seem curious to some that the survival of a relatively small number of three-inch fish among all the countless millions of species extant would require the permanent halting of a virtually completed dam for which Congress has expended more than $100 million," Burger said.

The snail darter's only known natural habitat is along a 17mile stretch of the Little Tennessee that would become part of the Tellico Reservoir if the dam were completed.

Congress appropriated funds in 1966 for construction of the dam by the Tennessee Valley Authority, and work on the project began in 1967.

Six years later, Congress passed the Endangered Species Act. A provision of the law bans all federal departments and agencies from carrying out projects resulting "in destruction or modification of habitat" of any species officially listed as endangered.

The snail darter's existence was discovered in 1973, four months before the Endangered Species Act was passed. The tiny fish was added to the list in 1975.

King weds American woman

By GEORGE A. KRIMSKY

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — Lisa Halaby is wearing a white Dior gown designed to her specifications and King Hussein a dark blue military uniform emblazoned with royal decorations for their marriage today — the first for the 26-year-old American, the fourth for the 42- year-old Jordanian monarch.

The ceremony took place this afternoon at Zahran Palace, the home of Queen Mother Zain in central Amman. Only about 75 relatives and friends were invited, and no public fanfare was planned.

There was to be a brief ceremony converting the bride to Islam, an exchange of vows in Arabic, the cutting of a 12-tier cake, toasts in traditional rose syrup and congratulations from the guests.

Afterward the royal couple were to meet the press and then greet Jordanian dignitaries at a reception.

Hussein and his lissome, blonde bride, who at 5-feet-6 is two inches taller than her husband, will honeymoon on the Gulf of Aqaba coast, the Jordanian Riviera. They will live in a large guest house on the royal palace grounds in central Amman.

The king has named her Nur el Hussein, or Light of Hussein, and is expected to make her a princess, as he did his first two wives. Only his third wife, a Palestinian who was killed in a helicopter crash 16 months ago, was given the title of queen.

Miss Halaby's parents, her brother Christian, 25, and sister Alexa, 23, arrived with a small party of family friends on Monday. Her father is Najeeb Halaby, former president of Pan American World Airways.

The bride, a 1974 graduate of Princeton University in architecture, came to Jordan as chief of design for the Jordanian airline. Her father is a consultant to the airline and a close friend of the the king.

She was strongly careerminded and not in the "marriage market" when she met the king, her friends say. But she told reporters last month that her marriage would now be her "life's work."

Hussein first married a distant cousin when he was 19, in 1954. They divorced three years later after the birth of a daughter. In 1960, he married the daughter of a British general, Toni Gardner, who became Princess Muna — Desire — and bore him four children They divorced in 1971, and the next year he married 23-year-old Alia Toukan, whose father was a member of the Jordanian diplomatic corps.

Damage to brain in alcoholics studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — Brain damage suffered by chronic alcoholics, long thought to be permanent, may be partially reversible with abstinence from liquor, researchers say.

The new Canadian findings indicate some damaged brain cells may rejuvenate and regain some of their function when alcoholics stop drinking.

And the University of Toronto researchers say this could help explain why many severe alcoholics who quit drinking gradually recover some of their impaired memory, coordination, and abilities to reason abstractly and learn new tasks.

"This is the first time anyone has shown reversible cerebral atrophy (wasting) in adult human beings," Dr. Peter L. Carlen, one of the chief investigators, said in an interview Wednesday.

In a report in the journal Science, the researchers say they are not suggesting that entire brain cells, called neurons, regenerate and grow. It is generally believed that these nerve cells do not reproduce in adult mammals.

But they theorize that tiny threads called dendrites, which carry impulses into nerve cells, can recover and possibly grow if not damaged too badly by alcohol. Along with dendrite growth, there also may be increases in other nerve fibers, supporting tissue and small blood vessels, they add.

The researchers base their theory on a series of special brain X-rays taken of eight chronic alcoholics treated at the Addiction Research Foundation Clinical Institute of Ontario. The patients, all with more than 10-year histories of heavy drinking, received no special treatments. As part of the study, six patients stopped drinking while two continued.

The first X-ray scans, which electronically recreate crosssection brain slices, showed a loss of cerebral tissue and large cavities in the brains of four abstaining subjects.

Scans taken months later show smaller cavities and what appears to be more nerve tissue, the study said.

The two subjects who continued to drink showed no changes between brain scans.

However, no changes were noted in the two other abstaining subjects either. But the researchers said both showed marked improvements in function tests before the first scan was done and it is possible changes that zould have been detectable occurred before the first scan.

Carlen said there were no data to show if alcoholics with brain damage who drank less or for a shorter period of time were more likely to recover some impaired mental function than others.

"But we have evidence that all chronic alcoholics who drink for 10 years or more have signs of cerebral atrophy," he said.

Proposition 13 sparks tax moves in many states

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

American taxpayers are turning anger into action, spreading the tax-cutting gospel of Proposition 13 with petition drives and legislative proposals.

Private gripes are now public demands. Politicans, from President Carter down, say they are listening. "It is time for a full-scale holy war on taxes," said a gubernatorial candidate in Texas.

An Associated Press survey showed that new proposals to limit taxes or spending emerged in 16 states in the week after California voters approved Proposition 13, a constitutional amendment slashing property levies by more than 50 percent. In all, the AP survey showed, the taxpayers' tea party has spread to 29 states.

Carter said Wednesday that the California vote was "obviously a message that has been well received."

And Georgia's Democratic Sen. Sam Nunn, who on Wednesday became the first member of his party in the Senate to endorse a Republican plan to cut individual federal income taxes by an average of 33 percent, said, "Clearly, the message with respect to levying taxes is: Like shearing sheep, you stop when you reach the skin."

In Delaware, Rep. Gerard H. Cain, a Democrat, introduced legislation on Tuesday to require voter approval of all tax increases or new taxes. "This came about because of Proposition 13," he said, although his plan is different. It deals only with future taxes and would not roll back existing levies, as Proposition 13 does.

A South Dakota store owner, Danielle Samuelson, was kept up to date on the California campaign by her brother, who lives there. On the day after the election, she started collecting signatures in an effort to get the tax-limitation issue on the 1980 ballot.

Rhode Island taxpayers' groups met Wednesday to plot strategy. John Assalone, head of the Concerned Parents and Taxpayers of Coventry, said the California measure may be too drastic for Rhode Island. "But there is definitely room in the budget for cuts," he added.

Some of the tax proposals are well on their way to a vote. Others are in the planning stages. All seem to have exposed a raw nerve.

"The time is ripe now," said Pennsylvania Rep. Lee Taddonio, a Republican, as he reintroduced a previously unsuccessful plan to limit state spending and freeze tax levels.

Already pending in the Pennsylvania Legislature is a measure, proposed by state Sen. John Stauffer, also a Republican, to eliminate the property tax as a means of financing public education and replace it with a 1 percent boost in the state income tax. "The taxpayers of this country are fed up with excessive taxes and bloated government spending," said Stauffer. "The victory in California ...should send a smoke signal across the nation."

In some states, like Pennsylvania, taxes and spending were an issue long before the California vote, although supporters say the West Coast victory gave them new impetus. In other states, like Virginia, the June 6 election touched a previously unresponsive chord.

The AP survey found proposals directly or indirectly spawned by Proposition 13, also known as the Jarvis-Gann amendment after its sponsors, in Delaware, Florida, Hawaii, Massachusetts, Missouri, Nevada, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Virginia and Washington. Tax or spending limitations also are an issue in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Oregon, South Carolina and Tennessee.

Both political parties are jumping on the tax bandwagon. "There is a revolt and it's long overdue," said Republican national Chairman Bill Brock. "We want to make it a major Republican issue."

John White, head of the Democratic National Committee, said tax reform "is a major initiative" of the Carter administration.

Federal Budget Director James T. McIntyre said Wednesday that the rebellion has been building for some time. The California vote, he said, was the "loudest single shot fired so far in what some people insist is a taxpayer revolt. But it was hardly the first.

"I would remind you that the citizen discontent over taxes, bureaucracy and red tape is directed at the federal establishment as well as other governments," he said. And McIntyre warned that Washington is not going to take up the slack and pay for services trimmed from state and local budgets.

At his nationally broadcast news conference Wednesday, Carter echoed the remarks of his chief budget adviser:

"...We have no inclination to seek out California for special treatment just because they have lowered property taxes."

Spokesmen for the unions, which represent 2 million federal, state, county and city workers, said the panel also will map strategy to counter tax revolt movements spreading throughout the country.

Braniff seeks Midland-Dallas route to the major metropolitan markets in the eastern half of the United States, as well as to points in Europe, Mexico, South America and the Middle East.

Mewhorter said the chamber already has received about 50 responses. Braniff's connecting flights to the rest of the world are important to area oilmen, he said.

The chambers are requesting letters from individual air travelers in the Permian Basin who are concerned about the cutback in service. Persons interested in stating their views should write to the CAB and send the letters to the Chamber of Commerce office in either Midland or Odessa before June 21. These letters will be delivered as a group to the CAB office in Washington, D.C., to support the Braniff brief.

The Midland chamber address is P.O. Box 1890, Midland, 79702. The Odessa chamber address is P.O. Box 3626, Odessa, 79760.

Chamber officials suggested letter writers include personal or corporate needs for direct service to the East coast, Europe, Mexico and South America; a statement of opinion on the need for competition between air carriers serving the Midland-Odessa and Dallas-Fort Worth markets, and personal difficulties that have arisen when trying to make reservations for trips to or from Dallas-Fort Worth.

Midland Regional Airport only has counter space for the three airlines already there. But, Angelo said, if the application is approved before the end of the summer and Braniff moves in immediately after that, he believes counter space can be found. He added the City Council Tuesday gave architects approval to begin plans and specifications for expanding the counter area to include a fourth airline.

Angelo commented that while Midland and Odessa have competed in the past, he feels working together on this project will be mutually beneficial.

Grenade kills 17

GUATEMALA CITY, Guatemala (AP) — A hand grenade thrown from a speeding car into a military transport killed 17 military policemen and wounded seven Wednesday night, an army spokesman annnounced.

Telephone callers told a radio station that guerrillas of the Army of the Poor made the attack.

Col. Clementino Castillo, the military spokesman, said the attack occurred outside a water distribution plant as military guards assigned to guard it against contamination were being picked up. It was not known how many military policemen were aboard the bus.

Higher high due Friday

With high temperatures expected to jump to the upper 90s through Friday, it looks like Midlanders are in for some scorching hot weather.

The weatherman predicted partly cloudy skies for tonight and Friday. The low temperature tonight should fall to the upper 60s with southerly winds decreasing to 10 to 15 mph.

Wednesday's high temperature was 92 degrees, and the overnight low temperature was 67 degrees, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

All area towns reported clear skies and temperatures in the 70s early today.

Man killed in collision

EL CAMPO — Michael Joe "Mike" Lewis, 25, of Houston and formerly of Midland, was killed near here about 3 a.m. today when the van he was driving and a tractor-trailer collided on U.S. Hwy. 59, a Department of Public Safety spokesman said.

Lewis was pronounced dead at the scene by Peace Justice C. F. Drapela of El Campo. Both vehicles were north bound at the time of the crash, the DPS spokesman said.

Lewis was a field respresentative for Supreme Rubber Products Co. in Houston.

He was a 1971 graduate of Robert E. Lee High School in Midland and was a graduate of Texas Tech University.

He was son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Lewis of Midland.

Services are pending with Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home in Midland.

Jury calls cancelled

Jury panels summoned to appear Monday in both the 142nd and 238th District Courts in Midland have been cancelled, District Clerk Madge Wallis said today.

Persons on those panels do not need to appear as scheduled, she said.

The panel summoned for the 38th District Court was to hear the capital murder trial of Anthony Dewayne Scott. That case has been delayed until Sept. 11.

Mrs. Wallis said she does not know why jurors for the 142nd District Court were told not to appear. District Judge Perry D. Pickett of that court was unavailable late this morning to explain the action.

try," noted Bob Howard who, as chief dispatcher for Texas Electric Service Co., is acquainted with this woody "senior citizen" among the flora at the old Estes homeplace.

The tree, which spreads more than it towers, waves its higher twigs and branches daringly close to TESCO's high-line wires that pass along Kansas Street.

In trespassing along the lines, the tree's lofty branches are no particular nuisance, not yet.

Now, what else do you say about a tree? A botanist who specializes in woody plants possibly could lecture on intrinsic values and features of the mesquite.

And if you are so inclined, you could turn to Robert A. Vines' tome "Trees, Shrubs and Woody Vines of the Southwest" and learn of the many uses of this tree in the wilds and at the hands of man, the technological and exploitative creature.

Furniture can be made from its timber, flour from its bean pods, glue from its sap, and birds, hoofed animals, coyotes and the such make food out of its seeds and leaves.

The relative significance in this tree is in the company that it keeps and has kept throughout the years.

Most memorably, perhaps, was Robert Ephram Estes who, with wife May, adopted the then-young mesquite when the two-story house was built here in '27.

Estes, the Midland County surveyor for 40 years, had a penchant for poetry and prose recitation. His favorite works, other than selected scriptures from the Bible, were by Robert Burns and Edgar Allan Poe.

"He used to entertain people with his recitation of poetry and prose," said son Bob Estes. He, like his late brother Walter Estes, took after their father and became civil engineers.

The name of Estes abounds on abstract ledgers.

"Anybody that has done any abstracting knows the name of Robert E. Estes, because he has his name on more field notes than any other surveyor in West Texas," said the son.

In fact, son Bob Estes said his name is "on a lot" of those field notes, "for I was the chain carrier on a lot of those surveys."

The senior Estes was county surveyor from 1898 until 1943, except for five of those years. He died in 1951 at age 74. His widow lived until last December, when she died at age 89.

The Texas Surveyors Association, in paying tribute to the old-time surveyor, has described him as a "scholar" and as a selfless man who was "very generous with his time and possessions."

Son Bob Estes agreed:

"He had no regard for trying to accumulate any wealth," the son said. "He'd make a few hundred dollars and give it away."

His wife was "very self-reliant," Mrs. Melear said in passing.

Bob Estes also remembers his father as a "great practical joker."

He recalled a personal incident about 60 years ago when he (the son) was just a tot and became the butt of one of his daddy's pranks.

The father talked the son into planting some spaghetti in plowed ground for an upcoming crop. So, young Bob, in earnestness and naiveness, broke up the strings and planted the "seeds."

"So, I planted some spaghetti," the son said.

He got ribbed.

"It didn't take long before he (the father) started laughing, telling about it."

As on or in any place where man has trod, there are many stories, some best left untold, that developed under or about the old mesquite tree and in the 51-year-old house nearby.

"There has been lots of living in this house," said Mrs. Melear, who happens to live there.

"All of the furniture and everything in it are antiques, including the occupant."

And if a tree could be an antique, that old mesquite out there certainly would qualify to join the lot.

Gromyko, Vance exchange angry words on arrests

The Soviet foreign minister reportedly threatened to retaliate for the highly publicized arrest outside New York City of two Russian nationals on spy charges and told Vance, "Two can play at this game."

Gromyko's warning late last month, disclosed by the official Wednesday night, apparently was carried out in two separate incidents Monday.

First, the government newspaper Izvestia claimed that Martha D. Peterson, at the time third secretary in the U.S. Embassy, was expelled last July after she allegedly supplied a spy with poison that was used to kill an "innocent" Russian.

Then Monday night, U.S. businessman Francis J. Crawford was yanked from his car in Moscow and driven away by police who charged him with smuggling.

"It's clear the Soviets telegraphed their punch," said the official, who asked not to be named, in referring to the Gromyko warning.

The arrests in New Jersey and Moscow ended for now a practice by both countries of quietly sending home suspected spies with a minimum of publicity.

American businessmen in Moscow were stunned by the arrest of Crawford, the Moscow representative of International Harvester, and wondered who among them might be next.

While Crawford remained in Lefortovo prison, more than 40 Americans discussed the situation Wednesday with highranking members of the U.S. Embassy.

(2) According to testimony in pretrial hearings, several unauthorized persons had access to the jury wheel and security of the wheel did not meet statutory requirements.

(3) Testimony indicated names of more than 7,000 persons summoned for jury duty, but who did not serve four consecutive days, were not returned immediately to the wheel. After a hearing on the subject last week, Culp ordered the names replaced and a new panel drawn for the Scott case.

could not have been over the ages of 14 or 15.

The problem may end on L Street with the changes, but it really will never end, according to Mrs. Arthur Oldham of 2705 N. L St. "This is a problem that begins at home. If they (teens) leave L Street, I think they will just find another place to go. I think the young people are just irresponsible or unconcerned or both," she said.

The energy problem should make some youths want to do something better with their time "than waste fuel," Mrs. Oldham said. "I don't think building a place for teens will solve the problem. They should be able to entertain themselves in small groups."

Mrs. Hal Dean of 2202 N. L St. also said she feels the teens will find another place to go. But, instead of ticketing the youths, the city should find another way to make those charged with breaking the law pay out the ticket.

"The parents give the kids money to pay them (the tickets) off," she said. "Instead of paying them off, why don't the kids serve their ticket by going to the Cerebral Palsy Center or the hospital and perform some sort of service. They should learn to help someone who is struggling to live rather than mother and daddy give them money to do things.

"Some kids will defy any kind of authority," Mrs. Dean said. "But, if they are given something constructive to do, it may help their outlook."

Those polled added they appreciate the city council listening to them and trying to do something. But, none expects the problem to end overnight.

WOMEN OF ZAGHARTA, the stronghold and power base of the clan of former Lebanon President Suleiman Franjieh, display portrait of Franjieh's slain son, Tony, Wednesday during funeral procession that included about 20,000 mourners. The procession was described as 'ominously quiet,' without the chants or other emotional outbursts that mark mourning in the Arab world. Franjieh, who has vowed revenge on the rival Phalange Party, whose troops killed his son Tuesday, walked at the head of the two-mile long column.

Panama violence leaves one dead, nine injured

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — At least one student was killed and nine others were wounded in a three-hour campus gun battle over the new Panama Canal treaties and President Carter's visit this weekend as the Torrijos government prepared a gala welcome for the U.S. leader.

The shooting erupted Wednesday night at the University of Panama, half a block from the hotel where Carter is to stay. Soldiers of the national guard, Panama's army, surrounded the hotel after the firing began because Carter's advance men were staying there.

A source at the Social Security Hospital said one student, Demostines Rodriguez, was killed, and nine others were being treated for gunshot wounds. The source said one of the wounded was not expected to live.

Government sources put the casualty toll at two killed and 10 wounded, but the two additional casualties could not be confirmed.

An explosion during the battle blew the roof off a onestory student center, another university building was burned, and others were sacked, their contents strewn outside. Campus streets were blocked by damaged cars and debris, and three cars were set afire.

Witnesses said pro-government students attacked an antiCarter meeting by students opposed to the canal treaties. Fist fights broke out, shots were fired and hundreds of students ran for the campus gates.

The anti-government forces retreated to the law school building, and the pro-government students pressed their attack. Both sides made sallies, firing, but were driven back by gunfire. Students crouched behind shrubs and other cover, raising up occasionally to fire. Shadowy figures darted about. Muzzle flashes could be seen at half a dozen points.

Outside the campus, crowds gathered at the gates in the 10foot-tall chain-link fence.

The national guard did not enter the campus, in accordance with a Latin American tradition that educational premises are off-limits to the military. But about 30 minutes after the last shot was fired, unarmed university security officers moved in and began a building-to-building search.

Students opposing the treaties object to the delay in transferring the canal to Panama until the year 2000 and to the stipulation by the U.S. Congress that afterward the United States can intervene militarily to keep the waterway open.

Chrysler lambasts attack on cars

CHELSEA, Mich. (AP) — Chrysler Corp., stung by safety criticisms of the best selling new cars it has ever built, says attacks on its Omni and Horizon subcompacts are based on "unreal, abnormal" tests.

"It's kind of a maneuver or a stunt," Chrysler engineering vice president Sidney Jeffe said Wednesday of the steering test that prompted Consumers Union to label the twin Dodge and Plymouth models as "not acceptable."

The nation's No. 3 automaker defended the Omni and the Horizon, which except for body trim and minor differences in body styles are virtually identical, as "the car of the future" and said they are perfectly safe.

The first front-wheel-drive small car built in this country, the Omni-Horizon model was dubbed "Car of the Year" by Motor Trend magazine and given high marks for handling by trade publications.

But the non-profit Consumers Union, publisher of Consumer Reports magazine, said an upcoming article on the two cars will be titled "Most Unfortunate Car of the Year."

At news conferences in New York and Washington Wednesday, Consumers Union said the cars were unacceptable because of their steering and handling — which Chrysler touts as their strong points.

Consumers Union said tests in which the steering wheels were suddenly deflected at highway speeds showed that the cars do not recover adequately unless the driver's hands are on the wheel.

"Without aid of the driver, most cars straighten themselves with a minimum of wavering from side to side and return close to their previous course," said Mark Silbergeld, head of Consumers Union's Washington office.

In its attempt to refute the allegations, Chrysler repeated the test for more than 50 reporters and ptotographers Wednesday. Although the Dodge Omni appeared to remain in control, the demonstration was difficult to interpret because no other makes were tested for comparison.

Omni and Horizon so far are the most successful cars Chrysler has ever introduced, with 91,171 sold since their introduction in January. They gave Chrysler its first entry in the subcompact market and had a lot to do with edging Chrysler ahead of its 1977 sales pace for May. Each has a base sticker price of $3,976.

Supreme Court refuses to reverse Turner verdict

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Supreme Court Wednesday refused to overturn the judgment agianst Ed Turner in his Winkler County lawsuit agianst a group of West Texas health care providers.

Turner sued Paul Byers, individually and in his capacity as Paul Byers and Associates, and Ralph Lennon, claiming Byers owed damages for cancelling his contract as a nurse-anesthetist.

He also alleged Byers, Charles Clark, III and Lennon conspired to deny his civil rights to work because they had agreed to hire only nurse-anesthetists under contract to Byers for work in their hospitals.

However, a trial court and the Court of Civil appeals denied Turner's claims that the conspiracy existed to prevent him from working in Memorial Hospital in Kermit, Crane Memorial Hospital and Ward Memorial Hospital of Monahans. The Supreme Court, without issuing a written opinion, denied Turner's points of error and upheld the lower court judgments.

GUADALAJARA — It is the kind of crisp, clear night of which tourists' dreams are made. Stars twinkling in the still sky seem matched one-for-one by the sparkle of lights all through this beautiful and bustling city of two million people.

Just outside town, at a horse ranch that has been converted to a set for a television special, a huge

On cue, a couple hundred spectators break into wild applause for a sexy yet vulnerable-looking woman who has just introduced an act.

She is Suzanne Somers, the hottest star on American television, whose "Three's Company" on ABC each week places near the top of the highest-rated prime-time shows. This night she is one of three hosts of a CBS special with Mexican motif.

After her work here she will return to the set of a network movie of the week, follow that with other assignments, then return late this summer to "Three's Company" to make new shows for this fall.

Somers is hot right now — sought after by producers who lust after her name, a name which will sell their shows. A year ago she was just another actress in a network series. Now she is a major star.

On "Three's Company" she is the sexily scatterbrained Chrissy Snow, one of two women who share an apartment with a man.

Off camera, she is a poet with two published volumes, the author of a self-help book, a former student at Le Cordon Bleu and La Varenne in Paris, and will soon become author of a French cookbook.

Off camera, she is also as quick and bright as Chrissy is flaky; as gracious and unpretentious as an actress who has not yet discovered that she is a star.

"I still can't believe it," she says of stardom.

"Look, I'm shooting in the mountains over Palm Springs, and they sent a Lear jet to bring me here. I was afraid I was going to be late, after working all day yesterday. I asked my manager if he thought they'd wait for me.

"He looked at me like I was crazy, and said, 'Honey, if you aren't ready to go, nobody goes.' I never thought of that."

Her burgeoning movie career, including a $1 million deal with CBS, is important to Somers, she says.

She sits on a small bed in a hastily improvised dressing room and radiates sincerity as she speaks.

"Once you're in a hit show," she says, "you want to go beyond that. I want to be more than Chrissy.

"I want desperately to be more than a flash in the pan.

"I'm doing a movie right now, and it's a lot of work. It's creating a new character. And the one question people keep asking is, 'But, can she act?'

"I knew our show was going to be successful," she says. "But I had no idea what was going to happen to me."

Guest television appearances. Films. Movies of the week. Posters by the million. Adoring fans. Real stardom.

"I am having a wonderful time. I guess because I never expected it. I'm really enjoying it — the highs are so high."

And the lows?

"The only negatives that go along with this are the anxieties — trying to live up to what people say about you, or not trying, or not caring."

"Three's Company" has been on hiatus only a short while now, and Somers is itching to get back.

"I miss it," she says. "It's my cradle, my jammies and my blanket. My contract with the show is for five years, and I'd be content to stay there 10 years."

To transform this once-unknown actress and turn her into

"I guess there was a plan," she says. "My manager has two clients — Farrah Fawcett-Majors and myself. So he's been there before. So I guess there was a plan, but I don't know what it is. I'm just along for the ride."

Jay Bernstein, the captain of the entertainment industry who navigates that ride, sits by the pool at El Tapatillo Hotel the next day sipping on one of a series of tequila sunrise drinks and roasting his body the way a chef would barbeque beef on a spit.

He wears a floppy cap on his head, several pounds of jewelry around his neck, and a neatly trimmed beard.

The beard is for effect — it make shim more authoritative, he says, and makes people more willing to follow his orders. "I have become very conscious of my appearance."

How much will Somers make for two days of playing host for this TV special, he is asked.

"Do you know about money?" he answers.

Movie gets 'adult-Disney' rating

By NANCY ANDERSON
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — In the halcyon days when Louis B. Mayer headed MGM, studios owned theater chains so that executive producers were also exhibitors who shaped their products with public tastes in mind.

Mayer not only had to make movies, he had to market them to the individuals who marched up to ticket counters and laid admission prices on the line.

So he and his compatriots had to be alert constantly to the entertainment appetites of the masses.

Times, as you may have noticed, have changed, until now most major producers make movies to please themselves rather than the masses.

Phil Borack, a 42-year-old physical fitness aficionado from Cincinnati and a newcomer to producers' ranks, is a throwback to Louis B. Mayer. For in planning his first film, "Harper Valley PTA," he thought more like an exhibitor than like a creative artist with a message to sell.

One might say that his movie is "a woman's picture," since a woman, Barbara Eden, is its principal character, but Boracks was more influenced by what families in mid-America want to see than he was with what Bella Abzug wants to get on the screen when he okayed his script and cast.

"I'm primarily an exhibitor," says Borack, who owns Tri-State Theater Service Inc., the largest independent booking and buying company in the country.

"I buy for 300 screens in the Midwest."

He's also taken a fling at distributing, which convinced him, "There's a lot of money to be made of distribution, and you can distribute from anywhere so long as you have a telephone.

"But as a distributor I discovered that every picture that came to me had been culled over by everybody else. So to get something to distribute, I decided to make a picture of my own.

"Usually when somebody says, 'I'm gonna make a movie,' the first thing he does is get a script; then he prays to God that people will like it.

"Well, over the years as an exhibitor I've learned what people like."

So Borack bought rights to the song "Harper Valley PTA," because, as he points out, "It has a 98 percent recognition factor" which ws something the movie "Ode to Billy Joe" had going for it.

Then he began weighing script ideas.

"A lot of people had the idea that 'Harper Valley PTA' was a racy song," he says, "so I could have made an R-rated movie that would have been a sure winner but with a ceiling on its appeal.

"I gambled and, instead of making an exploitation film, I've made something I describe as adult-Disney, something families can see and enjoy together.

Theater making summer plans

LUBBOCK — The Texas Tech University Theater is making plans for its annual summer repertory season.

The season will begin June 30 and continue through July 14 with three productions being presented in rotation.

Opening the season will be a production of "Once Upon A Mattress," a comedy-with-music based on the old tale of the princess and the pea. Dr. Richard Weaver will direct the production, which will have presentations on June 30 and July 3, 6, 9 and 12.

Opening on July 1 is a stirring melodrama, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," which is being directed by Dr. Clifford Ashby. Additional performances of the classic old-time temperance play will be given July 4, 7, 10 and 13.

Third and final production to enter the performance schedule is "The Real Inspector Hound," due to bow on July 2. Described as a unique, hilarious and slightly bizarre mystery thriller it will have additional presentations on July 5, 8, 11 and 14. Ronald Schultz is the director.

All performances of the three productions will be in the Texas Tech University Theater on campus. Season tickets and tickets for individual performances went on sale today at the theater box office.

Weekend opening planned for annual summer fest

SAN ANGELO — Fiesta del Concho, San Angelo's annual celebration of summer, opens here this weekend, continuing through June 25.

Billed as "the summer fun place to be," Fiesta '78 will feature a round of sports events, art shows, boating and aquatic events, races, parades, crafts displays, talent shows, carnivals, theatrical performances and special exhibitions.

The fiesta begins Friday with art shows at the Kendall Art Gallery and in the Fine Arts Building at Angelo State University, as well as tennis and racquetball tournaments and a women's slow pitch softball tourney.

Saturday's events will be highlighted with all the above plus horse races and a water ski show. A festival pageant at Old Fort Concho will take place between 4 and 10 p.m., featuring archery demonstrations, wagon rides, tours of the buildings at the fort, a "muzzleloaders' shoot-out," and an exhibition by the San Angelo Saddle Club. A square dance will begin at 8 p.m.

East took the ace of hearts and returned his singleton club. West played the nine of clubs, and dummy won with the ten.

Declarer led trumps at once, and East took the ace. The defenders eventually got the ace of clubs, but no club ruff since declarer drew trumps as quickly he could.

You have all the clues. Name the crime and the criminal before you read on.

MISGUESS

East is the criminal! From West's point of view, it was quite possible that East had started with two clubs instead of just one. West just happened to misguess.

East's crime is pointed out by Jeff Rubens, co-editor of the Bridge World, a magazine for bridge enthusiasts. East should see that his partner will have a problem; and he should eliminate the problem by cashing the ace of trumps at the second trick. When East then leads a club, West's only chance to defeat the contract is to take the ace of clubs at once and return a club.

New TI plant meets goals

There is a new industry in Midland, said Fred Baker, a member of the Downtown Lions Club, but this one doesn't have anything to do with oil.

Baker was referring on Wednesday to the year-old Texas Instruments plant located out by Midland Airport. Bill Steel, facilities manager at TI, spoke to the Lions at their noon meeting on Wednesday about the overall expansion of TI and its impact on Midland.

"A lot of people don't realize that TI is worldwide," said Steel, "but we have 40 to 45 plants in 19 different countries."

He said the Midland plant is in the consumer products group, which means it makes calculators and watches.

He said he sees an emergence of more personalized computer products in the next four to five years — items that will help with the family checkbook or household bills. He also said he thinks the calculator will be a household item. "It looks like everyone will have a calculator in the next few years," Steel said. "Just like everyone has a transistor radio." He went on to explain to the Lions exactly what types of calculators were made at the Midland plant. They have different number names like the TI-1000 or the TI-250 to denote what functions that particular calculator could perform, but they are mainly business calculators, except for the Little Professor. The Little Professor is designed especially for children as a learning device, and Steel said it has four levels of difficulty. It teaches children beginning mathematic skills such as adding, subtracting, multiplying and dividing.

The two basic types of watches made at the plant are plastic and metal, with variation on style, said Steel. The only part of the watch that is bought are the metal switches and straps. He said that 95 percent of the watch is made by TI at one plant or the other.

Midland has proved to be a good spot for the company, he said. The location is good and so are the transportation accommodations.

Inquiry into Mennonites continues

SEMINOLE — The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service is continuing its investigation into the case of the Seminole area Mennonites, who had been threatened with deportation.

INS public information officer Verne Jervis this week in Washington, D.C., said the INS is conducting an internal investigation of the Menonites but would not disclose the nature of the investigation.

However, he did say that the investigation "does not necessarily mean there is any wrong-doing," but that its purpose is "just to make certain that a case was run properly."

More than 140 Mennonites families have immigrated to the Seminole area from Canada and Mexico, purchased land under temporary visas and are farming.

Neighborhood drive for leukemia begins Monday

Dozens of concerned Midlanders are banding together to collect funds for the Leukemia Society of America and to inform the public of the society's programs of research, patient-aid and public and professional education.

The Midland volunteers will begin their neighborhood rounds Monday and continue until June 30, or until a goal of $4,000 is reached, said Mrs. Arthur L. Deal, campaign supervisor. She announced that additional volunteers are needed for the campaign here, and said that anyone wishing to assist in the drive may telephone her at 697-5844. Gladys F. Harris is serving as campaign treasurer.

Leukemia can occur at any age. Although it has long been considered a childhood disease, it actually afflicts more adults. The age group most affected is the over-40 age group, with the incidence among men approximately twice that among women. It is estimated leukemia and related diseases will strike approximately 55,000 Americans during the coming year. There is no known cure for leukemia, but more effective methods of treatment are prolonging lives beyond predictions of a decade ago. It has been leukemia research during the last decade that has brightened the future of leukemia patients.

The Leukemia Society of America, Inc., is a national voluntary agency with chapters throughout the nation. The organization concentrates all its efforts on the problems of leukemia, its control and eventual eradication, and assists in patient-aid and conducts programs of professional and and public education.

Midland girl hospitalized

A 3-year-old Midland girl was transferred to Odessa Medical Center Wednesday and was listed in guarded condition there today following a traffic accident Wednesday in which six Midlanders were injured.

Castillo received minor injuries but was not treated.

Police said the Hubert vehicle was southbound on Carver Street and the Castillo vehicle was eastbound on Hamby. The two collided at the intersection, with both vehicles ending up east of the intersection, officers said.

The Castillo vehicle entered a yard at 1300 E. Hamby and knocked down a tree, police said.

Seibert's homer saves Midland

By TED BATTLES

Midland's Cubs took a 7-3 lead into the eighth inning, largely a result of a couple of Greg Keatley home runs, only to see it evaporate when Amarillo pushed over a couple of runs in the eighth and ninth.

Second baseman Kurt Seibert saved the day with a lead off homer on the first pitch in the 10th inning to rescue an 8-7 victory for the Cubs in the opener of the five-game Texas League series.

"I wasn't exactly thinking home run when I went to the plate," Kurt said, "but I wanted to hit the ball hard. I'd missed a couple earlier in the game and I wanted to get the fans home at a reasonable hour.

"It was a low fast ball," Seibert, who attends Clemson University during the off season, noted. The homer put Kurt well ahead of his pace of a year ago. In fact, he doubled his 1977 output with his second round tripper.

Keatley's two homers were his first two of the season. "The first time I've hit two in a game since my first year in pro ball at Pompano in 1976."

KEATLEY'S FIRST was a lead off solo job in the third that touched off a three-run uprising against Amarillo starter Gary Pickert, a lefthander. The next also was off Pickert and came in his next at bat after Kevin Drury had tripled.

Keatley had a chance to become one of the few Midland Cubs to hit three in a game and three in three innings when he came up in the fifth. "I thought I'd go for it," he said, "but Pickert caught me off guard after I hit a hanging breaking pitch for the first homer and a fast ball for the second by throwing a change up. I tried to check my swing, but I hit it off the end of the bat." First baseman Dan Ilertsen turned it into an easy out.

Earl Battey beat out a single to short, Jim Beswick tripled for his fourth hit of the night and then Dan Ilertsen singled to left-center to tie it. That's when Manager Jim Saul went to Clark.

"I left Jack in with the tying run at the plate because the wind was blowing to left and the hitter was a switch hitter. The way the wind was blowing, I figured it would be tougher to hit a homer to right than left.," Saul said.

CLARK CAME on and gave up a single to Paul O'Neill and a walk to Tony Castillo to load the bases with one out before he got out of it by getting pinchhitter Stan Smith on a fly to center and Bill Hallstrom on a strikeout.

"They were swinging the bat well," said Ledbetter, who is trying to reclaim the form that enabled him to go 12-9 with nine complete games here last year. "In fact, they hit some good pitches. But I felt better tonight and the shoulder is coming around. In the late innings I didn't feel tired, but I was beginning to lose command of my pitches and that's a sign."

Barry Evans hit a lead off homer for Amarillo, his third in the third, and Ilertsen unloaded the longest of the night when he cleared the scoreboard in left for his eighth. A double by Castillo and a skipping single past Seibert at second narrowed the Cubs lead to 7-5 in the eighth.

BRUIN BREWIN'S— Lee Smith, 4-4, will go for the Cubs tonight while Eric Mustad, 1-4, will pitch for Amarillo in the 7:30 p.m. Ladies Night tilt...Manager Jim Saul was delighted by the win and the 15 hits that went with it, the most Midland has had in several weeks. Leading the parade was Jimmy Buckner with three.

When centerfielder Joe Hernandez made a rolling catch of O'Neill's sinking liner in the first to avert big trouble, Ledbetter admitted it was a key play, "but when Joe's out there you get so you expect it, he's got that kind of glove."... With Ron Davis going to the Yankees' West Haven farm in the Eastern League as payment for Ken Holtzman, the Cubs are down to four able bodied starters. "We can't expect any replacement until after the trading deadline," Saul said. "There wouldn't be any point in sending a pitcher here and then having to reassign him if something happens at Wichita or Chicago that would effect us."

Tommy Hudson rolls perfect pin game

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Defending champion Tommy Hudson of Akron, Ohio, rolled a perfect game in his third-round score of 1,996 — second best eightgame block so far — as he took the lead in the $100,000 Professional Bowlers Association National Championship Wednesday.

Hudson put together games of 201, 228, 279, 213, 234, 265, 300 and 246 in amassing a 93-pin lead over second-place George Pappas of Charlotte, N.C. Hudson's 24-game total was 5,518; Pappas', 5,425.

"I used a new ball for the first two games and shot 201 and 228, but that was nothing compared to the 250s being shot by the other guys," Hudson said. "So I pulled out an older ball that had a wider track area on it, and, bang, I shot a 279."

His perfect game was the fourth in the tournament. John Reeser of Daly City, Calif.; Fred Conner of Mar Vista, Calif., and Dennis Lane of Kingsport, Tenn., had 300 games Tuesday.

Mark Roth of North Arlington, N.J., the 1977 PBA Player of the Year, dropped from second to third at 5,401, followed by Warren Nelson of Downey, Calif., 5,387, and Boysie Huber of St. Louis, 5,379.

Griffith takes Carew off list

By The Associated Press

Jay Johnstone is a New York Yankee, Rawly Eastwick is a Philadelphia Phillie and Rod Carew is still a Minnesota Twin.

Carew, the six-time American League batting champion, was taken off the trading market by Twins President Calvin Griffith Wednesday.Griffith said Carew, the AL's Most Valuable Player in 1977, would remain in a Minnesota uniform, at least for the remainder of the season.

While Griffith was pulling his prize merchandise off the block, Philadelphia and New York swung into action as the Thursday midnight trading deadline draws closer.

The Phillies acquired relief specialist Rawly Eastwick from New York in exchange for outfielder-first baseman Jay Johnstone and minor league outfielder Bobby Brown.

Eastwick, the National League Fireman of the Year with Cincinnati in 1976, signed a $1.1 million, five-year contract with the Yankees as a free agent last winter. He appeared in eight games this year with a 2-1 record and 3.28 earned run average.

"He'll join our relief corps," said Ozark, "and (Ron) Reed will become a starter. I just have to see what kind of condition he is in.

"The best part of the deal is the kid they got (Brown). He can run like the devil, he's a contact hitter and I think he can be a superstar."

Johnstone, a 10-year big league veteran, has a .308 average since he returned to the majors in 1974. Brown will move to the Yankees' farm club at Tacoma.

"We needed a left-handed pinch-hitter," said Yankee Manager Billy Martin. Eastwick became expendable when Dick Tidrow was yanked from the starting rotation and returned to the bullpen while Johnstone could not break into the Phillies' crack outfield.

"If I had to be traded, it might as well be to a place like Philly," said Eastwick, who comes from nearby Haddonfield, N.J. "A trade was in the back of my mind, but I didn't really expect it.

"My stay with the Yankees was great. I enjoyed it tremendously. I was really happy here and I hate to leave."

Griffith, who said Monday he was trying to trade Carew at the player's request, refused to discuss his reasons for halting trade efforts. The Twins issued a brief statement saying that after talks with team executives and Manager Gene Mauch, they had decided to terminate efforts to trade the 32-year-old first baseman.

Carew had given Griffith a list of five AL teams with which he would play, and Griffith received offers from four: the Kansas City Royals, Texas Rangers, Yankees and a team the Twins declined to name.

Both Carew and Mauch indicated that they weren't surprised when the trade talks were stopped.

"I really felt there wasn't enough time," said Carew, "If you're going to make a big trade you have to have time when you can really get involved and get the players that you need."

"No club in baseball could give you what Rod Carew is worth and then pay him what he is worth," said Mauch. "I never thought for an instant that Rod would be traded."

Kansas City Manager Whitey Herzog agrees with Mauch.

"I didn't really think we'd get him," Herzog said, "I think Calvin did the right thing. He's got to get as much as he can for him, and apparently nobody was willing to give up half their ballclub.

"At least now, if the Twins don't draw well this year he'll have a good excuse to trade h m during the winter. And now he has the whole National League to deal with, too."

Herzog was referring to the inter-league trading market which will be in full swing this winter.

"Anybody would be silly if they would not like to have Rod Carew on their club," Texas Manager Billy Hunter said. "The question is what do you have to give up to get a player like Carew — player-wise and financially?

"I'm just glad Kansas City didn't get him," said Hunter.

Trevino hopes heat rises

DENVER (AP) — Although the temperature during practice rounds had climbed unseasonably and uncomfortably into the 90s, Lee Trevino said he hoped it would get to 100 for the 78th U.S. Open Championship, which was scheduled to get under way today.

The heat was good for his back, now almost fully recovered from surgery in November 1976. Trevino's game, meanwhile, already was sizzling.

THERE WAS no mistaking the confidence of this two-time Open winner. And, while this year's event had no clear-cut favorite, it was hard to overlook the stocky Trevino as a top choice.

"I'm playing the best golf of my life right now," said Trevino following a practice round Wednesday. "I've won $160,000 and the Open is just starting. I haven't done that in 12 years.

"I feel very confident. That 65 I had last week really gave me a boost. I almost stole that tournament," he said, referring to his final round in the Danny Thomas-Memphis Classic which vaulted him into the lead for a while. He finished second, losing to Andy Bean on the first hole of the playoff.

Trevino admits he's lost one of his main advantages over the competition.

"I think I'm the staightest driver on the tour, but unfortunately I won't be using a driver that much here — maybe on six holes at the most," he said. "My chances would be better if I could put a driver in my hands 14 times a round, with the other guys doing the same. That won't happen here."

CHERRY HILLS, ironically, is the longest Open course ever at 7,083 yards. But the thin air at Denver's mile-high altitude has afforded the players 7 to 10 percent more carry on their shots, whittling the course down to something more like 6,400 yards. Because of its relative shortness, as well as the narrow fairways and treacherous rough, the players planned to use irons off the tee on many of the par 4s.

Jack Nicklaus, for example, said he probably would pull out his driver less than five times a round.

Because of the preponderance of iron play off the tee, Trevino felt the longer hitters must be favored in this year's Open. "They're capable of hitting their 1-or 2-irons up to 270 yards, so they don't need to use the driver," he said.

Nicklaus, golf's all-time leading money winner and holder of 14 major titles, falls into that category, of course. He's overdue, too, not having captured a major tournament since 1975.

Bean, the Florida strongboy who won the Kemper Open two weeks ago along with Memphis, also should be a factor.

But perhaps more suited for an Open course are the games of Trevino, 1974 winner Hale Irwin and defending champion Hubert Green. All are extemely accurate strikers of the ball, have strong comietitive instincts and have been playing well recently.

Irwin grew up in nearby Boulder, starred in football and golf at the University of Colorado and played here often as an amateur.

Assault charges filed on Spinks

CLAYTON, Mo. (AP) — Charges of common assault and possession of marijuana, both misdemeanors, were filed Wednesday against light-heavyweight boxer Michael Spinks. The charges stem from an incident at St. Louis' Lambert Airport.

Spinks, 21, is the younger brother of heavyweight champion Leon Spinks. He is accused of striking a policeman following seizure of a small bag allegedly containing 17 grams of marijuana from the front seat of his car.

Police say the incident occurred last Friday night after the boxer was ordered to move his car from a no-parking zone. Spinks, the middleweight champion at the 1976 Olympics at Montreal, is free on a $1,500 appearance bond pending his appearance before a St. Louis County magistrate June 29.

Tulsa man charges OSU protects payments

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — An Oklahoma businessman, in a telegram to Big Eight Commissioner Charles M. Neinas, identified Wednesday an organization which he indicates makes illegal cash payments to Oklahoma State football players.

Jim Treat of Tulsa, Okla., said he brought the matter to Neinas' attention because Dr. Lawrence Boger, Oklahoma State president, had refused to rectify the situation.

"I tried to maintain protocol," Treat said in a telephone interview. "I went first to the university president and now I've gone to the Big Eight commissioner. I don't like being the bad guy, but something has got to be done."

The telegram, which Treat released to The Associated Press, said in part:

"In the best interests of the Oklahoma State University athletic program and the Big Eight Conference, I feel that I, unfortunately, am duty bound to advise you of conversations and circumstances relative to these interests. On at least two occasions, confirmed supporters, including myself, met with Dr. Lawrence Boger, university president, to discuss our concern relative to an organization known as the North Central Oklahoma Business Development Association, Inc."

"It has become increasingly apparent that you have no intention of taking any positive action on the adverse situation surrounding the football program at Oklahoma State. I took the liberty to discuss the North Central Oklahoma Business Develohment Association, Inc., club with you and gave you an opportunity to conduct an internal investigation that reportedly directly implicates your head football coach.

"One of your regents informed me that pressure was being applied upon you as chief executive officer of Oklahoma State to keep a hands-off attitude toward this organization. It is the opinion of our most ardent and loyal supporters that the illegal dispersion of funds directly to athletes has caused a total lack of discipline within the ranks of the football program and adversely affects the scholarship phase of the total educational process of the student-athlete.

"I am frankly disappointed in your

Boe may lose team

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) — Roy Boe's back is squarely up against the wall.

For years a master at juggling his creditors, Boe now faces the prospect of losing control of his basketball team, the New Jersey Nets, as well as his hockey team, the New York Islanders, unless he can put his financial house in order — and soon.

Boe may have to sell his principal partnership in one of those teams in order to stay in charge of the other. Or he could lose them both.

Boe, whose debts are estimated at more than $25 million, was told Tuesday that he had until July 18 to come up with a viable plan of economic reorganization for the Islanders or else face the revocation of his franchise.

On Wednesday, the National Basketball Association's Board of Governors gave Boe a July 28 deadline to show that he can meet his basketball-related debts — some $7 million or more — or else face league sanctions which could ultimately mean the loss of the franchise.

The Governors, at the opening session of their annual summer meetings, adopted a resolution authorizing NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien to take actions necessary "to begin to implement all remedies and procedures available ...to protect all the rights and interests of the NBA and its member teams, including the termination of the New Jersey Nets franchise."

The move is being pursued under terms of the 1976 expansion agreement rather than the NBA by-laws. The agreement allowed the Nets and three other clubs admitted into the NBA from the American Basketball Association.

This aay, only a majority vote would be needed to revoke the Nets' franchise and only the 18 older NBA clubs would vote on the matter — not the other ex-ABA teams, who have a strong vested interest in keeping the Nets afloat since they would have to pick up the Nets' share of common debts, a sizeable sum.

Harvey Benjamin, an attorney representing the NBA, said the league would shortly issue a 30-day notice required by law in cases where someone is in default. The league contends Boe is in default in several obligations, especially to former players.

"We have to start the process to terminate the franchise, if that is what is ultimatels decided to do," explained Benjamin. "This is the start of that process."

Another vote will be taken July 28 to determine the

Streaking back in vogue

By The Associated Press

Streaking may not be very popular these days elsewhere, but it is the going craze in the American League.

Actually, the streaking by the Baltimore Orioles, Milwaukee Brewers, Chicago White Sox and Boston Red Sox, along with several individual players, has been done fully clothed and with the approval of everybody in the league except their opponents.

The Orioles remained unbeaten in June by taking their 13th straight game and 12th this month, a 5-2 decision over California Wednesday as Jim Palmer won his sixth in a row. Palmer, 9-4, hasn't been scored on by anyone except the Angels since May 20 and has a 0.30 earned run average since then.

"When you're going like this, you have got to be doing something right," said the threetime Cs Young Award winner, who saw his shutout bid end in the seventh inning when Carlos Lopez misplayed a ball in center field, leading to two runs, one earned. "But you also need the breaks and support from the other guys.

"Once you reach the sixth or seventh inning with a shutout, you obviously try for one," added Palmer, who's tossed five shutouts already this season. "But I've always said shutouts are pure luck."

But a prolonged winning string like the Orioles' involves both luck and a great deal of skill.

"The streak means nothing," said Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver. "If we pick up three or four games on Boston, that will mean something."

Despite their triumphant ways, the Orioles have gained just 3½ games on first-place Boston in the AL East.

The Red Sox increased their latest winning streak to six with a 9-0 whitewashing of Oakland, while Milwaukee extended its victory skein to eight with a doubleheader sweep of Toronto, 7-5 and 5-0, and the White Sox won for the fourth straight time and the 16th in 18 outings with a 4-1 beating of Texas.

At the other end of the streaking spectrum, Seattle dropped its seventh in a row, an 11-9 10-inning loss to the New York Yankees, Cleveland's David Clyde saw his four-game win string snapped by Minnesota, 8-2, and Kansas City stopped Detroit 7-1 to edge into first place in the AL West by .001 percentage points.

Red Sox 9, A's 0

Oakland's winless skein reached seven as the A's slipped from the top in the West. The Red Sox used Luis Tiant's four-bitter and homers by Jim Rice and Carl Yastrzemski to capture their 16th victory in the last 20 games.

Yastrzemski's homer, a three-run shot, was the 370th of his career, tying him for 23rd place with Gil Hodges on the all-time slugging list. It also propelled him past Billy Williams into 21st place on the RBI list with 1,477.

Brewers 7-5, Blue Jays 5-0

Milwaukee swept Toronto with Gorman Thomas smashing his 14th homer of the year to highlight the Brewers' openinggame victory and Sixto Lezcano getting three hits to back the shutout pitching of Jerry Augustine and Randy Stein in the nightcap.

"When I took over this club I thought we could play .500 ball or possibly better," said Brewers Manager George Bamberger. "Now I think we can play the 'possibly better'.

"We have good dept this year, which means we don't have to go with the same nine men night after night. Tonight we rested Lezcano in the opener and didn't have to use Bando at third all night."

Bando played first base in both games as the Brewers moved eight games over .500. Despite their winning streak, Milwaukee has gained just o e game on Boston.

Toronto lost its ninth straight.

White Sox 4, Rangers 1

The White Sox moved to within 2½ games of the top spot in the West even though they are two games under .500 at 28-30. Ron Schueler and Jim Willoughby combined on a threehitter and Chet Lemon and Alan Bannister drove in two runs apiece for the White Sox, who have advance from 12½ games back on May 27.

"I don't care about .500," said Chicago Manager Bob Lemon. "To be in first place and be .490, that's all right with me.

Yankees 11, Mariners 9

Seattle looked as if it was about to win for the first time at Yankee Stadium, taking a three-run lead into the eighth and then grabbing a 9-7 edge in the 10th on Leon Roberts' pinch-hit homer and Ruppert Jones' sacrifice fly.

It was Paul Blair, however, who ended a negative streak and gave New York the game. Blair had been 0-for-23 against right-handers when he hit a three-run homer off Enrique Romo with his team down 9-8 and two out in the 10th.

Twins 8, Indians 2

Clyde, 4-1, was beaten for the first time this season after returning from the minor leagues as Dan Ford hit a two-run home run and rookie Roger Erickson, 7-4, went the distance.

Royals 7, Tigers 1

Paul Splittorff tossed a nifty four-hitter and Amos Otis had a two-run homer to boost the Royals ahead of Oakland and into first place in the West.

Giants keep on rolling

By The Associated Press

When Vida Blue was pitching for the vastly depleted Oakland A's in recent years, the running wisecrack was usually, "Blue, then who?"

Now that he's pitching for the San Francisco Giants these days, nobody asks such questions.

The Giants have one of the best staffs in baseball and those infrequent times when Blue is in hot water, there's usually someone efficient like Randy Moffitt to bail him out.

Like Wednesday.

"That was a super job, just beautiful," said jblue after the Giants' ace relief pitcher preserved a 2-1 victory for the Giants over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Blue was aiming for his first National League shutout before running into trouble in the ninth. Pinch-hitter Dave Johnson doubled and scored on Jerry Martin's single and after Martin was moved to second base on a sacrifice, Moffitt came into the game.

"When I was throwing in the bullpen, I didn't think my slider was good at all," said Moffitt. "I said to myself, 'If there's one day I'd like to see Vida go nine innings, it's today.'"

But Moffitt didn't waste any time, striking out two dangerous batters in Mike Schmidt and Greg Luzinski on a total of seven pitches.

"I guess I got my adrenalin up, or something," said Moffitt. "I had a great slider once I got on the mound."

In other National League games, the Cincinnati Reds defeated the Chicago Cubs 3-1, the Los Angeles Dodgers stopped the New York Mets 5-3, the Pittsburgh Pirates whipped the Houston Astros 6-4, the Atlanta Braves downed the St. Louis Cardinals 7-1 and the San Diego Padres took a doubleheader from the Montreal Expos, 6-2 and 1-0.

The Phillies were unable to get a runner past first base until the ninth against Blue. The left-hander walked one batter, the first one he faced, and struck out two.

Phillies starter Larry Christenson pitched a four-hitter, with three of the hits coming in the first inning when the Giants scored their runs. The righthander retired 20 consecutive batters between the first and eighth innings.

The Giants failed to hit a ball out of the infield during the 20batter stretch. Blue broke Christenson's string with a single to right field in the eighth.

Reds 3, Cubs 1

Manny Sarmiento, making only his third start of the season, teamed with two relievers on a four-hitter to lead Cincinnati over Chicago. Sarmiento, one of the Reds' most effective relievers this year, struck out four and walked two in five innings of two-hit ball. Dave Tomlin and Doug Bair blanked the Cubs the rest of the way with Bair recording his 11th save.

Dodgers 5, Mets 3

Bill Russell's two-run, tiebreaking double in the seventh triggered Los Angeles over New York. Steve Garvey belted two home runs off loser Jerry Koosman, his second homer tying the game in the sixth inning.

Pirates 6, Astros 4

Dave Parker slammed a three-run homer and reliever Ed Whitson gained his first victory of the season as Pittsburgh rallied from a four-run deficit to beat Houston.

Trailing 4-0, the Pirates scored four fifth-inning runs on a solo home run by Ed Ott and Parker's three-run blast. The Pirates took the lead in the sixth on a two-out double by Garner and pinch-hitter Manny Sanguillen's RBI single off loser J.R. Ric ard.

Braves 7, Cardinals 1

Jeff Burroughs and Dale Murphy belted home runs to power Atlanta over St. Louis. Adrian Devine, making only his second start of the year, stopped the Cardinals on five hits before giving way to reliever Rick Camp in the eighth inning.

Burroughs drilled his sixth homer of the year over the right field fence in Atlanta Stadium to open the fourth and, one out later, Murphy hit his to the same spot off Cardinal ace Bob Forsch, 7-6.

Padres 6-1, Expos 2-0

Gene Tenace knocked in two runs and Dave Winfield hit a solo homer to pace San Diego's first-game victory over Montreal. Eric Rasmussen pitched 6 1-3 innings to gain the victory while John D'Acquisto finished up for his third save of the year.

Akers to support changes

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas football coach Fred Akers says he'll support rules changes for a freshmen orientation week and a national championship playoff during the College Football Association meeting this weekend in Denver.

"I've stated before that I would be in favor of a national playoff as long as it didn't affect our present bowl situation because I wouldn't want to jeopardize them in any way," said Akers, coach of the 1977 Southwest Conference champs.

Akers favors a four-team playoff, whose participants would be chosen by a point system based on a team's schedule. Under that system, the national playoffs last year would have included Notre Dame, Alabama, Penn State and Texas — even though Texas lost to Notre Dame in the Cotton Bowl.

"This plan would give you an incentive to upgrade your schedule and since you are talking about winning and losing, a one-point victory would be just as important as a big point spread," the Longhorn coach said in an interview with the Austin American-Stateman.

The football association meeting is a forum of all major conferences except the Big 10 and Pac 10. The association could propose legislation for consideration by the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA).

Akers wants fellow coaches to help what he calls disadvantaged freshmen.

"They're having to come in and compete just like a veteran without the benefit of spring training or any prior instruction," Akers said.

Holland, Brazil take wins

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — It's goals that win the World Cup of soccer. Johnny Rep of Holland, Dirceu of Brazil and Mario Kempes of Argentina each scored two as the second round started, and the hopes of their teams went skyhigh.

Holland scored five against Austria, and suddenly became the new favorite Wednesday. Goals can lift a team's spirits like champagne.

"Holland is the team to beat," said Italian Coach Enzo Bearzot.

"It gives a team a big psychological advantage to win by a big margin (5-1) as Holland did today," said Claudio Coutinho, manager of Brazil.

On the other hand, West Germany, the defending champions, appeared pleased to hold the highly rated Italian team to a 0-0 draw. It was the Germans' third scoreless tie in four games, since the tournament started — and Coach Helmut Schoen went out of his way to deny it was part of a plan.

"Our strategy is not purely defensive," Schoen said. "We very much wanted to win. It would be false to claim that we set out to defend."

But Sepp Maier, Germany's 34-year-old veteran of three World Cup campaigns, is the only goalkeeper in the tournament who has not yet conceded a single goal.

The second round is played in two groups of four teams, with the top team in each group going into the final at Buenos Aires' River Plate stadium June 25.

In Group B Wednesday, Brazil beat Peru 3-0, and Argentina defeated Poland 2-0.

The best goals of the day were scored by Kempes of Arrentina. They allowed his team to prosper despite an almost continuous bombardment at theirgoal.

In the 15th minute, Kempes raced at full speed into the penalty, got under a long high ball and headed down into the corner of the net.

If Nets fold, Brown may win future of the Nets — with or without Boe, who owns 25 percent of the club and may try to raise enough money from his partners to buoy the team.

"The league is interested in having the Nets exist as a viable team," said Benjamin. "Whether it's under Boe's ownership or not remains to be seen."

Boe, who attended the Board of Governors meeting, was unavailable for comment on how he plans to meet this most severe crisis in his stormy sports career.

Ironically, Boe's woes could be a blessing for Buffalo Braves co-owner John Y. Brown, who received a 20-day extension from the NBA Wednesday regarding his plans for relocation of his franchise.

If the Nets fold, Brown could move the Braves to New Jersey, where they would eventually play in the 20,000-seat arena planned in the Meadowlands Sports Complex. Brown reacted enthusiastically to that idea, saying he would gladly pay a $4 million territorial indemnity to the New York Knicks if he could move to the Meadowlands.

At this point that is only conjecture, however. The three cities still in the running to land the Braves, according to Brown and Commissioner O'Brien, are Dallas, Minneapolis-St. Paul and Louisville.

Co-owner Harry T. Mangurian and club President Norm Sonju are on record as favoring Dallas. Mangurian walked out of Wednesday's meeting early, apparently upset that Brown did not take a firmer stand in favor of Dallas.

"We are totally prepared for several markets," said Brown. "Each has several problems. With Dallas, for example, we have the problem of playing in a temporary arena for two years."

Brown was the owner of the ABA's Kentucky Colonels and calls Louisville his "sentimental choice. I'm just not sure it would be economically viable to put a franchise there. It would be by far the smallest of the NBA cities. How could we compete? After all, this is business."

The Board of Governors will deal with a future home for the Braves at a special meeting to take place within the next 20 days.

decision to forego your principles to cater to the whims of one or two regents ...This leaves me no choice except to advise Mr. Neinas of the happenings within our athletic department that you refuse to correct."

Treat concluded his telegram to Neinas by requesting "an immediate visit with you to totally inform you and to provide documentation and witnesses, primarily members and officers of the North Central Oklahoma Business Development Association, Inc., to permit you to have the supporting evidence for a formal inquiry. I would appreciate your earliest possible response."

Treat refused to give details of the activities of the North Central Oklahoma Business Development Association.

"I think the matter will be handled very adeuuately by the conference office," he said. "I don't feel I should add anything at this time."

Neinas, prior to receiving Treat's telegram, said in a statement issued Wednesday by the Big Eight office in Kansas City:

"The conference was instructed by the membership to monitor Oklahoma State's athletic operation. I met with Oklahoma State President Larry Boger in April and he assured me that he will demand adherence to the rules. I believe Dr. Boger and the conference intends to cooperate with him and his institution to insure that Oklahoma State's program is conducted in the proper manner."

Treat, president of a Tulsabased supermarket chain, is one of several Oklahoma State supporters forbidden by the NCAA from recruiting for the Big Eight school. The NCAA took the action several months ago when it placed Oklahoma State's football program on a two-year probation for recruiting violations.

The sanctions included the loss of 10 scholarships over the probation period and prohibited the Cowboys from appearing on television or playing in a bowl game.

Last month the NCAA began an investigation of allegations raised by the Dallas TimesHerald that Oklahoma State football players may have received financial assistance in the purchase of new cars. NCAA rules forbid a school from making financial considerations available to studentathletes that are not available to students in general.

On Tuesday, Floyd Gass resigned as Oklahoma State athletic director, saying "outside pressures" had forced his resignation.

Gass also said he had read that an Oklahoma State booster had accused head football Coach Jim Stanley of working for Gass' ouster and of administering an illegal recruiting fund.

"That's bad. That's terrible," said Gass, 51. "That's bitterness, and it shouldn't be that way."

Gass said he had no knowledge of any illegal recruiting fund and Stanley also denied the existence of such a fund.

Boger was reported to be out of town Wednesday and could not be reached for comment. Ray Chapel, the school's faculty representative to the Big Eight, refused to comment when reached at his office.

GRIMSLEY'S SPORTS WORLD

Pros still cry as Open opens

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

DENVER (AP) — There are golf tournaments and there is the U.S. Open. Any resemblance between the two is purely coincidental.

"I don't know why they can't leave traditional golf courses alone," complained Jack Nicklaus, preparing to tee off today in the 78th U.S. Open Championship over the revamped Cherry Hills course.

"Everything is done to keep making courses tougher and tougher. There's no sport where players are not bigger, stronger and better, yet golfers keep shooting the same scores in the Open.

"We have no way to relate our skills with those of the great players of the past. Why is it a crime to shoot a low score in the Open?"

He and other big hitters of the modern game would have cherished the opportunity to drive the 348-yard, par-4 first hole, as Arnold Palmer did in the final round in 1960 to trigger his dramatic winning surge from 7 shots back.

But they won't get the chance. Since that day, the hole has been lengthened 50 yards, the tee set back to form a dogleg and the green put out of the reach of the heftiest sluggers, including Tom Weiskopf and Andy Bean.

New strategic hazards have been sewn into the layout since Arnie made his now legendary charge 18 years ago.

The U.S. Golf Association disapproves of athletes taking liberties with its Open courses. So golf's horde of sun-chasing gypsies play one game when they come up to the Open.

That's the reason you normally can hear the pros screaming from here to Nantucket.

"The fairways are so narrow that you have to walk them Indian fashion single-file. When you applaud you have to move your hands up and down," they said of Oakland Hills outside Detroit in 1951 when only Ben Hogan and one other man, Clayton Heafner, had a round under par.

"The greens are so hard it's like putting down a marble staircase and trying to stop the ball on the f urth step," they said of Winged Foot in Mamaroneck, N.Y., in 1974 when players such as Nicklaus, Weiskopf, Gary Player and Johnny Miller soared 13 to 22 shots over par.

Since the Open was first played back in 1895, the winning scores have been better than 280 only six times. By comparison, that traditional mark has been bettered in 20 out of 24 tournaments on the tour this year alone.

The winning score in the 1963 Open at The Country Club in Brookline, Mass., was only 11 shots better than the 304 with which Francis Ouimet won over the same course in 1913.

Astonishingly, Hale Irwin won at Winged Foot in 1974 with 287 and the score was good enough to win for Lou Graham at Medinah, Ill., the next year.

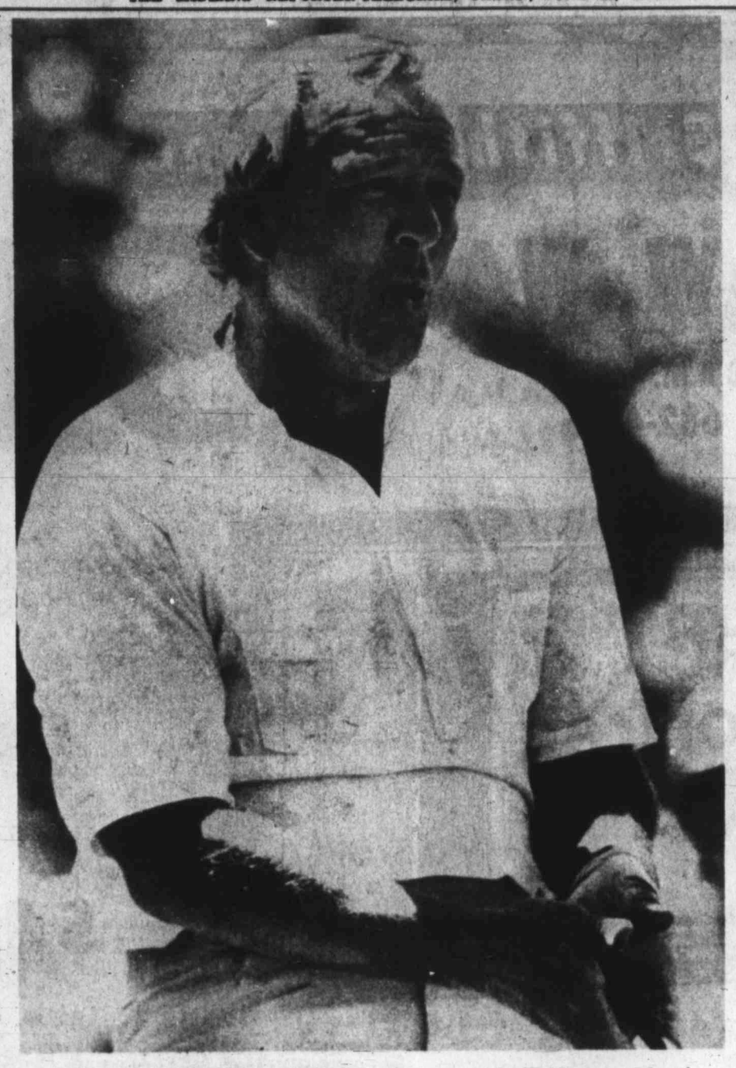
Whereas the tour puts emphasis on low scores, on the theory that fans are intrigued by small numbers, the men in the blue jackets and striped ties who zealously guard the traditions of the Open embrace another sense of values.

"We operate on a theory of a penalty for a bad shot and reward for a good one," says Frank D. (Sandy) Tatum, president of the USGA. "With improvements in equipment and in quality of players, our concern is not with figures but in maintaining a balance with par.

"This has been the consistent premise of golf since 1860."

Joseph C. Dey, former USGA director and PGA tour czar, put it a different way, quoting James Russell Lowell.

"New occasions teach new duties," he said. "Time makes ancient good uncouth."



THAT FAMILIAR Arnie Palmer charm and charisma surface as the veteran makes a birdie putt on the 486-yard 14th hole at Cherry Hills during practice round Wednesday. (AP Laserphoto)

Noah promises French return

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — Arthur Ashe knows a good tennis player when he sees one — and that is why he is telling his English friends at the John Player Grand Prix classic to keep an eye open for the man he says could be the next black Wimbledon champion.

His name is Jannick Noah. He is French and built much like Ashe but looks more powerful.

And now, after being accepted directly into Wimbledon, the 18-year-old Noah is fulfilling the promise which Ashe, Wimbledon champion in 1975, noticed eight years ago on a visit to the Cameroun Republic. Ashe has been quietly encouraging the youth ever since.

Noah, who will be Ashe's doubles partner at Wimbledon, is also being hailed by the American as the man who can lead France back to the golden days of tennis that country enjoyed 50 years ago — in the days of Cochet, Borotra, Brugnon and Lacoste, the Four Musketeers.

Ashe believes his protege, who makes his Davis Cup debut in Paris next month against Britain or Austria, will make an impression on Wimbledon.

Ashe has no doubt at all that Noah is on course for the stardom and riches which the modern day tennis players take for granted.

For all that, Ashe has no plans to take over the handling of the young French player's career.

Ashe, who was one of seven seeds beaten on the second day of the tournament here, hopes soon to be able to resume playing with contact lenses. At the moment he is having to wear his glasses because of a continuing eye infection.

At the end of play in the singles Wednesday, just four Americans out of 27 starters remained in contention for the men's title. 4

Brian Gottfried beat Australian Colin Dibley 6-2, 6-4 to qualify for the third round, while Jimmy Connors and Roscoe Tanner both reached the quarter-finals.

Connors beat Australian Dave Carter 6-2, 6-2 while Tanner defeated Brian Fairlie of New Zealand 6-3, 6-2.

Mexico's Raul Ramirez ousted American Tom Gullikson 6-4, 6-0 in the third round.

Eric van Dillen lost 6-4, 6-4 to Ismael El Shafei of Egypt, Belus Prajoux of Chile beat Rick Fisher 6-2, 6-3 in the second round and Bernie Mitton of South Africa eliminated Terry Moor 4-6, 6-2, 6-2.

Journey down rocky road ends for Barons

MONTREAL (AP) — An 11year journey on the unpaved road to destruction has ended for the Cleveland Barons.

They started in California and wandered east to Richfield, Ohio, leaving behind a trail of white skates, trained Seals and unimpressed customers. Then, they headed north to Montreal to meet their fate at the National Hockey League's annual summer meetings.

Their uniforms are souvenirs n w. The Barons merged with the Minnesota North Stars Wednesday to achieve the only significant "first" of their history: until now, no NHL team had combined with another and no struggling club had been folded since the Brooklyn Americans "retired" from the league in 1942.

All that remained of the Barons today was the contracts of the players not protected from the dispersal draft, in which the league's weajest teams rummaged the wreckage for what little talent could be salvaged.

The Washington Capitals were to have the first option on the remaining talent, but decided instead to use the Barons' 18th pick in the draft of junior players which followed.

That left the St. Louis Blues with first shot at the 35 players from the combined roster who were not protected. The North Stars were allowed to exempt 10 skaters and two goaltenders from the pool.

Protected players from the "old" North Stars were goalie Pete LoPresti, defensemen Brad Maxwell, centers Glen Sharpley and Tim Young and right wing Perolov Brasar.

St. Louis and Vancouver had options on the first picks, after which the North Stars "filled" by placing another player on the protected list. Pittsburgh and Colorado had the other two draft choices, each of which cost $30,000.

That nailed the coffin shut. Except for the paperwork and one final goodbye, the Barons were buried — dead in their childhood of the financial epidemic that has ravaged pro sports.

"I think this eliminates what only two years' experience in Cleveland has proved to be a disaster," said Boston jbruins President Paul Mooney. "And it might well be a formula to further eliminate weaker teams, as well as a retraction from what many people feel are the results of over-expansion."

For years the league battled to keep the team alive despite the dismal outlook before, during and after the club was moved from California's Bay Area to a cleared section of forest between Cleveland and Akron. The area had seen the loss of franchises in he American Hockey League and the World Hockey Association, and Wednesday saw its third hockey franchise sputter and crash.

The few survivors include Gordon and George Gund, who helped finance the team in its Oakland days and owned it those two harrowing years in Ohio. They'll share a major interest in the new ownership corporation which controls the lease at the North Stars' home, the Met Center in Bloomington, Minn.

Other management positions had not been disclosed, but one recent report said Barons General Manager Harry Howell would be named vice president while Lou Nanne continues as the North Stars' general manager. Since Minnesota had no coach, it was reported Barons mentor Jack Evans would take the position.

Karl Godine eyes NAIA

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Karl Godine's controversial basketball career at Texas A&M has ended, according to the former schoolboy All-American, who says he'll transfer this fall to an NAIA school.

Godine, one of two former Houston Kashmere stars declared ineligible two years ago by the Southwest Conference because of illegal recruiting, told the San Antonio Express that he didn't feel he was playing enough.

Texas A&M basketball coach Shelby Metcalf said Wednesday that Godine's decision not to return for his senior season is "a wise one."

The 6-3 Godine would have a year and a half of eligibility at an NAIA school after sitting out the 18-week waiting period.

Godine and high school teammate Jarvis Williams, who combined to lead Kashmere to 75 consecutive victories and three straight Class 4A schoolboy titles, signed in 1975 to play for the Aggies.

But in February 1976, the SWC declared them ineligible for a season because Texas A&M was found to have given them illegal inducements.

The two players returned to play last fall, but Godine suffered a knee injury on Jan. 28 that finished the season for him. He had been hitting 9.6 points in just an average of 17 minutes per game before the injury.

Williams, meanwhile, said he plans to remain at Texas A&M.

"The knee is coming back," said Godine, who averaged 13.2 points per game before being declared ineligible during his freshman season. "I'm running a little now. It will be on the right track by the time school starts.

"That first year I enjoyed it because I got a chance to play and we were winning. The next year we couldn't play, but we got to practice quite a bit. The third year they didn't really give me the playing time I needed," he added. "I feel like if I went back they would probably give me the same amount of playing time and that wouldn't be enough to show people what I can do."

Metcalf said, "I think it was a wise decision. Two years of work would be best for Karl. When we talked about it, I recommended that if he did choose to leave that he go to an NAIA school. That way he'll have two yers of eligibility remaining."

Godine said he has visited Stephen F. Austin State and talked with officials at a New Mexico school.

Godine feels the SWC decision two years ago was unjust. "I don't think they (SWC) were rirht in their decision, but it was their decision and they were going to do it no matter what I said. Because I was black they thought it was something they could do," he said.

Gregg resigns

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Forrest Gregg has resigned as offensive line coach of the San Diego Chargers after 3½ months on the job, the National Football League team announced Wednesday. Gregg's future plans were not announced.

The pro football Hall of Fame member, who played offensive tackle for the Green Bay Packers, was fired last winter as head coach of the Cleveland Browns.

Gregg, 44, said it was a personal decision to leave San Diego where he had served as offensive line coach in the 1972 and 1973 seasons. He said it has become increasingly harder to get enthused about the role of an assistant coach after being a head coach for three years.

No replacement was announced for Gregg. He was added to the Chargers' staff in March to succeed Rudy Feldman, who is now defensive line coach of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Sacrifice Taiwan? No!

The recent visit in Peking of U.S. National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski may prove to be much more significant than the low-keyed reports about it would indicate.

Primarily, it was a cultivation of American relations with mainland China which have been lying fallow since Secretary of State Cyrus Vance presented the Carter administration's credentials in Peking last August. With the Panama Canal treaties ratified and the Middle East momentarily quiescent, President Carter seemingly is giving timely attention to U.S. interests in Asia.

The result, in the one-issue-at-a-time approach which seems to characterize U.S. foreign policy, is to bring China to the forefront of news and to a greater American awareness.

The Chinese seem more amenable to improved relations with the United States; they gave Mr. Brzezinski a warmer reception than that accorded Secretary Vance. One reason, although not the most important, is that their house is in a better order now. Hua Kuo-feng has emerged as the supreme ruler of China, having been named by the National People's Congress in March of this year as premier and also chairman of the Chinese Communist Party.

Already he is quietly dismantling the radicalism of the Mao era and is leading China along pragmatic paths toward becoming a modern industrial society. Hua is quick to recognize the tremendous potential that American cooperation has for this development.

Apart from these affirmative auguries, the most influential factor for improving Sino-American relations is the Soviet Union, which is seen as the chief menace to both nations and to world peace.

The bizarre violation of China's border by a small Soviet army group early in May, the stepped-up Soviet-Cuban military involvement in Africa, and the overwhelming Soviet military growth, all combine to make for compatible U.S.-Chinese talks.

Indeed, in his public statements in Peking, Mr. Brzezinski said President Carter is determined to overcome the obstacles to diplomatic recognition of China by the United States.

Because the Chinese consistently have maintained that the chief obstacle to full diplomatic relations was continued U.S. recognition of Taiwan, which they as well as the Taiwanese insist is part of one China, Mr. Brzezinski seemed to be suggesting an abrogation of U.S. formal relationship with the Nationalist Chinese.

Such a move promises to be counterproductive because it is certain to touch off a controversy in Congress to equal or surpass the Panama Canal and Arab-warplanes debates. This could not but damage the delicately developing relationship with Peking.

But from all accounts, it need not happen. In reality, the issue of Taiwan pales for the Chinese beside their fear of Soviet aggression and their need for modern weapons to minimize that threat.

The United States is warming to the Chinese and they are warming to the U.S. because of mutual self-interest.

And because China's self-interest with respect to the United States and the Soviet Union supersedes the Taiwan issue - which can wait, in any event - it would be needless and foolish for the Carter administration to sacrifice a long-time U.S. friend and ally, generating a self-defeating domestic controversy in the bargain.

It would not be wise for the United States, under any circumstances, to even consider sacrificing Taiwan. Peking should understand this by now.

ART BUCHWALD

No reading for Johnny; everything is closed

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — If Johnny couldn't read before, he's really in trouble now that there is a taxpayer's revolt in this country.

In a couple of years this scene could be played all over the country.

"Nothing."

"Why aren't you in school?"

"School's closed."

"Then why don't you go and play in the park?"

"Can't. The park's closed."

"Well, go to the library and read a book."

"No way. All the libraries are closed."

"Then go play in the streets."

"The streets are full of garbage. No one's picked it up for over a week."

"Surely you can find something constructive for an 11-year-old boy to do."

"I could set fire to a building. But that's no fun because the fire engines won't come any more."

"That's a bad bruise on your leg. Have you been to see a doctor?"

"I tried to but the emergency room at the hospital is closed. They said they don't have any money."

"Where's your mother?"

"Working."

"Then you should be in a day-care center."

"I was until they closed it."

"Who gets your lunch for you?"

"Don't have lunch since they closed the school."

"I guess you're too young to get a job."

"Yup. Nobody wants to give me a job because they say I should be in school."

"What do you intend to do after you've broken all the windows?"

"I don't know. Maybe steal a bicycle, if I can find one."

"I don't like that kind of talk, Johnny. You should set your sights on higher goals than that."

"Like what?"

"Getting a good education for one."

"How can I do that if the schools are closed?"

"They won't be closed forever."

"They'll be closed long enough for me to steal a bike."

"Why don't you educate yourself?"

"Don't have no books."

"There has to be something you could do that isn't against the law. What do you want to be when you grow up?"

"Don't care."

"Why not?"

"Nobody cares about me."

"That's a terrible thing to say. What makes this country great is that you can be anything you want to be when you grow up, including President of the United States."

"What's the President of the United States?"

"You mean to say you're 11 years old and you don't even know about the President of the United States?"

"I guess they closed the schools before I had a chance to find out."

"Well, if you don't stop breaking those windows, I'm going to have to call the police."

"Won't do no good. Those windows is the police station. They closed it eight months ago."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Security Council-Cabinet snafu

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — The story can now be told of the blow-up inside the White House over the sale of our hottest military jets to Saudi Arabia.

It was ignited by Jessica Tuchman Mathews, a senior strategist, who gave other White House insiders a secret briefing last February on the military implications of the sale of F-15 fighters to the Saudis.

Speaking for the policymaking National Security Council, she assured the group that the F-15s were "defensive aircraft with very little offensive capability." She also described Tabuk, a Saudi Arabian airbase only 125 miles fron Israel, as a civilian installation.

No one was listening more intently than President Carter's liaison advisor on Jewish affairs, Mark Siegel. He subsequently learned from the Pentagon, however, that the F-15s are considered the best fighter-bombers in the world and that the U.S. was helping develop Tabuk into a major military base.

Outraged, Siegel resigned in protest. He charged that he had been fed inaccurate information by National Security Council officials.

Eventually, Jessica Mathews' name slipped into some new accounts as the official who had misled Siegel. On April 19, she complained in a "Dear Mark" letter that she had become "increasingly distressed" that he was naming her as "the source of information which led to your troubles."

She denied calling the F-15 a "defensive weapon" and insisted she had referred to Tabuk as "originally a civilian airfield that has been upgraded." She added acidly: "An adequate understanding of the technical issues involved here requires more than a passing acquaintance with the subject."

Siegel fired back a sizzling letter marked "personal and confidential." It began "Dear Jessica" but quickly exploded: "I have read and reread you letter and find its contents inaccurate and its tone insulting. I find it additionally objectionable that, unknown to me, you have apparently circulated copies of the letter around the White House.

"I do not know what motivates a person to retroactively distort facts and redefine truth. I may surmise that it is your own attempt to justify your behavior and culpability for dissemination of inaccurate information to the public and to the Hill."

Siegel said four others at the Mathews briefing upheld his version of what she said and contended that a subsequent briefing paper was heavily edited. "You did not tell us then, nor mention in your letter to me," he seethingly added, "that Tabuk is heavily protected by American Hawk antiaircraft missiles and that Hawk triads are currently being installed.

"Nor did you indicate that the United States is helping the Saudis to construct ... a modern paratroop training installation and barracks for several thousand paratroopers. Your description of Tabuk as an installation valuable only to economic trade, and for its proximity to the pilgrimage city of Medina, is totally inaccurate and is inconsistent with assessments by our own Defense Department."

Turning to the military capabilities of the F-15s, which are going into the Saudi arsenal, Siegel declared that as advertised by its maker, McDonald-Douglas, it "is a potent and lethal strike plane, as well as an air superior interceptor.'"

The disenchanted former Carter aide concluded on this note: "I suggest you learn more about this weapons system before you continue to misinform and misdirect others."

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: Reporting to the Cabinet on high food prices, Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland explained that the main cause was "the increase in the price of beef." He blamed this on "three years of drought." Now that the rains have returned, he said, "cows are being held back to increase the breeding herd." The confidential minutes record that he also insisted: "Reports of (my) intention to leave the Administration are inaccurate."

— Intelligence reports describe a dramatic incident last month that the newspapers missed. At a secret airstrip near Riohacha, Colombia, police closed in on a cargo plane, arrested the crew and seized 12 tons of marijuana. Three Americans — identified in a secret account as pilot Earl Zerbe, co-pilot Theodore Powell and mechanic Gary Faucher — were thrown into the slammer along with an Irishman named Desmond Quinlan. The rest of the story is told dispassionately in an intelligence dispatch: "On May 5, 1978, two subjects dressed as national police officers entered the Riohacha jail, overpowered the guards and freed the three U.S. citizens and the Irish national."

— Defense Secretary Harold Brown has been bringing business and professional leaders to the Pentagon for some mild brainwashing. He reported confidentially to the Cabinet that "the atmosphere is considerably different than the one which exists when talking to a large group on their own turf." He had also learned, he said, that "it is useful to mix individuals of diverse orientation and interests into the groups which attend."

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — If it took Richard Nixon, who once spit nails at Communists, to thaw the Cold War and salute Peking, why can't Joseph Califano now correct and restore the infernal H.E.W. machine which he helped build in the days of Lyndon B. Johnson's "Great Society?"

For years, Republicans wrung their hands over the wasteful, bureaucratic mess at H.E.W., and blamed it all on Democrats.

It is true that while Democratic programs, spawned by humanitarian urges — the essence of Hubert Humphrey — turned H.E.W. into a sort of St. Nicholas monster, when the Republicans got their paws on the place under Nixon and Ford they did little to create efficiency and order.

It is Califano, the Democrat, who told Congress to stop over-appropriating, cracked down on physicians and other healers who bilked the feds on Medicaid and Medicare programs and instituted computer programs to snare ungrateful students who failed to repay generous federal loans.

Indeed, if a Republican ran H.E.W. the way Califano is, he would not only be living up to party rhetoric, he would likely suffer attack and demonstrations of the fierce anti-war variety.

For here is Califano lamenting the decline of the work ethic, thumping for controls — not expansion — of the federal disability insurance program, opposing abortion on demand and directing a gimlet eye on staffers enthusing about proposed new programs.

"Last September, you should have seen this place," he says. "Everybody rushing in my office with contracts for approval. I told them that world is over. We've got to manage our money better and conform compassion to efficiency. People want to get what they're paying for, and they're not getting it now."

The H.E.W. budget was only $5.4 billion when the department was formed in the early fifties. It now lays out $181.5 billion, a full third of the entire U.S. budget, and next year, will likely reach $200 billion.

Califano frets over this growth like a man trying to put out a grass fire. "I urged Congress to cut our next budget by a billion, and instead, they upped it by $800 million," he complains. Last week, they rejected a $440 million cut and few people caught that.

Since only 12 percent of the current H.E.W. budget is in discretionary funds, Califano must slow the growth and probe the interiors for what have become the devil terms at his department — waste, fraud and abuse.

The government has been cheated by doctors who charge for two appendices removed from the same person, dentists who claimed to have pulled the same tooth nine times, and an alarming number of students (including some who now work at H.E.W.) who are apparently disinterested in repaying their student loans.

One estimate holds that up to $7.4 billion in H.E.W. funds "were unnecessarily or improperly spent" in 1977. Most of this waste went for unnecessary surgery, hospital stays, X-rays and prescriptions — in a word, excesses. The disability program suffers the disability of being obese. In 1965, it paid $1.5 billion to one million disabled workers. Now it serves three million people and pays out $13 billion. Califano must supervise some 600 federal administrative law judges, more than all the federal judges in the entire Republic. Enough.

By installing and using computer systems where Republican administrations used index cards, by prosecuting professionals who exploited H.E.W. programs, and by introducing the coldly analytical systems he learned as a Pentagon assistant to Robert S. McNamara, Califano is saving federal bucks right now.

Beyond that, though, he is putting a large number of professional groups and citizens on notice. Doctors and medicoes should now feel inhibited from indulging in medical excesses, and might even be wondering why hospitals on the West Coast keep patients for shorter stays than those on the East. Congressmen, consultants, free-spending H.E.W. bureaucrats and all manner of vendors who go for federal bucks, have gotten the word that H.E.W. isn't so soft a touch.

"The real payoff in stopping the rip-off in Medicaid," Califano says, "will be what we learn about the process of prescribing medical procedures and practices. If we went the West Coast way on hospitals, for example, we could save $1.5 billion a year.

"Talk about networks. Now that the word is out we're after students who defaulted on loans, students fresh out of college are actually calling in to pay off their loans. The big reason most of those who defaulted didn't pay was that they simply didn't get a bill. How many bills do you pay that you don't get?"

The Califano effort can help to restore the generous impulse which Americans felt in "Great Society" days but which has gone sour. Nearly all citizens want children to be properly educated, the sick to be helped and healed, the hungry to be fed, the afflicted to be comforted. But most citizens would also agree with the good Benedictine monks at St. John's University in Minnesota, who like to say: "We love all people, but we lock our doors at night."

Spanish transition to democracy no panacea; regionalism new hope

By RONALD KOVEN
The Washington Post

MADRID — Many Spaniards profess to be unsurprised that the transition to democracy since the death of Generalissimo Francisco Franco in 1976 has been so smooth, but hardly anyone expected that the country would be on the verge of transforming itself peacefully from one of the world's most rigidly centralized states into something like a federal union.

As in France and England, the energies of Spanish kings were spent turning Spain from a collection of warring provinces and principalities into a centrally governed state.

Historically centralization in Spain was identified not only with the idea of the modern nation-state, but also with the political right and its traditional institutions — the monarchy, the church and the army.

It is probably only the name of Franco's successor, King Juan Carlos, on the royal decrees granting provisional autonomy to Catalonia and the Basque country — whose separatism kept them in continual conflict with the Franco government — that has made it tolerable to the army, which regards itself as the guarantor of national unity.

The experiment in regionalism is also being looked upon with some disquiet in the rest of Western Europe, where most countries are beset by troublesome regionalist movements.

French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, who came into power preaching decentralization, has just made it clear in a tour of Corsica, a separatist hotbed, that he has reversed himself and is not at all sure that regional government is such a good idea.

The French are also worried about separatism in Brittany and the potentially dangerous example the separatists might give to linguistic minorities on almost all of France's frontiers — the Flemish of Flanders, the Germans of Alsace, the Italians of Nice and Savoy, the Provencals and the inhabitants of France's own Basque country.

The English have recently seen that nationalism was waiting to be rekindled in Scotland, Wales, Cornwall and the Isle of Man, not to speak of Ulster. Belgium's unity is plagued by its periodically warring Flemish and Walloons.

THE EXACT form of regional autonomy in Spain has not been spelled out and is the most controversial question facing dafters of the new constitution. Premier Adolfo Suarez is widely suspected of encouraging all of Spain's traditional regions to seek autonomy as a way of reducing the impact of giving it to the Basques and Catalans, the only mainland autonomists with recognized languages of their own.

The transition from dictatorship to democracy has happened with breakneck speed, yet, there seems to be fairly widespread disillusionment that democracy has not solved the country's problems overnight, least of all high inflation and unemployment. So, the focus for hopes by the large proportion of the 36 million Spaniards who are unhappy with their lot has shifted from democratic central government to some vague expectation of salvation by the new regional autonomias that Suarez has offered.

Manuel Freaga Iribarne, a former Franco Cabinet minister who describes himself as the leader of the "civilized right" in the provisional parliament, said in an interview, "In the United States, federalism was a way, as you Americans put it, 'to form a more perfect union.' But it makes no sense to divide a unitary state. What happens with the regions is our most serious problem. Suarez doesn't know what he wants. All he does is surrender continually to the demands of the Basques and Catalans."

Blas Tinar, the leader of the small but vigorous fascist party, goes even further, speaking of "the surrender of Spain to autonomist governments which hope to become independent states." They are a vehicle, he said, for Marxist parties to take over the country. Even before a final text is ready, Tinar's New Force Party is covering the country with graffiti reading, "No to the Constitution."

Even Fraga recognizes that there must be some regionalism, but he advocates that it be along the lines of the weak Italian regions that took 20 years to set up after they were first provided for in the Italian constitution. He said there could also be special arrangements for particular regions, like the ones for Sicily and Italy's German-speaking Trentino region.

Spain's Communists are being very prudent. Ramon Tamames, one of the Communist constitutional negotiators in the small parliamentary committee working on the text, said in an interview that the draft will be ambiguous and that the final form of regional autonomy will be left to detailed negotiations over an enabling law.

TAMAMES displayed vivid awareness of the anxiety over the issue in an army that fought under Franco to reduce the Catalan and Basque bastions of republicanism. Rightists identify the two regions with republicanism and the left.

When the Spanish Civil War broke out in 1936, Franco expected the heavily Catholic Basques to side with him. The special vengeance that Franco wreaked on the Basques when they did not is offered as an explanation for the refusal of ETA, the Basque independence movement, to lay down its arms even now that there is a government in Madrid ready to compromise.

Tamames, the Communist, said he thought regionalism is far less of a threat to national unity now than under the republic.

"The integration of Spain is much stronger now than in the '30s," he said. "Then, we had no electricity, television. There were not the same population flows between regions. We did not have a national market. Even the spread of the Spanish language has had a big boost in the past few years. Catalonia is a bilingual country today. So is the Basque country."

The Madrid government has been fortunate so far that the Catalans have been especially moderate under the leadership of 78-year-old Josep Tarradellas, who was called home from exile by Juan Carlos to head the reconstituted Catalan parliament. Tarradellas has turned the king's calculated risk into a triumph.

There are those who are already thinking that after the nationalist movements have been neutralized, regionalization will pose serious practical problems.

"In the long run," said a Cabinet minister, "Spain's worst problem is Andalusia. What do we do about poverty and unemployment there?" Spain's southernmost region, it is comparable in its conservative peasant traditions and economic backwardness to Italy's dirt-poor south.

IN A COUNTRY beset with major economic worries, the disadvantages as seen at the Finance Ministry of giving up tax revenues to the regions and of finding money to help them set up new administrative structures seem to outweigh the advantages. Ministry officials also wonder what will happen to the bureaucracies in Spain's 50 administrative provinces.

There will probably be 13 mainland regions if Navarre accepts the Basque efforts to absorb it, plus the canaries off the Atlantic shores of Africa and the Balearic Islands in the Mediteranean.

"Catalonia will take care of itself," said the Finance Ministry man. "The standard of living in Barcelona is comparable to Milan's," he said, likening Spain's northern industrial metropolis to Italy's. "But I'm not so sure about the other regions."

Catalonia, thanks to the predominance of Barcelona, is also the only region that does not have an argument going about where its capital should be. In Andalusia, regional authorities have agreed to split up the functions of local government among the seas of its eight administrative provinces.

The Basques have proposed that their capital be in Pamplona, the only trouble is that Pamplona is actually the capital of neighboring Navarre, which the Basques hope to annex in a forthcoming referendum.

Not to be outdone, New Castile, the flat region surrounding Madrid, wants its autonomy recognized from the regions it has conquered and dominated. Naturally, the citizens of Toledo, the original royal capital, are pressing their claims to be the regional capital over Madrid.

Says Tierno Galvan, Spain's leading constitutional law professor, "We can't predict where all this autonomy is leading. Today, it is positive. It provides for decentralization and guarantees of democracy. Tomorrow, it could create economic strains among the regions and create a new layer of bureaucracy.

Los Angeles firm to run casino in Atlantic City

The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Caesars World Inc. announced Tuesday that it has leased the Howard Johnson Regency Hotel in Atlantic City, putting the Los Angeles-based firm in line to be the second casino operator in the New Jersey resort.

Caesars' stock price surged on the news. The stock has risen 63 percent since the company announced May 18 that it was negotiating the lease.

The firm said it would expand the 425-room Regency into a 527-room hotel, plus a 52,000-square-foot casino and related facilities. The estimated cost of the expansion is $30 million.

Caesars, which owns and operates the Caesars Palace hotel-casino in Las Vegas, also holds a long-term lease for the former site of the Traymore Hotel in Atlantic City. The company said it intends to pursue plans to build a $100 million hotel-casino there in the next few years.

"Early market penetration is a key factor in our plans for Atlantic City," said William H. McElnea Jr., Caesars president.

The expanded Howard Johnson hotel-casino complex, to be renamed the Boardwalk Regency, is scheduled to open in July, 1979.

The first casino in Atlantic City, operated by Resorts International Inc., opened on May 26 and has announced an average gross take of $438,504 a day.

Taiwan encouraging consolidation to bolster economy

The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — In an attempt to diversify its markets and at the same time lessen protectionist sentiments abroad, Taiwan is encouraging its 1,000 small trading companies to consolidate into large trading groups.

H. K. Shao, director general of Taiwan's board of foreign trade, says the government began instituting measures this year to pattern the operations of small, generally undercapitalized trading companies after their foreign counterparts—especially the mammoth Japanese trading firms, or zaibatsu.

"At the very beginning, we had a free trade system and many small trading companies," Shao said after a press conference at the World Trade Center to launch a Taiwan buying mission. "But now they can't compete on international markets."

Shao explained that by reorganizing into larger trading entities, small companies would avoid competition among themselves and could handle large volume orders (now mostly transacted by Foreign firms). Most importantly, he added, they could expand.

Taiwan's plans to encourage mergers by cutting bureaucratic red tape and facilitating bank loans comes in the wake of a burgeoning trade surplus with the United States. Two-way trade in the first four months of the year totaled slightly over $2 billion with a surplus of $702.1 million in Taiwan's favor.

Shao heads a 19-member trade mission which began its 15-city, 40-day buying tour here Monday. The group is expected to procure $750 million in contracts—$300 million in agricultural goods and $450 million in industrial products—from U.S. businesses.

Earlier this year, the first buying mission purchased $270 million worth of U.S. goods. By the time a third group completes its tour this fall, Taiwan will have purchased a total of 1.5 billion in goods, Shao said.

With U.S.-Taiwan trade expected to total $7 billion this year, compared with $5.6 billion in 1977, Shao said his government wants to correct the trade imbalance. "We're quite concerned about protectionism. Fortunately, only two of our items—textiles and nonrubber shoes—are subject to U.S. quotas," he added.

Large trading companies would enable Taiwan to enhance its trading position—12th with the United States—and avoid some middleman fees, most of which now go to foreign firms. That savings could be plowed back into purchases of foreign goods.

Groppi drives bus now

The Washington Post

In the late '60s, he was a cocky bantam rooster among the civil rights activists, this slightly-built Roman Catholic priest. It was a time for militant causes, and the then-Rev. James E. Groppi was not a man to turn his back on a cause. Rather he embraced it with fervor and dedication.

He was jailed more than a dozen times. He led 200 nights of marathon marches for open housing through taunts and stones thrown in Milwaukee's Polish-American South Side. He traveled to Washington with a bodyguard of "black avengers" from the Milwaukee NAACP Youth Council, which he advised.

The marching priest was page-one news whether photographed in jail or testifying before the president's riot commission.

Today the former priest-activist is Jim Groppi, a Milwaukee bus driver on strike and depending on his wife to bring in the income after more than 25 days off the payroll.

"Some of the fellows have been talking about my running for president of the union," Groppi said last week. "But I don't know. We're beginning to hurt."

There is a flash of old fire. More than a decade after the heady excitement of the civil rights demonstrations, Groppi still can work up a good case of righteous indignation. He's still searching in his personal life, he says, but that doesn't mean that he is lost or forlorn.

A little over two years ago, Groppi was dropped from the priesthood when he was married at the age of 45. Peg, his wife, was a parishioner at St. Boniface Catholic Church when Groppi was the priest there. They were married in Las Vegas, Nev.

"Peg's been in jail, too, during the civil rights demonstrations," Groppi points out with the pride of a wife's accomplishment. "It was an agonizing time for me as I considered getting married. In the church, you had a home. As a priest, a lot of people were depending on you. You could feel that you were accomplishing something. There was structure and dedication."

There still is dedication if not the buttress of a structured discipline for Groppi. He and his wife now are volunteer parish workers for St. Adrew's Episcopal Church in Milwaukee and help out on neighborhood canvasses.

"It's good to knock on doors again and meet people. I say 'I'm Father Groppi' and talk to them. I don't care what people call me, but I still use 'father,' from habit," says the former priest.

Always a maverick within the church, Groppi was disciplined by his superiors during his militant days as a civil rights demonstrator. He finally was transferred from his inner-city black parish to the suburbs. Later he set up a storefront church and celebrated mass. Then he was given leave as a priest to attend law school and earned tuition money driving a cab in Milwaukee.

"I was helping people just as if I was in the church. As a cab-driver, I was out there with real people in the world," Groppi recalls. "Bus driving is also being where life is."

Brain waves: the way to pick television hits?

By ROBERT P. STUDER
Copley News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The six men and six women, wired to a brain-wave scanner, watched as the videoscope screened two 20-minute programs.

One depicted a man and woman in a rather boring conversation about classical music. It wasn't stuff intended to turn anybody on.

Then, during the second half of the experiment, the couple on the screen was shown making passionate love.

Would the test audience show measurable differences in interest and absorption between the two films?

To researchers at the University of California at San Francisco, it was more than merely an academic question.

At stake was a possible new, and more effective, way for the highly competitive television industry to test audience reaction to new pilot TV shows. Careers have been made or broken, and networks have risen and fallen, on the best guesses to that question.

As they had hoped, the experiment, headed by Edward W.P. Schafer, Ph.D., did demonstrate that there is a way to measure a television program's interest directly by observing audience brain waves. They found that their test audience did, in fact, react and that there is a scientific way to measure that erotic movies really are more absorbing to most folks than a session with "Face the Nation."

His method works like this: Barely perceptible flickers were programmed every few seconds in the TV image. Schafer reasoned that the more involved a viewer was in the program, the less he or she would notice the flicker. Since the size of the brain waves reflects the attention paid to a stimulus — such as the flickering — viewers showing the smaller brain wave changes could be presumed to be more absorbed and interested.

When marked differences were noted between classical music discussions and erotica, a third program was screened for a wired-up test audience. Ten men and 10 women watched regular television programs that they had selected themselves as examples of high-interest and low-interest programming. These included such shows as "M-A-S-H" and "The Waltons."

The brain waves were measured from the subjects' "polysensory association cortex," the part of their brain that processes visual and other sensory information.

Japanese fishermen battle 'dolphin killer' image

By AKIRA NAKA
Kyodo-Copley News Service

TOKYO — Several months have passed since the infamous Japanese "dolphin massacre" off Iki Island north of Kyushu, but the fishermen of Iki are still sailing on troubled waters generated by a steady stream of domestic and foreign protests.

The Katsumoto City Fishing Cooperative in Iki says that the volume of protests has now dropped somewhat, but that they still receive daily letters and telephone calls from people expressing their outrage toward their killing of some 1,000 dolphins which were consuming their fish resources.

Nagasaki prefectural fishing officials and the fishermen of Iki insist that the early news reports and the widely viewed television films showing blood-spattered dolphins being cut apart by a large group of fishermen created the mistaken impression of a brutal massacre.

They said that, contrary to news reports, no dolphin were clubbed.

Tadayoshi Ogawa, head of the Iki Dolphin Association, said that it would be both ridiculous and dangerous to try to kill a 500 kilogram dolphin with a club.

Ogawa said that the boat poles probably mistaken by viewers for clubs would split with one blow against the tough hide of a dolphin.

The fishermen admitted that they cut open the bellies of some of the dolphins, but insisted that this action was limited and unavoidable. A few of the dolphins were cut open to discover what kinds of fish they were consuming.

Another 250 had to be opened up to let the air out of their stomachs so that they would sink when thrown back into the sea. Because of problems involving ocean pollution laws, dumping bodies into the sea was discontinued after this one instance.

The fishermen also deny that their method of stabbing the dolphins to death is cruel and inhumane. Cutting the carotid artery produces a great deal of unpleasant-looking blood, but it also kills the animals almost instantly.

Destroying this "natural enemy," which eats up almost one-third of their annual catch, is necessary if they are to survive, the fishermen claim, but the killing itself is done with heavy hearts.

On the uninhabited island of Tatsunoshima across the bay, where the dolphin round-up took place, there is a memorial stone built in behalf of the souls of dolphins. The stone was built two years ago, long before the recently publicized incident. Every year during the summer "Obon" festival for the dead, offerings are made for deceased dolphins.

Many letters from conservationists stress that dolphins off the Japanese coast or around the world are on the verge of extinction.

A different picture was presented by Prof. Kazuhiro Mizue of Tokyo University's Oceanography Department in an article carried in a Japanese daily.

Mizue said that the number of dolphins captured has been infinitesimal in relation to their total number, and that for all real purposes they are still a "virgin resource."

The professor said that because dolphins have almost no value to humans, the number of dolphins in the oceans has been allowed to grow to the saturation point.

Of the 2,311 households in Katasumoto, 560 are directly involved in the fishing industry. Revenues from fishing total $8.3 million a year, but after deductions for distribution and other factors, the average take for a fisherman does not reach $8,300 a year.

Losses from dolphin consumption of fish resources totaled $1.54 million between November laat year and January this year, eating away 30 percent of their total catch.

Many Japanese, who are always sensitive to foreign criticism, feel that the fishermen of Iki have become scapegoats for growing international antagonism against Japan and its huge eocnomic trade surpluses.

The fishermen at Iki are highly critical of the Japanese government for failing to present their case adequately to the world. Japanese embassies have sent out letters to protesters which explain the position of the fishermen.

For him, it's all carcinogens under the bridge now

By MICHAEL GRANT
Copley News Service

I wonder if the autopsy will reveal if it's the red dye, the bacon or the hamburger that got me.

Since adolescence, I have kissed (with unmixed emotion, in my ignorance of the consequences) my fair share of red dye. And I have eaten a considerable quantity of bacon, nitrite and all.

But now I know it's too late to worry. Dr. Barry Commoner tells me I have thumbed my nose, however unwittingly, at the Big C over a thousand — shoot, probably nearer a thousand thousand — mutagen-encrusted hamburgers and steaks. I shall will my organs to Armour, except for the stomach, which should go into Dr. Commoner's research mill.

It's all carcinogens under the bridge now. If I never even smell another Steerburger, I'm a goner. My mutagen mass is critical.

There's only one frame of mind in which to endure the final days: Damn the tournedos, full speed ahead!

I just want to say there are no hard feelings.

How could I hold this against my Gramma, God rest her soul, from whose skillet my preference for crusty burgers sprang? My favorite meal remains to this day a hamburger patty so well-done you could break a window with it; pinto beans (who knows what evil lurks in pinto beans?); green onions; sliced tomatoes and a dill pickle; and corn bread thangs, which are patties of much that are fried up crispy in a skillet.

(Corn bread thangs, so far as I know, have not been declared a cancer-causing food, but they are so good that I am sure it is only a matter of time.)

I never knew personally any of the fry-cooks at Smitty's or the Dairy Delight; wherever you are, people, listen: No remorse. You didn't know, and I didn't care.

Please don't still the grill, Boll Weevil; you're the nearest thing to a What-A-Burger that a fellow can find. I'll never turn my back on you, and I am sure a lot of other mutagen freaks feel the same way.

I remember, without a trace of self-pity, the best steak I have ever eaten. It was strictly a matter of fortuity, as these things always are, that I swung into the Red Barn parking lot that evening in Odessa. The cook was on a hot streak, and the steak on which his hand fell was one in a million. I ordered it crunchy on the outside, and pink on the inside, and that's the way it came.

(Dr. Commomer, while sealing my doom, at the same time did me a bit of a favor. I always was anxious that a waiter or cook would miss my meaning of "crunchy." Now I can just order it "mutagen-rare," and be confident.)

Most of all, I need to encourage Phil Lorfing to carry on. Phil is the proprietor of the Lowake Inn, an old and unadorned roadhouse about midway between Ballinger and San Angelo, Texas, and a good six miles off the main highway, out there in the middle of the cotton fields.

Ah, the Lowake Inn; the mutagen capital of the world. What a way to go. There is a dirt airstrip directly across the road from the restaruant. People fly in from Dallas and Oklahoma City and Albuquerque. We Abilenians just drove down, a distance of 70 miles.

For $1.25, Phil will set before you a hamburger the size of the nosewheel off a Cessna. Rodney Allen Rippy couldn't lift it with a car jack, much less both hands.

But the place is known principally for its steaks. The extra-large T-bone crosses country lines. You can use the bones for the fence posts.

Phil cooks everything on a stainless-steel grill, so the juices don't get away. "I don't believe in burning up a steak over charcoal," he sniffs.

(Now, Dr. Comoner's only definitive statement thus far has concerned the grilling of hamburgers. But he speculates the same thing will happen with grilled steaks, and I tend to believe him, tra la.)

Last year, when we were in Abilene, we made the pilgrimage to Lowake. I had the large T-bone (approximately the diameter of a collegiate discus) and my wife had a rib-eye that appeared to weigh about a pound.

For him, it's all carcinogens under the bridge now

By MICHAEL GRANT
Copley News Service

I wonder if the autopsy will reveal if it's the red dye, the bacon or the hamburger that got me.

Since adolescence, I have kissed (with unmixed emotion, in my ignorance of the consequences) my fair share of red dye. And I have eaten a considerable quantity of bacon, nitrite and all.

But now I know it's too late to worry. Dr. Barry Commoner tells me I have thumbed my nose, however unwittingly, at the Big C over a thousand — shoot, probably nearer a thousand thousand — mutagen-encrusted hamburgers and steaks. I shall will my organs to Armour, except for the stomach, which should go into Dr. Commoner's research mill.

It's all carcinogens under the bridge now. If I never even smell another Steerburger, I'm a goner. My mutagen mass is critical.

There's only one frame of mind in which to endure the final days: Damn the tournedos, full speed ahead!

I just want to say there are no hard feelings.

How could I hold this against my Gramma, God rest her soul, from whose skillet my preference for crusty burgers sprang? My favorite meal remains to this day a hamburger patty so well-done you could break a window with it; pinto beans (who knows what evil lurks in pinto beans?); green onions; sliced tomatoes and a dill pickle; and corn bread thangs, which are patties of much that are fried up crispy in a skillet.

(Corn bread thangs, so far as I know, have not been declared a cancer-causing food, but they are so good that I am sure it is only a matter of time.)

I never knew personally any of the fry-cooks at Smitty's or the Dairy Delight; wherever you are, people, listen: No remorse. You didn't know, and I didn't care.

Please don't still the grill, Boll Weevil; you're the nearest thing to a What-A-Burger that a fellow can find. I'll never turn my back on you, and I am sure a lot of other mutagen freaks feel the same way.

I remember, without a trace of self-pity, the best steak I have ever eaten. It was strictly a matter of fortuity, as these things always are, that I swung into the Red Barn parking lot that evening in Odessa. The cook was on a hot streak, and the steak on which his hand fell was one in a million. I ordered it crunchy on the outside, and pink on the inside, and that's the way it came.

(Dr. Commomer, while sealing my doom, at the same time did me a bit of a favor. I always was anxious that a waiter or cook would miss my meaning of "crunchy." Now I can just order it "mutagen-rare," and be confident.)

Most of all, I need to encourage Phil Lorfing to carry on. Phil is the proprietor of the Lowake Inn, an old and unadorned roadhouse about midway between Ballinger and San Angelo, Texas, and a good six miles off the main highway, out there in the middle of the cotton fields.

Ah, the Lowake Inn; the mutagen capital of the world. What a way to go. There is a dirt airstrip directly across the road from the restaruant. People fly in from Dallas and Oklahoma City and Albuquerque. We Abilenians just drove down, a distance of 70 miles.

For $1.25, Phil will set before you a hamburger the size of the nosewheel off a Cessna. Rodney Allen Rippy couldn't lift it with a car jack, much less both hands.

But the place is known principally for its steaks. The extra-large T-bone crosses country lines. You can use the bones for the fence posts.

Phil cooks everything on a stainless-steel grill, so the juices don't get away. "I don't believe in burning up a steak over charcoal," he sniffs.

(Now, Dr. Comoner's only definitive statement thus far has concerned the grilling of hamburgers. But he speculates the same thing will happen with grilled steaks, and I tend to believe him, tra la.)

Last year, when we were in Abilene, we made the pilgrimage to Lowake. I had the large T-bone (approximately the diameter of a collegiate discus) and my wife had a rib-eye that appeared to weigh about a pound.

Primary reform subject of meet

By PETER KAYE
Copley News Service

MT. KISCO, N.Y. — At first the idea seemed absurd.

That journalists, campaign officials and political scientists could find common ground on which to recommend reform in our system of presidential primaries.

United only by their conviction that the present system needs some improvement, just such a group met recently at a conference sponsored by the American Assembly of Columbia University. The 30 participants included some journalists whose names are household words — John Chancellor of NBC, Daniel Schorr, formerly of CBS, R.W. Apple Jr. of the New York Times and David Broder of the Washington Post — and some (such as this writer) whose names are not.

There was a contingent of political scientists, eggheaded by James David Barber of Duke University and a smoke-filled roomful of politicians, such as Jean Westwood, former co-chairwoman of the Democratic National Committee, Mickey Kantor, who directed California Gov. Jerry Brown's presidential campaign, and Ben Wattenberg, a wheelhorse for President Johnson and Sens. Hubert Humphrey and Henry Jackson.

Out of this unlikely amalgam came a set of recommendations that could form the basis for streamlining the present ordeal of primaries, caucuses and state conventions.

The conclusion of the conference seemed to be that a little judicious tinkering, rather than a major overhaul, would be the best way to approach reform.

For instance, after much discussion it was agreed that the number of dates on which presidential primaries can be conducted should be reduced.

There was no attempt to set an actual number, although most agreed that five should be the maximum. At present, there are one or more primaries every week from early March until the first week in June.

By cutting down the number of primaries and thereby lengthening the interval between them, it was argued, that newspapers and networks could quit covering the campaign as a horse race and pay more attention to the qualifications of the candidates and their differences on issues.

Nor did the conferees try to set a starting date for the long primary process.

"After all," recalled one participant, "(Gov.) Mel Thompson has said New Hampshire will have the first primary even if he has to hold it between halves of the Rose Bowl game."

While roundly deplored by the academicians and politicians as unfair, untypical and unworthy of all the attention it gets, the New Hampshire primary was not dismissed quite so quickly by journalists.

Many had fond memories of tramping around the snow-covered countryside, extracting nuggets of information from the canny Yankee electorate. And, of course, there were the nights in front of a roaring fire in the Sheraton-Wayfarer lounge, lubricating memories of campaigns that stretch back beyond McGovern, McCloskey and McCarthy.

But even nostalgia had its day, and there was eventual agreement that if the Democratic and Republican national conventions recognized only delegates chosen on the designated primary days that New Hampshire's stranglehold on the first primary would be broken.

In reaching these recommendations, the conferees rejected the concept of regional primaries as artificial and of a national primary as favoring the candidates with the most money and resources. A somewhat facetious suggestion to do away with the national conventions was given equally short shrift.

One of the assumptions of the conference was that the mass media is gaining influence as the ability of political parties to screen candidates and influence voters is declining.

Realizing this, the journalists present were slow to recommend new laws and regulations that would make it more difficult for people to run for president.

At the same time, they readily accepted suggestions that would enhance their role as a conduit and interpreter of information from the candidates to the electorate.

These reccomendations form the basis of the American Assembly's final report. A preview of them shows the scope of the suggested solutions:

— Comparing candidates' positions on major issues rather than simply describing the positions of a single candidate.

— Rotating reporters among campaigns to guard against reporters acquiring vested interests in the success of one candidate. This is particularly serious among network correspondents who often see the White House beat as the path to fame and riches.

— Encouraging journalists most familiar with the candidates and their campaigns to express their judgments.

There are other recommendations too — some of interest only to reporters and their editors and others with broader ramifications.

The final report — 200,000 copies of it — will be distributed to congressmen, party officials, the media, academia and anyone who is interested.

There is no shortage of copies. A book of the position papers which provided the basis for the discussion will be published by Prentice-Hall. Chapters, prepared by the political scientists who attended the conference, examine the role of the press in the 1976 primaries and recommended reforms.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Spicy diet may help

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been bothered by bronchitis on and off for years. One of my friends at the office says she has heard that spicy foods are very helpful. It sounds pretty kooky, but she keeps telling me it works. Is this just health-nut stuff, do you think—T. K.

Dear T. K.: The notion that spicy food can help clear out the respiratory tract has been around for quite some time, as a bit of folk wisdom. But it was recently endorsed by a California lung specialist.

According to a report in "Medical World News," Dr. Irwin Ziment believes that a spicy diet stimulates secretions in the respiratory tract that help bring up sputum. He recommends gargling with Tabasco (about 10 drops in a glass of water), using horseradish on hamburgers, and helping yourself to plenty of garlic, chili mustard, and other hot condiments.

Dr. Ziment's own favorite is Szechuan Chinese food. That, he says, is a lung curer if there ever was one!

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a strange little puffy yellow patch at the edge of my eyelid. It is slightly raised and has been like that for quite some time—maybe six months. Is this anything ghastly?—F. T.

Dear F. T.: From your description of it, this puffy yellow patch might be what is called a xanthoma—indicating, perhaps, that something is wrong with your blood fats. Do check your doctor about it; he may want to give you a blood test. Incidentally, xanthomas do occur in other parts of the body as well.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Last week I was at the "Y" on Woman's Day, there was a lot of talk about TIAs, as they are called. I gather a TIA is some kind of warning sign of a stroke. Could you explain exactly what it is they do?—Evie M.

Dear Evie: A TIA is a transient ischemic attack—ischemic meaning that there is a lack of blood. TIAs are, in effect, minute strokes caused by a very brief obstruction in an artery feeding the brain. Symptoms can be a momentary impairment of speech or sight, or a temporary paralysis on one side of the body.

Any such symptoms should immediately be brought to the attention of your doctor, even if they clear up right away, because they can be an advace warning of a serious stroke. There a special tests which can be made to find out if any dangerous narrowing of the blood vessels leading to the brain itself has occurred. One way is to inject a dye into the blood and take X-rays—these can show up any abnormality.

If abnormalities are found, medicine may be used to prevent blood clotting. And in some cases, very delicate surgery is performed on an important artery called the carotid which goes up the side of the neck to the brain.

Girl offers same advice

By ROBERT WALLACE, Ed.D.
Copley News Service

Dear Dr. Wallace: I would like all young teen-age girls who are planning to get married to read this.

When I was 14, I was in love with a guy 19. We wanted to get married when I was 15 or 16. My parents liked him but said I was too young and hadn't met enough guys to know who I really wanted. We decided to wait until I was 18.

Well, to make a long story short, I am now 21, a junior in college, and am engaged to a young attorney. I hardly remember the 19-year-old guy I was so in love with.

Things look so much different when you are 14. Think before you leap. I did, and I'm so happy I waited. — Barbara, Gastonia, N.C.

Dear Barbara: Thanks for your helpful letter. I would agree with you totally, but somehow it means a little bit more when it comes from a teen who has "been there."

Dear Dr. Wallace: I am a 19-year-old sophomore in college. My problem is a girl who lives at home. She is only 14, but for some reason I love her more than anyone or anything else in the world.

My first question is, do I ever have a chance of this girl loving me, or is she too young for me? Everyone keeps saying, "Wait a few years and she will then be old enough to like you.'.

Second, do you have any advice on how I can get a new hold on my life? My whole life is this girl. I am considering dropping out of school and going home to be with her. Nothing else in my life means anything; all I care about is this girl, even though I know it will be a few years before I can have her seriously love me.

Any advice on how to solve my problem would be appreciated. And, I hope you do not suggest giving her up, because I will never be able to do that. — M.E., Columbus, Ohio

Dear M.E.: Read Barbara's letter. It should give you some insight.

Dear Dr. Wallace: I am a girl in the 8th grade. My best girlfriend and I both like the same boy who happens to be very cute and nice.

I like him very much but I'm afraid that if he likes me, my girlfriend will hate me and our friendship will end.

I don't want that to happen, but I really like the boy. What should I do? — B.C., Sacramento, Calif.

Dear B.C.: You are learning a good lesson about the American spirit of competition at an early age.

What should you do? Well, I'll tell you what you probably want to hear. If this cute boy likes you and you like this cute boy, and your girlfriend hates you because of it, your girlfriend has just lost you as a good friend.

Fence-mending aim behind White House breakfasts

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — When Neale V. Chaney showed up at the White House early one morning three weeks ago, among the first things he noticed were the doughnuts and coffee on a table. For a moment, he feared that was all there was going to be to the breakfast he had been promised.

"I had heard that White House breakfasts were skimpy," Chaney recalled recently. "But they ended up serving us scrambled eggs and bacon."

They are trying to serve scrambled eggs and bacon more often these days in the White House, where the decline in President Carter's popularity has set in motion political fence-mending operation, beginning with Democratic Party officials like Chaney.

Chaney, the Democratic state chairman in Washington, is an experienced and savvy political professional. And, like many of his fellow state chairmen, he has felt ignored, and at times abused, throughout the first 15 months or so of dealing with the Carter White House.

"It's been a painful thing for the party," he said.

To ease the pain and begin to repair the damage, White House officials invited every Democratic state party chairman in the country to a series of breakfasts in the White House mess.

These are the same people who a senior White House official referred to collectively last year as "a bunch of a—who aren't interested in anything except patronage. We don't need them."

At the first breakfast, held three weeks ago, Chaney and eight other chairmen, each of whom could bring a guest, heard Office of Management and Budget Director James T. McIntyre Jr. discuss the federal budget. They were able to put questions, and complaints to press secretary Jody Powell and political adviser Hamilton Jordan. They heard from Anne Wexler, the new public liaison chief in the White House, and Simon Lazarus of the domestic policy staff, who talked about civil service reform.

The White House breakfasts for state chairmen continued every week, with the last one held last Thursday, coinciding with a meeting of the Democratic National Committee in Washington. At its two-day session here, the committee passed a resolution thanking Carter for arranging the breakfasts.

The breakfasts were the brainchild of Tim Kraft, recently promoted to the White House senior staff and assigned the task of reviving the more traditional political operations of the White House.

Kraft, 37, was a key Carter political operative in the early 1976 primaries and directed the Carter field operations during the general election campaign. He was rewarded with the job of appointments secretary to the president, a position that placed him constantly at Carter's side but left little time to influence White House political decisions.

But, as a result of the White House staff reorganization instituted by Jordan, Kraft was promoted to the senior saff and was given some of the day-to-day duties previously handled by Jordan, specifically political duties. In effect, he is the first full-time political operative in the Carter White House.

In one of his first moves, Kraft hired Joel McCleary, the former Democratic Party treasurer, to be his deputy. He has also begun consulting with a variety of experienced party professionals about the president's political problems.

By themselves, the breakfasts for the state chairmen are no big deal. But in a White House that for more than a year has seemed aloof, if not antagonistic, toward such symbols of traditional party politics as the state chairmen, they represented something of a breakthrough.

"There was a slow realization that dawned on several of us that we were not using the full political resources of the administration," Kraft said.

Author finds codebreaking intriguing

By MYRA MacPHERSON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — "Well, I think the ultimate real fascination is a psycho-sexual one.

Author David Kahn is venturing this psychological interpretation of people who enjoy breaking codes. "Codebreaking is a voyeuristic impulse. But just remember, all reporters would fall under this great rubric, too. You shouldn't overdo it too much. You could say that all surgeons are sadists as well."

What kind of person wouldn't enjoy learning other people's secrets?

"Airline pilots. I suppose they aren't they type to care about those kinds of things." Kahn then shrugs the boundless curbstone Freudian possibilities to an end, "It's all so sublimated, really."

And that's the way it is talking with Kahn, author of "The Codebreakers" and "Hitler's Spies," slim, wiry man (5'6") who has a reporter's darting interest in a variety of topics. Kahn is both a serious historian and purveyor, at times, of glib but interesting generalizations. In the end he kisses them off — he doesn't take himself or his views all that seriously.

His books — a mix of the anecdotal, massive research and impressive analysis — are much like Kahn. The ex-newspaperman-turned-scholar's idea of fun is rummaging around the National Archives or learning German for his book research — or, winning at tennis or "rotting away" on some beach.

He seems content drinking white wine, as he sits neatly packaged in a navy pinstripe, in a corner of a Washington restaurant, flacking his second book, "Hitler's Spies." In the age of hyper-hype, Kahn, 48, knows it is not enough to write the book; you have to be a song-and-dance man as well.

A decade ago, he laced the heavy material in "The Codebreakers" with fascinating asides — from Plutarch to pig latin ("You have to! After all, everything you write is to be read and you have to see that they'll read the damn thing"). Such spoon-feeding of fact after fact produced the nearly impossible — a thousand-page tome on a subject hardly destined to titillate, became a best seller (750,000 in hardback). It is a history of cryptology and the effect of code and cyphers on a man through the ages.

Kahn thinks he was appealing to the voyeuristic codebreaker of a 12-year-old that lurks in most of us.

Kahn feels that everyone, at some time, has had some experience with the simplest forms of codes. "You know — 'A' becomes 'Z' and 'B' is 'Y.' That's probably the simplest." Computers and advances in mathematical theory have changed the science of codemaking and breaking — in favor of the codemaker. "Basically the computers to make them are ahead of the ones to break them. Now, for example, with computers you can double the number of combinations in a code — say from 100 to 200. In so doing, you square the number of trials that a codebreaker has to make. So therefore, where the codemaker goes from 100 to 200 combinations, the code-breaker has to go from 100 to 10,000."

WHEN Kahn was 12, he was walking past the public library in Great Neck, L.I., and "stopped in my tracks when I saw this book about codes with this terrific title, 'Secret and Urgent.' It hooked me — and I never grew up."

Kahn progressed from writing boyhood codes to president of the 1,000-member worldwide American Cryptogram Association, a group that gets its kicks out of breaking each other's codes. "I think it's a bit childish now. I never was very good at breaking codes."

Kahn says the best cryptologists are mathematicians and musicians who have an innate feeling for the repetitions and rhythms of codes. "After Pearl Harbor, the USS California was sunk and they had this band aboard this battleship which, obviously, had no place to go. They brought the band in to help with codebreaking and all of them were good, some outstanding. The greatest World War I codebreaker was a prize-winning French cellist."

Kahn began as a reporter on the Bucknell University newspaper, then went to Newsday and the International Herald Tribune.

He was disqualified from the Korean War because his eyes were 4-F — a fact disguised by contact lenses covering gray-green eyes.

Kahn quit newspapers to write the "Codebreakers." It took him "only" three years. "Hitler's Spies" took eight. One difference is that he was unmarried for the first book. "My wife will kill me, but it's true. I simply could work around the clock before I got married."

His first and only marriage came at age 39. Kahn met his Viennese wife while she was visiting America and he was "the just-published author shieking it up in my 77th Street (Manhattan) bachelor pad.

"I had determined this was the girl I was going to marry — when I finally decided to settle down. When I went to Europe to start my research on 'Hitler's Spies,' I called her and she said, 'Listen, I'm getting married in six weeks and I'd like you to come to the wedding.' So I realized drastic action was in order, instantly I flew to Vienna and proposed. We lived happily ever since." The other fellow? "He's still living it up in Vienna." The Kahns have two sons, Oliver, 8, and Michael, 2.

Kahn's wife helped him with his interviews with 100 Germans, about 10 of whom were high-level Nazis. The interviews fleshed out the mountain of documents he plowed through about Hitler's intelligence machine — including some asides on their sex lives. "There was this Prussian general staff officer who was living with this goregous blond and it apparently affected his work. He was tired every morning," recalls Kahn. "He got kicked out of his office."

Kahn found that "everybody was willing to talk, but before they would tell you what you wanted to know they had to tell how they didn't like Hitler . . . and how they saved a few Jews or served on the Russian front. Nobody ever fought the Americans — whom they 'loved.' Kahn says this with raised-eyebrow sarcasm. His greatest surprise was to find out that Hitler's spies behaved like the gang that couldn't shoot straight.

Hilary paddles to top in rackets

By ELSON IRWIN
Copley News Service

She doesn't come in and bowl you over. Not that she isn't pretty. She certainly is that.

She could, if she wanted to, go Hollywood. She's made a few commercials and agents are continually courting her. She is a bit of a feminist, but she doesn't use a hammer to pound out a point.

She uses a racket. Several different rackets. Her name is Hilary Hilton, queen of the racket sports.

Even though she is from Pacific Palisades, Calif., she is not well-known on the West Coast. She is much better known where platform tennis is played, and that's in the East or Middle West.

Hilary, 27, a blue-eyed blonde, is the first woman to participate in racquetball contests against male superstars. She did participate in the women's version of "Superstars" a couple of years ago.

"I held my own in sports which required hand and eye coordination," she said. "I am not particularly good at leg-oriented sports.

"I don't feel uneasy about going against the men at all," she said. "It seems I have been competing against men all my life — my father and two brothers — and I have an autographed dollar bill to show that I once beat Bobby Riggs in paddle tennis."

Larry Wayne Gifford weds Cecilia Bales

SEAGRAVES—Cecilia Faye Bales and Larry Wayne Gifford, both of Lubbock, repeated double ring wedding vows at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in the First United Methodist Church here.

The Rev. Wilbur Gaede officiated the vows.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Bales of Seminole. Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Gifford of 1801 Ward St. in Midland are parents of the bridegroom.

Maid of honor was Jeanee Harms of Austin, and bridesmaids were Jautaun Williams of Seagraves and Jan Roy of Lubbock.

Best man was Bobby Greenfield of Lubbock. Sammy Pugh of Levelland and Joseph Williams of Seagraves seated the guests, and Danny Campbell and Richard Bolding, both of Midland, were groomsmen.

The bride, presented in marriage by her father, wore a gown fashioned of chiffon and re-embroidered Alencon lace veiled over peau de soie. The gown featured a high ring collar, long, fitted sleeves and a pyramid skirt. Lace formed the Empire bodice and unpressed pleats swept to a wide chapel train. The matinee-length veil of chiffon cascaded from a lace calot.

After a wedding trip to Arkansas, the couple will be at home in Lubbock at 2512A 74th St.

The bride attended West Texas State University and South Plains College. She is employed in sales at Margaret's of Lubbock.

The bridegroom, an insurance salesman, attended Texas Tech University and The University of Texas at Austin.

Mrs. Larry Wayne Gifford

ATLANTA, Ga.—Christine Morgan Parson of Decatur recently married Charles Duncan McMillan here.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is probably just like a million other letters you've received from women who have had affairs with married men. But this one contains a piece of advice that hasn't been emphasized nearly enough.

Last year I started seeing an absolutely fantastic guy from work. I knew he was married, but we played it cool and thought we could handle it. It was terrific while it lasted, but it had to come to an end. (The old story: We got too serious. He didn't want to hurt his wife and kids. Then he got "noble" and told me he couldn't allow me to invest any more time in a man who couldn't marry me.)

I'm not blaming anybody but myself. I'm a mature woman and should have known better. The moral to this story is: If you MUST have an affair, don't choose someone you will see at work every day. When it's over, the daily contact is torture.—STILL HURTING

DEAR STILL: You seem to have overlooked another "moral" or two: "Thou shalt not commit adultery" and "Thou shalt not steal."

DEAR Abby: For the man who promised his wife on her deathbed that he would never marry again, and then broke his promise and felt guilty, I urge him to heed these wise and lovely words from the Talmud:

"Man shall be called to account for all the permitted pleasures he failed to enjoy."

Sign me. . ."IN LOVE AT 60 IN BURBANK"

DEAR IN LOVE: I knew about the "sins of omission," but that a person shall be called to account for all the permitted pleasures he failed to enjoy is joyous news indeed!

Scoop! ice cream makes every day a sundae

By MIRIAM CURRY
Nutrition consultant, Dairy Council, Inc., of Midland

Yes, there is still one certainty in an uncertain world. It cuts across regional boundaries and has no respect for age or sex. It's called ice cream and almost everyone gets in his licks in the summertime.

The history of ice cream is, as might be expected, a rich and flavorful one. Many sources give credit to Alexander the Great (who named the concoction, an iced drink, "macedoine" after himself) and the Roman Emperor Nero (who sent his slaves out for snow and ice to freeze his favorite fruit drinks). Though these two are the fathers of the modern popsicle, ice cream was founded (invented?) by a mysterious 17th century French chef known as De Marco, who first created a frozen dessert of ice cream for a state banquet of England's Charles I. The king and his guests were so delighted that he demanded the recipe be kept forever a secret and paid De Marco 500 pounds sterling to keep his lips sealed. When Charles was beheaded in 1649, the secret leaked from the royal table.

Within 11 years De Marco's famous product was being manufactured in a Paris cafe, and by the turn of the century it had journeyed to America. George Washington even had his own machine for making ice cream. But not until someone remembered to add salt to lower the freezing temperature, and not until the hand cranked freezer was invented in 1846 did ice cream come into its own.

In 1904, the ice cream cone was introduced at the St. Louis World Fair when an ice cream concessionaire ran out of dishes and a nearby vendor from Damascus, Earnest A. Hamwi, helped him out. Hamwi sold a product called zslabia, a thin wafer-like pastry baked on a flat waffle iron and served with sweets. When the ice cream vendor's dish supply was exhausted, Hamwi rolled one of his wafers into the shape of a cornucopia and filled it with a scoop of ice cream. Customer reaction was spontaneous and the ice cream cone was born.

There was once a time when you couldn't sell ice cream soda on Sunday. To get around this law, one enterprising ice cream shop simply omitted the soda water, left the fruit on the ice cream, and the Sunday soda was the result. Today you can enjoy sundaes any day, Sundays included.

Since June is Dairy Month, what better time to try your hand at cranking out some old-fashioned homemade ice cream? Then top it off with a dazzling array of fruits and/or sauces. Since the three most popular flavors of ice cream in America are vanilla, chocolate, and strawberry, in that order, why not start with them as a basis, and invent your own variations. Orange sherbet is America's number one favorite sherbet.

Trunks provide storage space

By CAROL EICHEN
Copley News Service

The perennial problem for most apartment dwellers is lack of storage space. Things may fit when you first move in, but what do you do with all of the possessions you begin to accummulate?

One solution comes from our ancestors who put all of their worldly possessions into one large trunk and moved from homestead to homestead. Because of the heavy construction of these trunks, some of them are still around to help solve our problems in the 1970s.

Now, with restoration and a custom-painted exterior, grandma's old trunk can play a functional part in your apartment. Trunks have become attractive decorative accessories as well as convenient storage chests.

Check your own family's attic to see if there is an old trunk stored in a long forgotten corner. If not, it's a fun project to search the second-hand stores, swap meets and antique shops in search of one of these old treasures.

AT WIT'S END

She can back car like a Batmobile

By ERMA BOMBECK

Did you read the story about the man in Connecticut who commended the police radar squad for ticketing his wife for speeding? His letter read in part: "Last Saturday, you stopped my wife and issued her a citation for going 66 mph in a 55 mph zone. Unfortunately, she inherited a genetic mutation from both her parents that has not been overcome until our meeting with you...that is, a lead foot!

"After we left you, we continued to Milford at a pace which I considered gratifying and pleasant. I actually saw the state in its clear form and not as a blur."

Frankly, if it had been my husband who wrote that note, he would have been lucky to riding at all. One word and I'd have used him for a hood ornament.

It's amazing how simple it is to serve up justice when you're the waiter and not the customer. That whole dreary story reminded me of an incident a few years back when I put my car in reverse one afternoon and prepared to leave a parking spot at the hospital where I had been visiting a friend.

Without any warning, the parked car on my left jumped right in front of my right fender. Within 30 seconds, there were 15 people, two barking dogs, and a policeman with the warmth of Pontius Pilate taking down my statement.

"I saw the entire thing, officer," said a man. "She threw the car in reverse and without so much as checking the rear view mirror or rolling down her window she backed out of there like a Batmobile."

"Did she attempt to leave a note on the windshield?" asked the officer.

"She said she didn't have a pencil. In that handbag she can barely lifet, she said she didn't have a pencil."

"How close would you say she was parked to the car that was struck?"

"She couldn't have gotten a gum wrapper between them."

"May I have yur name, sir?"

"Sure, she's my wife."

The meetings of genetic mutations are always interesting. But none quite so sweet to contemplate as my lead foot making contact with his lead bottom.

Substitute fruits for sugar

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Parents have a fresh solution to the breakfast-time dilemma—how to provide a nutritious meal without lots of refined sugar. Fresh fruits are the answer. The United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Association suggests a few ways to increase the nutritional benefits at the breakfast table.

Brighten up the morning with delicious and eye-appealing fresh fruit. Slice a fresh banana or fresh peach, plum or nectarine on whole grain cereals. The sweet fruit taste sparks up the cereal naturally and adds important vitamins and minerals to the daily diet. For delectable variations, sprinkle juicy berries or freshly shredded coconut on cereal. There's little reason to dip into the sugar bowl when the flavor of fresh fruit adorns the cereal. Experiment with a wide variety of colorful cereal toppings, including fresh strawberries, blueberries, cherries and others.

Children who crave the flavor of melons will enjoy this mouth-watering change of pace. Add some crunchy cereal to a scooped out melon half. Melons are good sources of Vitamins A and C which are necessary for maintaining healthy tissues.

As the melon season is here again, here are some tips for selecting sweet and juicy cantaloupes. Melons should be completely covered with a creamy-colored netting—a large slick or smooth area is not desirable. Choose those without a trace of a stem. This is known as the "full slip" condition which means it was picked at the right time. Press the melon gently to make sure it "gives."

Life in Mozambique one of desperate struggle

By FRANK T. MARTIN
Copley News Service

MAPUTO, Mozambique — On June 25, this country will celebrate its third anniversary of independence.

It has been a rough three years.

Since the Portuguese turned over the government of this, one of its last African colonial territories, Mozambique's economy has slid downhill.

Much of the problem lies with the exodus of almost 80 percent of its skilled Portuguese labor — technicians scared of takeover by a Marxist-bent black government.

Today, no hot water runs from the hot water taps and often not even cold does. The towels have holes, as do the rugs, sheets and pillowcases. Doors to the balconies are warped and paint is peeling everywhere.

Chandeliers in the ballroom still sparkle, but many of the lights are out as they are all over the city. Neon lights still flash but only half the signs are lit.

There is chaos. Hotel guests never turn in their keys — too many have returned later in the day only to find another guest registered into their room.

Hotel prices don't match the hotel's style. A double suite — two rooms with one bath — costs $50 a night and a single is about $20.

One of the country's greatest problems is food and even the Polana Hotel can't pull its weight in that realm. Breakfast, lunch and dinner you are offered just one menu and much of that — such as the breakfast cereal or fruit course — is not available.

By the end of a weekend, the hotel has run out of all beverages, except for coffee and rancid-tasting beer which comes in unmarked bottles.

One U.S. businessman, who was registered in the hotel almost two weeks, found eggs to be his only fare several days in a row. Finally, pork was offered.

When he lifted the top piece of pork, he found, to his amazement, the rear end of a piglet, tail intact. He tried again at the other end of the slices and pulled up the piglet's mouth with two teeth sticking up.

"Obviously, the chef thought you must cut up the whole thing," he said, still with a sense of humor.

Still, this meal might be palatable compared to what is available in the rest of the country.

Western businessmen say food shortages get worse the further north one travels. One American salesman ate only rice and eggs for a week in northern hotels.

Even late on a Saturday night, people stand by the dozens waiting to get into Maputo food stores. Little meat is available. What appears occasionally in restaurants is brought in from South Africa, Mozambique's southwestern neighbor, in unmarked trucks.

To Mozambique, South Africa is essential, despite that country's racial apartheid policies. For the Mozambiquians, it is a relationship of necessity. For the South Africans, it is one of hedging bets.

South Africans are said to be running the Maputo harbor — often filled with Eastern bloc ships — and the railroad, which virtually was shut down after its Portuguese managers left.

South Africa supplies the bulk of Mozambique's hard currency earnings by remitting in gold the wages of the 40,000 Mozambique miners at work in South African gold mines. (The number has dropped from 100,000 workers at independence, mainly because of an immigrant cutback by South Africa.)

Sixty percent of the wages are withheld and sent to the Mozambique government in the form of gold at the official rate of $42 an ounce. The government then markets the gold at several times the official rate, providing workers with the equivalent of $42 per ounce in escudoes on their return home and retaining the difference.

Maputo used to be Southern Africa's prime nightlife and beach capital — particularly for the South Africans who flocked there by the thousands seeking diversion from their staid, Calvinistic mores.

Tourists aren't let in now, and there is a sense of unease in Maputo. Soldiers dressed in fatigues are stationed on every corner downtown grasping Russian-made carbines.

Still, Maputo's hotels are filled — much more than they were a year ago, one diplomat observed.

Part of the bustle is generated from the scores of Cuban and Eastern bloc technicians and advisers in the city — many of whom stay at the Polana. A glance at the hotel's registry showed a predominance of Cubans and East Germans, but also a number of Bulgarian and Russian guests.

There also were many Italian and French leftists, several Western businessmen, as well as a number of Swedes. Western observers say the Swedish government recently completed a loan of about $25 million to the Mozambique government.

There is talk the money will help pay for the several hundred tanks Western businessmen report seeing in the north of the country.

(There has been a recent buildup of 300 Cuban troops, 250 Russian tanks and 35 MiG-21 jets, plus Soviet-made Sam missiles, according to other Western intelligence sources.)

The arms are likely to be directed at Rhodesia. Black guerrilla forces have used Mozambique for training grounds and as camps for incursions into Rhodesia. But the arms cause great unease in South Africa, as well, which fears it may be the next target.

Much of this attention to military has been to the detriment of an economy already in a shambles. Everywhere stores are boarded up and half-constructed high rises, abandoned at independence, remain empty.

In the marketplace, one shopkeeper begs desperately to change Mozambique escudoes for South African rand. What is offered is four times the official rate, showing how overvalued the currency is.

One of the first acts of the government of Mozambique, President Samora Machel was to nationalize all health, legal, education and funeral services, as well as all rented commercial and private buildings.

Foreign property owners, out of the country more than 90 days, lost all property rights. Portuguese residing in Mozambique were pressured to choose citizenship or get out.

One of the government's policies has been to set up "groupos dinamizadores" — dynamizing groups — in neighborhoods, villages and work places. They serve multiple purposes, from political education to implementing party directives to keeping streets clean.

Businesses are run by worker dynamizing groups. In one factory, a former supervisor had been invited to Brazil — all expenses paid — to learn a new manufacturing technique sorely needed by his factory. The workers voted it down. It wasn't until the minister of agriculture personally intervened and overruled them that he could be sent.

Some of Mozambique's problems were Portuguese instigated. One is the development of the country.

The government's 2,000 miles of railroad and four ports developed by th Portuguese were designed to serve large sections of central and southern Africa — not Mozambique.

There is no internal north-south links for the railroad, for instance. Rail traffic between Maputo, in the southern part of the country, and Beira in the middle (formerly the port used by Rhodesia), is nonexistent. Rail cars used to have to transit into Rhodesia from Maputo to get to Beira. But the border with Rhodesia has been shut for two years.

Many of the nine million Mozambiquians in this 1,700-mile coastal country live only at a subsistence level. In Maputo, they crowd into squatter villages. Their huts are made of mud, corrogated metal and pieces of tin and cardboard. There are no sewage facilities nor water except for wells every quarter of a mile.

It is a common sight in Mozambique to see women dressed literally in rags walking for miles, barefoot, with babies tied to their backs and parcels balanced delicately on their heads — headed to or from town.

'Diplomaticos' visit Mozambique

Copley News Service

MAPUTO, Mozambique — We weren't supposed to be there.

We had no visas and since Mozambique's independence three years ago, tourists aren't let in. Even diplomats and financiers with legitimate business have hard times entering this former Portuguese colony-turned-black Marxist government.

We were to visit Kruger National Park, sometimes called South Africa's buffer zone with Mozambique. When we got to the entrance, it was flooded. That meant several more hours of driving to another gate.

Mozambique was five minutes away. We decided to drive to the border and take a picture.

It wasn't that simple. We were required to check through the South African border station, drive a quarter of a mile through a no-man's-land until we reached Mozambique's border post.

Once there we weren't about to say we just were kidding around. Anyway, no one spoke English — only Portuguese.

My friend had a diplomatic passport listing an accompanying individual. We gave it to the border official. The worst that could happen we figured was that he'd eject us.

"Diplomatico?" he asked. "Si," we answered. To our amazement, he waved us on.

We had gone only three miles along a wide four-lane road with no cars, but mounds of cow dung, when we spotted a green Fiat 500 with blinking lights rapidly coming up on our rear.

We pulled over. Our lark was finished, we guessed.

Not so. We simply had forgotten to get car insurance and change money, the official in the Fiat explained in his few English words.

Once accomplished, there was no turning back.

We had driven only 10 miles when we were stopped again. This time by six soldiers dressed in fatigues with automatic Soviet-made carbines.

No one spoke English. Through a series of hand motions, we were told to empty the car of our meager luggage — two overnight bags and a pair of binoculars carried along for game watching. These brought quizzical looks.

"Diplomatico?" they asked. "Si," we answered, certain we would be asked for visas. But, again, we were motioned on.

We drove for miles. The road narrowed to two lanes.

It was absolutely deserted, except for occasional cows. The capital of Maputo was 100 miles from the Komatipoort border station.

Ten miles outside of Maputo we were stopped. Again, the car was searched, no visa was demanded and we were waved on. We soon were in the capital.

This was Saturday evening.

We were not bothered until Monday, when after a quiet weekend, we left rather uneasy as dozens of soldiers with carbines were stationed on every downtown corner.

This time we headed to Swaziland. We had less than a tank of gas and little chance of getting much in Maputo as most of the gas stations had shut down after independence. We weren't worried. It was only 70 miles to the Lomahasa border post.

We were stopped twice. By now, the checks were pro forma. There was not even a search of the car once the diplomatic passport was produced.

We drove to the border station and went inside relaxed. Mozambique's relations with Swaziland are touchy but far friendlier than with South Africa. There would be no problems, we were convinced.

Non-military Cubans accepted well in Africa

By DAVID LAMB
The Los Angeles Times

NAIROBI, Kenya — When an American diplomat with a cut foot hobbled into a West African hospital for treatment not long ago, the young doctor who greeted him and stitched him was a Cuban.

"It was more like butchery than surgery," the diplomat in Guinea-Bissau said. "But when you're in a place with practically no doctors, you're glad to find anyone who can take care of you."

The doctor — who probably was actually only a medical technician — was one of a dozen Cubans providing health care in the former Portuguese colony, whose educated elite includes only about 20 university graduates and no doctors.

He also was one of the Cubans about whom the U.S. State Department — and even Africa itself — talk very little.

These are the estimated 7,000 Cuban civilians in Africa who serve as teachers, doctors, agricultural specialists, government administrators and technicians.

Their work has been vastly overshadowed by Cuba's military adventurism, particularly in Angola and Fidel Castro is not building all his African bridges with guns.

Precise figures are not available in Nairobi but Western intelligence sources estimate that 700 Cuban doctors and medical aides serve voluntarily in Africa. In Angola alone, there are about 700 Cuban teachers, and the Ethiopian strong man, Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam, sent his three children to Havana earlier this year to join thousands of other younger Africans there for schooling.

In Mozambique, Cuban civilians are working on sugar plantations. In Tanzania, an estimated 350 Cubans are involved with rural construction and agricultural projects and in Ethiopia they are teaching in secondary schools. In Cape Verde and in Sao Tome and Principe they are providing most of the health care.

Outside Luanda, the Angolan capital, a sign left by Cuban construction workers on a recently built bridge reads: "We'll get the bridges built even if it means our blood being mixed with the cement."

According to diplomatic sources, the Cuban presence is most apparent in Angola, where Castro has about 20,000 soldiers and 3,000 civilians. They are serving in virtually every level of government. In effect, they run the country.

But elsewhere in Africa, the Cubans, like the Chinese, maintain a low profile. They sip beer on the porch of the Grande hotel in Bissau, the capital of Guinea-Bissau, gather in small numbers at the Victory department store in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and stop occasionally for coffee in the cafes of Maputo, Mozambique. Many are stationed in the rural areas and when they are seen in the cities they are usually unobtrusive and well-behaved, observers say.

"I am not sure there is a single Cuban on the African continent who has not been invited by some member of the continent," Zambia's moderate president, Kenneth Kaunda, said in Washington last month.

"So long as this is the case, it is not easy to condemn their presence."

His comments underscore Africa's public acceptance of the Cuban presence as long as it does not represent an offensive stance against any sovereign state. Generally Africa believes that Cuba does not seek any economic or military gain and is here only in the name of ideology.

"The Yankee imperialists say that the Cuban comrades come to exploit Angola," the prime minister of Marxist Angola, Lopo do Nascimento, said last year.

"But Cuba has no concessions in Angola — no oil, no mines, no forests. They come here with clean hands. The Americans have concessions (oil) in our country, not the Cubans. The Cubans don't have them and never will.

"They will return to their land one day when we decide so, the same way they came, as friends of our people without dollars in their pockets." the Angolan leader said.

Castro's interest in Africa is not new. As far back as 1959, the year of hs revolution, he sent medical teams and even arms to Algeria, the Congo and Guinea. In 1966, he began overt assistance to a revolutionary movement in Guinea and he became influential with President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana. When Nkrumah was overthrown in 1966, the Cubans were expelled from Ghana. Zaire expelled Cubans in 1968 for allegedly meddling in its internal affairs.

The major Cuban military commitment on the continent began when 15,000 Cuban troops helped a Marxist faction win the Angolan civil war in 1975 and assume control of the government.

Cuba today has about 40,000 soldiers and civilians in 14 black African nations, the State Department says. It has diplomatic relations with 33 of Africa's 50 nations and ha embassies in 19 of them.

Castro has said that he wants to normalize relations with the United States — but not at the price of withdrawing from Africa. "We don't ask that you pull your troops out of the Phillippines, Korea or Western Europe," he told a group of visiting U.S. agricultural experts in Havana.

Gray case said good

By RONALD J. OSTROW
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Justice Department prosecutors conceded Tuesday they lack evidence that former FBI Director L. Patrick Gray III knew the details of FBI break-ins but said their case against him is as strong as that against the two other ex-FBI officials.

The claim of a strong case against Gray came as prosecutors filed responses in federal court to pretrial motions by Gray and two former subordinates who have admitted approving break-ins, W. Mark Felt and Edward S. Miller.

A federal grand jury indicted Gray, Felt and Miller April 10 on charges of conspiring to violate citizens' rights by ordering "surreptitious entries" by the FBI to locate fugitive members of the Weatherman terrorist organization. It was the first time that men responsible for running the FBI had been charged with any crimes.

The Tuesday filings underscored the split in defense positions being taken by Gray on one side and Felt and Miller on the other.

But the prosecutors argued against Gray's request to be tried separately. They contended it is inaccurate to say, as Gray's lawyers did, that there is a "gross disparity in the weight of the evidence and that the far more damaging proof is that against Felt and Miller."

Felt and Miller, the prosecutors told the court, admit that they approved a number of break-ins, "but claim that they do so in accordance with defendant Gray's generic approval."

The prosecutors challenged "as a matter of law" the claim that such generic approval constituted a defense for Felt and Miller.

Gray, on the other hand, denies having given "his generic approval of FBI utilization of the technique of surreptitious entry and search" at homes of friends and relatives of Weatherman fugitives, the prosecutors said.

Cubans may agree to swap agent

By JOHN M. GOSHKO
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In the midst of the increasing tensions in U.S.-Cuban relations, Cuba secretly has offered to exchange an American agent imprisoned in Havana for a Puerto Rican woman convicted of a 1954 terrorist attack on the U.S. Congress.

Carter administration sources said this week the Cuban proposal, which was relayed to Washington by an East German lawyer, would involve the swap of Lawrence K. Lunt, an American held by the Cubans since 1965, for Lolita LeBron, who is serving a 25-to-75-year U.S. prison term.

Events illuminate dark side of contemporary Britain

The Washington Post

LONDON — With some justice, Britons believe they inhabit a tolerant, humane and civilized society. But two events this week — Amnesty International's charge of police brutality in Ulster and Sunday's assault by a white mob on Asian immigrants in London's East End — point to a darker side that Britons would prefer not to know.

Prime Minister James Callaghan's govenment, ever sensitive to the voters' mood, has taken pains to play down both occurrences and carefully refrained from sounding any alarms.

Amnesty's report, published Tuesday but leaked to the press last week, is a well-documented account of what appers to be the systematic use of force by police in Northern Ireland to extract confessions from terrorist suspects. The government has rejected Amnesty's proposal for a public inquiry but will appoint its own man to look into the charges behind closed doors.

Since Roy Mason, the minister in charge of Ulster, frequently boasts of the success of his police, there is considerable skepticism about the outcome of this investigation.

In private, Mason would probably say, "Results count and I get them." It is true that nearly every person now charged with a terrorist offense in Northern Ireland is found guilty by the special one-judge, no-jury courts there. In most cases, moreover, the convictions rest largely on confessions.

The outcome, Mason would say, is a sharply reduced level of violence by the Provisional Irish Republican Army. Two years ago, there were four killings every five days; now there is one. The bombing rate of two a day has been cut in half. Violence in Ulster has all but disappeared from the front pages in the rest of Britain.

Indeed, Mason could find no stronger testimonial than that of his onetime arch-enemy, Seasmus Twomey, the ex-bookie who ran the Provisional Irish Republican Army until police in the Irish Republic caught up with him.

Early in the week, Twomey was on trial in Dublin again and the police read a "staff report" he had written to reorganize the IRA. It said that Ulster police were "breaking voluteers" with their interrogation, and the IRA must somehow imbue them with more "psychological strength."

Throughtful observers in Britain and Ulster wonder, however, whether Mason is making short-term gains and incurring long-term losses. There are fears that the reputed methods of his police are seriously alienating Ulster's half million Catholics and even some Protestants, a fraction of whom also fall into police hands.

The tough tactics have no doubt crippled the IRA's "trained" soldiers. But it is unknown how many new ones are recruited as word of the alleged abuses spreads.

The tactics raise questions for the rest of Britain. If allegedly brutal police methods are thought to pay off in Ulster, won't police elsewhere be tempted to copy the techniques?

Callaghan, however, is convinced that Mason has made the best of a tough job. He has pleased most of the 10 Ulster Protestant members of Parliament, and many frequently vote with the government. This is no small blessing to a minority government.

Indeed, Labor's lack of a majority also accounts in part for the tepid response to Sunday's racial outbreak. The white youths who stormed Brick Lane with clubs and bottles, crying, "kill the black bastards," mostly come from the public high-rise complexes that vote ovewhelmingly Labor.

There is little doubt that Callaghan and virtually every other Labor member of Parliament detest racism as a moral outrage. But there is equally little doubt that Labor politicians fear they will lose some of their traditional supporters over the race issue.

The Tory leader, Margaret Thatcher, is making a powerful bid for the alienated public housing voter by her stern denunciation of nonwhite immigration.

So after the Sunday rampage, the government declined even to make a public statement. Callaghan's home secretary and political confidant, Merlyn Rees, quietly called for a report from the police.

Minority government has been widely praised here as a guarantee aginst extremism. If Labor controls less than half the House of Commons, the argument runs, its ideological left must behave and give a free hand to centrist like Callaghan. Similarly, it is said, a minority tory government will squelch its ideological right and hew to roughly the same center line.

But it is now evident that there are costs as well as benefits from minority rule. One might well be the premium it places on quick and easy answers and the weakening of values that Britons have taken for granted.

Woman surrenders in welfare fraud

By YARDENA ARAR

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A woman who allegedly collected $240,000 in welfare overpayments by claiming to have 47 children surrendered to authorities Wednesday.

Authorities said Barbara Jean Thompson, 33, was being booked by police in suburban Compton and would be arraigned later on charges stemming from what county welfare officials described as perhaps the biggest welfare fraud in history.

Welfare fraud investigator Joan Manley said Tuesday that Ms. Thompson had been sought since last Wednesday, when a woman fitting her description was seen driving away from her suburban Ladera Heights home in an expensive car shortly before authorities arrived with a search warrant.

"She was very professional and very sophisticated in her dealings," says fraud investigations director Michael Collins.

An arrest warrant issued last Wednesday charges Ms. Thompson with 13 counts of perjury and 10 counts of welfare fraud. Mrs. Manley said that during the past seven years Ms. Thompson received checks at eight different addresses by using eight false identities documented by driver's licenses and Social Security cards.

Ms. Thompson, who has four children, allegedly claimed a total of 47 children, investigators said, by documenting their existence with false birth certificates.

Japanese due credit for better Carter speeches

WASHINGTON (AP) — If President Carter's speechmaking style seems improved lately, and many observers agree that's the case, part of the credit should go to Japanese technology.

Carter began to worry about his somewhat leaden delivery about six months ago and set out to do something about it.

His solution: to tape his practice recitals of speech texts, both for timing and delivery. By listening to the tapes, he often detects rough spots in time to polish his presentation before facing an audience.

Initially, Carter read his texts into large, professional recorders manned by technicians of the White House Communications Agency.

But he soon discovered that if he wanted to listen to the tapes in his living quarters after normal working hours, he had to summon the technicians and their bulky equipment.

Seeking a more competent system, the president got himself a small Japanese-made recorder — the kind that fits in a suit pocket and uses tape cassettes about the size of a book of matches.

Now reporters can tell in advance when Carter is planning a speech he considers important. His tiny recorder usually has a prominent place on his office desk.

Press secretary Jody Powell opened his office refrigerator to get ice for a cooling drink at the end of a long day last weekend. But the stench coming from inside the box drove him away.

It seems one of Powell's aides, Randy Lewis, had caught two bluefish on Chesapeake Bay two weeks earlier and had expected them to remain perfectly preserved indefinitely in his boss' refrigerator.

An angry Powell summoned Lewis by telephone to remove the offensive remains. A chastened fisherman entered the office with his head hidden in a paper sack that had holes only for his eyes.

Year-old James Earl Carter IV, accompanied by household employee Mary Fitzpatrick and a Secret Service agent, walked to the presidential helicopter at Camp David, Md., on Sunday while his grandfather followed in a limousine.

A Marine in dress blues greeted the trio of hikers with a snappy salute. Since agents and staff members don't generally get saluted, it presumably was for the baby, who was wobbling along holding Ms. Fitzpatrick's hand. He didn't return the salute.

CANYON — Four Midland students recently qualified for the Dean's Honor Roll for the past spring semester at West Texas State University here.

They were Jerry Cooper, a speech major; Dennis Hall, a speech and hearing therapy major; Cerena Henderson, a nursing graduate, and Cody Myers, a music education major.

To gualify for the Dean's Honor Roll, students must have a grade point average between 3.25 and 3.84 for a minimum class load of 12 credit hours.

Gunshots traded

As a man and a woman exchanged gunshots Wednesday in front of a Midland bar, an onlooker was the only one shot, witnesses told police.

Charles Stephens, 40, of Odessa was listed today in serious condition in the intensive care unit of Midland Memorial Hospital.

Police said they received a report of a shooting in progress in front of the Texas Street Bar in the 800 block of East Texas Avenue.

On arrival, they said, they found Stephens lying in front of the bar with a small-caliber bullet wound. Witnesses reportedly told officers that a man and woman were shooting at each other when Stephens got shot.. Police arrested a 36-year-old man and a 29-year-old woman in connection with the incident. Officers said they found a .22-caliber pistol in the woman's purse and four .32-caliber bullets in the man's pocket.

Cancellation of summer school upshot of Prop 13 approval

The Washington Post

LOS ANGELES — California's largest two school districts have canceled their summer school programs in the first major response to the severe budget limitation imposed by the new Jarvis-Gann Initiative.

In Los Angeles, the Board of Education ordered a two-month unpaid vacation for the 10,000 employees of the district and told the 350,000 students who had been expected to enroll that there would be no summer classes.

In the San Diego Unified School District, where 45,000 students were expected, the board took a similar action and gave 2,400 employees the summer off.

Most other school districts in California are expected to follow suit. A spokesman for State Superintendent of Public Instruction Wilson Riles, who recommended the closings, said such action would conserve state and local funds for the fall semester.

The property tax rollback mandated by the Jarvis-Gann Initiative also was felt in San Francisco. The Board of Supervisors approved a freeze on city employees' salaries and the Municipal Railway cut bus, cable car and trolley service 20 percent while raising fares from 25 cents to 45 cents.

The Los Angeles school board action came on a 5 to 2 vote with the two school board members who had supported Proposition 13, the Jarvis-Gann Initiative, opposing the closing. One of these dissenting board members, Bobbi Fiedler, said the action was "a political ploy" that made school children the victims.

"I don't see why these children should bear the brunt of this," Fiedler said. "The board is taking a very vindictive approach. They'e saying I told you so and I'm going to punish you for doing what I didn't want you to do."

Under current proposals now being considered in Sacramento, California schools would get aid from the state equaling 85 percent of current expenditures, which probably would make some summer school courses possible. But board members at this point have no way of knowing what the legislative action will be or whether it will come in time to help them.

Quick recovery part of new brain surgery method

The Los Angeles Times

SAN DIEGO — A week after her brain surgery, 54-year-old Mildred Surratt spent a day at the San Diego Zoo.

Her quick recovery from a life-threatening condition that doctors until now would have considered virtually inoperable is due to a new technique developed at University Hospital here and used for the first time last week.

The wife of a Baptist minister in Hickory Grove, S.C., Mrs. Surratt had a large aneurysm, a balloon-like pocketing of an artery that might have popped open one day, causing serious injury or death.

Her neurosurgeon referred Mrs. Surratt to University Hospital and Dr. John F. Alksne, who had devised a new technique for dealing with the disorder — a knifeless surgical method that he had tested succesfully in animal experiments.

Alksne's technique is an ingenious combination of two earlier techniques, one of which he himself developed at University Hospital almost eight years ago.

Since 1971 Alksne and Dr. Randall Smith have used a long, magnetized needle to inject a mixture of liquid plastic and iron filings into small aneurysms. The magnetic needle is able to hold the material in place until it hardens.

But the method is of no use in large aneurysms like Mrs. Surrat's, where the magnetic force would not be strong enough to hold the material.

Russian and French physicians have developed another technique for the larger aneurysms. They insert a long tube through an artery in the neck and try to manipulate it into place.

Then they blow up a balloon within the aneurysm, filling it with a plastic that hardens in place, sealing off the weak part of the artery, but leaving the artery flow unimpaired.

But there are difficulties with the Russian-French technique. Manipulating the tube into place is tricky, and removing it while leaving the hardened ball of plastic behind can cause life-threatening complications.

The new surgery, tried for the first time in a human last Tuesday, combines the two earlier techniques.

Using a finely calibrated device to guide the long needle through Mrs. Surratt's nose and into the damaged portion of her artery, Alksne was then able to fill a balloon with the material — a liquid silicone that hardens into a solid, rubbery mass.

The solid balloon seals off the aneurysm and, as in the earlier technique, leaves the blood flow of the artery unaffected.

Alksne promised Mrs. Surratt no improvement in symptoms, although he told her that it was possible that her vision might improve.

But the only alternative for her wihout the experiemntal surgery was to live with the condition she had, Alksne told a press conference Tuesday.

To reach her aneurysm through conventional surgical procedures would have itself posed a risk to her life.

Alksne was cautious in discussing how the technique may be used in the future.

"I don't want to give the impression we've solved the problem," he told the Los Angeles Times. "We recognize this is very developmental."

Nor would the new technique replace earlier methods in all cases. But it does make it possible to treat aneurysms that were too large to be dealt with in the past, Alksne said.

Because the operation is experimental, Mrs. Surratt and her husband had to review and sign a lengthy document that listed all the risks and alternatives.

As in almost all human experimentation, the operation had to be studied and approved in advance by a special hospital review committee, which will continue to monitor the technique and its results when it is used again.

At the hospital Tuesday Mrs. Surratt and her husband looked like any sunburned pair of tourists. Since her surgery the couple has been exploring Southern California — touring Long Beach and getting a glimpse of former President Nixon's house in San Clemente.

"It's fantastic," Mrs. Surratt said. "It's hard to believe I've had any kind of surgery."

The surgery used a special brain scanning device that allows the doctors to locate the aneurysm accurately and to insert the needle and the balloon with precision.

The needle used is eight inches long and a millimeter in diameter. The balloon filled with liquid plastic must be held in place for 20 minutes before the needle is removed.

Bill addresses cosmic question

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In some respects, the bill the Senate passed in January revising the federal criminal code brought Congress about as close as it ever comes to truly cosmic questions. It was all about crime and punishment: who goes to jail, for how long and for what offenses.

Parts of the proposal remain obscure and technical, to be sure. Others can be understood by everyone. The bill, for example, would attempt to make sure that two men who rob a bank or two men who commit rape receive at least roughly comparable sentences. Now, one may walk away on probation while the other, before a different judge, gets 10 years.

These are large matters and so, to the bill's Senate framers, the scene in Room 2441 of the Rayburn House Office Building last week would have been upsetting.

Members of the House subcommittee working on the legislation sat around an oval table — at least one of them fighting back great yawns — listening to a staffer drone on about Title 18 of the code, about whether a word should be eliminated here or a paragraph there and about whether anyone still cares about the transportation of water hyacinths through interstate commerce (they do).

It was the 11th day of this process with at least three or four to go before the House version of the criminal code revision arrives at the full Judiciary Committee.

To Senate supporters, who forged a remarkable liberal-conservative coalition to win Senate approval, the subcommittee's activity is one of many sure signs that their bill is doomed. Indeed, there is a general consensus in the House as well that this bill — described by Attorney General Griffin B. Bell as his department's top legislative goal ("nothing is more important than this") — will not be enacted this session of Congress, at least not in anything approaching its present form.

DO YOU NEED AN ISLAND OF SAFETY?

If you live in a neighborhood of soot clogged chimneys; you surely do. Dirty chimneys are potentially a considerable fire hazard. If someone three blocks away has a chimney fire it s a "great pity"; if your next door neighbor has a chimney fire it is a "calamity"; if you have a chimney fire it is a "disaster". You may not be able to prevent the "calamity" of a neighbor's chimney fire, but you can prevent the "disaster" of your own. You have created an island of safety when you live in a neighborhood of clean chimneys-- you can be the first, or next. Some neighborhoods are already safe.

The Washington Post

HAVANA — His tone was a times forceful, at times subdued. The language was eloquent, frequently impassioned. Fidel Castro had been challenged by the White House. For weeks he had heard his denials of Cuban involvement in the Shaba invasion contradicted by U.S. officials.

Now he was taking his case straight to the American people.

First to two Congressmen and then to American reporters Castro sought to counter charge for charge the assertions that his troops in Angola had aided the Katangan rebels who invaded Zaire.

"Brutal," Castro said of the American charges.

For 2 1-2 hours, in a late-night interview Monday in his spacious office at Havana's Palace of the Revolution, Castro made his case. He sat and he paced. He puffed his cigar and the words tumbled forth:

"We may be private about some things," he said, "We may be discreet but we never have lied. We never made use of lies as an instrument of politics."

It was not the Cubans who were lying, Castro declared, but rather it is President Carter who has "been confused and deceived" by his advisers.

American-Cuban relations have had many stormy moments, but the recent trend had been toward better times. Now Castro said, he had been personally hurt and insulted at precisely the moment when the United States seemed prepared to make "just and constructive" moves toward Cuba.

Castro said he had asked himself many times in recent weeks. "How am I going to tell a lie to (Secretary of State Cyrus) Vance, when he has had a constructive . . . respectful attitude to the problems" between Cuba and the United States.

"How would I lie to (U.N. Ambassador) Andrew Young who has been respectful and kind to us? How would I lie to George McGovern, who has been interested in improvement of relations with Cuba?"

"But, in addition," Castro asked, "how would I lie to Mr. Carter?"

The answer Castro said was that he had not.

"Everything will be known sooner or later," he went on, "History will prove some day that we were telling the truth and that the charges against us were really false."

While the course of U.S.-Soviet relations has led Moscow to personally attack Carter, Castro stopped well short of that. He described the administration's "so-called hard policy, the policy of threat, the policy of pressure" as a "serious, tremendous . . . mistake."

That policy, Castro said, "already has a name and a last name. It is (National Security adviser Zbigniew) Brzezinski's policy."

The lie told against Cuba, he said, "is not a half lie. It is an absolute, total complete lie. It is not a small lie, it's a big lie. It is not a negligible lie, it is an important lie."

The lie, which he said was "manufactured in Brzezinski's office" was intended to "provide a pretext of justifying the U.S. intervention and the intervention of the NATO powers" on behalf of the government of Zaire's President Mobutu Sese Seko. It was, he said, "to manipulate U.S. public opinion and to pressure the U.S. Congress" to "lift restrictions established on subversive activities by the CIA."

Charlie Gladstone pours champagne atop a gaoline pump at his north Baltimore service station. Champagne replaces expected hot dogs

By LARRY SIDDONS

BALTIMORE (AP) — Charlie Gladstone thought he might be serving hot dogs when the Supreme Court finished with a Maryland law forbidding oil companies from operating their own gas stations.

Instead, he served champagne.

"I just want to share my excitement with all the people that helped me and let them know I care," said Gladstone as he poured a glass of the bubbly at his Citgo station in north Baltimore Wednesday.

Hours earlier, the Supreme Court had ruled 7-1 that Maryland's 1974 law was legal and does not interfere with interstate commerce, as the oil companies had argued.

Gladstone, then an officer of the Maryland Independent Service Station Dealers Association, had helped convince the General Assembly of a need for such a law after the gasoline shortages that accompanied the 1973 Arab oil embargo.

The measure prohib ts oil companies from operating retail gasoline service stations. Delaware, Florida and the District of Columbia, like Maryland, reacted to the 1973 shortages by enacting similar laws. Similar legislation is being considered by 32 other state legislatures.

Once Maryland's law was passed, the statute was immediately attacked by eight oil companies and the Petroleum Marketing Corp. Gladstone said he was convinced the law was just, but he started looking at other lines of employment just in case.

"I let tire stocks at my station run down because I didn't know what I'd do if the law was thrown out," he said. "I seriously considered going into some other line of work. I thought maybe I'd sell hot dogs."

Striking down the law would have spelled disaster for independently run stations, which make up about 95 percent of the gasoline outlets in Maryland, Gladstone said.

"There's no way a small retailer could compete with the big oil companies," he said. "Not when they're controlling the product from the wellhead to the nozzle. They can say what price will be charged."

One oil industry analyst, Dan Lundberg, publisher of an authoritative industry newsletter, said the court's ruling may have a "momentary" effect on prices at the gas pump, but Maryland Attorney General Francis B. Burch said it will ultimately lead to lower gasoline prices. 4

Gladstone also said the decision would lead to lower prices for motorists, although he stopped short of predicting a return of the gasoline price wars of the 1960s.

"This is just a very refreshing decision," said Gladstone, who offered the champagne to all visitors and five gallons of gasoline free to the first 40 drivers who stopped by his station Wednesday afternoon.

Pricing section would lift 'new' gas controls

WASHINGTON (AP) — The natural gas pricing section of an emergy bill being hammered out in a U.S.House-Senate conference committee would lift federal price controls on all newly discovered gas.

The controls would also come off most gas sold in the intrastate market and gas from wells deeper than 5,000 feet in old reservoirs as of Jan. 1, 1985.

In the meantime, intrastate gas — gas produced and consumed within the same state — would be subject to price regulation for the first time. Federal price controls now apply exclusively to gas shipped in interstate pipelines.

The price ceiling under the proposed formula — and this includes intrastate gas — would start at about $1.93 per 1,000 cubic feet (mcf) and then rise roughly 10 percent each year, assuming an annual 6 percent rate of inflation — until January 1985, when they would be at about $3.72 per mcf. Then the price lids would come off.

As far as allocation is involved, the government could allocate gas in the intrastate market only in an emergency situation, such as the gas shortages that came about during the hard 1977 winter, the compromise states.

Gas would first be allocated away from industries that use it as a boiler fuel, especially those which also have the capability of using coal.

Special treatment is given to contracts that expire on gas fileds that are still producing.

Intrastate gas is exempted from a provision in the bill requiring industrial users to pay the initial increase in gas prices that result from legislation. This section, some opponents of the comprohise claim, would encourage an exodus of industrial gas users to producing states.

But proponents claim that, overall, the measure will hve the effect of moving gas out of the intrastate market and into the gas-short interstate market.

To Our Customers, The Used Car They Buy Is A New Car.

In many cases, a family budget just won't stretch to include a brand new car. And this is where a quality used car makes good sense.

As far as we are concerned, that used car is really a new car to the family that buys it.

And we take extra care to make sure our used car customers enjoy every bit as much satisfaction and pride as our new car customers.
