Tylenol banned in Chicago as search continues

CHICAGO (AP) — Mayor Jane Byrne banned the sale of all Tylenol in Chicago on Saturday and hundreds of frightened residents turned in bottles of the medicine to police stations as cyanide planted in Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules claimed a seventh victim.

As the trail of poison continued to widen, cyanide also turned up in an unpurchased bottle of the capsules that was pulled from the shelves of a suburban drugstore as part of the investigation. That means bottles containing tainted capsules of the pain reliever had been for sale in at least four stores in the Chicago area.

The Illinois attorney general has blamed a "madman" for the poisonings, but the Cook County Medical Examiner said he could not rule out "factory error" because of the disclosure that cyanide is used in testing at the Tylenol factories. A spokesman for the manufacturer dismissed that possibility, saying cyanide is kept at an area far from where the capsules are produced.

Mrs. Byrne, who on Friday had urged stores to strip all Tylenol products from their shelves, declared the ban Saturday. She acted "under broad emergency powers in the city health code," a according to a spokeswoman for her office.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has urged consumers nationwide not to use any Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules for the time being.

Paula Prince, a 35-year-old flight attendant, was found dead Friday night in her seventh-floor apartment on the city's Near North Side, the first victim from within the city limits instead of the suburbs. A few steps from her body was a 24-capsule bottle of Extra-Strength Tylenol she had purchased at a nearby Walgreen's Drug Store.

Police officials said the Tylenol in her possession contained deadly doses of poison, and Medical Examiner Dr. Robert Stein said the autopsy showed she died of "acute cyanide toxicity."

Stein said his office will begin looking into sudden deaths reported since Sept. 1 and possibly a week earlier — just about the time batches of the Extra-Strength Tylenol found to have been adulterated would have reached shelves in the Chicago market.

"I like to call this 'American Roulette'" he said. "Here we are dealing with 'Russian Roulette' with drugs."

The death of Miss Prince forced authorities to expand the scope of their search because the adulterated capsule came from yet a third batch of Extra-Strength Tylenol, identified as lot 1801MA. The first two batches that were implicated, lots MC2880 and 1910MD, were recalled nationwide by the manufacturer, McNeil Consumer Products Co., a subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson.

About 150 people are working full-time on the investigation, including 75 from 15 local, state and federal agencies in a task force headed by Illinois Attorney General Tyrone Fahner. Chicago police have 25 detectives working on the Prince case, and 43 chemists are doing lab analyses and checking for latent fingerprints.

Fahner met Saturday night with investigators who spent the day "in the field," but he declined to comment whether any new leads had developed.

Chemists at the medical examiner's office said they filled empty Tylenol capsules with cyanide to see how long it would take for the highly corrosive poison to affect the shell. But Fahner declined to reveal whether the test yielded any new leads.

"We're giving out what we feel we can," said a member of an investigative task force, who asked not to be identified. "We can't comment on things that might in any way jeopardize the investigation."

Fahner also declined to say whether the task force had commissioned a psychological profile of who may be responsible for the poisoning.

Investigators have said they were pursuing the theory that a "disgruntled employee," may have put the cyanide in the capsules.

Fahner said thus far investigators have determined that the tainted capsules did not cross paths while they were being manufactured or in their distribution.

Poisonings seem to be 'localized'

DALLAS (AP) — After testing 30,000 capsules of Extra-Strength Tylenol collected throughout Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration office here said Saturday no traces of cyanide were found in the suspect pills.

The pills were collected from stores and consumers after seven cyanide-poisoning deaths were linked to three lot numbers of Tylenol. One of the three batches was manufactured in Round Rock, Texas.

"We have finished our anaylsis of 30 samples and so far have found no evidence of cyanide," said FDA supervisor John Krakoska in Dallas. Each sample consisted of 20 bottles of 50 pills each.

"It looks like the whole problem is localized in Chicago. I don't think (people in Texas) have anything to worry about. But I wouldn't take any Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules until this thing is cleared up — no matter where you are in the United States," Krakoska said Saturday.

Also Saturday, officials said an elderly Livingston man who died after lapsing into a coma was killed by a stroke, not by the Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules authorities found on his kitchen table.

Doctors in Houston performed the autopsy on Robert E. Mattox Sr., 74, because the bottle of medication was one of a batch linked to cyanide poisonings in the Chicago area, Polk County deputy Darrell Longino said.

"No cyanide poisoning was found," Sheriff Ted Everitt said. "They've tested some of the pills and found no cyanide in those."

Mattox was admitted to a Livingston hospital Wednesday night suffering from an "apparent heart attack" and died Friday morning.

A happy New Year?

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — The 97th Congress rang out the old fiscal year and rang in the new with some last-ditch maneuvering and frantic politicking. The lawmakers made it under the wire, but just barely, so we did not have to close down our government.

The 11th-hour action by Congress in passing a huge continuing resolution was necessitated by the fact the fiscal year began Oct. 1. It ended at midnight the night before. Since only one of 13 fiscal 1983 appropriations bills had passed both houses of Congress, the continuing resolution was required to provide funding for the federal government until Congress returns after the Nov. 2 election for its "lame duck" session.

But election-year politics played a major part in forcing Congress to adopt the stopgap spending measure. With all 435 House seats and 33 Senate seats up for grabs, members of both houses were anxious to return home to campaign.

Hearst

In addition, conflict between the White House and the Congress over levels of spending for a number of programs have slowed down the appropriations process. It is easier for some members of the House and Senate to seek re-election without having to defend the way they voted on certain spending measures.

That is why President Reagan on September 16 asked Congress to return November 29 for a post-election session to handle the money bills.

In a letter to Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, the president said that "attempting to run the federal government without a proper budget — with a series of temporary continuing resolutions and the associated overall budgetary uncertainty — is both bad economics and bad management." I couldn't agree more.

Senator Baker and House Speaker "Tip" O'Neill both took a dim view of a "lame duck" session, but both said they would accede to President Reagan's request. The president, of course, has the power to call Congress into session. It is provided in Article 2, Section 3 of the Constitution.

If the "lame duck" session is confined to the passage of appropriations bills, it can be productive. What I mean to say is that it can be productive if the appropriations are properly limited and in keeping with President Reagan's economic programs whose goal is to reduce expenditures and save taxpayers' money.

Editor's Report

As we all know, however, there is always the danger in a democratic government like ours that such a session can become burdened with all kinds of special interest legislation and amendments, and accomplish very little.

One of the reasons the Senate has been so slow to come to grips with spending matters is that it was tied up for six weeks with attempts by Senator Jesse Helms to push through school prayer and anti-abortion legislation. The measures were filibustered by liberal senators of both parties.

The Congress of the United States is not the most efficient or effective legislative body in the world. To

Supreme Court will face several controversial issues this term

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Three political powderkegs await the Supreme Court as its nine justices begin the 1982-83 term Monday.

Abortion regulation, federal tax breaks for racially discriminatory private schools and the balance of power between Congress and the White House are among the controversies the high court already has agreed to tackle in the next nine months.

About two-thirds of the 150 cases the justices will fully study and decide by July already have been identified. The court committed itself last term to resolving those cases.

The remaining 50 or 60 cases to receive full review will be chosen from the 5,000 disputes the court will act on this term — as many as 1,000 on opening day.

The great bulk of cases will be denied review, leaving intact lower court rulings.

No controversy since the famous Bakke case on affirmative action in 1978 has provided the justices with as much unsolicited advice as a trio of abortion cases from Virginia, Missouri and Akron, Ohio.

The court has received 36 "friend-of-the-court" briefs representing the legal arguments of organizations as diverse as the American Medical Association, Planned Parenthood and the National Right to Life Committee.

The Supreme Court helped create a still-strong legal and moral storm when it legalized abortion in 1973. The trio of cases to be decided this term will be used to answer several lingering questions, including these:

—Can states or local communities require that all abortions on women more than three months pregnant be performed in a hospital, not a generally less expensive abortion clinic?

—Can any unmarried girl under 15 be required to have the consent of one of her parents or a judge before obtaining an abortion?

—Can doctors be required to inform patients seeking abortions about the risks and the condition of the fetus?

The White House sparked an angry outcry among blacks, civil rights groups and others when it announced its intention to lift an 11½-year ban on tax exemptions for such schools.

Travesties of time, trafficking may not keep DC-3 on ground

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The old dependable DC-3 Dakota, which was shot up in the ignoble mission of hauling contraband marijuana from Colombia to Texas in 1980, may fly again.

But the old aircraft of 1941 vintage has been crippled, abused and subjected to the weathering of time, sand and occasional rain and snow for about 2½ years.

Vandals, who have no respect for a mechanized bird of flight, have ripped into the aircraft at its purgatory — Odessa's Schlemeyer Air Field. They've smashed the windows of the aircraft, called Flying Forester, ripped out much of its radio gear, and, perhaps, were the cause of the collapse of the right main landing gear.

IN TRYING to make humor out of the forsaken aircraft someone has scrawled on the fuselage: "Mexico or Bust."

Back in February 1980, the cargo carrier was seized by lawmen after the aircraft had landed on a makeshift dirt strip south of Odessa; the plane had departed Colombia with high-grade marijuana and refueled in Mexico. Inside the aircraft were more than 6,000 pounds of marijuana and pilots Harold Taylor Atkins, 48, of McAllen, and Larry Coulter Foreman, 43, of Woodsboro.

Since then, the pilots have been through the federal court system: Atkins was placed on a five-year probated term and was fined $2,000 for his part in the multi-million-dollar thwarted venture. Foreman was sentenced to three years in prison by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton in Midlnd.

OF THE 12 men who were indicted in the conspiracy to bring the marijuana to the U.S., six have been tried and punished after pleading guilty to the charges; one was killed in a plane crash; another recently was arrested in Miami, Fla.; still another recently surrendered to federal agents, and three are still fugitives.

Oren Hayes Ohlinger, 54, and Michael Ohlinger, both of McAllen, were placed on probation for three years and fined $500. They were accused of attempting to fly aviation fuel from McAllen to Torreon, Mexico, to refuel the DC-3.

Ronald Marshall Watson, 33, of Laredo, was sentenced to two years in prison for his part in the scheme.

Anibal Acosta, 48, of Florida, was placed on probation for five years and was fined $15,000 — the maximum fine for the offense. Acosta allegedly provided finan-

The DC-3 of 1941 vintage may be flying again in about three weeks after being forsaken in February 1980 following its capture in a marijuana smuggling scheme. The aircraft's latest owner, Terry Kirkendall of El Paso, bought the airplane in a recent auction in Odessa.

Two men held in refinery extortion plot

HOUSTON (AP) — Two men were being held Saturday in an Arizona jail in connection with a scheme to extort several million dollars from Gulf Oil by threatening to blow up a refinery, the FBI said.

Theodore Duane McKinney, 45, and Michael Allen Worth, 34, both of Durango, Colo., were arrested at a service station in Apache Junction, Ariz., late Friday night, said FBI spokesman Johnie Joyce.

They were being held in the Maricopa County Jail, pending arraignment Saturday afternoon before a federal magistrate, Joyce said.

An FBI statement said the U.S. attorney for the district of Arizona was drawing up charges.

Joyce refused to expand on the statement.

He added that the investigation of the threat to Gulf's Cedar Bayou plant, where five bombs were discovered last week, is continuing. The plant, as well as all of the chemical division's non-production offices nationwide, was ordered shut down over the weekend.

"THE ARRESTS TOOK place as a result of surveillance by FBI agents, which was a culmination of a lengthy multistate investigation," Homer R. Hauer, special agent in charge of the case, said in the statement.

Published reports have said the bomb threat was received Tuesday in four letters — each bearing a Houston postmark — delivered to the company's executives offices in Houston.

The letters reportedly warned that 10 bombs were hidden throughout the Cedar Bayou plant, located about 30 miles east of Houston. The letters set a deadline of midday Sunday for delivery of $15 million or the bombs would be set off.

Five bombs were found Wednesday at the 1,100-acre plant. One was detonated harmlessly, and the others were disarmed with no explosion Thursday.

Despite the arrests, Gulf spokeswoman Dorothy Brown said that the company was not changing its plans to keep the plant closed at least through the weekend.

"ON THE BASIS OF today's developments, there is nothing to suggest that the investigation is over or that the situation has changed here at Cedar Bayou," she said.

House votes to keep natural gas pipeline sanctions

Washington Bureau

The House voted 206-203 Wednesday to reject an attempt to overturn President Reagan's sanctions on sales of equipment for the Soviet Union's natural gas pipeline.

The action was considered a victory for the administration because the House instead passed a bill that would revoke the embargo only if the president certifies within 90 days that the Russians are not using slave labor to build the pipeline.

Opponents of the sanctions said Americans are losing jobs to Europeans due to the embargo. They also said the bill that passed would allow the president to keep the sanctions in place by not making the certification. But supporters argued that the embargo should remain because of the possibility of slave labor and that removing the sanctions at this time could hurt delicate economic negotiations between the United States and Western European nations.

THE SENATE on Wednesday defeated 48-49 a measure that would have cut funding for the controversial Clinch River breeder nuclear reactor.

The measure was attached to a stopgap funding resolution that the government needs to continue operating. Out of 13 appropriation bills for federal agencies, Congress has passed only one. Therefore a stopgap funding resolution is needed to keep the government operating until Congress passes the appropriation bills. The stopgap funding legislation passed by a 72-26 margin.

The reactor's opponents said the project in Tennessee was a technological boondoogle that could endanger the environment because of the reactor's use of plutonium as fuel. Leftover plutonium, which emits dangerous radiation for thousands of years, is difficult to dispose of. But supporters argued that the potential benefits outwiegh the risks.

Boy dies from gunshot wound inflicted by suicidal stepfather

NAPLES, Texas (AP) — An 8-year-old boy died Saturday, one day after his enraged stepfather shot him during a murder-suicide spree that left one brother dead and two others seriously wounded, officials said.

Young Travis Abraham died of a gunshot wound to the head about 12:20 p.m. Saturday at Shumpert Hospital in Shreveport, La., according to nursing supervisor Jack Olden.

"The mother had been there (at the house)," Martin said. "There had been an argument and she had left and went to her parents' house. He then shot the kids." He would not disclose what the couple argued about.

Frederick Abraham, 5, died en route to a Texarkana hospital Friday night, he said.

Martin said he met the mother, Celestine Henderson, at the three-bedroom frame house in this rural eastern Texas town after she called to report a family disturbance.

"She followed me there," he said. "She was with me when we found the children. She was very hysterical.

"It was awful...One of the children was walking around."

Votes stolen through fraud, coercion, corrupt elections

The polling place is the heart of our democracy. Here, with a ballot, the people of Texas select the leaders of their government. As voters, they have the right to choose the men and women who make and enforce the laws of the State, levy the taxes, and decide how those taxes should be spent.

But their vote can be stolen, as surely as a thief can steal their property, through an act of criminal vote fraud or coercion. If our elections can be corrupted through fraud or coercion, the valuable freedom of choice we have will be lost.

For the month of October, 1982, the Texas Crime Stoppers Advisory Council is focusing its statewide "Crime of the Month" on vote fraud and coercion. If you have information on this criminal activity, please call the anti-crime hotline at 1-800-252-TIPS (8477). Cash rewards are available for information leading to arrest and felony indictment of those who would, through fraud or coercion, attempt to set aside the voting process. Citizens do not have to reveal their name, just give their information, and they will be given a unique code number for identification purposes.

Help your election officials protect your vote, call 1-800-252-TIPS today.

Cornered robbery suspect shoots himself in Austin

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A man suspected of holding up an Austin bank shot himself in the head when cornered by police who ran his car off the road, police officials say.

Police chased him through north Austin after he was seen fleeing a downtown bank Friday.

"I guess he just couldn't see himself being taken to jail," said police Sgt. Jerry Fearn. "I don't remember any other cases ending up quite like this one."

A Republic Bank employee said the robber told a teller he would detonate a bomb if he was not given money. The teller gave the man an undisclosed amount of cash in a file folder, and he ran from the bank to a car, investigators said.

The bank employee gave police the license number, and officers pursued the man north to U.S. highway 290. Fearn said one of the officers rammed the man's car, forcing him off the road.

"When he saw he wasn't going to escape, he shot himself in the head," Fearn said.

Fearn said an emergency medical team was summoned, but that the man was pronounced dead at a local hospital.

The cash was found in the man's car, Fearn said, but there were no explosives.

Whitaker had no police record, said Fearn.

"It could be he was just a victim of the economy and was desperate," he said.

Indian summer continues in Midland

Oh! What a beautiful day!

Keep those fall clothes pushed back in the closet.

Midland is in store for more summer-like days with the high today reaching the mid-80s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The low tonight should be in the upper 50s, and Monday will continue in the mid-80s with southeasterly winds 10-15 mph.

Saturday's high of 89 fell short of the record high of 97 set in 1951, and the overnight low of 69 was quite a bit warmer than the record low of 42 set in 1961.

Carlos Ibarra, 42, of Miami, Fla., has been apprehended in Florida and is yet to be tried.

Richard Morley Stewart, 45, of Norman, Okla., recently surrendered to federal agents and is awaiting trial. The aircraft, bearing N78W registration, was registered in his name.

Still fugitives are Humberto Pablo Nunez, 48, of New Jersey; Jose Louis Fonte, whose bail is set at $1 million, and Carlos Iberra, 42, of Miami, Fla.

WHILE THE FEDERAL system is trying to mete out justice, El Paso airplane collector-restorer Kirk Kirkendall of Kirk's Aviation is hellbent on getting the DC-3 airworthy.

Last week, the Ector County Commissioners' Court put the aircraft up for bids for the second time, Kirkendall offered the commissioners $5,000 plus the $360 in tie-down costs at Schelmeyer Field. The aircraft was parked, unattended and unprotected, on grass off the taxi area and has been there since early in 1980, when the DC-3 was flown from the dirt landing strip south of Odessa to Schlemeyer. The DC-3's tail was damaged upon landing, as the tailwheel had been blown out.

Last March 17, the U.S. Customs Service, which had confiscated the airplane, released the plane to Ector County after Stewart failed to appear to claim the aircraft.

In late April, the Ector County Commissioners put the DC-3 up for sale, and Kirkendall offered $9,000 — the high bid — for the plane. The commissioners refused the bids and had the notion that the West Texas Military Museum would renovate the aircraft and leave it at the airport. That plan did not pan out.

Again, the commissioners asked for more bids, but Kirkendall said that that procedure was "highly unethical." The Commissioners' Court was bound to take the original bids, Kirkendall said, and his, at $9,000, was the highest. " "Now, we make the rules out here in West Texas,' " he said the commissioners told him. Kirkendall made another bid: $5,000 plus the tie-down charges, got the aircraft and saved $4,000.

"I'VE WANTED it for (almost) three years," the 35-year-old Kirkendall told The Reporter-Telegram. Even in its currently unflyable condition, "$25,000 wouldn't have touched the DC-3" in an auction of the airplane at the sprawling air base at Tucson, Ariz., he said. In one of its last of a score of changing ownerships, the DC-3 in 1979 reportedly sold for $60,000.

Kirkendall said he would dispatch aircraft mechanics to prop up the aircraft this week and would get the landing gear repaired. The following week he plans to get the engines running, controls working and new windows made for the airplane.

"I'm not even so sure that I'm going to ride in the thing" in the trip to his four-acre space at the West Texas Airport at El Paso. "That's a big decision."

He said he would have the aircraft airborne and out of Odessa within three weeks "if there's no engine problem."

Kirkendall, who is into the aircraft painting and restoration business, plans to add the aircraft to his collection, which includes the Lockheed X-7, a post World War II remotely controlled pilotless craft used to test the jet engine and apparently the last of 61 of the test crafts made by Lockheed; twin-engine Beechcrafts in various states of restoration, and two military battle tanks.

"I wanted to save a little bit of history," he said of the Douglas Aircraft Co. DC-3 Dakota, which the military designated the C-47 Skytrain. Some 10,000 C-47s were made for use by the military during World War II.

"That particular one was built in 1941, just before the war," Kirkendall said, "and when the war broke out, it was confiscated by the government."

Even today, the DC-3, a 200 mph craft powered by two radial engines, was first introduced in 1936 and is "still flying in 50-odd countries," he said.

Among his enterprises, Kirkendall, who is a colonel in the Confederate Air Force, loans his aircraft and military equipment to the film industry.

Dennis and Jeanna Kellerman, second and third from right, parents of 12-year-old cyanide poisoning victim Mary Kellerman, leave Queen of the Rosary Catholic Church in Elk Grove Village, Ill., following funeral services for their daughter Saturday. Mary died after taking a Tylenol capsule containing cyanide.

Parents of cyanide victim try to understand her death

ELK GROVE VILLAGE, Ill. (AP) — Bouquets of flowers lay atop the small steel casket of 12-year-old cyanide victim Mary Kellerman on Saturday as her family and mourners tried to make sense of her death.

She was the first person to die in a series of poisonings tied to the contamination of Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules.

"People suffer guilt when this kind of thing happens and they say, 'What did I do wrong that it could happen?'" said Sister Grace West, religious coordinator at the Queen of the Rosary Catholic Church. "They (the Kellerman family) can't understand why anyone would do this to their daughter.

"I told them that it's not their fault and that's not the kind of God we have that takes away little girls."

Classmates of Miss Kellerman remembered her as a "brain," a smart, shy girl who was "excited about learning.

Miss Kellerman apparently was given Extra-Strength Tylenol to relieve discomfort resulting from a cold and sore throat. She was found unconscious in her home early Wednesday morning.

Economic issues once again dominate congressional debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — As in 1981, economic issues again dominated congressional debate for most of the year, although the Senate spent considerable time — largely in vain — on a variety of social issues dear to conservatives.

When Congress returns in late November for its post-election session, economics again will be the main item on the agenda as the House and Senate consider bills needed to fund the government for the remainder of the fiscal year that began Friday.

Highlights of the 1982 session include:

—Action to raise taxes by $228 billion over the next five years, including higher taxes on cigarettes and a cut in deductions for medical expenses — a year after Congress passed the largest tax cut in history.

—Approval of spending cuts of about $30 billion over the next three years in benefit programs, including Medicare, Medicaid and food stamps.

—Failure of repeated efforts by Senate conservatives to win adoption of new restrictions on school busing and abortion and to permit organized prayer in public schools — even though debate on these social issues consumed weeks of Senate debate.

—Rejection by the Democratic-controlled House on Friday, shortly before the two-month election recess began, of a proposed constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget — a measure strongly advocated by President Reagan and approved in August by the GOP-led Senate.

—Unanimous confirmation by the Senate in July of Reagan's nomination of George P. Shultz as secretary of state to replace Alexander M. Haig Jr., who resigned abruptly.

—An investigation by the Senate Labor Committee into alleged links between Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan and organized crime, a probe closed when Special Proscutor Leon Silverman found no corroborating evidence to back up the allegations.

—A grant to the Pentagon of virtually every major weapon system it requested during the year, but the apparent death in committee of a proposed revival of lapsed GI bill educational benefits.

DEATHS

Morris L. Pope

ANDREWS — Services for Morris Leonard Pope, 39, of Andrews were Saturday at the Andrews First Baptist Church with the Rev. H.A. Hanks officiating. Burial was in the Andrews Cemetery.

He died Thursday in Odessa.

Pope was born Feb. 5, 1943, in Andrews. He had been a resident of Odessa for eight years, formerly living in DeSoto. He was a self-employed general contracter and a member of the Calvary Baptist Church in DeSoto.

Survivors include two sons, Bryon Pope and Eddie Pope, both of Andrews; a daughter, Gwen Pope of Andrews; his mother, Marjorie Pope of Andrews; his grandmother, Pearl Edmiston of El Dorado; and a brother, Charles Pope of Andrews.

Herman L. Gunter

He died Thursday in a Midland hospital, following a lengthy illness.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland, P.O. Box 2621, or the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center, 2200 W. Illinois Ave.

Harold Dewlen Jr.

SCOTLAND — Services for Harold C. Dewlen Jr., of Scotland, son of former Midland, Texas residents Mr. and Mrs. Harold C. Dewlen, are tentatively set for next week at St. Bartholomew's Catholic Church at Katy, Texas.

He died Sept. 23, in Scotland, following an automobile accident.

Other survivors include four children.

Two separate accidents involving cycles Saturday resulted in the hospitalization of a 25-year-old woman.

Yoland Griffin was admitted to Midland Memorial Hospital with a broken thigh and hand following a motorcycle accident about 6:30 p.m. Saturday.

Police reports of the accident were not available at press time, but a witness at the scene of the accident said the motorcycle, driven by Willie E. Griffin, with passenger Ms. Griffin collided with an Oldsmobile at the intersection of Fairgrounds Road and Garden City Highway. Griffin, 28, was treated and released at MMH. The driver of the car was not injured.

Connie Foster, riding a bicycle, hit a car at the intersection of Brookdale and Burchill about 7 p.m. Saturday.

Police reports were incomplete, but apparently the 6-year-old Foster girl was riding south when she collided with a station wagon heading west. Miss Foster was treated and released at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Kent Hance voted to balance budget

WASHINGTON — U.S. Rep. Kent Hance, D-Texas, joined with 236 of his colleagues Friday in the House of Representatives in voting for a balanced budget amendment.

The amendment — needing a two-thirds majority — failed.

"The amendment we voted on today was not perfect, but it did represent a step forward for fiscal responsibility," said Hance. "We may have lost a battle on the floor of the House today, but we have succeeded in this session of Congress in turning the conversation in Washington away from finding more programs to spend money on to talking about what programs we can cut.

"Now I would hope that President Reagan would submit a balanced budget and Congress will pass one," said Hance. "This could be accomplished without an amendment to the Constitution."

EDITOR'S REPORT

that I say, as Sir Winston Churchill did about the democratic form of government, that despite its inefficiencies, it's the best we know of.

This week in which the new fiscal year began was marked by two other significant developments. President Reagan hit the hustings to generate enthusiasm for Republican candidates, and he held one of his best press conferences.

He went to Virginia to campaign for Rep. Paul S. Trible, Jr., the Republican candidate for the Senate who is running against the Democratic lieutenant governor, Richard J. Davis. The president pounded again and again on the theme of fiscal responsibility, blaming the Democrats for "today's pounding national hangover."

Contrary to the attitude of some gloom-and-doom economists, he was optimistic about the future. His optimism, as I see it, is based on the hope that he can eventually succeed in cutting costs of government that have been soaring for half a century. His hope can be fulfilled if more Republican supporters are elected November 2, and if he continues to get the cooperation of the fiscally responsible members of Congress who helped him in the last year and a half.

He said in Richmond that "This devastating recessionary virus, one that many economsts believe started and has continued since 1979, has begun to show signs of finally running its course." Let's hope he is right.

President Reagan's performance at his 13th news conference was one of his best. He responded to questions with the good humor for which he has become so well known, as well as with candor and dignity.

The questions covered most of the waterfront of foreign and domestic problems. They were not easy questions, but they were made to look so by the ease with which the president fielded them.

The economy received major attention, as it did in Virginia and will throughout the campaign. He said his economic programs were pushing this nation back from the "brink of disaster." Furthermore, "The things that have been accomplished by this administration were not accomplished before, and all the things that are not resolved now started long before we got here."

The president was immediately criticized by Tip O'Neill and others who said the presidential optimism was simply a partisan ploy. Such criticism is to be expected in the free atmosphere of the American political arena. But I would remind critics that the inflationary spiral that has hovered so ominously over our heads for 50 years is an unhappy fact of life, not a recent figment of anyone's imagination.

President Reagan is trying to do something about it. Another fact of life is that the Democrats have not come up with any alternatives to the economic measures referred to as Reaganomics. In my opinion he had every right the other night to challenge the Congress to get off its duff and help him out.

If the challenge is accepted, fiscal 1983 could indeed by a Happy New Year.

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

But inside the sprawling two-story building that houses McNeil Consumer Products Co., it was far less sunny than the clear fall day outside.

Workers here walked softly, and conversation was in hushed tones. Sadness mixed with painful uncertainty had settled in.

"It's horrible," said company spokeswoman Elsie A. Behmer, talking of the impact on the firm's morale of the six deaths related to cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules. "People really like working here. We're real proud of our product," she added.

The phones here were jammed. In the elegant lobby, with its signed Miro art and long couches and thriving plants, there was the atmosphere of a hospital waiting room.

A steady stream of visiting salesmen offered their condolences to tired executives in their shirtsleeves. A newspaper left on a lobby table for visitors never got turned past the story about the deaths. There was a quiet curiosity mixed with uncomfortable tension as reporters and TV cameras continued to arrive.

Everyone here appeared to have felt the initial impact.

But what was more apparent was that this company of about 1,000 employees might never be the same.

"This is a very warm place to work. It's just like a family," Bruce Fisher, manager of employee communications, said. "It's strangely quiet now."

McNeil Consumer Products Co., founded in 1879 as a retail pharmacy by Robert McNeil, grew until it developed into a manufacturing company, eventually with this plant here, outside of Philadelphia, and one in Texas.

"I'm exhausted," said Dr. Thomas N. Gates, medical director. Like scores of other McNeil executives he had had little sleep since he received a telephone call Thursday morning with the first news of three deaths in the Chicago area.

Since then, he said, there has been a continual feeling of numbness.

"We're all shocked, upset and concerned about the events. We're working day and night to bring some resolution to the issues," he said, adding that he is eager to find the person or persons who tampered with the capsules.

Dr. Gates was asked whether or not he could come face-to-face with the culprit or culprits.

"I don't know that I could handle that," he said.

David Hutzelman, Libertarian, wants to leave you alone

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — David Hutzelman wants to leave you alone.

He wants to let you keep your kids home from school, use whatever drugs you like, and go to bed with anyone you choose (and pay for it if you want).

The only thing Hutzelman wants from you is your vote. The 42-year-old Texaco employee is the gubernatorial candidate of the Libertarians, the laissez-faire folks who believe that government which governs least governs best but probably still gets in the way.

"Libertarians endorse a sort of night watchman theory of the state. Generally, Libertarians believe police, courts and national defense are legitimate functions of the government," the Houston resident said.

David Hutzelman

IN 1980 HUTZELMAN picked up 2.5 percent of the vote for a seat on the Railroad Commission. He campaigned on the notion that the commission interferes with free enterprise.

"Their regulation of intrastate trucking just flies in the face of anybody's idea of what the marketplace is all about. The fact that anybody that's in business can object to competitors coming in by having them denied a license (is wrong)..." he said.

To get on the ballot this year, the Libertarians had to mount a petition drive that ate up $30,000 of the $100,000 the party had for 1982 elections. Hutzelman, manager of data processing for Texaco, is campaigning on weekends and vacation time.

IN ORDER TO get the Libertarians automatic spots on future ballots, Hutzelman must get 2 percent of the votes for governor.

"Mark White and Bill Clements are pushing for more of the same that's not working," he said.

The Libertarian philosophy is consistent. Government has no right to interfere with personal lives until someone calls for help.

"We hold that all individuals have the right to exercise sole dominion over their own lives," says the party's "statement of principles."

Despite their opposition to drug laws and the military draft, don't label Libertarians as liberals.

"We appeal to conservatives who like our free market position. We appeal to liberals who like our strong civil liberties stands," said Hutzelman.

IN EDUCATION, Libertarian freedom means freedom to not send your children to school.

"We would like to encourage some diversity in educational systems. There are any number of problems which have been created by the government school system," he said.

There's no future in public schools because of "a whole collection of moral cultural issues which can't be reconciled politically," he said.

"Issues like prayer in school, sex education and evolution vs. creationism are never going to be solved as long as people say, 'These are my tax dollars and I have a right to say what is going to be taught,' " said Hutzelman.

The Libertarian solution is an end to mandatory attendance laws. Hutzelman favors the distribution of school tax dollars to parents, who could use the money to send their children to schools of their choice.

"I THINK IT'S really unjust that people are taxed and then forced to send their children to a school that teaches them things they really don't want as part of the value portion of a child's upbringing," he said.

In law enforcement the Libertarians believe government has been part of the problem. Hutzelman wants all "victimless crimes" legalized. The state has no right to prevent drug use, even if it is harmful, he said.

"One of the leading causes of death is heart attacks from overeating. Do people have the right to overeat or should we have an agency that counts calories? You'd have to go in for a calorie check every day," he said.

"The function of government is to protect people's rights. If nobody's calling for their rights to be protected we feel it's not a proper area for government to enter into," said Hutzelman.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — "Who won?"

That's the question most Texans ask shortly after polling places close on election day.

In early-day Texas, election results were mostly by word of mouth — from one traveler to another and one neighbor to another. Newspapers carried regional results, but statewide totals were hard to get. Then came telegraph, telephones, radio-TV, and finally, the computer.

For more than half a century the Texas Election Bureau, a cooperative agency created and funded by news media, provided unofficial Texas election results to newspapers and later to radio and television stations.

But on Nov. 2, for the first time, the result-gathering task will shift to the state and the computers in Secretary of State David Dean's office. Newspapers and broadcasters will still relay the results to the public.

"The TEB never did miscall any election, even before computers," says Robert L. Johnson, Dallas, retired now after serving as TEB manager from 1936 to 1980.

IT WAS THE TEB THAT provided the material for the many years of "election parties" that local newspapers sponsored. Big outdoor screens or bulletin boards would be set up to project figures received from the TEB. In cities, entire blocks would be blocked to traffic to take care of thousands of spectators.

"The bureau was not founded to gather all the votes in a race, just enough to show who was the winner without a doubt," said Johnson.

The official canvass of votes does not come until about two weeks or more after an election.

Johnson said the bureau's accuracy and dependability was based primarily on the work of the correspondents the TEB hired in most Texas counties. Often the correspondents were editors of small newspapers, county clerks, radio news men and women, as well as judges, lawyers and teachers.

"We had some close ones, but they never got so close we didn't call them right," said Johnson.

The closest and longest count easily was the bitter struggle between Congressman Lyndon B. Johnson and former Gov. Coke Stevenson in 1948 for the U.S. Senate.

"AFTER ABOUT A WEEK OF COUNTING, with the lead shifting back and forth, we declared Lyndon the winner by about 100 votes," Johnson said.

"Lyndon kept calling me and saying that our totals were wrong and said his figures were more complete," said the former TEB manager. "I told him, 'Lyndon, I can't take your votes because you are not a correspondent for the bureau.' He got kind of mad at me."

Another politician who was unhappy at times with results from the TEB was Ralph Yarborough, who made several unsuccessful races for governor before being elected U.S. senator.

"Ralph Yarborough would call the bureau and say we were stealing his votes, that he knew he had more than that," Johnson said. "I told him, 'All we do is count the votes. If there is any stealing going on, they're being stolen at the ballot box.' "

IN THE EARLY DAYS IT was difficult to pry election results out of county officials. Occasionally one would stick the returns in his pocket and go fishing or visiting. TEB correspondents often had to track down election officials or get them out of bed to complete precinct totals.

Texas has new method of tabulation

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — Two major question marks hang over Texas' new method of tabulating election results.

First, will the new voluntary reporting system — which will be tested for the first time during the Nov. 2 general election — adequately replace the disbanded Texas Election Bureau's network of paid election reporters?

Second, will there be any problems having an election bureau run by a politician? The TEB was organized and run by members of the news media. The new state Election Central will be run by Secretary of State David Dean, who was appointed to office by Gov. Bill Clements.

Since 1916, the TEB has relied on a network of paid reporters in each of the state's 254 counties to call a central headquarters where the votes were added.

Dean's Election Central will rely on voluntary calls from county election officials. Dean has no statutory authority to require county officials to report their results, but Dean said most counties have promised to make periodic calls to Election Central on Nov. 2.

Dean said he will ask next year's session of the Texas Legislature to change state election law so he will have the authority to require reports to his Election Central. Clements has said he will back Dean's efforts to make those changes.

Dean said that even without the statutory changes, he has the authority as the "state's chief election officer" to send in Texas Rangers, if necessary, to secure ballot boxes.

Until Dean stepped into the picture, Texas voters and politicians relied on the media-run TEB for election results. The official state canvass of votes is conducted about two weeks after elections. The unofficial TEB and the official canvass results have always agreed on which candidates won, although totals have varied.

Dean's Election Central also will be funded largely by the media. For example, The Associated Press and United Press International will each pay $8,400 for access to Dean's results.

Protect documents from theft, fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Veterans Administration is reminding Americans to safeguard their important documents from fire, theft and loss.

Papers that should be kept organized and protected include military discharge papers, birth certificates, marriage certificates, child custody papers, insurance policies, wills and naturalization papers.

Reagan, Begin on collision course, Brzezinski says

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — President Carter's top national security adviser Friday said President Reagan and Prime Minister Begin of Israel were on an inevitable "collision course."

Zbigniew Brzezinski, in a searing assessment of Begin's performance and strategy, said the Israeli leader wants to keep the United States bogged down in Lebanon so "he can proceed with the colonization" of the West Bank of the Jordan River.

He said it may take a division of U.S. Marines and additional French and Italian troops to police Lebanon when Syrian and Israeli forces withdraw from that country as promised.

"We can't stabilize Lebanon without significant progress on the Palestinian problem," he said. "And there is no solution to the Palestinian problem without a solution to the problem of the West Bank and Gaza Strip."

The United States opposes Israeli settlements on the West Bank, which was formerly Jordanian territory and a prospective site for a Palestinian homeland.

According to Brzezinski, as Begin tries to shift the grounds of the U.S.-Israeli debate, he may move his office to East Jerusalem to use it as a rallying point and/or create more West Bank settlements to try to convince the Arabs that U.S. talk of Palestinians moving there is empty and unrealistic.

"Then the question will be: Will Reagan act like Ike (President Esenhower) or like every other American president," Brzezinski said.

"I think Reagan will be forced by Begin and (Defense Minister Ariel) Sharon to act like Eisenhower."

In 1956, during the Suez invasion by Britain, France and Israel, Eisenhower demanded that they withdraw promptly from Egyptian territory. Britain and France agreed, but Israel dragged its feet. Eisenhower then threatened to cut off all military and economic aid to Tel Aviv and the Israelis then withdrew.

Brzezinski said the issue of U.S. aid to Israel was going to surface again, but that if the administration is forced to use aid for leverage it should be used on the West Bank and Gaza problem.

He said the administration is "right in trying to galvanize world opinion against Begin."

On other subjects, Brezinski gave these opinions:

— The ouster of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt marks the end of post-war stabilization in West German politics. Schmidt "burned himself out and contributed to the deterioration of U.S.-German relations" by "showing contempt" for Reagan.

— U.S.-Soviet relations are "stalemated" and "darker forces" may take power when President Leonid Brezhnev leaves the political scene.

— U.S. relations with the Peoples Republic of China are stagnant and he urgently recommends that Secretary of State George Shultz visit Peking soon to re-establish high level contacts.

Police hunt for tavern killer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Police hunted Saturday for a gunman who returned to a crowded tavern after an argument and opened fire, killing three patrons and wounding seven others.

The shootings occurred late Friday during an "end of summer" celebration at the Mother Lode Bar, a popular country-western watering hole.

"He just stood in the doorway and fired," said police Capt. K.F. Schiele.

A bartender, who asked not to be identified, said the assailant "came in and started blasting... He shot a pitcher of beer right out of my hands."

Police and Highway Patrol officers launched a ground and air search of the area, about four miles north of the state Capitol. The gunman fled on foot into a residential district after the shooting, Schiele said.

One of the wounded, 28-year-old Randolph Wooley of Sacramento, was in critical condition Saturday at American River Hospital with multiple bullet wounds in the chest following all-night surgery, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Another victim, Michael Pesut, 32, of Sacramento, was also in critical condition following surgery at University Medical Center, authorities said.

Schiele said the bearded, long-haired gunman, estimated to be in his 20s, got into an argument at the bar about 7:30 p.m.

Pulitzer divorce battle latest Palm Beach gossip

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — In this millionaire's Eden-by-the-sea where even joggers must hew to a strict dress code, there is now talk of lesbianism, seances and drugs.

On the third floor of a courthouse here, publishing heir Peter Pulitzer, 52, is locked in a lurid divorce battle with his wife of 6½ years, Roxanne, 31. Both sides have been busy trying to destroy the reputation of the rival as a fit parent.

"When we meet over a drink, when we run into someone, it's 'have you heard the latest about the Pulitzers?'" said Josephine Dampier, a 57-year-old grandmother and Palm Beacher resident strolling in the city's swanky Spanish-style downtown. "It's becoming something that you can't escape."

She also lays stake to half of his fortune in publishing, orange groves and international hotels, which she claims totals $25 million. But the white-haired Pulitzer — grandson of Pulitzer Prize-founder and newspaper publisher Joseph Pulitzer — counters that he only has one-tenth of that, and his lawyers are trying to paint the drugstore owner's daughter as a golddigger.

Mrs. Pulitzer is an adulteress, a cocaine addict, a pathological liar, a believer in spirits and a lesbian, charges Robert Scott, lawyer for her husband. Scott and witnesses called for Pulitzer allege his wife conducted extramarital flings with at least four men — a real estate salesman, a supposed drug dealer, a French baker and Belgian Grand Prix racer Jackie Ickx — and at least one woman.

Mrs. Pulitzer's lawyers accuse the publishing scion of making drug hauls from Colombia, sleeping in the same bed as his daughter during a European tour and indulging in three-way sex with his wife and the 32-year-old spouse of an heir to the Kleenex tissue fortune.

It is the stuff of which endless gossip is made in Palm Beach, a town where fortune has never been enough to buy respect.

Promoted at the turn of the century by railroad magnate Henry Morrison Flagler, Palm Beach boasts an unbroken, 90-year pedigree as a mecca for the sun-starved rich.

Its first yacht basin was dredged when Grover Cleveland was in the White House. The wealthy who loved it left memorable residences, like the 115-room home of Marjorie Merriweather Post and giant resorts like The Breakers.

On Worth Avenue, shops like Gucci, Hermes, Van Cleef & Arpels and Bonwit Teller vie for the business of the Rolls-Royces and Mercedes that go by.

But the city hasn't been quiet.

In 1967, Russell and Mary Alice Firestone took each other to court for a bitterly fought divorce trial. The rubber-and-tire heir won, had the six-year marriage dissolved after claiming his wife committed adultery, then married a newspaper reporter.

The same year, Deere farm equipment heiress Nancy Wakeman Gardiner shot and paralyzed her husband William. He died on an operating table two years later as doctors tried to restore life to his limbs.

A jury convicted Mrs. Gardiner of aggravated assault, and an appellate court later set aside the conviction.

But the charges in the Pulitzer trial — plus the claim they are now the norm in the municipality of 10,000 year-round residents where an ordinance prevents socialite joggers from baring their torsos — have provoked some anger and disbelief.

"It's scandal-mongering and garbage," said David Field, editor of the 3,000-circulation daily The Palm Beacher. "Twenty years ago, our residents went to peep shows in Havana and in Paris. That I don't deny. But they don't want it in their houses. No sir."

Field's is the only daily sold in Palm Beach to ignore events transpiring in courthouse across the sound.

"We won't cater to the extraneous innuendos and remarks of flamboyant attorneys," said Fields. "It's all garbage."

Mrs. Pulitzer's lawyers claim their client started snorting cocaine after being sucked up in the vortex of the "Palm Beach lifestyle."

Pulitzer admits to drug use, but says he did it to keep pace with his wife.

But Palm Beach Police Chief Joe Terlizzese retorted: "This 'Palm Beach lifestyle' stuff has been ridiculously overblown.

"You know why it's ridiculous? I'll tell you — the age of the average resident here is 57. This is not your cocaine crowd. We have more problems here with theft and burglary than with drugs," said Terlizzese, whose 76 sworn officers give their 3¾-square-miles the densest law enforcement of any U.S. municipality.

In 1981, Palm Beach had no homicides.

Birth-control methods to be discussed at conference

ATLANTA (AP) — A birth-control shot that lasts three months, a chemical that can prevent pregnancy for six years and an intrauterine device that can last 20 years will be disussed at a medical conference here.

Dr. Elizabeth Connell, professor of gynecology and obstetrics at Emory University and director of the conference, said about 200 physicians from the United States and Canada will attend the first Conference of Family Planning on Monday and Tuesday.

The conference, sponsored by the university, will address new technologies in birth control, debate controversial techniques and try to clear the air of myths about contraception, she said.

"If nothing else comes out of this meeting besides an equalization of the risks and benefits of pill use, I think that's very important," Ms. Connell said.

The new birth-control chemical is a slow-release steroid that can be implanted under a woman's skin to prevent pregnancy. It has undergone more than 10 years of testing and is expected to go before the Food and Drug Administration for approval within the next two years.

The long-lasting IUD was developed by Dr. Howard Tatum, professor of obstetrics and gynecology at Emory, and Dr. Jaime Zipper of Santiago, Chile, and has undergone nine years of testing in Belgium.

More tests will be needed before the device could be offered to the FDA for approval, Tatum said.

One controversy to be addressed at the conference will be use of Depo Provera as a contraceptive in the United States. The synthetic female hormone can be injected every three months to prevent pregnancy and has been in use in more than 80 countries.

Ms. Connell contends the drug is safe and virtually 100 percent effective. No deaths have been associated with its use in 10 to 15 years of research, she said.

But Depo Provera has been challenged as dangerous by some women's activists and consumer groups who contend it has been linked to tumors in animals. Twice, the groups persuaded the FDA to reject the drug for use in the United States.

"It's very sad really," Ms. Connell said. "It has nothing to do with science. I know no scientific body that has evaluated this drug and (found it unacceptable).

"The monkeys get the tumors in a tissue that is not found in the human," she said. "It's become a political football."

A public board of inquiry comprising three scientists is investigating the drug and may recommend its use in the near future, Ms. Connell said.

The "single most incorrect piece of information" about birth control is that the pill causes cancer, Ms. Connell said. In fact, there is evidence that the pill may help prevent breast tumors, ovarian tumors and anemia, she said.

SAN JOSE, Calif. (A) — A private sting operation by two major computer companies has led to the arrest of two men suspected of receiving stolen computer parts.

The companies said they feared stolen parts were being used in overseas computer counterfeiting.

Barry Ching-bor Poon, a resident alien born in Hong Kong who owns Microware Exceltek in South San Francisco, was arrested Friday and his bail set at $1 million, police said.

Cranston renews call for freeze

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alan Cranston, the Senate's assistant Democratic leader, renewed his call Saturday for a U.S.-Soviet nuclear freeze as the first step toward abolition of nuclear weapons.

The California Democrat used the occasion of a Democratic reply to President Reagan's weekly radio speech to criticize Reagan's defense buildup and opposition to a freeze.

The president spoke about combating the drug problem, but Cranston said he was more concerned about the linkage between the nation's economic ills and "the incredibly costly, incredibly dangerous arms race."

"Surely neither we nor the Soviets want nuclear war, but the danger rises that nuclear war will come by accident, by miscalculation, or through escalation of a lesser conflict," said Cranston, one of most outspoken nuclear freeze advocates on Capitol Hill.

The senator noted that "we've come to this sorry state of affairs after many years of bad thinking, failed diplomacy and limited leadership. The American leaders must demand leaders who will end the nuclear arms race. We do not now have such leaders. Ronald Reagan opposes a nuclear freeze."

He said Americans should "insist that our country make a constructive, creative, sincere, determined, resolute, all-out effort — the like of which we've never seen — to negotiate a fair and verifiable freeze on further development of nuclear weapons by the Soviet Union and by ourselves.

"Our aim must be the total abolition of nuclear weapons. We must banish these weapons from the face of the earth," Cranston said.

Student jailed for frying pet

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A college student serving a 60-day jail sentence for placing his pet guinea pig in a frying pan says he decided to cook the creature lightly because it bit him.

George Schiro said he didn't realize the animal had suffered second-degree burns until two days later when it began forming scabs.

"I didn't want to hurt him in any way. It was an act of vengeance. I wanted to see him feel discomfort like he gave me," Schiro said in an interview this week from the Alachua County Jail.

Alachua County Judge Stan Morris called the offense heinous and inhumane. In addition to the sentence, the University of Florida sophomore was fined $198.

Police try to identify body

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Police were trying Saturday to make positive identification of a decomposed body believed to be a Fresno boy who had been missing for 6½ weeks.

Clothing found with the body matched items worn by 9-year-old Steven Eric Brown, his father, Virgil, said Friday.

An 82-year-old woman, Ann Hunt, went to the Brown family this week to report that she "saw" in her mind the missing boy on the river bank. Brown's girlfriend, Jackie Skeels, led authorities to the body, saying she had a psychic experience and heard Steven's voice saying, "Daddy, find me."

Man sues for wrongful arrest

SIOUX CITY, Iowa (AP) — A man has filed a $1.35 million lawsuit alleging police, in a case of mistaken identity, wrongly arrested him as he rode in a procession after his mother's funeral.

Police say it's a case of an "honest mistake" and deny they interrupted a funeral procession.

Police probe girl's rape

BALDWIN PARK, Calif. (AP) — Police are appealing to the public to help them find the clothing a 10-year-old girl was wearing when she was kidnapped, raped and thrown into a drainage ditch.

They hope the clothes might provide clues in the death of Robyn Leigh Jackson, seen before her death talking with another girl to an ice cream vendor.

Robyn's nude and bruised body was found early Wednesday in a Pasadena drainage ditch 10 miles west of her home in Baldwin Park. She had left home eight hours earlier to play at Ernest Geddes Elementary School where she was a fifth-grader.

Stansbury, who authorities say has a history of sex crimes, had been on parole since last Oct. 10 in his sentence for sex offenses against two 10-year-old boys.

Baldwin Park Police Chief Dave Snowden said Stansbury drove a white truck licensed in that city to the Tropical Ice Cream Co. of Pomona. The truck was impounded when Stansbury was arrested at his home about 12:30 a.m. Thursday.

However, Tropical manager John Baughn said Friday that Stansbury was not employed there and denied the company had leased him the truck. He said Tropical had hired him in 1969 and again for two days in August, but Baughn said he was fired when the company's owner learned of Stansbury's prison record.

Authorities have been careful when discussing Stansbury, saying only that he had exhibited "inappropriate behavior." They did not elaborate.

An autopsy showed the girl died of suffocation and "blunt force injury to the head."

Johnston later said at a news conference the girl probably was alive when she was thrown into the flood control channel about 1:30 a.m., but may have died from landing on her head in the concrete ditch.

Monk held on murder charges

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A Buddhist monk was ordered held without bond pending arraignment Monday in the slaying of a Vietnamese businesswoman, police said.

Mann Van Luong, head of the Ngoc Quang temple, was arrested at the Siagon Jewelry store in which the 63-year-old woman, Que Phan, was found beaten to death Thursday night.

An inventory was being taken to determine if there was a robbery, police Lt. Paul Ybarrondo said.

In one call, according to Son, "he said a robber came into the store and there was a fight."

Another monk said Luong administered traditional Chinese treatments, including herbs, to members of the temple including Que Phan and one of her 14 children.

That monk, Son Nguyen, said Luong went to see the woman on a medical visit but "he did not know she was dead until we told him."

Luong fled Saigon in 1978, was processed in a refugee camp and went to West Germany, settling later in Southern California. He spent a few months in Santa Ana before moving to San Diego less than a year ago.

FDA discredits love drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Spanish fly and other folklore-celebrated love potions are unlikely to have the aphrodisiac powers claimed for them in advertising, according to a Food and Drug Administraion scientific panel.

The advisory panel's findings, published in the Federal Register, dealt with oral drugs containing cantharides — Spanish fly, made from dried beetles — as well as ginseng root, licorice, sarsaparilla, pega palo leaves, nux vomica, yohimbine, gotu kola and don qual.

These drugs, the panel recommended to the FDA, should not make claims like "acts as an aphrodisiac," "arouses or increases sexual desire and improves sexual performance," "builds virility and sexual potency" or "expands the gift of love."

"Such claims have been transmitted largely through folklore and exploited by manufacturers who prey on the gullibility of people who are most likely in need of counsel or therapy," the experts said.

They expressed concern about the use in drugs purporting to be aphrodisiacs of testosterone, methyltestosterone and estrogens — hormones which "are not safe for use except under the supervision of a physician," the panel said.

In another notice appearing Friday in the Federal Register, a separate FDA scientific advisory group took issue with Alka-Seltzer's claim of providing "speedy relief."

It said ALka-Seltzer, Pepto-Bismol, Bromo-Seltzer and similar preparations are safe and effective for relieving symptoms from overeating and hangovers.

However, the panel added that "the following labeling claims are misleading or unsupported by scientific data:...'Fast relief,' 'quick relief,' or any other term which nonspecifically relates to the speed of action."

Miles Laboratories, manufacturer of Alka-Seltzer, said in a statement that the FDA panel had objected to claims of speed on the product's label, not in its advertising. The statement also noted that the panel's findings would now go through a formal notice and comment period before the FDA reaches any final decision on the matter.

Ford criticizes Brown's ad

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — An anti-nuclear TV ad by Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. which uses a mushroom cloud to demonstrate his stand against nuclear weapons is "demagoguery...a sensational appeal" to sway voters, former President Gerald Ford said Saturday.

Ford, in a telephone interview from Dallas, said the ad was "skillfully done, don't get me wrong ...It reminds me of the ad Lyndon Johnson used in 1964" against Sen. Barry Goldwater Sr. of Arizona.

Brown, a Democrat, is in a tight race for the U.S. Senate against San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson, a Republican. They are seeking the seat held by retiring Sen. S.I. Hayakawa.

Ford, who has campaigned on the mayor's behalf, said Brown's commercial failed to discuss the nuclear issue substantially, adding he was "shocked" the Brown campaign "would use that kind of political demagoguery."

Brown supports Proposition 12 on the November ballot which calls for a halt to nuclear weapons production and urges the United States to negotiate a nuclear arms freeze with the Soviet Union. Wilson is opposed to the measure.

Filipinos protest Marcos

MANILA, Philippines — More than 5,000 Filipino demonstrators burned effigies of President Ferdinand Marcos and U.S. President Ronald Reagan in the biggest anti-government rally here in years.

The protest lasted for nearly four hours despite intermittent rain and the presence of hundreds of anti-riot policemen.

The demonstrators put the torch to effigies of Marcos and Reagan in a massive show of contempt over the recently concluded state visit Marcos made to the United States.

They claimed that signing of several agreements between the Philippines and the United States, among which are tax and tourism treaties, would "perpetuate U.S. imperialism in the Philippines."

Marcos and his wife, Imelda, returned Thursday from a two-week visit to the United States, which Marcos termed a "phenomenal success."

Chinese chief fired

PEKING (AP) — China's propaganda chief, Wang Renzhong, was fired recently because he sanctioned an article that accused China's current leadership of bourgeois liberalism, Chinese sources said Saturday.

The sources, who asked not to be identified, said the army's political commissar, Wei Guoqing, was also fired because of the article.

The article, published by the army newspaper on Aug. 28, accused Chinese leaders of weakness, revived the dormant idea of class distinctions and said ideological purity was more important than education or technical expertise in building socialist spiritualization.

Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping's modernization program is believed to have been strongly opposed by many army officials.

Japan, India to construct car factory

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — An Indo-Japanese cooperation agreement to build India's first modern automobile factory was signed Saturday between Japan's Suzuki motors company and the Indian government-owned firm Maruti Industries.

Indian Minister of Industries N.D. Tiwari said at the signing ceremony that the new venture represents "the largest investment by any foreign company in the establishment of a new enterprise in India." He said the Indian government "is determined to make this project a model of success."

Suzuki and Maruti plan to produce 20,000 "Maruti-Suzuki" small cars and light commercial vehicles in 1984 and 100,000 a year by 1988 in a factory outside of New Delhi. India now produces about 40,000 cars a year, modeled after old Italian and British designs that are not fuel efficient. Those cars now sell for the equivalent of about $8,000 a car, while the joint Indian-Japanese models will sell for about $4,300.

Filipino audience panics, kills two, injures 50 others

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Two people were killed and about 50 others injured Saturday when panic-stricken spectators at a movie theater rushed to the street after someone shouted "fire, fire," police said.

Trapper Ragner Jonsson, 84, had his first look at Winnipeg, Canada, for the first time since 1923 recently and proclaimed the hurry-up life style of a big city not to his liking. Jonsson has spent nearly 60 years of his life trapping in the Canadian far north. He's shown aboard an outboard motorboat on a Canadian lake.

Solitary trapper visits big city after 59 years

WINNIPEG, Manitoba (AP) — Ragnar Jonsson, who for the better part of a century has lived as a solitary trapper in Canada's farthest frigid corners, has come to the big town for the first time since 1923.

"It's a roaring city," the 84-year-old woodsman marveled.

Jonsson, more used to dogsleds than automobiles, wondered why there weren't more collisions in the speeding downtown traffic.

"They all seem to be in a horrible hurry to get somewhere and they burn up a lot of precious gas trying to get there," he said.

The white-haired, cherub-faced Jonsson lives in a tiny teepee on Lake Neultin in Manitoba's far northwest, 50 miles from the nearest settlement and 450 miles south of the Arctic Circle.

While at a Winnipeg hospital, the energetic octogenarian, an avid reader, caught up on some of the latest news.

"There's nothing but disaster everywhere," this wildnerness Rip van Winkle concluded. "Sometimes I think it would be better not to read about it."

In his 59 years in the north woods, Jonsson has gone as long as two silent years without human contact. But he insists he is not a hermit — he simply lives his own life.

He travels by dogsled among a network of teepees and traps near Lake Neultin, often crossing over into the North-West Territories. He dresses the furs himself — mostly white Arctic fox and wolf — and sends them off with conservation officers or bush pilots who happen by every several months. He receives mail and supplies through the same haphazard system of helpful pilots.

Every 10 years or so, Jonsson has paddled and portaged his canoe to the northern towns of Churchill or Flin Flon, two-week trips.

On one visit, an acquaintance reports, a restaurant waitress shrieked when the backwoodsman asked for one of his favorite breakfasts: caribou blood pancakes.

Ukrainian Communist leader dies

MOSCOW (AP) — Ivan Z. Sokolov, the second ranking Communist Party official in the Ukraine, has died, Soviet television reported Saturday.

It said the 54-year-old Sokolov died "suddenly" Friday, but gave no details. That term is usually used by the state media for heart attack victims.

Brazilian candidate dies in plane crash

ITAPETINGA, Brazil (AP) — The government party gubernatorial candidate in Bahia state and two federal congressmen were among 13 men killed in a helicopter crash near here Friday.

State security officials said all 13 bodies had been found at the isolated, mountainous crash site. Not all victims were immediately identified.

The helicopter crashed into a mountain peak in rainy and windy weather Friday afternoon after vainly trying to land twice in the city of Caatiba, in southern Bahia. Security official Luis Antonio de Souza said the pilot had radioed to the Caatiba tower that he was having difficulties.

Air force and state police rescue squads reached the site 12 hours later and confirmed there were no survivors, said de Souza.

The victims included Cleriston Andrade, 56, the government's Social Democratic Party (PDS) candidate for the governorship of Bahia state, in northeastern Brazil. Andrade served as mayor of Bahia's capital city, Salvador, from 1971-1974, and had acted as president of the state bank (Banco do Estado da Bahia) until his nomination as gubernatorial candidate.

Also killed were two PDS congressmen. Rogerio Rego was candidate for the vice-governorship, while Henrique Brito Filho was seeking re-election. In addition state representative Naomar Alcantara and four other political figures died in the accident, which occurred in a routine campaign trip.

Under Brazilian law, the PDS will have only 10 days to replace Andrade.

Inflation has overwhelmed the ability of a great many people to cope with disability losses. It is not really surprising since the cost of living has risen more than 50% in the last five years, while hospital charges have increased by 70%. Obtaining adequate medical coverage has never been more important. A general rule to follow is to replace 75% of your weekly income with disability insurance. An insurance professional can help you coordinate Social Security and Workmen's Compensation eligibility.

Inflation is an important consideration when thinking of insurance. Medical coverage must be sufficient to meet ever increasing hospital and related costs, property coverages must be reviewed periodically to assure protection against current replacement costs and, naturally, retirement and pension plans must consider long range economic factors. Green Berets claim ground rules hamper evaluation of Salvadorans

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — Green Berets who have trained Salvadoran troops say ground rules that bar Americans from accompanying the soldiers on combat missions hamper evaluation of the training.

Assessment of how well the Salvadorans learned their lessons, which include classes on humane treatment of civilians and enemy prisoners, now depends on information provided by the Salvadorans themselves, the Green Berets said.

"Even if they're totally honest when they come back, you can't be sure you're doing all you can for them," said Capt. David Morris, who headed a team of trainers in El Salvador from March to August 1981. "There's nothing like a first-hand report by an experienced man in the field."

U.S. advisers in El Salvador are prohibited from going into areas where combat is considered likely. They are also barred from carrying M-16 rifles and wearing fatigue uniforms.

THE RESTRICTIONS, designed to prevent American casualties and allay public concerns about El Salvador becoming "another Vietnam," were set by President Reagan when he sent 54 non-combat advisers to the Central American country in March 1981.

State Department officials say the number of U.S. advisers varies now due to such things as transfers, but around 30 to 50 may be in the country on any given day.

The success of the training is important to Reagan's Salvadoran policy, which is counting on government military success against leftist guerrillas to help convince the insurgents to lay down their arms.

In a speech this past week, Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, said the guerrillas cannot win, partly because "they now face a Salvadoran army that is better equipped and organized and has learned to fight in the field."

The guerrillas and some human rights groups charge that the Salvadoran army, including U.S.-trained battalions, have slaughtered hundreds of unarmed civilians during recent military sweeps in the countryside.

THE SALVADORAN ARMY concedes some civilians have died, but claim they were traveling with the guerrillas and were killed during military engagements.

In interviews with The Associated Press, six Green Berets who taught Salvadorans "small-unit tactics" either in El Salvador or at Special Forces headquarters at Fort Bragg said the training clearly has improved the efficiency of the Salvadoran army.

The trainers praised the quality of the Salvadoran soldiers. They said the soldiers were industrious, disciplined and bright, and that the training went well, itself a suggestion of performance in combat.

"If a unit doesn't train well, they're not going to do well," said Capt. John W. Martinez, who trained Salvadorans in the Ramon Belloso Battalion at Fort Bragg last spring.

But the Green Berets said they have had little word on how well the lessons took once the soldiers went into action.

"NONE OF US HAS access to the message traffic from the country," Froberg said. "The informal feedback has been that they're doing pretty well."

Morris and Sgt. John Engstrom, who were part of a Green Beret team sent to El Salvador in March 1981, said their information on how well the training had worked came from talking with their students — members of the Atlacatl Battalion when they returned from a mission.

"Ideally as a trainer in any situation, the final step in the training program is to evaluate the training," Morris said. "In this case, we could only evaluate it in a training environment. The true evaluation was made by the Salvadorans in combat. The only evaluation we really had was debriefing them when they came back."

"If they did really well, they would come back and tell you war stories," Engstrom said. "If they didn't do so well, they would say, 'We did O.K.' "

MORRIS SAID ANALYZING casualty patterns also clued the Americans into flaws in the Salvadorans' tactics.

The frequency of wounds in the soldiers' upper bodies suggested that the troops were standing too upright, Morris said. Injuries to several men when a single booby trap exploded indicated they were staying too close together.

Salvadoran leftist guerrillas said they killed, wounded 27 government soldiers

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas said Saturday they have killed or wounded 27 government soldiers in separate attacks in recent days, while army troops were reported closing in on rebel strongholds in the eastern province of San Miguel.

The rebels' clandestine Radio Venceremos said guerrillas killed at least 14 troops and put 13 others out of action in 11 attacks over a seven-day period ending Thursday. It said the fighting occurred in the provinces of Usulutan, San Vicente and Cuscatlan.

An estimated 2,000 army troops, meanwhile, were said to be heading for the northern part of San Miguel, an area long considered a guerrilla stronghold.

A civil guard commander in Estanzuelas, 70 miles east of the capital, said about 1,000 troops passed through the area Wednesday heading north for guerrilla camps near the villages of Petacones and Montecillos.

A similar-sized contingent was spotted near the town of Sesori, 25 miles to the northeast, local sources said. Both forces were reported to be trying to push guerrillas toward the rain-swollen Lempa river and the border with Honduras.

Radio Veneceremos said Honduran troops had stepped up patrols along the border to prevent guerrillas from fleeing the battle area, located about 10 miles south of the border.

The rebel radio also charged that army forces were "assassinating, capturing and terrorizing with artillery fire defenseless populations in the area." It asked that "institutions that dedicate themselves to human rights condemn this new genocide."

In the first two weeks of September, an estimated 7,000 peasants fled the northern part of the San Miguel province following an increase in guerrilla activity and government bombings of rebel positions in the area.

Micronesia to become independent

HONOLULU (AP) — The 80,000 people of Truk, Ponape, Yap and Kosrae in Micronesia would be given independence from the United States in all but national defense matters under a proposed Compact of Free Association signed here.

The compact has to be ratified by the people of the Federated States of Micronesia and the U.S. Congress. If approved, it will be submitted to the United Nations to replace the U.S. Trusteeship that was established after World War II.

Signing the document Friday were the Federation's secretary of external affairs, Andon Amaraich, and Ambassador Fred M. Zeder, President Reagan's personal representative in Micronesian negotiations.

Two other districts in the U.S. Trust Territory of the Pacific, the Republic of the Marshall Islands and the Republic of Palau, have also signed Compacts of Free Association with the United States in recent months.

Lebanese history red with blood

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The massacre of hundreds of men, women and children in the Sabra and Chatilla Palestinian refugee camps last month added another bloody chapter to Lebanon's long history of mass killings.

Since the beginning of the 1975-76 civil war when Christian rightists fought a coalition of Moslem leftists and Palestinian guerrillas, Lebanon has been a lawless nation where political and personal grievances are avenged by the knife and the gun.

While there is no precise count of the number of people killed in massacres since the start of the civil war in April 1975, the total has reached the low thousands, based on police and press reports over the years.

Israel, which sent its forces into Lebanon June 6 to rout the Palestinian guerrillas, allowed Christian militiamen into the camps Sept. 16-18 and has ordered its own probe into Israel's conduct during the massacre.

IN THE PAST 4,000 YEARS scores of armies, including those of Egypt's pharaohs and the empires of Rome, Persia and Ottoman Turkey, have marched through Lebanon, often leaving massacres in their wake.

In 1860, an estimated 10,000 Maronite Christians from the same eastern-rite church whose members today dominate President Amin Gemayel's Phalange Party were massacred by Lebanese Druze, members of a mystical Islamic sect.

The event generally considered to have touched off the civil war was the ambush by Phalangists of a bus in the east Beirut suburb of Ain Rumanneh on April 13, 1975. Twenty-seven Lebanese and Palestinians died in the attack.

In the 19-month-long civil war, about 40,000 people died in the street fighting and shelling in Beirut and in the battles that spread from the capital to cities, towns and villages throughout the country.

Out of those long months of bloodshed the names of devastated towns and refugee camps would become rallying cries for revenge by survivors. For the Christians it was Damour, for the Palestinians Tal Zaatar.

DAMQUR, A PRETTY SEASIDE village on the Mediterranean about 11 miles south of Beirut, was inhabited mostly by Maronite Christians. In January 1976 Palestinans and their Lebanese Moslem allies overran the village, looting, destroying and killing. Some officials placed the death toll at 500, but the Christians would later claim the victims numbered in the thousands.

In August 1976, the Palestinian camp of Tal Zaatar on the edge of Christian east Beirut fell after a seven-week siege by Christian militiamen. Men, women and children streaming out of the camp were ambushed by the Christians. Press reports at the time placed the death toll at between 500 and 1,000, but the Palestinians later claimed it was as high as 2,500.

On March 16, 1977, about four months after Syrian troops moved into Lebanon under an Arab League mandate to snuff out the civil war, Lebanese leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt was assassinated near a Syrian command post in the Chouf mountains of central Lebanon, heartland of his Druze sect. In the reprisals which followed, more than 140 Christians were killed.

The following year, as the Phalangists' relationship with the Syrian troops degenerated into warfare in Beirut, at least two dozen Phalangist supporters were slain in the Bekaa Valley near the Syrian border.

ABOUT THE SAME TIME, the focus of Lebanon's reprisals of kidnappings and murders shifted to a breach in the Maronite community.

Suleiman Franjieh, who was president when the Lebanese civil war broke out, pulled out of the coalition with the Phalangists and threw in his lot with the Syrians, who had become the Phalangists' bitter enemies.

Franjieh's supporters, centered around his ancestral stronghold in the northern Lebanese towns of Zaghorta and Ehden, warred with the Gemayel family's Phalangists based in east Beirut and the surrounding mountains.

Hundreds of Franjieh and Gemayel supporters were kidnapped, with each side blaming the other. The attacks culminated in the murders of Franjieh's son Tony and Tony's wife and daughter and 32 servants and bodyguards in Ehden on June 13, 1978.

The killers were never officially identified, but Suleiman Franjieh blamed the Phalangist militiamen commanded by Bashir Gemayel.

Bashir was assassinated Sept. 14 in a bombing in east Beirut that killed more than a score of other people nine days before he was to take office as president of Lebanon.

Mexico to relax money controls along border

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government has announced that it will relax currency controls along the U.S.-Mexican border and take "all possible actions" to encourage currency exchange in Mexico instead of the United States.

The measures, announced late Friday by Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog, are apparently aimed at bailing out Mexican border businessmen who have been hard hit by the controls.

President Jose Lopez Portillo nationalized all private banks in Mexico and imposed tight currency controls Sept. 1 in an effort to halt the flow of badly-needed dollars out of the country.

In a move to ease the controls which have choked many border industries, Silva Herzog said dollar accounts — forbidden in the rest of the country — will now be authorized along the 1,760-mile border with the United States to facilitate the import of essential goods.

The government will also take "all possible actions to facilitate exchange operations in the (border) area and avoid exchange transactions being carried out on the other side of the border." Silva Herzog said.

It was not immediately clear whether the opening of dollar accounts would be limited strictly to the 12-mile-deep free trade zone that extends the length of the border, and Silva Herzog did not specify what steps would be taken to encourage currency exchange in Mexico.

After dollar sales in Mexico were virtually cut off last August, U.S. speculators rushed to open makeshift currency exchange houses along the border. The exchange houses have been selling dollars at about 95 pesos each to Mexican merchants desperate to maintain imports.

The government's officially-controlled rate is 70 pesos to the dollar but there has been widespread confusion over who, if anyone, is eligible to purchase dollars at the official rate.

"Whether one likes it or not, the northern frontier gives problems but also offers opportunities that have to be taken advantage of," Silva Herzog said in his speech delivered in Mexicali.

KALKAR, West Germany (AP) — Police used tear gas and water cannon against rioters throwing gasoline bombs, flares, bricks and bottles as 20,000 people protested the planned construction of a nuclear fast breeder reactor in this small Westphalian town Saturday.

Witnesses said the fighting broke out when protesters began hurling petrol bombs, bricks, stones and hard balls of steel at a cordon of police in riot gear sealing off the site of the planned reactor, due to come on line in 1987.

Fourteen people were arrested, police said. Four policmen were slightly injured in the fighting, returning to action after treatment for cuts and bruises, police said. It was not known if any demonstrators were hurt or how many.

The protesters were part of a second wave of anti-nuclear demonstrators who had come to Kalkar to rally against the planned reactor. A first demonstration passed off peacefully.

But the atmosphere turned ugly early in the afternoon, police and witnesses said. Angry protesters removed police barriers from one field with access to the reactor site and began hurling stones, bricks, bags of paint, bottles and cans and using catapaults to hurl the missiles, police said.

Police used loudspeakers to ask the crowd to disperse, witnesses said.

Warnings to stop bombarding police at the risk of tear gas being used went unheeded, police said. Instead, demonstrators set fire to a police vehicle being used as a barrier to stop the protesters.

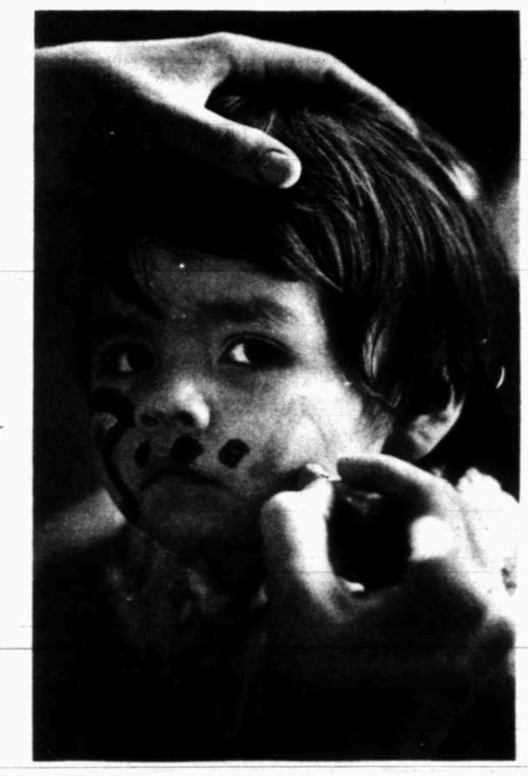
Fabulous fair

Screams and laughter fill the air Saturday as these thrillseekers take a spin on the "space-age sensation" ride at the Family Fair.



Two-year old Joel Villela stays somber during his face painting session Saturday at the St. Ann's Family Fair.

The day began gloomy and cloudy with a threat of rain in the sky.

And that's tradition, say the folks who claim it always sprinkles the day of St. Ann's Family Fair.

But by 11 a.m. Saturday, the solar disc's bright rays peeked through fluffy, cotton clouds down through the spokes of the ferris wheel, between the horses on the merry-go-round and on the tilt-a-whirl on the church grounds of St. Ann's Fair at Illinois Avenue and L Street.

The music of children's laughter could be heard through the screaming engines and clanging bells of the carnival rides while the aroma of popcorn, barbecue and German sausage filled the air.

Midlanders gathered to stuff themselves on bright yellow roasting ears of corn, piled-high barbecue sandwiches, plump German sausages, over-packed burritos, deep fried egg rolls and the traditional candied apples, cotton candy and popcorn.

And ice cream — the old fashioned type — scooped and molded to a wafer cone was a relief in the later afternoon hours when temperatures reached near 90 degrees.

Some moms and dads clung to tots on bobbing horses on the merry-go-round while kids and those young at heart dared the spins and thrills of gravity-defying rides.

Young and old alike stood in long twisting lines to ride on the open swing seats that circumferenced the wheel. Atop, one could feel as though it was the top of the world.

There was something for everyone — food, a car giveaway, food, a country store, food, a garage sale and more food.

Those who wanted to test their athletic ability edged through the crowd stopping at traditional game booths where prizes could be won for "three throws — knock them down."

And lost moms waited patiently at the announcement booth while their children were being paged to come pick them up. Children with strangely painted faces popped up out of nowhere.

"Danny. I know you're out there. Your mother is lost, why don't you come get her," the announcer would say replacing a different name each time.

In the parish hall, more than 300 people at any one time, tried their luck at bingo to win bicycles, televisions, roller skates and household goods.

In the country store, fresh baked bread, homemade cookies, pies and cakes and canned fruits were displayed and quickly purchased.

For those who were harboring a little hostility, a softball thrown at "just the right spot" dunked a Southwestern Bell or Internal Revenue Service employee into a water tank. For those with less frustration, there was the miniature golf putting green.

There was something for everybody and more.

From 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. people came and went, rode and ate, chatted and laughed — at the annual St. Ann's Fair.

Charley Reese

Columnist to address Midland group

Charley Reese, a syndicated political columnist whose commentary appears three times a week on the editorial pages of The Midland Reporter-Telegram, will be in Midland Oct. 28 for an appearance sponsored by the Midland Society of University Women.

According to Elinor Chase, a spokesperson for the Society of University Women, Reese will speak at 8 p.m. at the Midland High School Auditorium. He also will appear at a reception immediately after the speech at the MHS Student Center.

Tickets for Reese's appearance are $5 and will be available at the door or in advance from members of the Midland Society of University Women. A portion of the money raised will go toward the society's scholarship and benefit fund, according to Mrs. Chase.

According to a press release from Sun Belt Syndicate, Reese, whose column appears in several dozen newspapers from Vermont to California, was born in Thomson, Ga., and grew up there, in East Texas and West Florida. He began his career at the age of 13 as a janitor in a printing plant. By the time he was 19, he had been a printer, a cub reporter, a civil servant and a caption writer for Planet Newspictures, Ltd. in London.

For the next 10 years, Reese learned his craft on several newspapers by working every "beat" from sports to national politics. He then spent six years in the political field, working as a professional campaigner in gubernatorial, senatorial and congressional races in several states.

In 1971 he joined the Sentinel Star in Orlando, Fla., as an assistant metro editor and was quickly promoted to assistant to the publisher and finally columnist and member of the editorial board.

He was awarded "Best Columnist in Florida" by the Florida Press Association and has received several Associated Press honors. His civic awards include honors from the Air Force Association, the Military Order of World Wars, Disabled American Veterans and the Order of Purple Hearts.

He is the author of two books.

Students dig into slices of cake commemorating Trinity School's 25th year. A celebration that included a football game was held Saturday at the school on West Wadley Avenue.

Trinity School has 25th birthday

After a 20-6 football win and under hot, blue skies, Trinity School kicked off its 25th anniversary Saturday with a picnic for students, family and friends.

Families sat on spreaded blankets and folding chairs, munching quickly-picked-up-after-the-game burgers from fast-food restaurants. A long table was loaded with moist slices of sugary vanilla and glossy-iced chocolate cake surrounding a large, uncut white cake with blue icing and decorative swirls wishing the school a happy 25th birthday.

Short-clad children bounced around the balloon man as he filled blue and white Trinity 25th Birthday balloons with helium.

Twenty-five years ago, Trinity School was The Episcopal Day School with kindergarten and first grade classes held in the Sunday School rooms of The Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity on West Illinois.

In 1958, the parish day school was served by a board consisting of the vestry of the church with the curate serving as its first headmaster. H.T. Hilliard, Robert Senning, George Harley, Jno. P. Butler, Leland Davison, Finley W. Holbrook, Paul Kolm, D.C. Wambaugh, Preston J. Lea, Wilbur Rocchio, R.C. Tucker and Joe H.E. Ward were the vestry members and the Rev. Kenneth Eade was that curate.

TRINITY SCHOOL was founded in the hearts and minds of those men.

The present campus was established in 1962 through a generous gift from the William B. Blakemores of 20 acres on West Wadley Avenue. It had grown by this time to include kindergarten through sixth grade and school days were spent in buildings designed by Frank D. Welch, including a chapel, classroom clusters and a gymnasium. In 1965, a commons and classroom clusters for upper grades seven through nine were added.

The school was incorporated as the private, independent school it is today in 1966. Although no longer an adjunct of a parish, it continued to have daily chapel services with the Book of Common Prayer of the Episcopal Church as the basis for those services. The members of the Board of Trustees were no longer required to be Episcopalians and the first headmaster chosen by them to lead Trinity School was J. Bettis Lawrence. During the years he served, 1966-74, Trinity gained accreditation by and membership in the Independent Schools Association of the Southwest. Presently, the school is the only private school in Midland with this qualification.

Also during the leadership of Lawrence, Mayfair, an event which has raised more than a quarter of a million dollars, was begun. The annual arts and crafts fair, originated by Mrs. L.R. French Jr., attracts artists from local and distant places.

AFTER A two-year period during which the headmaster's chair was occupied first by Melvin Bishop and then by Ted Bruning, the present headmaster, the Rev. P.D. Peterson, arrived in 1976. A faculty with diverse backgrounds and the constant updating and improvement of the curriculum are on-going goals of the present administration. Development of spiritual awareness serves as the foundation for Trinity's curriculum.

Led by Peterson, an Episcopal clergyman, and assisted by a faculty lay reader, student readers and other faculty members, chapel serves for the first through ninth grades are held daily in the chapel. Daily worship services are conducted in pre-school classes by teachers.

On this basis, Trinity School builds its curriculum, employing the Montessori approach in its pre-school, Alphabetic Phonics as the foundation of the reading, writing and language program in its first three grades and a continued strong emphasis on the basics in grades four through six. Thusly, it maintains concurrently the threads of a multi-sensory approach to education and a communion with the classics.

In the fourth grade, students also begin the study of French or Spanish and they are taught tennis and vaulting. Seventh graders are required to study Latin and may participate in tennis, soccer, lacrosse, track and field and gymnastics. Basketball and football also are offered. Music, drama and art are intrinsic parts of Trinity's curriculum for kindergarten through ninth grade.

FACULTY AND STAFF now number 50. In addition to the headmaster and classroom techers, Trinity has an assistant headmaster, a director of admissions, a business manager and a director of development.

Because of the continued generosity of loyal and supportive parents and friends, the physical plant of Trinity has been enhanced by the additions of the Beal Gymnasium, the Marion Blakemore Memorial Library, the Smith Fine Arts Building, four tennis courts given by Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr., a restructured commons area from Mr. and Mrs. Lynn D. Durham and Timberform playground equipment for the younger children.

After its first quarter century, Trinity School holds memberships not only in ISAS, but also in the National Association of Episcopal Schools and the Texas Education Agency.

CRMWD accepts budget

BIG SPRING — A budget of $11,773,790 for the fiscal year 1983 — up over 12 percent from 1982 — was approved here Thursday by directors of the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

This includes $1.4 million in a new fund for financing preliminary steps for additional water facilities such as Stacy reservoir or more ground water for peaking.

Nevertheless, it is anticipated that water charges to district customers will not be raised when rate-setting comes in January.

Part of the projected 13 percent boost in receipts is due substanially to sharp increases in consumption estimates, particularly from Odessa. Should these prove optimistic, there will be off-setting reductions in expenses because of less pumping.

O.H. Ivie, general manager, said income estimates are conservative.

The anticipated $1,692,703 in net revenue, after deducting $271,413 debt service coverage (.15 of 1 percent) of $271,413 will result in $1,421,290 to provide additional water facilities.

Principal reason for the margin is that in 1982 the district passed the "hump" in its debt schedule, reducing principal interest by $1,233,900. The district also will earn about $818,000 in interest on its trust funds next year, and this will be subtracted from gross debt service to leave an effective requirement of $1,809,418.

Power — electric and man — accounted for nearly all of the $1,349,670 budget increase. Together, energy and employee payroll and employee benefits accounted for $1,315,214 of the total increase. Electric power for 1983 was estimated at $6,086,629, up sharply from the $4,967,646 this year.

Mimi McKnight, Midland Memorial Hospital's infection control nurse, garbed in protective clothing, demonstrates the measures taken to prevent hospital acquired infections.

MMH fights spread of infection

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Nosocomial infections affect one in every 20 patients.

Hospital acquired infections, or diseases contracted in the hospital, cause 15,000 fatalities every year in addition to costing $1 to $2 billion for extra medical care.

Although national statistics show that 5 percent of the population contract these infections, Midland Memorial Hospital's infection rate averages about 2 percent (one in 50 patients).

Mimi McKnight

Not to mention, during July and August, the incidence of in-hospital infections has been under 1 percent, according to Mimi McNight, MMH's infection control nurse.

By the nature of the beast, the danger of infection is always present in hospitals.

Ms. McKnight said there are two basic reasons why infections occur in the hospital — sick (infectious) patients are treated in close quarters along with non-infectious persons and some procedures that save lives may increase the infection risk.

For example, a sick patient can have many germs or microorganisms that may cause harm to others and frequent contacts are made among patients, their visitors and hospital staff, according to Ms. McKnight.

In medical life-saving procedures, Ms. McKnight cited catheterization tubing, inhalation therapy, antibiotics and surgery as complications of controlling infection.

While anyone can contract an infection, two groups — patients, because of their low resistance, and hospital personnel, because of their constant exposure — are the prime candidates.

In other words, if a patient enters the hospital for tests, he could be sucseptible of contracting a disease from another patient. Likewise, a surgical patient whose resistance is low also ranks as a potential victim. Therefore, all hospitals, as MMH, have control measures.

"The main way from keeping infections from spreading is handwashing," Ms. McKnight said. "But it's the one (procedure) we have to keep re-educating. You've got to wash your hands between every patient."

Other measures include protective clothing and isolation.

But, above all, Ms. McKnight said in-service education keeps infection from running rampant through MMH.

"The goal of my job is to stop the spread of infections in the hospital," she said. "We have an infection control committee which meets once a month made up of myself, the physicians, quality assurance, administration and all departments."

She said the committee works as a recommending body that reviews, evaluates and coordinates infection control.

If an infectious person is admitted to the hospital, isolation measures are taken to protect other patients and hospital personnel, according to Ms. McKnight.

Because isolation is an important part of the hospital's infection control, those patients who are diagnosed or suspected as infectious and those who have a low resistance, in the case of burns, chemotherapy or surgery are isolated for precautionary reasons.

Ms. McKnight cited five types of isolation — enteric precautions, wound and skin precautions and respiratory, protective and strict isolation.

While enteric is a private room for children with gown and gloves required for direct patient contact, protective isolation is used to prevent the spread of infection to patients with a lowered resistance. Along with gown and gloves, masks are also required.

Ms. McKnight explained that in wound and skin precautions, protective clothing is also desired, but private rooms are not necessary.

"However, the majority of our rooms at Midland Memorial are private," she added. "Just this alone minimizes the risk of infection. It's worth paying the extra money for a single room."

Also, the admitting nurse tries to place patients in the designated units, such as surgical or medical and linen is bagged before it comes out of a room, she said.

For repiratory isolation the door to the private room must be kept closed, but only a mask is required.

The laboratory is also very important to contolling infections, Ms. McKnight said.

"Sometimes we will isolate a person for a couple of days and treat him as if he has an infection," she said. "This is a precautionary measure that is taken until we get a culture back from the lab which can take 24 to 48 hours to process.

Freelance writer to lecture at UTPB

ODESSA — Daniel Burstein, a freelance writer who covered news stories in Indochina for CBS News, ABC News, Time Magazine and Look, will present a lecture at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the University of Texas of the Permian Basin student lounge.

The lecture, free and open to the public, is the first of a three-part lecture series. Other lectures, scheduled Oct. 14 and Oct. 20, will feature free-lance writers David Kline on Afghanistan, and John Conroy on Ireland.

Burstein who recently returned from three months of travel in Indochina, is compiling a report for television and newspaper syndication on "The War America Left Behind in Indochina."

He traveled extensively on foot into the Cambodian jungles where Khmer Rouge guerrillas continue their war with the Vietnamese and also made the first foreign visit to the contested border between China and Vietnam in the last two years.

Burstein has interviewed political leaders in China, Thailand, Singapore and Malaysia, and has visited refugee camps in Thailand to gather information on such explosive issues as chemical warfare and rumored live sightings of Americans long thought missing from the Indochina War. He has compiled one of the widest ranging and most in-depth reports to date on the state of the conflict in Indochina.

The 29-year-old writer was the first American to report from Cambodia after the 1975 revolution there and has covered the current hostilities between Cambodia and Vietnam for such publications as the Christian Science Monitor, the Washington Post, Chicago Sun-Times, St. Louis Dispatch and the Atlanta Constitution.

His reports also have appeared widely in the international press. He has appeared as a guest in discussions about Southeast Asia on the MacNeil-Lehrer Report, CBS Reports and many local television shows across the United States. He is in demand as a lecturer.

'Friends of UTPB' seek four-year status

ODESSA — The "Friends of UTPB" will continue to work for four-year status for The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, according to Aubrey Barlow, general chairman of the support group of 3,000 individual members throughout the Permian Basin area.

In spite of a recent report by R.F. Herndon, chairman of a Board of Regents citizens advisory committee (an area committee appointed by the UT Board of Regents), that four-year status may not be possible at this time, Barlow says his support group of "Friends of UTPB" do not agree with any postponement of this "most important step in the progress of the university."

"We must have four-year status now," Barlow said. "Or the university will continue to be handicapped and shackled with the fundamental problems of low enrollment, lack of adequate funding, erosion of highly qualified faculty, limited course offerings, lack of campus life and college enviornment for students — all the basic problems that have been plagueing the university since it opened in 1973 as an upper-level school.

"If four-year status is ever desirable — why not now," Barlow asked. "We have 337,000 people in the nine-county Permian Basin area, and it is 130 miles from UTPB in any direction to a four-year university. This is the only area of this size and population in the United States that does not have a four-year college or university," Barlow said.

"Our area, through the university lands, and our oil and gas resources have contributed over $1.5 billion and currently $200 million per year, to the Permanent University Fund that supports most components in the Univeristy of Texas System and the Texas A&M in our state. Unfortunately, UTPB does not share in the Permanent University Fund," Barlow said.

"We want all our 3,000 individual 'Friends,' plus another 1,400 throughout the area who have signed petitions, proclamations, resolutions and the like, to know that we as 'Friends of UTPB' remain dedicated and committed to four-year status, and that we feel the only important issues are the future of UTPB and the educational opportunities we must provide for the young people of this dynamic region of the Permian Basin," he added.

Barlow said he urges all supporters of UTPB to write to the UT System regents in Austin and let them know of their support.

"They will be meeting at UT Arlington Thursday and Friday to consider the future of UTPB," Barlow said.

Educator to stress teamwork at upcoming VIPS Workshop

Dr. I. Carl Candoli, superintendent of the Fort Worth Independent School District, will address volunteers Wednesday during the VIPS Workshop from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley.

Candoli will speak on "It's a Team Effort" at 9:15 a.m., preceded by registration, coffee and TB tests at 8:30 a.m.

Candoli brings with him a broad-based background in support of volunteerism throughout all levels of education.

In addition to Candoli, Dr. Jerry Wood Tierce of Lamar University in Beaumont will define the role of voluteers in the secondary schools from 10 to 11:30 a.m. Dr. Tierce taught for nine years at the secondary level using volunteers in her classrooms. Her graduate dissertation at Texas A&M is titled "The Role of the Secondary School Volunteer as Perceived by School Volunteer Coordinators."

Volunteers also may choose one of four workshops to attend during the two sessions, scheduled from 10 to 10:40 a.m. and from 10:45 to 11:30 a.m.

Dr. Joseph B. Rubin, MISD coordinator of elementary reading and language arts will host a workshop on the Partners-in-Reading program. Methods to focus children's attention toward reading comprehension with activities suitable for use in both the school and the home will be presented. Volunteers will be introduced to the new design and development of the program utilizing library-based books and newly created paperback packets.

Yvonne Black, MISD coordinator of elementary math and science, will conduct Focus on Math. She will explore the attitudes about math, ideas for increasing a child's success and self-image, manipulative materials for use in the classroom as a partner in math and relating math to everyday life.

The Adopt-A-School-Program Preview will be available during the first session only. Kay Sowders, VIPS co-chairman, and Frank Marlow, MISD director of elementary education, will give a slide presentation offering partnership opportunities in education to civic groups and businesses. The preview is an introduction for civic leaders and businessmen to opportunities that exist in Midland's public school for community service projects. Members of Midland's civic organizations are invited to attend, learn about Adopt-A-School and make plans for a VIPS coordinator to present a program for their organization.

Nell Furgeson and Ann Page, volunteers, will discuss Making Stories Come to Life. The art of telling stories will be explained and books using techniques suitable for groups or individuals will be reviewed.

Vernon Stokes, of the Region 18 Education Service Center, will talk about Finding Time to Volunteer. Effective management of time to make each day count in achieving personal goals in the home, school and community will be discussed and information on setting priorities, effects of attitudes about time and improving work habits will be given.

Red Cross, Salvation Army back up reputations at recent plane crash

From 2 p.m. Friday, Sept. 24, until after noon on Saturday, scores of Midlanders who perhaps thought they might never have direct need of a United Way agency's services found out differently. Firefighters, law enforcement officials, telephone service personnel, crash investigators and burned-out apartment residents who converged on the Warwick Apartment airplane crash site found that United Way services in the form of the Red Cross and the Salvation Army were there when they were needed.

United Way

Barely an hour after the crash, Midland's American Red Cross chapter volunteers arrived at Garfield and Whitmire with their canteen and began serving cold drinks and sandwiches to exhausted firefighters and police officers. The Salvation Army's kitchen-van was not far behind, and the agencies coordinated their services to ensure that one or both vehicles manned by volunteers was at the crash site until after noon on Saturday.

Elvis Curb, who is director of the Red Cross chapter and has extensive experience in disaster relief coordination, said the entire relief operation, including both government and volunteer efforts, was "exceptionally smooth." He added, "Someone was watching over Midland and those apartment units," pointing out how much greater the toll could have been if the plane had hit a building occupied by families with children rather than by single people, most of whom were at work that afternoon.

Curb said between the time the Red Cross canteen arrived Friday afternoon and when it left after midnight, volunteers served more than 500 emergency workers and victims.

Available free from the Red Cross to those at the scene were cold drinks, coffee, sandwiches and snacks. Curb explained that several area businesses had agreed prior to the crash to provide supplies that might be needed in the event of a disaster, but others agreed when they were contacted that day to assist.

The Hilton Hotel brewed coffee, as it had previously agreed to do, to be taken to the scene by the Red Cross, and made sandwiches as well. McDonald's provided hamburgers; both Dr Pepper and Coca-Cola Bottling Companies provided soft drinks; Tall City Ice Co. donated ice; and Albertsons sent two employees to assist in distributing food and beverages.

In addition to the food sevice, Curb said the Red Cross contacted the apartment fire victims and apartment manager to offer free emergency lodging to any residents who were unable to arrange their own lodging.

In addition to the voluntary services which facilitated the Red Cross assistance during the height of relief efforts, more than 90 percent of the agency's annual budget comes from the United Way.

The Salvation Army van also was present at the crash site until early Friday evening, and returned after midnight to relieve Red Cross workers. Salvation Army staff members and volunteers manned the kitchen facility, and served not only drinks and snacks, but a hot breakfast and lunch as well to workers remaining at the scene.

Like the Red Cross, the Salvation Army received food donations from local businesses, including Kick's Imperial Bake Shop which provided fresh pastries.

Margie Deggs of the Salvation Army also pointed out that the Salvation Army offers free household items to fire victims. "We immediately pulled all the linens from our warehouse shelves (to be available to fire victims) when the fire occurred," she explained. If necessary, she added, special donations for relief of the apartment fire victims could be requested from the public.

Both the Salvation Army and Red Cross are part of networks that assist in disaster relief state- and nationwide. If last weekend's plane crash had been on a larger scale, Red Cross officials in Dallas were standing by to send in assistance from other areas, Curb explained.

Likewise, when tornadoes hit Seminole Tuesday night, Midland's chapter was called on to coordinate relief for four families there.

Both the Salvation Army and Red Cross are part of a Midland-wide network as well — the United Way — that proved it was there when help was needed.

Developer buys town

TIOGA, Texas (AP) — They gathered at high noon Saturday for the showdown, and when the bidding ended, an upstart developer from Dallas and Houston laid out $200,000 to buy Hollywood cowboy Gene Autry's hometown.

John Grice, 37, shot down about 300 bidders and bought 6.27 acres of downtown Tioga — most of this tiny East Texas town of 511 people.

"I may wake up tonight and say, 'My God, what have I done?'" Grice said.

Grice said the town has a lot of potential for development.

"Dallas is growing in this direction and with Lake Ray Roberts the town will have water on three sides," he said.

Man-made Lake Ray Roberts is expected to be completed in 1986.

Autry, the "Singing Cowboy," told The Dallas Morning News he might have bid for the town if he were younger. He said he has fond memories of the place where he used to shine shoes.

2. When your balance rises above $2,600, all funds over $2,500 are automatically transferred into a special repurchase agreement which earns interest equal to the most recent 13-week Treasury Bill Rate. While the first $2,500 in the account still earns interest at our regular 5¼% rate.

Testing program again offered at Midland College

Dr. Robert Hawkins, testing counselor at Midland College, announced that the Aptitude Inventory Measurement Service (AIMS) will be testing again at the college Friday through Sunday. The AIMS program is a non-profit testing service formed to assist high school and college students in determining a choice of careers. The service also is available to older individuals who are dissatisfied with present occupations.

"An individual's aptitudes come in varying degrees," Hawkins pointed out. "If one has very strong aptitudes in a particular area, then it is important for him to know what they are."

One of the functions of AIMS testing is to discover those aptitudes. Following the testing sessions, there is a conference with each client to investigate and interpret the areas in which he might excel. The tests consist of about 25 different aptitudes. General knowledge and interest tests also are given.

Tests take one full day Saturday, from 8 a.m. to noon and from 1 to 5 p.m., and three hours on either Saturday or Sunday. The conference is conducted in the last part of the three-hour period.

Students may fill out an application available from Hawkins and return it with a $100 deposit. The balance is due when the individual takes the tests. Applications will be accepted up until time for the tests or until the limit of 12 students has been reached. Anyone interested in taking the tests after the limit has been reached will be placed on a waiting list and scheduled for the next test date, Nov. 12-14.

Further information may be obtained by contacting Hawkins at Midland College, 3600 N. Garfield, Midland 79701, or calling 684-7851, extension 123.

Midland student among finalists

James C. Pitts, a student at Midland High School, has been selected as one of 1,500 semifinalists in the National Achievement Scholarship Program for Outstanding Negro Students.

Semifinalists qualified from among 70,000 black students who took the PSAT/NMSQT in 1981 and requested consideration in the 1983 achievement program. Semifinalists represent the highest-scoring black students in regional selection units, each composed of several states, established for the competition. The number designated in each region is proportionate to the total black population of that region. Only semifinalists have an opportunity to continue in the competition for achievement scholarships to be awarded next spring.

"It is our hope that by recognizing these promising semifinalists from all parts of the nation, we will not only assist them in attaining their educational and career goals but will provide motivation to other black youth to develop their academic potential," said L.C. McMillan, achievement program manager.

Henderson PTA sets open house

Henderson Elementary School PTA will have an Open House following the regular meeting at 7 p.m. Tuesday. Refreshments will be served in the cafeteria and all interested parents are urged to attend.

JA companies to begin this week

Junior Achievement of Midland, Inc., will begin operation of high school companies this week. Three shifts are slated to accommodate the 300 teenagers who are expected to attend. The two hour shifts begin Monday at 4:15 p.m. and at 6:30 p.m. and Tuesday at 6:30 p.m.

Thirteen adult adviser teams from Midland's largest companies are providing guidance to assist the young people in beginning businesses. A variety of products will be chosen at the first meeting for manufacture. Each group will select a name and apply for a charter. Getting acquainted with one another and initial steps of organizing a company are the main order of business initially.

In succeeding weeks, sale of stock will begin as will manufacturing, sales and payment of miniature wages. Many awards will be given during the 25-week program, culminating with the annual awards banquet in April. One offering is 40 scholarships for the Dale Carnegie Course announced this week by Dale Carnegie area manager Paul Straughan. That class will begin in January.

Free enterprise education is the goal of Junior Achievement, which is the nation's oldest and largest economic education organization. Local donations make the program available at no cost to participants.

Magazine workshop set at MC

A two-day magazine workshop is being sponsored by Midland College Oct. 28-29.

"We have designed a workshop to assist professionals, teachers or students involved with production of publications," said Ralph Sellmeyer, Allison Professor of Journalism at Midland College. "These are practical sessions, structured to assist those who are photographers, editors, writers, designers, or those who wear all hats."

Tom Chambers, manager of medical photography at Texas Tech University, will conduct the Thursday workshop on "Principles of Good Photography." His session will cover such topics as camera basics, depth of field, light, composition, photo/printed matter relationship and troubleshooting. Part of his session will include hands-on demonstrations.

Speaker for the Friday session on "Design" will be Ray Dorn, of Chicago, Ill., author of design publications and a design specialist. He has written numerous magazine articles about design and writes a regular column for two publications.

Interested persons may register for the two-day workshop or for each day's session separately. Fee for both days is $80 and one day is $60. Registration in limited to a maximum of 75 persons. Each session will begin at 8 a.m. and conclude at 5 p.m.

Those who wish to have their publications critiqued by either speaker should send two copies of the publication, plus a fee of $10 for each critique. Publications should be mailed no later than Thursday.

MC adding two community services courses

Two courses not listed in the fall bulletin by the Midland College Community Services Department have been added to the schedule of classes starting the week of Oct. 17.

A month-long "Attitude Awareness Seminar" begins Oct. 18 and will be taught by Dr. Clyde Smith while Lou Greenwood will teach "Expanded Use of Overhead Projectors" starting Oct. 21.

The "Attitude Awareness Seminar" will meet on Mondays and Wednesdays from 6:30 to 10 p.m. from Oct. 18 through Nov. 17. Tuition is $50 per person and materials will cost $45.

Based on an internationally-known "Adventures in Attitudes" program, the seminar is a carefully planned experience in the change and mastery of attitudes, imagination and personal skills to achieve motivated effectiveness in family, work and social situations.

Topics include how to insure effective communications, how attitudes affect results, how to understand others, how to develop good human relations, how to solve problems, how to tap more of your leadership potential, how to use motivation for yourself and others, how to integrate goals with self management and how to manage your time.

Smith received his bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Illinois and his doctorate from Cornell University. He is professor and chairman of the biology department at Odessa College.

The continuing education course on the many uses of overhead projectors begins Oct. 21 and will be conducted from 7 to 9 p.m. each Thursday through Dec. 8. Limited to a maximum of 20 people, tuition is $21 and materials will cost about $10.

The effective use of an overhead projector can enhance the effectiveness of speakers, salesmen, classroom and Sunday school teachers, small production theatricals, puppetry and storytelling. The course will include selection, planning, resource materials, editing, communication skills and presentation.

Mrs. Greenwood is a longtime Midland resident who taught speech and English in Ector County school district for 12 years. She has taken numerous specialized post-graduate courses and was actively involved with Midland Community Theatre for many years. Her effective use of overhead projectors has been presented to professional educators' groups several times.

Persons interested in enrolling in either of the courses should visit the office of Community Services in the administraton building between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays.

UTPB professor's sculpture works to be display on campus Oct. 12-24

ODESSA — The sculpture works of Dr. Stanley Marcus, chairman of art at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, will be featured in an exhibition opening Oct. 12 in UTPB's third-floor art gallery.

The show, entitled "Unconventional Objects and Statues," will open with a reception at 7:30 p.m. Oct. 12, and will remain on display through Oct. 24. The event is free and open to the public.

Marcus noted the exhibition will include 10 large pieces and five or six other small pieces. "The exhibit is somewhat unique in that few sculptors have combined welded and cast aluminum," he said, pointing out that several bronze pieces also will be included.

He said he has been working with cast hands recently and has used these in several of his sculptures. "The hands are seen as forms within the sculpture, but they are also intended to arouse a personal reaction."

Marcus, who has a shop on East Highway 80, has work on displayat the Cronin Fine Arts Gallery in Oklahoma City, Okla. Ruth Wiseman and Associates of Dallas is planning an exhibition of his works at the Inkfish Gallery in Denver, Colo.

Marcus has been on the UTPB faculty since 1977. He was formerly coordinator of sculpture and assistant professor at New York University. He had previously taught at Central Connecticut State College in New Britain, Southern Connecticut State College in New Haven, Philadelphia College of Art and Columbia University.

A poetic look at changing times

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Roy A. Minear — former gas pump jockey turned bookeeper-poet and civic benefactor — reflects on his 51 years in Midland and finds himself "a little uncomfortable" with today's downtown traffic. He's also got something in common with Joan Crawford and Greer Garson — a Distinguished Service Award.

Bookkeeper-poet Roy A. Minear's feeling for his fellow man is well attested to by his friends and others who know him. But perhaps it's best expressed in a poem he wrote 12 years ago while he and his wife Evelyn were visiting Salsburg, Austria:

"We pass this way but once I know,
And each should try his best to show
That in a small unselfish way
The world may see a better day,
By having made for us a place
To serve within the Human race,
And those to whom the cross we hand
May measure up to Time's demand."

The trip to Austria was only one of the numerous foreign tours the Minears were accustomed to taking before illness curtailed much of his outside activity, relegating him to watching television for entertainment and forcing him to sleep upright in a chair for the past year because lying down bothers his back too much.

Midlander in Profile

But he's not prone to complaining. Instead, he likes to reflect on his 51 years in Midland and recall the move he made here from Iraan on Sept. 16, 1931.

Midland had a population of about 8,000 and Minear worked as a bookkeeper for the Fred Turner Chevrolet dealership, which was located downtown and was built using stones that had come from the old courthouse when it was torn down to make way for the present one.

Turner sold the dealership to J.H. Elder a year later and Minear worked for him until 1938, when he hired out his bookkeeping talents and business acumen to Gibbons and Heasley Inc. of Midland, which at the time was the largest oil well service company of its kind in the world.

During the course of the next 25 years Gibbons and Heasley became J.P. ("Bum") Gibbons Inc., which had yards all over the Permian Basin, along with some in Utah and Colorado.

Minear had become the firm's secretary-treasurer and executive vice president and helped liquidate its assets when Gibbons decided to retire in 1963. During the liquidation process, Gibbons sold a lot of his equipment to key employees who then started up their own well service companies, some of which are still operating today.

"Bum was a pretty good salesman," said Minear. "What no one else wanted, he sold to me — mostly real estate."

The money gleaned from leasing and selling some of that real estate allowed Minear to start taking life easy for a change and the couple began traveling to places like Europe, Africa and Asia.

Yet it's the civic endeavors which Gibbons introduced him to that seem to give Minear the most pleasure. "Bum was a very fine, public-spirited man," said Minear. "He did a lot of things in helping the poor that the public never knew about."

But it was one of Gibbons' known civic activities that propelled Minear into the world of helping others: "Bum had accepted a directorship at the West Texas Boys Ranch near San Angelo. The first few times he sent me to the meetings as his proxy."

Minear wound up serving four terms as president of the ranch and is currently chairman of its trust committee. Along the way, he also served as president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, president of the Midland Downtown Lions Club, Lions District Governor, and in 1981 he was inducted into the Lions Hall of Fame for his role in organizing 20 new Lions Club chapters in Texas — a national record.

He was also a charter member of the Petroleum Club and served as president of Midland Country Club in the late 1940s. Over the years he declined two suggestions that he run for mayor. "I'm just not very politically oriented," he says with a shrug.

Born on a farm in Gonzales County on Jan. 13, 1906, he's "a little uncomfortable" with today's downtown traffic and doesn't appreciate the increased crime rate brought on by the now declining boom in the city's economic growth of late.

"I like to think it's progress, but it's hard to tell sometimes." That's about the worst he'll say about the negative aspects of change.

In 1959, Minear received the highest honor the Texas Rehabilitation Center at Gonzales can bestow on a person: The Distinguished Service Award — a miniature bronze leg brace he earned for his work as a fund-raiser for the center prior to the advent of the Salk polio vaccine.

It's one of only six such awards given out by the facility and it places him alongside the likes of Joan Crawford and Greer Garson, two others who received the award.

That's not bad for a farm kid who started his working career as a gas station jockey in Iraan.

Freshman school PTAs seek members

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

One of the main objectives of Public School Week is to get parents interested in joining the PTA at their children's schools. One of the main reasons for joining the PTA is to get parents involved with the education of their children.

While Midland elementary school PTAs eagerly soak up cooperative and energetic members, Midland freshman schools previously have finished membership drives with short membership lists and dry mouths, thirsting for members for their respective PTAs.

"I think that somewhere along the line, the seventh, eighth and ninth grade students don't particularly want their parents around," said Leonard Monroe, principal of Midland Freshman High School, explaining one reason participation in PTAs at the freshman level is down.

"Secondly, the freshman schools are not in a neighborhood situation. And, too, I think there are a lot of people that will stay away from schools unless there is a problem."

According to Sue Rose, Lee Freshman High School PTA president, even though students at that age don't act like they want their parents involved, secretly they do.

"WE'VE BEEN carrying our children through elementary school by the hand. School is the wrong place to turn loose of them," Mrs. Rose, a former school teacher, explained. "Sure, they need to grow on their own but their education is the most important thing they are doing. Parents need to be active in that."

Sally Kelly, MFHS PTA president agreed.

"Sometimes parents think, 'Well, my child is only going to be here one year. Why get involved?' They think its only a year so why bother.

"But we want to get them involved," she continued. "We want them to meet the teachers, find out what's going on and meet the parents of the children their kids are running around with."

Unlike elementary schools, where PTA members meet once a month and participate in various activities ranging from Halloween carnivals to Christmas parties, freshman school parents only have three meetings a year.

ESTALIISHING LINES of communication between teachers, students and parents is as important at the secondary level as it is at the elementary level, the three agreed. However, the freshman school faces a different problem than do junior highs and high schools.

While high school parents often are involved in other organizations besides PTA, such as booster clubs or band parent clubs, the freshman schools are limited solely to PTA, Ms. Kelly pointed out.

"But if they go into the booster club or the PTA, whatever, it doesn't matter," she said. "At least its participation and that's what we want."

Since the students only attend ninth grade at the school, many parents feel that one year is too short of a time to become involved.

"It's a difficult time for some," Mrs. Rose said. "The students aren't included in junior high and they're not included in high school — they're just kind of in-between."

"And the schools are so far away," Fern Livingston, publicity chairman for MFHS PTA, added. "They are certainly not neighborhood schools. And I think that is one of the problems. Parents don't have a chance to just swing by the school so they are not familiar with the school."

BOTH FRESHMAN HIGH schools will be holding their open houses Monday evening, MFHS at 7 and LFHS at 7:30. The open houses allow parents to sign up for memberships, meet the teachers and see the school facilities.

"You can put in what you want to put into PTA," Ms. Kelly said, adding that membership costs $2. While $1.10 goes to the national and state organizations, 90 cents is used by the local school PTA. Often, the organization contributes a gift to the school at the end of the year, she pointed out, adding that with MFHS's new library under construction, the PTA hopes to be able to purchase books or some other item for the new library.

"We like to get them something that they need but can't get through their budget," she explained.

The new library should interest parents, according to Monroe.

"We're overcrowded here and I'm sure Lee Freshman will be soon. The people voted for the bond issue to build our new library and classrooms and they need to see it. Parents need to see what's going on.

"We want them to be proud of their school," he continued. "We'd like to get the parents to come and see it and the teachers. We want to be as positive as we can."

Although being classified as a freshman has its disadvantages anywhere, including Midland, there are definite advantages to the MISD's system.

"PARENTS NEED TO know how fortunate Midland kids are to have their own school," Mrs. Rose said.

Monroe pointed out advantages of not being around cars or being exposed to older students and having all academics on a similar level.

"I think its kind of a relief for the kids," Mrs. Livingston said. "It's kind of a relief to have that time before the 'big time' of high school."

Mary Hughes, left, and Mary Mann prowl through some of the thousands of used, rare, common and better books which will be on sale in the Friends of the Library's 15th Annual Book Sale next weekend in the Midland County Exhibit Building.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Books which surely are fit for somebody's bookshelf or fit to stow away for future reference will be offered for sale at cents rather than dollars on Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the Midland County Exhibit Building.

Up to 20,000 hardback and paperback books of most every classification — excluding top secret and pornographic — will be on sale from 6 to 9 p.m. Friday, when a $2 early-bird fee will be charged; from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, when there will be no admission charge, and from 1 to 3 p.m. Sunday, when the clearance sale will be held.

Hardback books will be selling for three for $1 or 35 cents each, paperbacks will go four for a $1, magazines will be selling for 25 cents each, and the better books, including reference works such as unabridged dictionaries and encyclopedias, and rare, autographed and some first-edition books will be priced higher than the regular stock.

Books in the sale will range from art to zoology and will include literature, technical and specialized material, petroleum abstracts, and fiction, such as Gothic suspense thrillers and the Hardy Boys, and non-fiction, including Texana books and Indian lore.

"We've just got lots of late fiction, but they'll be better books that won't go for 35 cents," said Mary Hughes, a book worker who is a member of the Friends of the Midland County Public Library, which sponsors the annual sale for the benefit of the public library. "We don't have lots of old-fashioned fiction. Most of it is that new trash that no one will want to read again."

Ms. Hughes noted that the Friends has a "whole lot" of petroleum abstracts. "I don't know how many volumes, tons of them, might sell."

"We have one (book) autographed by Lyndon Johnson," she recalled. "I don't know how much (of a price) to put on it."

Ms. Hughes mentioned other books, as she and Friends' board members Mary Mann and Mignon Pearson were sorting books for the sale.

"Oh," she said, "we have 'I was Hitler's Doctor,' but it's not autographed."

"I'll autograph it if you want me to," jested Ms. Pearson.

Ms. Mann, who has worked in collecting, sorting and readying donated books for the sale for about five years, said that she had rather work with books than do some other things she had rather not think about.

"He (her husband, Thomas Mann) knew I'd rather be doing this than cleaning house and a couple of other things that I should be doing."

The sale's offerings also will include Reader's Digest condensed books, some Time-Life series, including sets of "The Great Cities," American Heritage books, foreign-language books, magazines and adventure works.

"I read 'I Married Adventure,'" said Ms. Hughes, "and it is the dullest thing."

The weekend sale will feature a flea-market sponsored by the Midland Genealogical Society.

The Friends of the Library is made up of more than 300 book buffs.

David Allan Coe will perform at Ector County Coliseum Thursday. Besides recording, Coe has written numerous songs recorded by others, such as Willie Nelson, Johnny Cash, George Jones, Leon Russell, Tammy Wynette and The Oak Ridge Boys. Coe has just been awarded, in a Swedish music poll, the title of Male Country Vocalist of the Year, as well as receiving country song and album of the year awards. Tickets, priced at $8.50 and $9.50, may be purchased at area record stores, or at the coliseum on the day of the concert.

Parker gets some ideas from 'General Hospital'

By TheAssociated Press

Ray Parker Jr., having made four albums and had all four sell gold, says his next album will be "just more creative."

He says, "I guess I'm at a point where everything has to be more creative. Technically, they've got everything pretty much figured out now. You can punch the drums up electronically. You can feed a synthesizer and plug it in. Pretty soon the engineers will be out of business and studio time will go down to a minimum. You can program things at home, go down to the studio, push buttons and all this stuff comes out.

"But like everything in life, the important thing has always been the idea."

A story draws in the popular song listener more than the tune, Parker thinks. As a song writer, he says, "People connect me with a romantic story or who's fooling around with whom.

"I get some ideas from 'General Hospital' on TV. It's a lot easier to write about people slipping around than to write a love song."

Parker also is known, by those who know his career, as a person who makes his own decisions and has his own ideas.

He started playing with backup bands, live and in recording studios, in his native Detroit, when he was 14. He had taken music lessons as a youngster in school because it was either that or dance with girls.

When Stevie Wonder was organizing a group to tour with the Rolling Stones in 1972, he called Parker and asked him to play guitar. "Usually he had auditions," Parker says. "But he'd heard enough about me and he called me up and said, join the band. It was quite a surprise."

Parker didn't stay through the whole tour. "I wanted to do my thing and he wanted to do his thing. They kept bribing me to stay. I left in Corpus Christi, Texas. One night I slept at the airport, so nobody could find me to offer me money to stay. Then I caught a train home to Detroit."

But Motown had left Detroit, and Invictus, for which Parker had done most of session work, was gone. So he moved to Los Angeles.

Now, he's riding on a hit album, "The Other Woman," on Arista Records, and a hit single, "Let Me Go."

Then, nobody knew him. He'd played on a lot of record sessions so he had experience. But usually his name hadn't been listed so, in the record business outside Detroit, people didn't know what his experience was.

He says, "I had a theory that if you're at the right place at the right time, it'll happen. I was at all the studios all the time. I used to hang around and bug everybody. It was called being pushy.

"I went in when Barry White was recording 'Love's Theme' and pushed stop on the tape machine and told him the song wasn't happening." White received this brash intrusion graciously and Parker did do some work on the arrangement of "Love's Theme."

Namath will not face charges

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Former pro football quarterback Joe Namath, arrested for allegedly driving erratically down city streets, will not face a drunken driving charge, the state attorney's office said.

That charge, filed after Namath's arrest last week, was dropped due to a lack of sufficient evidence, Assistant State Attorney Chris Pole said Friday. Charges of careless driving and driving without a valid license will be prosecuted at a later date, he said.

When arrested on Sept. 23, a videotape at the scene showed Namath was "laughing, joking around and generally not taking his arrest very seriously, which can be an indication of drunkeness," Pole said.

'Tintypes' affords pleasant stroll down memory lane

Friday night found Theatre Midland's lobby packed with theater-goers. The weekend marked two Midland Community Theatre events; the opening of one play and the closing of another. The only dismal aspect of such a situation was the ticket line.

It was the proverbial line. You know the kind; it stretches forever never moving. No one knows where it ends as evidenced by people trying to cut into the line thinking they were at the end of it, only to find they were wrong.

It's difficult for one box office person to handle two plays when it gets close to curtain time. (TM box office personnel are highly competent at what they do, but they are not miracle workers. Of course, one of the obvious suggestions is pick up the tickets early, but not all have the time to do that.)

As curtain time came and went, those still in line half said, half questioned as they looked toward the theater doors, "Surely they won't start before everyone has a chance to get their tickets and be seated?"

They were right.

Those attending the opening of "Tintypes" discovered their wait was well worth it. From beginning to end, the production was tastefully done.

"Tintypes," as the word suggests, carries the audience back in time. And as it further indicates, it does so in a photographic style.

Tintypes, earlier known as ferrotypes (1856), refers to the days of wet-plate photography and the use of thin metal plates, rather than glass ones, to hold the collodion (photographic) emulsion. The look achieved was similiar to that created by the Frenchman Louis J.M. Daguerre, who produced the first popular form of photography — daguerreotype.

It is also the style of the production. The musical revue presents segmented images of life in the United States between 1895 and 1918. It does this by blending popular songs from approximately the same period with mime combined with brief speeches.

In it, three of the characters take on the roles of prominent citizens of the times during parts of the revue. The personalities are Teddy Roosevelt; Anna Held, Florenz Ziegfeld's wife and first big star; and Emma Goldman, political activist and anarchist. The other two represent certain segments of U.S. culture. Susannah depicts the beginnings of a black American identity and Charlie represents the immigrant to the United States.

The play itself is a rather average one. Billed as a musical (ragtime) revue, "Tintypes" takes on a serious satirical tone at times. Some comments work, others are incomplete. It contains funny lines, the musical numbers are representative samplings of American music, but its pace is inconsistent. "Tintypes" at times seems not to know where it's going, and when it gets there, backs off as soon as it arrives.

It is to the cast's credit that all five do a fine job with an uneven script. All have extremely nice voices with two, Norma Short (Susannah) and Patricia Zap (Anna), delivering stellar performances. Both Miss Short and Miss Zap are making their MCT debut.

As an ensemble, the cast works well together. They were a little stiff in the beginning which is to be expected on opening night. Of the five, Miss Butts still needs to relax into her role.

The energy level required in "Tintypes" is maintained throughout the production and the cast's enthusiasm is refreshing.

The set and costumes, designed by Elizabeth Spicer, were in keeping with the personalities, time period and mood.

"Tintypes" is going to be MCT's entry in the Festival of American Community Theatres. The best segments of the play will be presented in the alloted one-hour time slot.

The festival is highly competitive, with the winner going on first to regional competition and then to the national one. The final destination of the U.S. winner is the international competition, to be held in Japan.

Judging for each competition is done by a panel of judges. The following are suggestions which struck this reviewer as potential problem areas and ones which can be solved.

The introductory scene is effective when the audience realizes the five are poised as in a photograph and that the play has begun. But it takes the audience several moments to realize this.

It might work better if each took his position separately behind the scrim and, once all five are in place, the theater was briefly thrown into darkness, before the lights came on again to show all five standing as in an old photograph. The audience would then know, without having to guess, that the show has begun.

There are other possible solutions, this is merely one suggestion.

In order to do mime effectively, it is essential that the thespians believe in what they create. For example, Fennell takes a dime out of his pocket, which disappears when he is through with it. He does not return it to his pocket before he is off on his next course of action.

The mime appears in what are designated as "silent film" sequences. A strobe light might increase the visual look of these segments, especially in the beginning scenes.

Memorable numbers included, Anna's "If I Were On the Stage" and "Toyland;" "Wait for the Wagon," including the speeches back and forth between Emma and T.R.; Susannah's "Wayfaring Stranger" and "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child," with the letters to the editor incorporated into the segment, and her "Nobody;" T.R.'s "I Want What I Want When I Want It;" T.R. and Emma's "What It Takes to Make Me Love You — You've Got It;" and the cast's "In My Merry Oldsmobile," "Shortnin' Bread" and "Smiles."

All in all, the show provides audiences with a stroll down memory lane, presented by a cast who is having a good time. And the enthusiasm is contageous.

Film 'Tempest' just another interpretation

When it comes to Shakespeare, most directors can't leave well enough alone. For whatever reason, they seem to be always adapting and "updating" the bard's plays and inevitably something gets lost in the translation.

From the 1956 science fiction classic "Forbidden Planet" with Walter Pidgeon in the Prospero role and Robby the Robot as his companion, to Paul Mazursky's "Tempest," starring John Cassavetes (with Raul Julia as the modern day version of Shakespeare's half-human, half-animal Caliban) there is just no end to the interpretations.

This time out the Duke of Milan is a male menopausal high tech architect (Cassavetes) who becomes bored with his life and wife and decides to go to Greece to find himself. He takes his daughter, Miranda (Molly Ringwald) with him and they meet nightclub entertainer Susan Sarandon, who takes them to an island inhabited only by sheepherder Kalibanos (Raul Julia) and his flock.

Much of "Tempest," takes place there as four live a seeming idyllic life. But by accident Cassavetes' wife (real-life wife Gena Rowlands) is marooned on the island after her boat capsizes in a storm Cassavetes has called up. You see, Cassavetes still has the power of white magic like Shakespeare's Prospero, but his technique varies a little — something like spit-in-the-wind Zen.

Nice gimmick and one of the more entertaining moments in "Tempest," but even Mazursky ("An Unmarried Woman," and "Willie and Phil") and co-writer Leon Capetanos get abandoned by the "magic" when it comes to piecing together this out-of-sync plot.

"Tempest," jumps back and forth from New York, the Mediterranean, and the island and expects the viewer to make the transitions without much explanation. And we do, but do we want to? "Tempest" is just shy of two and a half hours long, thereby setting up its own natural antagonism to human biology, and the additional strains of plot devices are wearing.

Just the same, "Tempest," is exquisitely photographed and acted with particular standout performances by Molly Ringwald as the budding adolescent Miranda, stunning Gena Rowlands (Gloria) as her mother and Susan Sarandon as the woman in search of love.

But this fable of foible wouldn't be complete without Raul Julia and John Cassavetes in contrast — the manipulated and the manipulator. Julia who flatters sleaze and Cassavetes who battles his own introspective tempest, are two of Mazursky's more interesting creations.

In fact, Mazursky is something of a master at uncovering the "man in seach of himself," whether it be in the form of Julia's basic acceptance of life or the complex and convoluted workings of Cassavetes' character. And these two actors, along with Victorio Gassman as Cassavetes' boss, provide sensitive and telling performances in this "slice-of-life" cast.

"Tempest," rated PG, is fanciful, funny and slightly fractured. And though sometimes deliberately stagy as in a tango sequence, where everybody chooses partners for a late-night dance and romance, it is just that sort of inventiveness that allows "Tempest," to weave its spell.

Rallying Red Raiders surprise Aggies, 24-15

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Coach Jerry Moore of Texas Tech described Tech's 24-15 victory over Texas A&M on Saturday as a "big boost" to a team which he said had lost "seven or eight heartbreakers" in the past 1½ years.

Moore said starting quarterback Jim Hart, who guided Tech to a 197 yards total offense in the third quarter and threw three short touchdown passes, had to sit out the final nine minutes with a bruised shoulder.

"But I can't say enough about Kevyn Williams. He came in a pressure situation and performed well," Moore said.

Faced with third-and-11 and third-and-eight situations, Williams, a freshman redshirt who had never taken a varsity snap, ignored the screaming A&M crowd of nearly 60,000 to hit 11- and 15-yard passes for crucial first downs.

Williams moved Tech 64 yards in 14 plays — using up more than seven minutes of the fourth quarter — as Tech clinched the triumph with a 33-yard field goal by Ricky Gann.

A&M, a two touchdown favorite, held Tech to 77 yards offense in the first half and grabbed an 8-0 lead on David Hardy's two long distance field goals and a safety sack of Hart.

The A&M defense seemed totally confused in the third quarter, however, as Hart mixed passing and running to march his team 80, 60 and 57 yards to touchdowns.

His scoring passes went five yards to tight end Mike Ramey, 11 yards to tight end Buzz Tatom and three yards — on the final play of the third quarter — to split end Leonard Harris.

A&M quarterback Gary Kubiak, operating without his top three running backs because of injuries, closed the margin to 21-15 with a perfect 18-yard strike to Don Jones just inbounds in the end zone.

Hardy, the nation's third-leading scorer, boomed field goals of 52 and 48 yards in the first half, and A&M defenders chased Hart 11 yards into the end zone and knocked the ball lose for a safety.

The victory in a regionally televised game raised Tech's record to 2-2, and 1-1 in the SWC. A&M dropped to 2-2 and 0-1 in the conference.

A&M, sixth in the nation in scoring with a 38.3 average and ninth in total offense with 450 yards a game, could not muster a rushing attack as injured top runners Johnny Hector, Earnest Jackson and Thomas Sanders stayed on the sidelines.

A&M compiled 280 yards offense, 252 yards of that total on the passing of Kubiak, who completed 25 of 40. He was intercepted in the end zone by Wayne Dawson with 45 seconds left in the game.

Gabriel Rivera, a 285-pounder who moved from nose guard to tackle, led the Tech defense that held A&M to 36 yards rushing on 19 carries.

A&M's defense, however, yielded 264 yards to Tech. A&M started the game with the ninth best rushing defense in the county, allowing only 84 yards a game.

Owls no match for Longhorns

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas quarterbacks Robert Brewer and Todd Dodge each directed two first-half touchdown drives as the 15th-ranked Longhorns coasted to a 34-7 victory Saturday night for their 17th consecutive triumph over winless Rice in a Southwest Conference football game.

Texas was on the verge of its second consecutive shutout until demoted Rice quarterback Michael Calhoun came off the bench and hit flanker Vince Courville with a 20-yard touchdown pass with 9:22 left in the game.

The Longhorns, who blanked Missouri 21-0 last week, stretched their season record to 3-0 and 1-0 in SWC play. The Owls dropped to 0-4 on the season and 0-1 in league games.

Texas scored on four straight possessions and took advantage of fumble recoveries by Richard Peavy and Ralph Darnell en route to a 28-0 halftime lead.

UT'S ONLY second-half scoring came on field goals of 22 and 23 yards by Raul Allegre.

Sophomore quarterback Todd Dodge directed Texas' second offensive team to the next two touchdowns on a two-yard run by Mike Luck and Dodge's 1-yard keeper. Dodge his Herkie Walls on a 64-yard pass play to set up Luck's touchdown run.

On Texas' next drive, Brewer returned and hit Brent Duhon on a 27-yard pass play to set up a 1-yard plunge by fullback Carl Robinson.

RICE, OPERATING behind first-time starting quarterback Phillip Money, did not advance beyond its own 38-yard line in the first half. Calhoun returned late in the third quarter and played the rest of the game.

TEXAS fullback Terry Orr led the Longhorn rushers with 65 yards on 11 carries, while Robinson added 55 yards on nine carries and Walker gained 54 yards on 12 carries.

Brewer finished with five completions on 14 attempts for 72 yards.

Calhoun completed eight of 18 passes for 164 yards and Money completed seven of 15 passes for 48 yards.

Calhoun, ineffective in Rice's first three games this season, hit Melvin Robinson for key pass completions of 13 and 19 yards in Rice's fourth quarter touchdown drive. Facing third and 20, Calhoun got the Owls on the scoreboard when Courville beat Texas defensive back Robert Smothers in the end zone.

Lake Highlands freshman Alvin Rettig recovered a fumble by Texas' John Walker at the Rice 8-yard line to stop a third-quarter Longhorn drive.

Moments earlier, Walker ran 53 yards into the Rice end zone, but it was ruled that he stepped out of bounds at the 21.

The two teams traded punts until the final drive of the first quarter when Peavy's fumble recoery gave the Longhorns a first down at the Rice 39.

Brewer hit Orr on an 8-yard pass and Robinson and Walker rushed the ball to the 7 where Walker took a pitch and skirted the right side into the end zone standing.

Dodge rolled to his right early in the second quarter and hit Walls, a world class sprinter, coming across the middle on a 64-yard pass to the Rice 6. Three plays later, Luck ran two yards for the touchdown.

Porkers feast on Frogs, 35-0

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Wide receiver Mark Mistler scored a touchdown and set up two TDs by Gary Anderson and the Arkansas defense did the rest as the 10th-ranked Razorbacks defeated Texas Christian University 35-0 Saturday night.

TCU wound up with two first downs and failed to score for the first time in 40 games. The Horned Frogs did not make a first down in the first three quarters and at that point had 31 yards total offense against the Razorback defense led by Billy Ray Smith and Ron Faurot. In fact, the Arkansas defense scored on the first play of the third quarter when Smith put on a ferocious rush and Eddie Clark's pass was picked off by Earl Buckingham and returned 8 yards.

MISTLER, a former quarterback, caught a 13-yard, third-down pass for the Razorbacks' first score and made a leaping catch at the TCU 4 to set up Anderson's first touchdown.

In the third quarter, quarterback Tom Jones handed to wide receiver Kim Dameron, who handed to Mistler, who passed to Anderson for a 40-yard gain to the TCU 12. Three plays later, Anderson broke on a quick draw play from the 10 and dove over the final defender for a touchdown.

Anderson, the Razorbacks' leading rusher last year, was moved to wide receiver in the spring, but did not play in the season-opener because of an inner ear infection. He played sparingly in the second game and was not sharp last week against Mississippi.

BECAUSE OF the Frogs' ineptness on offense, TCU did not start outside its own 27 on its first 13 possessions.

Arkansas is 4-0 and 1-0 in the Southwest Conference. TCU is 1-3 and 0-2 in the league.

The only chance TCU had for field position in the first half came when James Gargus hit a career record 64-yard punt — including a 25-yard roll — that was downed at the Arkansas 3. The Razorbacks made one first down before Brad Taylor punted 52 yards and John Thomas lost 12 on the return.

On third down from their 19, Reuben Jones backed up to pass and Smith drew a bead on him. Smith hit Reuben Jones in the back and then recovered the fumble at the Frogs' 9.

After an 11-yard punt return by Anderson, the Razorbacks moved 62 yards in 11 plays for their second touchdown. Anderson popped up the middle for 20 yards to the TCU 19 and Mistler went high to grab a Taylor bullet for 15 yards at the 4. On third down, Taylor started left on the option and pitched to Anderson who left safety Byron Linwood lying on the ground at the 5. That made it 14-0 with 48 seconds left in the half.

AFTER A 17-yard punt return by Anderson, the Razorbacks took over at their 48 and on second down, the razzle-dazzle pass play with Mistler throwing set up the third touchdown.

The next time the Razorbacks got the football, they went 57 yards in 15 running plays with Jones keeping for the touchdown from 3 yards out with 34 seconds left in the third quarter.

Braves clinch tie for pennant

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Atlanta Braves scored two runs in the third inning, ignited by Chris Chambliss' solo homer, and defeated the San Diego Padres 4-2 Saturday night to clinch at least a tie for the National League West Division championship.

The victory gave the Braves a one game lead in the West over Los Angeles, which defeated San Francisco 15-2. The loss eliminated the Giants.

The Braves managed only seven hits against San Diego, five coming in the second and third innings when they scored their first three runs.

Terry Harper led off the second with a single, stole second and was sacrificed to third by Jerry Royster. Glenn Hubbard singled home the run.

The Braves scored what turned out to be their winning runs in the third. Claudell Washington led off with a triple and scored on Rafael Ramirez's sacrifice fly. Dale Murphy followed with a double but was gunned down trying to steal third. Chambliss hit an 0-1 delivery from San Diego starter John Montefusco, 10-11, over the fence in right-center field for his 20th homer.

Dickerson logs 8th 100-yard game for SMU

DALLAS (AP) — Reserve quarterback Jeff Courtwright threw three touchdown passes, tailback Eric Dickerson logged his eighth consecutive 100-yard rushing effort and seventh-ranked Southern Methodist thumped North Texas State 38-10 Saturday night in non-conference college football.

Courtwright, starting in place of injured Lance McIlhenny, hit Craig James for touchdown passes of 96 and 16 yards and found Rickey Bolden for a 4-yard scoring pass.

Dickerson rushed 24 times for 179 yards, including touchdown runs of 2 and 70 yards, both in the second half, which put him in fourth place on the Southwest Conference career touchdown list.

North Texas quarterback Rusty Hill completed 31 of 55 passes for 250 yards and a touchdown to Tony Merriwether, but was intercepted three times, two of them leading to SMU scores.

THE MUSTANGS, defending SWC champions, ran their intersectional record to 4-0 while North Texas, of the Southland Conference, slipped to 0-5, including two losses to SWC teams.

Courtwright's first start as a Mustang was spoiled in the third quarter when he had to leave the game with a strained ankle. He finished with eight completions in 12 attempts for 168 yards and the three touchdowns.

Run For Your Health has odd ending

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

The Annual Tevis Herd Run For Your Health had an unusual ending when the top two competitors in the 10-kilometer event crossed the finish line from different directions.

All eyes were glued to direction from which the finishers of the two-mile and one-mile run had come when a sweaty 23-year-old trotted across the finish line from the other direction. His finish might have gone undetected had he not stopped next to the man who passed out the cards indicating the order of finish. After giving the young man a, "Where did you come from look?" the official handed him the No.1 card.

No, it was Beau Master, a former steple chase and long distance runner at the University of Nebraska.

As Master was entering the Midland College loop, the cyclist who paced the event turned left, and so did Master. But the runners were supposed to turn right and when Tevis Herd, who came in second, got to the loop, he and the rest of the pack filed to the right.

It could have been a sticky situation, trying to decide who won, were it not for the fact that the finish line and the entry into campus were the same distance apart, no matter which direction one ran.

So Master finished first in a time of 35:20 to dead silence, while Herd was cheered enthusiastically by an admiring crowd.

Lisa Durban, a 29-year-old aerobics dance instructor, was the top female finisher with a time of 43:52. After a long hiatus from running, Durban picked up the sport again about a year ago and with it a philosophy about running.

"It's a good thing to do on your own," she said, "and a good time for thinking."

Odessan Larry Pitts captured the two-mile run in 9:16. Pitts is the Director of Intramurals at the University of Texas at the Permian Basin.

Nancy Skopak, a third grade teacher at Burnett Elementary School, won the women's division of the two-mile in 12:57. At 22 years of age, Skopak runs 2.8 miles a day, six days a week.

When the official thought he heard Fred bark, he withdrew his complaint.

St. Clair was excited about finishing ahead of his golden retriever, "I beat the dog!" he said. "I made him 'stay' at the finish line until I crossed."

In the one-mile run for 12-year-olds and younger, Brad Sewell won the boys' event in a time of 6:16. The 11-year-old Sewell attends Crockett Elementary School and "runs a lot."

Elizabeth Ameel surprised the crowd by finishing second in the short race, capturing the girls event with a time of 6:40. Ameel, an 11-year-old who goes to school at St. Ann's, is a marathoner and runs two miles a day.

Illini's Eason sabotages Gophers, 42-24

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Illinois quarterback Tony Eason threw an 80-yard touchdown pass to Mike Martin and Kirby Wilson ran a punt back for a touchdown as Illinois came from behind in the final period to upset 19th-ranked Minnesota 42-24 Saturday night in Big Ten football.

Eason completed 15 of 27 passes for 249 yards and two touchdowns, but it was his 80-yard connection to Martin that stole the show. Minnesota had just scored, extending its lead to 24-20.

But on the first play after the Gopher score, and the first of the final period, Eason dropped a short pass over the middle to Martin, who raced the rest of the way on his own.

The Illini, 4-1 overall and 3-0 in the Big Ten, came right back and dumped Minnesota quarterback Mike Hohensee in the end zone for a safety and then Wilson returned a Minnesota punt 46 yards for a score to break the Gophers' back. Mike Bass tacked on 47-and 50-yard field goals for good measure.

After taking a 17-14 halftime lead the Illini came out and took advantage of the Gophers' seventh fumble. Hohensee fumbled on his own 32. But Illinois was not able to get into the end zone and settled for a 45-yard field goal by Mike Bass.

The Gophers, 3-1 overall and 1-1 in the Big Ten, then took over, driving 80 yards for a touchdown with Hohensee running the final 18 to give them their first lead of the game.

Minnesota came back and tacked on a 41-yard field goal by Jim Gallery after recovering an Illinois fumble to raise its lead to 24-20 as time ran out in the third period.

But then disaster struck in the form of the two quick Illinois touchdowns and the Gophers were out of it.

The loss overshadowed the performance of Hohensee, who completed 27 of 55 passes for 344 yards and two touchdowns, plus running for another. He became the all-time leading passer at Minnesota.

East Texas nips NW La., 24-20

COMMERCE, Texas (AP) — Kyle Mackey fired a 20-yard touchdown pass with 1:12 left to play and East Texas State then made the two-point conversion for a 24-20 win over Northwest Louisiana in a non-conference football game Saturday.

East Texas led 13-10 at intermission, but the lead seesawed throughout the second half.

N. Carolina St. 16, Virginia 13

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — North Carolina State's Wolfpack, trailing by 10 points at intermission, rallied for two second-half touchdowns — the second set up by Jeff Byrd's 53-yard punt return — for a 16-13 Atlantic Coast Conference football victory Saturday over Virginia's winless Cavaliers.

Virginia fell to 0-4 and has now seven straight and 17 of its last 18 games. The Wolfpack improved its record to 4-1 in beating the Cavaliers for the ninth consecutive time and for the 21st time in their last 22 meetings.

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Brigham Young put on a dazzling offensive show to end its two-game losing streak with an easy 51-3 win over Texas-El Paso in Western Athletic Conference football play Saturday night.

Quarterback Steve Young tossed for 399 yards and two touchdowns as the Cougars evened their season mark at 2-2 and boosted their WAC record to 2-1. UTEP, 2-3, is 1-2 in conference play.

Crimson Tide washes over Arkansas State, 34-7

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Alabama's fourth-string quarterback, Perry Cuda, hit Joey Jones with two touchdown passes within 23 seconds Saturday night to start the Crimson Tide winging to a 34-7 football victory over Arkansas State.

Arkansas State, stepping above its NCAA division, had shocked fifth-ranked Alabama by blocking a punt to tie the score at 7.

Cuda, a sophomoe from Summerville, S.C., found Jones in the left side of the end zone from the 20 early in the second quarter. Craige Florence intercepted State quarterback Rick Spivey's pass at the Indians' 17-yard line on the first play after the kickoff, and Cuda immediately hit Jones again in the end zone.

Peter Kim connected on two field goals for the Tide before the half ended, and the issue was no longer in doubt, if it ever was.

The Indians scored when Clyde Dumas blocked a punt and Bill Bowers recovered it in the end zone. It was the first Alabama punt blocked since Auburn did it twice in 1972 in its 17-16 upset of the Tide.

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Among fans most disenchanted with the strike by National Football League players are those who watch from high above the stadium, in the Goodyear blimp.

"Well, we're just like any other fans," said Don Ploskunak, pilot of Goodyear's Enterprise. "We miss Monday night football. And we have one of the best seats this side of heaven when they are playing."

From the blimp's location, about 1,000 feet above the stadium, the view is breathtaking, he said.

"From our vantage point, above the stadium, we watch the game as though the coach is X-ing and O-ing (drawing plays) on a blackboard. We can really see the flow of the game," Ploskunak said.

"We are waiting out the strike with the players and the owners," said William Scherer, coordinator of activities for the three Goodyear blimps — the Columbia, the America and the Enterprise. "Meanwhile, we are picking up a few college games on the weekends."

Like seats in a stadium, the quarters on a blimp can be a bit cramped. By the time the necessary equipment is loaded, only a cameraman, a video technician and the pilot can fit inside the aircraft.

The football strike has provided some time for the Enterprise to get its semi-annual checkup, which consists of changing the blimp's engine plants, sprucing up its paint and performing general maintenance.

But Ploskunak said he misses football, especially from the blimp.

"It's so beautiful — like watching a moving mural," he said.

Ploskunak said he is no different from those fans stuck on the ground when it comes to second-guessing plays.

"Isn't every fan a perfect Monday morning quarterback?" he asked.

Scherer said blimps have been used in televising college football games in the past and will be doing more, depending on how long the NFL strike continues. Plans now are in the works for blimps to hover above the Penn State-Alabama and Texas-Oklahoma games Oct. 9.

Saturday night's games

Hurricane ravages Louisville; SWTS wins

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Speedy Neal scored three touchdowns to lead 17th-ranked Miami, Fla., to a 28-6 victory over Louisville Saturday night.

Neal, a 245-pound junior fullback, rammed over from the 2-and 1-yard lines in the first half to put Miami, 4-1, on top 14-0 at halftime.

Neal then took a 16-yard scoring pass from quarterback Mark Richt on Miami's first possession of the second half as the Hurricanes put the game out of reach at 21-0.

SW TExas, 34-21

HAMMOND, La. (AP) — Eric Cobble returned a blocked punt seven yards for a touchdown on the game's first offensive series, then scored again on a 72-yard punt return Saturday night in leading Southwest Texas State to an easy 34-21 victory over Southeastern Louisiana.

Unbeaten Southwest Texas, defending NCAA Division II champion, improved to 4-0. Southeastern Louisiana, which got all of its points within nine minutes of the fourth quarter, slipped to 2-2 with its second consecutive loss.

Ford added another fourth-quarter touchdown with a 1-yard plunge and then passed to Mitchell for a 2-point conversion with 9:20 left in the game.

Texas Lutheran jumped to a 7-0 lead when quarterback Mike Cantu scored from the 1 yard line. Cantu also capped a 63-yard scoring drive with a 7-yard touchdown pass to Ben Kempf.

Lamar 28, TSouthern 17

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Sophomore tailback Louis Landry ran for two fourth-quarter touchdowns as Lamar University came from behind to defeat the Texas Southern Tigers 28-17 in a non-conference game Saturday night.

Lamar trailed 17-14 in the fourth quarter when linebacker Alton Drake took a punt return away from TSU's Leon Thomasson at the Tiger 18. Four plays later, Landry scored from the 1 yard line for a 21-17 Cardinal lead.

Towson 35, Maine 32

TOWSON, Md. (AP) — Senior Sean Landeta kicked a 22-yard field goal with one second remaining to give Towson State a 35-32 come-from-behind victory Saturday night over the University of Maine.

Towson, now 3-1, tied the game with 1:52 remaining when quarterback Joe Anderson hit tailback Paul Cillo on a 3-yard scoring strike. Landeta added the extra point to knot the game at 32-32.

Maine, which scored 100 points in losing its last two games in a total of 10 overtimes, now is 2-3.

Maryland 26, Syracuse 3

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Jess Atkinson kicked four field goals and a swarming Maryland defense ruined the sparkling play of freshman Syracuse quarterback Todd Norley Saturday as the Terrapins swamped the Orangemen 26-3 in college football.

Maryland improved to 2-2 with its second straight victory, while the Orange lost their fourth in a row after an opening-season win.

Gamecocks whip Bearkats

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — South Carolina combined agressive defense with steamroller offense and three Mark Fleetwood field goals to outclass Cincinnati, 37-10, Saturday night in college football.

Cincinnati, which is fighting banishment into Class I-AA, relied heavily on the passing arm of 6-foot senior Danny Barrett. But he was hampered by poor pass protection, dropped passes and a second-quarter knee injury to speedy junior receiver Deno Foster.

A homecoming crowd of 59,000 scattered through Williams-Brice Stadium saw South Carolina's Gamecocks improve their record on the year to 3-2. Cincinnati now has a 2-2 record.

Nimitz, Ector remain unbeaten in 9th grade

After four weeks of play in the ninth grade football schedule, two teams have yet to suffer a loss, Nimitz and Ector.

Nimitz posted a 28-6 victory over Bonham Saturday night for a 4-0 record while Ector shutout Crockett 20-0. The two teams will meet Saturday at Ratliff Stadium to determine a clear leader in the conference.

Thursday night, previously unbeaten Lee Maroon was knocked off by in-school rival Lee White, 12-6. The loss dropped Maroon to 3-1 and into a two-way tie with Midland purple, a 19-0 winner over Bowie on Saturday.

In the eighth grade Midland-Odessa Conference, Goddard ripped Bonham 42-6 Saturday to move maintain sole possession of first place, one-half game in front of Nimitz. Goddard is 4-0 and Nimitz, because of an open date, is 3-0.

Nimitz kept its record spotless with a 21-14 victory over 2-2 Ector while Hood defeated Bowie 26-8 and Crockett blanked Alamo 12-0.

In eighth grade Midland City Conference action, unbeaten Trinity downed Goddard Red 20-6 to keep first place to itself while Goddard White (2-1) beat Midland Christian 24-8 and Alamo (2-1) edged San Jacinto, 6-0.

Low scoring dominated the seventh grade American Conference as Alamo Grey blanked San Jacinto White 6-0 and Goddard Red and San Jacinto Green played to a 6-6 deadlock. Goddard White and Alamo Scarlet failed to report.

Dodgers eliminate Giants in NL West

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Ken Landreaux, Ron Cey and Mike Scioscia hit home runs as the Los Angeles Dodgers ended the title hopes of the San Francisco Giants 15-2 Saturday and moved to within a half-game of the lead in the National League West.

The regular season ends Sunday and if a divisional playoff game is necessary it will be in Los Angeles on Monday.

The Dodgers banged out 17 hits and recorded their season-high run total as they eliminated the third place Giants, who dropped 2 1-2 games behind Atlanta. Bob Welch, 16-11, pitched five innings of one-hit baseball for the victory and Dave Stewart finished up, earning his first save.

The Dodgers built a 12-0 lead, starting with a six-run outburst in the second inning off Renie Martin, 7-10, and reliever Al Holland. A two-run single by Bill Russell opened the scoring and Landreaux hit his seventh homer, a three-run shot in the big inning.

Cey hit his 23rd homer of the season and the 33rd of his career against the Giants in the third to make it 7-0, and Scioscia belted a three-run homer in the fifth to make it 10-0.

The Giants' Joe Morgan broke a National League record in the fourth when he drew the 1,709th walk of his career, one more than Hall Of Famer Mel Ott, who played with the New York Giants.

Phillies 4, Mets 3

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pete Rose doubled home Luis Aguayo with the winning run with two out in the ninth inning to lift the Philadelphia Phillies to a 4-3 victory over the New York Mets Saturday night.

Pirates 2, Expos 1

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Bill Madlock's pinch-hit single drove home Omar Moreno with the winning run with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning to give the Pittsburgh Pirates a 2-1 victory over the Montreal Expos Saturday.

Pirates starter Rick Rhoden gave up six hits in eight innings. He retired the first 11 batters he faced before Andre Dawson, who had three hits, lined a two-out double in the fourth. Al Oliver walked but Rhoden got Gary Carter to fly out.

Cubs 8, Cardinals 4

CHICAGO (AP) — Keith Moreland's run-scoring single and a sacrifice fly by Pat Tabler keyed a three-run fifth inning Saturday to lead the Chicago Cubs to a 8-4 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals. Ferguson Jenkins, 14-15, posted his 278th career victory. Bill Campbell picked up his eighth save.

Joaquin Andujar started for the Cards in a four-inning tuneup for his start Wednesday in the league championship series. Jim Kaat, 5-3, took the loss.

Astros 4, Reds 2

HOUSTON (AP) — Harry Spilman drove in two runs and Jose Cruz knocked in another during a four-run sixth inning to pace the Houston Astros to a 4-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds Saturday.

The loss was a club record 100th of the season for Cincinnati.

Houston trailed 2-0 but jumped on Mario Soto, 14-13, for four hits in the sixth. Spilman's two-run single, Cruz's run-scoring double and Larry Ray's sacrifice fly made a winner of Frank DiPino, 2-2, who combined with Vern Ruhle on a five-hitter. Ruhle went the final three innings for his first save.

Muhammad flattens Mwale in fourth round

After three uneventful rounds, Mustafa Muhammad became the aggressor. He needed only two solid punches to floor Mwale, the World Boxing Council's No.1-ranked contender, to end the bout at 1:47 of the round.

Wolverines, Badgers, Hawkeyes win in Big 10

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Quarterback Steve Smith and tailback Lawrence Ricks ran for one touchdown each to power Michigan to a 24-10 victory over Indiana Saturday.

On the Wolverines' first touchdown drive, in the second quarter, Smith swept left end for 14 yards on a key third-down play, then finished the 86-yard, six-play drive with a brilliant, weaving 37-yard touchdown scamper that gave Michigan a 10-0 lead.

Smith ran 13 yards for a first down on a key third-and-12 during Michigan's first possession of the third quarter. Freshman fullback Dan Rice capped the 60-yard, 10-play drive two plays later when he plunged over from the one.

Michigan improved its record to 2-2 on the season, 2-0 in the Big Ten. The Hoosiers also are 2-2, but 1-1 in conference play.

Wisconsin 35, Purdue 31

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Wisconsin linebacker Tim Melka grabbed a low, hurried punt by Purdue kicker Matt Kinzer and raced 30 yards for the winning touchdown with 21 seconds to go Saturday, lifting the Badgers to a 35-31 Big Ten win.

The loss was the eighth straight over two seasons for the Boilermakers, who matched the school's longest losing streak since dropping 11 in a row in 1906-08. Purdue also lost eight straight in 1971-72. Purdue appeared to have the game won after Brock Spack knocked down a two-point conversion pass attempt following a 1-yard touchdown run by Wisconsin's Gerald Green with 1:29 remaining.

That kept the Boilermakers' lead at 31-29. But the Badgers forced Purdue to punt on fourth down, and Kinzer bobbled a high snap from center. He managed to get the kick away, but the ball bounced into Melka's hands and he raced into the end zone for the touchdown.

The turn-around spoiled a magnificent performance by Purdue tailback Mel Gray, who rushed for 180 yards and three touchdowns. It was his 80-yard touchdown run as the first quarter ended that fired up Purdue after Wisconsin jumped ahead 10-0.

Iowa 45, Northwestern 7

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — Tailback Owen Gill rushed for 74 yards and two touchdowns as Iowa demolished Northwestern 45-7 in Big Ten college football Saturday.

The Hawkeyes, 2-2 overall and 1-0 in the league, dominated start to finish, rolling up 463 yards total offense and holding the Wildcats to 229, including just 54 on the ground.

Negotiators admit talk frustration

WASHINGTON (AP) — National Football League negotiators, admittedly frustrated over the lack of progress in talks with the striking players' union, broke off talks Saturday with no hint of when they might be resumed.

But Jack Donlan, executive director of the owners' Management Council and their chief negotiator, indicated that any resumption almost certainly would have to be tied to the union's acceptance of a mediator at the table.

Donlan emerged from 3½ hours of negotiations — only one of them face to face, to say: "We've had no progress over the last three days.

He added: "We're at a terrible impasse. We've asked them every way we know how — publicly and privately — for mediation. We obviously need a third party."

The breakdown of talks here appeared to doom the Oct. 10-11 regular-season games, the third weekend to be affected by the strike which began Sept. 21.

Huskies power by San Diego St.

SEATTLE (AP) — Chuck Nelson set a NCAA record for most consecutive field goals with four and Steve Pelluer passed for three touchdowns Saturday as No. 1 ranked Washington broke open a close game in the second half for a 46-25 victory over San Diego State.

With field goals of 33,

32, 49 and 23 yards, all in the first half, Nelson ran his consecutive string of regular season three-pointers to 19, going back to last year.

Pelluer, who missed his first four passes of the game, finished with 20 completions in 33 attempts with 229 yards and three touchdowns. He was intercepted once.

Washington, 4-0, led only 18-17 after a 20-yard Marco Morales field goal for San Diego State, 1-3, 4:21 into the second half.

USC 38, Oregon 7

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Converted fullback Todd Spencer made an impressive debut at tailback for Southern Cal Saturday, rushing for 149 yards and three touchdowns as the No. 16 Trojans swamped winless Oregon 38-7 in Pacific-10 action.

Spencer, a 6-foot, 195-pound junior, shifted to tailback because of injuries at the position, carried 29 times and scored on runs of 1 and 5 yards as the Trojans pulled out to a 31-7 halftime lead. Spencer tallied his final touchdown on a 7-yard burst in the third quarter.

The starting fullback since the first of last season, Spencer, son of former heavyweight boxer Thad Spencer, also caught three passes for 48 yards against the outmanned Ducks.

The victory was the third straight for the Trojans after an opening loss to Florida. Oregon is now 0-5.

UCLA 34, Colorado 6

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Quarterback Tom Ramsey passed for 280 yards, including a 50-yard touchdown strike to flanker Dokie Williams, and ran for another score to lead ninth-ranked UCLA over Colorado, 34-6.

Ramsey was 16 for 24 in the game, breaking the UCLA career completion record with 305 and leaving him just 37 yards short of the school's all-time career yardage mark.

New Mexico 49, Air Force 37

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. (AP) — Quarterback David Osborn passed for one touchdown and ran another and safety Ray Hornfeck returned an interception 99 yards for another score as New Mexico rallied from a 31-28 third-quarter deficit to defeat Air Force 49-37 Saturday in a battle of Western Athletic Conference front-runners.

The Lobos' victory raised their WAC record to 2-0 and overall mark to 4-0. Air Force dropped to 2-1 in league and 2-3 overall.

Stanford 45, Oregon St. 5

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Quarterback John Elway threw for five touchdowns, including passes of 51, 43 and 34 yards, to lead Stanford to a 45-5 romp over Oregon State in a Pacific 10 Conference game Saturday at Stanford Stadium.

Elway, already leading the nation's colleges in passing, threaded the Oregon State defense for 381 yards in the air, completing 23 of 29 passes.

Before leaving the game early in the third period, Elway set a Pac-10 record for total career completions with 623 and a Stanford record for career passing with 7,610 yards, surpassing the record of 7,544 yards held by quarterback Jim Plunkett, now of the Los Angeles Raiders.

WACO, Texas (AP) — Houston's wild 21-21 comeback Southwest Conference tie with the Baylor Bears Saturday revolved around a controversial third-quarter call by linesman Charles Caraway of Lubbock.

"I thought I was in," said Baylor's Allen Rice, who fumbled at the goalline with the Bears ahead 21-7 and just inches away from scoring again.

Houston's T.J. Turner, who also blocked a field goal attempt on the last play of the game, recovered the loose ball in the Cougars end zone and they proceeded to rally for the tie.

"The runner lost control of the ball before he crossed the plane of the goal," said Caraway.

"It's not really appropriate to make any comment about the referee," he said. "That will be handled through the conference office."

The more Teaff thought about it, the madder he got.

"I can't say what I'd like to say ... Everybody has eyeballs," he said.

Houston Coach Bill Yeoman, while not comenting on the controversial call, said he didn't go for two points after the Cougars' final touchdown because he thought they would get the ball again.

Baylor squandered a lead of 21-0 and fumbled away the ball on Houston's goaline in the third period when the Bears led 21-7 and were just inches from putting the game away.

Houston tailback Dallas Wiggins dashed 29 and 5 yards for second-half touchdowns to set up Wilson's heroics.

Wilson completed a 36-yard pass to David Roberson then scored on a 4-yard run untouched around right end to climax a 64-yard drive that took four plays and 56 seconds.

The Bears took the opening kickoff and charged 70 yards in eight plays for their first touchdown. The payoff came on fourth and six from the Houston 32 when quarterback Mike Brannan hit Horace Ates with a short swing pass and the shifty wingback did the rest.

Just over four minutes later the Bears struck again after Vic Vines intercepted a tipped pass and returned it 24 yards to the Houston 39.

Brannan hit Gerald McNeil with an 18-yard pass and Ates ran 12 yards on third and three from the Cougar 14. Alfred Anderson dove across from a yard away three plays later.

Safety Bo Scott Metlcalf intercepted Wilson again in the second period and ran it back 36 yards to the Cougar 2, setting up Anderson's second touchdown plunge which was a carbon copy of the first one.

Houston responded by going 86 yards in nine plays with Wiggins breaking a tackle and dashing the final 29 yards for a touchdown, cutting the Baylor lead to 21-7 at halftime.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Strange, Haas share 1st in Texas Open

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Curtis Strange compiled a 4-under-par 66 and tied his former teammate and fraternity brother at Wake Forest, Jay Haas, for the lead Saturday in the third round of the $250,000 Texas Open Golf Tournament.

Haas, who hasn't made a bogey in the tournament and led through the first two rounds, and Strange completed 54 holes in 197, 13 strokes under par on the friendly little 6,525-yard Oak Hills Country Club course.

Haas, a winner of the Hall of Fame Classic in his last start, played the third round in 67.

"Still no bogeys. It's getting scary out there," Haas said. "I keep waiting for the wheels to come off."

Leonard Thompson, who preceded Haas and Strange at Wake Forest, moved into third alone at 199, two shots back, with his best effort of the season, a 6-under-par 64.

"The last seven or eight weeks is the first time this season I've felt like I was making any progress, or even could make any progress. It's been a tough year," said Thompson who has been in a season-long slump.

Snipes decisions Berbick

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Renaldo Snipes surprised Trevor Berbick, ranked No. 2 by the World Boxing Association, and captured a 10-round unanimous decision Saturday to thrust himself back into title consideration.

After the bout at the Sands Hotel and Casino, World Boxig Council champion Larry Holmes said he would like to give Snipes, ranked seventh by the WBC, a second shot at the heavyweight crown.

Pam Shriver scores upset

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pam Shriver upset second-seeded Wendy Turnbull of Australia 7-6, 7-6 Saturday to advance to the finals of the U.S. Women's Indoor Tennis Championships at The Spectrum.

The victory was only Shriver's second over Turnbull, who has beaten her younger opponent nine times.

Argonauts beat Concordes

MONTREAL (AP) — Running back Cedric Minter caught touchdown passes of 48 and 12 yards from quarterback Condredge Holloway, and Dean Dorsey booted three field goals as the Toronto Argonauts posted a 25-9 Canadian Football League victory over the Montreal Concordes Saturday.

Boston College downs stubborn Temple, 17-7

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Freshman Kevin Snow booted a 32-yard field goal early in the fourth period and sophomore quarterback Doug Flutie added a 34-yard touchdown sprint, rallying 18th-ranked Boston College to a 17-7 football victory over stubborn Temple Saturday night.

Flutie, harrassed for most of three periods, got the Eagles untracked with his passing to set up Snow's tie-breaking field goal two minutes into the final quarter. Then he capped an 85-yard march by scoring on a quarterback draw, breaking through the middle and racing untouched into the end zone.

Flutie complete 18 of 36 passes for 266 yards. He ran eight times for 49 yards.

Massachusetts 17, Rhode Island 7

KINGSTON, R.I. (AP) — Quarterback Dean Pecevich threw one touchdown and tailback Gary Pearson ran for 115 yards as Massachusetts defeated Rhode Island 12-7 in the Yankee Conference as the Minutemen improved to 2-2 and the Rams slipped to 2-2.

Boston U 17, Cornell 6

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — Paul Lewis scored from three yards out at 11:19 of the second quarter to give Boston University, 2-1, a 17-6 win over Cornell, 0-3. Boston's stingy defense recovered three Big Red fumbles, intercepted three passes and blocked a punt.

Army 17, Harvard 13

Allem replaced second-string quarterback Rich Loughlin early in the second quarter and threw a 34-yard touchdown pass to Elton Akins with 34 seconds left to go in the half to tie the game 7-7.

Rock 14, Indiana 13

SLIPPERY ROCK, Pa. (AP) — Scott McGuigan ran 1 yard for a touchdown with 3 seconds remaining to bring Indiana University of Pennsylvania to within a point of Slippery Rock State, but the try for two failed and the Rock held on for a 14-13 win. Slippery Rock is 3-1, and Indiana 1-3.

Penn 51, Columbia 31

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Senior quarterback Gary Vura ran for two touchdowns and threw two more to tight end Jeff Schulte as unbeaten Penn defeated winless Columbia 51-31 Saturday in an Ivy League college football game.

Pitt rallies to beat WVU

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Dan Marino's 8-yard pass to Julius Dawkins with 3:23 left to play capped a two-touchdown rally in the final 11 minutes that lifted second-ranked Pittsburgh to a 16-13 victory Saturday over No. 14 West Virginia.

Bryan Thomas' 3-yard run with 10:52 remaining capped an 82-yard drive and began Pitt's comeback from a 13-0 deficit. Before that, West Virginia had things its own way as linebacker Darryl Talley set up a field goal with an interception and recovered his own blocked punt for the Mountaineers' only touchdown.

West Virginia's Paul Woodside kicked field goals of 34 and 29 yards in the first and third periods, his 14th and 15th in a row, while Pitt's Eric Schubert had a 32-yard field goal attempt blocked by middle guard Jim Merritts and was wide on a 47-yarder as the Panthers' offense had problems for the fourth game in a row.

Nevertheless, unbeaten Pitt survived for its fourth victory, while West Virginia suffered its first setback in four games. The Mountaineers have not defeated their archrivals since 1975 and trail the series 52-22-1.

With Talley leading the way from his outside linebacker post, West Virginia kept Marino in check for three periods, although he did pass Tony Dorsett to become Pitt's all-time career total offense leader.

Hostetler, who gave Pitt fits with his passing and scrambling, wound up as the culprit when he fumbled a snap from center Bill Legg with 6:04 left. Strong safety Dan Short recovered for Pitt at the Mountaineers' 48 and the Panthers went ahead eight plays later.

Marino fired third-down passes of 16 yards to Dwight Collins and 14 to John Brown before whipping the decisive 8-yarder to Dawkins, who caught the ball in the end zone with free safety Tim Agee hanging on his back.

MC slips into 4th place

SNYDER — Midland College fell from second place into a tie for fourth with New Mexico Junior College here Saturday as the Western Junior College Athletic Conference held its second fall tournament.

Western Texas College of Snyder won the meet with a team total of 283 on the WTC course to move into a first place tie with South Plains College, both owning nine points after two meets. Odessa College, which placed second here with a 293, owns third with eight points while MC and NMJC have seven each.

"We were hoping to place at least fourth in this tournament because that would have kept us in second place, but the course bit us," said MC golf coach Delnor Poss.

MC had a 301 for fifth Saturday while NMJC had a 294 for third and SPC a 297 for fourth.

Emil Hale, who led the Chaps in the first tournament with a 68, fell to 81 in Snyder Saturday. The Chaps were led by Jeff Cranford with a 72 and Mike Schwartz posted a 74. Robert Iovinelli had a 77, David Stilwell a 78 and Danny Kloza a 79 to round out the Chap scoring.

The third WJCAC tournament will be held Oct. 15 at Midland Country Club and that could be the chance Midland College needs to vault back into the conference hunt.

Wheatshockers nudge West Texas St in MVC

CANYON, Texas (AP) — Prince McJunkins rifled a 5-yard touchdown pass to Dwight Eaton and scooted 29 yards for another score Saturday to lift Wichita State to a 24-21 come-from-behind win over West Texas State in a Missouri Valley Conference game.

The Buffaloes were led by senior quarterback Vic McGee, who completed 23 of 38 passes for 333 yards, including a pair of touchdown passes.

Curtis Bennett, who snared seven passes for 121 yards, picked up both McGee's touchdown tosses — an 18-yarder and a 12-yarder that put West Texas State ahead 21-16 early in the fourth.

NCarolina 41, Georgia Tech 0

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Ethan Horton carried 23 times for 110 yards and two touchdowns Saturday as 12th-ranked North Carolina registered a 41-0 ACC victory over Georgia Tech.

The game marked the return of tailback Kelvin Bryant, who had missed last week's Army battle with a bruised foot and sprained ankle. Bryant scored his first touchdown of the year on a 1-yard run early in the second quarter to establish the halftime score.

Clemson 24, Kentucky 6

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Tailback Cliff Austin ran for three touchdowns and racked up 116 yards rushing Saturday to pave the way for an easy 24-6 Clemson, 2-1-1, victory over winless Kentucky.

Furman 38, VMI 3

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — Reserve fullback John Drye, playing in his first college game, gained 104 yards rushing and scored one touchdown as Furman defeated VMI 38-3 here Saturday. Drye, pressed into duty after injuries to three fullbacks in the last two weeks, was the game's leading rusher. Junior quarterback David Charpia threw for 231 yards and a touchdown for his second straight week of passing over 200 yards. He connected on 15 of 24 attempts, with one interception.

Sul Ross St. 23, Austin Col. 21

SHERMAN, Texas (AP) — Larry Hill tossed two touchdown passes to Maurice Stephens to pace 11th-ranked Sul Ross to an upset win over top-ranked Austin College 23-21 Saturday afternoon in a Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association football contest.

Stephens also ran 83 yards for the third score with time running out in the first half.

Greg Garrison ran 27 yards for the first Austin College touchdown and quarterback Jim Vice hit wide receiver Russ Roden with a 20-yard scoring pass. Vice also ran one yard for a touchdown in the fourth quarter.

NFLPA founder sees wives ending strike

(Compiled from R-T wires)

FOOTBALL—Creighton Miller, founder and former NFLPA director, predicted impetus to end the strike may come from the players' wives. "I think the next two weeks are crucial. Some of these players will be going home and their wives will start asking, 'Why are you on strike?'" Even though the NFL owners offered an improved salary package, the NFLPA association demanded 55 percent of gross revenue, then adjusted the demand to 50 percent of TVrevenue, plus a wage scale administered by the association. "I do think they should be getting a lot more money. It just seems to me that the players came in with something that didn't invite a meaningful response. The owners might have been remiss, too. They are counterpunchers. They could have put together a good money package last June."...

Duck seaons have been set for Nov. 2 through Jan. 23 in counties in the High Plains Mallard Management Unit in roughly the western third of the state. Goose season west of U.S. Highway 81 is the same as for ducks in the High Plains Mallard Management Unit.

In the remainder of the state, the duck season will be split, Nov. 6-28 to Dec. 18 and Dec. 18-Jan 23. The season for dark and light geese will be split. The goose season runs from Nov. 6-Dec. 10 and Dec. 18-Jan 12.

No changes were made in the 100-point system of duck bag limits, but the daily limit of dark geese was amended to include black brant. West of U.S.Highway 81, the daily bag limit is five with no more than two Canada or white-front geese or black brant in aggregate. East of Highway 81, the limit is five light and a daily bag limit for dark geese of one Canada or black brant and one white-fronted goose.

Shooting hours are the same, 30 minutes before sunrise to sunset.

The sandhill crane season is Oct. 30-Jan. 30 in Zone A and Dec. 4-Jan.30 in Zone B. A special permit is required and the daily bag limit is three, possession limit six.

QUAIL LIMITS are up again in Texas with several regions permitted to take 20 per day. The limits do not apply to counties regulated by general or special law enacted by the legislature.

The 20-per-day limit applies in most of South Texas, the Rolling Plains in West Texas and eastern Panhandle. Possession limits are twice the bag limits.

Most of East Texas remained at 12 per day and the coastal praries of SW Texas were reduced from 16 to 12 per day.

The Edwards Plateau limit was upped from 12 to 16 while the Western Panhandle remains at 12 and the Trans-Pecos region at 16.

If in doubt, check your 1982-83 Hunting Guide, available at Texas Parks and Wildlife Department offices and licensing outlets.

Quail Program leader Don Wilson said quail counts in Texas were the second best since statewide surveys were initiated in 1976. "Our crews counted an average of 37 quail per route this year, which rivals outstanding counts of 1979 when 39 per route were observed." Wilson said good weather during the spring and summer allowed good quail production and survival.

Rent It or Own It

by Bob Howle

Towing a car is not the best way to get from one place to another but it is sometimes the only way. If your car is disabled, towing it with the help of a friend or family member can be much less expensive than calling a regular road service truck. Towing is sometimes helpful on happier occasions as well. If you are vacationing and traveling in a camper, but want your car along for day trips or easier traveling, you can tow it along. Be sure that the roads you plan to travel allow vehicles in tow.

For fun and pleasure as well as in times of necessity, BOB'S RENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy. 685-1271, & 2909 N. Big Spring, 684-8294, offers a wide ranging inventory of items to rent that will help you improve your lifestyle and get more out of living. From party and special occasion needs to tools and equipment to other items that could "boggle" your imagination, we rent a wonderful way of life. Come in and see what we are talking about. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

Handy Hint:

Pitchfork Ranch, BTA meet in President's Cup polo

Wilson Ranch and BTA posted victories Friday in the United States President's Cup polo tournament at the Midland Polo Club field, one of four host centers for the tournament around the United States.

The winner of the tournament in Midland, the team with the best record through the three elimination rounds, will advance to the semifinals and finals in San Antonio on Oct., 14-17.

Tournament action resumes today with Pitchfork Ranch facing BTA at 2 p.m.; Wednesday with Wilson Ranch playing BTA at 5 p.m.; Friday with Pitchfork Ranch against Y Bar O at 5 p.m., and Sunday with Wilson Ranch against Y Bar O at 2 p.m.

For Wilson Ranch it was a 9-3 victory over Pitchfork Ranch with Carlos Galindo leading the scoring with four goals. Tommy Higgins and Willie B. Wilson each added two goals and the ninth was scored by handicap. For Pitch Fork, Adie Von Gondard scored two and Ed Little one.

BTA posted a 9-7 victory over the tournament's defending national champion, Y Bar O with Miguel Torres and Steve Flores leading the way with four goals apiece. Kelley Beal contributed the final tally. Y Bar O used the brother system to score its seven goals with Hector Galindo knocking in 6 and Alonzo Galindo one.

According to Midland Polo Club manager Steve McGarrick, Alonzo Galindo and Spencer Beal were involved in a collision during the fourth Chukker of play in their game Friday. "It was the worst wreck I've ever seen where both riders walked away though they were knocked unconscious," he said.

Sooners continue mastery of I-State

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Michael Keeling kicked two field goals and the Oklahoma defense made several key play as the Sooners continued their mastery over Iowa State with a 13-3 victory Saturday in the opening game of the Big Eight Conference football race.

Keeling, who kicks barefoot, booted a 22-yard field goal at the end of the first half to give Oklahoma a 10-3 lead and added a 34-yarder at the start of the fourth quarter following an Iowa State fumble.

Stanley Wilson scored the only touchdown of the game on a 1-yard run late in the first quarter, capping a 92-yard, 17-play drive on Oklahoma's first possession. The Sooners, who ran extensively out of the I-formation instead of their traditional wishbone, struggled offensively after that but the defense kept Iowa State at bay.

Both teams are 2-2 for the season. Oklahoma has not lost to Iowa State since 1961.

Missouri 28, E Carolina 9

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Freshman Eric Drain ran 2 and 59 yards for touchdowns in the final quarter, breaking open a tight contest and helping Missouri roll to a 28-9 triumph over East Carolina.

Field goals of 45, 38 and 42 yards accounted for all East Carolina scoring.

Tulsa tops Jayhawks by 20-15

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Ken Lacy and Michael Gunter led Tulsa's rugged rushing attack with one touchdown each and Stu Crum kicked a pair of field goals Saturday to carry the Golden Hurricane to 20-15 victory over Kansas.

Lacy, a 6-foot, 202-pound senior, scored on a 10-yard dash midway through the opening half and led all rushers with 159 yards on 28 carries, the second 100-yard rushing day of his career.

The 5-11, 201-pound Gunter, a junior, gave Tulsa a 17-7 lead early in the fourth quarter with a 1-yard touchdown plunge before Kansas came back on a 3-yard run by Kerwin Bell and a two-point conversion to close the gap to two points.

But the Golden Hurricane blocked a 42-yard field goal try by Bruce Kallmeyer that would have put the Jayhawks ahead, and moments later Crum booted a 45-yarder with 4:02 left to seal Kansas' fate.

The Bullpups won four of the top six places, including the winning time of 16:47 by Albert Lozano. Sheehan widens golf lead

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Hometown favorite Patty Sheehan reeled off four straight birdies Saturday for a 4-under-par 69 and a 3-stroke lead in the LPGA's $150,000 Inamori Golf Classic.

Sheehan, 25, LPGA rookie of the year in 1981, bogeyed the third and seventh holes, then went on a birdie spree from the eighth through 11th holes and added two more birdies on the 16th and 17th.

"Once you start making birdies you become very confident and aggressive," said Sheehan, a former All-America college player at San Jose State. "It's like getting on a roll."

Sheehan was at 11-under-par 208 for 54 holes and a three-shot margin over veteran Joyce Kazmierski, who also came in with a 69 for a 211 total on the 6,290-yard, par-73 Almaden Golf and Country Club course.

Sheehan, who won last week's tour event in Kent, Wash., is fifth on the LPGA money list with $200,522. Kazmierski, 37, who has never won in 15 years on the tour, is 85th with $11,750.

In a four-way tie for third at 212 were Chris Johnson, Dale Eggeling, Jerilyn Britz and Kathy Whitworth. Second-round leader Sandra Haynie shot a 76 to slip into a tie at 213 with Vicki Fergon, Myra Van Hoose and Sally Little.

Amateur Julie Inkster, 22, of nearby Los Altos, who has taken the U.S. Amateur title the last three years, rebounded with a 69 on the strength of six birdies and only two bogeys. That left her at even-par 219 after sharing the opening-round lead with Beth Daniel at 68 and then slipping to an 82 on Friday.

Mines wins over Highlands

LAS VEGAS, N.M. (AP) — Quarterback Mike Scherrer connected with Larry May on a 15-yard touchdown pass to boost Colorado School of Mines to a 17-13 victory over New Mexico Highlands Saturday in a Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference game.

Scherrer's pass to May in the third quarter broke a 7-7 tie and put Colorado ahead for good.

The win ups the School of Mines' record to 1-2 in conference play, while Highlands drops to 0-2-1.

Highlands bounced back when Pat Scharette rifled a 36-yard touchdown pass to Nick Trujillo and the two teams went into the half tied at 7.

Highlands tried to rally late in the fourth quarter with a 2-yard touchdown run by Rod Johnson, but the kick by David Lucero was blocked and Highlands still was within one.

Freshman tailback paces LSU to 24-13 stunner over Florida

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Freshman tailback Dalton Hilliard scored three touchdowns, two of them on pass plays covering 41 and 3 yards, as Louisiana State stunned fourth-ranked Florida 24-13 in Southeastern Conference football action Saturday.

A Florida Field crowd of 73,152 was silent as quarterback Alan Risher hit his first seven passes for 127 yards and moved ahead of Bert Jones as LSU's all-time passing yardage leader.

LSU, 3-0, scored the first three times it touched the ball en route to a 17-3 lead, settled for a 24-5 halftime advantage and then used a rugged defense to turn back numerous Florida threats after intermission.

The triumph marked the second time in three years that LSU, 1-0 in the SEC, came to Gainesville and spoiled a 3-0 Florida start. It also ended the Gators' nine-game winning streak at home and hiked the Tigers advantage in the series to 16-11-2.

Florida, which climbed among the nation's top-ranked teams with victories over Miami of Florida, Southern California and Mississippi State, scored first on Jim Gainey's 28-yard field goal four minutes into the game.

LSU responded by unleashing an offense that averaged 48.5 points in season-opening victories over Oregon State and Rice. And Coach Jerry Stovall watched his defense stiffen and not allow the Gators to score again until Wayne Peace passed 5 yards to Mike Mularkey with 1:51 left in the game.

The Tigers drove 73 yards to take a 7-3 lead as Risher set up an 11-yard touchdown burst by Hilliard with a 42-yard completion to wide receiver Eric Martin. It was the sixth touchdown of the year for Hilliard, a shifty 5-foot-10, 185-pounder from Patterson, La.

The Tigers went 59 yards in 10 plays on their next possession to set up Juan Betanzos' 21-yard field goal for a 10-3 lead and then hiked their advantage to 17-3 with a three-play, 45-yard touchdown drive two minutes into the second period.

LSU pushed its lead to 24-5 eight minutes later when Hilliard pulled in a 3-yard touchdown pass from Risher.

Royals remain alive

Orioles, Brewers all tied

BALTIMORE (AP) — Reliever Sammy Stewart checked Milwaukee on two hits over the final 5 2-3 innings as the Baltimore Orioles again shelled the sliding Brewers 11-3 Saturday and forged a tie in the American League East with one game remaining in the season.

Milwaukee's Don Sutton, 3-1, will face Baltimore ace Jim Palmer, 15-4, in Sunday's game to decide the division champion.

The Orioles, who have beaten the Brewers five straight in the last eight days, pounded out 17 hits to give them 45 for the first three games of the series. A crowd of 47,231 watched Saturday's victory after 51,833 saw Baltimore sweep a doubleheader from Milwaukee Friday night.

Jim Dwyer, who has reached base 13 consecutive

Angels clinch AL West flag

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The California Angels captured the American League West championship Saturday by beating the Texas Rangers 6-4 behind homers by Fred Lynn, Reggie Jackson and Bobby Grich.

Kansas City 5, Oakland 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — John Wathan drove in pinch-runner Bombo Rivera with the tying run and Cesar Geronimo followed with a sacrifice fly to lift Kansas City to a 5-4 victory over the Oakland A's Saturday.

Kansas City entered the eighth trailing 4-3 after Tony Armas had slugged his 28th homer of the season, with a man on, in the top of the inning off relief ace Dan Quisenberry, 9-7.

White Sox 5, Twins 3

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Ron Kittle hit his first major-league home run and drove in three runs Saturday to power the Chicago White Sox to a 5-3 victory over the Minnesota Twins as former Midland Cub Dennis Lamp, 11-8, got the win. Tom Brunansky, formerly of El Paso, hit his 20th homer, becoming the fourth twin to hit 20 or more homers.

Red Sox 5, Yankees 0

NEW YORK (AP) — Rookie Brian Denman, 3-4, pitched a six-hitter and Ed Jurak knocked in three runs Saturday to lead the Boston Red Sox to a 5-0 shutout of the New York Yankees. Jurak smacked a sacrifice fly in the fifth and a two-run single in the seventh off Dave Righetti, 11-10.

Blue Jays 3, Mariners 0

TORONTO (AP) — Jim Gott, 15-10, and Roy Lee Jackson combined on a six-hit shutout as the Toronto Blue Jays blanked the Seattle Mariners for the second consecutive time 3-0. Gott, 5-10, gave up four hits over the first five innings before giving way to Jackson, who recorded his sixth save of the year.

Indians 2-1, Tigers 0-4

CLEVELAND (AP) — Dave Rucker threw a five-hitter and Lance Parrish drove in four runs with a single and his 32nd home run to spark the Detroit Tigers to a 4-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians and a split of their doubleheader Saturday. In the first game, Tom Brennan and Dan Spillner combined on a four-hitter to give the Indians a 2-0 victory.

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Mike Johnston booted three field goals to lift 11th-ranked Notre Dame to a mistake-filled 11-3 victory over Michigan State in college football Saturday.

Johnston had field goals of 33, 29 and 42 yards — all in the second quarter — and the Notre Dame defense sacked Michigan State quarterback John Leister in the end zone for a first-quarter safety to account for all the Irish scoring.

Ralf Mojsiejenko, whose booming punts kept Notre Dame in poor field position most of the game, kicked a 50-yard field goal in the third period for the lone Michigan State points.

Ohio U. 17, Toledo 14

Miami, Ohio 20, Kent State 0

KENT, Ohio (AP) — Junior tailback Phil Palcic ran for 103 yards and two short-yardage touchdowns and teammate Jay Peterson rushed for 135 yards as Miami of Ohio, 4-0, blanked Kent State, 0-4, 20-0 in a Mid-American Conference game Saturday. Palcic's 2-yard run in the second quarter gave Miami a 7-0 lead. Mike Kiebach then booted a pair of 32-yard field goals before Palcic finished the scoring with a 1-yard touchdown run midway through the third quarter.

W.Michigan 7, Bowling Green 7

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio (AP) — A 30-yard second-quarter touchdown pass play from Brian McClure to Greg Taylor gave Bowling Green, 3-0, 7-3 Mid-American Conference win over Western Michigan.

FROM YOUR NEXT LT. GOVERNOR

This may be my last column in this series. We began this column ten weeks ago, hoping it would be a success. And judging from the response of the readers, I would call it an unqualified success. The mail has been very favorable. The columns that drew the most response were those dealing with education of our children, the property tax issue, and the issue of Mr. Hobby raising funds for the ACLU to use in that organization's crusade against prayer in schools and in defense of pornographers.

I have made a point in these columns that Texans need a Lt. Governor who is in touch with the people he is supposed to serve. Mr. Hobby is clearly out of touch with the thinking of Texans, and, in my opinion ought to be retired.

Mr. Hobby's lack of understanding can be illustrated: Texans are overwhelmingly in favor of President Reagan's efforts to transfer power and responsibility back to the states. I agree that Texans can do a better job for Texas than Washington can. Mr. Hobby disagrees. The vast majority of Texans do not believe they ought to be forced to pay for the education of the children of illegal aliens. I have compassion for these children—but I must confess that I care more for Texans who are faced with the burden of supporting their own children in hard economic times. Mr. Hobby disagrees. Most Texans think our Right to Work law should be incorporated in the Texas constitution. I agree here, too. But Mr. Hobby disagrees and has fought the effort. The list goes on and on.

The problem with continuing my column is a simple one—money. We originally budgeted for ten columns, and we have now reached that point in our budget. If we are successful in raising more campaign funds, you are likely to see more columns. I hope so, for this seems to be a good way to get the issues to the people.

These columns are needed. Without them Mr. Hobby will clearly avoid the issues and seek to confuse us with 30-second TV commercials created by his image builders. If you would like to see these columns continue and would like to help in that regard, please send your contribution. If you can't make a contribution, I assure you that your opinion will be equally important. Please write to me at Texans for Strake, 1213 W. 34th, Austin 78705. Let's keep in touch.

WANT THE BEST FOR YOUR FAMILY?

Of course you do!
So come to BROOKEHAVEN!

Some construction firms build houses randomly in our city without regard to the effect on our community. We don't build that way. A totally planned addition to the city works best for all of us. It's best for your new neighborhood, it's best for your city. And it's good business for Tabor Construction.

A sense of "coming home" greets you as you enter "Emerald Point." The sunken living room overlooks an enclosed atrium; French doors open off the master bedroom to a private patio, and the garage sports a work area for the hobbiest in the family!

BROOKEHAVEN – Home building at it's best!

WANT THE BEST FOR YOUR FAMILY?

Of course you do! So come to BROOKEHAVEN!

Some construction firms build houses randomly in our city without regard to the effect on our community. We don't build that way. A totally planned addition to the city works best for all of us. It's best for your new neighborhood, it's best for your city. And it's good business for Tabor Construction.

A sense of "coming home" greets you as you enter "Emerald Point." The sunken living room overlooks an enclosed atrium; French doors open off the master bedroom to a private patio, and the garage sports a work area for the hobbiest in the family!

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 9⅞% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 14⅞% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 16⅞%.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1982

Middle Eastern dance: Fun, history and worthy causes

Silver and jeweled bangles flash in the night. Brightly-colored skirts swirl, finger-cymbals — "zills" — clash. A scene straight out of "1001 Arabian Nights" — but it happens each Wednesday night in late 20th century Midland, Texas.

Middle Eastern Dance Organization is a group of area women who have formed a club for the purpose of learning the ancient art of what is commonly called "belly dancing," and bringing their dances to the Permian Basin.

But these dances are not just dances, they are an art form and a method of communication that goes back to antiquity. "Its older than the ballet — it started with the beginning of time," said Karen Sharma, member of the group who also teaches Middle Eastern dance at Midland College.

"Greece, Turkey, Egypt — almost all Arabic countries have their own style of dancing," said Nancy Mahony, treasurer of the organization. "Egyptian has more hand movements; Turkish is more freestyle, more open. We do a mixture of everything."

The dancing the group performs is pure in that the type of music the dancers use determines the type of dances they do. "When we perform in a show we do either cabaret or ethnic, which is more of a folk dance," Mrs. Mahony said. "We've learned quite a few tribal dances."

There is no permanent leader of the group. The members said that when they get together to hold their two-hour-long lessons, they often take turns leading the group during the first hour, and spend the second hour working on their routines.

One of the ways the group members learn new steps and dances is by attending workshops on the art of Middle Eastern dance. "We've been to workshops in Dallas, in Houston, in Austin," said Rose Suggs, secretary of the organization. On Oct. 9 — 10, Midland's Middle Eastern Dance Organization will sponsor a workshop on Middle Eastern dance at the Midland Holidome. Guest instructor will be Ish-tar, from North Carolina.

According to members of the organization, Middle Eastern dancing — "belly dancing" — had its beginnings in an ancient dance that evolved when women of a village would gather around a woman in labor and dance. Their undulating movements were to help the laboring woman relax and keep in tune with the natural rhythms of her own body and do what was necessary for her to do in order to give birth.

In some Middle Eastern countries, "women dance for each other," said Ms. Sharma. "If you see a woman dancing for men, she is usually a paid performer and usually is single because no one respectable would marry her."

She added that in some countries, young, unmarried women can dance in public and are paid for their dances in coins. They then attach these coins to their costumes, and when they have enough coins, they can marry — the coins they collected from dancing make up their dowries. But once these young women marry, they can no longer dance in public.

Middle Eastern dancing comes from many different cultures and traditions, and tell many different stories. According to Mrs. Mahony, the "shikat" is a dance done only for women, by women, and is a way of preparing girls for marriage. "People still do dances from the Greek-Roman-Carthaginian tradition," she said.

The members of the organization make their own costumes. They said they can get the fabric and accessories necessary for their costumes from shops that specialize in Middle Eastern dance costuming.

They also use their imaginations to produce their costumes. "We save our costume jewelry, because we might be able to decorate our hair or bra," said Mrs. Suggs. "We might get the ideas for our costumes from magazines or shows or the newspaper." Group members added that "harem pants are a traditional part of the dancers' clothes — the cabaret skirt came from Hollywood."

Some dances performed by the organization feature such items as scarves, tambourines or even swords. According to Middle Eastern tradition, "swords cut evil spirits," explained Ms. Sharma.

Middle Eastern Dance Organization was begun in its present form about six years ago. Members of the group said that while a participant could learn the movements to the dances in three or four months, she probably would not be skillful enough or comfortable enough to dance in public for about a year.

Mrs. Mahony pointed out that belly dancing isn't like any other form of dance or exercise. "It's muscle isolation and it takes a while to get your mind and body working together. If you work at it, it makes you thin."

"You warm up, then work from the head down," said Ms. Sharma. "You work everything from head to toe. There are many leg movements."

"It should be called 'leg dancing' instead of 'belly dancing'," said Harriet Horton, member of the group.

Middle Eastern Dance Organization is more than just a group of women in beautiful costumes getting massive doses of exercise. The group often performs in public to raise money for worthy causes. Members performed during last month's Septemberfest at the Museum of the Southwest.

One of the groups favorite projects is the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. On Oct. 8, members of the organization will give a show entitled "Paws at the Oasis," to benefit the SPCA. The show will be at 8 p.m. at the Midland Holidome/Country Villa. Tickets are $3.50 for adults and $1.75 for children, and will be available at the door. The public is invited. All proceeds will go to the SPCA.

The women who are members of the organization seem to really enjoy their group. "I started taking (Middle Eastern dance lessons) merely for the exercise," said Mrs. Mahony. "I really just got hooked on it, and the more I did it the better I liked it. There's also the idea of being exotic — of being somebody different. It's a glamorous feeling; people are dazzled with it. I have never had anybody approach me or be rude to me."

"It is fun! It really is neat," she said. "(In addition to exercise) you really should enjoy it, too. Nowhere else have I run into as any women as neat or as friendly as in this club."

Members of the organization range in age from mid-20s on up, and include women from many lifestyles and occupations, from housewife to geologist to teacher to air traffic controller to grandmother. And the enjoyment they all feel from their dancing and their friendship is probably the greatest benefit of all.

First mouse convention meets

By ROGER SHOWLEY
Copley News Servied

ANAHEIM, Calif. — The tourists, cameras draped around their necks and children at their ankles, streamed into Disneyland for a ride on the Matterhorn, a climb up the Swiss Family Robinson tree house and a visit to Sleeping Beauty's castle.

But the real action was at a hotel across the street, where about 300 diehard Disney fans spent a sweltering three days in August buying and selling crumbling comic books, collecting autographs from retired studio animators and applauding decades-old cartoons.

It was the first annual Mouse Club convention. Donald Duck was there. So were Thumper and the Seven Dwarfs. But where was Mickey Mouse?

Retired animator Ward Kimball, who used to lead a children's band at Mickey Mouse Club movie matinees in 1933, sounded like he was glad the present-day character, which adorns lunch boxes, notebooks and push-button telephones, did not show up.

"Something's happened to the Mouse through the middle years," Kimball told the Mouse Club revelers. "You know, he started out without shoes or gloves. Then he got red pants. His face got rounder, they added eyebrows, and now, most youngsters know him as a cute youngster with a bow tie, of all things. He's become a sissy!"

Birch Society battles unfavorable image

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Almost 24 years after its founding, the world not yet quite saved from Communism, the John Birch Society carries on. But it has not turned out the way its leader Robert Welch originally anticipated. The organization began with the goal of ultimately recruiting a million members. Today, according to the society's public relations spokesman, its strength is somewhere "in excess of 40,000," and that original goal has been abandoned. Beyond the actual numbers, which the Birch Society now deems to be irrelevant, is the problem of image that has been attached to the society since its beginnings.

What Welch and the early Birchers planned as a dynamic force of patriots never was seen that way by many Americans. In the early '60s, when it became the center of national controversy, it was viewed by many as something sinister. Today, the complaint of some members of the society is that the public seems unaware of its continued existence. It is the view of some Birchers that they have been deliberately shunned and ignored over the years as part of the general conspiracy they feel has been directed against them.

To most of those who remain in the society, however, that is merely part of the price of patriotism. Whether the rest of the country is paying attention or not, the John Birch Society remains as devoted today to saving the world from Communism as nt ever was. It is a matter of solace to members that Welch warned them at the start their job wouldn't be an easy one.

—Southern California always has been a sort of unofficial capital of the John Birch Society. While official membership totals have never been publicized, the number of Birchers in the Los Angeles region alone has been put as high as several thousand. In the early '60s, it was California Attorney General Stanley Mosk who referred to some Birchers as "little old ladies in tennis shoes."

DOMINIC ODORIZZI, 56, project manager on a new missile being developed by Hughes Aircraft Co., joined the Birch Society while living in Tucson, Ariz., in 1961, and his wife, Gloria, joined the following year.

"We didn't know anything about the Birch Society before we went to some of the meetings in Tucson," Odorizzi recalls. "They were a terrible organization from what I jead in the papers. But I happened to have a friend at Hughes who was going to anti-Communist meetings at the time, and he finally got me involved."

What does a member of the Birch Society do?

"There are two different kinds of meetings each month," Odorizzi says. "The regular chapter meetings generally cover the highlights of the monthly society bulletin written by Welch, then go into a discussion of local activities. At the end of the meeting, most members will write two or three postcards to congressmen or the newspapers. Postcards are cheaper than letters, faster, and the postman can read them, too.

"Then there are the information and action meetings," he continues. "That's usually a tape or film for a half hour, followed by more postcard writing. At the action meetings, the typical member might write six to nine cards. Hopefully, they will each turn out about a bozen a month. Apart from that, we distribute various Birch literature, make phone calls to possible new members, and spend time with yard sales and booths at the county fair and things like that. The purpose of all of it is to educate, and not to browbeat anybody.

"Occasionally, somebody will try to pick an argument with me," he continues, "but picking on a well-informed Bircher is like going up against a fast gun."

"I THOUGHT he was kind of weird there for a while," his wife adds, "but what we heard in the meetings made sense out of what was going on. The more we found out over the years, the more we realized how naive we had been."

"We have a pretty good cross section of people today," Odorizzi says later. "If anything, I would say we have more young people now than we did in the past. In the early years, there were a lot of born-again Christians. Now I think it's evened out. There was a tendency by some of the early Birchers to try to use the society for their own causes, and that doesn't happen any more."

Gary Walterscheid, 19, is a newer recruit to the society, having been a member for the last five years and worked this summer as a research aide at regional headquarters in nearby San Marino.

Most Birchers aren't any different from other people except in their views about the influence of "Insiders" who secretly control world events, Walterscheid continues.

"I've never met the stereotypical little old lady in tennis shoes," he says. "I've never met the crackpot. Personally, I think the society is fun. It's important work, too. I would like to have a job some day in communications, but if the society needed me, I would work for it. It's nice to have a hand in helping to change things, whether it's passing or defeating something or just educating people."

HE HATES THE word "conspiracy" because so few people understand it, Walterscheid adds. That doesn't mean, however, that he has any doubts a world conspiracy exists.

They never were the fanatic band of kooks and racists and neo-Nazis they were made out to be, today's Birchers charge. They were constantly accused of being a totalitarian group using any tactics necessary to trend the nation toward the right. All they did back then, they say, is what they continue to try to do today. They study the international conspiracy bent on enslaving all of mankind, and they tell as many people as they can reach of the dangers they face.

The charges against them in the early '60s constituted the "most vicious smear campaign against any private group in the history of the United States," says Chuck Armour, regional director of the society for the Western states, as he leans across his desk at regional headquarters in San Marino. Considering the extent to which the society's enemies want to destroy the group, he adds, the group's most remarkable achievement in the following decades has been the simple fact that the society has "stayed alive."

Armour and other Birch officials see the early attacks on the society as having been orchestrated by the same group of "Insiders" who, according to Birch theory, control just about everything that happens around the globe and manipulate the fortunes of both the Communist and non-Communist worlds. As the Birchers see subsequent events, the attacks on the society stopped only because they were proving to be counterproductive and actually were helping the society grow.

Even some of those who grew disenchanted with Birchism after an initial attraction with it defend the society along these lines. Jane Crosby, an activist in Republican Party politics in nearby South Pasadena and one of the first Birch chapter leaders in California, dropped out of active participation in the group during the late '60s, although she has remained a life member of the organization.

A bold plan recently unveiled by the General President of the Teamsters Union may make the American Dream of owning a home closer to reality for many people. Roy Williams, the union's head, suggested to President Reagan that home mortgages be financed through pension funds at rates well below the current market—perhaps as low as ten percent.

Two antibiotics aid travelers

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Travelers diarrhea, the scourge of millions who vacation or work abroad, can be relieved quickly with two commonly available antibiotics, a study says.

Diarrhea is a common complaint of Americans who travel to warm-weather countries. For instance, Dr. Sherwood L. Gorbach of New England Medical Center says that of the 3 million who visit Mexico each year, more than 1 million probably come down with the complaint.

"Travel expands the mind and loosens the bowels," he noted in an editorial in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Doctors tested the drugs — trimethoprim or a combination of trimethoprim and sulfamethoxazole — on 110 U.S. students attending summer school in Mexico. Their diarrhea disappeared in a little more than a day.

The research was directed by Dr. Herbert L. DuPont of the University of Texas and published in the journal.

He gave the drugs to students from the University of San Diego and the University of Arizona who got sick while attending summer classes in Guadalajara.

The antibiotics cleared up their diarrhea within an average of 30 hours. However, among 35 people who got inactive placebos instead of the antibiotics, the ailment lingered for 93 hours. Only five of the people who took antibiotics continued to have diarrhea longer than five days.

In earlier research, DuPont found that the two antibiotics would prevent travelers diarrhea if people took them before leaving on their trips. But in the new study, he advised against taking the medicines ahead of time because they occasionally cause rashes, and indiscriminate use may lead to the growth of drug-resistant bacteria.

Dupont's team also has found that bismuth subsalicylate, sold as Pepto-Bismol and other brands, is effective against mild cases of travelers diarrhea.

"For the time being," the Texas researchers wrote, "we think that exercising care about where one eats and treating diarrhea rapidly if it occurs are optimal ways of dealing with the problem for most travelers."

Travelers diarrhea is common among visitors to parts of Latin America, the Middle East, the Far East and the Mediterranean. It is usually caused by two bacteria, E. coli and shigella.

Vegetables relieve alchohol effects in blood

BOSTON (AP) — Eating green vegetables helps prevent the anemia that can result from drinking alcohol, a test-tube study has confirmed.

Doctors have long known that alcohol impairs, either directly or indirectly, the functioning of every organ in the body, including the formation of blood cells.

A study published in 1964 showed that folic acid, found in green vegetables, could reverse the inhibition of red blood cell formation brought on by alcohol.

That research was based on observations in people, not test-tube samples of tissue. The latest tests were conducted on mouse and human tissue.

Drinking alcohol, even in small amounts, will inhibit the body's production of red blood cells.

In their experiments, doctors from Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine found the reduction occurred with concentrations of alcohol that are "easily achieved" in humans.

However, the study showed that folic acid would reverse the slowdown.

The study was published in today's issue of the New England Journal of medicine. It was conducted by Drs. Richard C. Meagher, Fritz Sieber and Jerry L. Spivak.

Physicians also have noticed that anemia does not develop in alcoholics who are well nourished.

The Johns Hopkins team noted that conclusions based on test-tube results "must always be made with caution, particularly with respect to ethanol (alcohol)."

Orionid meteors visible during October

Prior to morning twilight on Oct. 21 the Orionid meteors should be seen radiating from a point in the upper part of the constellation Orion. The Orionid meteor shower becomes visible the same time each year as the earth returns to the same place in its orbit. This place is the point of intersection of the earth's orbit with the orbit of Halley's Comet.

Hally's Comet is not due to pass near the earth again until 1986. But in previous trips around the sun, the comet left chunks of ice and gravel in its orbital path, and it is this debris burning up on collision with the earth's atmosphere that creates the firery streaks in the shower.

The orbits of earth on Halley's Comet intersect at another point in May to produce the Eta Aquarid shower; however, this shower consists of meteors of lower velocity which are less spectacular.

If the Halley's Comet would collide with earth's atmosphere we would get a most spectacular shower. Unfortunately, the comet will cross our path in the winter of 1986, and not October or May.

Budget tours have pros, cons

By JERRY COHEN and DOROTHY COHEN
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Henry had the face of a Roman satyr, all ringed by lush black hair and accentuated by pouty lips. He also had the physique of a Sumo wrestler, an avoirdupois he wined and dined as if determined to preserve its noble dimensions.

And, as the cliche goes, like many a fat man Henry, who appeared to be in his late 40s, was quick on his feet. But not as fast as he was with a superlative.

Henry was our tour guide. Our budget tour guide (nine European countries in 22 days. And at a bargain price, you betcha).

Henry, as we came to know him, was a study in ambivalence.

All charm and consideration one moment, aloofness and near-surliness the next. Sometimes a master communicator but frequently uninformative.

SO HENRY'S ambivalence has left us ambivalent. Not just about our mecurial tour guide. More specifically, about the choice we made about our instrument of travel.

And therein lies the question to be pondered by any prospective tourist of limited funds and experience: Whether 'tis wise to suffer the not infrequent slings and arrows of a budget tour.

On balance, our answer is, a qualified yes. Still and all, we are convinced that except for the dauntless young, the determinedly adventurous or the seasoned traveler, there is no better buy for the price than a budget tour.

The budget tour, of course, is a package that includes round-trip air travel, a ride through alien lands in a reasonably comfortable motor coach, all lodging and all breakfasts and most dinners.

What follows are some reflections on the good and bad of our experience. Consider them not as benchmarks but only examples of what a pair of budget tourists experienced.

We arrived at London's Heathrow Airport on a gray (what else?) Saturday noon. What with unconscionable delays at the airport and aboard the coach that carried us, plus heavy traffic, we did not reach the St. James Hotel, in a full state of exhaustion, until 3 p.m.

NEVERTHELESS WE rallied, rushed to a nearby Underground stop and made to that most enticing of department stores, Harrods.

Dinner at Simpson's in The Strand, where the service was correct and the food splendid, set our mood aright. Even though the martinis were abominably weak. Beware of the booze at Simpson's.

Our one full day in London was a Sunday, and virtually closed down, and we salvaged it rather well, we thought, with an hour's train ride down to Brighton.

However, beyond the delay of getting from airport to hotel and then having Sunday as our only day there, I have an additional quibble about the budget tour's London stopover. I fault the packager for not informing us that we could have arranged to leave early and spend several days there, at our own expense, of course.

We take some consolation, however, from our own bumbling foresight that allowed us to tack a week onto the scheduled two days in Paris where the tour ended. This was arranged, at no extra expense, by taking a later flight home than the one on which our fellow travelers left. And we stayed in a semi-tacky but clean and charming little hotel, De Londres et de Stockholm, hard by the Tuileries, for only about $30 a night. We recommend it.

-0-Henry telephoned us at the St. James on Sunday night to tell us we would receive a wake-up call at 6 a.m. Monday so we could leave at 8 a.m. for the trip to the Continent.

ALMOST EVERY night Henry, whom we came to look upon as a merciless taskmaster, intoned, "Wake-up call at 6. Bags outside the door at 6:30. Breakfast at 7. Everybody on the coach at 8."

We whooshed across the Channel from Dover to Calais aboard a swift and immensely comfortable hovercraft. As we crossed the French and Belgian countrysides toward Amsterdam, Henry declaimed about the delights that lay ahead of us, some of which never materialized, and about himself, a subject that appeared to hold an enormous fascination for him.

As an expatriate Pole living in London, his life story proved a wordy one. But what that had to do with whether we would arrive in Amsterdam in time to visit the Rijksmuseum before it closed, as had been promised, was lost on us. We didn't arrive in time. It was the first of the poor schedulings we were to encounter. Just before arriving in Bonn, for instance, Henry announced: "Ludwig van Beethoven's home will be closed when we get there. But at least you can say you saw the outside."

Our lodgings for the single night we spent in Amsterdam proved an unnerving experience, for the Hotel Museum was aptly named. It was a museum of sorts, having been added onto over the centuries with a whimsical disregard for comfort.

Next day a sweet-looking, grandmotherly woman from Houston, traveling with an elderly husband with a bum leg, lectured Henry sternly. Not only about the missing juice but about the perilous stairways at the Hotel Museum.

Once aboard the motor coach weaving through the German hills toward Cologne and then the Rhine wine village of Rudesheim where we were to spend the night, Henry lectured back.

AT FIRST HE was defensive. "I liked these kind of hotels," he said. "The Holiday Inns and the Hiltons? Once you've seen one of them, you've seen them all."

Then he got down to the serious business of reminding us that we were on a budget tour, not a first-class tour. As if asking, "What did you expect?" Later, on the way to Cologne, he found himself assailed by another objection.

Our coach was moving along a two-lane roadway. It really was quite a pretty countryside interspaced by picturesque villages with homes and chalets hung with brilliantly filled flowerboxes. But it really was not what some had been led to expect.

One brochure had described the day we were to experience this way: "We leave Holland's green polderlands for German hills, gliding toward Cologne on the Rhine River."

Several of our fellow tourists took that to mean that meant travel by boat. The majority said they thought at least the entire day, not just a portion of it, would find us in view of the Rhine.

Henry hemmed and hawed, then conceded: "These (brochures) are written to sound as glamorous as possible. But you can read, favorably or unfavorably, between the lines."

AS WE LOOK back now, our first two days on the Continent, from Calais to Amsterdam and from Amsterdam to Rudesheim, served as a metaphor for our experiences the remainder of the trip. Not all bad, not all good. Some delightful experiences, some maddeningly frustrating ones.

WOULD WE BE budget-tour again? You know something? We just might. There's no gainsaying it was an adventure and a sport and a pastime.

But as one of our number, an even-tempered engineer said, "I'd like to rewrite that brochure for them."

Colorado's Tamarron is Rocky Mountain getaway

While the skies are sunny, the air is still cool and crisp. The colors appear brilliant against a grand-scale mountain backdrop. Abundant wildlife makes its homes in the groves of aspen, oak, pine, blue spruce and spots of columbine found in the high country.

In the eight years since its opening, Tamarron resort, on 650 self-contained acres in southwestern Colorado 18 miles north of Durango, has become known as one of Colorado's premier Rocky Mountain distinations.

Tamarron offers horseback trailrides through wildflower-dotted meadows in the valley of the nearby San Juan Mountain range. Your guide will take you to a bluff overlooking a clear mountain lake where you can fish for trout.

Tamarron's Sundowner golf course sports breathtaking scenery from every angle, every shot framed by the majestic peaks of the mountains. The course uses the natural landscaping of mountain lakes and streams in its layout and is open from late April through October. Private lessons and a complete pro shop is also available.

A health club offers classes from aerobics to yoga, and children's activities are available. Tamarron has indoor and outdoor tennis courts, heated pools and sauna. The resort can also arrange a river raft expedition along the Animas (the Spanish word for spirits) River.

You may also choose to hike, cycle, take a jeep down maintain roads or many other sports. For side excursions, guests can choose to take the Durango and Silverton Narrow Gauge Railroad, an historical tour which has been in operation since 1881. The three-hour ride to Silverton through the Animas Valley provides some of the most breathtaking mountain scenery in America. The train makes scheduled stops for passengers going to the mountain resort as well as for backpackers heading for the wilderness. This train is the only narrow guage in operation in North America. Reservations should be made well in advance.

Mesa Verde National Park is only an hour's drive from Tamarron. It is world-famous for its matchless concretation of cliff dwellings built by the Anasazi — "the ancient ones." You can explore the prehistoric Indian ruins left by a people that vanished 700 years ago.

Tamarron has two gourmet reastaurants and two lounges for entertainment. Condominium accommodations blend with the rustic scenery and contain lofts, fireplaces and kitchen areas.

Caribbean islands banding together to promote tourism

AP Laserphoto

Two young women soak up the Caribbean sun on a beach in the popular Condado section of San Juan, Puerto Rico. Tourist industry promoters in the Caribbean are concerned that the area is not keeping pace with other parts of the world, citing a drop in tourist business, while other areas are gaining.

By NAT CARNES
AP Writer

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — In an effort to combat a slump in tourism and increased competition from other countries, the islands of the Caribbean have, for the first time, joined forces to promote their sun and sand.

"Any country is now competing on a world-wide basis," says Paul Hall, a research analyst for the U.S. Tourism Administration in Washington. "If a country is not getting the business, something is causing it. Tourism business is very complicated now."

The complications of worldwide recession, currency fluctuations and persistent inflation have forged a growing sense of cooperation among members of the Caribbean Tourism Association, whose members come from 29 tourist destinations stretching 2,500 miles from Guyana in South America to Belize in Central America.

In June, the association set up a marketing and promotional committee which will promote the entire region.

Betty Sperber, operator of the 42-room King Christian hotel in the U.S. Virgin Islands, sums up the challenge this way: "We will not sell on the basis of weather anymore," facing competition from other well-promoted areas such as Miami and Venezuela.

THE CARIBBEAN outside Cuba is experiencing a drop in tourism after more than 20 years of growth that started with Fidel Castro's 1959 takeover in Havana and continued through the introduction of jumbo jets.

In the first six months of this year, Puerto Rico's Tourism Co., a government-sponsored corporation, says 17 of the country's major hotels — those equipped with casinos and access to beaches — showed a 5 percent to 17 percent drop in occupancy rates compared to last year.

And the Caribbean Tourism and Research and Development Center in Barbados reports that 400,000 fewer tourists came to the Caribbean last year as compared with 1980, when the figure was 7.2 million.

The best year for Puerto Rico, the area's No. 1 tourist destination, was 1980, when the island entertained 1.7 million tourists, who brought in $615 million.

Those figures represent a dramatic contrast with the 1950s, when fewer than 200,000 tourists came to Puerto Rico each year.

Now, however, after two years of decline, some are already nostalgic for the late 1970s. Francisco Serrate Romero, a sun-bronzed vendor, wanders the beach in San Juan, recalling, "I remember when I used to pick coconuts in the morning and sell them for five dollars each in the afternoon. Those times are gone forever."

IN 1957, before Castro, the entire Caribbean drew only about 500,000 tourists, and Cuba had more than half — 275,000.

In the 1960s and early 1970s, worldwide tourism was spurred by cheap, quick flights, and the non-communist Caribbean islands found themselves newly attractive for American tourists who no longer went to Havana.

But later, two U.S. recessions and the dollar crisis helped shift new attention to other areas — particularly newly-affluent European tourists carrying strong currencies like the German mark. Package tours helped introduce a new kind of traveler from those areas — less free with spending cash, but at least a guaranteed booking at a hotel.

One result is that Puerto Rico has shifted its promotion efforts from what used to be an almost exclusive reliance on the United States. Today it draws tourists as well from Canada, Great Britain, Spain, West Germany, and Venezuela.

Those five countries, according to the World Tourism Organization based in Madrid, today have record numbers of tourists traveling abroad. The largest group, 22.5 million West German tourists, spend $20 billion annually on travel.

In the last year, Lufthansa German Airlines and British Caledonian Airways have opened direct connections between Puerto Rico and Europe. Puerto Rico also wants to add Air Canada. Other flights have connected the island with Spain and South America for years.

Venezuela is now the No. 2 visitor in Puerto Rico behind the United States, averaging about 70,000 tourists annually compared to about 10,000 three years ago. "The growth rate is about 20 to 30 percent annually," said Carlos Diago.

Cuba also steps up drive to attract more tourists

By LUIS RAFAEL MATOS
AP Writer

HAVANA, Cuba (AP) — As the Reagan administration tries to keep U.S. tourists away from Cuba, the government here is stepping up its promotion of this socialist country as a low-cost vacationers' haven in the tropics.

Cubatur, the commercial arm of the government's National Institute of Tourism (INTUR), with a mere $1 million budget, has targeted its promotion toward other hard-currency countries, mainly Canada, Mexico, Spain and Germany.

Speaking of the ban, Jorge Debaza, director of Cubatur, lamented the May 15 Reagan Administration decision to ban travel that would contribute U.S. tourist dollars to the Cuban economy. But he said it was a "unilateral walling up" by the United States, and "It will only hurt the average, budget-minded American worker."

Debaza speaks of marketing concepts, not ideology. He occupies a stylishly decorated office, located in La Rampa Avenue, near the once fashionable Malecon section of Havana, by the sea.

"We're not hurt by the ban," he maintained, saying Cuba at this moment hasn't even enough tourism infrastructure to meet the demand from other countries. According to INTUR figures, during 1981 180,000 tourists visited Cuba.

Debaza says Cuba, despite recessionary times, was the only Caribbean country to experience a 10 percent increase last year in tourism. He said INTUR projected similar 10 percent yearly increases for at least the next five years.

Included in the INTUR statistics are some 10,000 Cuban exiles a year returning to visit relatives. These can purchase merchandise only at special outlets called "national stores" where import costs and taxes are added to the price tag — something from which foreigners are exempted at their "International" and "Diplomatic" stores.

Debaza said tourists of different nationalities traveled to Cuba for different reasons.

"Spaniards come searching for cultural experiences, Mexicans for night life and Canadians and Germans for sun-sand-sea. And we target our promotion according to these tastes," he said.

The Cuban official said that, before the U.S. travel ban, Cubatur had specifically targeted promotions in the U.S. mainland to tout sports fishing and hunting trips — and was attracting, in all, some 13,000 American tourists a year.

Sports fishing facilities are just a half hour's drive from Havana, in the small fishing village of Barlovento — site of a yearly sailfish tournament named after the late U.S. novelist Ernest Hemingway, whose vivid descriptions helped make sportfishing in the waters off Cuba famous in the days before Fidel Castro.

Since early 1981, the government has taken other special steps to increase the flow of tourists — and their currencies — into Cuba.

To get around a shortage of easily convertible Cuban coins, for example, INTUR now mints special coins bearing its logo. And to ease entry into the country, the Foreign Ministry authorized INTUR in June to substitute visa documents with simple tourist cards.

Vail internationally famous ski resort

By MICHAEL CARLTON
The Denver Post

VAIL, Colorado — When, on Dec. 15, 1962, that first poma lift carried that first hesitant skier up the beginner's slope in the midst of Colorado's Rockies, few would have guessed the success that would follow.

Today, just two decades later, Vail is internationally famous, the home to celebrities ranging from Gerald Ford to Walter Mondale, and arguably (with apologies to Aspen and St. Moritz) the finest ski resort in the world.

Vail is a grandfather by Western ski resort standards, the place that gave others the courage to build ski areas like Keystone and Sundance, Snowbird and Snowmass, Alta and Breckenridge.

It was the first of the totally planned ski resorts ("Built by skiers for skiers" was its early slogan), the first of the exotic resorts that lured not only Westerners and Midwesterners to Colorado, but Easterners and Europeans, as well. Decried by some as instant and plastic Bavaria, Vail has nonetheless been a great success story and has brought prosperity to the vast Gore Valley of Colorado.

From that first modest start, with one gondola ski lift (the first in the United States), two chair lifts and a poma lift, combining for an uphill skier capacity of 2,800 per hour, Vail has exploded. Today, Vail has a massive gondola lift, 14 chair lifts, two triple chair lifts and one poma lift with a total capacity of 21,760 skiers traveling to the grand slopes and back bowls each hour.

Vail Mountain, which receives an average of 325 inches of snow a year, now has 60 miles of ski trails and more than 10 square miles of ski terrain cutting through the lodgepole pines and the aspens. In the back bowls, 786 acres remain untouched, forming a paradise for "powder pigs," those skiers who love to drive through snow up to their knees.

By any measure Vail has made it — made it to the point that Vail Associates has opened a new multimillion-dollar luxury ski resort, Beaver Creek, just 10 miles down the road. All the lessons learned in building Vail will be put to good use in Beaver Creek, where condominium prices start at $400,000 and houses begin at a million.

Vail has come an immense distance since 1962, when the Gore Valley was mostly a place of sheep ranches. Deer and elk ruled the valley and only an occasional prospector or hunter invaded the rural calm. Today more than 5,000 people live in the valley permanently and often as many as 20,000 visitors stay in the hotels and condominiums clinging to the mountainsides. Where once there was only the crossroads town of Vail, named for Charlie Vail, who was the chief engineer for the Colorado Department of Highways, today there is a thriving city that encompasses East Vail, Vail, LionsHead, West Vail and Eagle Vail, all hosting skiers and summer visitors from throughout the world.

So prosperous is Vail that its bus system is now the third largest in Colorado, carrying more than two million passengers per year with a fleet of 25 buses.

Quite a success for a resort that was started by a former wartime commando.

Peter Seibert trained with the 10th Mountain Division (the only U.S. mountain unit to see action during World War II) at Camp Hale just 20 miles southwest of Vail. When the war ended he returned to the handsome highness of the Colorado Rockies and hiked to the summit of Vail Mountain with his friend, Earl Eaton, who discovered the secret of Vail Mountain while prospecting for uranium.

What they saw stretching before them — a vastness that was hidden from the valley floor — was perhaps the greatest ski mountain in the world, a place of massive back bowls and unending slopes. That day, in 1954, the dream of Vail began.

It took the two men, and a small group of investors, eight years to gain the necessary capital and the land use permit from the U.S. Forest Service to realize the beginning of that dream. But dream they did and on Dec. 15, 1962, the mountain opened.

Camille Morris, left, Brice Morris, center, and Tyson Murphy, along with Scharley the dog, enjoy a recent issue of "Kind" magazine, which will be delivered to Midland schools, along with order blanks, in a subscription sale by the Midland Jayceettes. Some of the money collected from sales of "Kind" will benefit Midland Animal Control.

Jayceettes' magazine sale beginning

The Midland Jayceettes will be delivering copies of "Kind," a children's magazine printed by the Humane Society of the United States, with subscription blanks to all the Midland public schools and three private schools, Trinity, Hillander and Midland Christian School.

Each class will receive a copy of the magazine to look through and enough subscription blanks for each student.

"Kind" is a magazine written to benefit readers from third through seventh grade levels with stories about the special lives of pets, farm animals and wild animals. There is a poetry section, puzzle section and projects to inspire interest in animals and animal welfare.

As an extra benefit, in addition to teaching children more about animals, one dollar of each subscription, which is $6 a year for six issues, the Midland Jayceettes sell will go directly to the Midland Animal Control. Not only will young animal lovers gain interesting reading, the homeless animals will receive the benefit of extra funds.

Parents with children attending a school which is not participating in this project and who would like to see "Kind" or order one, stop by Dotson Datsun, Inc., 2903 W. Wall St., or call 694-9558, and ask for Maureen Dotson-Wall.

By TOM McCORD
AP Writer

CHURCH HILL, Tenn. (AP) — Married at 13, Addie Wallen raised 22 children — 20 of them her own — and a century after her birth she lives to tell about it in a simple frame house tucked away in a Hawkins County hollow.

Cataracts and two heart attacks have slowed her a bit, but Mrs. Wallen, a petite woman whose long hands are steady despite her years, says she still occasionally makes bread in the four-room house she shares with a 20-year-old grandson.

She lives, appropriately, in Wallen Town, an East Tennessee hollow about 10 miles from Church Hill that is peopled by her sons, daughters and some of her more than 100 grandchildren and 28 great-grandchildren.

"I like to live close to my family," Mrs. Wallen said in a matter-of-fact tone. "But I can't get just one to stay. Got nothin' to pay 'em. But they take care of me when I'm sick."

Born in the hills of Scott County, Va., Mrs. Wallen says she's 99. But her son, Eckle Wallen, says her birth certificate makes her 102. "That's what they give, but I don't believe it," she said.

Mrs. Wallen has outlived some of her children, and her husband, Alec, died of tuberculosis 28 years ago.

A tintype photograph of Alec and Addie Wallen peers from a living-room wall in her small house, which overlooks a tobacco field tended by a grandson who lives in a nearby trailer.

Her husband lived to be 90, she said.

"He was a farmer, worked in the timber business. He came to my daddy's one day. He said he wanted me to be his wife. It was pretty early, but I just took a notion."

Moving from Virginia over the mountains to Hawkins County, she had her first child in the 19th century. She said each of her 20 children was born at home. Two others were from her husband's first marriage.

"I'd have some big enough to know enough to take care of the others," she said. "I even had a set of twins, a boy and a girl."

Her son, Eckle, said his family's appetite required the killing of 35 hogs one winter.

"When we were all home, a 25-pound bag of flour would go in no time, but that included eight or nine loggers as well," he said.

Mrs. Wallen said, "I done the washin' and the cookin'. And I did a lot of our gardening."

Event to benefit cystic fibrosis

"You don't have to bowl 300 to be a winner in our event," said Becky Suter, who has been appointed chairperson of Midland's Bowl for Breath to be held Nov. 13 at area bowling centers to raise money to fight cystic fibrosis (CF).

"The Bowl for Breath is for everybody — boys, girls, men and women of all ages. It doesn't matter whether you're a weekly bowler, someone who bowls once a year, or someone who's never even been in a bowling center. Whoever you are, you can take part — you can win."

Prizes will be awarded for the most money raised, not on the scores of the game. Each player signs up sponsors — friends, relatives, schoolmates, co-workers — who pledge a certain amount of money for each point scored. After the games are completed, players collect their pledges, turn them in, and receive varying prizes.

The proceeds will help fund research to improve medical treatment and ultimately find a cure for cystic fibrosis, the number one genetic killer of children and young adults. Cystic fibrosis is an inherited disease which attacks its victims' respiratory and digestive systems.

"Only 20 years ago," said Chairman Suter, "few children with cystic fibrosis lived long enough to enter school. Now, thanks to research funded by activities like Bowl for Breath, nearly half of the children will live past 21."

"So we hope everybody will come out, get some exercise, have fun and realize that the perfect score is doing something for somebody else."

National Cosmetology Week set for Oct. 3 – 9

The week of Oct. 3 — 9 has been designated National Cosmetology Week by the 58,000 member National Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Association.

"During the week, cosmetology salons across the nation will be observing the week by conducting 'Ask Us' activities that encourage public interest in learning more information about how cosmetologists and hairstylists can help men, women and children better their self-images by improving their grooming and beauty care," said Chuck Wilcox, president of Texas Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Association of Midland, Affiliate No. 56.

"During the week, cosmetologists and hairstylists will be holding informational activites and presentations about contemporary hairstyling and other developments in the cosmetology industry," he said. "Also, they will be raising funds to support the association's nation-wide Disaster Fund."

In connection with National Cosmetology Week, some NHCA affiliates are expected to donate their services to hospitals, nursing homes, rehabilitation centers, senior citizen groups and other institutions for disabled persons. They will be providing expert "Ask Us" advice in the areas of hair and skin care, Wilcox added.

Creating a public awareness of the many important functions performed by the cosmetologist is a primary objective of National Cosmetology Week. NHCA-member salon owners and cosmetologists will be available for programs and presentations with local groups or associations during the week. Among popular events featured are fashion presentations highlighted by Fall-Winter hairfashions and designer apparel, slide presentations, Hairfashion Model of the Year contests, radio and television programs and other special events.

"Some NHCA affiliates will be working closely with local chapters of the Girl Scouts of America. The Girl Scouts will have the opportunity to attend Career Days programs in which careers in cosmetology will be discussed. Girl Scout groups will have the opportunity to participate in tours of local cosmetology salons," Wilcox said.

In addition to aiding the disabled, and education Girl Scouts and other members of the general community, National Cosmetology Week helps build the NHCA Disaster Fund, which has been designated as the offical charity for fund-raising events held during the week, said Wilcox.

"The Disaster Fund was established in 1955 by NHCA after floods had severely damaged salons in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The fund has since been in continual existence and has rallied to the aid of cosmetologists victimized by earthquakes in Alaska and floods in Missouri, Kentucky and Pennsylvania," he said. "Financial aid from the fund has helped victims of these disasters and others repair their buildings and replace damaged equipment to help the salon return to normal working conditions as easily as possible."

1 large carrot, pared
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1 tablespoon sugar
1 tablespoon soy sauce
½ cup water
2 tablespoons peanut oil
1 medium onion, cut into thin strips

Cut zucchini and carrot into ¼-inch thick crosswise slices; cut slices into ¼-inch wide strips. Stir together cornstarch and sugar; gradually stir in soy sauce and water, keeping smooth. In a 10-inch skillet heat peanut oil; add onion and cook over moderate heat, stirring often, until onion is yellowed; add zucchini and carrot; cover and cook, stirring a few times until tender-crisp — 3 minutes or so. Add soy-sauce mixture and stir constantly until thickened and clear. Serve hot. Makes 4 servings.

Diet cuts down on blood cholesterol

BOSTON (AP) — Some ethnic groups have low levels of cholesterol in their blood because of the food they eat, not because they inherit the trait, a study concludes.

The research found that people who are traditionally plagued by heart disease can lower their cholesterol levels by eating less fatty foods.

The study was conducted on men and women in an area of Finland where coronary heart disease is common. After changing their diets for six weeks, the amount of cholesterol in their blood fell by 23 percent.

The 54 middle-aged volunteers gave up fatty meat, sausage and cheese. Instead, they ate vegetables, skim milk, margarine, lean meat, fish, poultry and low-fat sausage and cheese.

The researchers said their work demonstrates that high blood cholesterol levels "can be effectively lowered by a diet low in saturated fats and cholesterol and rich in polyunsaturated fats."

The study was conducted by Dr. Christian Ehnholm and other researchers at the National Public Health Institute in Helsinki, the University of Helsinki and the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Beltsville Human Nutrition Center in Beltsville, Md. It was published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Many studies have shown that people with high levels of low-density lipoproteins — fatty proteins that carry cholesterol in the blood — are more likely to have heart disease.

Levels of these low-density lipoproteins, or LDL, fell with the total cholesterol levels when people cut down on saturated fats.

People in Mediterranean countries have lower levels of LDL and less heart disease.

"Our results conform with the hypothesis that the differences in plasma lipid and lipoprotein levels between European populations are largely due to dietary factors and have little to do with genetic differences," the researchers wrote.

Midland County Families-In-Action Inc. aids in coping with drug abuse problem

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Drug abuse and alcohol abuse among the young — The words alone are enough to cause a chill in the hearts of many parents. Drug and substance abuse is a major social illness in this country, but among the young it is also a major social tragedy.

How can the family and the community stop this growing problem? Midland County Families-In-Action Inc. can help. "Our main goal is education and prevention," said Myra Thurman, president of the organization. "This year we will also do evaluation on the extent of substance abuse in Midland."

Midland County Families-In-Action Inc. is a community awareness group formed to provide education about drug and substance abuse, and positive ways such abuse can be prevented before it is begun, with a concentration on education and prevention of drug and substance abuse among the young.

The organization has its beginnings last spring, when 29 community groups, including churches, private and public schools, businesses, government, civic groups, courts, prevention and intervention agencies, law enforcement and parent-teacher associations, were represented in interest finding meetings, which were organized through the local PTA associations, said Mrs. Thurman. "At that time there was such an amount of community interest that the decision was made to form the Midland County Families-In-Action Inc." She added that individuals representing nearly all segments of the community expressed interest in, and a need for, the organization.

"'Midlanders Against Drugs,' and 'Texans' War On Drugs' had been into education, and we are really standing on their shoulders," Mrs. Thurman said. "We are totally independent of any other group."

Midland County Families-In-Action, Inc. is not in competition with any other substace abuse program. "Families-In-Action's purpose is education not rehabilitation. It is not in competitin with any group which seeks to curb or treat substance abuse," said Mrs. Thurman. "We are getting much community support from other groups."

Substance abuse knows no social or economic boundaries. "Everybody is affected, directly or indirectly," Mrs. Thurman said. "It will take a community effort. From an economic standpoint, the amount of money drained from the community on drugs is stupendous. If a community is not willing to support the school system, law enforcement agencies and the judicial system, (that community) will get the name of being soft, which attracts drug traffic. In the West Texas area, we can't afford that because we are a border state."

The cost of substance abuse to the individual, the family and the community can also be measured in other ways. Mrs. Thurman pointed out that the finest education does no good to a student who is constantly under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

"The possibility of overload on our Human Services is overwhelming," she said. "Community and state institutions are really depleted by drug and alcohol abuse. Tax dollars spent on drug and alcohol abuse could go elsewhere — or stay in our pockets! I wonder about economic repercussions all down the line."

Crime is often caused by substance abuse. "Local law enforcement officers will tell you that thefts rise with drug and alcohol abuse," Mrs. Thurman said.

"If you drive on the highway, if you fly in an arplaine — everyone is affected," she said. "I think that the community wearies of hearing of drugs so much, but it's a subject we can't turn loose of becuase it doesn't go away. And it doesn't get better because we aren't focusing in on it all the time. Whether we like it or not, that is the situation and we'd better face it — we've got it."

In the face of this seemingly impossible situation, beams of hope and possible solutions begin to surface. "Parents' groups are organizing across the U.S. — it's a real ground-swell movement," said Mrs. Thurman. "Parents want to get ahold of their child's influence that child feels. The parents got anti-drug laws passed in Texas. There is a movement across the U.S. of young people who are, for various reasons, speaking out and not wanting to be associatied with the stereotype of a teenager on drugs. They are a positive, creative bunch."

Parents of very young children often have very real fears of the kind of society their children will inherit. "The advantage to parents of pre-school children is that they have the opportunity to make an impact in the community before their child is in school," said Mrs. Thurman. "We want all little children to have the greatest atmosphere to grow up in. At the same time, we want to support the kids who are not into drugs and alcohol."

Midland County Families-In-Action Inc. is a community awareness and service group open to all members of the community. Even though the organization had its beginnings through Midland's PTAs, it is open to any individual or group in the community. The members of the board have been elected, and the organization has been incorporated ahd has filed for its tax-exempt status.

"Now we're taking membership from individuals and organizations," Mrs. Thurman said, "and are involved in a fund drive. There is no charge for joining. We want to be of service to the community. We all live in a society where anyone's problem is everyone's problem. All children are growing up in a situation where they may be working with those on drugs."

Bartlett pear pie tempting dessert

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Fresh Bartlett pears are deliciously abundant now. And one of the best pies, in our opinion, is that made with a pear filling.

BARTLETT PEAR PIE

½ cup all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
¼ teaspoon ground mace
2½ pounds (10 medium) firm-ripe Bartlett pears
Butter Pastry, recipe follows
2 tablespoons butter

In a large bowl stir together sugar, flour, cinnamon and mace. Pare, quarter and core pears; slice fairly thin — there should be about 6 cups. Add pears to sugar mixture and toss to coat all slices.

Divide pastry in half; roll one half on a pastry cloth with a stockinet-covered rolling pin to a 12-inch round; fit into a 9-inch pie plate. Roll remaining pastry to a 12-inch round for top crust. Add pear mixture to pastry-lined plate; dot with butter. Place pastry for top crust over pears; seal edges well with your fingers; press the tines of a fork over the pastry on the rim. To vent, cut six 1- to 2-inch slits radiating from the center of the top crust. Cover edge with a 2- to 3-inch-wide strip of foil.

Bake on rack below center in a preheated 425-degree oven for 40 minutes; remove foil and continue baking until pears are tender and pastry over top and bottom is golden brown — about 15 minutes longer. Cool on a wire rack until lukewarm. Delicious served topped with vanilla ice cream.

Makes 8 servings.

Butter Pastry: Into 2 cups all-purpose flour, with a pastry blender, cut two ¼-pound sticks butter until the size of small peas. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon of water at a time (you'll need about 4 tablespoons) and mix with a fork until dough can be pressed into a ball; chill for at least 30 minutes before using as directed in Bartlett Pear Pie recipe.

Journal chronicles adopted child's life

Staff Artist: Jan Drake

The day grows long when one is waiting for a new grandchild to arrive. One paces the floor and drinks innumerable cups of coffee — very much like the activity that takes place when waiting for a birth in the hospital. One knows only that soon the young parents will walk through the door with a new baby girl or boy — whichever has been specified previously by a call from the adoption agency, Methodist Mission Home in San Antonio.

Finally the moment arrives — the car stops in the driveway and the moment of introduction to a new grandchild is at hand. It is difficult to explain the feeling of love and acceptance that sweeps over one on first sight of that tiny person who is to be the newest member of the family.

What are one's expectations? Whatever they are, it is clear immediately they are exceeded. This must be the prettiest little baby ever to be adopted anywhere. As the evening wears on, baby is fed, diapered, cuddled and talked to. A realization slowly creeps over the new grandparent. This baby has been beautifully cared for, loved and protected even before the child came to his permanent home.

After baby is put down for the night there is time to inspect the journals kept by foster parents, which came with the child. Daily entries chronicle the life of the infant from the day of baby's delivery to the foster home until departure.

What comes to mind when foster parents are mentioned? Is the image good, bad or indifferent? Perhaps indifferent more closely describes the atitude of the average citizen. The following exerpts from the journals of two foster families will serve to illustrate the genuine care and concern they render to a child.

— I went with the social worker to pick the baby up. I think the nurses hated to see him go. They said how good he was and how pretty (they were right).

— He has lost to 8 pounds 2 ounces from 8 pounds 7 ounces at birth — quite normal, but still we want to see him eat well. I'm trying different nipples to see which he likes best.

— He had several visitors today (neighbors), all of whom thought he was quite perfect. His foster Daddy thinks his features are perfect. Our son and daughter (ages 5 and 3-1/2) are in heaven. They follow me around to watch everything I do for the baby. I wonder if the new will wear off.

— He was awake most of the time from midnight to 4 a.m., not crying, just very restless on his first night away from the hospital. We have decided to call him William while he is with us.

— We are thinking of you in this time of waiting. We know you must be very special people.

— William has very winning ways.

— I suspected yesterday and I know for sure today that the baby has a social smile. It's different from his "gassy smile" when he is asleep, and this afternoon we had a 20 minute smiling session. I never realized a baby could really smile before it was at least two or three weeks old. How sweet he is.

— I haven't made any attempt to stand back from the baby or keep him from getting close to me. I have spent as much time with him and drawn as close to him as possible, assuming that if he can have a comfortable, close relationship with me and the rest of the family, he could have good experience to be able to do the same thing with his parents in a few weeks. Still I was concerned about him changing environments and readjusting.

— I can't wait any longer to buy his Easter basket. If he comes to you before Sunday I'll send it with him.

— One month old on Easter Sunday — how special. My children were as excited about William's Easter basket as their own. I think they liked his rattle better than their own trinkets. They carefully divided their eggs from the hunt with him. They are really concerned whether his chololate bunny will last until he is old enough to eat it.

— He turned over from stomach to back again today. I missed seeing it again, but the children saw it and they were really excited.

— I weighed him today at the pediatrician's office. He has gained to 9 pounds 4 ounces. The doctor said anything over one pound is acceptable weight gain for the first month.

— I got a call today from Methodist Mission Home saying that William will be going back to them on Thursday. It was a real blow. I feel as though I won't be able to stand it when he's gone, and the tears just keep coming. I'm so happy for your family, though. He's growing up fast and he needs to be with you. I don't know who is luckier — you all or the baby.

— Our visitor arrived. Oh, what a doll! We loved him right away. He was asleep, but woke up shortly. We named our visitor David.

— David encountered his first cow today. I wonder what he thought it could be. We were out in the country all day and he did just fine.

— David's foster brother loves him and thinks he is a toy.

— Today is church and today we needed a pacifier. David liked this new thing and quickly fell asleep after using it about 10 minutes. We went visiting today and David had many admirers. We're already hoping Methodist Mission will let him stay forever.

— Foster grandparents on both sides would love to keep him. They show him off and refer to him as their grandson.

— A very special day for us — Mother's Day. We as foster parents did think of you. We don't know who you are and never will, but we thought you must be wondering where David is. Today I am a mother to my 2-1/2-year old son and for one Mother's day, also mother to David. I am ever so grateful I could have David with me this day.

— Methodist Mission Home called this morning and we were not prepared. David's foster dad came home and this house has been different since then. We know the time has come for David to go home, but we will miss him more than you can ever know. We love him so much that it will be hard to say goodbye. As his first foster parent said, "I will not rest too well this night, for us it is a sad day but we are excited for David." David's foster brother has taken this calmly, but I know he will ask about him for a while. We will not forget our foster son, David. We are happy for you and for David.

What comes to mind when foster parents are mentioned? We leave that to our readers.

To keep their cool, today's smaller engines need a coolant with a concentration of 44 to 55 percent ethylene glycol. A coolant not only removes heat from the engine but also keeps the automatic transmission and other systems working smoothly.

Eighty percent of car owners install their own coolant. The makers of the best-seller "Prestone II" Anti-Freeze/Coolant suggest that rather than merely draining and refilling the radiator, you flush out the old solution. This job can be easy with a Flush 'n Fill kit from Prestone II. After flushing, add a solution of half coolant, half water. This job will be easier if you use the new "Prestone" funnel which allows ease of pouring even if the radiator opening is angled off on the side.

Time management course for women being offered soon

"There just aren't enough hours in the day...," "I'll be glad to do it when I can find the time..." Sound familiar? Every woman at one time or another feels the pressure of not having enough time to fulfill all her responsibilities. She feels fragmented, frazzled and pulled in many directions at once.

There is hope! A new course will be offered to the community this month by Woman Time Management of Midland. The course, teaching time management skills for the household, covers a wide spectrum from daily planning and family financial record keeping to closet, kitchen and household cleaning organization. It even offers ideas for teaching children organizational and time management skills.

WTM of Midland is a group of four women, Susan Horton, Marylyn Leonard, Ellen Robinson and Karen Scharbauer, who received their training at Woman Time Management training offered last March in Wichita Falls by Liz Miller and Carol Burns, the originators of the course. The four Midland women formed WTM of Midland in order to offer the benefits of time management to other Midland women.

WTM is unique in that it teaches time management for the homemaker. The women who teach this course in Midland said that while there are many time management concepts for the business executives, until now there have been none for the "executive homemaker." The course will teach the homemaker to find more time for her family and her outside interests. It also applies to the professional woman who must run a home.

Registration for the WTM course will start Monday. Registrants may call Susan Horton, 682-7479, Ellen Robinson, 683-3499, Marylyn Leonard, 697-4068, or Karen Scharbauer, 682-9636. The course will be held at the First United Methodist Church on two nights a week for two weeks, from 7 p.m. — 9:30 p.m. Dates for the course are Oct. 12, 14, 19, and 21. Cost of the course is $30 per person, which includes a workbook.

DEAR ABBY

Couple's age difference conquered by acceptance

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: These days you hear so much about older women marrying younger men. Thanks for saying, "It CAN work out."

When I was 33, I fell in love with a 19-year-old man. I had six children, no job and no money. He accepted all of us.

Today I am 47, and he is 33. We have eight children (two are now happily married) and we also have a grandchild. The children and I will testify to what a loving husband and father we have, and he will testify to the shower of blessings he has received from us.

When we married, almost everyone thought it wouldn't last, but we considered all the negative aspects plus objections from parents — his and mine — and we decided it could work out if we cared enough about each other.

Yesterday I read an article on marriage, and one question was asked: "If you could change one thing about your spouse, what would it be?" Abby, would you believe I couldn't think of one thing? Then I asked my husband that question. He thought for a long time, and finally said, "I can't think of anything either." — LUCKY US

DEAR LUCKY: You may be lucky, but the success of your marriage cannot be attributed to luck alone. For one thing, you're a unique couple — you accept each other just the way you are.

Albert Einstein reportedly said, "Women marry men hoping they will change, and men marry women hoping they will not. So each is inevitably disappointed."

DEAR ABBY: I was born and raised in a small town in Iowa, and I'm now residing in St. Paul, Minn. I'm dating an older man from the office, and we're getting "serious." He's a wonderful guy and everyone considers him quite a catch.

Now for the problem: He's constantly putting down my "roots" and making fun of the little town I was raised in. Whenever he introduces me, he mentions the fact that I'm a "country girl from a hick town" in Iowa, and he puts me down in a very mean and arrogant way. Then he laughs and makes a joke of it. Of course, I'm hurt. What should I do? I love the guy, but I wonder if I can plan a happy future with a man who seems to delight in ridiculing my small-town roots. — HEARTSICK FROM IOWA

DEAR HEARTSICK: Have you told him that his "jokes" about your roots make you uncomfortable and unhappy? If you haven't, do so, and take your cue from his behavior. (He may be a nice guy with a peculiar sense of humor.)

If he continues to hurt you after you've told him how you feel, you'll know you're in love with a mean and insensitive man, so proceed at your own risk. (P.S. My roots are in Iowa, too, and I'm proud of it!)

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "No Name in New Mexico," whose future daughter-in-law asked her to be matron of honor, reminded me of my wedding.

When I started making plans for my wedding, I was stumped at first as to whom I wanted for my matron of honor. Then my fiance told me the matron of honor should be my best friend.

Well, that made my decision easy. I chose my mom, and she was absolutely thrilled. I feel lucky to have such a close relationship with my mother, and it made me happy to be able to show her in some small way how I feel about her. Sign me — LUCKY IN CINCINNATI

DEAR LUCKY: Your mother is also lucky to have a daughter such as you. Add to the list of lucky ones the father who's asked to be his son's best man — and the son whose best friend is his father.

Doggy bags

By ERMA BOMBECK

I'll bet you old-timers out there can remember when a doggy bag was a bag containing a bone that people took home from the restaurant to their dog.

Boy, those were the days, weren't they? I remember when we used to walk in the door and the minute our dog would see that little bag with a picture of himself on the front, he'd jump higher than the door frame.

He's finally smartened up.

That bag's not for him. In fact, they're not even bags anymore. They're cartons of leftover chop suey, beef stroganoff, lima beans and chicken and dumplings.

They're chicken wings, a limp taco, a half cup of soup, cole slaw, and cold strings of French fried potatoes.

I can be honest about it now. Our dog never saw a piece of cold chicken in his entire life. As for the occasional steak bone, there were rules. First, everyone would pick at the meat left on it for a couple of days. Then, I'd surround it with three quarts of water, a few carrots, onions and celery and make vegetable soup. On the fourth day, I'd place the naked, white bone on a plate in the middle of the kitchen floor and announce, "If you bury it before I do, it's yours."

He never had a chance.

Diners used to be embarrassed about doggy bags. I can recall ordering my children to be sure and ask for a bag and when they did I'd blush and say, "My goodness. You're not going to carry home that half plate of spaghetti and meatballs, are you? Mommy will make you some next week if you're that hungry. Oh, well, if you think the dog will eat it!"

That's when one of them would say, "Does that mean we're going to get a dog?"

Today, doggy bags are passed out as mechanically as the bill.

Somehow, the doggy bag has opened the door for gutsy diners who feel that every restaurant is a giant take-out. We saw an elderly couple at a nearby restaurant the other night sack up all the crackers on the table, the bread, pats of butter, sugar, cardboard creamers and lettuce from the relish tray. As they prepared to go, she picked up the ashtray.

The waitress said, "Don't tell me your dog smokes."

Undaunted, the elderly woman tossed it in her bag and said, "We're trying to get him to quit!"

CROP planning Walk for Hungry

CROP is planning a Walk for the Hungry in Midland starting at 9 a.m. on Oct. 16 at the 1-1/4-mile Windlands Park jogging track. The public is invited to participate.

CROP is the name given to the community hunger appeal of Church World Service, the relief and development agency of more than 30 Protestant and Orthodox denominations in the U.S. Among the major organizations recently receiving funds through CROP were the American Friends Service Committee, Catholic Relief Services, Lutheran World Relief and the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Board. Twenty-five percent of the funds raised in Midland will be reserved for Midland's Share-A-Meal program, which provides meals on weekends for shut-ins.

According to Church World Services, the goal of CWS development projects around the world is to help people create a better quality of life for themselves, marked by sustainability and a sharing of benefits and burdens. Over 90 cents out of every CWS dollar goes directly to help people in need.

Gifts to CWS/CROP are distributed mainly through Christian agencies working together, and in eight program categories, including Appropriate Technology; Education; Emergencies; Foreign and Domestic; Food; Family Life; Refugees; Technical Consultants; and Seeds.

The work of CWS/CROP is carried out in over 50 countries, including Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Pakistan, Sudan and the U.S.

Approximately 30 communities in Texas are planning CROP walks this fall. For further information on Midland's Walk for the Hungry, call John Savage at 682-9355 or George Davis at 684-6740.

Designer brings curves back into office

By ELEANOR ROBERTS
Hearst Feature Service

BOSTON — Sex in the office? Now hang in, we don't mean cleavage down to THERE or clinging crepes stretched tight across the fanny.

But the young executive on the way to the top doesn't have to hide her curves beneath a severely man-tailored suit, either.

"There is nothing attractive about a woman walking around looking mannish," said Arthur Chapnik, who designs handsome young executive fashions that are appropriate for the boardroom, but never, for a minute, let anyone forget the corporate woman is the soul of femininity.

"I see armies of young women who equate success with the classic men's suit cut for females," continued Chapnik, "and what do they look like? Just another working woman carrying a briefcase. A woman who is not using her assets as she should."

Well, God forbid you should do that in a Chapnik suit.

"My concept is tailored clothing — but softened. I don't change the body silhouette, just refine it," said Chapnik, a former men's wear designer.

There is no such thing as the hard-to-fit woman in Chapnik's opinion. He designs for the petite and the tall, the lean and the well-rounded, choosing fabrics and cut that flatter all.

VD virus resistant to penicillin

ATLANTA (AP) — Two cases of gonorrhea resistant to the two most common drug treatments have been reported this year in London, bringing to four the number of such cases on record, health officials say.

The rise of penicillin-resistant forms of the virus has been "particularly alarming" worldwide in the past six years, and spectinomycin has been used as the drug of choice in treating such cases, said Dr. Stuart Brown, a medical officer for the national Centers for Disease Control.

Use caution when selecting toys

By BRENDA FINE
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Holidays and children and toys go together. But it's you, the grown-up, who buys those toys. And the care you use in making your selection could be more important than you suspect.

Do you consider the suitability of the gift to the child's stage of development? Do you check for possible hazards, such as sharp edges or long pull-strings? Do you disregard the recommended age printed on the package, assuming that your child is above the national average?

The toy industry adheres to strict safety standards. The Toy Manufacturers of America, a 67-year-old voluntary organization comprising all of the major American toy makers — well over 90 percent of the total — standardizes these regulations and reviews them every five years.

According to Douglas Thomson, (CQ) president of TMA, anyone selecting toys for a young child would do well to follow similar guidelines. Here are danger signs the TMA watches for:

— Small parts: Anything that might accidentally be swallowed by a youngster. The industry uses a "truncated cylinder," an instrument that simulates the size of a young child's throat. Any object that can fit into the cylinder is deemed unsafe. Parents should be alert not only for obvious "swallowable" parts (discs, buttons) but also for unexpected dangers (small wheels that might come loose, button eyes not securely fastened).

— Sharp edges: Manufacturers use special instruments to test for dangerous sharpness. Thomson suggests that the average fingertip can provide adequate safety testing. Edges should be rounded or curved under, smooth and snag-free.

— Sharp points: Same testing as for sharp edges. Be alert for less obvious places such as the ends of an axle on a toy truck.

— Toxology: To assure that no poisonous elements are present, paints may contain no more than 0.06 of lead.

— Flammability: All toy fabrics must meet the same U.S. standards as those for children's clothing.

— Use and misuse testing: Toys are put through simulated playtimes; they are dropped, kicked, thrown and given full child treatment.

As to "misuse," this is an area which cannot be fully anticipated by the manufacturer. This is also the area which seems to generate the majority of those tragic toy accidents we read about.

"Most problems reported involve situations where the parents were taken completely by surprise," Thomson explained. "Misuse means just that — the toy is used as it was never intended to be used. A child rides his scooter into the pool, or out into traffic; a young child gets hold of an older sibling's toy, a toy totally safe for the older child but perilous for the younger. These types of disasters cannot possibly be controlled by the manufacturer."

For parents, child's play is serious work.

What about the infant, the playpen child, the preschooler? Gloria Caranica, toy designer and manager of product design at Fisher Price Toys, specializes in crib and playpen toys. "This is, to me, the best age," she says. "Everything is a learning experience for them. It is the very beginning of play, and we can do so much for them."

Caranica strongly recommends a colorful mobile to hang on the crib as baby's first toy. "The child can't move around much, so his world should be as stimulating as possible. Even moving the mobile to another position on the crib changes the world as he sees it. The next step is a crib gym, most important for helping to develop muscle and eye coordination."

Inappropriate, or even dangerous crib toys, according to Caranica would be long-haired plush animals, or anything with a long ribbon or pull-string that might accidentally wrap around a limb or neck.

There is a free booklet, "The ABC's of Toys," compiled by the TMA, which helps explain toy safety and how to insure safe play. Write to the Toy Manufacturers of America at: 200 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10010. There are also free specialized booklets covering such topics as bedridden children, vacation toys and crib safety.

Learning to operate home computer sometimes difficult

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — First-time buyers of personal computers say that learning how to operate their machines from manuals supplied by the manufacturers is as difficult as trying to put a bicycle together on Christmas Eve. Even the instruction books for such popular machines as Apple or IBM Personal Computer seem to start out with baffling directions for newcomers, such as "boot the DOS disk."

While vendors are hustling to write new manuals, a Mill Valley, Calif., company has hit on what may be an even better idea. Dudkowski-Lynch Associates has developed a 103-minute videotape called "How to Use Your Apple II in Ten Easy Video Lessons."

"Most of it came from our own frustrations in trying to learn how to use the Apple II we bought for our business," explains Ed Dudkowski, a partner in the videotape production company, who says that it took him six months to even want to use the computer after looking at the manuals supplied by Apple. Then he decided to combat his frustration by utilizing his experience in producing training videotapes for educational and industrial clients.

The how-to videotape begins with a section on how computers work and then teaches the user how to put the various pieces of the Apple II system together to make it operate. Instruction is self-paced; users are told to turn off the videocassette at various points to practice what they are taught.

Radio grant

WASHINGTON (AP) — The largest single award from the National Endowment for the Arts for radio production recently was announced by Frank Hodsoll, endowment chairman.

Hodsoll said the $250,000 grant would go to National Public Radio to support "The Sunday Show," the network's five-hour arts and performance magazine.

FABRIC SECRETS

By Betty Martin

Darts allow a flat piece of fabric to conform to the 3-dimensional shape of the body. The placement and length of a dart is crucial to a garment's fit. To accomplish these aspects of a dart successfully, it is important that the marking on the pattern be transferred accurately to the fabric. Whenever possible, use dressmaker's carbon paper. Carefully follow the stitching line of the dart, realizing that a dart is sometimes slightly convex or concave. Lastly, fold the dart in half and be certain that the opposing sides are directly over one another.

LEGGETTS FABRICS has a complete selection of notions for the home sewer so whether you need dressmaker's carbon paper, a tape measure or seam ripper make us your first stop. You'll be amazed at our fantastic selection of patterns from Vogue, Butterick, McCall's and Simplicity and the magnificent array of fabrics we feature. FABRIC TIP: Start stitching a dart at its widest part, the top of the fabric.

Design for Today

by Belle Glaros

When a room is to be demarcated into areas of specific use, care should be taken not to create a confined look. One way to accomplish this is with varying types of floor treatments. Area rugs usually create "islands" of texture upon which furniture groupings can be defined. Wall-to-wall carpeting can achieve the same effect if part of the floor is left uncarpeted. If it is hardwood, the remaining area can be lightly stained or tiled. Similar room division effects can be achieved with wall coverings. Again, care should be taken to produce simple contrasts and not busy competition.

For help in creating these areas, restoring or renovating homes and townhomes into offices and custom designing furniture talk to our decorating at BEVERLY HILLS INTERIORS INC., No. 3 Oakridge Square, 686-9607. FOCUS: Bill Kent
He finds no safety in numbers, location the key to his success

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

In the real estate industry, buyers and sellers are advised to remember three things: location, location, and location.

The same is true in the highly competitive convenience store and gasoline sales businesses, and nobody knows this better than Bill Kent.

He is executive vice president of Kent Oil Company, a Midland-based chain of 11 convenience stores and five lubrication centers, all of which sell gasoline, located throughout the Permian Basin.

"You can no longer afford to buy a secondary location because you're so vulnerable to the guys who buy the primary locations," Kent believes. "It's amazing the number of large chains which operate stores that are losers. That's not our philosophy. We're not into the numbers game."

Kent's major competition comes from convenience stores which in the 1970s changed their original modus operandi to include gasoline sales. Ironically, it was the other way around for Kent Oil. The company started strictly in gasoline sales and later added convenience stores, as the company saw small stores grabbing a bigger share of the gasoline market.

"They started to get into gasoline, and the philosophy was to sell it cheaply and thus, get people into their convenience stores. That obviously hurt us, when 80- to 90 percent of our business was gas. It forced us to diversify."

IN 1975 KENT started building high-volume, self-service gasoline outlets and convenience store units. The company brought in some new people with convenience store experience to supplement its strengths in the gasoline marketing arena.

"The shoe is slowly going on the other foot," explains Kent. "Gas is now a major thing for (the competition). Now, they are more dependent on gasoline than ever — they have to have it. But with us, we don't need gas as much as we used to, because we have added the convenience store concept to our gas business.

"We could see that the convenience store tie-in was the way of the future."

TWO WEEKS AGO, Kent Oil opened a new convenience store/gasoline sales unit at the corner of Midkiff and Cuthbert, one of Midland's highest traffic count locations.

The company normally looks for a maximum five-year payout on any investment, but hopes for a return on new locations as soon as possible, preferably within just a few months, Kent says.

One percent profit on sales would be a very good year in the convenience store/gasoline marketers business, according to Kent. In 1981, the national average was one half of one percent. "It's very unlike other parts of the petroleum industry," he says wryly. "It causes you to be very cost conscious. Such a slim profit margin forces you to be very sensitive."

Industry-wide, the average start-up capital demanded by a typical convenience store/gasoline outlet is about $350,000, including land and inventory.

Kent is always scouting around for raw property, both here and in Odessa, and in the other markets Kent serves (Big Lake, Big Spring, Monahans). It's a tricky thing. Sometimes the location that promises to be the absolute best, is not for sale at any price, but as Kent says, "If we really like a location and can't buy it, we try to lease it if we can."

SO FAR IN 1982, the company has done extensive remodeling in most of its existing outlets, installing new sales counters and other fixtures, but for the most part, Kent believes in a conservative growth policy.

"We have several pieces of property that we own, or are looking at. A lot depends on the economy and the way things develop in Midland — and we're still looking at remodeling existing locations.

"We don't want to outgrow our manpower or our financial resources. We are very conservative financially, and try to do as much as we can with our own money. We are not heavily leveraged, and not so much at the mercy of interest rates."

It was not always so. At one time, Kent Oil operated 75 locations, from Del Rio to Brownfield and from Big Spring to El Paso. The company was formed by Kent's father, E. L. "Buck" Kent, in the mid 1950s, as a wholesaling company throughout West Texas. Kent also purchased Reed Oil Company in Big Spring, the forerunner of Kent Oil Company today.

In 1970, the operation was moved to Midland. Wholesaling and a tire company still operate out of Monahans.

BUT A CORPORATE decision to get rid of low volume outlets was made in the mid-1970s. Kent also sold its refinery in Wickett, Texas in 1976. In addition, there had been a reduction of El Paso outlets from about 12 to a handful. The last El Paso outlets were sold in 1981, largely due to that city's economic instability because of Mexico's economic problems. Gasoline across the border was selling for as little as 49 cents a gallon, and Kent couldn't hope to compete.

"We made the decision that if we were going to spend money, we'd rather do it to build new locations out here. We needed to either get in strongly (in El Paso), or get out. It was a good decision."

Young Kent joined the compnay in 1978, after graduating from college in Arizona. Two older brothers were involved in the Kent companies at one time, but left for ventures on their own. Kent was offered his chance, and decided to take it.

"But I am not here just becasue I'm a Kent," he says. "I was offered this because I was qualified to do the job, and if I were not, I'm sure I would hear about it from my father. He figured he had had his chance, and now I would have mine.

"He has been very supportive. Dad is still active and always will be. He gives me the experience I would not have yet on my own."

THE SENIOR KENT operates the distributing company out of Monahans, while young Kent handles the retail end of things from Midland. The two get along well, and the father-son relationship has not hindered the corporate relationship.

"I think anybody in business is going to have some rough spots, especially in a family-type business, but my relationship with my father is great. He has given me tremendous leeway to make mistakes — and I've made some — and to learn from them. He's not looking over my shoulder, but gives me enough rope to hang myself," Kent says with a laugh.

Still, Kent, who is a black belt in karate and formerly taught the sport and competed in Texas and Arizona, has to keep on his toes. He juggles the concerns of two vastly different economies — groceries and gasoline. In addition, he is executive vice president of Kent Distributing, which wholesales gasoline to Kent Oil stores and to other independent retailers, and of Kent Lubrication Centers, which provide automotive service.

A new wrinkle in the business surfaced this summer when Exxon and some other major oil companies announced they were going to charge their service station operators and oil jobbers (wholesale marketers) a percentage for handling credit card business. To avoid passing that cost on to customers, some companies are instead offering discounts on gasoline sales for cash customers.

"THIS PARTICULAR AREA has been slower in going to cash discounts than other parts of Texas," says Kent. "It hasn't really gotten that bad out here yet. We have 5,000 credit card holders, but we don't intend to offer any discounts for cash."

He is regional director for the Texas Oil Marketers Association, which recently formed its own political action committee (PAC) for the first time.

"There are a lot of potential laws that can affect our business — taxes, oil import fees, state highway taxes," Kent says. The oil marketers' PAC exceeded its first year goal in raising funds, he adds.

Natural gas pricing may come up in lame duck session

By WILLIAM GARLAND

From our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Northeastern congressmen vowed this week to overturn contract provisions that they say are sharply increasing the price of natural gas for consumers in their region.

Members of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition told Charles M. Butler III, chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, that when Congress comes back after Thanksgiving for a lame-duck session, they would push strongly for legislation that would force gas producers to renegotiate some contracts they hold with pipeline companies.

Northeastern congressmen are upset about so-called "take or pay" provisions in many contracts between pipelines and natural gas producers. Pipelines must either take the gas and pay for it, or pay for the gas even if they don't take it.

A spokesman for the coalition, which includes more than 200 members of Congress, predicted that rising gas prices would give momentum to their efforts. The Department of Energy predicted this week that residential users of natural gas will pay an average of 19 percent more to heat their homes this winter than they did last winter.

Texas consumers apparently would be unaffected by the contract changes because most of the contracts involve gas that is sold outside of Texas through interstate pipelines. But Texas gas producers would have to sell gas at lower prices if the northeastern legislators succeed in having the "take of pay" provisions removed.

Some pipelines are carrying gas that was bought at a price higher than the market price because of provisions in the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978. The act allows higher prices for certain categories of gas produced at the wellhead, including gas produced from both very shallow and very deep underground formations.

Because of the "take or pay" provisions in current contracts, those costs are being passed through to consumers.

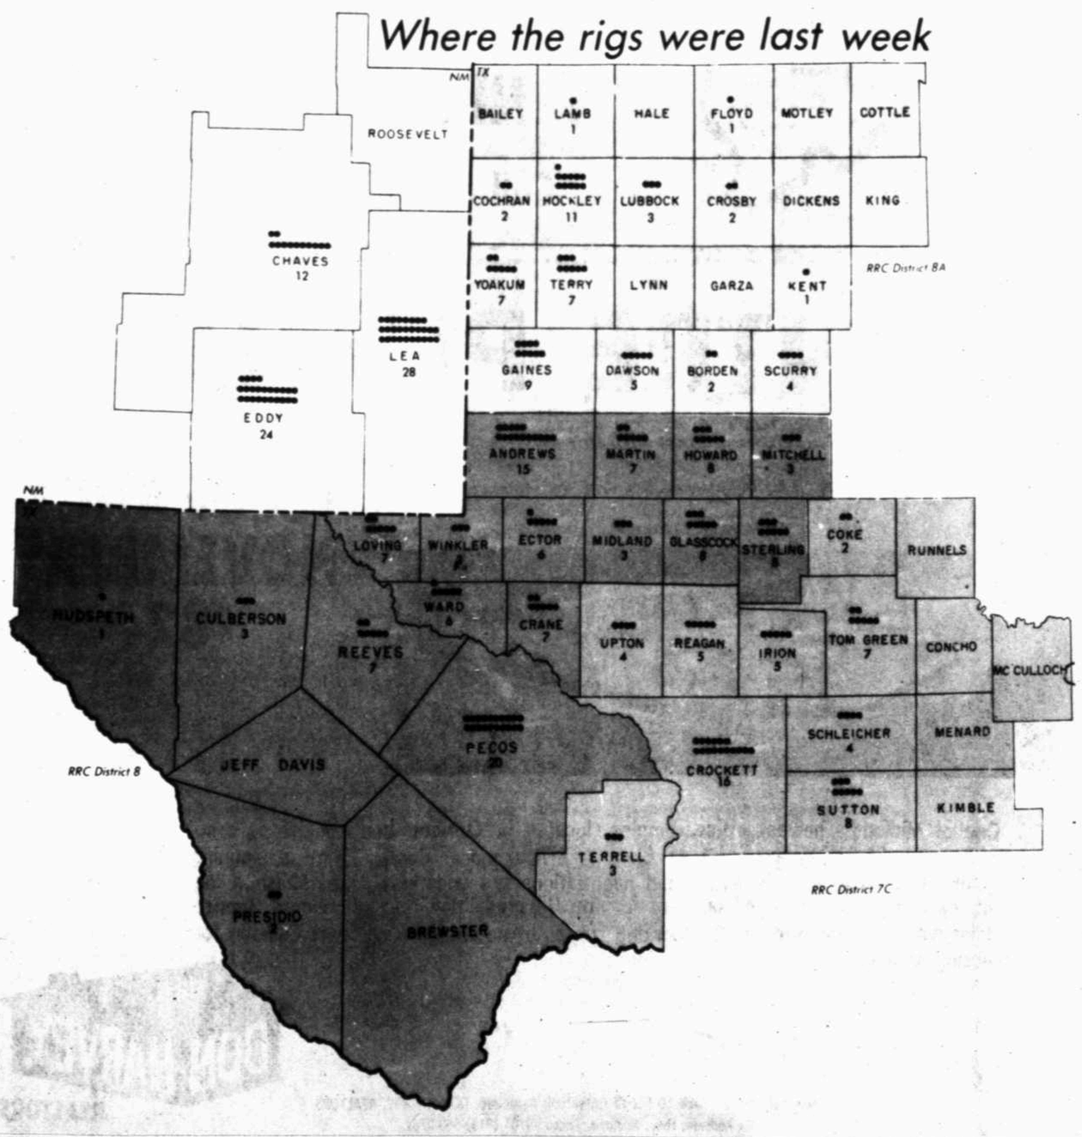
Congressional leaders of the coalition, including chairman Robert W. Edgar, D-Pa., tried to convince Butler that his commission could remedy the contract problems administratively.

Butler disagreed, maintaining that FERC has no authority to alter the contracts. But he told the congressmen that they have the right to force producers and pipelines to renegotiate the contracts.

"We accept this challenge, and will begin immediately to draft such legislation for introduction when Congress returns for its post-election session," the congressmen said in a prepared statement after the meeting.

"FERC must now take the next step and let it be known to pipeline companies and producers alike that contracts that endanger major sections of the country will not be allowed to stand unchallenged," they added.

Where the rigs were last week



The Permian Basin rig count climbed this past week by 20 rigs, from 267 to 287, as of Oct. 1, according to a weekly tally provided by Reed Rock Bit Company.

This compares with 486 rigs making hole in the Basin at the same time a year ago.

The national count as of Sept. 27 was 2,439, down from 2,466 a week earlier and down from 4,309 reported on the same date in 1981.

According to the International Association of Drilling Contractors, this past week there were 771 rigs working in Texas, including 80 in offshore or inland waters, representing a drop from 783 spotted a week earlier, and down from 1,437 a year ago.

Railroad Commission District 3, upper Texas Coast, had the most rigs making hole, 102. In District 8, Far West Texas, which includes Midland and Ector Counties, there were 98 rigs working, said the IADC, compared to 186 a year earlier.

There were 291 in Louisiana, 65 in New Mexico, and 409 in Oklahoma last week. Kansas and California were almost tied, with 120 and 121 rigs making hole, respectively, this past week, according to the IADC.

In Alaska, there were 14 rigs working, versus 20 a year ago. In Wyoming, there were 95, versus 112 the week earlier and 195 during the same week of 1981.

OPEC a pussy-cat group

By STERLING NOEL
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Without the power to fix prices — which have risen continually all these dismal years — the OPEC has declined into a pussy-cat trade group, in the opinion of many experts.

But habit is strong and the 13-nation ex-cartel still acts as though it controls world oil. Thus Sheik Ali Khalifa al-Sabah, Kuwait's oil minister, solemnly announced at an energy conference in London that oil prices should be frozen until 1985 and rise thereafter only to compensate for inflation.

Sheik al-Sabah was echoing the views of Saudi Arabia's oil minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani and the United Arab Emirates' Manei Saeed al-Otaiba, chairman of the OPEC market-monitoring committee.

It is expected this will be the chief order of business at the next OPEC meeting in Vienna on Oct. 28. But the freeze will have as much meaning for the oil-glutted market, say analysts, as the efforts to keep the price at $34 a barrel.

As long as the oil glut lasts — which could be for years — the price will remain below $34, the experts aver. Not only has the demand for oil slipped badly, but other oil producers such as Mexico and Canada are daily adding to the world supply.

The principal problem within the OPEC has been the refusal of countries such as Iran, Libya, Venezuela and Algeria to abide by production quotas, as well as selling their oil for whatever the market will bring. Iran, for instance, has been selling for $26 and $28 a barrel to raise money for its war with Iraq. Prior to the Oct. 28 meeting, a consultative meeting is scheduled for Oct. 18 by Sheik al-Otaiba to discuss "the possibility of turning into an emergency conference empowered to take decisions on price differentials and redistribution of quotas."

At a meeting last month and at other recent conferences, the OPEC failed to reach price and quota accords. The principal division on these questions within the cartel are between Iran, Libya and Algeria on one side, and Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the Arab Emirates on the other.

Analysts say it is essentially a power struggle between the two groups for control of OPEC. Saudi Arabia — the major OPEC oil producer — and Kuwait are continually the targets of Iranian animosity.

Mideast experts point out that Saudi Arabia has been hardest hit by the oil glut, with production cut by 47 percent in the past year to 5.5 million barrels a day from 7.5 million.

The Saudis' reluctance to cut prices has hit their oil income the hardest, all in the interest of preserving the OPEC deal which other members have flouted. For that reason, say the analysts, it is becoming more likely that the $34 benchmark price may unravel. Oil from Libya, Algeria and Nigeria — all better quality than Saudi crude — is selling at $2-$3 below the official Saudi price.

Insurance board approves plans for 'credit pool policy'

AUSTIN — By a two-to-one vote, the State Board of Insurance has approved plans for a "credit pool policy" of insurance for home equity and home improvement loans, a request it has had under consideration since March.

The application was filed on behalf of PMI Insurance Co.

In approving the application, the SBI commented that "as the mortgage and real estate market continues to tighten, all methods of financing are being expanded," with junior liens for financing home equity and home improvements becoming "increasingly important to the real estate market, and are being actively solicited by lenders."

As with other mortgages, lenders resell these loans to the secondary mortgage market to secure funds for new loans, SBI noted, with "pools" of such junior liens being assembled and sold to investors through certificates of participation.

"This pool concept," the board said, "is becoming increasingly important in order to facilitate the flow of funds to lenders for the making of junior lien loans."

An insurance policy, insuring against default and protecting the investor's cash flow, "is necessary to secure a quality rating" from rating houses "to make these securities marketable," SBI commented.

Primary coverage for the junior lien is a condition for payment of losses on any loan which has a loan-to-value ratio in excess of 80 percent at the time of the loan origination.

Also approved by the board, two to one, was a program of home equity/home improvement loan credit insurance.

That program is to insure a lender against loss due to default by a borrower with a second or junior lien mortgage.

Lenders may cover loans for 25 to 100 percent of the amount of the outstanding loan balance.

In dissenting, board member Durwood Manford said he shares "the concern of those who are convinced that private insurers cannot successfully insure the economy."

"Approval of this type of policy," Manford said, "could establish the precedent that would inevitably lead to the image that such private insurance is possible or is a current economic truth."

Attorney General Mark White has been asked to rule on a request by a Seabrook city council member for information on renditions and appraisals of bank stock for banks in Seabrook.

The city attorney asked for the ruling by White, saying other council members (and the city attorney) are "of the opionion that the information...is deemed confidential by law" under the property tax code.

The code makes rendition statements and property reports confidential.

Several banks, in various parts of the state, have filed lawsuits challenging local tax rolls because of the property tax applied to bank stock.

Those lawsuits contend that such a tax is invalid, because bank stock is the only stock taxed by the property tax code–and some also contend that the method used in calculating the value of the stock is invalid because Federal securities held by the banks are used in determining the value of the shares.

That, the banks say, amounts to a tax on government obligations, which is prohibited by Federal law.

The U.S. Supreme Court is consider that latter issue in a lawsuit filed earlier by Texas banks; the banks lost their battle against the tax in State courts.

The State Securities Board reports over $34 billion in securities were registered by the board in the last fiscal year for sale in Texas — with over $20 billion representing money market funds.

issues of stocks, bonds and other securities processed by the board for the year ending Aug. 31 came to $34,810,513,664 — exceeding the previous record year (fiscal 1981) of $28,398,350,901 by more than $6 billion.

The board granted permits for $32,909,396,463 during the fiscal year, with the difference between those processed and the permits granted representing issues either withdrawn or abandoned.

In the final month of the fiscal year, the board approved sale of 177 issues for $1,255,530,066. In its first year of operation fiscal 158, the Board granted $136 million in permits.

Angry brokers trying to push S&Ls out of securities business

By MARTIN BARON
Los Angelese Times-Washington Post
News Service

NEW YORK — To stockbrokers, it was unthinkable that someone would allow the savings and loans into their club. Federal regulators however, opened the door this summer when they allowed S&Ls to offer brokerage services. Now, an angry brokers' trade group is suing to push the S&Ls back out.

Furthermore, the nation's stockbrokers may be more aghast to discover that S&Ls in the brokers' clubhouse are saying the most unkind things about the veteran members.

"By and large, the traditional securities business has abandoned the interests of the average investor," says Dan D. McConnell, 45-year-old chairman of ISFA Corp., the S&L-owned company that is selling a brokerage service known as "Invest" to subscribing institutions. " . . . I think the industry is just loaded with conflicts."

No doubt, McConnell's barbs fit with the new service's strategy: tell the public it isn't getting a very good deal from stockbrokers motivated chiefly by commissions; convince them that S&Ls will supply more objective advice and more satisfying investment performance.

Perhaps more important, McConnell expects the S&L-sponsored brokerage service to attract safety-conscious individuals who have avoided the traditional securities industry.

"A significant segment of the population is intimidated by the brokerage community, intimidated by that commission-driven environment," McConnell says. At the same time, he says, "There's no question that the S&L industry has a very strong franchise with the public. S&Ls are perceived to be trustworthy and well-motivated in the interests of customers."

As some S&Ls begin offering the Invest service soon, McConnell's views about what the public wants and needs will be put to the test. The savings and loan industry's ability to do battle with the big brokerages will also be tested.

Booths offering the Invest service are scheduled to appear by Oct. 12 at four S&Ls, including Los Angeles-based California Federal. Two weeks later those same S&Ls are supposed to have Invest units at an additional 23 branches. Between December and early March next year, McConnell estimates, additional S&Ls will offer the brokerage service at another 100 branches.

McConnell says 440 S&Ls and mutual savings banks have expressed "strong interest" in the service — and more than 150 of them are "virtually certain" they will end up subscribing.

The S&L foray into brokerage via Invest comes with the consent of two regulatory bodies. The associations' chief regulator, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, gave its approval to the plan in early May. The Securities and Exchange Commission then cleared a path for Invest in early July when it vowed not to force each subscribing S&L to register as a securities dealer.

The Securities Industry Association, a trade group for 500 brokerages, has sued to block the approval by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, arguing that it violates an important legal wall separating certain financial activities.

Competing with the big boys of brokerage — Merrill Lynch, E.F. Hutton, Dean Witter Reynolds and the like — is bound to be an uphill battle for Invest. For one thing, ISFA Corp., the holding company that is selling Invest, isn't nearly as large. It will have $12 million in initial capital, put up by the 25 S&Ls and three mutual savings banks that own ISFA.

While that pales by comparision with Merrill Lynch's $1.2 billion in capital, ISFA won't be engaged in activities as far-flung and risky as Merrill Lynch. ISFA's capital seems to compare favorably with the $14 million in capital of a leading discount stock brokerage, Charles Schwab & Co., which the S&L-owned company will more closely resemble.

"Good business sense says you don't capitalize something well in excess of requirements," McConnell says. "That doesn't mean the present sponsoring institutions aren't prepared to put more up, if required."

Invest also will have to overcome investment tradition. People aren't used to visiting their local S&L to trade stocks and bonds. But McConnell contends that Invest can tap a well of public disenchantment with stockbrokers and exploit a reservoir of public faith in S&Ls.

Invest will operate differently from traditional brokerages. Stockbrokers won't be calling customers to pass along their latest wisdom on what to buy. Invest representatives will simply take orders from customers. For customers who want advice, Invest representatives will pass along recommendations from the Value Line Investment Survey, a private New York-based advisory service.

McConnell adds that Invest will have its own research staff that will pass judgment on various Value Line recommendations.

"The philosophy is, unless Value Line likes it, we're not going to like it. But we're going to like some things better than others," he says.

Invest will also sell customers investments in certain mutual fund groups. Among the offerings of those mutual fund groups will be money market funds. "We are including money market funds initially because we think the present public perception is that they're needed, and we're not going to disappoint them," McConnell says. But he predicts that, as S&Ls are allowed to offer more attractive forms of deposit certificates, money funds will lose their public appeal. "If we could phase them out, we'd be happy to do it."

Savings and loans may be new to the brokerage business, but McConnell isn't. After dropping out of high school to play drums and golf, McConnell got into the brokerage business and ultimately became a senior partner in Greenshields & Co., a major Montreal-based investment company.

After 18 years with the organization, McConnell left in 1976 and moved with his family to central Florida where he went into mid-life, semi-retirement. "I'd been working since before I shaved," he says. For the past several months, he has shuttled between his home and Invest's temporary offices in New York. The company will move its headquarters to Tampa, Fla., this month.

Although his experience at Greenshields was mostly in the non-retail investment banking area businesses, McConnell says he had a good view of practices among front-line stockbrokers. "There was a lot that I saw that I didn't like," he says.

Vacation home tax rules restrictive

By Bill Ince

Taxpayers, with more than one residence, one of which is a "vacation home," should be aware of special rules applicable to such property if they plan to claim any deductions other than interest and taxes.

Although more restrictions proposed by the IRS have been tabled by Congress, the rules already in effect are stringent enough to eliminate many deductions. To deduct any depreciation, maintenance, utilities or similar costs, in an amount exceeding rental income, a taxpayer must limit personal use to fourteen days or, if greater, ten percent of the days actually rented at fair market value. For example, if a vacation home was rented for 20 weeks, or less, during the taxable year, personal use would be limited to 14 days if a loss from the property is to be claimed for tax purposes.

If the rental period is greater tha 20 weeks, the personal use may increase above the 14 days. If these guidelines are met, expenses may be deducted to the extent of income. If the property is rented less than 15 days per year, there is no need to declare, any of the rental receipts as income and no expenses are deductible except interest and taxes.

Since many taxpayers with vacation homes find these rules restrictive some suggestions are:

1. Consider the acquisition of a second or even third property since the limitations for personal use apply to each individual property. Total personal use of vacation homes could be increased.
2. Fair market rentals on a property may vary significantly between peak seasons and other times of the year. "Off-season" rental at a reduced rate could increase rental use and, therefore, increase potential personal use for the year.
3. The taxpayer's use of the property, while inspecting, maintaining or repairing it, is not considered personal use. (There are specific rules as to what constitutes a maintenance day.)
4. Consider limiting personal use of the property.

Taxpayers with a vacation home should remember:

1. Rental days mean days in use by others, not days available for rent.
2. These rules apply to all properties which provide sleeping, cooking, and bathroom facilities which can include boats, apartments and hunting trailers.
3. Personal use includes use by family, friends, co-owners or business associates if fair rental is not charged.
4. Sharing arrangements with an associate such that each pays the other fair value for exchange usage have been held unacceptable.
5. Documentation requirements in this area are extensive and the taxpayer bears the burden of proof.

Effective planning may substantially increase the tax benefits of "vacation home" ownership. Increasing rental activity, proper accounting for "maintenance days" and limiting personal use of the property may permit deduction of a taxable loss from its operation where none might otherwise be allowed.

Savings and loans make effort to save All-Savers dollars

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Savings and loan associations are offering free magazine subscriptions, investment hotlines and new accounts — all in an effort to hold onto the billions of dollars in "All-Savers" certificates that started to come due Friday.

In a flurry of letters, advertisements and telephone calls, S&Ls are hawking the accounts and services they offer to try to keep the approximately $15 billion that is maturing in tax-free certificates in October.

S&L officials would like investors to put their money back in All-Savers when they come due, or shift the funds into other types of S&L accounts such as Individual Retirement Accounts, money market certificates or specialized higher-interest accounts.

Robert Bailey, a vice president of National Permanent Federal Savings and Loan Association in Washington, D.C., said the All-Savers money would be "sorely missed" if it was lost to investments such as money market mutual funds.

As a result, he said National Permanent is offering free subscriptions to Fortune or Discover magazines to customers reinvesting their chunk of the total $21 million maturing in All-Savers certificates in October.

Bell Federal Savings and Loan Association in Chicago is pushing a new higher-paying account to holders of All-Savers certificates. Denver's Midland Federal Savings and Loan Association is alerting customers to other investments that provide tax shelter for their dollars, a key feature of the All-Savers certificates.

"Our feeling is that these customers went into the All-Savers certificate because they did want to shelter tax dollars," said Rob Mackintosh, Midland vice president of savings.

The one-year certificates, offered since last Oct. 1, were pushed by the S&L industry as a boon for their financially strapped associations. But the program has fallen far short of the $200 billion to $250 billion that the industry and others had predicted for it. A recent industry study estimated the certificates would attract a total of $71 billion.

The biggest buying spree came last October when both savings and loans and banks took in $31.1 billion, according to James Christian, chief economist for the U.S. League of Savings Associations. Half that money went to S&Ls.

The interest rate on the certificates was high then, reaching 12.61 percent. It's now down to 8.15 percent. Individual taxpayers get a one-time tax exemption of $1,000 for All-Savers interest; $2,000 for a couple.

The program will expire at the end of the year without a congressional extension, which now is considered unlikely.

Some S&Ls have set goals for the amount of money in the certificates they want to hold onto, and some are even talking about getting more by offering better services.

Christian said he doesn't expect "a bloodbath by any means" in the amount of money leaving savings and loans when the certificates mature. He predicts the industry might lose $2 billion of the $15 billion in certificates maturing next month.

He notes that interest rates are down and contends that popular money market mutual funds "are not quite as red hot."

Said Mackintosh: "When investors look around to whatever else is there, (they'll find) not too many things."

For the All-Savers holders who haven't used up their entire interest exclusion, Virginia's Continental Federal Savings and Loan is recommending they extend their certificates to take advantage of the limit.

That's one of the "six great ways to keep that All-Savers investment working hard for you," Continental is telling consumers.

Investment companies have been aggressively advertising their products.

"Now that you've had a one-time taste of tax-free income why don't you go for it all the time?" asks New York's John Nuveen & Co. Inc., in a recent ad recommending tax-free investments it offers.

Trying to compete with those type of investments, Roland Barstow, president of Bell Federal Savings and Loan Associaton in Chicago, is promoting a new account that he says is like a "super passbook" account but really is a retail repurchase agreement. Unlike a regular savings account, under these agreements an individual loans money to a bank or S&L in return for a higher interest rate. They are not federally insured.

Barstow opened the first of Bell's new Flexi-Bell accounts himself and hopes they will attract a large share of the $120 million in All-Savers certificates maturing at his S&L over the next several weeks — and even bring in some new money.

Midland Federal is offering a special tax-deferred annuity plan, with a $2,000 minimum, as a way of holding onto the $19 million in its maturing certificates, Mackintosh said.

He makes a living from other peoples' mistakes

By RON S. HEINZEL
Los angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

For more than 25 years, Murray Garrett capitalized on other people's mistakes — he made pencil erasers.

Generally, if you've seen one pencil eraser you've seen 'em all. But about a year and a half ago Garrett, president of Diener Industries of Chatsworth, Calif., came up with the idea of custom-designed slip-on pencil-top erasers and business has not been the same since.

Diener erasers are fast becoming one of the most popular promotional items in the country. Kentucky Fried Chicken, for example, commissioned Diener to produce miniature rubber busts of Colonel Sanders. McDonald's Corp. had erasers made in the likeness of Ronald McDonald. Goodyear ordered erasers that look like miniature blimps, and tires. Others include pizzas for Shakey's, GMC vans for General Motors and a cow for the American Dairy Association (they sell thousands a month to state dairy associations which use them as giveaways).

The highly detailed miniatures are produced by Diener's sculptor, then molded, using a secret process. Costs range as low as a nickel apiece on volume orders.

An individual with a bankroll as big as his ego could have erasers made in his own likeness to "give out to 50,000 close friends for about $5,000," Garrett says.

California's tourism industry is taking a novel approach to lure more tourists from Europe. It plans to export one of the state's biggest contributions to American culture — the game show.

The visitor and convention bureaus of Los Angeles, Anaheim, San Diego and San Francisco plan to send an industry delegation to England, France and West Germany next Feb. 15 to March 4 to meet with about 1,000 European travel agents.

In the delegation will be Art James, TV game show host for more than 20 years, who will put on a series of game shows, using the European travel planners as contestants. Questions will be based on a packet of information sent in advance which points out California's tourist attractions.

Contestants, who will be selected by drawings, will vie for several prizes, including free trips to California on Trans World Airlines, one of the sponsors.

James, who has hosted such programs as Concentration, the Magnificent Marble Machine, Blank Check and The Joker's Wild, hopes the entertaining and educational format will be successful.

"The game show isn't really foreign to Europe," he says. "Family Feud, for example, is one of the most popular shows on European television."

Many corporations now have exercise facilities on their grounds and encourage executives to maintain a physical fitness program. But what about when the businessmen are on the road?

Some hotels have exercise rooms, but often the facilities are crowded or only open during certain hours. Gym-Mate Corp. of Winter Park, Fla., believes it has the answer.

Gym-Mate produces a device which consists of a padded chair, pedals and pulleys, which is designed to allow the user to perform several different types of exercise. Exercise machines are not new, but what Gym-Mate does with them is.

The company has worked out a deal with several hotels — including the Halloran House in New York, the Admiral Benbow in Atlanta and the Shamrock Hilton in Houston — to install Gym-Mate equipment in guestrooms.

The guests pay an additional $2.50 a day for the equipment, but they enjoy the convenience of working out in their own room on their own schedule. Gym-mate and the hotel split the fee down the middle.

Based on the growing number of hotels installing the equipmeent, a Gym-Mate spokesman says, "executives obviously feel it's worth the extra charge in order to maintain their physical fitness program."

HOUSTON (SWN) — Tenneco Oil Exploration and Production is donating to the state of Florida a retired offshore oil and natural gas production platform for use as an artificial reef for the benefit of fishing.

It is the first use of a complete platform as an artificial reef in United States coastal waters and believed to be the first such use in the world.

The 500-ton structure will be submerged in about 175 feet of water 22 miles south-southeast of Pensacola, September 29, after a 275-mile barge journey from its original Gulf of Mexico location — about 75 miles south of Morgan City, La.

The decision to use the structure as an artificial reef, rather than cutting it up for scrap metal, was made after engineers at Tenneco's offshore division in Lafayette, La., learned of recent studies that show that the physical characteristics of platforms should provide Superior conditions for marine life production.

"This platform, with so many others, attracted a great variety of marine life during its 16 years off Louisiana. We expect it to be equally effective as a magnet for food and sport fish off Pensacola," explained Dr. Philip Oxley, president of Tenneco Oil Exploration and Production.

Important characteristics of the platform, common to most offshore structures, include:

—High profile, which attracts mid-water as well as bottom-water fish. —Large surface area that encourages attachment by crustaceans.

—Design that provides numerous hiding and resting areas for various species.

—Orientation for fish that seek solid objects. —Openess that permits water circulation and easy fish mobility inside.

The structure was cut into two sections at its original site for easier handling. The larger portion, essentially the legs, will be placed on its side at the reef site. The deck will rest upright on the sea floor nearby.

At its widest point, the 130-foot-long jacket will extend upward about 90 feet, leaving about 85 feet clearance between the uppermost part and the water surface. the deck is 72.5 feet by 50 feet and is about 26 feet tall.

The location is ideal, Oxley said, not only because of the features of the seabed but also because of the site's proximity to shore, which will permit access by relatively small sportfishing vessels. Oxley said the company hopes to place additional structures there in the future.

During the structure's 14-year production life, its two wells produced more than seven billion cubic feet of natural gas and more than 2.6 million barrels of oil.

It was erected on ship shoal block 198 by McDermott Inc., New Orleans, under contract to Tenneco Oil, in mid-1962 at a cost of $281,000. To fabricate and install the strucutre now would cost about $5,000,000, Tenneco said.

Austin firm to make tactical communications gear

AUSTIN (SWN) — Tracor Inc. has received an $11 million order against a $55.4 million requirements contract for the Tracor rugged tactical telecommunications terminals and data storage units, Hardy M. Caton, group vice president for Tracor aerospace, announced today.

Caton said the contract, awarded by the Air Force Sacramento Air Logistics Command, McClellan AFB, Sacramento, Calif., is for the Tracor Tactical Record Traffic Terminal (TRTT), a microprocessor-based termanal, and for the Tracor Magnetic Tape Memory Unit, an external data storage unit. Both are used by the military in air-borne command posts, missile launch control centers, ground mobile communications facilities, and other applications where operating environments are rugged.

Pickens named top CEO

AMARILLO (SWN) — T. Boone Pickens, Jr., president and chairman of the board of directors, Mesa Petroleum Co., has been named the outstanding chief executive officer in the oil producers industry for 1982 by the Wall Street Transcript. This is the second consecutive year that the publication has named Pickens the top CEO for the industry.

The publication makes its selection based on the extent to which the chief executive officer has taken proper steps to enhance the overall value of the commpany for the benefit of the stockholders. The final selection results from 40-60 interviews conducted by the newspaper with industry executives, leading financial analysts, money managers, trade journalists and members of the academic community.

In making the award, The Transcript said, "Always alert to opportunities for improving the profits of Mesa shareholders (as exemplified by his innovative use of royalty trusts), Pickens was particularly astute in the last year in recognizing that the extra-ordinary inflation in energy prices had peaked — at least for the time being — and reducing his exploration budget and exposure to marginal areas. Pickens was equally astute in opposing Cities Service when both companies made tender offers for each other's stock. Pickens has also developed a staff of professionals with an outstanding record in its basic business of exploration and development."

Mesa Petroleum Co., with headquarters in Amarillo, Texas, is engaged in the exploration for and the production of oil and natural gas in the United States, including offshore areas of Louisiana and Texas, and Australia.

Offshore gas discovery reported

HOUSTON (SWN) — Anadarko Production Company, exploration subsidiary of Panhandle Eastern Corporation, has announced an indicated significant natural gas discovery on Block 622 Matagorda Island area, federal waters offshore Texas.

The well, the OCS-G-5000 No. 1, encountered significant thicknesses of pay in three zones below 11,500 feet. Further testing will fully evaluate the zones. Casing has been set to a depth of 13,800 feet, and an additional 1,500 feet of drilling is planned.

The discovery constitutes a major find in a new fault block extension to the Matagorda Island Block 623 Field discovered by Anadarko in early 1980. Subsequently, Amoco Production Company, as operator, has recorded two additional significant gas discoveries on Block 623, which adjoins Block 622 to the west. Additional wells will further define the size of the field.

Anadarko and its subsidiary, Pan Eastern Exploration Company, hold a combined 37.5 percent interest in Block 622, a 5,760-acre tract acquired in the February 1982 federal offshore lease sale for a bonus bid of $46.8 million. Amoco, as operator, also holds a 37.5 percent interest, and Champlin Petroleum Company has the remaining 25

Lovelady completes Morrow well

Ike Lovelady, Inc. announced recently the completion of the Sam Snoddy Federal Well No. 1 in Lea County, New Mexico as a producer from the Morrow formation. The well was tested for a calculated absolute open flow potential of 4,369,000 cubic feet of gas per day with a gas condensate ratio of 16.4 barrels per million cubic feet. Production was at a daily rate of 2,125,000 cubic feet through a 14/64 choke with 2,778 pound flowing tubing pressure from perforations from 13,002 to 13,110 feet.

Ike Lovelady, Inc. has a 34.375 percent working interest in the well and the 640 acre tract on which the well is situated. Other participants are Dow Chemical Company, Lario Oil and Gas Company, Spectrum & Energy Corporation, Dico 82-1, Ltd., Wilbros Energy, and Mustang Mud Company.

The Company also announced that significant shows of hydrocarbons were present in the lower Bone Springs zone at a depth of 10,500 feet but the zone has not been tested.

Ike Lovelady, Inc. headquartered in Midland, is engaged in the exploration. development and production of natural resources, primarily oil and gas in the Permian Basin of West Texas and eastern New Mexico.

Two holes at University of Houston play role in exploration

On any given day a visitor to the University of Houston may walk right over two holes in the ground that play an important role in international oil exploration. Without these holes, oil exploration equipment would become less accurate and be of less use in finding oil.

Called well logging standard pits, the holes are used by oil exploration and well logging firms to calibrate equipment. The two pits, built by the American Petroleum Institute (API) to stimulate drill holes, are used to establish world standards for gamma ray and neutron well logging equipment.

The pits are part of the Well Logging Laboratory, a member of the UH Allied Geophysical laboratories. The well logging facility is supported by a group of 16 oil exploration firms.

Well logging is a critical step in the exploration and development of an oil well, according to Dr. Liang C. Shen, professor of electrical engineering and director of the well Logging Lab. After the initial exploratory well reaches the target depth, the drill pipe is pulled up and a sensitive instrument package is lowered down the drill hole. This package emits energy waves that probe the surrounding rock layers, or strata.

"The wave echoes provide clues on the location, amount, and recoverability of any oil in the surrounding strata," Shen says.

There is a great need for accuracy in well logging, according to Dr. Robert Desbrandes, visiting professor of electrical engineering and an expert on well logging.

"We plugged wells 20 years ago because we could not accurately evaluate the amount and recoverability of oil in the wells," Desbrandes says. "Now, with expensive secondary recovery techniques such as steam or CO-2 injectuion, oil firms need an accurate account of recoverable oil."

The precise calibration of well logging equipment, as well as advances in electronics and well logging technology, are giving companies a more precise picture of oil wells, according to Desbrandes.

The Well Logging Lab may expand its calibration facilities in the next year with the addition of three more well logging pits, according to Shen. The UH Board of Regents has already approved the expansion and the decision to build the three pits now lies with the API, Shen says.

Down steel market causes hard times for local businesses

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

The depressed markets for American automobiles, heavy construction and steel are also affecting the scrap iron and steel market. Scrap prices have collapsed this year, down to about $50 per ton for top grades, almost half the price of a year ago. Industry volume has fallen to a 20-year low nationwide.

"When the economy catches cold, the steel industry gets pneumonia — and the scrap processors become comatose," according to James F. Anderton, president of the 1,500-member Institute of Scrap Iron and Steel.

Local dealers report volume and prices are down considerably; some say the current market situation is the worst they've seen since they've been operating in Midland-Odessa.

Many are just barely holding on.

"This is the worst it's ever been, period," said Bobby Mullins, owner of Tall City Iron & Metal. "Any time another person goes down, that brings the axe that much closer to me."

Mullins employed about 20 people but has cut the business back to the bare bones, with just his wife and son, and a daughter who works part-time.

Just last week, he had to let go "the two best men I ever had. They had been with me for more than eight years. It's more than sad."

In addition, Mullins recently cut off the electricity to his shredder. The cost of operation has become much higher than the depressed price he can get for scrap iron. He has only one major market left in Texas, but he wouldn't reveal where.

"For a long time, things weren't as bad out here as they were in other parts of the country," said Don Brookshire, "but with the slowdown in the oil industry, it's finally putting the pinch on us." He has been involved in the scrap iron and steel market for 17 years in Midland with Don's Metals.

Local prices are down to between $10 and $20 per ton, on the average, he said. Many local people with scrap are not selling it, but are holding on, because prices are so low.

For the first six months of 1982, total demand nationally — domestic and export — fell to 19.8 million tons, down 27 percent fron the same period in 1981, according to the Institute.

June scrap purchases hit a 19-year monthly low when only 2.3 million tons were required by domestic companies.

In the Permian Basin, the problem is compounded by the oil industry slowdown. Many local dealers get their scrap from welders or drilling contractors, and pass it along to oil country tubular or equipment manufacturers. With fewer drilling rigs working, many welders have shut down altogether, drying up a source.

Two of the main buyers for scrap iron from the Basin — Lone Star Steel and Mexico — have fallen by the economic wayside, making worse an already depressed market.

Lone Star's East Texas steel mill shut down and almost 4,000 workers were laid off a few weeks ago, sending ripples throughout the Texas economy, affecting local scrap dealers especially. T & N LoneStar Warehouse Company in Midland was hit hard, as were all the other Texas subsidiaries of Lone Star Steel.

T & N's manager reported business was very slow and that there had been some layoffs. He declined to elaborate.

Exports to Mexico have also dried up, Mullins said. Since the devaluation of the peso and nationalization of its banks, Mexico has been in economic turmoil.

"Prices are lower now than they've been in 17 years," lamented Brookshire. "They're down 60-, maybe 70 percent. We are operating on 1982 costs in about a 1965 market. We're all kind of in the same boat; we're kind of at a standstill."

Don's Metals' is still buying non-ferrous products such as copper, brass and old radiators, and the aluminum can recycling business is holding its own, he said.

He has had to lay off five or six workers. Across the nation, about one third of the normal workforce has been laid off by scrap processors.

"The scrap industry is in lockstep with the steel industry," Anderton said recently. "There are very few scrap processors making any profit at all this year."

He said he didn't expect things to pick up until the auto, steel and construction industries began a recovery, probably in the fourth quarter of 1982 or early in 1983.

Brookshire said he thought a recovery would not occur until next spring.

"Until all the other industries go back to work — automotive, truck and farm equipment manufacturers, the construction business, and steel — the scrap industry doesn't have a prayer," Mullins said.

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

Scientists around the nation believe that a new solar cell development produced by RCA Corp. holds great promise for future solar-powered utility plants.

The significance of the new material is that it is far cheaper than the use of cyrstalline silicon, now used in such solar applications. For example, Arco Solar, a division of Los Angeles' Atlantic Richfield, is building a photovoltaic central power plant for Southern California Edison using older, more expensive materials.

RCA believes that it can get the cost of the amorphous silicon material down to the point that it would be about 80 percent cheaper than the crystalline material.

Hunsberger explained that by using amorphous silicon, photovoltaic power systems could delivery electricity at "$1 or slightly under per peak watt. However, other processes will cost $7 to $10 per peak watt.

"It's analogous to the early days of the auto. Some 200 manufacturers sold cars for $2,000 apiece, but only the rich could afford them. Ford started selling three cars for $1,000 and started a revolution. We have such a possibility here. I will predict that within 10 years, total dollar volume of the photovoltaic power producing industry will exceed the entire auto industry."

But processes costing $7 to $10 per peak watt haven't a chance, he said.

Two domestic companies, RCA and Michigan's ECD (Energy Conversion Devices), and several Japanese companies, are working with amorphous silicon.

Dr. Arthur H. Firest%xer, head of process and applications research at RCA Laboratories in Princeton, N.J., said that RCA's amorphous silicon process has been able to convert 10 percent of the sun's energy into electricity.

RCA's 10 percent efficiency level compares with the previous high of 8.5 percent efficiency produced by one of the Japanese companies, he said.

"Within five to eight years, we expect to have a product that can be sold. We are working to line up a joint venture company to share in this technology right now," said Firester.

If a power plant could be built with RCA's amorphous silicon that could deliver electricity for $1 to $1.50 per peak watt, "It would be cheaper than oil or natural gas for a utility, but it wouldn't be cheaper than coal," said Firester. He said that the cost of a crystalline process under today's technology would be $8 to $12 a peak watt versus the potential $1 to $1.50 for amorphous silicon.

In the Sun Belt, such systems would be even more efficient, said Firester.

He believes that as RCA perfects the process, the efficiency rate can climb up to 15 percent — enhancing the economic advantage.

"In four to five years, we could be selling small amounts. In eight years, we could be selling products that are producing hundreds of megawatts of electricity. By 1995, it should be thousands of megawatts," said Firester.

Public Service Electric & Gas Co. of Newark, N.J., is working with RCA on the project.

"We are looking at the possible application of the product in the late 1990s," said Wei Shing Ku, manager of electric system technology for the utility. If RCA gets the cost down to $1 to $1.50 per peak watt, "We certainly would consider it," he said — cautioning that such an advance is probably 10 years away.

"RCA's approach is one of several that are front-runners. I think that a process would have to achieve 15 percent efficiency to be cost-effective," said Edgar DeMeo, manager of solar power system programs at the Electric Power Research Institute, Palo Alto, Calif.

"We hope that within a decade there will be a process approved that achieves the hoped-for high potential. Up to now, there have been no major barriers. All of us are cautiously optimistic," he said.

One-minute effort by managers can make big difference

By ZENIA CLEIGH
Copley News Service

How would you like to dramatically reduce absenteeism, turnover and mistakes within your company? Does increasing productivity, profits and your own sense of prosperity without any new capital investment sound good?

It's all possible, say two authors of a short, easy-to-read book called "The One Minute Manager," to be published in September by William Morrow and Co., Inc.

All you have to do is realize this: "People who feel good about themselves produce good results." Instead of catching your employees doing something wrong, you've got to help them reach their full potential by "catching them doing something right."

According to writer Spencer Johnson, who co-authored the book with management consultant Kenneth Blanchard, many U.S. companies are suffering from low productivity simply because they do not know how to manage their employees well.

Most American business managers use the authoritarian school of management which Johnson and Blanchard call the "leave alone-zap" style. As Johnson puts it: "You leave (employees) alone when they're doing it right and if they do it wrong, you let them hear about it."

The trouble is, says Johnson, this doesn't work. Instead of encouraging productivity, this attitude actually tends to immobilize people, causing three different reactions:

— The employee does as little as possible. He decides that if he doesn't move, he can't get hit.

— The employee learns to avoid the punisher, to stay out of the boss' way.

The authors recommend three practices, each of which takes no more than a minute to do, and each of which should be practiced consistently. They are: the "one-minute goal setting," the "one-minute praising," and the "one-minute reprimand."

First, it is important to let your employees know exactly what you expect of them. This is the function of the one-minute goal setting. To do this, agree on your goals. Then, have them write out each of their goals on a single sheet of paper using less than 250 words. Only write down key goals.

Employees should be encouraged to concentrate only on the goals that will make them a winner. Forget about the rest. They should re-read each goal, then take a minute every day to compare their performance and behavior with their goals. They should look at their appointments calendar. See if those appointments really match their goals. If they don't, cancel them.

The second step to learn — the one Johnson considers most vital — is the one-minute praising. This means to watch closely so you can catch your employees doing something right. Then, immediately go up and tell them what they did and how you feel about it.

That is the first half of one-minute praising. Next, said Johnson, pause for a couple of seconds, allowing the person to actually feel how good you feel. This is important. Otherwise, the praising is just an intellectual observation. Then you remind the person of how valuable they are: "You're a good woman (or a good man) and I'm glad you're here."

If the employee is new and still learning, it is important to catch them doing something "approximately right." With this person, you always stress what they do right, and only mention what they do wrong.

According to Johnson, who came up with the idea for the book while learning how to manage his two sons, Cameron, 12, and Emerson, 6, this technique also works wonders with children. But you must do it honestly. It doesn't work to tell someone who is doing a poor job that he is doing a good one.

Practice these one-minute praisings faithfully and Johnson promises your employee will work for you as hard as he or she can. "What we've found is that people who feel good about themselves do produce good results," he said.

The final step to master is the one-minute reprimand. It is crucial to remember that you use this technique only on the employee who possesses the skills to do a good job, but who has a bad attitude. Never use it on beginners. It will only immobilize them.

If you're not sure whether employee error is due to poor skills or bad attitude, take them back to the one-minute goal setting and show them again what good performance looks like. Then, if this doesn't work, reprimand them privately. If that doesn't work, do it publicly.

According to Johnson, it is this ability to reprimand which makes your praises "damn credible."

The one-minute reprimand would sound like this: "I asked you for the report to be turned in on Thursday and you turned it in Friday afternoon. I had an important meeting Friday morning for which I needed your report. You didn't turn it in and I looked bad. This is the second time you've done that and I want you to know it makes me angry."

You can become as angry as you want during this part of the reprimand, Johnson said, as long as you remember that you are expressing anger at the person's behavior, not at the person's worth as a human being.

Then, keep quiet for a few seconds to let the emotions sink in. (At that stage, the employee resents you terribly.) Then begin on the second half, which reminds your employees that they are OK; it's just their behavior which is not OK.

You would go on to say: "And you know what? You're better than that. You're good." Then give them a specific example of something they did well. "Three weeks ago, you turned in your report early and it was well written. That's what you're capable of. There are times when you are one of our very best employees.

The State Securities Board has approved the application of the company to offer $5 million in securities for sale in Texas, Commissioner Richard D. Latham reports. The application was one of 13 permitted, for a total of $29.8 million approved by the board during the week ending Sept. 18.

PARKER DRILLING

TULSA — The company has announced that due to the overall slowdown in the energy industry, certain of the company's customers are having cash flow problems, resulting in a substantial increase in Parker's receivables. The announcement was made by R. Michael Still, senior vice president and chief financial officer of the company.

The receivables are attributable to three oil and gas companies operating in the Anadarko basin. At fiscal year-end, Aug. 31, 1982, thses companies accounted for $19.9 milion in late receivables. As a result of the growth in receivables, Parker Drilling has reduced the number of rigs it is operating for these customers.

The company plans to reserve $4 million against fiscal 1982 earnings to cover this exposure to possible loss.

HNG

HOUSTON — The Board of Directors has reported unaudited consolidated earnings of $6.46 per common share for gthe fiscal year ended July 31, 1982, representing a 9 percent increase over fiscal 1981.

Angelo for Senate

While The Reporter-Telegram has not been in total agreement on all issues with Ernest Angelo, he is the obvious choice in the race for the state senatorial post in the 25th District.

We believe he embodies the conservatism and dedication to purpose of the majority of voters in this large, sprawling section of West Texas.

One point needs to be made clear immediately. Both Angelo and his democratic opponent, Bill Sims of San Angelo, expressed concern in sessions with The Reporter-Telegram editorial board over those publications in the state that have tried to paint the 25th District race as one pitting farming and ranching, and oil interests against each other. We agree with both that such factionalizing is detrimental to the district and, if continued, will only make the job of the next senator from this district a more difficult one. And in that case the people are the losers.

The only issue is which candidate is most qualified to best serve the interests of all the people of this district — agriculture and ranching, business, petroleum and the other diverse interests that make the 25th unique. We think Angelo is well qualified in that respect.

His family background is steeped in agriculture and he has long been involved with the oil industry as an independent petroleum engineer. Consequently he is equally adept at fielding agricultural issues and those relating to the oil industry.

During four terms as Midland's mayor, Angelo was above-board, candid and accessible, attributes that won him the respect of the Tall City's working press. Far-reaching political contacts he developed while in that office and since — serving in a number of high-level capacities in the campaign of Ronald Reagan and on the Republican National Committee — would well serve both him and the people of the 25th District because it is in Washington, D.C., where most of the decisions are reached affecting agriculture and oil. The value of his contacts in the nation's capital to the people of the 25th District should not be underestimated.

That Angelo is respected at other levels of government is without question. He has been offered several major political and party offices. That is a tribute to his abilities.

But Angelo is not merely a political machine. On the contrary, he is a man who is cognizant of the vital issues facing the 25th District. He recognizes the concern most people attach to the burgeoning cost of government, the problem of rising crime and the need for quality education. He realizes water is a major need in the state and must be addressed in the near future.

Ernest Angelo is a fair and qualified leader who, we believe, would well serve the interests of the 25th State Senatorial District — ALL the interests.

Life without football

Sunday's just aren't what they used to be. The strike by National Football League players is taking its toll on hard-core fans of the pigskin, no doubt, but consider some of the other "victims."

A prolonged strike by professional football players also will have an adverse economic impact — on owners, players, television stations, bookies, bettors and bar owners. But the more serious effects are cultural. All the armchair quarterbacks who ritually hibernate weekends in the den, ignoring household chores for beer, junk-food and the NFL, face quite an adjustment.

America has survived worse tragedies than a respite from Howard Cosell. Last year, summer appeared to be ruined by labor disorders in America's "National Pastime." Instead of baseball, however, more people paid to see movies like "Raiders of the Lost Ark." Hollywood no longer ignores the summer movie market.

Somehow, with so many hundreds of millions of dollars at stake, it's hard to imagine that owners and players won't agree to a settlement before the Super Bowl XVII hype begins. Owners, for one thing, won't be getting the strike insurance benefits their baseball counterparts enjoyed. So stadium rentals, ticket refunds and other expenses must come out of their pockets. Both sides also know their financial loss is bound to benefit someone else, including owners and players of the upstart United States Football League with its unorthodox March-July season.

In the meantime, weekend widows have their husbands back. National productivity on Mondays won't be affected by arguments over the previous day's game. And such pre-TV football pastimes as a walk in the fresh fall air may enjoy a resurgence of popularity.

Another View:

Reforming immigration

Time is running short for the House of Representatives to act on the most comprehensive reform of this country's immigration laws that has been attempted in the last 30 years.

Unless the leadership of the House, particularly on the Democratic side, pushes the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1982 more energetically, the bill could be dead for this session of Congress. The House Judiciary Committee approved the bill last week, and it is now pending before the Rules Committee, which can either bottle it up or pass it to the House floor for a final vote before Congress recesses for the November elections.

If the immigration-reform bill dies, it will have to be reintroduced before the next session of Congress. That would mean a repetition of the long, arduous effort that its co-authors, Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., and Rep. Romano L. Mazzoli, D-Ky., have put out to get it this far.

Even worse, it would mean that this country's current immigration system (which is hardly a system at all, considering the slowness with which it works and the ease with which it is circumvented) would continue to operate as it does now for many more months, and possibly years. That is clearly unacceptable, because the present system causes the exploitation of illegal immigrants and breeds contempt for laws that are not enforced.

The Simpson-Mazzoli bill can be criticized on many points. It should provide a more generous amnesty for illegal immigrants who have established themselves in the United States, it should be more specific on setting up a national worker-identity system to help enforce sanctions against employers who hire illegal workers, and it should include a reorganization of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

But the bill's two authors frankly concede that it is not perfect. They argue that their bill represents a compromise, and that it is the best-balanced, most humane reform bill possible at this time. They say that its critics should give it a chance to work, and we agree.

House leaders, especially Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., and Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Tex., should push the Simpson-Mazzoli bill to the House floor this week. To delay any more could be fatal.

To have come this close to finally acting on a complex problem that has troubled public opinion for so many years and do nothing would be a dereliction of duty by Congress. If nothing is done now, this country's immigration problems will not go away, but only get worse.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Jobless rate threatens SS trust fund

WASHINGTON — The Social Security Old Age and Survivors Trust Fund is hemorrhaging badly, and it will be up to the lame-duck session of Congress to staunch the flow of money or provide a transfusion. If Congress fails to act, the retirement fund could run out of money as early as next summer.

Jack Anderson

One major cause of this imminent crisis, of course, is continuing high unemployment. The more workers there are without jobs, the less the trust fund collects in payroll contributions from both employers and employees.

The arithmetic is simple but staggering. Every time a worker is laid off, $125 a month in combined Social Security taxes is lost. This means that every 1 percent increase in unemployment costs the system $3.4 billion annually in payroll taxes. But the number of beneficiaries remains just as high.

Last year, President Reagan was quickly and soundly defeated when he proposed cutting benefits as a means of keeping Social Security afloat. He deftly defused the volatile issue by appointing a bipartisan committee to study ways of solving the retirement fund's money problems.

The National Commission on Social Security Reform is composed of 15 experts from Congress and private industry. It is to issue its final report after next month's elections.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., is a commission member. It is a measure of his concern at the fast-approaching trust-fund crunch that he led the move in Congress for the lame-duck session.

All this doesn't necessarily mean the Social Security system is a terminal case. Robert J. Myers, the reform commission's executive director, noted that although repeated public-opinion polls in recent years have shown an erosion of confidence in the system, "in my opinion, people are badly misinformed on this subject."

In a memo to the commission members, Myers commented, "The financing situation is not such that complete bankruptcy and dissolution of the system are imminent."

What is clearly imminent is action on the reform commission's recommendations during the lame-duck session. Unlike other panels of experts, this commission contains a number of influential members of Congress. They include Dole, Sens. William Armstrong, R-Colo., and Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., and Reps. Barber Conable, R-N.Y., Bill Archer, R-Texas, and Claude Pepper, D-Fla.

"It would seem to me that the (commission's) report will have more impact because of the financial crisis and because the members of Congress on the commission will play a role in implementing the findings," Myers told my associate Tony Capaccio.

Exactly what action can be expected from the lame-duck session? Here are the options:

— Payroll tax increases scheduled to take effect in 1985, 1986 and 1990 could be accelerated to start next year or in 1984 at the latest. According to the Congressional Budget Office, advancing the 1985-86 increases to 1984 would bring in $17 billion of additional revenue over a three-year period.

Quick action will be needed on this option or the advances will be technically impossible to arrange. But this would not cure Social Security's fiscal ills singlehandedly. In a memo to the commissioners, Myers warned: "If the only action taken were to advance the tax rate to 1983 (which would be difficult both legislatively and administratively, let alone politically), this would not be sufficient to solve the financing problem."

— "Interfund" borrowing will have to be continued by congressional authority to keep the retirement fund going. This stopgap measure, which involves borrowing from the separate, solvent Disability and Medicare trust funds, was begun this year.

— The option with the greatest potential for saving — and probably the greatest potential for political mayhem — is to tinker with the annual cost-of-living allowance (COLA).

Since 1972, the COLA benefit increases have been based on the Consumer Price Index. Unfortunately, in recent years, inflation, as measured by the price index, has outstripped wage increases. Combined with growing unemployment, this situation exacerbates the spread between income from payroll taxes and outgo in the form of COLA-enhanced benefits. In 1980, for example, the price index and COLA both rose 14.3 percent, yet real wages had declined by 4 percent and unemployment jumped from 5.8 to 7 percent.

Eliminating COLA increases entirely through 1985 would save the most money — some $20 billion, according to the Congressional Budget Office. It could be politically impossible, however.

Putting a cap of 4 percent on any given COLA increase would save $7 billion through 1985. Delaying the increase from July to October each year would save about the same amount.

Another suggestion is to base the cost-of-living increase on wage growth instead of prices, and knock off 1.5 percent for good measure. This would save only about $2 billion through 1985.

Whatever tampering Congress may decide to do with COLA, it will have to act in the lame-duck session to make it administratively feasible. If action were to be delayed until next spring, Myers said, "Social Security's computers would go up in flames."

— A final option the lame-duck session can follow is to extend Social Security coverage to all federal, state and local government employees. According to the Congressional Budget Office, this would pump $5.7 billion in payroll taxes into the retirement trust fund by 1985.

Such a move is vehemently opposed by public-employee unions and would have been politically suicidal before the November elections. But lame ducks will have nothing more to fear from the electorate, while members of Congress who survive November will have anywhere from two to six years to mend their fences.

GEORGE F. WILL

Howard Denis: A tuna-fish legislator

BETHESDA, Md. — Many Americans believe that on an average day, the average congressman joins a lobbyist for what is, between them, a six-martini lunch in furtherance of some conspiracy against the average American.

George F. Will

If the average American thinks legislators should lead lives of travail, asceticism and insecurity, the average American should rejoice about the kind of days that Howard Denis lives. Welcome to the world of the state legislator: one-Coke lunches, heavy on tunafish.

His 1974 Chevrolet has gone 96,000 miles and acquired that many dents and scratches carrying him to and from Annapolis and around his surburban Washington district. The district contains 56,506 registered voters. Two years ago he won by 211 votes out of 26,905 cast. Before his two-year campaign is over he will have knocked on about 30,000 doors. In his six years as a state senator he has been bitten by five dogs, threatened with a shotgun, and had his literature thrown in his face.

Politicians know better than to wantonly aggravate the electorate, so they smile until their cheeks ache, especially during the cruelest month — October. About now, a candidate feels that he or she is a toy in the hands of Fate — a fragile toy in the hands of an ill-behaved Fate that should be sent to its room without dinner. Denis's salary as senator ($18,500) is a lot less than the fees (he's a lawyer) he must pass up for the pleasure of campaigning.

He looks 42, which he is. He should look dreadful, but doesn't. You would, if you were a Republican running in a district liberally stocked with federal workers who were not generally Republicans even before the Reagan administration arrived with its "RIF" (reduction-in-force) program for slimming the government. There are just 7 Republicans among Maryland's 47 senators. The ratio is even worse in the House of Delegates, where only 15 of the 141 delegates are Republicans.

Denis's campaign will spend about $20,000, most of it for mailings. Madeleine Will, who is what Boss Tweed would have been if he had really meant business, lobbies for the Maryland Association of Retarded Citizens and has held a fund-raiser for Denis, who has been helpful to her cause.

He distributes a four-page newspaper listing numerous achievements, such as his support for community placements for the retarded, and better street lights to combat crime at the University of Maryland. He stresses the common issues of state government: education, the struggle with the big city — in this case, Baltimore — over funds. He also stresses seniority. Such is the wear-and-tear of the legislator's life, if elected to a third term he will be among the top ten senators in seniority.

Thomas Jefferson's tombstone lists his three proudest achievements: author of the Declaration of Independence and Virginia's statute for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia. Denis's tombstone can announce:

Here sleeps the author of the truck cover bill.

Maryland truckers are not required to cover cargoes such as gravel, to the detriment of Maryland windshields. The truckers have an argument (costs) and so does Denis (other costs, such as for windshields), and of such arguments the fabric of politics is woven.

Denis's chores are not contemptible for being of less than Jeffersonian grandeur. Whose chores are consistently grand? Anyway, this nation can not do without the profession of state legislator, which is more than can be said, of say, the columnist's profession.

Maybe it is because of the proximity of his district to the nation's capital, but Denis gets questioned about the Middle East as well as about Maryland. Many people are, to put it politely, vague about what state legislators are. They are the infantry lieutenants of American government. Many more Americans are reverent about states' rights than are ready to join, or support, or even notice the infantry.

Between the policeman on the corner and the president on television, not much of government is tangible, concrete, even visible. But the quality of roads, schools, parks, prisons — among other things — depend on state government, where the ratio of work required to prestige received is awfully high.

When night spreads its mantle over America, when the nation puts its feet up and loosens its belt a notch, the nation can take its ease, and can take many good things for granted, in part because thousands of persons like Denis are putting their blistered feet in hot solutions of Epsom salts. Morning comes early for democracy's foot soldiers.

ART BUCHWALD

VR 'futures' could snatch your cash!

If you are wondering why the economy is so sluggish, listen to my tale.

I called a video cassette store the other day and inquired about the price of a recorder. The man said $689, but the offer was only good until Oct. 15.

Art Buchwald

"What happens then?" I wanted to know.

"What do you mean?"

"What happens on Oct. 15? Will you refuse to sell me the recorder after that date?"

"No, but we may refuse to sell it to you at that price."

"What price will you sell it to me for?"

"I can't say now. But the $689 is a special introductory offer, and only people who take advantage of it before the 15th will benefit by it."

"Is there a possibility that after Oct. 15 the price of your recorder could even be less than $689?"

"Oh, I hardly think so. We wouldn't sell it for less or no one would take advantage of our special sale."

"Then what you are telling me is that $689 will be your rock bottom price for the rest of the year?"

"I didn't say that, sir. It is quite possible that if the recorders don't move during our introductory sale we will have to resort to some form of rebate. For example, we would mark them up to $800 and then offer our customers a $200 rebate, so in effect you would be paying only $600 for one. But that offer would be good only until Thanksgiving."

"So if I don't buy the recorder before the Oct. 15 deadline I have a chance of getting it later $89 cheaper."

"That's a definite possibility."

"What happens when Thanksgiving rolls around?"

"So that means the recorder would cost me $800."

"Of course not. By this time we go into our Thanksgiving Day weekend sales and we would knock $250 off it and price it at $550."

"That better than the Oct. 15 bonanza and even better than the rebate price."

"Yes, but it will only be advertised at this price for three days. Then it will go back to $699."

"Why is that?"

"Because 25 percent of our video recorder sales take place before Christmas, and there is no reason to have a sale at that time. So you could save $10 if you bought it before October 15."

"What happens after Christmas?"

"Then we'll have our post-Christmas sales and mark everything down 25 percent."

"Including the video recorders?"

"Especially video recorders. They are much too expensive to keep in inventory."

"Then that would be the best time to buy one."

"Not necessarily. We always have a warehouse sale after our post-Christmas sales in January. I wouldn't be surprised if we advertised them for $450."

"Perhaps my best bet is to wait until then."

"You could do that, or hold off until George Washington's Birthday when we give away two for the price of one."

"That seems like a good deal. There is no sense jumping into something until you people make it a loss leader."

"Of course you're always taking the chance the Japanese will raise the price of their video recorders at any moment, and then the October special of $689 will seem like a bargain."

"That's a possibility, but when you're in the video recorder futures game, you have to be prepared to lose your shirt."

"Can I assume that you don't want the video recorder before Oct. 15?"

"I think I'll pass for now. Tell me your story on television sets."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On October 3, 1941, Germany's Adolf Hitler announced that the Soviet Union had been defeated in World War II and never would rise again.

On this date:

—In 1935, Italian forces invaded Ethiopia.

—In 1966, the British colony of Basutoland became the independent African nation of Lesotho.

Calls for election law reform making seasonal appearance

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Not surprisingly, there's a lot of talk about election law reforms in the wake of the flap over Secretary of State David Dean's release, then recall, of lists of possible convicted felons on the voter rolls.

Dean says he was just attempting to do his job of protecting the voter rolls by eliminating convicted felons.

State Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle, Sherman, has said he thinks it was all a Republican plot to try to intimidate voters who may have been arrested for any reason from participating in the elections.

State Republican Party Chairman Chet Upham, Mineral Wells, has said he thinks it was just an attempt by the State's chief election officer to help county officials purge the rolls and to do their jobs better.

Admittedly, convicted felons aren't likely to be a major voting block in the upcoming election (and one wonders whether they would support Gov. Bill Clements for his law and order legislation or Attorney General Mark White for his defense of the Texas prison system).

One might also wonder, based on turnouts so far this year, whether there will be any major voting blocks of any kind.

Voters seem to have been staying away from the polls in record numbers — the May 1 primary saw 24 percent of the registered voters go to the polls, and the only thing that can be said in praise of that is that the turnout was better for many local elections. (Politically sensitive Austin managed to turn two percent of its eligible voters out for a recent bingo election).

Part of the problem, says Rep. Gerald Hill, D-Austin, chairman of the House Election Committee, may be that there are too many elections.

His committee, he notes, is looking at ways to change that, and the effort appears to have bipartisan support.

"What we are talking about," Hill says, "is standardizing the existing dates for holding elections, rather than having special elections in special districts, with separate dates for school districts, city councils, metropolitan transit authorities, bingo, water districts and the like."

Instead, Hill says, elections would be on one of four days to be set by the Legislature.

That would "drastically cut the cost" of conducting the elections, Hill argues, "and in cutting the number of separate elections, you would — we feel — improve the voter turnout."

The committee also is looking at getting voters to register in the first place.

because they're afraid they'll be called for jury duty — since the voter registration rolls are used to call jury panels.

In view of that, Dean has suggested that perhaps some other means of calling jurors be considered.

Hill says he, too, has received calls from some people who indicated that they hadn't registered to vote because they didn't want to be called for jury duty.

Hill thinks that matter does need to be looked at, noting that the problem may be particularly pronounced among persons paid hourly wages.

That matter may come in for some arguments by lawmakers on philosophical grounds, but that's another issue for another day.

An issue that's almost sure to come in for argument is the idea of "unified polling locations."

That, Hill hastens to clarify, doesn't mean a unitary primary such as Dean has been talking about.

Dean's suggestion, made earlier this year, was to consider placing all the candidates on one ballot, and allowing voters to cross over between Democrats and Republican candidates (such a plan is used in Louisiana).

Hill says the committee's idea is to have a single polling location, where voters would say what ballot (or ballots) they wanted.

Also being considered is shifting the primary dates from May to late July or early August — an issue which has generated controversy several times before.

And then, Hill says, "I'm sure we will have extensive debate on the non-partisan election of judges."

"If we can arrive at the answers on all of those," Hill comments, "then we can start working on coming up with a revised version of the election code."

"I'd say," he comments wryly, "we have enough to keep us busy."

SPEAKING OUT

Family violence touches us all

By JOAN PELKEY

Joan Pelkey has been a resident of Midland for four years. She began her association with the Center For Battered Women as a volunteer. She is now acting director in the interim period a permanent director is voted on.

According to FBI statistics every 18 seconds in this country a woman is the victim of an assault in her own home. Here in the Permian Basin alone one out of every three women is a victim of physical abuse by her spouse. Wife abuse and child abuse are termed family violence. If we view the term family in the broader social spectrum and not just the individual unit, then it is a violence done to all of us.

At the Permian Basin Center For Battered Women and their children, our goal is to end the violence in the individual family unit so that it will strengthen the larger social family.

The center is based on the non-violent philosophy that the best way to stop a fight is to walk away from it. So we at the center offer shelter to women and their children who are victims of abuse in their own homes. We give them a safe place to go in a life-threatening situation — a place out of the storm where they can re-evaluate their lives, examine their options and get the emotional support they need so desperately. The center has a 24-hour hotline that can be used to cry for help or just to talk. We have a capacity to shelter 35 women and their children.

The Texas Department of Human Resources reported in a July 14 Senate hearing that 1,477 persons in our state are being turned away from shelters each month because of lack of space. The average stay at a shelter is 30 days, but can be extended. A woman uses her time at a shelter receiving counseling for herself, and her husband, if the latter seeks help, or in finding employment and housing to start a new life on her own. But for many of the women coming to our shelter, starting a new life often means beginning from nothing. It is not uncommon for a woman to come to our shelter with nothing but the clothes on her back. She has been forced to flee her home and often cannot return to remove her things without endangering her life.

The shelter assists the women with housing, food, clothing and emergency transportation. We also refer them to other agencies that will aide them with legal assistance and job training. But the most important functions of shelters such as the Permian Basin Center are to offer women in life-threatening situations a safe place to go and to give them the emotional support they need to feel good about themselves again.

The shelter is not just for women: Our concern extends to their children as well. The most frightening aspect of family violence is that it runs in cycles and is passed down to the next generation. Often abused children grow up to be abusers themselves or to find themselves trapped in the same situation mother was in. The children who come through our shelter are sometimes physically abused, but always they are the victims of emotional abuse. Children learn through example and if the only example of an adult relationship they have seen is Daddy hitting Mommy, then that is the pattern they will follow in their own lives.

Is family violence on the rise? According to the Senate Committee on Human Resources in 10 major urban areas in Texas, 70 percent of the police calls were related to family violence. But because of a lack of legislation the court system is unable to prosecute family violence assaults with any severity. Penalties for assaults within the family are often less severe than assaults by strangers. The police in our community have been supportive of the center, but unless they are backed up by a strong judicial system and clear cut laws, there is a limit to what aide they can offer a woman caught in domestic violence.

The main resource for the Permian Basin Center For Battered Women is you, the community. We need not only your donations of money and staples but your time and concern as well. We, the community, need to show women and children who are victims of family violence that they are not alone, that someone does care.

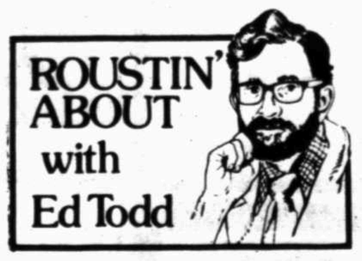
Paranoia a phenomenon of our lives and times



Most everybody is touched by paranoia in degrees which are as burdensome as lead balloons or as flighty as down from a duck's underbelly.

It's a phenomenon of the age of computers, mass production, foul air, impure water, indiscreet language, electronic bugging devices and nuclear bombs and warheads which, like chemical and biological weapons, threaten to leave the world a wasteland.

Who knows what to expect?

You may open a bottle to find relief from stress and anxiety and the next moment find yourself chilled on the mortician's marble slab. It's horrific what the evil-minded and non-caring "they" can do to the worthy, deserving but suspecting "us."

You climb into your car, turn the ignition on and don't know if the engine will run or explode. They may be after you.

You open a jar of peanut butter, spread the creamed nuts on bread and bite into a pebble.

You lie helplessly on the operating table, the surgeon starts to hum the romantic tune "Call me irresponsible, call me unreliable" and you wonder why you didn't take better care of yourself.

You read the skull-and-crossbones labels on containers of modern chemicals which were devised to make life more comfortable and less pesty and wonder when Murphy's Law will come into play. You may never know when a stealthy poison gets mixed in with the talc and the dust of death pervades the refuge that is your home.

The people aboard the Maine, the Titanic, the Hindenburg, the Andrea Doria, or the DC-10 over Chicago didn't expect their journey to end abruptly, but it did.

When you moisten an envelope or a stamp, you expect something to stick; when it doesn't, you're disturbed.

When you light up a cigarette and puff from here to the beginning of eternity, you shouldn't be surprised if the tobacco really curses you. But you don't have to be paranoid about that; that's reality.

Don't be paranoid about driving, flying or sailing under the influence of booze, dope, or high or low emotions. The law of averages says your apprehensions eventually will be justified.

The simple rule is to be cautious, consider the probabilities, fill up the boilers, pour on the steam and blast ahead.

To heck with paranoia. If they get you, they get you.

Airport fears

To The Editor:

In August, 1979, after an "experimental" aircraft crashed a few blocks from my home after "accidently" taking off from Midland Air Park (while "practicing taxiing"), I wrote a letter to Mayor Thane Akins and our city council. My concern for safety around Air Park was shared by only one member of the council. Carroll Thomas said that he had been trying for over four years to get the council to agree to move Midland Air Park.

A resolution to keep Air Park at its present location was voted on at a council meeting the following week. This meeting received little publicity and as a result the relocation of Air Park had no support at the meeting. Not only was a resolution passed to continue Air Park in is present location, but our mayor and all but Mr. Thomas voted to confirm that location for 20 years.

Both Mayor Akins and Wilson Banks offered the simplistic rhetoric that Air Park was there first and I should have built elsewhere if it concerned me. I guess this automatically justified jeopardizing lives in our community rather than inconveniencing those who use the facility. Mayor Akins added that he was equally certain, as Wilson Banks was, that Air Park was safe in its present location and would stay there if he had anything to say bout it. Mayor Akins also pointed out to me that he is a pilot and it was convenient to him and other private plane owners in Midland.

Two plane crashes later, both men maintain Air Park's present location is safe and "viable." However misguided they are in this thought, I do hope they are accurate in predicting that a major effort to relocate the Air Park probably will resurface. Mayor Akins was quoted after Friday's crash that "Anytime you have an accident that will promote someone's case, they will use it." Is there something wrong with this? As well organized as the Air Park proponents are, it will take the voices of many in the community along with supportive editorials like that in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram to convince our mayor and city council to address themselves to this dangerous situation we live with every day. As many people have echoed: "Everybody has just been waiting for it to happen." It seems everyone has feared it eventually except Mayor Akins and Aviation Director Wilson Banks. But, as Mr. Banks was quoted, "If it's going to happen, it's going to happen," so maybe he did expect it after all.

The excuse that Air Park was there first is tunnel vision and doesn't solve a dangerous situation. The apprehension of losing federal funds is ridiculous. Few if any people are suggesting closing this valuable facility; only moving it to a location away from the growth pattern of a burgeoning city. If our mayor and city councilmen continue their jaded and biased support of this obvious danger in our community, maybe the voters can help them see the light in our next elections.

Business of bias

To The Editor:

This letter may not make your column. Your excuse may be we had too many to publish or it arrived too late. But if it does not appear it means only to me that you are as biased on your letter's to the editor column as you are or seem to be on the asphalt plant.

You as a newspaper and the only one in town have a responsibility to your readers to present facts, not to take a stand with one side or the other on any issue. I was driving the truck on Saturday, Sept. 25, when a man fired a gun in my direction. I place the blame for this act on irresponsible and unfavorable press coverage of the plant.

Midlanders are busy people. They do not have the time to check out and drive by every new business that tries to open. So they have only their newspaper and their television coverage to keep them abreast of a situation. And you, I feel, have fallen short in your duty as a paper to serve both sides.

The same people who are objecting to this asphalt plant are the people who knowingly bought their land and built their homes within a stones's throw of a concrete plant. The same people are opposing annexation yet without it they lose the right to join hands with the city against the plant. They simply cannot have it both ways. They have now posted "no trucks" signs on roads where tank, pipe, concrete and, yes, dump trucks must run.

For God's sake think about this. No one in this town or county could live in a home without the trucks. We haul your dirt, your lumber, your bricks, and, yes, we haul your asphalt for your drives and your roads. These things were not flown in and dropped down to your builder. You have not one house or one street that was built without a dirty old truck hauling your material.

The asphalt plant is not an eyesore. It poses no danger as a threat to health. To talk of dust settling on trees, grass or shrubs is too ridiculous to consider. We have sandstorms here that move El Paso to Midland, every Texan knows that.

So let each of us look for the real motive in this fight against the asphalt plant. Is it another realtor or builder who has matched minds with one of the owners of the plant and lost and cannot take defeat? Or is it another company that is moving behind the scene that is worried about competing with a new company? Or is it a group who object to men who look ahead to the future and betterment of Midland by finding a need for a service and trying to fill it?

I think we need honest answers. And, yes, I do live in the same area. I am glad to see the plant going up as all working people should be and would be if all facts are fairly presented to them through news coverage.

Bus 'service'

To The Editor:

As a new resident of Midland, I've had lots of new experiences in the last six weeks. I'm a senior citizen, a widow, and enjoy working part-time. Riding the MidTran bus to and from work is something I'd never done before.

The general public probably doesn't realize how many little "extras" the MidTran drivers do for riders, such as helping older or handicapped people on and off the bus, carrying packages and taking time to learn names and get to know people.

With the world so full of so many unkind things, it is refreshing to see kindnesses performed by people who care about other people!

To The Editor:

About the first of this year, I went to the American Legion to play bingo — I had not been there in about a year. I wanted to see my old friends and visit with them. I was very disappointed to see a sign on the door which read "no bingo until further notice." Later I called and they said they were getting a petition signed and should be open in May, something was going on in Austin about changing laws on bingo.

Today, Sept. 24, another disappointment that made my blood boil — Page 1 of your newspaper "VFW RAIDED," etc. From Page 4A, I quote, "It's a no-win situation. If we don't enforce the law, somebody is after us; if we do enforce it, somebody is after us." I QUOTE, "Since we were not given a chance to vote on the bingo law change in Austin, I DECLARE that this raid is illegal."

I am a veteran of World War II and the Korean War. I am 63 years of age, a senior accountant and work for a living. I sign off, leaving this thought with the people: Will the $1,200 taken in the raid still go to charitable organizations?

Hopper's fan

To The Editor:

Hats off to school board member Gary Hopper from an irate rural parent. Although he is not alone in his efforts to deal with the moronic busing situation, this fellow is tops and his methods have been swift and effective.

Not to be forgotten are the school principals, I guess, who have covered the bases more than once, at their own expense I'm sure. Know you are loved.

Side effects

To The Editor:

It was a very tragic thing we had happen at Warwick Apartments this last Friday. I cannot get over the way the people have acted during this ordeal.

I live at the complex and the tourists made it so hard on us due to their wanting to see everything and be noisy. They jammed traffic, got in the way, took all the parking spots of people who lived here and tried to get home and check their belongings.

It's pretty bad when the National Guard had to be called in to control the people who did not live here. We could not even let the children out to play due to the traffic situation.

Granted, it was the first major accident in Midland but you need to have consideration for the firemen, policemen, etc., who are trying to help. Everyone knows you are not to follow fire trucks or any emergency vehicle. I bet there were 1,000 people there watching and cars parked blocks away just to see the tragedy. They just sat there and stared at the people who had lost partial or everything, pointing fingers and gabbing. Do you realize how they felt?

Saturday was just as bad, couldn't park again, traffic horrible. They even went as far as trying to loot stuff away during the night.

Please try and be a little more considerate next time and just be thankful it wasn't you.

Bell boosters

To The Editor:

I am writing in behalf of the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library to thank the employees of American Airlines in Midand/Odessa, Dallas/Ft. Worth, and Washington, D.C. This past weekend Don Bradshaw and I, as representatives of the Haley Library, took the Alamo Bell to Washington, D.C., to participate in the School Prayer Day Rally.

American Airlines donated a seat for the Alamo Bell to and from Washington, D.C. At every stop during the trip there were American Airlines employees welcoming us and helping us with the bell. We could not have had better care, and we truly appreciate it. It was a wonderful opportunity to be able to take the Alamo Bell to our nation's capitol, and American Airlines helped make this possible. Our thanks also go to Jack McAdams at the Midland Regional Airport who arranged everything for us.

So fortunate

To The Editor:

Recently, my husband was brought to the Allison Cancer Center with terminal cancer. We were met by a group of very caring nurses and doctors. And although the doctors told us they could not cure him, they would do everything they could to make his days comfortable. This was done.

The nurses on 2-East were precious to us, and in the next four weeks became our friends. We will never forget them.

Midland is so fortunate to have such facilities as the center and MMH. We are fortunate to have such service so near. This is just an expression of our appreciation.

Television voice

To The Editor:

Your reporter, Vince Giorgi, has done a fine job of clarifying the tangle of issues involved in the recent threat to Midland's continued cable TV reception of PBS programming from Channel 13 in Dallas. The technical and financial problems were impressive, but I did not think there were so overwhelming as to bring all discussion to an end without further search for options.

I feel strongly that Midlanders are entitled to a thorough public hearing before any steps that might be taken, now or in the future, to terminate such an important service. Giorgi's series of articles will help guarantee that many more voices and opinions will be heard.

To the Editor:

I recently received a form from the Reporter-Telegram's "Bureau of Accuracy" soliciting my comments concerning recent articles in the newspaper addressing the City Council's actions in directing that an ordinance be prepared to once again designate a five-block section of Cuthbert Street for two-way traffic. The articles appeared in the September 29 and 30 editions of the Reporter-Telegram and were written by Lana Cunningham. I have chosen to respond to the inquiry with this "letter to the editor.

In my judgment, the articles did not fairly reflect the Council's careful consideration of the question and its seriousconcern for the best interests of most of the citizens of Midland. As a member of the Council, I am particularly sensitive to the content of the stories, because I believe they were intended to create the impression that my votes were cast for my personal business interests. Even more distressing to me is my concern that the articles were intended to leave the reader with the impression that the Council as a whole was indulging in some sort of impropriety rather than responding to the needs of the people of Midland.

First, let me assure the citizenry of Midland that my votes addressing the traffic patterns on Cuthbert Street have been dictated by what I believe to be the best interests of the some eighty thousand citizens of Midland — not just the desires of the residents along the five-block section of Cuthbert Street. For instance, I am concerned with the problems of the residents of Kansas and Storey Streets, the problems of the residents in the vicinity of Cowden Park, the problems with traffic control at the intersection of Garfield and Cuthbert, the problems to be dealt with if Michigan and Louisiana Streets are to be one-way to the Andrews Highway, and the problems of traffic flow around Memorial Stadium. Considering all these problems, and the input and recommendations of the city staff, I wrestled with this problem and cast my votes. But, with absolute certainty, my votes were not cast for the financial interest of Jesse Hatfield.

Secondly, Tom Sloan, Mayor Akins, and my other colleagues on the Council are dedicated, hard-working, honest public servants. Their efforts with regard to Cuthbert Street are typical of the Council's commitment to act in the best interest of all the citizens of this community. Sometimes these actions cause unfortunate allegations, discontent among some of the people, and, recently, newspaper articles which, in my judgment, are less than constructive.

One June 11, 1982, an editorial in the Reporter-Telegram addressed the difficulty in designating one-way streets and observed: "Sometimes it's difficult to please all involved parties. Sometimes it's downright impossible. In those instances a governmental unit has an obligation and a duty to take the appropriate action that will benefit most of the citizenry." It is my deep and sincere belief that the Council's recent action on Cuthbert Street acknowledged such an obligation and duty.

I do not fault the residents who live on the involved section of Cuthbert Street for their concerns. I know they cherish their homes and their quality of life. However, the Council must weigh all the facts and each councilman must take the action he believes is in the best interest of all of the people. In making this decision, right or wrong, I am sure each councilman acted in a manner that he felt, in his mind and in his heart, was good for this town.

I recognize that as a public officeholder, my public actions are open to criticism and careful public scrutiny. I simply wonder whether these two Reporter-Telegram articles were authored to fairly, honestly and impartially inform the public, or to perpetuate and even create conflict, for reasons other than the public good.

"When you consider the distinctive architectural styling and the custom features that Sagewood has incorporated into each condominium, add to that the enjoyment of professionally maintained landscaped grounds, you begin to see the winning combination that has produced such a great interest in Sagewood," Petrucelli continued. "Standard appliances in our homes, for example, include a microwave and self-cleaning oven, refrigerator with ice-maker, dishwasher, and disposal."

Five custom floorplans begin with a one bedroom/one bath design and run upwards in size to a two bedroom/two and one-half bath studio plan, and each home features a woodburning fireplace, stylish French doors, and full size washer/dryer connections. RRC chief says change is turning natural gas market inside out

HOUSTON — Railroad Commission Chairman Jim Nugent described today's distorted natural gas market as "turning itself inside out with changing production, distribution and marketing conditions" in remarks to oil and gas industry representatives here.

Chairman Nugent and Commissioners Mack Wallace and Buddy Temple were in Houston to conduct the Commission's monthly statewide oil and gas hearing.

"Today we have gas surpluses, both interstate and intrastate, starkly reduced takes from producing wells and new wells awaiting connections, prices bumping the ceiling, conversions to alternate fuels, pipelines marketing out, take-or-pay obligations accruing and a host of other happenings foreign to us just a year ago," Nugent said.

But Nugent cautioned the audience of oilmen that the natural gas excesses causing the problems do not indicate increasing gas production. "Our ability to produce is declining, not increasing," he said. Commission statistics show the average annual production of gas wells in Texas is less than half of what it was in 1972 and total delivery capacity of those wells has dropped by three billion cubic feet per day since February of 1977.

Nugent attributed the current excess gas delivery capability to reduced demand brought about by the economic recession, fuel switching, and conservation by gas consumers. That surplus, he said, poses big problems for producers.

"Many producing companies have already closed their doors," said Nugent, "Many more will do so as reduced gas takes curtail the cash flow needed to service debt and maintain operations. Over 40 percent of the nation's drilling rigs have been stacked and budgets for drilling gas wells have been reduced by 50 to 80 percent."

Producers aren't the only ones being hurt. According to Nugent, pipelines are facing severe problems, too. In the interstate market, take-or-pay clauses in gas contracts have forced some pipelines to shut in cheap gas sources to honor obligations on expensive gas. He said the irony of that situation was brought about by the artificial pricing categories created by the federal Natural Gas Policy Act.

Nugent said Railroad Commission rules have prevented such inequities from happening in Texas because they require the reduced natural gas demand to be spread equitably among wells and fields. As interstate pipelines scramble to find markets for their gas, however, new problems have arisen, he said.

Under approvals granted by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, interstate pipelines are seeking off-system sales to customers traditionally served by intrastate pipelines. Nugent summarized a recent hearing called by the Commission to examine the impact of off-system sales in Texas by saying, "it seems reasonably clear that unrestrained 'dumping' of interstate gas into a Texas market with surpluses of its own only transfers take-or-pay liabilities from them to us and aggravates the problem of supplies already shut in."

Looking into the future, Nugent told the industry representatives that the Railroad Commission is studying problems "from the drill bit to the burner tip" and expects to make constructive recommendations and adjustments.

He called upon Congress to decontrol natural gas which would help producers readily seek gas, help pipelines compete fairly for gas without federally maintained disadvantages, and help consumers benefit from the cheapest and best fuels in the marketplace.

"Senseless regulations restraining initiative and flexibility, distorting the market, and especially those operating to give competitive advantage to one group over another, must be eliminated," Nugent said.

The Railroad Commission recently set the Texas oil production rate for October 1982 at the market demand factor of 100 percent for the 68th month in a row and the 124th time since the Commission first went to the ceiling level in April 1972.

Chairman Jim Nugent and Commissioners Mack Wallace and Buddy Temple directed the continuance of the maximum statewide allowable after receiving and reviewing purchaser nominations for Texas oil in October totaling 2,459,543 barrels per day, a decrease of 5,009 barrels daily when compared with September 1982 buyer requests. October 1981 nominations totaled 2,509,332 barrels daily.

Next month's permissible rate of output is calculated to average 2,918,542 b/d with actual production estimated at 2.395 million b/d. The maximum allowable applies to all but 10 fields in Texas that are assigned lower legal rates of flow for conservation purposes. Actual production in October 1981 was 2,428,172 barrels daily.

Nugent reported that October 1982 nominations for the purchase of Texas gas totaled 18,844,872 Mcf/d (thousand cubic feet per day). Gas nominations for September amounted to 21,484,229 Mcf/d. October 1981 gas nominations totaled 24,823,936 Mcf/d.

The next statewide oil and gas hearing will be held Wednesday, Oct. 20, at 9 a.m. in San Antonio at the El Tropicana.

AUSTIN — Railroad Commission Chairman Jim Nugent announced that Texas oil and gas wells produced 491,085,900 Mcf of gas in June 1982, down 11.3 percent from field runs a year earlier.

Marketed gas production totaled 405,388,346 Mcf and reflected a 13.36 percent decrease from the June volume. Marketed production is the total gas to transmission lines, carbon black and plant fuel and lease use.

Gas exported from Texas in June totaled 219,201,749 Mcf. Exports of Texas-produced gas in June totaled 159,899,551 Mcf, and reflected a 16.96 percent decrease from the year-earlier month.

In May 1982, Texas wells produced 498,341,510 Mcf of gas. Marketed gas production in May totaled 404,422,197 Mcf. May exports of Texas-produced gas totaled 244,352,185 Mcf.

Through the first six months of this year, Texas produced 3,077,643,721 Mcf of gas. For the same period, marketed gas production totaled 2,576,791,044 Mcf.

State leases in bays, inlets and the Gulf of Mexico produced 84,202 barrels of crude oil during July 1982, in contrast to 88,960 barrels in the same month of 1981 and 81,421 barrels in June 1982, according to Railraod Commission Chairman Jim Nugent. Through the first seven months of this year, state leases produced 554,147 barrels of crude oil offshore.

Gas well gas production from state lease amounted to 17,866,554 Mcf in July against 20,072,450 Mcf a year earlier and 16,001,319 Mcf in June of this year. Total gas well gas production offshore from state leases was 137,589,728 Mcf through July.

Casnghead gas production totaled 237,241 Mcf in July against 286,829 Mcf in the same month of 1981 and 285,575 Mcf in June. That makes 1,616,600 Mcf through the first seven months of 1982.

Condensate production from state leases amounted to 54,906 barrels in July, down from 66,166 barrels a year earlier and up from 44,442 barrels in June. Through July, state offshore leases produced 437,833 barrels of condensate.

In July, offshore crude production was about .11 percent of total estimated crude production in Texas. Offshore gas well gas production was approximately five percent of the state total.

Railroad Commission Chairman Jim Nugent announced that 12 permits to operate new pipelines in Texas were granted by the RRC in August.

Through the first eight months of this year, the Commission has issued 114 permits to operate new lines. For the same period last year, 113 permits were approved.

Seven of the permits in August were for gathering pipelines, and five were for trunk transmission lines. Gathering lines bring oil and gas from production leases, while a trunk transmission line is a larger diameter line into which smaller lines connect.

In August, three permits were granted for lines in Southeast Texas, two each in East Texas, deep South Texas and the Refugio area, and one each in east Central Texas, West Central Texas and the San Antonio area.

Gathering lines approved: Labrador Energy Inc., Houston, Anderson County; Energy Development Corp., Houston, Shelby County; H&M Intrastate Gas Transmission Inc., Houston, Calhoun County; Endevco Pipeline Co., Dallas, (two lines - one in Montgomery County and one in Henderson County); Strigine Gas Co., Houston, Coleman County; and Daniel Oil Co., Houston, Fort Bend County.

Trunk transmission lines approved: Liberty Natural Gas Co., Dallas, Goliad County; Esperanza Transmission Co., Corpus Christi, (two lines - one in Wharton County and one in Jim Wells County); Hajecate Oil Co., Houston, Zavala County; Paisano Transmission Co., George West, Nueces County.

Railroad Commission Chairman Jim Nugent announced that 64 refineries in Texas processed 129,598,172 barrels of crude oil and hydrocarbon blends during June 1982. Through the first six months of 1982, Texas refineries ran 745,784,397 barrels.

June's volume compares with 128,346,360 barrels in the same month a year ago, the Commission's Oil and Gas Division reported in its monthly recapitulation of Texas refinery operations. Inputs of crude oil and blends totaled 134,376,115 barrels in May 1982.

Texas refineries ran 100,884,869 barrels of crude oil in June compared to 103,751,644 barrels in June 1981 and 103,589,243 barrels in May 1982.

Products manufactured in June 1982 totaled 132,906,431 barrels, up from 128,075,331 barrels in the same month the previous year, and down from the 134,781,561 barrels in May 1982.

June 1982 manufacture of motor gasoline totaled 59,107,381 barrels, compared to 42,285,443 barrels in the year-earlier month and 58,958,782 barrels in May 1982.

Texas refineries manufactured 12,115,502 barrels of home heating oil in June 1982 - an increase of 3,792,005 barrels from the year-earlier volume. May 1982 output was 10,394,508 barrels.

Jim Morrow, a 15-year employee of the Railroad Commission, has been appointed director of the RRC's Oil and Gas Division, according to the Commission Chairman Jim Nugent.

Morrow was director of the Commission's Districts 5 and 6 based in Kilgore, for the past three years.

The new director was first employed by the Commission in October of 1967 as an engineer. He was assistant director of the Kilgore office from May 1968 to April 1974, and director of that office from April 1974 until September 1977, when he moved to Austin to become assistant director of the Oil and Gas Division. In August of 1979 he went back to Kilgore to direct the office there.

HOW TO GET AHEAD WITHOUT HEADACHES.

You've heard it all before. A compact computer can put you ahead in business. It can simplify almost every aspect of record-keeping, planning and decision-making.

You know all that.

But somewhere in the back of your mind is that nagging feeling that it can also create lots of headaches. Can be more trouble than it's worth.

You're absolutely right.

No fix. No sell. If we can't fix it in Midland, then we don't sell it. We maintain a complete service center in our own store. If you're having repair headaches with your present system, then contact us. We service many types of units, regardless of where they were originally purchased.

Relics are for museums. Updating and expanding your system should be simple. Computer hardware is constantly changing. We sell systems which can be updated or expanded as you see fit. You're not stuck with a relic everytime some computer whiz reinvents the wheel.

Ignorance is okay. Some computer types thrive on blowing customers away with big words and lots of excess baggage. We'll shoot it to you straight. We'll tell you what this thing does, and what that thing does. And how to make them do it on your own.

The here and now. We keep our inventory on the floor, not in some warehouse in Cleveland. That way you can see it, touch it, and actually operate it before you make a decision. Our selection is among the best in West Texas, and we're proud to show it to you on the spot, rather than in the catalog.

Our advice. In two words, our best advice is this: Go Slow. Look around all you like. Come by our store several times, and try our systems. We know you're looking to get ahead. We'll show you how to do it. Without the headaches.

"Just a month ago, I was announcing to my colleagues the possibility of the Senate recessing no later than Oct. 1 and returning in January," lamented Senate Republican Leader Howard H. Baker of Tennessee.

"At home, my wife and I were making plans for after Thanksgiving...But I should have known better than to plan ahead."

First, Baker said, progress on the Senate floor slowed to the pace of rush hour traffic in the nation's capital.

Then, President Reagan went and suggested that Congress come back after the elections to take care of spending bills. Leaders reluctantly agreed to call a December "lame duck" session.

"Now it appears that not only will we have to be in session for a good portion of the year, but we will not even be able to escape into the throes of a NFL game," Baker told the Senate.

"We might as well stay in session on Sundays; we might as well throw out the TVs in the cloakrooms; we might as well give up trying to understand Howard Cosell; and we might as well just give up on the notion of being happy."

Tudor ship to be lifted from 437-year-old resting place

Copley News Service

Sometime in the next few weeks, in the biggest diving project on record, a team of experts will raise Henry VIII's Mary Rose from her 437-year-old resting place in Portsmouth Sound, off the south coast of England.

In London recently, the newspapers were having a field day with the story. The conservative Times, in a take-off on modern journalism, ran headlines that made the sinking of the ship appear to be the hottest story of the day. "Admiral Among 650 Feared Drowned — Mary Rose Sinks! The King a Witness" ran the 75-point banner on the magazine section. "Design Defects Blamed for Disaster" explored the follow-up reasoning. "King Comforts Widow" headed a special feature box on the demise of Vice Admiral Sir George Carew.

And it required a few minutes concentration to realize that it was all just a spoof — English humor at its best.

The raising of the ship is no joke however, but the result of years of thorough research, hard work in raising funds and generating enough interest to begin the extensive excavations.

THE MARY ROSE WAS COMMISSIONED by Henry VIII in 1545. She was one of 60 ships gathered in the Portsmouth roads to meet an invading French fleet which numbered about 235.

Henry himself, and much of the court, were at Southsea Castle, on a hill overlooking the harbor to watch the battle. The Mary Rose with some 700 armored men aboard, ran into difficulties as soon as she raised her sails.

Poor seamanship, too much weight and open gunports, too close to the water line, were probably responsible for the accident. As she heeled to one side, her guns broke loose and added their weight to the ship's starboard list. In a matter of moments, she was gone. Fewer than 40 survived.

Attempts were made to salvage her almost immediately. But tides, weather and the limits of knowledge of the 16th century doomed the hulk even further. Silt soon covered her over (and actually helped preserve her) and local fishermen marked the spot where she lay only in tales handed from father to son.

In 1836, two brothers, John and Charles Deane, who had patented a strange new diving device and breathing apparatus, were hired to find out why local fishermen kept tangling their lines. They brought up four guns from the believed-to-be-lost warship. Over the next four years, more guns and artifacts were recovered. Then the Mary Rose settled further into the silt and was lost to time.

FINALLY, IN 1965 A JOURNALIST and amateur diver, Alexander McKee, a Portsmouth native, who had always been fascinated by the tale of the lost Tudor warship, started Project Solent Ships, an attempt to locate several ships known to have gone down in the Solent — that fascinating bay off the south coast of England.

He invited Margaret Rule, who was then curator at the nearby Roman palace at Fishburne, to be their non-diving archaeologist. Rule, in conversation with Lord Mountbatten one day, told him about the raising of the Wasa, a ship that had been sunk in the harbor of Stockholm. She added that there was an English ship in a very similar situation in the Solent.

Intrigued, Lord Mountbatten immediately set up a fund for more work on the salvage operation. Prince Charles was drawn in and made two dives and was so intrigued he agreed to become president of the Mary Rose Trust. Charles made journeys all over the world, interesting historians and maritime experts everywhere in contributing funds for the operation.

Since 1971, some 25,000 dives have been made, under auspices of the Trust. The 500 divers, mostly amateurs, have brought up some 17,000 registered objects — of which they are certain at least 2,500 are museum quality. These will be exhibited in about a year's time at the Mary Rose Museum in Portsmouth.

RAISING THE SHIP ITSELF has presented a real challenge to the salvage team, under the direction of Col. Wendell Lewis, a retired army gunner. The ship is stuck in the seabed, eroded and missing most of its main deck planking. It is, in the words of the Times "as delicate as an empty egg shell."

A special 130-ton steel cradle has been crafted to be her permanent "bed" both in dry dock and later, in the museum. But the job of lifting her without further damage is still enormous and greatly dependent on a series of favorable environmental factors over which the salvage team has little control.

POSITIVE THINKING

Changes in weather affect people's moods

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

A physician told me that by proper exercise you can often stave off coronary attacks, or at least help to do so. He pointed out that the circulatory system itself needs exercise and quoted a top medical professor. "If you walk a mile a day, you'e getting the best insurance against having a coronary."

Since what he said made sense I went him one better and walk two miles every day. As a result I'm convinced that, in addition to the good effect on the heart and physique, walking has other benefits, such as breathing fresh air, watching people and getting a sense of the surge and movement of life, all of which will lift the mood and help to make your day.

Recently my wife and I spent some days in the little town of Keswick, England, in the Lake District. The countryside around is famous for its scenery, but it is not a softly beautiful country like Florida or California or southern France or Italy, with their golden sunshine. This is a stern, brooding kind of region with frowning heights and deep blue lakes. There is only intermittent sunshine, but even when the sun does not shine and big billowing clouds obscure the tops of the hills, it remains ever fascinating and lovely. Actually it is one of my favorite places.

I took my daily two-mile walk before breakfast, walking in the extensive gardens of our hotel and among the encircling hills. The first morning, I met an old, rather taciturn Englishman who had come out even earlier than I. The day didn't look too promising so I asked him what the weather was going to be like. He didn't waste words. "Bad," he said glumly.

"How do you know?" I asked. "What makes you so sure?"

"Birds are flying low," he told me.

I had noticed that the swallows and swifts were going around in large low circles and the man unbent enough to explain: "When the weather's bad, the insects are pushed toward the ground by the heavy air and, to catch them, the birds have to fly low. Then you can count on rain. When the insects fly higher, so do the birds and you can count on good weather."

I saw my weatherwise friend almost every morning and soon I could tell what the weather was like by his face instead of the birds. If his countenance was dark, it was going to be a bad day; if it was a bit brighter, a good day. On the whole, he was a gloomy fellow. I once ventured to ask him why and he looked at me and said, "If you lived in weather like this all the time, you'd be gloomy, too."

Well, it is a fact that nature does affect our moods. We are of the earth and therefore earthy. We are part and parcel of the universe. If you're gloomy or blue, it may result from the weather. But, most of the time, it is more likely to come from something else — something within yourself, some negative attitudes or thoughts — inner mental weather, so to speak.

Personally, I've never found gloom in nature. Nature has always lifted my spirits. And I actually like a dark day from time to time. I find something stimulating in great billowing clouds — and there's always beauty in the thunder and lightning of a storm.

After all, nature is like life. It is hardly good to always be looking for the soft and salubrious qualities but to profit by its sterner qualities. As unpleasant as they may seem, the stern things of life are of value. The basic purpose of living must be to make real men and real women of us. And I mean strong, not weak, people. So when the tough stormy things come along and we tend to feel blue and down, it's not a bad idea to put on some good shoes and take a long walk. As the blood surgess through the body, try passing some big rugged thoughts through the mind. Such walking and thinking is bound to drive off the gloom. Then, whatever the weather, mental and spiritual sunshine will permeate your whole being. Like an old German couple I once met on a mountain path near the Garmisch-Partenkirchen on a cold rainy day. "We are walking off our dark thoughts," he said, smiling.

"Good tough people," I said to my wife as we passed on. Indeed, the salt of the earth.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Disease activity may depend on time of day

Dear Dr. Solomon: When I called my doctor to tell him that my arthritis was acting up, he just told me to change the times I was taking my medicine. If I take the same stuff in the same amount, why would a time change make a difference in the effect of my medicine? — Jim, N.Y.C.

Dear Jim: There is evidence that disease activity in patients with rheumatoid arthritis fluctuates during the course of a day. I have occasionally noticed that a patient seen in the morning, for example, will appear different than if the same patient were seen in the afternoon.

According to a report by Dr. J.A.L. Harkness, of Guy's Hospital Medical School in London, disease activity in patients with rheumatoid arthritis reaches a peak betwen 2 a.m. and 4 a.m., and is lowest at about 4 p.m. Therefore, the effectiveness of a drug may be increased simply by changing the times of the day it is taken.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've hesitated writing to you because I just don't know how to put it. But you had a question from a man who said his sex life was no good since he started taking blood pressure pills. I'm on a tranquilizer and have the same problem. I have two questions: Could the tranquilizer be responsible for my problems? And, if so, what can I do about it? — Debbie, Farmingdale, L. Is., N.Y.

Dear Debbie: I found that some of my women patients who were taking certain tranquilizers found it more difficult to achieve orgasm. According to Dr. Kathleen Degen, of the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, the problem may be resolved by changing the medication or by taking a lower dose. This has helped many of my patients. But, of course, this is something that should be done only after consultation with your physician, not on your own.

Incidentally, I found that men who take certain tranquilizers may experience a similar problem, and can also be helped.

For Leonard, Springfield, Ill.: Chronic pain that cannot be explained on the basis of an identifiable physical disorder may indicate a depressive disease. A thorough physical examination would appear to be the first order of business; referral to a psychiatirst may subsequently be indicated.

Gourmet pizza palace hottest place in Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Nutritionists say you are what you eat, but in Hollywood's star system, it's where you eat that counts.

If they were giving Oscars for restaurants this year, Spago would be the hands-down winner with support from a growing fan club of the biggest names in show business who line up nightly for tables at Wolfgang Puck's gourmet pizza place.

"I really didn't think it would get this crazy," says Puck, the gifted chef who has gotten used to incessantly ringing phones as the rich and famous vie for prized reservations which have been scarcer than truffles since Spago opened in January.

"We refuse about 300 reservations a day," says Puck. "I thought it would be maybe two or three months of this and then it would normal out. But it just gets more and more."

On any evening, a Who's Who of celebrities such as Johnny Carson, Henry Winkler, Brenda Vaccaro, Rod Stewart, Kenny Rogers and Zsa Zsa Gabor may be seen in Spago's "casual chic" white and pale pastel dining room nibbling pizza with duck pate, sampling the angel hair pasta with goat cheese and broccoli or feasting on Spago's pungent garlic chicken.

That's not to say that the stars have abandoned other places to eat and be seen. The fabled Polo Lounge at the Beverly Hills Hotel still does a turnaway business of luminaries for breakfast and lunch. Ma Maison has a faithful clientele with Orson Welles lunching there most days.

Chasen's, a once-fading favorite, has jumped back to popularity with a little help from the patronage of President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, who dine there when in town.

Movie and TV executives — high in the echelon of Hollywood VIPs — dine at Morton's, a sophisticated palm-filled bistro; the trendy Trumps which serves high tea in late afternoon; or Matteo's in Westwood, one of the oldest celebrity hangouts for Italian food — it's said to be Frank Sinatra's favorite.

"It's impossible to predict which restaurant will make it, which one will attract the stars," says a Hollywood publicist who requested anonymity. "It's a combination of things — the food, how they treat you, whether they take messages and who will see you there."

No one was prepared for the unprecedented success of Spago — least of all the 33-year-old owner himself.

For the Austrian-born, French-trained Puck, Spago was a longshot. Its location wasn't perfect — on the Sunset Strip next to an all-night record store. Its main dish, pizza baked in wood-burning ovens, sounded less than chic.

But the parking lot was jammed with Rolls-Royces on opening night. And all 40 tables have been filled for dinner seven nights a week since then.

The prices at Spago — lower than most "in" places with a la carte entrees available for $9.50 and a full dinner with wine likely to cost $30 — seem irrelevant to the wealthy customers. Some say the main attraction is Puck himself who works in an open kitchen on the restaurant floor — providing a show for diners.

The chef, reknowned for his magical "nouvelle cuisine" creations, defected from Ma Maison — the prior title holder in the race for star Hollywood hangouts. Puck's gourmet fans followed.

"I thought that people who came to Ma Maison wouldn't come to Spago; it would be too simple," says Puck. "But everybody came!"

Puck's mentor, Patrick Terrail (pronounced Tereye) owner of the still "in" Ma Maison, maintains a surface cordiality toward his former partner's success but he admits he's never set foot in Spago.

The enduring success of Ma Maison, which has grown steadily over 10 years, is a lesson in merchandising for the show business upper crust.

"My biggest promotion was by accident," says Terrail. "I had just given a magazine interview about the restaurant and I knew the phone would be ringing. I was going on vacation, so I took the phone number out of the phone book."

But Ma Maison might not have jelled without two ingredients — a great chef and a celebrity clientele.

"For the first year we were open, nothing happened," says Terrail. "The ambience and service carried me. The food was mediocre. I went to France to look for a new chef and found Wolfgang Puck."

Word spread quickly about the superior food, and soon Terrail's regulars included Jacqueline Bisset, Donald Sutherland and Suzanne Somers.

"Orson Welles is very important to us," says Terrail. "My family has been taking care of him for three generations."

Michael Caine stops by when he's in town. Then there are the ones who don't want to be seen.

"Woody Allen sits at the far corner table with his back to the customers," says Terrail. "We don't allow autographs or cameras. When Frank Sinatra comes in, we hide him. Nobody knows he's in the restaurant."

The Polo Lounge has similar rules which are broken for no one.

"We don't allow cameras in here," says Jean Majors, spokeswoman for the Beverly Hills Hotel. "The biggest stars can come here without makeup or unshaven and not be afraid their pictures will be taken.

"If someone insists on an autograph," says Ms. Majors, "they will talk to the waiter or to Nino, our maitre d', and he will send a piece of paper over."

Library haven for newspaper buffs

LONDON (AP) — In the library where 300 years of the world's newspapers are stored, they not only dust the stock but iron it as well.

"In the ironing room, we run a hot iron over every page before it is microfilmed, to take out the creases and give a better image," said Stephen Green, head of the Colindale Newspaper Library in North London.

The library gave a champagne reception recently to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the red brick building housing it, opposite Colindale subway station. When the building was opened in 1932 it held 275,000 bound volumes of newspapers weighing 20,000 tons, removed from the British Museum.

Now part of the state-run British Library established in 1973, it holds 650,000 bound volumes and brown-paper parcels of old newspapers and 140,000 reels of microfilmed pages, on 20 miles of shelves.

ANOTHER 10,000 volumes and parcels of old and new newspapers, and 10,000 microfilm reels, are added every year. In four to five years another building will be needed.

"The Library of Congress in Washington is the world's largest library and they have a lot of newspapers, but ours is richer historically," said Alexander Wilson, director general of the reference division.

The Colindale library has 35,000 newspaper titles, "living and dead," said its head, Stephen Green.

"It is so popular with researchers that we had to close on 110 days last year because all the 80 readers' seats were filled.

"People come to hunt up their family trees, track local history and do research for books. One man even managed to write a bibliography about Tibetan dogs from our files, but don't ask me how he did it," Green said.

"ANYONE OVER 21 can come who cannot find what they want elsewhere. We bar children because we cannot have classes of them rummaging about, or the volumes would soon fall to pieces.

"And we bar two categories of adults: competition addicts who would fill the library and seekers after soccer results. But for some odd reason we don't bar those in search of cricket results."

The Times of London, first published in 1785, is the newspaper most in demand, the library says, so it has to be bound more stoutly than other titles.

The earliest newspaper in the collection is La Gazette, later the Gazette de France, published in France on May 30, 1631.

Other old ones are La Gazette Ordinaire d'Amsterdam of June 20, 1667, the Gazette de Rotterdam of Dec. 15, 1689, and Il Correo Ordinario of Vienna, Jan. 1, 1690.

THE LIBRARY has the Pennsylvania Gazette of Aug. 1, 1754, its earliest American newspaper, and a file of Dunlap's Pennsylvania Packet from Nov. 13, 1775, including the July 8, 1776 issue containing news of the Declaration of Independence.

Out-of-the-way titles include a German fake edition of London's Evening Standard, dropped on some English cities, to show how Britain was being betrayed by its leaders and losing World War II.

There is the Moose Jaw Daily News from Saskatchewan, Canada, the Geraldton Express from a Western Australian gold mining community and the New York Journal and Weekly Register of 1789, with rewards for news of runaway slaves among the front-page announcements by booksellers and shipping agents.

Agents of the library hunt down and buy up old and new newspapers around the world, trying to evaluate what future generations of researchers will want to read.

"Twenty-five years ago the fashion was early American revolutionary papers," said the library information officer, John Westmancoat.

"IN 25 years it could be Latin America. At the moment, it's almost anything — newspapers have become respectable as a historical source, which they were not in the 19th century."

David Markham, a bindery manager, said it cost 40 pounds ($68) to bind three months' issues of the Times in buckram, a tough linen cloth.

Mitgang is Cultural Correspondent for The New York Times. As such, he says, "I cover the whole cultural scene. I do book reviews, write about book people, libraries, the theater."

But, he has found that after his work day is done, he often has other things to say and, "If you have something else to say, and I do, then you find the time to say it.

"So, I work on my books on vacations, on weekends, and at night."

Mitgang, a soft-spoken, amiable man, has a string of non-fiction books to his credit as well as three novels. The latest of these is "The Montauk Fault," a sort of doomsday novel in which the United States and Russia get close to the brink but avoid falling over.

He has also written a play, "Mister Lincoln," which was staged on Broadway, and, Mitgang says with a smile, was "the first play about Lincoln to have played at Ford's Theater in Washington."

Lincoln has figured heavily in Mitgang's non-fiction works.

"I've written two biographies of Lincoln," says Mitgang, "and I edited three books about him." His interest in the assassinated president began "when I was a young man — I'm 62 now — and I had just graduated from law school and became a lawyer. Although I never practiced, I guess that like all young lawyers my dream lawyer was Lincoln. He was the great figure."

The interest was increased during World War II. "I was on Stars and Stripes, and after the war I became curious about the Stars and Stripes newspaper of the Civil War — there were five different papers with that name — and what those soldiers had to say about Lincoln."

His research resulted in a book. Other books followed, mostly non-fiction, but Mitgang says he has now decided that "I am going to stick strictly to fiction."

"I've found that you can say much more in fiction than you can in factual writing. In fiction, you can write more from the heart, but in factual writing you are restricted and rightly so. When a reader picks up a newspaper he has the right to expect that he is getting facts and that they are straight facts. My job as a newspaperman is to work for the reader, my basic service is to inform the reader."

Mitgang says he joined the staff of the Times in 1945 and has been there since, except for a three-year stint in television news.

"I left TV," he says, "because I was an old newspaper dog and I felt I couldn't learn TV's new tricks. I came strictly out of print journalism and I missed putting words and sentences together."

He says the difference between journalism and fiction is that in the first "you are dealing with the real world. In the novel, you are dealing with the world as you think it should be.

"I guess as you get older you want to rearrange the world a little more perfectly. You can manipulate that perfection in a novel. Why, you can even have the good guys win! You can't do this in journalism, nor should you."

Bill would allow Indians to buy land

By WILLIAM GARLAND

From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Kickapoo Indians of Eagle Pass would be allowed up to 100 acres of federal land under a bill passed unanimously Thursday by the House.

The bill would provide no money to help the Indians buy the land, but it would exempt the tribe, which has 600 to 700 members, from paying property taxes or taxes on any revenue derived from the acreage.

There were no surprises in the bill, according to Kurt Blue Dog of the Native American Rights Fund in Denver.

Church groups and the Kickapoos have formed a committee to choose a site for the land and raise money for its purchase. Thus far, the committee has received pledges for about half of the $200,000 needed to buy the maximum 100 acres, according to Blue Dog.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Abraham Kazen, D-Laredo, would not automatically grant U.S. citizenship to all members of the Texas tribe. However, registered members of the tribe who apply within five years for citizenship would automatically be granted that status.

If all tribe members were to be granted U.S. citizenship, it would cause a conflict with the tribe's ownership of a reservation in Mexico, explains Mike Jackson, a staff member with the House Interior Committee. Representatives of the tribe told the House committee in hearings last year that they want the separate Eagle Pass reservation since they live near the Texas border city most of the year.

Blue Dog said the amount of land had been limited to 100 acres in part as a concession to the Mexican government, which will not allow the Kickapoos to keep the Mexican reservation if they are certified as U.S. residents.

The tribe has gained notoriety as a result of its makeshift huts below the international bridge connecting Eagle Pass with Piedras Negras, Mexico.

The Kickapoo band, whose members often make a living from migrant labor, have been based near Eagle Pass for many years, even though a separate branch of Kickapoos have a reservation in Oklahoma. Members of the Texas tribe testified that they consider Eagle Pass their home, and that they have a traditional burial ground near the city.

"They've used that point over a hundred years," said Blue Dog. "They have burial grounds that are very close to them."

"We're pretty close to the goal we set out," he added. Blue Dog said he has worked more than three years for passage of such a bill.

One staff aide, who did not want to be named, said success of the bill would now depend in large part on approval by Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, whose staff is expected to review the House-passed version before the lame duck session begins in late November.

The bill passed the House Thursday without objection along with a number of other Indian-related bills.

Committee says stricter standards needed for undercover probes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although there is no conclusive evidence that the federal government abused its power in the Abscam probe, stricter standards governing such undercover investigations are needed, the chief counsel of a special Senate committee says.

U.S.S.R. 'most disliked country' in Japan

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

TOKYO — Recent opinion polls show that the Japanese rate the Soviet Union as "the most disliked country," which should surprise no one, including the old Bolsheviks in the Kremlin.

But the Russians seem to go out of their way to annoy and anger the Japanese people and then make it plain they couldn't care less about it.

While the Soviet's invasion of Afghanistan and its role in the repression in Poland are resented here, Moscow's contemptuous refusal even to discuss the return of four northern islands seized from a nearly prostrate Japan in the closing days of World War II has really soured relations between the two countries.

Refusal to talk was bad enough, but then the Soviets rubbed it in by deploying a heavily armed division of regular army troops to the islands and building a new airfield there.

Did the Kremlin fear that Japan might try to recover the islands by force? Of course not. Its message to Tokyo was clear: We are there to stay, so forget about them.

THE JAPANESE PEOPLE are not forgetting about the islands, which are named Kunashiri, Etorofu, Shikotan and the Habomais. They lie north of Hokkaido and south of the Kurils.

Increased public concern over the issue, abetted by a growing national pride, prompted the government of Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki to designate an annual Northern Territories Day. On Feb. 7, rallies calling for the return of the islands were held all over the country.

The questions are: Why are the Soviets determined to keep the islands? What can the Japanese do about it?

The Soviets could have a military reason — to assure the security of the seaborne link from Siberia to the Kamchatka Peninsula, an increasingly important military area. The disputed islands lie at the entrance to the Sea of Okhotsk, across which supplies to Kamchatka are transported.

In addition, the Soviets probably see the matter as an opportunity to humiliate and frighten an ally of the United States and a nation it regards with disdain because of its pacifist constitution and comparatively small armed forces.

("HOW MANY DIVISIONS DOES the pope have?" Stalin once sneeringly asked when told the Vatican might object to some Soviet move.)

He noted in an interview that no Soviet premier has visited Japan since the end of World War II, while Japanese prime ministers journeyed to Moscow in 1956 and 1973. As for foreign ministers, the Japanese lead six to three in visits.

Tamba said it was "up to Japan itself" as to whether Moscow could be persuaded to return the Northern Territories. He believes that to be successful in this matter Japan must do the following:

Achieve broad public support for the return; maintain good relations with the United States, its ultimate protector; build such minimal military power so as to convince the Soviets they cannot intimidate Japan; maintain a superior high-technology performance for leverage as the USSR seeks help in developing Siberia, and build a diplomatic base strong enough to make Moscow realize it cannot make effective diplomacy in Asia without taking into account Japan's role.

It is true public support on the islands issue is increasing, that relations with the United States, while troubled over trade imbalances, are strong, and that Japan's high-tech performance has been top-level.

But for an economic superpower with a population of more than 115 million, its military forces remain woefully inadequate for self-defense against a Soviet conventional threat. As the United States has been insisting, Japan needs to spend more on arms.

And, while the memories of Japan's aggressions in the 1930s and 1940s are growing dimmer in East Asia, Tokyo has not yet earned the full trust and respect it so avidly seeks of the people of that area.

Ranchers raise llamas in California

SONORA, Calif. (AP) - Some motorists are convinced Jack and Bea Hite have a deal going with an auto body shop to handle all the fender benders caused by their herd of llamas.

The shaggy, humpless relatives of the camel are about the last thing drivers expect to see along winding Highway 49 in the southern Mother Lode country.

Many people stop to gawk and take pictures, and some fast stops cause minor accidents.

"We just fell into it by accident," Mrs. Hite said, trying to explain the dozen domesticated llamas that have the run of their 10-acre ranch in Tuolumne County.

Actor Herschel Bernardi of nearby Columbia received one as a joke seven years ago from a friend, so he penned it in his front yard with a goat.

The Hites "took one look. We went back the next day and took another look," the 71-year-old great-grandmother said in a telephone interview. "I just fell in love with it and decided I wanted one as a pet."

They bought a pair in Oregon and returned home intent on breeding more. The Hites have supervised 19 births and are expecting two more by the end of the year.

"Especially being up here in the country like this, I don't know what I'd do without them."

The couple lived in San Francisco and Tiburon before deciding on a retirement home in the Sierra Nevada. The 78-year-old Hite grew up on an Oregon farm, but Mrs. Hite remarked, "I had been a city gal all my life. This 10 acres is like a 10,000-acre spread to me."

The llamas that share the ranch are some of an estimated 6,000 in the United States. Llama breeding and training have grown so fast in recent years that the International Llama Association has become a popular group, and trade journals have popped up.

Mrs. Hite named one for Cicely Tyson after meeting the actress. A recent addition to the herd, Tony Llama, was named for the bootmaker. The original breeding male was James Bond. And a gray newborn was named Kenny Rogers.

Llamas have a bad habit of spitting to establish their territory or to protect their young. But the animals, which stand four feet tall at the shoulder, can be sedate.

"They'll sit by your chair and watch television," she said. "They're just fascinated by the moving objects on the screen."

Llamas, native to South America, are fully grown at age 2 and have a lifespan of 20 years.

"They don't take as much care as horses," Mrs. Hite said. "People who have a couple of acres just like to have some kind of animal."

Raising them also can be profitable although the Hites prefer to keep them as a hobby.

Llamas can be sheared once a year, and the wool commands up to $2 an ounce, but the Hites don't shear any.

"If you shear one, you have to shear them all because the sheared one is sort of ostracized," Mrs. Hite noted.

People who can persuade the Hites to part with a llama often use them for pack animals. Some consider llamas more agile than horses and mules on tricky back-country trails.

"My husband decided he wanted to get 20 females," Mrs. Hite said. "We try and hang onto the females because we want to build up the herd but people keep talking us into selling them."

By PAT LEISNER
Associated Press Writer

ORLANDO, Fla. — The Eiffel Tower is a stone's throw from a Shinto shrine. An Aztec pyramid borders the Gates to the Forbidden City of China.

Amid central Florida swamp cabbage, civilizations from opposite ends of the Earth rise side-by-side in a Walt Disney extravaganza called EPCOT which opens Oct. 1.

There's World Showcase with pavilions representing nine countries, including the United States, set around a 45-acre man-made lagoon. And there's Future World, where a shimmering globe, 18 stories high, serves as a gateway to display the marvels of American science and industry.

"We want to give a feeling to people who haven't seen these places that they are right there," says Dick Nunis, 50-year-old president of Walt Disney World. "And for those who have been there, we want them to recognize it."

In one day, visitors can share in Germany's Oktoberfest, sample fettuccine from Rome, feast on crepes in a bistro, or sip a pint in a pub as they wander through the cultures of Europe, the temples of the Orient, the ancient ruins of Mexico and the wonders of North America.

Crews labored round-the-clock shifts in the final weeks. With a spray gun they aged the Chinese pavilion's Temple of Heaven by centuries in the few hours it took the paint compound to dry. Electricians struggled with miles of thick black-coated cables. In the dark, a crane hoisted a palm tree into place. In 10 hours, 100 trees had been planted and 30,000 feet of sod put in place.

From groundbreaking three years ago, no expense was spared. Artisans duplicated Old World masters. Engineers created and programmed 450 robots. Film crews were shipped to 30 countries in two years.

Disney himself envisoned EPCOT as a "community of tomorrow that will never be completed" — a working city with a controlled population of 20,000 permanent residents.

Walt Disney died in 1966. And when the dreammaker died, the dream began fading.

His brother, Roy, made the decision to move ahead with the Florida project and lived through completion of the first phase — the Magic Kingdom theme park, with on-site hotels.

"It was decided to start with what we knew how to do best — build the Magic Kingdom and expand into a vacation resort area. We'd tackle EPCOT later," explains Charlie Ridgway, a Disney spokesman.

Disney officials says EPCOT represents the concepts Walt Disney espoused — a place to show off new ideas and emphasize technologies.

"It doesn't necessarily have to be a city where people live permanently," adds Ridgway.

"Everyone has his own idea of what Walt meant. And EPCOT has the potential to accomplish what he had in mind. I don't think anyone feels ashamed at what we've done. On the contrary...."

Disney's proudest achievement is American Adventure, where 33 animated life-like figures trace 350 years of history from the landing of the Mayflower through the space age.

AP Laserphoto

A monorail glides past Future World's 18-story high geodesic dome, just one of the many treats for eyes, ears and minds available at EPCOT Center.

But it's not history from the perspective of great leaders. For example, Valley Forge comes to life through the footsoldiers who suffered on the frozen battlefields.

The most famed Disney character, Mickey Mouse, and his pals will remain at the Magic Kingdom, 2½ miles away. There will be different characters at EPCOT — giant dolls in ethnic dress.

Inside is Spaceship Earth, a journey through 40,000 years from caveman to satellites to demonstrate that man survived on earth because of his ability to communicate.

Dinosaurs and sea monsters await at the Universe of Energy, where visitors search for energy sources in flights over the Alaskan pipeline, the oil rigs of the North Sea, Niagara Falls and the windmills of Holland as scenes appear on a 210-degree screen.

Singing vegetables help tell the story of farming from the horse and plow to plants that grow without soil in the 5½-acre land pavilion. A restaurant revolves around a backdrop of jungles, locust swarms and prairie fires, depicting hostile environments man had to conquer before he could farm.

Before EPCOT opened, more than 6 million people had a peek through a preview center which operated for 18 months, featuring a 17-minute film showing bits and pieces of the project.

Wilde, who is in the data communications field with New England Telephone, says he's familiar with computers and what can be done.

Karl Busch of Jacksonville sees EPCOT as a way "for people to get out of their backyards and see the Nile River, the Eiffel Tower, the pyramids and realize there's a big world out there."

ASCAP, BMI keep track of the nation's mu$ic

EDITOR'S NOTE: There's music in the air — and therein lies the problem. How do composers and publishers keep track — and get compensation — for their work, which may turn up on radio stations big and tiny, or on local cable television outlets, or in numerous other communications channels? That is the concern of BMI and ASCAP, two of the giants in the business of music.

By JOHN BARBOUR

NEW YORK (AP) — Music is invisible, a figment of the air, molecules dancing, of no import until it strikes the human ear. For most of a song's existence, it has less substance than smoke.

The old vagabond had a simple life. He was paid for his tunes with supper and lodging, or coins thrown in his hat. But what of modern tunesmiths? How does one reward the people who compose and publish such etherea in this song-hungry electronic world?

Ah, that is the business of music.

Spell it mu$ic, and suddenly we are talking about very important smoke. The universal appetite for melody has spawned more than 40 organizations around the world which make it their business to listen for the music and collect royalties on every performance.

Two of the biggest are headquartered only a few blocks apart on New York's West Side.

Broadcast Music Inc. (BMI) and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP) not only measure the frequency with which songs are spilled into the air, but they track down and collect from those who do the spilling, whether a national TV network, a local disc jockey or a pub with a piano bar.

TOGETHER THEY reap more than $300 million a year in royalties and, after overhead, mete out the rest to their members.

Despite the enormity of their job (some 8,000 radio stations alone broadcast an estimated 53 million hours a year), BMI and ASCAP find time to war against each other with words and sometimes money in an unending search for talent and new licenses.

They are also taking the measure of a new and potentially lucrative music market — cable TV, which already offers special lines of videotaped rock and other musical genre.

In fact, the ways songwriters collect on their software may provide clues to other authors and producers worried that their films or other handiwork will be reduced to electronic impulses as difficult to detect and survey as the unheard melody. What is at stake is the vested interest of the author and producer in their copyright and where to collect royalties. The songwriters already have determined this: collect at the source of the signal.

BMI and ASCAP each occupies a few floors of separate office towers just south of Lincoln Center and just west of Carnegie Hall in a neighborhood that holds a proliferation of recording studios and sheet music stores.

They are only a dozen blocks north of what used to be Tin Pan Alley, the heart of the music business decades ago. All that is left of that old battleground of bucks and egos is the Brill Building, a gray-white memoir of stingy music publishers and hungry songwriters when the home piano was the jukebox of its time.

Today the publishers and songwriters are allied in BMI and ASCAP to collect their due from an incredibly vast arena in which music is played.

CONSIDER: THE radio and television networks which log and report the musical content of 500,000 hours of national airtime each year; 800 local commercial television and 8,000 local radio stations; 1,100 non-commercial radio and television outlets; 2,500 colleges and universities; 700 symphony orchestras, tens of thousands of bars, hotels, circuses, even ice-skating and roller rinks, not to mention hundreds of companies that provide background music for everything from elevators to airplanes. Even jukeboxes pay.

Not only is the origin of the music diverse, the repertory is extensive as well. BMI counts well over a million licensed works, and ASCAP more than that being a quarter of a century older. In an ASCAP computer search for songs about raindrops, for instance, "Raindrops Keep Falling On My Head," by ASCAP president Hal David is only one of 20. Try "autumn" — about 50; or "tomorrow" — 40.

Both organizations rely on computers to keep track of their repertories and their licensees, BMI more so. Each claims its monitoring system is the best possible, and certainly better than Brand X.

Both rely on logs of music played on the big networks, and ASCAP warns that the logs will be checked.

Both send their agents into the streets and the byways of America looking for new bars and clubs and hotels which haven't been added to the license list. It is a sometimes dangerous enterprise, because a bar owner is likely to see music as a figment of the air and not understand why he should pay for dancing molecules when he is already paying the piano player. Agents have been run off with shotguns and knives. In the end, however, the payment is made at the threat of a court suit for copyright infringement.

Both organizations pay their due to the profession, holding showcases and workshops for budding writers. They stay close to the scene in the cities that produce most of the music, New York, Los Angeles and Nashville. The branch offices check on members' questions and scour the bars for promising talent.

IN LOS ANGELES, both BMI and ASCAP have offices in a Sunset Boulevard area where the networks, local stations and recording companies cluster together for mutual enhancement. The scene is considerably more glamourous than New York. The street is polka-dotted with pretty girls and young men with musical careers on their mind, dressed for the part. In New York, they are clad in mufti.

BMI and ASCAP differ most significantly in the way they track and tally the 8,000 local radio stations. BMI relies on music logged and reported by the broadcasters themselves, but on a sampling basis, the sample chosen by an outside organization so that no one can load the results. It estimates it receives logs on half a million broadcast hours a year, and radio stations are tapped on the average about every year and a half.

ASCAP uses a scientific, random sampling method to insure that different kinds of music are covered proportionately. It actually tapes 60,000 local radio hours and 30,000 local television hours a year, deriving usage from that.

Each claims its system is better, more precise, fairer. BMI says it can analyze five or six times as many hours as ASCAP by its method. ASCAP says it is hearing the real music, not what someone else says is played.

ASCAP insists it is more aggressive in bargaining for its 30,000 members, whether appearing before government copyright tribunals or dealing with musical outlets over set fees. BMI says its distribution of royalties is fairer than ASCAP's.

ASCAP says its president and 24-member board are all writers and publishers, therefore more responsive to the membership. BMI is privately owned by broadcasting outlets, but claims they do not influence its fee-setting decisions, and insures that they act in a business-like manner, the greater efficiency cutting overhead and yielding more dollars for its 65,000 affiliates.

THE ARGUMENTS are interminable and almost dulling in their fine points. The focus is still talent, how to draw it into each separate fold, thereby increasing the dollar draw of each organization.

ASCAP was started in 1914 to protect musical copyrights. Buttressed by Victor Herbert's successful suit against the unpaid-for singing and playing of his operetta, "Sweethearts," in a Broadway hotel, ASCAP grew into a powerful licensing agent for its members' songs.

It remained a monopoly until 1940 when some 600 enterprises, mostly broadcasters, formed Broadcast Music to offer competitive licensing for new writers and lower fees for users.

When BMI grew, especially in the late 1950s and 1960s, catering to new musical trends, a group of 33 prominent ASCAP writers brought suit against the younger organization, claiming that broadcasters were favoring BMI music by collusion. The case evaporated 17 years later.

The war continues, however, in arcane fashion, somewhat like the Hatfields and McCoys, each having forgotten the original reason for their aggravation in favor of new reasons.

It is a tough business. Only a few of the writers of either organization will make it big. In one three-month period, as an example, ASCAP's payments varied from over $100,000 to only a dollar.

TODAY, THEY fight over the big names, as well as the small ones. Alan Lerner of "My Fair Lady" who was ASCAP is now BMI. Johnny Cash who was BMI is now ASCAP. Billy Joel who was BMI and jumped to ASCAP is now back with BMI.

To many members of each organization, it doesn't seem to make much difference. A West Coast publication, the "Music Connection," reported this year on a survey it made of members of both groups and found each did a creditable job, and that though there were differences between them, the results seemed to be equal.

Each, BMI and ASCAP, have figures to show how much more they pay than those guys down the street. The competition may have a function for both.

Says Theodora Zavin, executive vice president of BMI: "When you look at the advantages all writers and publishers, regardless of affiliation, have gotten by virtue of the fact that there is competition, it has been nothing but affirmative... and if anyone should tell me tomorrow that ASCAP would disappear and BMI would be the only performing rights organization, I think I would be strongly tempted to resign and go form another one. Because I'm not sure that even our group of saints could remain saint-like forever, if people had no alternative."

Disabled artist prays $4 million into his bank account

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (AP) — As Stanton Powers stood and prayed, the automatic teller machine continued to add. He watched his bank balance rise from $1.17 to $1,600. Early the next morning, Powers had $4.4 million.

"Mr. Powers' very simple contention is that he prayed for the money and his prayers were answered," attorney Marcello DiMauro said.

"If you (God) can turn water into wine and bread into fish," said DiMauro, scrambling the Bible a bit, "you should be able to put $4 million into sombody's account."

But officials at the County Bank of Santa Cruz say they're not ready to accept the conversion of a Santa Cruz artist on a Social Security disability income into a millionaire. Bank president Reese Davis says his lawyers are investigating the incident.

The night of Sept. 7, the 39-year-old pen-and-ink artist peered at his balance in the automatic teller, "And before his eyes, it increased to $26 and $201 and $600 and $1,600 while he was standing and looking at his balance and praying or meditating," DiMauro said.

Powers went home, but unable to sleep, returned to the bank at 5:30 a.m. and "discovered his balance was in excess of $4 million," DiMauro said.

A bank officer suggested that Powers — not God — had punched in spurious deposits. Powers denied it.

"If the money belongs to the bank, I'd like to see them keep it," DiMauro said. "But I'd like to see them prove it."

Schools replace Webster's because of obscenity

CARLSBAD, N.M. (AP) — Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary is being replaced at public schools here by an edition "more suitable" for children because of a complaint that Webster's contains obscene words.

School Superintendent Roger Harrell said that the replacement of the dictionary's 1981 edition in grades 6 through 12 was not a ban. "We will leave several copies of the Collegiate edition in the libraries for special uses ...," he said.

Older editions of the dictionary, without the objectionable words, were being put in classrooms until the school system can receive and review sample copies of other dictionaries, a school official said.
