Feds indict L.A. officers

King's civil rights violated, indictment charges

■ Four Los Angeles lawmen to be tried in federal court.

By Philipp Gollner and Rene Lynch
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Four Los Angeles Police Department officers whose state-court acquittal in the Rodney King beating was a catalyst for the Los Angeles riots were indicted Wednesday by a federal grand jury on charges that they violated the motorist's civil rights.

The two-count grand jury indictment accuses Sgt. Stacey Koon and Officers Laurence Powell, Timothy Wind and Theodore Briseno, all of whom are white, of depriving the African-American motorist of his civil rights while acting under color of law.

"Late (Tuesday) afternoon, a federal grand jury returned a two-count indictment charging the officers with the deprivation of constitutionally protected rights of Rodney King while acting under the color of law," U.S. Attorney Lourdes Baird said during a televised news conference.

"If you look at indictment, the officers were charged with stomping, kicking and beating King," Baird said. "Therefore, it was an unreasonable use of force."

All except Powell were cleared of criminal assault charges on April 29, triggering three days of rioting that left 60 dead and caused more than $800 million in damage. Powell, 29, still faces retrial on a criminal charge of assault under color of authority.

Asked about the possibility of another riot if the officers are found not guilty of the federal charges, Baird replied, "I'm not thinking about an acquittal."

Powell, Wind and Briseno are charged in the two-count indictment with willfully and intentionally using

Statue debate

DALLAS — A vote today will decide the fate of a statue of Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee. Engineer Edward Sebesta, who calls the statue an anti-democratic symbol, wants it removed from Dallas' Lee Park. The park was named after the Civil War general in the 1920s. Sebesta says the statue enhances "the old Southern aristocrats' elitist position." Dallas Parks and Recreation Board member Rufus Shaw said he didn't know how anybody could vote to keep the statue, but board president Lois Finkelman says she believes the board will stand by the memorial.

Fines anger oil and gas operators

■ EPA penalizes 23 producers for dumping produced water.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

Midland oil and gas operators are expressing outrage following the assessment of $4 million in fines by the Environmental Protection Agency for alleged contamination of playa lakes in Lea County, N.M.

On Tuesday, the EPA issued fines to 23 producers in Texas, nine in New Mexico, three in Oklahoma, two in Colorado and one in Wyoming for dumping produced water into the "waterways" of New Mexico. But producers deny the charge and say they will fight the ruling.

"We feel this is outrageous," said Ted Collins, a principal in the firm Collins & Ware of Midland and president of Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "Most of the operators who were dumping in the lake were doing so with the understanding that what they were doing was legal, because they had permits from the

Price of replacing oil, gas reserves is up, study shows

By Anne Pearson
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The price of finding oil and gas went up last year, reflecting slower payoffs from international prospects and write-offs of proven but undeveloped reserves in the United States.

Companies wrote off the U.S. reserves that were too expensive or too politically touchy to drill. The average price of finding oil and gas in the United States either through drilling for it or buying it in the ground from other companies went up by $1 dollar a barrel last year to $6 for a barrel of oil or its energy equivalent in natural gas, according to an annual study by John S. Herold Inc.

The Greenwich, Conn.-based research company said the cost of exploring by drilling only increased even more sharply, from $5.16 a barrel in 1990 to $6.88 a barrel last year.

U.S. operators replaced just 76 percent of the oil and gas they produced in 1991, compared with an average 101 percent during the last five years.

"Nineteen ninety-one looked a lot like 1986," Herold analyst Lysle Brinker said Tuesday, referring to the year of the legendary oil price bust.

Outside the United States, companies replaced 117 percent of reserves produced, compared with an average 156 percent over the last five years.

Excluding acquisitions, operators in the United States replaced just 67 percent of reserves, and 113 percent overseas.

Worldwide, reserve replacement costs jumped last year to $6.07 a barrel from $4.10 a barrel in 1990, mainly due to sharp cost increases in Canada and Europe.

Those costs more than doubled to $12.94 a barrel in Canada and $11.29 in Europe's North Sea.

FDA can't assure that milk is safe, panel says

■ Inspectors don't test for all drugs that are given to cows, report shows.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Government inspectors do not test to see if most of the drugs used for cows wind up in milk sold to consumers, and the Food and Drug Administration cannot vouch for the safety of the milk supply, congressional investigators said Wednesday.

While reports given to a congressional panel did not say grocery store shelves carry unsafe milk, Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., said scant progress had been made since the issue first arose two years ago.

"FDA still cannot honestly assure the public that milk is safe," said Weiss, chairman of the House Government Operations subcommittee on human resources, which held Wednesday's hearing on the matter.

But that's just what the FDA did.

Haitian police sweep through capital after police attacks

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Police swept through sections of the capital Wednesday following attacks on two officers in two days. Witnesses said at least six people were arrested.

Assailants stabbed and seriously wounded Police Lt. Jacques Nesly Elie and his wife in their home early Wednesday, according to an army report which said "the forces of destabilization have struck again."

Police were backed by an armored vehicle and a helicopter. The army reported confiscating six assault rifles, military uniforms and army radios.

Youths threw rocks at police squads sweeping through the crowded alleys of the capital's western section in what officers called a manhunt for terrorists.

The army, which oversees the police, has been unpopular since it overthrew President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, Haiti's first democratically elected leader, last September.

The government of army-backed Prime Minister Marc Bazin blames Aristide supporters for a wave of violence — including the killing of a soldier at a suburban post Tuesday, the fatal shooting of soldier at the government electric company on July 28, and the slayings of six civilians since July 21.

Police have been setting up roadblocks throughout Port-au-Prince and searching vehicles for weapons.

On Tuesday, the former director of Protestant Radio Lumiere, Robinson Joseph, was fatally shot after turning away from a lineup of cars.

Relief agency seeks more aid

PARIS (AP) — Doctors Without Borders says villages in Somalia have been destroyed by war and drought, leaving the roads lined with the bodies of Somalis who tried to flee.

The Paris-based relief agency on Tuesday renewed an urgent appeal for aid to Somalia, where it says at least 4 million people face death from starvation, sickness and war. Doctors Without Borders first issued the appeal in June.

A Doctors Without Borders team recently traveled from Brava, a town of 40,000 located 150 miles south of the capital, Mogadishu, to Gilib, 110 miles south.

The team came upon scores of destroyed villages where the inhabitants had either died or left. On the road, refugees ate roots and leaves. Dead bodies lined the route.

Food is being shipped into Somalia's capital, Mogadishu, and a few places in the interior, but most of the country has not been reached by relief groups.

A U.S. aid official who visited Somalia recently said Monday that tons of food was not being distributed because relief workers and food supplies needed protection from the country's warring factions.

Mandela leads 100,000-strong march to government headquarters

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — Nelson Mandela led 100,000 cheering black marchers to the seat of white power Wednesday in one of the biggest demonstrations ever to demand an end to President F.W. de Klerk's government.

The African National Congress also staged rallies in Johannesburg, Cape Town, Durban and other cities as part of its mass action campaign. Police arrested more than 600 protesters, most for occupying government buildings.

The demonstrations were the latest in a series of ANC protests calling for the removal of the government. But De Klerk, whose position seems unshaken, has said that only negotiations, not mass protest, will resolve the country's political crisis.

Still, the huge turnout will help buttress the ANC's claim to represent the majority of South Africans. The march came after a two-day strike in which some 4 million black workers stayed home to demand an interim government by the end of the year.

"The campaign for peace and democracy must become a tidal wave," Mandela told the roaring crowd in Pretoria. "An interim government of national unity is an urgent and critical step."

"De Klerk must go! De Klerk must go!" the crowd chanted.

Some government and opposition leaders hope the ANC, boosted by the success of its protests, will be ready to return to the talks, saying it has a new mandate from the people. Mandela has indicated talks could resume within weeks.

"I look forward to the day when Mr. Mandela will once again see me in my office," De Klerk told reporters later. "He needn't speak to me from the lower part of the Union Building. There's an open door here."

The crowd roared with triumph as the ANC's black, green and gold flag was raised on a pole before the Union Building, the government headquarters and a symbol of white power. Demonstrators, their clenched fists raised in salute, sang "God Bless Africa," the anthem of the black opposition movement.

Mandela told the crowd the ANC would not return to black-white constitutional talks until "practical steps are taken by the government to curb the violence which is ravaging the lives of our people."

"The ANC and its allies remain committed to the search for a negotiated resolution," said Mandela.

The ANC launched a mass action campaign in June when it broke off black-white negotiations to protest the political violence that has claimed about 8,000 black lives in the past three years. The ANC pulled out of talks immediately followed the June 17 massacre of 42 blacks at Boipatong, a township near Johannesburg.

Today to be mostly sunny

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high in the mid-90s and south winds at 10-15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the upper 60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Friday should be mostly sunny with a high in the mid-90s.

After an overnight low of 66, Wednesday's high reached 97 compared with the record for Aug. 5 of 103 set in 1964. The record low for that date is 61 set in 1975.

STATE

The state baked Wednesday under triple-digit temperatures, and scattered thunderstorms sprung up again in the Panhandle and along the coast.

West Texas skies elsewhere were sunny to mostly sunny.

A heat advisory was in effect in North Texas, where heat indices varied from 92 degrees at Sherman to 103 at Waco.

Showers and thunderstorms in the region moved Wednesday into Louisiana and Arkansas. Skies remained partly cloudy.

The state's high temperature at 5 p.m. was 101 degrees in Laredo; the mercury dipped to 86 degrees at Houston's Hobby Airport.

The National Weather Service called for partly cloudy skies across Texas through Friday. Thunderstorms are possible in all regions.

Highs will be mostly in the 90s, except near 105 in the Rio Grande plains.

NATION

Thunderstorms moved across the nation's midsection and parts of the South on Wednesday. Flooding in Oklahoma was blamed for the death of a motorist, and three soldiers were injured by lightning strikes.

By midday, rainshowers and thunderstorms dotted the Mississippi Valley, the southern Plains, the Gulf of Mexico coast, Florida, North Carolina, Illinois, northwest Texas, the southern plateau and Montana.

More than eight inches of rain fell near Henryetta, Okla., about 50 miles south of Tulsa, where storms forced residents from their homes and turned streets into streams.

One woman died when her car slid across a rain-slickened turnpike near Henryetta and was pinned beneath a tractor-trailer, authorities said.

Three soldiers were hospitalized by a lightning strike that struck a hilltop tent at Camp Gruber in eastern Oklahoma.

At least four highways were temporarily closed and part of the ceiling collapsed at City Hall in McAlester, all in eastern Oklahoma.

Four and one-half inches of rain fell at Ozark City, in western Arkansas, between midnight and 7 a.m., causing severe damage to a bridge and sweeping two vehicles into flood waters.

Heavier rainfall during the 6 hours ending at 2 p.m. EDT included an inch and a half at Springfield, Mo.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

FINE: EPA penalizes 23 producers

(From 1A)

Bureau of Land Managment and the state of New Mexico."

EPA spokesman Roger Meacham in Dallas said fines were not issued to BLM or the New Mexico Oil Conservation Commission, because the oil companies were perceived as the guilty parties. He said potash mines were a separate matter and are being investigated to determine if similar enforcement action should be handed out to the mines.

Meacham said the complaint that spurred the investigation came from the New Mexico Environmental Department in Santa Fe. The EPA had worked with the state agency in the investigation, he said.

"The whole point of our enforcement action is that we believe the oil and gas companies violated federal law by continuing to put water into the lake after the activity was prohibited," Meacham said.

He said the environmental impact of the disposal could be severe, but failed to provide criteria that comprise a "severe" impact.

He said tissue samples of birds at the lake contained toxic and radioactive traces, but admitted that there was no way to tell how many birds might be effected.

The EPA's Dallas office said the penalized producers had alledgedly contracted with B&E Trucking Inc. of Carlsbad, N.M., to dispose of water at the playa lake Laguna Quatro in Nash Draw.

Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, said, "It's unbelievable that EPA is so nearsighted that it would cite prudent oil and gas operators who thought they were in compliance, because they had legal permits from the New Mexico Oil Conservation Commission and Bureau Land Management."

Ed Hall, a spokesman for Santa Fe Resources, one of the companies fined by EPA, said his company was disappointed because it had recently received an award from the Bureau of Land Managment in New Mexico for having the cleanest operation of a major independent. "We are proud of our environmental record and now this hits."

Hall took exception to the press release issued by EPA, which he called inflammatory. "EPA said oilfield brine is super salty, toxic and radioactive. That may be the case in some incidents, but it is not always true."

The exact composition of the water at Laguna Quatro is not know, but Greg Ogden, a chemist for Martin Water Labs in Midland, said chlorines in produced water in the Permian Basin will vary with the formation and may range from 6,000 part per million to 150,000 ppm, with the average being 50-60,000 ppm. Normal seawater ranges from 18-20,000 ppm.

The EPA said playas sustain invertebrate life such as brine shrimp and brine flies that provide food for many species of federally protected shore birds.

But the PBPA said, "Claims by the EPA that oilfield brines have resulted in migratory bird deaths are pure conjecture."

Frank Yates, vice president of Yates Petroleum of Artesia, N.M., one of the companies singled out by EPA, said the EPA response was "in bad faith," and denied discharging "into waters of the United States," the Associated Press reported. Producers contend the dry lakes do not qualify as "waterways of the United States."

The Independent Petroleum Association of New Mexico said closure of the lake to saltwater disposal could shut-in hundreds of wells in New Mexico, and could be the biggest problem faced by oil producers and potash miners in this decade. If that happens the hardest hit would be oil and gas operators in Midland who constitute the largest number of producers named in the EPA action.

Yates said producers would discuss whether to comply with the penalty assessment. He said he wouldn't rule out going to court.

A group of producers named in the EPA action and their attorneys are to meet today in Midland to discuss action. Spannaus of the PBPA said all political stops would be pulled to overturn the EPA action.

Ed Hall of Santa Fe Resources said the producers have 20 days to respond to EPA.

NAMES: Professor researches origins director that people are also interested in the history of their own names," and she agreed.

"She had envisioned a leisurely operation (for the Family Names Heritage booth) but before the booth even opened we had a line of 50 people waiting," Tarpley said. "We were absolutely overwhelmed and understaffed. This year we'll have 16 people going down from Commerce and 24 from Trinity University joining us there.

Tarpley

"We do the name research at the front of the booth, and then the calligraphers in back put the information on a certificate. People have trouble accepting all this being free, but it is.

"Our researchers have a lot of names under control, or they know which research book will explain them. We research only family names because a first name doesn't carry the heritage unless it's something like your mother's maiden name," he said.

The procedure is the same with each visitor. If Britain's Queen Elizabeth II were to approach the booth, for example, Tarpley said he would give her a pencil and a piece of paper and tell her, "Write your family name," which is Windsor.

Checking the listing in one of his reference books, Tarpley finds this explanation . . ."one who came from a landing place with a windlass." Another notation explains that in 1917 the royal family adopted the name — site of a royal palace in Berkshire — to replace the previous Germanic family name, in response to anti-German feeling at the time.

Tarpley said the continuous tradition of English and European names started with Alfred the Great, about 850 A.D., but registration of names did not begin until about the year 1100.

Family names can shed light on any one of four things: Where the family lived (Lake, Meadow, Churchill), what they did for a living (Taylor, Baker, Cook), a description, such as hair color (Black, Brown, Reed from "red") or their ancestry (John's son or Andrew's son, which evolved into Johnson and Anderson).

"People were simply formalizing nicknames," Tarpley said. "This man is Robert ... which Robert? Robert the tailor, or Robert who lives in the forest, or Robert the tall man, or Robert who is John's son.

"In Scotland and Ireland, 'Mac' or 'Mc' mean 'son of' and the 'O' in O'Neill or O'Hara means grandson of. 'Fitz' is a corruption of the French word, 'fils,' meaning son. Fitzhugh would this translate to 'son of Hugh,'" he said.

"In this country there are 1.3 million family names, and all are basically foreign names except for native American Indians. That means that there are twice as many family names as we have vocabulary in an unabridged dictionary.

"The top five American surnames are Smith, Johnson, Williams, Brown and Jones. Because a (black)smith was a popular occupation in many countries, what we know as the English or American name Smith might be Schmidt in Germany, Ferrar in France, or Ferraro in Italy."

The Folklife Festival emphasizes ethnicity (there are about 30 groups represented), and so Tarpley receives queries on names from many cultures.

"Never have I seen so many Poles and Czechs," he said, chuckling. "We'll get a name that may start 'Spz ...' and then a whole string of Slavic consonants, and we'll struggle with it. Sometimes the person will say, 'Would it help if we spell it this way?' and it turns out that when the family came through Ellis Island the name was misspelled."

Name origins such as Shepherd or Oxford are "transparent," easily understood, he said. Not so, such names as Coward (one who looked after cows), Death (came from the town Ath in Belgium), Stout (a brewer of stout ale, not a physical description), or Kennedy (meaning misshapen head).

"You start recognizing roots, prefixes and suffixes," Tarpley said. His own name, which is English, comes from three words: "tor," meaning hill, "por," meaning pear tree, and "ley," meaning meadow. Together they have an almost lyrical meaning: Dweller on the hill by the pear tree in the meadow.

Tarpley's wife shares his enthusiasm for the Texas Folklife Festival. "Jolene knows a lot about names and she coordinates the calligraphy at the booth," he said.

With a presidential election approaching, Tarpley offersan insight into the name origins of the candidates heading the Republican and Democratic tickets:

Bush: A dweller at the sign of the bush, usually a wine merchant.

Quayle: A nickname from the bird, denoting a timorous, lecherous or fat person, all qualities ascribed to quails.

Clinton: Dweller at the hill enclosure.

Gore: One who lived near or on a triangular piece of land.

If these explanations confuse voters, perhaps a closing line, also from Shakespeare, will put the matter of names in perspective:

"That which we call a rose, by any other name would smell as sweet."

OIL: Exploration costs increase $1 a barrel

(From 1A)

Canadian costs went up mainly because companies reduced the volumes of heavy oil reserves on their books that are too costly to develop, given current market prices for those crudes, the research company said.

Those revisions drive up the per-barrel replacement figures, Herold Chairman Arthur L. Smith said, because those barrels are subtracted from the new barrels found or acquired before the cost-per-barrel calculation is made.

In the North Sea, 1991 costs are high because several companies making big long-term investments there have not yet booked the new reserves.

The cost per barrel should come down substantially in the next couple of years, Smith said, as those reserves make their way onto their reserve inventories.

According to the Herold study, Bartlesville, Okla.-based Phillips Petroleum Co. had the cheapest average reserve acquisition costs in the United States over the last three years, while Houston-based Shell Oil Co. had the highest.

Phillips found and bought reserves for an average of $2.65 a barrel, a number that spokesman Jere Smith said reflects a play-it-safe strategy.

"In light of low oil prices, we've been doing a lot of exploration in areas where there are known hydrocarbons," Smith said. "There's not a lot of wildcatting going on."

Shell's domestic reserve replacement figure — $9.97 a barrel — includes 224 million barrels of heavy oil reserves in Southern California that Shell took off its reserve total last year.

"Shell made the revisions because year-end 1991 oil prices did not support the economic development of the reserves," Shell spokesman Holly Hutchins said.

He added that the company hasn't given up on them entirely, however, and believes they still have value "given an adequate future oil price."

Overseas, Shell's parent company, Royal Dutch/Shell Group was the top performer, with an average reserve replacement cost of $2.48 a barrel.

Houston-based Pennzoil Co. had the highest replacement costs outside the United States — more than $50 a barrel in Canada, the study showed.

Pennzoil spokesman Bob Harper said his company couldn't confirm that figure, but he noted that Pennzoil has substantially reduced its investment in Canada this year and is shifting major amounts of money from North America overseas in search of better returns.

Canada represents only about 2 percent of Pennzoil's total reserves of 140 million barrels, Harper noted.

Brinker said the companies with the worst replacement records are mostly North American natural gas producers, whose reserve write-downs sharply increased their average cost of finding oil and gas.

Business school closes, strands students

HOUSTON (AP) — About 200 students of Massey Business College were stranded Wednesday and teachers left unpaid when the unaccredited and financially strapped school closed its doors.

Officials from the Texas Education Agency spent the morning fielding questions in a classroom full of upset and tearful students.

"What about those of us who paid for this in full with money out of our own pockets? What about the money?" asked one woman in the crowd.

"It's gone," Ronnie Bourland, TEA program officer replied.

Bourland said the teachers had not been paid in several weeks.

The school, which had operated for 105 years in downtown Houston, offered training for careers such as nurse assistant and executive secretary. Tuition ran more than $3,000 per student.

Some students had started courses a few weeks ago, while others were finishing up programs that lasted more than a year.

Unknown to many of the students, Massey has been operating under Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection since November.

MILK: FDA doesn't test for drugs given to cows, investigators say

"Milk is one of FDA's most heavily regulated and monitored food commodities," testified Gerald Guest, director of the FDA's center for veterinary medicine. "With the additional activities that we have undertaken . . . I am even more confident that the milk supply is safe."

And people whose livelihoods depend on milk — veterinarians, the dairy industry and congressmen from dairy-producing districts — also said the supply is safe.

A General Accounting Office report prepared for the subcommittee said the FDA tests for just four of 82 drugs that can be used in milk cows. Those four drugs are beta lactam, a family of antibiotics that includes penicillin.

"These are the same four drugs they tested for 12 years ago," said Weiss. "According to GAO, 35 of the most commonly used drugs have never been approved for use in dairy cows."

While the law prohibits using animal drugs in any manner aside from those specified on the label, the FDA created a loophole in 1984 to let doctors in emergencies treat animals with drugs not labeled for their use. Thus drugs approved for use in horses could be used in cows, for example.

The GAO report said these drugs are being used routinely, not just in emergencies. It also said there often is a lack of information on how to use the drug properly because, for example, the proper dosage for a cow might not be the same as for a horse.

"The potential lack of information is of particular concern when extra-label use involves a drug not approved for use on any food animal because FDA may not have any data on the potential human health risks from consuming residues of the drug in food," testified John W. Harman, GAO's director of food and agriculture issues.

But Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, said issues raised in the report and the hearing only serve to scare people needlessly and hurt hardworking farmers who get up every morning to milk their cows.

"The solution for safe food does not lie with assigning food safety police to every farm in the country," Stenholm testified.

Rep. Steve Gunderson, R-Wis., who says he has more dairy cows than constituents in his district, praised a testing program in his state that could drive a farmer out of business for allowing tainted milk into the supply.

Study: Mom's career doesn't hurt diet

CHICAGO (AP) — Working moms, take heart. Young children of career women fare as well nutritionally as youngsters of full-time homemakers, a new study found.

Now the bad news: Many children in both groups eat too much fat and too little calcium, iron, zinc and vitamin E.

Researchers reported in the August issue of the journal Pediatrics that they found no significant difference in the quality of diets among 120 children of full-time employed mothers, 241 children of mothers who stayed home and 81 children of part-time working moms.

"In spite of popular opinion that mothers' employment might be detrimental to children's diets, that was not the case in this fairly large national sample," said lead author Rachel K. Johnson, an assistant nutrition professor at the University of Vermont at Burlington.

Johnson, who led the study while at Pennsylvania State University, analyzed dietary information on 442 children ages 2 to 5 from the 1987-88 Nationwide Food Consumption Survey, a government study.

The study found that 82 percent of the children across all the groups ate more than the recommended 30 percent of total calories from fat — a bad sign for a nation with increasingly obese and sedentary children.

And at least 30 percent of the children fell below 77 percent of the recommended dietary allowances for calcium, iron, zinc and vitamin E, the researchers wrote.

"Iron and calcium are probably the nutrients of most concern," Johnson said Tuesday. Iron deficiency anemia is the nation's top nutritional deficiency, she said. Calcium deficiency can compromise bones and teeth.

Less is known about zinc and vitamin E, she said. Studies have indicated they may play important roles in immunity, but their exact functions are still being explored.

Alicia Moag-Stahlberg, a research nutritionist at Northwestern University Medical School who was not among the researchers, said a drawback to the study was that children of full-time working mothers represented only about one-fourth of the subjects.

Also, she said, findings were drawn from a survey with a low response rate — only 31 percent of families responded, suggesting data might not represent the population as a whole.

However, she said, it has a valuable message: Mothers with less time to spend preparing food for a child needn't resign themselves to the child getting an inferior diet.

The increasing availability of fast-preparation foods has probably helped, said Ms. Moag-Stahlberg, a spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association. "A real good message here for both mothers who are working and mothers at home is that kids' diets are less than perfect, and at-work moms and at-home moms need to balance their intake of foods," she said.

That means asking the child questions, she said, and providing a low-fat dinner if the youngster had chicken nuggets for lunch, or giving a child a green vegetable in the evening if he had corn at noon.

Feeding children more lean red meats, skim milk products, and low-fat snacks — such as raw carrots or pretzels — would help, both women said.

Softball tournament puts city in spotlight

It's being called the "largest single sporting event ever held in Midland" and even if limited to only that qualifier, the girls national fast pitch softball tournament now under way at Hogan Park would be a noteworthy happening.

But there are many other reasons for Midlanders to take note of the softball tournament.

One, of course, is that it puts Midland back in the national spotlight, giving the community ample opportunity to showcase its strong points, one of which now is the Bill Williams Softball Complex. It makes playing host to the 73 teams from 25 states not only possible but also pleasurable.

From a financial standpoint, the tournament will be beneficial to the city, but the economic impact of the event isn't everything. Midlanders also enjoy playing host to the 3,000 visitors. Sure, all Midlanders reap the benefits of the dollars the visitors will spend here this week, but most of us also like nothing better than the opportunity to show off our city and its attractions: the sunshine, the clear skies, friendly and helpful people, sound business climate, a positive outlook for the future, and much more. It lets all Midlanders say, "This is our city — our hometown. And we're proud of it."

Here's wishing all the teams the best of luck during the tournament. We hope all the players enjoy the national tournament in Midland and, once they return to their homes, will tell acquaintances about our city and its residents.

We hope the teams enjoy healthy competition while here and that the players will return to Midland at some future time. We'll be happy to welcome them back!

Small business gives entrepreneurs hope

Early to bed and early to rise," goes the old saying attributed to Benjamin Franklin, "makes a man healthy, wealthy, and wise."

It might even be called a mini-lesson in entrepreneurship that Franklin, himself a prodigious worker, practiced unfailingly with notable success.

But there are other considerations to starting a small business, particularly in today's business climate. In "Small Business: Big Challenge" earlier this week in the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Staff Writer Chris Van Wagenen explored the path to success followed by local entrepreneurs and the options available to them for financial backing, information, and business services. Starting your own business entails years of hard work and sacrificing, but the rewards can be immensely fulfilling. The series reaffirmed that small business still offers a pathway to success for those willing to work hard.

What should every entrepreneur know?: Well, it hasn't changed all that much since Franklin's time. It still involves hard work, long hours and diligent effort, noted local businessmen. You need to know the laws that will affect your business and you need to know where to look for assistance in solving problems. Overall, though, about all needed to make Franklin's mini-lesson accurate is the addition of scrupulous advance planning. It's critical.

Small business remains the strength of the American economy. There are challenges all along the way to success. But small business still remains the reachable American dream in Midland and throughout the nation.

Rhetoric still deserves a place in politics

WASHINGTON — "France," wrote F. Scott Fitzgerald, "was a land, England was a people, but America, having about it that quality of the idea, was harder to utter." Garry Wills, in his new book "Lincoln at Gettysburg: The Words that Remade America," says Lincoln uttered it in 272 words.

Will

By doing so, Wills argues, Lincoln finished the long founding of the United States. He made this a nation defined by the idea — "dedicated to the proposition" — that all men are created equal. It is, surely, no accident that Wills' book about the most potent presidential rhetoric in American history has become a best seller in this political season. The dominating fact of this season is the weakness of a president disdainful about the role of careful rhetoric, and hence of ideas, in governance.

Wills, a journalist and historian (at Northwestern), argues that the 15,000 people who heard Lincoln's strong tenor voice departed from the cemetery dedication ceremony "under a changed sky, into a different America." Wills says that each listener had had his or her "intellectual pocket picked" by Lincoln's "open-air sleight-of-hand." By deft words Lincoln changed the nature of the war and the meaning of the Constitution, thereby accomplishing nothing less than "a new founding of the nation."

Wills errs a bit, but only in a way that is welcome just now. Being a man of words, he will perhaps be forgiven for somewhat exaggerating the impact of 272 of the most familiar words in our civic liturgy. And he should be praised for the central implication of his book, which is this: When our politics are bereft of the rhetoric of large ideas, our politics are strictly speaking, un-American.

The Civil War was begun to preserve the Union. The Gettysburg Address was the culmination of the redefinition of the war as a crusade for a "new birth of freedom." The address completed Lincoln's personal crusade to establish that the Constitution is subservient to the Declaration of Independence's principle of human equality.

However, the Gettysburg Address was not the sudden surprise, the solitary stroke that Wills' exegesis suggests. It was the final act of a protracted process of transformation that had acquired irresistible momentum 14 months earlier about 35 miles south of Gettysburg, along Antietam Creek near Sharpsburg, Md. There a Union victory, such as it was, was sufficient to enable Lincoln to announce that the Emancipation Proclamation was coming.

The Proclamation itself was connected by a long, clear chain of logic to Lincoln's reaction — the hinge of his personal history — to the Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854. That execrable Act made slavery an issue to be decided in those two territories by popular sovereignty. This horrified Lincoln because it meant that America's commitment to equality was as contingent as an election result.

In response, Lincoln, then an obscure former one-term congressman, called upon the country to "re-adopt the Declaration of Independence." This put him on the road to Gettysburg. There his Address, far from being, as Wills suggests, an act of political prestidigitation, was the culmination of nine years of conspicuous public consistency on his part.

The address is as important as Wills says, but not exactly for the reason he says. It was not a stunning bolt from the blue. Rather, it completed Lincoln's patient but implacable insistence that Americans could not forever revere both the Declaration and a Constitution that accommodated slavery.

Lincoln's 272 words reverberated in 1863, and still do, precisely because they accorded with a deep national commitment to equality. Historian Gordon Wood, in his new book "The Radicalism of the American Revolution," demonstrates that whereas in 1760 America was a "monarchical" society in which hierarchy, patronage, servility, deference and dependency characterized social relations, by 1800 the democratic manners and mores of an egalitarian society had taken root.

Wills' recondite and rewarding argument does demonstrate that Lincoln used words to make that most material of things — a battle: flesh and bone and steel and shot — into an intellectual event, "testing" the durability of a nation "dedicated" to a proposition. Lincoln's words focused Americans' attention forever on what Fitzgerald was to call "that quality of the idea," and they still reverberate in today's cultural wars.

The deservedly large audience that Wills has found for his book is heartening evidence that the nation's ability to appreciate the elevating rhetoric of the politics of ideas has not atrophied in the recent absence of such politics.

Art Buchwald

If Bush hopes to win, he better get tough

There is no getting around it — President Bush's campaign is not doing well. The polls show him falling way behind, and his political workers are discouraged.

What must Mr. Bush do to gain the initiative? I respectfully submit some modest ideas:

For starters, the President has to come out fighting even if it will cost him his friendship with Bill Clinton and Al Gore.

The President must appear before the American people and tell them what went wrong with Washington during his four-year term. It was the inaction of a liberal, free-spending Democratic Congress that refused to pass the Bush economic programs that could have avoided a recession, prevented unemployment and brought 230 gold medals to the U.S. Olympic team.

Mr. Bush has to answer his opponents who want to tax the rich. He should go on television and declare that if you tax the rich, eventually they will only wind up on welfare and cost the government more money than the poor. For the first time the rich are making it on their own and should be left alone.

People expect strong leadership from their president. Bush must announce at the Republican Convention that he will appoint Dan Quayle as his Czar of All American Family Values as well as of the lumber industry in the Northwest. The President must stop the cruel attacks on Dan Quayle's spelling. He could easily do this by listing the number of times that Abraham Lincoln misspelled "potato" in the Gettysburg Address.

The area which is giving the President the most trouble is unemployment. The workers who have been laid off are not impressed when the President tells them that this is the greatest country in the world — and that more people are working than are not working.

Bush has to hit the subject head on and take the blame for the economic slowdown. To do this he could just say that Roosevelt caused the recession that Ronald Reagan inherited from Jimmy Carter. By failing to sock it to Roosevelt's New Deal, the President is leaving himself wide open to charges that he is personally responsible for all the pink slips in the country.

One of the reasons that the President is doing so poorly in the polls is that some people are beginning to suspect that Desert Storm was an exercise in futility.

The reason they feel this way is that every night when they turn on their TV sets they see Saddam Hussein sticking his tongue out at Bush, as well as making wiggly signs with his fingers in his ears.

The President can no longer remain silent on Desert Storm. He needs to explain to the country that a Democratic Congress, led by the Teddy Kennedy liberals, prevented him from getting Saddam Hussein when he was on his knees. Bush must emphasize that the world is a safer place today because Saddam has promised to build nuclear bombs only for peaceful purposes.

The one word that seems to have caught on in this campaign is "change." Perot started it, and the two major candidates picked it up. Bush and Clinton have promised that, if elected, they would give the voter the change he craves for. President Bush has to make some symbolic gesture to show that he means it. The best way to do this would be to paint that White House purple.

Finally, the President is in need of a new phrase to replace "Read my lips." Something like this would work, "If I raise taxes, you can pinch my cheeks."

Act does not permit 'abortion on demand'

I would like to clarify some of the misleading information in the letters published on July 26 under "Readers' views on: Choice."

The Freedom of Choice Act does not permit "abortion on demand." Anti-choice extremists utilize that concept to frighten and manipulate the public. I am pro-choice and I resent that concept. Furthermore, it is totally untrue that the Freedom of Choice Act would force doctors to perform abortion!

Elizabeth Macaroff

Woman thinks Americans deserve to have a choice

The difference between pro-choice people and anti-choice people is that pro-choice people allow a woman the right to make her own decisions about her life based upon her circumstances. They don't force her to have an abortion.

The anti-choice groups wish to force a woman to have children, regardless of the woman's circumstances or desires.

This is America. No one can legally interfere with a personal decision, for the moment. However, the right to continue to make our own personal decisions and choices must be safeguarded.

The Freedom of Choice Act deserves support.

City rejects new motor bank, disappoints citizen

The shortsightedness of our newly-elected and appointed city council approaches unbelievable in the matter of rejecting the application of Texas National Bank to build a new motor bank along Andrews Highway between Godfrey and Tarleton Streets, as reported in the Midland Reporter-Telegram of July 29.

Remember all the hoopla in the recent city elections about "economic diversification" establishing new industries, and creating new jobs? Well, here we had a wonderful opportunity to fulfill all these dreams and promises — and our city council blew it by turning this proposal down on the threat of increased traffic problems and pollution from idling cars.

HOGWASH! I submit that there would not be as much additional traffic because of this proposed facility as waits for a traffic light change at Andrews Highway and Midkiff at 5:15 every workday.

In turning this proposal down the city council has missed a great opportunity to expand our shrinking tax base, failed to help create construction and bank employees jobs, and stifled economic investment which this city badly needs.

Remember how the city was so hell-bent on "economic diversification" that they even created and staffed highly paid positions to help locate and bring in prospective businesses and industries? Where is all that progress anyway?

As for the city council, I feel that for them to turn down an economic opportunity as the proposed drive in bank shows just what a group of buffoons we have elected and appointed!

KING: Federal grand jury indicts officers

(From 1A)

unreasonable force during the arrest of King, an incident that was captured on videotape by an amateur cameraman.

The second count charges that Koon willfully permitted and failed to take action to stop the assault against King.

Each count could bring the defendants a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine, Baird said.

Defendants were invited to surrender Wednesday and are scheduled to be arraigned Monday in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles.

Baird said the investigation is continuing.

"The investigation is still open," she said. "I cannot comment on what charges might be looked at or what individuals might be looked at."

Mayor Tom Bradley said he was pleased with the grand jury's action and noted he had contacted Baird immediately after the four officers were acquitted of criminal charges, urging the resumption of the civil rights investigation.

"I look forward to a full and complete exploration of the facts," Bradley said, as he refused to comment on the potential for violence if the officers are acquitted again.

Joe Hicks, executive director for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in Los Angeles, said reaction on the street to the indictments will be cautious.

"There will be some optimism that some justice will be brought to bear in this case," Hicks said.

Many critics of the state prosecution said the case was lost after the jury trial was sent to Ventura County, a mostly white suburb of Los Angeles County. Opponents said the lack of minorities played a role in the jury's failure to convict the officers, especially after Briseno broke ranks and testified that he was offended by the beating and tried to stop it.

Baird said she does not believe the trial should be removed from Los Angeles because the federal jury pool would be drawn from 16 million residents of seven Southern California counties.

"I am very confident we can find a fair and impartial jury from that pool," she said.

Baird said is not common for federal authorities to step in and prosecute on civil rights violations after state cases fail. Baird said, however, that the indictment does not mean that Los Angeles District Attorney Ira Reiner failed to properly prosecute the case.

"The return of this indictment is not an indictment of the Los Angeles DA's office," Baird said.

Prosecutors declined to reveal details about evidence presented during the grand jury case.

The federal grand jury has been meeting in secret since shortly after the riots, when President Bush publicly denounced the verdicts and called for a federal probe into the beating.

Baird said the federal investigation began shortly after the videotaped beating was seen publicly, but was put on hold during the state trial and resumed after the acquittals were returned.

The grand jury has heard testimony from more than 80 Los Angeles police officers — some who stood by during the beating — as well as from scores of other witnesses including King himself. An additional 20 officers were interviewed by FBI agents.

"If you were in the same room with Powell, Wind, Koon or Briseno in the last six years, you were subpoenaed," said Diane Marchant, who represented many of the officers called to testify. "They have called people back from vacation and retired people from Bakersfield. It's a lot more thorough than the county grand jury."

A week ago, a Superior Court judge ordered evidence in the state trial — including the batons used against King and boots used to kick him — handed over to the grand jury.

Unlike the state prosecution, the federal case went beyond the visual evidence captured on the videotape and focus on what was in the minds of the officers when they beat King, sources said.

"This is an inquiry into whether Rodney King's civil rights were violated, which is a somewhat different slant that requires the Department of Justice investigators to inquire more into the character of the officers and whether they have a pattern of abusing blacks or a racial animus lurking in their past," Marchant said.

"It's less a focus on the assaultive aspects of the incident and more focusing on the motivation of the assault," Marchant said.

The decision to call King to testify before the grand jury was seen as an attempt to avoid what some have called the fatal mistake of not allowing jurors to hear from King in the Simi Valley trial.

Don't be the last to find out what's happening.

Avalon disputes loan defaults

■ Directors from vocational institutions are worried that a possible squeeze on loans could hurt a whole segment of potential students.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Vocational schools should be judged on performance, not the rate students default on loans, according to John H. Biggar of Austin.

Biggar, the president of four Avalon Vocational Technical Institutes in Texas, including one in Odessa, was in the area Wednesday to dispute "erroneous information" released by the Department of Education.

The DOE announced Friday that 600 institutions nationwide would be stripped of eligibility for federal financial aid because of student loan defaults.

Avalon in Odessa was listed as one of four area schools losing loan eligibility. The other three schools are Aladdin Beauty College in Midland, Aladdin Beauty College in Odessa, and American Commercial College in Odessa.

Several school directors disputed their high default rates listed by the DOE.

Biggar was slated to meet with representatives of the Texas Guaranteed Student Loan Association late Wednesday afternoon to "find some answers," as to why Avalon's 1991 default rate was listed as 70 percent.

"In 1989, our default rate was 19 percent. That means (according to DOE figures) it nearly quadrupled in 1991," he said.

Biggar said he was dismayed to see vocational schools being held accountable for student's nonpayment of loans when the institutions have no say in loan criteria for eligibility or collecting on loans.

The vocational institute president said that by definition, once a student has missed one payment, he or she is listed as having defaulted even after they have caught up on payments.

"We have also taken the word 'student' out of student loans," he said, noting that students' partial payments are returned to them.

"Some students cannot afford to pay $50 per month, but can pay $12.50 per week only to find that their partial payment is returned to them and a default claim is filed against them," Biggar said. "It is much easier to file a claim than it is to collect the loan payment."

"The school that processes the loan is left out of the picture until notice of extreme delinquency or a claim is made, but the school will be held accountable for the default," he said.

Maurice Howell, school director of American Commercial College in Odessa, agreed.

Howell said recent DOE reports gave vocational schools "a black eye we didn't deserve. It seems terribly unfair. I don't know of any other industry in the world that acts like this."

"I fail to see how George Bush is proving that he is the education president," Biggar said. "This could hurt a whole echelon of people not earning bachelor of arts degrees. Texas does not contribute one penny toward vocational training. I think this state really needs a vocational master plan — how we are going to do this, how we are going to serve the students and how we are going to pay for it."

The Avalon president said the Odessa institute employs 45 area people, "pays lots of property taxes, sales taxes, state franchise taxes, and we don't get a penny back."

He also said public schools "are pushing out vocational training" as they push for more rigorous academic courses.

"If the DOE is going to judge us by default rates, then let us have some say so in who gets the loan and let us help collect if we are going to be held accountable — right now that is all against regulations," Biggar said.

Since DOE reports were released Howell said he has "gone back and reviewed loans."

"We have found some students not paying their loans, yet they have been placed in jobs. I don't know when our responsibility ends," he said.

Biggar said putting the squeeze on loans to vocational institutions could hurt a whole segment of students who are not interested in pursuing baccalaureate degrees.

Howell said the schools serve people who need job training in a short amount of time. "They can usually be trained in six to nine months and get the skills they need," he said.

Students enrolled in vocational schools may attend six hours a day over a period of nine days, rather than one hour each day, three days per week at a college or

Commissioners debate closing of veterans' office

■ Commissioners in efforts to meet budget criteria are debating the status of the veterans service office.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

County commissioners struggling to tighten their budget are considering elimination of the Midland County Veterans Service Office.

"The court has not decided what to do with it ... We are equally divided," County Judge Charles "Bro" Seltzer said Wednesday.

Commissioners may opt to make the office part-time rather than closure or continuing full-time.

In light of budget restraints and weighing the practicality and use of the office, commissioners are expected to make a decision before the budget's due date of Sept. 1.

Travis Pipes Jr., acting veterans service officer, said a need exists to justify keeping the office open.

"I don't know what to say to impress people that this is an important office," he said.

The office provides assistance to veterans and dependents who reside in Midland County, especially in the area of helping prepare and submit financial claims, Pipes said.

About 25 to 30 people are assisted in person and about 40 to 45 others by telephone, he said.

Pipes said personal services rendered will not be available elsewhere if the office closes.

The leading force among commissioners who favor closing the office is Precinct 2 representative Guy McCrary.

"It provides information and referral and unquestionably a duplication of other agencies, federal especially, in that business already," he said.

Congressional offices and various federal veteran agencies are designated to provide assistance, he said.

"It is questionable why the county is in it to begin with," McCrary said.

"I don't feel like the office is justified given its historical mission and hope we can forgo costs of running that office," he said.

Looking at budget restrictions and services provided by the office, "this is one in my view that does not meet the test of survivability," McCrary said.

Louisa Valencia, who represents Precinct 3, said she is leaning toward reducing office operations.

"I am between half (part-time) and doing away with it. It's just a referral (service)," she said.

Ms. Valencia said she supports her view "because of the fact our money is tight and we are trying to evaluate whether we can have the same type of service" in another capacity.

She stressed the need to make the budget without raising the tax rate.

Cost of running the veterans office is about $24,400.

Commissioners Durward Wright, Precinct 1, and Win Brown, Precinct 4, remain undecided on the issue.

"At this point in time my position is not absolute. I think it should stay open at least on a part-time basis . . . I'm listening to the pros and cons at this time," Wright said.

"It is more of a referral office than anything so I question it being open full time," he said.

But, Wright concedes, if he can be shown why the office needs to remain open full time, then he would support current operations.

Brown did not indicate a leaning one way or another.

"I'm still open. I've looked at all options on this thing and it depends how needed it is to keep it open," he said, adding that arguments for both sides are understandable.

"The taxpayers are keeping it open and upper most in our minds (should be) that the taxpayers are getting a benefit," Brown said.

Brown said he is willing to hear evidence — not hearsay — from both sides before casting final a vote.

On the other side of county decision-makers, Judge Seltzer supports "keeping the office open and in its current existence."

Seltzer, siding with proponents of keeping the office open, that services cannot be handled by the county referring callers to a federal agency (if the office closes) where personal visits may be necessary.

But "how much money is left" in the budget and the majority votes "have got to prevail upon the other members of the court," he said.

"It's not anything anyone is taking lightly. We're fighting for nickels and dimes as it is now," Seltzer said.

Seltzer and Pipes have the support of local organizations that provide veteran services.

Sarah Boering, coordinator of emergency services for the Midland Red Cross, said the county office serves more than 12,700 local veterans who receive financial assistance of some sort — more than $5 million last year.

"To keep on receiving benefits, the veterans must re-validate annually. We've got a lot of veteran wifes and dependents of such an age that these people cannot do this themselves unassisted," she said.

A suggestion by commissioners, that if the office closes, veterans can use a 1-800 federal number isn't feasible, Ms. Boering said.

"Trying to handle an 1-800 or telephone referral service is beyond them," she said. The office is needed "to get the problem solved in a timely manner," she added.

'We've got to have a human being who cares, a liaison between our people and the bureaucrats," Ms. Boering said.

"You try to call one of those stupid 1-800 numbers (with recordings) and try to get through," she said.

If veterans and dependents who need personal assistance are not helped then Midland County risks losing possibly $500,000 in veteran claims the first year, Ms. Boering said.

The center operates on a full-time load and handles emergency calls making a part-time office impractical, she added.

G. Arthur McKay, team leader for the Vet Center, also supports keeping the office open.

The Vet Center only handles Vietnam-era and more recent veterans, he said.

And "the number of World War II and Korean veterans is considerable," he said.

If a "widow (of a World War II veteran) calls and asks about burial benefits, we can't (legally) help" except make a referral, he said.

In addition, the elderly or infirm person can't drive to Big Spring Veterans Administration for assistance as well, McKay said.

Pipes said without the office, some people may never receive help.

On Wednesday, Pipes said he was on his way to assist a veteran's widow who was on oxygen and could not visit the office and could probably not solve her problem by telephone.

Pipes was referred to the woman's need by the Department of Human Services, he said. The woman had been overpaid $1,700 in benefits but did not have the money to repay the government and relied on future checks.

She needed help — personal help — more than federal agencies in the area can provide, Pipes said.

nations for chamber offices and board of directors.

Olivia Farias of the Nominating Committee urged current officers who plan to run for re-election to let her know, and also asked members who wish to nominate someone for office or for the board or run themselves to contact her. She said current vice president positions coming open this year include education and networking as well as the treasurer and secretary positions.

Hernandez said ballots would be mailed out by Aug. 18 and a special luncheon meeting of the general membership would be held Sept. 23 to conduct the election.

Those interested in office or the board must be a member of the chamber for at least one year.

The installation banquet and chamber's eighth anniversary celebration will be held Oct. 22.

In other business:

■ The chamber has been asked to host the CAF Survivors party following Air Sho '92 Oct. 10-11. CAF colonels will be charged $5 each to attend, with the proceeds going to the MHCC Foundation.

■ The chamber is also working on a birthday celebration for Oct. 12, the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' arrival in the New World. Plans call for chamber members to offer refreshments and activities in Centennial Plaza on Columbus Day. In addition, Ms. Hernandez said FAMA will announce the name of the upcoming cultural park and break ground on the park during that same week. She said 198 entries for the name have been received to date.

■ Members have been invited to the first Cabrito Cookout in Fort Stockton Saturday by Lone Star Cabrito Inc. Ms. Hernandez urged members to encourage and support owner Wayne Kreis because "in the next two to three years, if this is a success, we can do a major economic development venture with him — a tanning factory producing gloves, belts, purses and boots. This could create 200 to 250 jobs."

The cookout is at the Howard Johnsons motel from 6 to 9 p.m. State officials and agricultural officials have been invited.

Howell and Biggar both noted that schools must have default rates higher than 35 percent for a period of three years to lose federal financial aid or loan programs.

Both Avalon and Commercial College have had default rates below 30 and 20 percent, respectively, in past years, according to the spokesmen.

"Don't think for a minute, that after operating in the Permian Basin for over 30 years we won't be able to serve people. That's not going to happen," Howell said.

According to Lockey, 66 plants were considered for the nine awards. The other winners include: City of Andrews plant; City of Alpine plant; City of Fort Stockton plant; City of Goldsmith plant; City of Kermit plant; City of Odessa South Dixie plant; and the U.S. Department of Interior's plants at Chisos Basin and Panther Junction in Big Bend National Park.

Authorities add county to bee quarantine

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Africanized honey bees found in Big Bend National Park has prompted authorities to add Brewster County to the state's bee quarantine area.

Texas now has 35 counties included in the quarantine that restricts movement of commercial bee operations, Paul Jackson, chief of the Texas Apiary Inspection Service, a unit of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, said.

The USDA-Agricultural Research Service confirmed a sample taken from a swarm of bees found July 22 in a trap near Rio Grande Village in the park did contain Africanized bees.

The quarantine allows beekeepers to move bee hives within but not out of the zone in an effort prevent the assisted spread of Africanized honey bees.

Lawmakers call for more funds for border patrol

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — A largely unchecked tide of illegal immigration across the U.S. border in the Southwest has overwhelmed the capacity of the Border Patrol to respond, House lawmakers from Texas and California said Wednesday, urging more funding for the embattled agency.

"Things are getting worse," Rep. Lamar Smith, R-Texas, said during an oversight hearing of the House Judiciary subcommittee on immigration issues. "Stemming the flow of illegal immigration is a daunting task with the limited resources at hand."

"At the same time, illegal aliens are getting more involved in crime, using more fraudulent documents and are staying in this country longer, siphoning off funds that should go to for the health care, education and public safety of American citizens," Smith said.

An agency of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Border Patrol's mission is to maintain control of the international boundaries between the ports-of-entry, preventing the illegal entry of aliens into the United States. Since 1986, the Border Patrol also has been required to help enforce the landmark Immigration Reform and Control Act (IRCA), which has further diluted its effectiveness, the lawmakers said.

During the hearing, the agency came under attack from human rights groups who alleged that Border Patrol agents have abused both undocumented aliens and U.S. citizens in the Southwest and in Florida.

Their charges come in the wake of the deaths of six illegal immigrants in the mountains near Temecula, Calif. when a bus carrying the aliens crashed during a high-speed chase by the Border Patrol.

"Border Patrol agents behave in the field as though they are accountable to no one," Aryeh Neier, executive director of Americas Watch, a human rights monitoring group, told the panel. "Beatings, rough physical treatment, intimidation tactics and verbal abuse are routine."

INS Commissioner Gene McNary, calling Border Patrol duty "a demeaning task with grave personal risk for the officers," vigorously defended the agency, which has been plagued with low morale.

"The record of the Border Patrol is exemplary," he told the panel. "Contrary to allegations of widespread abuse of aliens, the Border Patrol has a record of discipline and devotion to the preservation of human life. When human errors occur, there is a clear mechanism for review of complaints and investigation."

Funding for the Border Patrol increased 82 percent between 1986 and 1991, from $164 million to $299 million, and the number of agents has climbed from 3,166 to 4,240 during the same period. In February, the Bush administration said it would hire an additional 300 new Border Patrol agents. However, staffing along the Southwest border dropped by 9 percent between 1988 and last year, according to the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress.

But the agency still suffers from a shortage of personnel in key areas, such as the Southwest, and is also plagued by other problems in securing the borders, including aging equipment and vehicles, the GAO said.

"Staffing resources devoted to border control are insufficient to carry out their mission," said Harold Valentine, GAO associate director for administration of justice issues.

Lawmakers from border states, pointing to a growing social burden imposed by the tide of undocumented aliens, warned that immigration could become a "powderkeg" issue.

"It's just getting out of hand, and it's something we cannot afford any longer," said Rep. Alfred McCandless, R-Calif.

Man murdered to prevent testimony, drug agent says

PORT ISABEL (AP) — Members of a powerful drug smuggling organization killed a Brownsville eye surgeon to stop him from testifying against them, a federal drug agent said.

"The doctor didn't know he was in the NFL of dopers," said Armando Ramirez, chief of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration office in Brownsville.

"These guys get back and get even, and he was a loudmouth. The Juan Garcia Abrego gang, that's the ones who took him out, because he could testify against them," Ramirez said.

The body of Dr. Victor Leal, 52, was found Tuesday, tied to a chair, with his mouth and nose taped up, Justice of the Peace Bennie Ochoa said.

"There is no doubt it was murder. He was tortured," said Ochoa, who ordered an autopsy.

Federal prosecutors in Dallas last month dismissed charges that Leal had conspired with drug smugglers after they were unable to locate witnesses to testify against him and others, the Houston Chronicle reported Wednesday.

Federal indictments have charged the Abrego organization with smuggling Colombian cocaine. The indictments say 18,350 pounds of cocaine seized in Harlingen in October 1989 was being smuggled by Abrego's ring.

In 1984, Leal was convicted in the slaying of his brother-in-law, Dr. Narcisco Cortez, also of Brownsville. He received a 5-year prison sentenced after being convicted. The conviction was later reversed.

Ochoa said Leal had several punctures that appeared to have been caused by an ice pick or a similar instrument.

Texas will have $529 million in bank, Sharp says

AUSTIN (AP) — Such grim economic problems as an unemployment rate higher than last year's didn't keep State Comptroller John Sharp from announcing a glimmer of good budget news Wednesday.

Texas is projected to have a $529 million cash balance when the 1992 fiscal year ends on Aug. 31, he said. That's compared with a $168 million shortfall earlier projected for this midpoint in the two-year budget period.

Sharp emphasized that the cash balance is not a reflection of any change in the economy, and it doesn't show how much lawmakers will have to spend when they meet in regular session to draw up the 1994-95 budget.

However, he said it does show some good things are happening in state government.

Sharp said the projection is due largely to lower-than-anticipated franchise tax refunds to corporations; higher lottery proceeds, thanks to the game starting 50 days earlier than scheduled; and state agencies spending less than they were appropriated.

However, he also noted that the state is facing some bad economic news.

Oil and gas tax collections, along with motor vehicle tax collections, are running behind estimates. Texas' unemployment rate for June was 8.2 percent, 2.4 percentage points above the previous year.

"We're a long way from out of the woods," Sharp said.

The comptroller said the official revenue estimate will be issued later. But he said that it looks as though "natural growth" will give lawmakers about an additional $2 billion to spend in the next budget period.

Some have said the Legislature may be $5 billion short of the money needed to fund a current services budget, which would include such items as keeping funding commitments in current law and keeping up with growing human services caseloads and school and university enrollment.

Legislative Budget Board Director Jim Oliver said his staff likely will not prepare a formal current services budget for 1994-95, as it has for the past three budget cycles.

Officials will overturn primary results, chairman says

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin bureau

AUSTIN — Fred Meyer, chairman of the Texas Republican Party, said Wednesday that state officials plan to overturn the March primary results for state Senate elections and use a redistricting plan approved by the Legislature for the general election in November.

"As chairman of the Republican Party, I will not participate in perpetuating fraud on the people of Texas by certifying any candidates other than those who were selected in the March primary election," Meyer said. "Our attorneys are preparing a full range of legal options, including contempt charges, should these state officials attempt to tamper with the election process in Texas."

Secretary of State John Hannah, the state's chief election officer, has scheduled a news conference on redistricting for Friday morning, Delores Thompson, a spokeswoman in Hannah's office, said. However, Thompson would not give any details on the news conference.

A three-judge federal panel in Washington, in a ruling on July 29, approved the Legislature's redistricting plan for Senate elections.

Earlier, a three-judge panel in Austin had thrown out the Legislature's plan before for the March 10 primaries and wrote its own plan.

Gov. Ann Richards, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, Attorney General Dan Morales, Hannah and other state leaders have been discussing the options on what to do for several days.

One option is to use the court-ordered plan in November, then institute the Legislature's plan for Senate elections beginning in 1994.

Another option is to call for new primary elections using the Legislature's plan.

Speculation has focused on the idea of Hannah voiding the March primaries and calling upon the executive committees of the Democratic and Republican parties to choose candidates for the November election, using the Legislature's district boundaries.

In almost all cases, the political parties could name the winners of the March primaries as candidates in the altered districts for the November general election.

Meyer, however, said the Democrats would ignore the more than two million votes cast in the primaries and "overthrow democracy in Texas."

Democrats contend that the court plan, imposed in a 2-1 vote by three judges that Ronald Reagan appointed, favors the election of Republicans at the expense of minority groups.

The Washington panel of three judges, in a unanimous vote, agreed that the court's plan would result in the election of two fewer minority senators than the Legislature's plan.

Air Force investigates Stealth fighter crash

ALAMOGORDO, N.M. (AP) — Air Force investigators on Wednesday were probing the wreckage of an F-117A Stealth fighter that crashed during a night training flight, sending flaming debris into three trailers, officials said.

The Air Force would not speculate on the cause of the crash Tuesday night near Holloman Air Force Base — home of the Stealth fighters, said Bob Pepper, a spokesman at the base.

"A board will investigate the accident, and it could take months," he said.

Maj. Earl Shellnor, another Holloman spokesman, said the Air Force established a 1,200-foot perimeter around the crash site and declared it a "national security area" to protect both the public and the crash site.

The crumpled body of the craft was about 100 feet from La Luz Road, which leads to Holloman, Shellnor said.

The pilot, Air Force Capt. John B. Mills, was treated at the base hospital for scratches and was released, said Senior Master Sgt. Steve Taylor, a Holloman spokesman.

Mills had ejected from the $46 million airplane, landing about a mile away from the widely scattered wreckage.

Pepper said four volunteer firefighters suffered smoke inhalation and were taken to the base hospital.

Don Scott, who owns the three damaged mobile homes, said tenant Tom Dellacorino was at home when the airplane crashed and exploded, but he escaped harm. Scott said Dellacorino was terrified but had the presence of mind to shut off the utilities before fleeing.

"We're very fortunate this thing landed about 200 feet east of where Tom was at," Scott said.

One of the other trailers was home to Scott's daughter, son-in-law and two grandchildren, but he said the family was out having dinner when the plane crashed.

Scott said damage to the two inhabited mobile homes was not serious. But he said the third trailer, which he used as a storage building for his electronics company, appeared to be a total loss from a fire that erupted, as he looked on, about an hour after the crash.

"Just all of a sudden it burst into flames," he said.

Holloman said in a prepared statement that the fighter crashed about 9:20 p.m. Tuesday near the base's La Luz gate, approximately eight miles north of Holloman. The statement said the aircraft, assigned to the 416th Fighter Squadron, was on a routine training mission.

A retired Air Force colonel, who asked his name not be used, said he saw the crash. He said the airplane's engine made a strange noise before the fighter went down.

It was the first Stealth crash since Holloman became home to 56 of the fighters this year.

The first four Stealth fighters arrived at Holloman on May 9, beginning a two-month transfer from Tonopah Test Range, Nev.

The fighters replaced Holloman's F-15As, which were to be transferred to the National Guard and reserves.

There now have been four Stealth fighter crashes, said Capt. Monica Aloisio, an Air Force spokeswoman at the Pentagon.

"The first was a prototype on its acceptance flight and was flown by a Lockheed pilot. The pilot did survive," she said Wednesday in a telephone interview.

Aloisio said she did not know where or when the airplane crashed. Lockheed Aeronautical System Co. was the prime contractor for the Stealth fighter.

The second crash occurred July 11, 1986, near Bakersfield, Calif., she said.

"The pilot was killed. The Air Force was flying the plane then," Aloisio said.

The third airplane crashed Oct. 14, 1987, at Nellis Air Force Base, Nev., killing the pilot, she said.

Aloisio said she did not know what caused the crashes.

The Stealth, named for its radar-evasion capability, dropped the first bomb of the Persian Gulf War last year during air strikes over Iraq, but the Air Force never said how many of the airplanes went to the gulf.

The Stealth fighter's existence was first acknowledged by the government in 1988, about six years after it was delivered to the Air Force from the Lockheed Aeronautical System Co.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Financial pressures lessen, bringing you closer to your loved ones. Spend as much time as possible with offspring. Business opportunities will abound in November. By late December, the tide will turn in your favor where romance and money are concerned. An old friend provides fresh inspiration early in 1993. Refuse to let family members rush you into making an important career decision next April. Although a former employer makes an offer, other avenues could prove more profitable.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Robert Mitchum, actresses Stepfanie Kramer and Catherine Hicks, baseball player Tony Fernandez.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Move ahead with projects that have been on the back burner. Discretion is paramount. A relationship is changing. Only you can decide if this is to your advantage.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New facts come to light, forcing you to face an awkward or highly emotional situation head-on. Act on your conclusions. Someone you are crazy about feels the same way.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be careful not to allow emotional ties to influence your business decisions. A new formula is necessary for success. Others must be asked to take over certain commitments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Many people will seek your advice now; avoid sounding too judgmental. Give yourself a chance to profit from a wonderful idea. Dealing with a younger person is easier than anticipated.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Weigh your options carefully. Although this is a good day for working with the computer, major projects are best postponed. A long-distance message brings a change of plans.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Delays are part of the picture today. Hang in there! A personal relationship may be going nowhere fast. Go out of your way to soothe someone's feelings.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Act in a way that will make believers out of those who doubt your reliability. Take time out to help other people with their problems; a generous gesture will be rewarded tenfold.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A romantic relationship could be interfering with your studies. You had better step back and make sure you have your priorities straight. Success comes when you do your homework.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Someone may try to undermine your good work. Settle a romantic tiff before it escalates. Wearing your heart on your sleeve will let mate know you are serious.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take a chance on someone you meet today. A business matter will be decided in your favor if you adopt a give-and-take attitude. Remember that charity begins at home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A colleague may irritate you by pretending to share your expertise. Do not worry; an influential person will not be fooled. An innovative idea could lead to higher profits.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Begin a career push that will take you far. Be careful with higher-ups who seem to blow hot and cold; remember the pressure that management is feeling these days.

TODAY'S CHILDREN have enormous pride and will roar like a lion if they feel slighted or neglected. Conversely, these Leos will purr like kittens when they get their strokes. They are devoted to their family and treat their elders with respect. An inclination to be overly generous to their friends could interfere with these Leos' efforts to save money. Their excellent sense of direction makes them good navigators. They enjoy reading maps and planning new travel routes.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

5 ♡	Pass	6 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠

By elevating the bidding to an uncomfortably high level immediately, preemptive bids force opponents to make decisions when they do not have sufficient information for educated action. A certain amount of probing in the fog might be the result, frequently leading to poor contracts. But the very distribution that made the preempt attractive can work in the opponents' favor.

Left to their own endeavors, it is unlikely that North-South would have reached slam. And if they did, it is quite possible declarer would have gone wrong and conceded down one. When South bid freely over East's four spades, North raised confidently to slam despite the doubleton club. Without club control, South could not have an opening bid, let alone the values to contract for 11 tricks.

West led the king of clubs and declarer was not in love with the prospects of scraping together 12 tricks—it looked like there was an unavoidable loser in each minor suit. However, the fact that each defender held a long suit offered some hope.

Declarer won the opening lead in the closed hand, crossed to the nine of hearts and ruffed a spade. The ten of hearts, overtaken with the queen, provided the entry for another spade ruff. A diamond to the ace was followed by the ace of spades, on which declarer discarded a club, and declarer had a nearly complete count of the hand. West probably started with a 3-2-2-6 distribution.

It was a simple matter for declarer to cash the king of diamonds and exit with a diamond. On East's forced spade return, declarer ruffed and discarded the table's remaining club. Dummy then took the last three tricks.

Bryant Gumbel breaks his arm while pursuing hippopotamus

CAIRO, Egypt — Broken arms are nothing new to Bryant Gumbel — he's had more than eight. But this is the first time the "Today" show host can blame a hippo.

The vehicle carrying Gumbel and his crew crashed into a ditch at a game reserve Saturday while pursuing a hippopotamus during taping for a series from Africa. Gumbel injured his wrist.

"It was a hippo. We were trying to get a better look at it," the host of the NBC morning show told The Associated Press on Wednesday. "We tried to pursue it, but the car couldn't go where the hippo did."

The accident occurred Saturday at Masai Mara, a game reserve in Kenya, during taping for a six-day "Today" series that will be shown beginning Nov. 13. With his wrist wrapped in bandage, Gumbel did more work for the series Wednesday at the Giza Pyramids and Sphinx near Cairo.

He told an AP photographer he was embarrassed by the attention the accident provoked and refused to have his picture taken. He would not say how his arms were broken previously.

NBC spokeswoman Lynn Appelbaum said Tuesday that Gumbel would have the wrist X-rayed in Cairo.

"My suspicion is that it's a crack. I've broken my arm over eight times and I know what it feels like," the 43-year-old Gumbel said.

He said the mishap would not interfere with his schedule. Before Kenya, he had been to Zimbabwe and Botswana. Gumbel's next stop is Dakar, the capital of Senegal.

LONDON — Pop star Sting will marry his longtime girlfriend Trudie Styler this month, his publicist said Wednesday.

The couple's three children will attend a register office ceremony, which will probably take place near their mansion in Wiltshire in southern England, spokesman Keith Altham said.

"When I asked Trudie why they had decided to do it after so long together she said, 'Because he asked me,'" Altham said. The couple have been involved for a decade.

Sting, 40, the former lead singer of the rock group Police, is divorced from Irish actress Frances Tomelty, who appeared with Richard Harris in "The Field."

Sting and Tomelty have two children. Sting and Styler, 36, have three children — Mickey, 8; Jake, 7; and Coco, 2.

DALLAS — A member of the Waco singing group Hi-Five has been hospitalized in Miami after a car accident left him partially paralyzed, according to the group's record company.

New York-based Jive Records said Roderick Clark was in stable condition Wednesday at Jackson Memorial Hospital recovering from surgery. Hospital spokesmen refused further comment on the singer's condition, following a request by family members.

But Clark's brother, Rodney, told the Waco Tribune-Herald Monday that the crash broke the singer's neck.

Three other group members, Marcus Sanders, Tony Thompson and Treston Irby, sustained minor injuries in the multi-car collision that occurred last week.

The hip hop-R&B group was in Miami to promote their new single, "Playing Hard to Get." The song is the first single to be released from the group's second album, "Keep It Going On."

The fifth member of the group, Russell Neal, did not attend the promotional trip and was in Texas at the time of the accident, according to the company.

NEW YORK — Garry Trudeau isn't finished with Dan Quayle yet.

The "Doonesbury" cartoonist infuriated the vice president with a series of comic strips in November about a man who says he sold marijuana to Quayle in the 1970s. Trudeau said he is planning to return to the topic this fall.

Trudeau

Quayle

In the original cartoons, fictional reporter Rick Redfern gets a mysterious call from Brett Kimberlin, a real-life federal prisoner who was placed in solitary confinement after trying to speak to reporters about his claim.

The strips did not focus on whether Quayle actually bought drugs, but on whether there was a campaign to silence Kimberlin, who is serving a 51-year term for drug smuggling and bombing.

About 25 newspapers that carry "Doonesbury" refused to run the strips. Several criticized Trudeau for making such serious allegations in a cartoon.

"You could very easily make the case that he's a genuine political prisoner," Trudeau told Vanity Fair magazine. "From all the evidence we've seen, he's still in prison because Dan Quayle is vice president."

Trudeau said he wants to call attention to Kimberlin's lawsuit, now in the federal court of appeals.

Bush opposes abortion no matter the price

NEW YORK (AP) — President Bush reinforced his strong stand against abortion on Wednesday, telling a Catholic service organization that "no matter the political price . . . I will stand on my conscience."

"The president should try to set a moral tone for this country," Bush told the annual convention of the Knights of Columbus.

"And if you're looking to restore America's moral fiber, why buy synthetic when you can get real cotton?" he said.

Bush spoke as he began a day of cross-country campaigning in an effort to get his campaign in full gear.

Bush was travelling to Reno, Nev., to address a convention of the Disabled American Veterans for a speech expected to focus on defense issues and winding up in Colorado Springs, Colo., where he had a campaign event on Thursday.

Before leaving New York, Bush shook hands with fire fighters at Kennedy International Airport who put out a blaze that destroyed a TWA jumbo jet there last week. He viewed the plane's charred remains and later rode a yellow fire truck to Air Force One, which was waiting on the tarmac.

'I promise you again today, no matter the political price, and they tell me in this year that it's enormous, I am going to do what I think is right. I am going to stand on my conscience and let my conscience be my guide when it comes to matters of life.'

—President Bush

In the Knights of Columbus speech, Bush received a standing ovation when he vowed not to waver in his opposition to abortion and to continue to veto abortion-rights legislation.

"I promise you again today, no matter the political price, and they tell me in this year that it's enormous, I am going to do what I think is right. I am going to stand on my conscience and let my conscience be my guide when it comes to matters of life."

He also said he would oppose efforts to do away with requiring parental notification of abortion by teenage girls, claiming it shouldn't be harder to get ears pierced than to get an abortion.

Bush also won hearty applause when he said he would continue to press for a prayer-in-school amendment to the Constitution and legislation to give vouchers to parents who send their children to parochial and other private schools.

"My opponent won the teachers union endorsement by saying he's unalterably opposed — those are his words — unalterably opposed to letting Catholic parents and other private school parents have a fair share of education benefits," Bush said.

Clinton opposes spending public money on private schools, saying it would weaken the public school system.

Bush campaigned as the White House learned yet another lesson about the vulnerability of incumbents in this unsettled election year. Longtime Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, who had been chairman of the House Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, was defeated in a Michigan primary.

"We're sorry to lose such a great leader," said Bush campaign spokeswoman Torie Clarke. "It's a sign of it being a very tough year for everybody."

Bush, as he has done in other political speeches, sought to portray himself as the true agent of change.

"This is the year of change, change, change," Bush said. "The election will all be about change. We are poised to change America to make America even better.

"America needs a leader willing to do what's right, not merely what's politically popular at the moment," Bush said.

"Seven times I have ignored the polls and acted on what I believe is fundamental principle," he said.

Clinton supports a woman's right to choose an abortion, and Democratic leaders in the House and Senate are searching for enough votes to send Bush legislation that would guarantee abortion rights in case the Supreme Court overturns Roe v. Wade.

Southwestern Bell Telephone Company is asking the Public Utility Commission of Texas (PUC) for approval to offer a new optional service called Remote Access to Call Forwarding (RACF) on a permanent basis beginning September 7, 1992.

RACF is an optional service that is intended for use by residence and business customers. RACF permits a customer who subscribes to the optional service Call Forwarding to activate, deactivate or change the Call Forwarding destination from a location other than the customer's premises. In order for RACF to function, it must be accessed from a push-button telephone.

The proposed monthly rate for RACF for residence customers is $1.00, and the proposed monthly rate for business customers is $2.75. These rates are in addition to the rates for basic local exchange service and regular Call Forwarding. (The monthly rates for Call Forwarding are $2.10 for residence customers and $2.65 for business customers.)

RACF is expected to generate first-year revenues of approximately $643,000.

Persons who wish to comment on this application, which has been assigned Tariff Control Number 11316, should notify the PUC by August 28, 1992. Requests for further information should be mailed to the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757, or you may call the PUC Public Information Office at (512) 458-0256 or (512) 458-0221, teletypewriter for the deaf.

AUSTIN (AP) — Placekicker Lin Elliott, a rookie from Texas Tech, will miss the Dallas Cowboys Friday night exhibition game with the Miami Dolphins because of a pulled groin.

Elliott has been in a battle with Brad Daluiso for the placekicking job vacated when Ken Willis went to Tampa Bay under Plan B.

Nolympics batters USA

Dave Johnson of the United States is up and over in the decathlon high jump Wednesday, but his woes came in the shot put.

■ Wednesday is a dismal day for America in Barcelona on nearly all fronts.

By John Nelson
AP Sports Writer

BARCELONA, Spain — Dave Johnson almost fouled out of the decathlon Wednesday, a Dan-dy start to a dismal day for America at the Summer Nolympics.

A women's basketball dynasty is over, and America's boys of summer go home empty-handed. So does world 200-meter champion Michael Johnson, who failed to qualify for the final.

And now, the International Olympic Committee says Jud Logan, whose fourth place was the best for the United States in the hammer throw in 36 years, tested positive for steroids.

Even winning wasn't all it was cracked up to be. Ask Jennifer Capriati. She's the most unpopular woman in town after beating Barcelona's own Arantxa Sanchez Vicario with Spanish King Juan Carlos in the stands.

"It was tough out there, but I blocked it out pretty well, I think," said the 16-year-old Capriati, who plays Steffi Graf for the gold medal Thursday.

Dave Johnson, the one of "Dan and Dave" shoe commercial fame, was flagged for fouls on all three of his attempts in the shot put, which would have put him out of that part of the decathlon — any shot at a medal suddenly gone.

But one judge overruled the other, Johnson got another chance, and he was still in the hunt, ninth with five of the 10 events left on Thursday.

"I'm having an off day, but nothing major, fortunately," Johnson said. "But you never know what your body's going to do on any given day."

Any designs the U.S. women had on a third straight basketball gold were dashed in a 79-73 semifinal loss to the Unified Team. They play for the bronze medal Thursday.

"I think the majority of us have a feeling of letdown, disappointment, anger, frustration," U.S. team member Teresa Weatherspoon said.

And the baseball team lost to Japan 8-3 in the bronze-medal game. So much for the national pastime.

"We have nothing to show for this but fond memories," outfielder Jeffrey Hammonds said.

With 11 of the day's 12 medal events over, the Unified Team led with 84 total, 35 gold. The United States had 74 medals, 21 gold, and Germany had 57 medals, 18 gold.

One half of the ballyhooed "Dan and Dave" duo already is gone. Dan O'Brien, the world champion, blew each of his pole vault attempts at the trials and didn't even make the team.

Johnson barely avoided an eerily similar exit. He would have been allowed to continue in the event, but without any shot put points, he couldn't possibly have won even a bronze.

When the red flag went up on his third throw, Johnson stood in the circle, his hands on his hips.

"I asked him, 'Are you sure?'" Johnson said. "He said yes. But there were two officials watching the toe board, and one saw it as a foul, the other saw it as a fair throw.

"Fortunately, the larger and more powerful referee saw it and said it was a fair throw," Johnson said.

After the reprieve, Johnson threw

Oldster Lewis a ray of hope at 31

By Steve Wilstein
AP Sports Writer

BARCELONA, Spain — It didn't seem truly an Olympics until Carl Lewis sprinted toward the long jump pit Wednesday and launched into the air.

Here, finally, were those familiar long, graceful strides, the easy, swinging motion of his arms, the breathless flight, his legs churning faster and higher and farther than anyone else.

It took only seconds until he landed in the sand, but in that span Lewis soared 28 feet, 5 3-4 inches to qualify for the finals and send a message to those who might have thought he was getting too old at 31 for this sort of thing.

Not a chance. Lewis' mark on his one and only attempt was his best ever in qualifying and was nearly two feet longer than rival Mike Powell, the world record holder, who qualified with the fourth best mark — 26 8 1-2.

Lewis' jump also was easily the best of the day, beating runners-up Geng Huang of China and Konstantinos Koukodimos of Greece by exactly a foot and a half. A third American, Joe Greene, posted the lowest mark among the 12 qualifiers — 25 feet, 11 inches — on his third attempt.

The anticipated showdown between Lewis and Powell, who broke Lewis' streak of 65 straight long jump victories last year, may yet develop into drama. But on this day, with Powell nursing tightness in his lower back and right hamstring, the matchup was anticlimactic.

The crowd of 65,000 at Olympic Stadium cheered Lewis as if he were a hometown hero, an icon leaping to life from the sprinting pose plastered on billboards all over the city.

A sinus virus that weakened his whole body during the Olympic trials in June kept him out of the 100 meters, the glamor race that defines the world's fastest human, and out of the 200. He won golds in both those races in Los Angeles in 1984, won gold and silver in them in Seoul in 1988, and set the world record in the 100 last year.

His absence in the sprints this year created a big void in the Olympics and left open the question: Would he have won if he had been running?

Lewis looked completely recovered and back in form Tuesday, as if he could have gone from the long jump pit to the sprinters' blocks and won in both places.

He will get to show his speed as part of the U.S. 400-meter relay team, but in his only individual event Lewis made the most of his moment.

"My goal was my best qualifying mark ever, and I did that," Lewis said.

National title road begins

■ Midland opens play in the Girls' ASA under-14 National Softball Tournament with a surprising 5-2 win over a team from West St. Paul, Minn.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

Jerry Briggs makes sure his daughters work hard on their pitching. Wednesday night that was made obvious.

Briggs' daughter, Monica, of Bryan, Tex., struck out nine batters to help lead the Midland Blue Diamonds to a 5-2 opening round win over Sibley, of West St. Paul, Minn., at the Girls' National Amateur Softball Association of America 14-and-under Fast Pitch Softball tournament.

ASA rules say a team can pick up two players from outside its region to play on the national tournament team. Monica is one of those players. Her identical twin sister, Denise, who will pitch today at 8 a.m. when the Blue Diamonds face C.E. Woodworking, of Omaha, Neb., is the other pick up.

"We throw a lot of heat," Jerry Briggs said of his daughters. "When Midland invited us to play on their team, that put us on cloud nine."

Briggs said he'll work his daughters out up to five days a week in the winter for up to 90 minutes per day.

The Briggs twins' College Station Steelers team finished third at the state ASA tournament, freeing them to be picked up as free agents, so to speak, by any

Wranglers own broom

Staff report

WICHITA, Kan. — Wichita sent Midland downtown four times here Wednesday afternoon to send the Angels packing home with five consecutive losses.

The Wranglers pelted Midland by a 6-1 margin to complete the five-game sweep, narrowing the Angels' lead in the Texas League West to a meager two games over Wichita.

All of the six runs came on Wrangler homers, including two by Jay Gainer, who nailed a solo shot in the sixth and a two-run blast in the eighth. Gainer now has 18 homers for the season.

Rey Palacios got the Wranglers going with a two-run homer, his fifth of the season, in the second inning, and Vince Harris hit his first homer of the year in the third.

The Midland offense has disappeared. The Angels had only four hits in a 4-0

Pirates' streak climbs to six

Associated Press

NL Roundup

PITTSBURGH — Rookie knuckleballer Tim Wakefield made it two wins in as many big-league starts and the Pittsburgh Pirates won their sixth in a row, turning two double steals into a pair of three-run innings Wednesday night for a 6-2 victory over the New York Mets.

Wakefield (2-0), who beat St. Louis 3-2 last Friday in his major league debut, gave up seven hits and was in command except for the fifth inning, when he allowed the first two earned runs of his career.

Called up as a stopgap replacement for the disabled Zane Smith, Wakefield has a 1.06 ERA and 17 strikeouts in 17 innings. He struck out seven and walked four against a patchwork lineup that was missing injured outfield regulars Vince Coleman, Howard Johnson and Bobby Bonilla.

The Pirates, who didn't have a winning season against the Mets from 1983-91, are 8-1 against New York this season and 20-7 over the last two years.

Braves 5, Reds 1

ATLANTA — David Justice hit a two-run first-inning triple as Atlanta made it two straight wins over Cincinnati with a victory that increased their NL West lead over the Reds to 2½ games.

Sid Bream and Damon Berryhill added consecutive home runs in the fourth inning off Tim Belcher (9-10) as Atlanta won its fifth straight game. The Braves improved to 5-1 against the Reds in Atlanta going into the series finale on Thursday night; they are 0-6 at Riverfront Stadium.

Steve Avery (9-7) pitched 7⅔ innings, allowing one run and eight hits before Marvin Freeman got the last out in the eighth and Alejandro Pena worked the ninth. Avery walked two and struck out one to win for the seventh time in his last nine decisions.
off Belcher.

Jeff Treadway walked with one out and moved to second on a single by Pendleton. Justice then hit a drive to the wall in left-center and center fielder Bip Roberts crashed face-first into the 10-foot padded fence in a futile bid to make the catch.

Roberts was placed on a stretcher and taken to a hospital for x-rays, suffering from a whiplash-type injury. His condition was not immediately known, but there was no paralysis evident, said Braves team physician, Dr. David Crow.

Padres 4, Giants 1

SAN DIEGO — Gary Sheffield drove in the go-ahead run with San Diego's third straight single in the eighth inning and Darrin Jackson added a two-run double as Padres beat San Francisco.

Expos 5, Cubs 3

MONTREAL — Spike Owen and Delino DeShields each drove in two runs as Montreal beat Chicago.

Brian Barnes (3-3) gave up six hits and two runs in 6⅓ innings, striking two and walking four. Three of the walks came in the first inning, when Barnes loaded the bases with one out but escaped by getting Steve Buechele to hit into a double play.

Mel Rojas pitched 1⅔ innings, allowing Rick Wilkins' RBI single in the ninth, before John Wetteland got the last three outs for his 25th save as the Expos stayed within 2½ games of first-place Pittsburgh in the NL East.

Cardinals 5, Phillies 4

ST. LOUIS — Ozzie Smith had three hits, and Luis Alicea tripled home the winning run in the sixth inning as St. Louis beat Philadelphia for a three-game sweep.

With the score tied at 3, Craig Wilson singled off Bob Ayrault (0-2) and Alicea followed with his eighth triple of the season, scoring on a single by pinch-hitter Gerald Perry.

Donovan Osborne (8-6) pitched the seventh, allowing Lenny Dykstra's RBI single. Lee Smith got three outs for his National League-leading 26th save, striking out the side around two singles.

Hough finally wins 200th game

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Charlie Hough finally won his 200th career victory — in his sixth try — Wednesday night, pitching the Chicago White Sox to a 9-5 win over the Minnesota Twins.

The 44-year-old Hough (5-7) had suffered three losses and two no-decisions since victory No. 199 on June 28. It was his fourth shot at the milestone at home. He pitched 7⅔ innings, gave up five runs, four earned, on eight hits, walked two and struck out four.

After giving up two runs in the third, Hough settled down and retired 10 straight hitters until the Twins touched him for a pair of runs in the seventh.

In 794 games — including 376 starts — Hough's career record is 200-186. He ranks second among active pitchers in games and is one of only two pitchers in history to start and relieve in at least 350 games. The other is Dennis Eckersley.

American League

A's 4, Rangers 3

ARLINGTON — Oakland took over sole possession of first place in the AL West as reliever Dennis Eckersley extended his record to 39 straight saves in a victory over Texas.

Eckersley, who earlier broke Tom Henke's consecutive save record of 25, recorded the final four outs to preserve Ron Darling's 10th victory. Eckersley stranded a runner on third with two outs.

Oakland (64-43) moved a game ahead of Minnesota, a 9-5 loser to Chicago.

Darling (10-8) scattered six hits over seven innings before Jeff Parrett relieved him to start the eighth.

Royals 5, Angels 2

KANSAS CITY — George Brett had four singles to tie Frank Robinson on the all-time hit list and move ahead of Rogers Hornsby in total bases, helping Kansas City to a victory over California.

Brett's third four-hit game of the season pumped his average to .277, his highest since April 13, and raised his hit total to 2,943, tying him with Robinson for 21st all-time. His 4,715 total bases eclipsed Hornsby for 17th all-time.

Gregg Jefferies also had four hits to raise his average to a season-best .307 as Tom Gordon won his fourth straight decision after losing 13 of his previous 14.

Orioles 4, Tigers 0

BALTIMORE — Mike Mussina pitched a five-hitter and Mike Devereaux capped a four-run seventh with a two-run single as Baltimore beat Detroit for its sixth straight win.

Mussina (11-4) struck out nine and walked one in his third shutout of the season, the second against Detroit. He is 3-0 with a 0.63 ERA in five career starts against the Tigers.

Mussina allowed only one runner past first base in notching his fifth complete game of the season. He had won only two of his previous nine starts despite a 2.94 ERA.

Blue Jays 5, Red Sox 4

BOSTON — Pinch-hitter John Olerud singled home two runs off Jeff Reardon in the eighth inning, leading Toronto to a tempestuous victory over Boston.

Blue Jays manager Cito Gaston, starting pitcher Todd Stottlemyre and second baseman Roberto Alomar were ejected for arguing with umpires.

Mark Eichhorn (4-5) pitched two innings of one-hit, shutout relief. Tom Henke got three outs for his 20th save in 23 chances, his seventh straight season with 20 or more saves.

Toronto, which lost the first two games of the series, took a 3-0 lead in the first when Winfield doubled in two runs and scored on Derek Bell's triple.

Brewers 8, Mariners 1

MILWAUKEE — Bill Wegman allowed four hits over seven innings for his 10th victory and Milwaukee parlayed the wildness of Seattle left-hander Randy Johnson into a victory.

Wegman (10-8) was in control and Johnson (7-12) wasn't. Wegman gave up four singles, walked none and struck out three during his seven innings.

Johnson allowed six walks, running his major league leading total to 97.

Indians 4, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Glenallen Hill, in a 1-for-20 slump against the Yankees this season, singled home the go-ahead run in the 11th inning, giving Cleveland a victory and sending New York to its fourth loss in five games.

Cap Rock Electric Wins 95% Satisfaction Rating.

Cap Rock Electric just completed its annual survey to determine how members really feel about the management and operation of their co-op. The overwhelming majority (more than 95%) responded that they are satisfied with the way Cap Rock is being operated.

It came as no surprise to us that 94% of our members said quality of service and reliability are their top priorities when it comes to electric power. They're ours too. And we won the 1992 top service award from National Rural Electric Cooperative Association as further proof we continue to meet that goal.

We know our members sometimes take us for granted. As far as we're concerned, that's the way it should be. If we're doing our job -- taking care of your needs and dedicating ourselves to working in your best interests -- you shouldn't have to be concerned with your electric power needs. But like a good neighbor, we're always there when you need us.

We have published the results of all of the questions asked in our survey and you are welcome to a copy. Just pick it up at Cap Rock's office in Stanton or at our annual meeting in September.

Thanks for your support.

OLYMPICS: Pitching woes ruin USA's baseball hopes

(From 1C)

50 feet, 1¾ inches, a personal best, and moved to ninth from 13th after poor performances in the 100 meters and long jump portions of the event.

Spain, Czechoslovakia and France protested the judge's decision, but it was denied.

Johnson cleared 6-6¾ in the high jump, the next event, and finished fourth in his 800 meters heat, the final event of the day. He goes into the final day of the event with 4,154 points. Paul Meier of Germany led with 4,510.

Two Americans set Olympic records — Quincy Watts of Los Angeles in winning the gold medal in the men's 400 meters, and Mike Marsh of Houston in a semifinal heat in the men's 200.

Watts won in 43.50, defeating defending Olympic champion Steve Lewis of Santa Monica, Calif., breaking the mark of 43.71 he set in the semifinals on Monday.

Marsh ran his 200 heat in 19.73, only one-hundredth of a second off the world record, despite easing up at the tape. The previous Olympic mark of 19.75 was set by American Joe DeLoach in 1988.

The U.S. women's team breezed through the preliminary round of the basketball tournament, winning its first three games by an average margin of 45.7 points.

So, what happened against the Unies?

The U.S. women rallied from an 11-point deficit with a 14-1 run, but the Unified Team called timeout. And when it returned, it took control again. Elena Tornikidou's two free throws put the Unies up 71-67, and that was the end of the dynasty.

This is the first time medals will be awarded in baseball, and even the Americans realize they didn't deserve one.

"We haven't played good baseball here," pitcher B.J. Wallace said. "It was unfortunate timing. We're better than that."

America's biggest problem was pitching: 39 runs in five games.

Japan scored four runs in the second inning and, after the United States pulled within 4-3, got four more in the sixth. Adios, amigos.

Logan tested positive for the steroid Clenbuterol. Prince Alexandre de Merode, chairman of the IOC medical commission, said results of a backup test still were not known.

He said the IOC would take no action until it received results of the second test.

Capriati beat Sanchez Vicaro 6-3, 3-6, 6-1.

Graf beat American Mary Joe Fernandez 6-4, 6-2.

ASA: Midland comes from behind

(From 1C)

team lucky enough to find them.

Blue Diamonds' head coach Greg Shelton was thankful his team was able to advance past the first round with a win.

"They're so nervous out there," Shelton said of some shaky Blue Diamond defensive work. "This is the first big tournament they've ever been to. This is a once in a lifetime deal for these girls.

"For the most part in Midland we play recreational league softball. We don't play ASA, so to speak. This team together has probably played only 15 games. And some of these teams out here have played 140 together."

The Blue Diamonds fell behind early, 2-0, when Sibley struck for their only runs of the game in the second inning.

Down 2-1 in the fifth, Blue Diamond catcher Marissa Gortney smacked a one-out double, which was followed by a triple by Cortice Nave. Nave, who represented the winning run for Midland, scored when Sue Reed reached base on an error by Sibley first baseman Andrea Resch.

The Blue Diamonds scored their final two runs in the seventh inning. Gortney singled and came home on an error by the Sibley catcher. Gracie Villa scored Midland's fifth run after reaching on another error by Resch.

Briggs worked her way out of what could have been a fatal jam in the third when she struck out the final two batters while Sibley had runners perched on second and third. And in the sixth when Midland led by just a 3-2 margin, Briggs again mowed down the final two batters of the inning.

TOURNAMENT NOTES: The Briggs sisters are not the only set of identical twins on the Blue Diamond team. Marcie and Gracie Villa also share that distinction. ... Scores of other early first day games had the Broken Arrow (Okla.) Angels defeating the Frost Cutlery Falcons (Chattanooga, Tenn.), 10-0; the Saints, of Phoenix, Ariz., defeated the Cottage Grove (Minn.) Batbusters, 8-0; the Crackerjacks, of Santa Ana, Calif., downed Compuware, of Detroit, 12-1; the Breeze, of Sacramento, Calif., defeated Aphis Ready Mix (Vancouver, Wash.), 7-0; Heartland Hustle (Quad City, Ill.) defeated Lehigh Lightning, of Northampton, Penn., 5-0; Deep Water Express (Pasadena, Tex.) downed the Broken Arrow (Okla.) Spirit, 11-0, and the Irving (Tex.) Gems defeated the Lady Hustle-Red (Oakland, Calif.), 7-4. ... If the Blue Diamonds win their 8 a.m. game today, they're next game will be Friday at 8 a.m.; should Midland lose this morning's contest, they'll return to play at 4:30 p.m. today.

Prices fall

NEW YORK — Oil futures prices declined Wednesday amid steady selling on world energy markets.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in September, which lost 23 cents on Tuesday, lost another 17 cents to settle at $21.18 per barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Selling began overnight in foreign markets and carried over into domestic trading as dealers reacted to statistics from the American Petroleum Industry, which were released after the market closed on Tuesday.

The API report showed a larger-than-expected increase in stockpiles of light sweet crude, which triggered selling. Also contributing to the selling pressure were estimates released by the International Energy Agency that showed OPEC boosted crude pumping in July well above the cartel's agreed-upon limit.

Hotel sold

EL PASO — El Paso's landmark hotel, the Westin Paso del Norte, has been sold in an auction for $11.5 million to the bank that was foreclosed on it.

The only other bid for the historic, downtown hotel was $3 million in Tuesday's auction.

Commonwealth Assets Inc., a subsidiary of Bank One of Dallas, purchased the historic hotel that was restored when it was purchased by Franklin Land Resources, a former subsidiary of El Paso Electric Co.

The hotel was auctioned after Bank One, which held the first lien on the hotel, foreclosed on a $14.1 million note last month. Bank One ended up with the loan when federal regulators took over 30 MCorp banks in Texas in 1989. Bank One turned over some of the troubled assets it acquired, including the Westin loan, to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK — The dollar rose against most currencies Wednesday, helped in part by weakness in the British pound.

The dollar traded at 127.50 yen in New York, up from Tuesday's late bid 127.25.

The British pound fell in New York to $1.9075, off from $1.9195 late Tuesday.

Stocks retreat

NEW YORK — The stock market gave ground in relatively quiet trading Wednesday, faced with continuing resistance from sellers after last week's sharp rally.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 19.18 points to 3,365.14.

Greenspan: Recovery is minimal

Federal Reserve chairman testifies before Senate panel

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve downgraded its assessment of business prospects around the country Wednesday, with Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan conceding that the economic recovery is "quite minimal."

In its latest nationwide survey of the economy, the Fed declared that "economic activity has been uneven" in recent weeks with some pockets of strength but many more areas where activity is stagnant or declining.

The new Fed survey of its 12 regional banks was in stark contrast to a review just seven weeks ago that had sounded the most optimistic assessment of the economy's prospects since the recession began in July 1990.

However, since that report the national unemployment rate has shot up to an eight-year high of 7.8 percent and a variety of statistics has flashed warning signals that this year's rebound could be in danger of stalling out, just as a similar recovery did in 1991.

Greenspan, testifying before Congress Wednesday, insisted that the economy is still advancing but said "there are definitely very significant pressures which are holding the economy back."

But he insisted that this year's weakness is not as severe as last year's when the recovery faltered.

"I do wish to make the distinction between an economy that is going down, or an economy that is completely stagnant," Greenspan told the Senate Banking Committee. "The economy is scarcely moving in a way which we consider adequate, but it is moving forward."

The Fed report will be used as the basis of discussion when Fed policy makers next meet Aug. 18 to review interest rate strategies.

The Fed last cut rates on July 2 and many economists believe that a further reduction is in the offing if economic signals do not show signs of strengthening. A key report will be unemployment for July, which will be released Friday. Many economists believe it will show only a slight dip in the unemployment rate, perhaps down to 7.7 percent.

The central bank has already cut rates 23 times in the past three years, which has driven mortgage rates to their lowest level in nearly two decades.

However, the Fed survey said that so far the latest rate reductions have had little impact on home sales although they had spurred another round of mortgage refinancings.

Where the Fed's June report on the economy had found manufacturing showing strength throughout the country, the new report said that growth in factory output varied widely from region to region and from industry to industry.

Conditions push home prices down

WASHINGTON (AP) — The weak economy pushed home prices down further in California and many parts of the Northeast during the spring while sales plummeted in Georgia and 15 other states, the National Association of Realtors reported Wednesday.

However, bucking the overall weak trend, home sellers in the Pacific Northwest and parts of the Midwest enjoyed double-digit price increases as low mortgage rates lured first-time home buyers into the market.

The Realtors survey depicted a generally weak national sales market in the spring, reflecting the anemic economic recovery and persistent high jobless rates.

Nationally, sales advanced a tiny 1 percent from April through June, compared with the same period a year ago, while the price of homes rose just 2.3 percent, failing to keep up with inflation, which was up 3.1 percent over the same period.

Some analysts forecast that home prices would remain constrained over the next decade, reflecting the fact that their are fewer first-time home buyers in the market.

"In addition to the weak recovery, housing is facing a demographic problem," said David Wyss, chief financial economist for DRI-McGraw Hill Inc., in Lexington, Mass. "Not that many babies were born in the 1970s and we think this will keep prices relatively weak over the next 10 years."

California, whose economy has been particularly hardhit by the 1990-91 recession, posted some of the sharpest price declines of any state, led by a 3.6 percent decrease in Los Angeles home prices and a 3.1 percent drop in the San Francisco area.

For the April-June quarter, home sales fell by 9.9 percent in California, the third-worst showing of any state, the Realtors said in their survey. The biggest sales decline was a 27.6 percent plunge in Georgia followed by a 13 percent drop in Delaware.

By contrast, sales were up 28.2 percent in Utah, the biggest improvement of any state, followed by gains of 25.9 percent in Wyoming and 17.7 percent in New Mexico.

The cities of Richland, Wash., and Spokane, Wash., bucked the depressed price trend, posting best-in-the-nation gains of 21.7 percent and 19.7 percent.

Judge reduces Milken's sentence

NEW YORK (AP) — A federal judge on Wednesday reduced Michael Milken's 10-year prison sentence, making the junk-bond financier at the center of Wall Street's biggest scandal eligible for freedom in seven months.

U.S. District Judge Kimba Wood cited Milken's cooperation with federal investigators and his work tutoring prisoners as reasons for reducing his expected prison time to two years from three years

Milken, 46, already has served 17 months in a minimum-security prison in Pleasanton, Calif. Wood's ruling means he can be released in March 1993.

Wood's original sentence exceeded other punishments in the 1980s scandals that resulted in dozens of prosecutions and brought down Milken's firm, Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

Milken instead will serve about the same amount of time as Wall Street felon Ivan Boesky, who served two years and 11 days in federal prison after admitting he engineered a huge insider-trading ring. He gave prosecutors information that led to Milken's downfall.

Milken in 1990 pleaded guilty to six felony counts for trading-related activities and agreed to pay $600 million in penalties, the most ever by an individual.

In her decision, Wood cited Milken's testimony for the government in June at the trial of former Drexel colleague, Alan Rosenthal, who was convicted on some counts but acquitted of the most serious charges for fraudulent trading included in Milken's guilty plea.

"If society did not reward cooperation by the worst criminals ... many serious crimes would go undetected and-or unpunished," Wood wrote.

Award-winning firm agrees to takeover

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Two years after winning the prestigious Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award, the Wallace Co. has agreed to a takeover by a Louisiana-based pipe fabricating company.

Shaw Industries will pay between $8 million and $10 million for the Wallace Co., a private, family-owned operation that distributes pipes and valves.

The Wallace Co. filed for bankruptcy protection in January after finding itself with dwindling inventories and strapped for cash. Creditors' claims against Wallace will affect the final price, which the court must approve.

The Wallace Co. has been searching for a buyer for the past several months, said one source close to the company. It needs a cash infusion because sales are lagging.

The tough times represent a sharp reversal of Wallace's moment of glory just two years ago when it won the quality award named after the former secretary of the Commerce Department.

Company officers were big draws on the lecture circuit and began leading tour after tour through its offices. The Wallace Co. quickly became a symbol of America's success at adapting Japanese management methods.

But the tours, speeches and interviews kept company officers from turning the already troubled company around, said consultant Gail Cooper, who was hired to get the company out of financial troubles.

Shaw has 1,100 employees, a plant in Texas City, three in Louisiana and one in South Carolina. It prepares pipe for use by putting on threads or coating them.

Bret Talbot, vice president and chief financial officer of Shaw, said no decision has been made regarding the future of the Wallace Co. offices or its staff.

"We are very excited to have the opportunity to put our corporate strengths to work on behalf of the Wallace Co.," said James M. Bern hard Jr., president of Shaw Industries.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Home improvements can be excluded from profit

By Bill Doyle

Q: When you explained how people 55 and older escape paying tax on profit from the sale of their homes, you wrote that the "once-in-a-lifetime exclusion" is available if either spouse has reached age 55 and if the couple have lived in the house as their "principal residence" for three of the five years before the sale.

Doyle

I have no argument with that. However, you added, "That provision of the Internal Revenue Code allows you to exclude and not pay federal income tax on up to $125,000 of the capital gain. If your profit is, say, $126,000, you're stuck for tax on $1,000."

Aren't you allowed to deduct major expenses — new roof, new heating system, etc. — from the $1,000?

A: Those expenses aren't "deducted." They are added to the house's "basis" — cost for tax purposes — thereby reducing or even eliminating the taxable profit.

Let's say you bought your home on Old Woodchuck Lane at a total cost, including closing fees, of $27,560. Over the years, your costs for additions and improvements — including a new roof, heating system and many other things — totaled $14,842. Your basis is $42,402.

Now, you sell. If your proceeds from the sale, after Realtor's commission and other expenses, come to less than $167,402, you owe no federal tax. Why? Because you can exclude up to $125,000 of the profit from capital gains tax.

With this in mind, wise taxpayers keep careful track of the cost of all additions and improvements they make to their homes. And I do mean "all" — even the small ones. Maintenance and upkeep costs cannot be added to your home's basis. But every dime you put into additions and improvements can.

Q: How can the average married couple possibly keep an accurate cost record of all the additions and improvements made to their home over, say, 30 years? That seems to be an almost impossible task.

A: It's not nearly as difficult as you seem to think. My blue-eyed finance officer and I have accomplished it quite easily.

Every January, I mark an envelope "Additions to home's basis" and note the year. All sales slips, receipts, etc., for home improvements and additions made during the year go into that envelope. At the end of the year, I total them and add that number to the cumulative total basis from the previous year's envelope.

We keep all basis records, just in case the Internal Revenue Service questions a return after we have sold a home or other capital asset.

Q: We got a shock when I casually mentioned to a tax preparer that we hope to sell our two-family house. He said the IRS considers the half we rent out to be a business and, as such, half of our profit will be taxable as a capital gain.

In our situation, that would mean $20,000 or more in additional tax. Isn't that exorbitant?

A: Your profit would have to be huge for you to be stuck with such a large tax bill. The maximum tax on long-term capital gains — property, securities and other capital assets owned for more than one year — now is 28 percent.

When you sell a multifamily house, part of which was your primary residence, you are allowed to take the once-in-a-lifetime exclusion from capital gains tax only on the profit from the sale of the part in which you lived. The profit on the rest is subject to tax as a capital gain.

A full half of the profit might not be hit with that tax. The profit should be apportioned to take into account your living quarters, the rented portion and common areas: lawns, back yard, entry hall, etc.

The more of the common areas you can get into your usage, the more that will be eligible for the $125,000 tax exclusion. That's a difficult calculation, best handled by an accountant experienced in real estate matters.

Many believe the haute-couture fashion industry is slowly dying due to the numerous designers introducing ready-to-wear collections. For fall/winter collections, designers such as Emmanuel Ungaro, Yves St. Laurent, Guy Laroche, Givenchy, Gianni Versace and Karl Lagerfeld for Chanel presented their ready-to-wear collection designs (respectively left to right).

Haute couture blurring a bit

By Bernadine Morris
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — The demise of the haute-couture branch of the French fashion industry has been as widely heralded over the years as the death of the novel or the theater. The subject came up repeatedly during the proliferation of inventive clothes at the fall and winter showings. There was an unusual mixture of wearable styles and rather outrageous ones that could percolate down to the level of ready-to-wear.

The line between the two fashion areas seems to be blurring anyway. On July 25, the day before the showings officially began, Pierre Berge of Yves Saint Laurent introduced a new ready-to-wear collection by Robert Merloz.

Later, Pierre Cardin promised to combine his ready-to-wear shows with his couture presentations next year. But Thierry Mugler beat him to the runway. He introduced his first couture collection at the same time that he showed his ready-to-wear.

Berge said, as he did last season, "The couture will be finished by the year 2000." Nevertheless, Yves Saint Laurent received his best notices in years. The low-key elegance was tempered with midriff-baring bra tops that represented the newest fashion beat.

Also giving substance to the season were Christian Lacroix with his imaginative clothes that never repeated the same ideas; Karl Lagerfeld, who has taken Chanel to the cutting edge of fashion; and Emanuel Ungaro, with his surrealist mode. Three outstanding Italians were Gianni Versace of Milan, with his super-sexy clothes; the Rome-based internationalist Valentino, with his memories of the silver screen; and Gianfranco Ferre, who shows ready-to-wear in Milan but is getting comfortable with the opulence of Dior.

In fact, the quality of the clothes throughout the week was by no means an embarrassment. Through coverage by newspapers, magazines and television, the clothes and the fashion houses responsible for them were disseminated throughout the world. This is the major reason for the continuation of the couture: the publicity it generates.

In the showings, themselves, there was a balance between short and long skirts, a renewed emphasis on pants and general agreement on the importance of black by both trendy and traditional designers.

The number of women who will buy and wear couture clothes is, of course, limited. It is not only that prices of individual styles run into five figures and that the fittings are tedious. Couture clothes always have been expensive. But in recent years, quality ready-to-wear clothes by the same designers became widely available. Even enthusiastic couture fans who sit in the front rows of fashion shows supplement their wardrobes with ready-to-wear.

Both Cardin and Mugler insisted it was logical to present couture and ready-to-wear collections at the same time because the same people bought them. A number of other designers agreed that their couture styles were bought mainly for special occasions, like weddings. Thus, sportswear has practically disappeared from the runways, with the exception of a few casual styles in luxury materials.

Presidential election is victory for lefties

By Erma Bombeck

Bombeck

This election year will go down in history as an era when Americans had no choice. Whomever they elect — George Bush or Bill Clinton — they will still get a left-handed president. And don't think Ross Perot could have saved them. He's left-handed too.

If you think this is a small thing when stacked against solutions for health care, the deficit, environmental problems and educational needs, think again.

Left-handed people are different. Harpo Marx was left-handed. The man went through life communicating with a bicycle horn. Jack the Ripper was left-handed. Never held a steady job in his life. Michelangelo was left-handed. I'm sure his manual preference turned him into a whiner. It is said the sculptor-painter complained of "diarrhea, coughs, short-windedness, snoring, lumbago, hernia, exhaustion, dizziness, pain in the side, weak teeth, spotted eyes, weak hearing in one ear and singing in the other."

Those of us who are married to lefties know from experience that they have limitations. They cannot use a can opener. They are incapable of returning a phone to the cradle like normal people; it is always backward. Some of them can't get out of a room because they're turning the handle the wrong way. We're considering a man for the White House who won't be able to cut his own toenails because most scissors are designed for right-handed people.

I can see our president attending a formal banquet at a summit meeting and saying to the head of a country, "Are you left- or right-handed? Because if you are right-handed and sit on my left, I will clip you in the kidneys every time I cut my meat."

Lefties struggle in a right-handed world. It's like seeing life through a mirror. The light switches are on the wrong side, the dials on the car radio are not easily accessible, and it's heartbreaking to watch them drink out of mugs with the rude sayings facing away from them.

No one likes left-handers ... especially right-handed tennis players who think they are playing to their opponent's backhand and are playing to their forehand. By the time you figure this out, you have lost the game.

What is really scary about all of this is how we got two left-handers running for the presidency in the same year. This clearly signifies the emergence of the Lefty Party. I think it's something that bears watching in future elections. Paul McCartney is left-handed. And he inhales.

DEAR ABBY

Barber's mirror reflects happy customers

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: As a female barber, I've often heard complaints such as the one "Mad in Biloxi, Miss." wrote to you about: barbers who turn their chairs away from the mirror during the haircut, so the customer can't see what the barber is doing until the haircut is finished.

I do not agree with that practice at all. I work in a little town in Oregon, and I have always maintained that a really good haircut must be a collaboration between the barber and the customer. Any input from the customer during the procedure is greatly appreciated.

When I get a customer in my chair, the first thing I do is turn the chair around so the customer is facing the mirror. (I also use a side-view mirror to help get the sides even.)

I work using the mirrors for guidance so the customer can watch what I'm doing and comment if he (or she) has anything to say.

I try to please the customer. I may not get it right the first time, but I always encourage the customer to be honest with me, and I am grateful for a second chance. By approaching my job as a collaborative effort, it increases the chances for success.

"Mad in Biloxi's" barber must have come from the old school of barbering. They have a saying, "The only difference between a good haircut and a bad one is two weeks." — SUSAN LEDWIDGE, WILSONVILLE, ORE.

DEAR SUSAN: Terrific! If our governor (Pete Wilson) ever needs a haircut when he's in Oregon, I'll recommend you.

DEAR ABBY: This is for the woman who said she'd rather die than have a mastectomy. She is so wrong, but who am I to argue with a woman who wants to die?

There are greater tragedies in life than having a breast removed. I know from experience. Losing a breast did not make me a lesser woman. I wear a prosthesis. I also wear a wig and glasses, and if I live long enough to need a hearing aid, I'll get one. And gladly!

Since my mastectomy, I've seen my children graduate from college, I became a grandmother again, and I've done a lot of things that one puts off until "tomorrow." None of my friends has deserted me, my kids say I'm a tough old bird, and my husband calls me "Beautiful." — GLAD TO BE ALIVE

DEAR GLAD: Your husband is right — you are beautiful. God bless you.

DEAR ABBY: For the last 15 years, my wife has had a "friend" (I'll call her "Lucy") who has had marital (and other family) difficulties. Lucy calls my wife incessantly to complain about her problems, in spite of the fact that she is supposedly receiving professional help from multiple sources. She has kept my wife on the telephone for hours at a time.

Unfortunately, my wife is the sympathetic type, and she doesn't know how to permanently rid herself of this burden. She is also constantly doing favors such as marketing for Lucy, since she spends so much time feeling sorry for herself, she can't seem to get anything accomplished.

How do I free my wife from this parasite? — FRUSTRATED AND ANGRY IN ROCHESTER, N.Y.

DEAR FRUSTRATED AND ANGRY: You can't. If your wife permits herself to be constantly dumped on, SHE needs to get some instruction in assertiveness. I recommend it.

DEAR ABBY: I need you to settle an argument. My brother was a heavy smoker. He died of lung cancer when he was 48 years old. I had tried to get him to stop many times, but he said he enjoyed smoking and wouldn't quit.

Once when we were talking (and he was smoking one cigarette after another), he laughed and said, "Don't buy me any flowers when I die — just put two cartons of Camels in my casket." Well, that's what I did.

My family is upset with me. But I did what he asked me to do. Was I right or wrong? If I was wrong, I'll apologize to my family. — IN THE DOGHOUSE

DEAR IN: You carried out your brother's wishes. No need to apologize.

People are eating them up! For Abby's favorite recipes, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Cookbooklet No. 1, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Uniforms lure students

N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — Some Japanese public senior high schools are introducing fashionable uniforms with the aim of luring students away from private schools.

At a time when the school-age population is decreasing, many public high schools are seeking to compete with private schools by offering new courses in foreign languages, data processing and other subjects. Others, such as Fukagawa Senior High School in Tokyo, are trying to appeal to students with smart-looking uniforms.

"Unlike the old days, some students today choose schools by uniform," said Rokusuke Tatsuta, principal of Fukagawa High.

The school's new uniform, introduced at the start of the school year in April, was designed by fashion designer Kansai Yamamoto.

"The material is good and doesn't get out of shape. We also had the emblem elaborately designed," he said. The emblem is emblazoned with the words, "Where there is a will, there is a way" written in gold letters in Latin.

Saitama Prefectural Koshigaya Minami Senior High School near Tokyo also has new uniforms.

"The way the cuffs are turned is fashionable and so is the Hanae Mori mark on the golden buttons," said Shoko Fukuda, a teacher at the school.

Instead of introducing uniforms bearing the names of well-known designers, Misato Senior High School, also in Saitama Prefecture, had its teachers design uniforms with sweaters, polo shirts and knit vests that go with the jackets, pants and skirts.

The uniforms are also popular with mothers.

"It looks like uniforms worn by girls of private high schools and I think it's great looking," said the mother of one Misato High student.

The new stylish uniforms also appeal to teachers and parents because they say students who used to tamper with the old ones to make them suit their own tastes, a violation of school regulations, have stopped the practice.

Japanese schools are known for applying strict dress codes that even specify such minute details as the color of socks, the width of pants, the length of skirts and, at some schools, even what kind of underwear students wear.

"Many students used to change the old uniform, but since the introduction of the new one, it hasn't happened," a mother of a Fukagawa High student said.

Serbs force refugees from their homes in 'cleansing' effort

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Some 300 women, old men and children walked through a no-man's land to reach the battle-scarred capital Wednesday after being forced from their homes by Serb militiamen.

The refugees said the Serbs drove them by bus from Rogatica, 52 miles east of Sarajevo, early in the day, and forced them to walk most of the last five miles between Serb and Bosnian government-held lands.

"They told me to get out and crawl," said Bajro Misic, who lost his legs in an accident 10 years ago and arrived in Sarajevo with one artificial limb.

He raised his hands to reveal palms bloodied from crawling along the mountain road.

The refugees arrived just before curfew Wednesday night as mortars began pounding Sarajevo. The Muslim-led government has been battling for most of a week to break the Serb encirclement of the city. It has failed so far:

Over a million Bosnians have fled their homes in the fighting that pits Serb nationalists against the mostly Croat and Muslim forces of the Bosnian government. Many of the refugees were forced out in "cleansing" campaigns intended to create ethnically homogenous areas. Most of these accusations have centered on the Serbs.

The Rogatica refugees, fed at a bombed-out school and then taken to a relief center, said they had been held for up to two months at a school in their hometown.

The refugees said they generally were well-treated there, but Misic said Sakib Gagula, a friend who helped him get around, had been shot at point-blank range by the Serbs.

"They pointed the gun and pulled the trigger," said Misic. Others confirmed the account.

On Wednesday, the Serbs entered the school and ordered the people to leave, with no explanation, they said. Hajrija Latovic, a Muslim woman, said a soldier hit her in the ribs with his rifle butt.

Accounts of ethnic cleansing and of concentration camps allegedly run by some groups led acting U.S. Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger to call Wednesday for a war crimes investigation for Bosnia-Herzegovina.

'Our political position in the world so far has been to sit, wait and drink coffee, waiting for Western military intervention," said Hajrudin Somun, a Bosnian presidency official. How long were we supposed to wait? Our people in Sarajevo have to organize themselves better and defend themselves, and the world has to accept it.'

—Hajrudin Somun, Bosnian official

The United States also sought an urgent meeting of the U.N. Human Rights Commission in Geneva.

The leader of Bosnia's Serbs denied his forces were operating concentration camps. In a telephone interview from his headquarters in Pale, outside Sarajevo, Radovan Karadzic said humanitarian groups "are welcome to see the truth for themselves."

The Muslim-led Bosnian government also invited the United Nations, Red Cross and journalists to inspect its prisoner-of-war camps.

Ethnic Serbs have captured about two-thirds of Bosnia's territory since Muslims and Croats in the republic voted Feb. 29 to break away from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia. Sarajevo radio, quoting Bosnian war headquarters, said Wednesday the death toll had risen to 8,272. Some accounts have put the number as high as 50,000.

With no sign of any Western military support for the Bosnian government, it began a counteroffensive last week to break the Serb stranglehold on the capital.

The district commander for Bosnian forces, Mustafa Hajrulahovic, said his fighters had "taken up positions from which we can begin to unblock Sarajevo."

But his assertion appeared overly optimistic. The undergunned Muslim forces' artillery are in Visoko and Travnik — northwest of Sarajevo — and they can not be used effectively until a main force of fighters breaks out of the city.

"Our political position in the world so far has been to sit, wait and drink coffee, waiting for Western military intervention," said Hajrudin Somun, a Bosnian presidency official. "How long were we supposed to wait?

"Our people in Sarajevo have to organize themselves better and defend themselves, and the world has to accept it."

Fighting intensified Wednesday afternoon and at least two heavy mortar shells landed near Bosnian military headquarters. Others hit near a U.N. radar site on a hill over the city, where six peacekeepers were wounded last week.

Bosnian defense officials claimed they had cut a supply route over Trebevic, a mountain south of Sarajevo, to Serb headquarters in Pale. They also said they took a part of the Serb-held western suburb of Ilidza and made inroads into another suburb.

Serbs denied the Muslim gains, and in a statement said Bosnian "government forces suffered their worst defeat yet."

Sarajevo radio said a Yugoslav government MiG-21 attack plane was downed over Smetovi, 30 miles northwest of the city, and another MiG-21 dropped cluster bombs on Muslim-Croat positions on Mt. Igman, to the southwest. There was no way to confirm the report.

In Geneva, meanwhile, the United States called for an urgent meeting to study allegations of "potentially massive human rights violations" in Bosnia.

Abortion debate continues to divide Germany

BERLIN (AP) — As reunited Germany nears its second anniversary, Germany's eastern and western halves remain deeply divided over abortion.

The Supreme Court this week blocked a liberal new law that would have established a single rule nationwide and scrapped the restrictive practices of the former West Germany.

Western Germany still requires a woman to get a doctor's approval for an abortion, and she must show it's necessary for health reasons or other specified hardships.

In eastern Germany, the old Communist rules remain in force that give women an unquestioned right to an abortion within the first three months of pregnancy.

Politicians, church leaders and others on Wednesday made varying predictions about the court's final ruling after a hearing this fall.

Whatever the legal decision, it's unlikely to end the debate.

"After this decision, women will go to the barricades again," said Gisela Boehrk, the women's affairs minister in the state of Schleswig-Holstein.

The new law, passed by Parliament in June, would have given women the right to an abortion within the first 90 days but would have required a counseling session three days or more before the abortion.

Conservative Bavarian Gov. Max Streibl said he hopes the Supreme Court will throw out the entire new law.

"Then the protection of unborn life could become reality in united Germany this year," Streibl said. He had joined other conservative politicians in challenging the law.

Before the two countries reunited on Oct. 3, 1990, they had been unable to decide which abortion practice should prevail.

U.S. Marines set up shop for mass desert maneuvers

KUWAIT CITY (AP) — Under a blazing sun, a constant rumble shook the port of Shuwaik on Wednesday as landing craft shuttled among four offshore ships to bring in the 11th Marine Expeditionary Unit's needs for 10 days of war games.

The vessels disgorged a stream of bulldozers, forklifts, ambulances, generators and ammunition.

Meanwhile, a seven-member Navy unit put Kuwaiti troops through the paces of commando-style beach landings in craft known as Rigid Inflatable Boats.

The Americans hope the Kuwaitis will buy the $95,000 boats for their own navy, but the government has been in no rush to buy weapons. There is competition among the Americans, British and French for arms contracts.

The Kuwaitis were thrilled, whipping the boats through tight circles in the Persian Gulf.

More than 5,000 U.S. troops from all branches are to take part in the desert exercises with a like number of Kuwaitis.

The United States doubled the number of soldiers taking part after Iraq resisted U.N. weapons inspections mandated by the cease-fire agreement which ended the war. Baghdad also restated its claim to Kuwait.

The additional troops will use equipment left here after the war. They are due to start arriving next week.

The Marines expect no clashes with Saddam Hussein's forces.
