Vows of peace open Cairo negotiations

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Israel and Egypt began negotiations today with mutual vows to work for a general Arab-Israeli peace settlement and an Egyptian expression of hope that the historic meeting was "the dawn of a new era for this region and the entire world."

"We want peace and we shall be friends," said the chief Israeli delegate, Eliahu Ben-Elissar.

"We have transcended the barriers of fear and mistrust," said Egypt's A. Esmat Abdel Meguid.

The key issues — a Palestinian state and Israel's withdrawal from territory captured from the Arabs in 1967 — were glossed over in the 29 minutes of televised speeches that opened the historic conference in the hotel near the Great Pyramid of Cheops where President Roosevelt, Winston Churchill and Chiang Kai-shek held their 1943 Cairo conference.

"Tangible results are expected, and should be forthcoming without delay," said Meguid, opening the conference after cordial greetings and general handshaking among the delegates.

"People of good will everywhere hope and pray for the success of our talks," Ben-Elissar replied. "This is why we have come to Cairo — to talk, to reason and to conduct a dialogue in confidence."

Both emphasized that a "comprehensive settlement" between Israel and all its Arab neighbors was the goal, not an Israeli-Egyptian agreement.

The speeches at the 10-foot-round table in the gilt-domed dining room of the century-old Mena House were to be the only public part of the conference. It is expected to last about two weeks.

Also present for the first open, face-to-face peace negotiations between Israel and one of its Arab foes in 29 years of recurrent war were representatives of the United States and U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, and an observer sent by Pope Paul VI.

Israel's other Arab foes and the Soviet Union boycotted the talks, but seats were left for Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, the Palestinians and the Russians at the conference table, and their flags were raised outside the hotel. All the speakers expressed the hope that they would join the talks later.

Shortly before the talks began, Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin left Tel Aviv for the United States, saying he was going to inform President Carter of "problems connected with the real chance of establishing peace in the Middle East."

Begin refused to say what the problems were, but there was speculation in Israel that he was taking new peace proposals that called for U.S. guarantees of Israel's security in exchange for the return of Arab territory occupied in the 1967 war.

Ben-Elissar is Begin's chief aide, and the other members of the Israeli delegation are Meir Rosenne, the foreign ministry's legal expert, and Maj. Gen. Avrahim Tamir. Meguid, the Egyptian ambassador to the United Nations, is assisted by Osama El Baz, senior undersecretary of the foreign ministry, and Gen. Taha el Magdoob.

Alfred L. Atherton, the assistant secretary of state for the Near East, is the U.S. delegate, and Gen. Ensio Siilasvuo, chief of U.N. peackeeping forces in the Middle East, is representing Waldheim.

Lee High football coach submits his resignation

By LINDA HILL SCHAFFRINA

Under the terms of the resignation, Acree will be paid his full salary until Dec. 31, 1978, the date his contract with the school district was to expire. That salary is $21,995 per year.

After a 15-minute executive session in which a real estate matter also was discussed, Warren read Acree's letter of resignation. The board unanimously approved the terms of resignation without discussion during the open portion of the meeting.

Attempts to reach Acree for comment Tuesday were not successful.

Warren said he and Acree and Acree's representatives began discussions on a potential resignation immediately after football season.

Acree hand-delivered a letter to Warren "a few days ago" outlining the circumstances under which he would resign, including payment for the remainder of his contract, Warren said.

"Obviously there was a tense situation. I appreciate Coach Acree's representatives coming to see me and wanting to discuss the situation concerning a settlement," Warren said.

"I admire the man for stepping down. I think he did the right thing," Warren said, "and I wish him well."

Warren said Acree's involvement in a University Interscholastic League rule infraction this fall "caused some people some concern," but it was not the "total reason" that it was good for Acree to leave the school system.

Warren said Acree is "controversial," and anytime there is a controversial coach, there are going to be coaching changes. "I think the coaches expect it," he said.

Trustee Don Sparks said he "had been made aware" that Acree would resign. "I think that Coach Acree has assessed the situation and is doing again . . . what he thinks is best for the entire school district," Sparks said.

"Under certain circumstances, I think it (the resignation) is in the best interests of the community and Coach Acree," Sparks said.

Athletic Director Sam Cox arrived at the meeting after the resignation had been approved and missed the item.

"Coach Acree never indicated to me he was resigning," Cox said, although he said he had talked to Acree. "We discussed the fact that under the circumstances, I did not think he could continue to function as head football coach at Lee," Cox said.

This past season was Acree's eighth in Midland, Sparks said. During that time, his team won 48 games, lost 32 and tied two. The Lee team won the district championship in 1974 and 1975.

Council votes against applying for grant again

By JIM STEINBERG

By a 4 to 2 vote, the Midland City Council on Tuesday voted to "pass" on a chance to apply for a fourth year Community Development Block Grant.

The decision probably will cause no tears to be shed in Washington, where on Sept. 21 officials of the Department of Housing and Urban Development turned down the city's $946,000 Community Development grant application for 1977 because it did not have a rental assistance plan.

Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr., and council members Doris Howbert, Mark S. Martin, and Carroll M. Thomas voted against the reapplication effort, while councilmen G. Thane Akins and Gordon G. Marcum voted for it — if for different reasons.

"I felt our application (to HUD for the third year application) was legal and in the spirit of the act (of Congress) that created it...I wouldn't mind applying again, but with the realization that there is a low chance factor of our getting it... it would be helpful from the standpoint of publicity to go through the motions and it might encourage other cities to do what we did," said Akins. It was Akins, who along with council members Angelo, Martin and Thomas voted against adding a rent subsidy program to the city's 1977 Community Development grant.

Akins said for the Midland protest against the HUD requirement for a rental assistance plan, as a condition for the Community Development grant, to be meaningful, it would be necessary to go through the application process all over again.

Of his decision Councilman Marcum said, "Although we have disliked the regulation that HUD has tried to impose on our community, they (the Community Development funds) are block grants to our community...and our community should not be held from the funds."

Marcum was the lone dissenter in a 5-1 council vote on July 27 to resubmit the city's $946,000 application without the rental assistance plan. The vote followed a notification that without the plan the area office of HUD in

Farmers block delivery trucks at warehouses

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — The men who produced the goods prevented their delivery Tuesday as angry Texas farmers parked heavy tractors in front of grocery warehouses across the Panhandle to spark a nationwide strike.

The farmers' actions blocked delivery trucks at warehouses of Affiliated Food stores, Safeway and Borden Milk.

"They let us send trucks out to serve hospitals and rest homes," said Borden Milk's general manager Jim Graves, "but a lot of schools are not going to receive milk today."

Three large tractors rumbled to the driveway at the Affiliated warehouse early in the morning and blocked it.

"All our stores have been called," said Affiliated spokesman Lewis McNeice. "Nothing will be delivered today except perishable items, meat and milk. No dry food products."

McNeice said the action of the farmers would affect about 80 stores in the Panhandle area.

Graves said about 150 stores would be affected by the creamery's failure to supply milk.

Nearly 300 tractors rolled into Amarillo from nearby farms and scores of others were reported on the way to Dimmit, Pampa and other towns where similar blockades were planned.

Police said there had been no incidents of violence.

The Panhandle has been a strong supporter of American Agriculture, the Colorado-based group that is organizing the farmers' strike.

Farmers are protesting low prices paid for their products. They claim that the cost of producing exceeds the prices they get for their grain.

Until Tuesday, the proposed strike had received little support in most of Texas with the farm unions — the Texas Farm Bureau and the Texas Farmers Union — declining to offer official support to the strike. Only a few hundred showed up for a rally earlier this month in Irving's Texas Stadium that was expected to draw thousands.

Meanwhile, in Washington, Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland stuck by his earlier statements that he does not think the farm strike will have any effect on consumer food prices or grocery prices.

He said Tuesday on the eve of the strike that there has been "no change" in his view that the protest movement will fail to gain its goals.

The Agriculture Department issued a background paper Tuesday projecting the cost of food and federal farm programs if the 100 percent parity goal was reached.

Officials said the first effect "would be a steep rise in food prices coupled with a decline in consumption" of food products.

Declining examination scores 'extremely complicated' issue

By MARLEEN RAY

The problem of declining college entrance examination scores in the Midland Independent School District is "extremely complicated,' and doesn't "yield to one answer," Douglas W. Brown, assistant superintendent of instructional services, said Tuesday to the Board of Education at its regular meeting.

In a report of Scholastic Aptitude Test scores and ACT scores of Midland High School and Lee High School students from 1972 to 1976, test scores for Midland High students in 1976-77 averaged 436 for the verbal section and 493 for the math section, both on a scale from 200 to 800.

In the same year, Lee High students scored 456 in the verbal part and 498 in the math part, surpassing the Midland High student scores.

Bryant Saxon, director of program development and research, said this discrepancy may be due to the frequency distribution of the test scores. He said on the SAT verbal section more Midland High students scored on the lower end of the grading scale and less scored on the upper end. On the other hand, more Lee High students scored on the upper end of the scale than did on the lower end.

He said, on the SAT math section, more Lee High students received scores in the middle range of the scale, but Midland High students ranged in the upper end of the scale

Tax office arrangement step nearer dissolution

and MARLEEN RAY

The Midland City Council and the Midland Independent School Board each moved one step closer to ending a joint tax office arrangement in separate action taken at meetings Tuesday.

For the second time in a row, the School Board rejected a contract that had been adopted by the City Council. Both Board actions followed lengthy negotiations by representatives of the School Board, City Council, as well as representatives of Midland College and the Midland County Hospital District.

What the City Council accepted — this time — was a proposal to split the operating costs — roughly $325,000 — of the tax office between the four governing bodies by the following ratios: 53.29 percent to the school district, 27.33 percent to the city, 10.91 percent to the college district and 7.81 percent to the hospital district.

During the Nov. 22 City Council meeting a proposal whereby MISD would pick up 58 percent of the city tax office expenses, the city 23.3 percent, Midland college 10.9 percent and the hospital district 7.8 percent was approved.

During the council session Tuesday, Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. said he was reluctant for the council to take a position again unless the School Board had acted, but Councilman G. Thane Akins, who attended the contrat negotiations Friday, said the new agreement would cost the city a little more money than the first, but

'Ten-four' dates back well before CB craze

Since the CB radio craze hit the land, the 10-4 signals have peaked to the lower heavens.

The 10-4 lingo, in some circles, became a fad particularly after the shock waves of the 1973 fuel crisis and of the 55 mph speed limit overtaking the 70 mph.

Ten-four talk and "look out for Smokey Bear" jawing created a new vocabulary.

But for those uniformed and undercover men and women of the law, the 10-4 signals have been around for a long time. And they do differ from the layman's 10-4 jargon . . . CB talk.

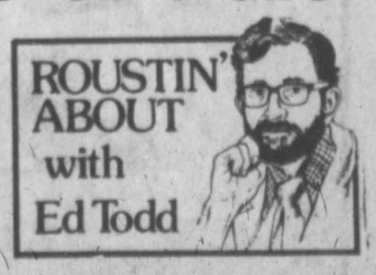
— 10-0: Caution.
— 10-4: Okay. Acknowledgement.
— 10-6: Busy — unless urgent.



— 10-7: Out of service.
— 10-8: In service. (Back to work)
— 10-10: Fight in progress.
— 10-11: Dog case. (Which may or may not be a dog fight)
— 10-12: Stand by. (Hold on)
— 10-13: Weather-road report.
— 10-14: Prowler report.
— 10-16: Domestic problem.

Odessa store robbed

ODESSA—A man in his late 40s or early 50s robbed the U-Tote-Em, a convenience store, at 2608 Kermit Highway at approximately 9:51 p.m. Tuesday, Capt. Jack Fillyaw of the police department said.

Fillyaw said a male, about 180 pounds, entered the convenience store last night and produced a revolver, demanding money from the manager of the store, Raymond Dowell of Odessa. The man took an undetermined amount of money from the store manager, he said.

After the man walked out of the store, Dowell tried to stop him by firing shots at him from a pistol he had, but it is not known whether the man was injured, Fillyaw said. Dowell was unharmed.

Fillyaw said the incident is still under investigation.

Senate drops tax credit for tuition to clear way for action on SS bill

By JIM LUTHER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate conferees agreed today to drop a $250 income-tax credit for college tuition, clearing the way for Congress to take final action Thursday on a major Social Security bill.

Sen. Russell B. Long, chairman of the delegation, persuaded Sen. William V. Roth, R-Del., chief sponsor of the credit, to put it aside until next year. Roth told the conferees he agreed only because he knew the full Congress would approve the credit if given the chance.

"I can assure you that this Roth amendment will be around until we get some action," Roth said.

The Senate conferees gave in on the credit amendment because it became increasingly clear that the Carter administration and the House leadership would not accept it. Such a stalemate could torpedo the Social Security bill, which is designed to insure the solvency of the huge pension system.

Both houses of Congress now are expected to take final votes on Social Security on Thursday and then adjourn for the year.

Social Security is in deep financial trouble. The pending bill would correct most of the problems with a tax increase that would cost workers and their employers $227 billion over the next decade.

There is no compelling reason the bill has to be passed this year. But President Carter and Democratic congressional leaders want the bill out of the way before the 1978 election campaign, which could discourage many congressmen from voting for a tax increase.

There was increasing evidence that Senate members of the conference committee would give in and allow the credit to be stripped from the bill. Three of the 10 senators on the panel have indicated publicly they would turn against the amendment in the interest of clearing Social Security.

Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., chairman of the conference committee, said he thinks a Social Security bill will emerge this year. But Sen. William V. Roth, R-Del., chief sponsor of the tax credit, said he will be satisfied with nothing less than a House vote on that provision.

House Republicans are trying to figure out the best way to get such a vote.

One proposal being considered would remove the Roth amendment, as most House Democrats on the conference committee insist. But when the compromise bill gets to the floor of the House, Republicans would ask their colleagues to send it back to the committee with instructions to accept the Roth amendment.

Leptophos workers' health hurt

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Federal occupational health officials said Tuesday they have uncovered widespread neurological and psychological problems among workers who handled the pesticide leptophos at a plant owned by the Velsicol Chemical Company in Houston.

Officials of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health also charged during a Senate subcommittee hearing that Velsicol withheld vital information from federal inspectors about health problems the company's leptophos workers were having.

The Chicago-based chemical company was indicted Monday by a federal grand jury on charges in an unrelated case that it concealed laboratory test results from the Environmental Protection Agency that indicated two of its best selling pesticides might cause cancer.

A Velsicol spokesman Tuesday said he was not prepared to comment on the NIOSH testimony on leptophos. He said, however, that the chemical company's policy was to cooperate fully with federal health inspectors.

Velsicol's problems were further compounded during the hearing yesterday on pesticide control before the Senate subcommittee on agricultural research and general legislation. NIOSH officials told subcommittee chairman Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., they recently learned of still more health problems among workers exposed to the pesticide DBCP at Velsicol's Eldorado, Ark., plant.

Dr. Channing Myer, an official of the NIOSH hazard evaluation and technical assistance branch, said he received preliminary information from the company that about half of a group of 24 workers who handled DBCP at the Arkansas plant showed abnormally low sperm counts in medical examinations.

DBCP is a pesticide which has been widely used on fruit and vegetable crops to kill worms and other soil insects. Last July DBCP manufacturing workers were reported to have been made sterile by the chemical at the Occidental Chemical Co.'s plant in Lathrop, Calif., and Dow Chemical Co.'s DBCP plant in Magnolia, Ark.

Velsicol's spokesman said Tuesday that his company manufactured the pesticide at Eldorado, Ark., plant for only two months in 1975. He said the company's report of low sperm counts among the Eldorado workers was part of a study which he called "inconclusive and still going on."

Dow officials announced Tuesday that some of the workers at their Magnolia plant who had been made sterile by DBCP appeared to be regaining their fertility. The company announced "significant" improvements in sperm counts in seven of 47 pesticide workers whose counts last summer were at or near zero.

However, some doubt was cast upon the Dow results by NIOSH officials Tuesday who said Dow was using a standard of 20 million sperm per cubic centimeter as a "normal" reading. The NIOSH officials said the Dow standard was low and that a "normal" sperm count should be about 40 million sperm per cubic centimeter.

Testifying before the Senate subcommittee Tuesday on leptophos, Dr. Bobby Craft, director of the NIOSH division of surveillance, hazard evaluation and field studies, said that among 155 Velsiocl workers tested from the company's Bayport plant in Houston 63 showed abnormalities.

The tests included nerve and muscle functions as well as psychological examinations to determine performance in thinking, perceiving and carrying out certain simple tasks. Eleven of the workers showed nerve and reflex problems while the rest had a wide variety of psychological problems, Craft said.

Dr. Charles Xintaras, NIOSH's leptophos project coordinator, said the abnormalities found in the medical tests were "significantly higher" than those found among a similar group not exposed to the chemical.

Craft said that during a visit by NIOSH investigators to the Bayport plant in February 1976 the NIOSH officials found that two of 26 persons showed mild neurological problems.

"What we did not know at the time was that at least 12 cases of serious neurological disorders had been identified in June of 1975 by a medical consultant to the company," Craft said. NIOSH was not informed of the additional cases by the company and only learned of them from another government agency in September of last year, he said.

Pentagon officials didn't realize gravity of breach

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pentagon officials, apparently kept in the dark for 18 months by West Germany, say they didn't realize the seriousness of a NATO security breach until they read published reports this week.

Defense officials said NATO informed the Pentagon last year there was a security problem, but gave no indication it was as big as disclosed by a Frankfurt newspaper.

On the basis of what he called "sketchy information," one Pentagon official said, "We don't believe there has been a serious compromise of U.S. weapons technology or other classified U.S. information."

But he stressed that the assessment should not be given too much weight because of the lack of information available to Pentagon officials.

The Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung reported Monday that an East German spy ring passed more than 1,000 secret NATO and West German documents to the communists, including assessments of Western and Soviet bloc military strength and details on new weapons and equipment.

Navy Capt. Kurt Fischer, a defense ministry spokesman, said the newspaper account was "essentially correct."

Officials say the United States first learned of the possibility of a security breach after three West German defense ministry employees were arrested in June 1976. Word of this came from NATO security officials, it was said.

This October, more than a year later, the NATO security office told the Pentagon the situation was "more serious than originally thought," officials said. Even then, however, there was no tone of urgency or indication that the problem was as bad as pictured in the subsequent newspaper reports.

Pentagon officials offered little speculation on why the German defense ministry did not keep American military officials informed of the extent of the spy operation and its possible consequences.

But they acknowledged that Defense Secretary Harold Brown was not informed of the depth of the military security breach last week when he met in Brussels with other NATO defense chiefs, including West Germany's Georg Leber.

Suit filed by atheist

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Starting early on her "year of litigation," atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair has filed a federal court suit to force state officials to remove a nativity scene from the Capitol rotunda.

Mrs. O'Hair said Tuesday that the scene is "sectarian" and as such, violates the principle of church-state separation.

"If they are going to have this, they should have Hanuka . . . and a representation of the birth of Krishna," she told reporters.

She also asked the court to award her, her son Jon and "the class they represent" $9 million in punitive damages from the defendants, Gov. Dolph Briscoe, Attorney General John Hill and Homer Foerster, director of the State Board of Control.

Mrs. O'Hair held a news conference next to the 20-foot Christmas tree in the Capitol. The nativity scene is just beneath the bottom branches.

She said the tree doesn't offend her because it "is pagan and we are happy to see pagan symbols."

Asked how an atheist could accept even pagan symbols, Mrs. O'Hair said, "Everybody understands the pagan gods were made up by pagans. It's time everyone understands that Christian gods were made up by the Christians."

Her suit joins one filed previously in federal court to stop the Austin City Council from opening its weekly meetings with prayer.

She said Texans and Austinites could look forward to "a year of litigation" to end all religious activities by government.

"If you think the Negroes put up a good fight, or the women, wait until you see the atheists," Mrs. O'Hair said.

Her suit says maintaining the nativity scene or creche in the Capitol amounts to an unconstitutional "establishment of religion."

She also asked the court to require Briscoe, Hill and Foerster to answer 20 questions in writing, such as the meaning of the nativity scene "in Christian historical tradition."

Council votes against application for grant

As HUD creeped along with what to many Midlanders — on both sides of the issue — was a torturous denial process, Councilwoman Howbert joined Marcum in a vote to add the plan on Sept. 13. The majority of the council, however, again voted against adding the subsidy.

Mrs. Howbert said Tuesday that her main concern in voting for the addition of the rent subsidy program this summer was to preserve a city-run housing rehabilitation program. Now, with the recent creation of the Midland Commission for Local Development by Mayor Angelo she had "great hopes" that the project could be carried on locally, without federal funds. Councilwomen Howbert said HUD guidelines for Community Development funds were written for large cities like New York, not for smaller ones like Midland, and that changes should be made in the guidelines to accomodate the smaller cities.

[illegible] said he a "wasted effort" for the city to apply for the HUD funds and that although the publicity factor cited by Akins has some merit, he said he could not justify the efforts on the part of the city staff to prepare a fourth-year HUD application.

Angelo and Thomas said that from all they have been able to learn about HUD, the guidelines were becoming more stringent. And Angelo pointed out that since Midland had lagged a year in its program participation, a new application would be singled out for even tighter scrutiny for compliance with federal regulations.

By the same 4-2 margin, the council also decided not to apply for $230,000 in "supplemental" Community Developments, made available either to the city or county governments by virtue of the city losing the original $946,000 grant. As these funds had the same requirement for a rent subsidy program as a condition for acceptance, Angelo said he saw little point in applying now.

In other action the council approved on first reading an ordinance establishing regulations and requirements for motor vehicle wreckers to be used by the police department in the handling of abondoned, improperly parked, and other vehicles normally removed to the city pound and also the regulations and requirements for those wreckers serving as the on-duty wrecker for the police department to respond to accidents.

The ordinance authorized the chief of police to solicit bids for such service and specified that a successful bidder must have a minimum of two wreckers with drivers available for service on a 24-hour basis. It also defined weight and equipment standards that the equipment must meet. The ordinance allowed the chief of police to remove from the duty roster any wrecker service that he determines is charging prices for its service that are substantially in excess of the usual and customary fees charged and also to eliminate a wrecker service for unsatisfactory service.

and the lower end of the scale with not too many scoring in the middle. Thus, the scores on both sections of the test averaged higher for Lee High students than for Midland High.

Compared to the average scored by all students in the state and the nation, both local high schools received higher scores for 1976-77. The state average was 424 in verbal and 464 in math, while the national mean was 429 in verbal and 470 in math. However, Midland school district students fell below Ector County Independent School District students in their test scores that same period. Midland students averaged 447 in verbal and 496 in math, while Odessa students scored 450 in verbal and 498 in math.

Saxon did not know how many students in the Ector school district took the SAT or what their grade point averages and other similar information were.

In 1975-76, Midland students received scores of 449 in verbal and 498 in math, while Odessa students averaged 452 in verbal and 496 in math. In 1972-73, Midland students scored 448 in verbal and 488 in math, and Odessa students averaged 450 in verbal and 487 in math.

Saxon said school officials haven't come up with anything concrete about the cause of the scores. He pointed out that overall, the Midland students who took the SAT had a better than B grade point average in English, math, foreign language, physical science and social studies. They hoped to earn at least a B.A. or B.S. degree in college. About 86 percent came from families who earned $15,000 or more a year.

On the other hand, more Midland students taking the ACT in 1976-77 did not aspire to earning a B.A. or B.S. degree and planned to take not more than two years in college. Saxon noted that more girls than boys took the ACT at both high schools. At Lee High, 114 girls and 74 boys took the exam, and at Midland High, 66 girls and 45 boys took it.

In 1976-77, Lee High students achieved a composite score of 18.3, and Midland High students received a composite score of 17.3. The state average composite score was 16.8, and the national score was 18.4. The ACT includes sections in English, math, social studies and natural science.

Saxon said female students at both local high schools scored lower than the male students in the math and natural science sections. He explained this difference may be caused by girls usually not being encouraged to pursue math and science studies.

Assistant Superintendent Brown said he thought the school district ought to "concentrate on looking for answers on policies affecting the upper level students" to help improve test scores. He said people are apt "to be enchanted" with establishing minimum standards, but he doesn't believe those standards have any effect on students who take college entrance exams, the top students of their class.

Brown said, "Maybe the use of fundamental school concepts have application to top students and the program they're in."

He suggested a more rigorous criteria for students who want to be in the honors program. "We need to sort out the average achiever from the honors student," he said.

Honors students, he said, should have to work hard to get into the honors program and should have higher achievement levels in order to stay in the program. According to school officials, the number of honors classes has increased tremendously.

It's not hard now for students to carry several honors courses, Brown said, because the classes aren't difficult enough.

At the end of the report, the school board authorized school officials to continue to study what is causing declining test scores and to find out what to do about it.

Runway mishap leaves jet stuck

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — All 77 passengers and crewmen escaped injury Tuesday night when their DC9 jet skidded off a Ryan Airport runway and got stuck in the mud, officials said.

Workers were trying today to free the Texas International Airlines jet, which airport firemen said was bogged down 150 feet off the end of a 5,800-foot runway.

The cause of the accident, which occurred during bad weather, was not immediately known.

The plane had been landing at the end of a flight from Houston. Since Baton Rouge was the final stop, no passengers had to be diverted to other flights.

The runway was closed, but a staffer at the Ryan Airport control tower said the airport was continuing to use its other runway, which measures 6,900 feet.

Angelo denies deduction plan

By JIM STEINBERG

Approximately 30 policeman — including two of the department's three captains — were present, when at 6:15 p.m. Tuesday, Attorney Robert F. Griem of the International Brotherhood of Police Officers' national organization asked the Midland City Council to grant police union members here payroll deductions for their dues.

Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr., citing a long-established city policy, flatly denied the request. Angelo said that the city has "a very clear-cut policy regarding deductions from payroll checks...no deductions are allowed unless required by law unless it is to the benefit of all the employees of the city."

During his presentation to the council, Griem of Burbank, Calif., said the deductions would be used to provide an insurance plan and legal assistance for the member officers.

In September and October all but three men of the 122-man Midland police department joined Local 584 of the IBPO, Griem said.

During his presentation to the council, Griem charged the city with "petty harassment" by placing the item concerning the police last on a 67 item agenda.

He said that during a telephone converstation with Mayor Angelo last Thursday he was told it would "not be in the interests of the police officers or the organization" for him to show up at the meeting.

Later Mayor Angelo said that during the telephone conversation he told Griem there would be no point in coming to Midland because he could tell him (Griem) by telephone that what he was asking was against city policy.

Griem said that when he and other out-of-town representatives came by the council's 10 a.m. session, they were told by Mayor Angelo to come back at 6 p.m.

Later, Angelo said he wanted Griem back at the later time so that more police would be able to attend the meeting. Angelo added that he "resented the implication" that police do not now have round-the-clock protection via their life insurance and he pointed out that the city attorney's office has always gone to bat for officers sued as the result of a job-related incident.

Robert F. Griem

"We are not preventing them in any way from getting additional insurance coverage on their own," Angelo added.

Griem said the allowing the deduction was nothing more "than a common courtesy."

After the council meeting, several officers said they were not as surprised at the mayor's decision as the they were at the "shabby" treatment they had received at the council meeting.

"This has strengthened us, brought us closer together," Griem said after his council appearance. "The union would have gone away, if the council had granted this request. Now it will grow in strength," Griem said.

Several council members expressed their surprise at the police officers' seeming reaction to the request denial.

"We've done so much for them...like the police car program," one council member said. Griem said there is no legal recourse to the council's decision. He added, however, that he could think of nowhere else where this request by IBPO memberships had been denied.

"I'll be back," Griem said just before walking out the doors of City Hall. "There's a lot that needs doing here."

Tax office arrangement step nearer dissolution

that it was still "a good deal for everybody."

He urged the council to adopt the agreement and pointed out that "we (the city) have conceded in every way at every meeting," adding that this second meeting should be the last.

Following the unanimous vote accepting this second proposal, Mayor Angelo instructed City Manager James Brown to call MISD Superintendent Dr. James H. Mailey and tell him the city had taken a final position on the contract agreement.

Instead of accepting the second proposal, however, the School Board, by a 4-3 vote, Tuesday authorized Board President Johnny R. Warren and Edward E. Runyan to negotiate a more acceptable contract with a city representative. Mailey was also asked to attend the negotiations — assuming there would be more.

The need to renegotiate the tax office agreement was brought about by the recent entry of the hospital district into the local tax scene.

Mrs. Page recommended the board not accept the contract at this point. She said even though the cost of operating the tax office is shared by four parties, the school district here still is paying as much as Ector County Independent School District does for running its own office. The Ector County school district has budgeted $167,000 for its office's operations for this school year. Midland school district would have to pay $162,916 for running the tax office if it had approved the contract.

Mrs. Page said, "I think the city has seen this as an opportunity to them to not pay as much" for the cost of running the tax office. She spoke out in favor of a contract proposed by Reagan Legg of the Midland College Board of Trustees, which split the tax office's costs between the college district and the hospital district based on income generated by the two. The school district then would pay 60 percent of the remaining costs and the city would pay 40 percent.

On the other hand, Sparks said he saw "no reason" to accept the proposed contract approved by the city council. He said he felt it was in the "best interest of the taxpayer" to get the question of the operation of the tax office out of the way.

However, Warren said he didn't see what the big hurry" was about. He said if the proposed contract was not what the board members wanted, then they wouldn't have to accept it just because the city council did.

Warren said he thought taxpayers outside the city limits would be penalized if the school district had to take on "too high a load" of the cost burden.

Runyan said if the board agrees to the proposed contract, the school district would exceed its budgeted amount for the operation of the tax office. The district has allocated $160,000 for tax assessment and collection for 1977-78.

He also pointed out that the cost burden of operating the office would decrease by 8.41 percent for the city, but the burden would lessen by 1.31 percent for the school district if the members approved the contract. He said it "doesn't seem fair" for the school's costs to decrease by a lesser amount than the city's.

Fair skies continue

As the first day of winter creeps closer and closer, Midland should continue to have fair skies through Thursday with Thursday's high temperature in the middle 70s, the weatherman said.

The low temperature tonight is expected to drop to the upper 30s. Southwesterly winds at 5 to 10 mph are predicted for tonight.

Tuesday's high temperature was 65 degrees, and the overnight low temperature was 34 degrees, the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal said.

Some frost was reported this morning in Rankin and Big Lake. Otherwise, skies were clear and temperatures were on the cold side in all area towns.

Clear skies, light winds and cool temperatures prevailed in Texas today as a weak high pressure area settled over the state during the night.

Forecasts called for fair skies and warming temperatures today. Highs were expected to be in the middle 60s in North Texas and the 70s over the remainder of the state. Gusty winds were expected in the Panhandle during the afternoon, but most of the state could expect calm weather.

Early morning temperatures ranged from 21 at Marfa in Southwest Texas to 54 at Galveston on the coast.

Some early morning readings included 29 at Amarillo, 30 at Wichita Falls, 45 at Texarkana, 38 at Dallas-Fort Worth, 47 at Austin, 38 at Lufkin, 42 at Houston, 50 at Corpus Christi and Brownsville, 41 at Del Rio, 35 at San Angelo, 29 at El Paso and 34 at Lubbock.

A large band of thunderstorms moved from Alabama, across Texas and the Gulf Coast Tuesday night in advance of an eastern cold front.

Five tornadoes were reported in southeastern Texas and one touched down in southern Mississippi.

Use of hypnosis in investigations being challenged

By GENE BLAKE
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Use of hypnosis to job the memories of witnesses in criminal investigations is being challenged in the California Supreme Court on the ground that the technique is no more scientifically reliable than lie detectors or voiceprints.

Hypnosis is being used increasingly as an investigative tool, particularly by the Los Angeles Police Department. It has been employed to enhance to recall of possible witnesses in the so-called Hillside Strangler slayings.

But attorneys for a Santa Barbara murder defendant, backed by a state association of defense lawyers and leading experts in hypnosis, are asking the court to apply some brakes in what appears to be the first major challenge to the practice. At a minimum, they are seeking a ruling that testimony induced by hypnosis is not admissible without a showing that the technique is generally accepted in the scientific community. This is the test now required for admitting lie detector and voiceprint evidence, but so far no such showing has been accepted by higher courts.

California Attorneys for Criminal Justice, an association of more than $1,500 criminal defense lawyers which is seeking to enter the case as a friend of the court, would go even further.

The association's brief asks the court to rule that hypnotism cannot be used even as investigative tool, except under court order and medically supervised and videotaped conditions.

The association supports its position with affidavits by two of the world's leading authorities on hypnosis. They are Dr. Martin T. Orne, president of the International Society of Hypnosis and senior author of the Encyclopaedia Britannica's section of hypnosis, and his predecessor as president of the international society, Ernest R. Hilgard.

They agreed that what a hypnotized subject thinks he recalls from memory may be totally inacurrate, and should not be accepted without independent verification.

Deluged with hundreds of pages of legal and medical material when petition for a hearing was filed Nov. 16, the Court extended until Dec. 29 the deadline for deciding whether it will accept the case.

The vehicle for the legal challenge is the case of John Philip Quaglino, convicted last year after three trials for the murder of his estranged wife, Dyanne.

Mrs. Quaglino was struck and killed on the morning of Sept. 10, 1975, by a car which did not stop. There were no witnesses, but based on a description by a person who had seen a car in the area, the death vehicle was located.

It was traced to a used car dealer, Myron Jensen, who had sold it the previous May to a man who gave his name as Richard W. Bellmore, shown a 12-year-old picture of Quaglino. Jensen said it "struck a bell," but he could not identify it.

Jensen then agreed to undergo hypnosis by Dr. Frank Gott, a Santa Barbara psychiatrist. After hypnosis, Jensen picked Quaglino's picture from a stack of seven photographs as being the man to whom he had sold the car.

Jensen subsequently picked Quaglino out of a lineup and identified him a preliminary hearing and the three murder trials. But he admitted the identification was "the product of hypnosis."

There were other suspicious circumstances suggesting the Quaglino might be the murderer, but the identification by Jensen was the key evidence linking him to the crime.

Two juries deadlocked but a third convicted him.

At the third trial, Gott, who had hypnotized Jensen, insisted that noting occuring between the sale of the car and the hypnotic session should have affected Jensen's recall.

That was disputed by two defense experts, both of whom testified that showing Jensen a single photograph could have been suggestive and might have contaminated the procedure. The result may have been memory falsification.

The experts' word for it is "confabulation" — the construction of events which did not happen to fill in memory gaps, sometimes merely to please the hypnotist.

House plans inquiry into Carter's space program

By GEORGE C. WILSON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The House next month will conduct the first broad congressional inquiry into the scope and direction of President Carter's space program, Chairman Olin E. Teague, D-Texas, of the House Science and Technology Committee said.

Teague said in a telephone interview he intends to look into civilian and military space activities, including the anti-satellite weaponry the Pentagon is developing for fear the Soviets are ahead in this area.

The civilian space program — run by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration — has been shrinking, since the Apollo manned landings on the moon, while the military's space program has been growing.

"We keep hearing by the grape vine," Teague said, that the Carter administration has ordered the civilian space program to retreat to save money. Teague said he wants to examine the administration's plan to see if this is true.

NASA administrator [illegible] Frosch and Maj. Gen. Thomas P. Stafford, the former Air Force astronaut who commands the Air Force Flight Test Center at Edwards Air Force Base, California, will be called toward the end of the hearings to testify respectively on the civilian and military space programs, Teague said.

The House space committee chairman said the hearings would start sometime in January but no date has been set.

NASA leaders, worried about the civilian space agency's diminishing appropriations, commissioned the New York public relations firm of Burson-Marsteller last year study [illegible] appeal in [illegible]

The firm, in its report, said NASA had failed to focus the work it was doing "in the sense of any coherent image. The picture of NASA that is in focus is big budget, big spectaculars and, bottom line, a hundred pounds of moon rocks..."

Former NASA Administrator James. E. Webb, who ran the agency in its heydey of the Apollo program, was asked in an interview what he thought could rejuvenate the civilian space program.

Stressing that he was not "looking over my shoulder" at his successors and passing judgment, Webb said he felt the big opportunity was "for us do the work of the world" with space technology.

U.S. satellites could help the world manage its food and water, discover minerals and other resources, Webb said, under an international program that would attract other nations as long as they could see the direct benefits to themselves.

Pentagon leaders have been warning in recent months they must step up military space preparations, partly to protect the satellites used for communicating and navigating. Defense Secretary Harold Brown, for example, said on Oct. 6 that he found it "troublesome" that the Soviets had apparently perfected a space weapon that could destroy "some" U.S. satellites.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff, in their military posture statement for fiscal 1978, warned that "the heretofore accepted sanctuary of space may be jeopardized." Discussing the Soviets, the chiefs said, "In terms of space weapon capability they are ahead and are likely to continue in the lead for the next several years."

NASA's budget for space activities alone, as distinguished from other work such as airplane research, fell from $5.17 billion in fiscal 1965 to $3.6 billion this fiscal year. The Pentagon's space budget rose form $489.5 million in fiscal 1959 to $2.77 billion this fiscal year.

Carter's civilian space policy so far has been to encourage NASA to exploit the technologynhand rather than start any new bold programs. He has also said he hopes the United States and Soviet Union can agree to keep space off-limits to hostile action, such as destroying each other's satellites.

Teague said the House space committee will analyze during its inquiry the administration's investments in civilian and military space activities.

Two-party system lives--barely--in Sierra Leone

By DAVID LAMB
Los Angeles Times

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone — The two-party system is alive today in Sierra Leone. But its heartbeat is faint and Africa's most exclusive club may soon lose another member.

Of the 44 black African nations, only Botswana, Gambia, Senegal, Upper Volta and Sierra Leone have legitimate, active opposition parties. President Siaka Stevens, however, argues that impoverished Sierra Leone is no longer in a position to afford such luxuries.

He contends, not without justification, that the two-party system contributes to tribal friction by dividing the people on political as well as ethnic lines, and that it wastes too much national energy. There is no reason, he says, why a one-party state cannot guarantee individual liberties and fundamental rights.

Given Stevens' view, it is remarkably that the opposition party — which had boycotted the elections in 1973 — reemerged as a viable voice of at least muted dissent in last May's election, capturing 15 to 95 parliamentary seats.

The rebirth of the Sierra Leone People's Party came at a time when the trend in Africa was toward a consolidation of authoritarian one-party rule. Three countries — Nigeria, Ghana and Upper Volta — are making plans to transfer power from military to civilian governments, but 19 countries still are run by the military and 19 others have had the same president since independence.

Elections in Sierra Leone generally resemble civil wars. One thing that can be said for the May balloting is that it took fewer casualties than usual. The government put the death toll at seven during the campaign. Reliable unofficial sources placed it at from 25 to 200.

Candidates were waylaid, kidnapped and forced to withdraw. The opposition newspaper was forbidden to publish. Pitched battles swirled through the streets between members of the People's Party and Stevens' ruling All Peoples' Congress. A national emergency was declared and a dawn-to-dusk curfew was invoked.

In the central Sierra Leone town of Bo, an opposition stronghold, the balloting was postponed because of the violence.

In Bo as elsewhere, Stevens' paramilitary presidential guard — an ill-disciplined, Cuban-trained organization known as the Internal Security Unit — zealously intimdated and beat opposition members.

Yet for all the electoral excesses, the 3 million people of this South Carolina-sized West African country have more freedoms than all but a handful of peoples on the continent.

They do not disappear in the night; they are not tbrtured in jail. The opposition publishes its newspaper, The People, when times are calm. The courts function properly and eight people convicted of planning a coup were executed in 1975 only after receiving due process of law.

The modern history of Sierra Leone, which gained its independence from Great Britain in 1961, has been turbulent, and Stevens, 72, has proved himself to be one of Africa's most durable and dexterous politicians. He has survived house arrest, imprisonment, exile in Guinea and assassination and coup attempts.

Sierra Leone has the distinction of being the only country in Africa to state a coup to bring back civilian rule. That brought Stevens out of exile and into power in April, 1968. In the preceding year the generals had staged a successful coup, but were overthrown by other senior officers who in turn were overthrown by a sergeants' revolt.

In the early days of Stevens' rule Sierra Leone was living high off diamond production, which brought in more than $60 million annually. Today Sierra Leone has little to show for that period's prosperity. Diamond production has fallen drastically and the country is lurching from one economic crisis to another.

After the 1973 election, Stevens hoped to create a one-party state by evolution. He appointed opposition members to ambassadorships and wooed others into his own party.

Fast, exciting action

Last Friday's groundbreaking ceremony marking the start of construction on the $10 million expansion and renovation project at Midland Memorial Hospital was a great and meaningful occasion — a Christmas gift, if you please, for every man, woman and child of the community.

It was a long-awaited event, but one which most certainly was worth waiting for.

It is recalled that the groundbreaking for the original Midland Memorial almost 30 years ago was an equally noteworthy and exciting event for the residents of the then much smaller city. Many citizens had worked long and hard and had contributed generously to make a dream come true. And through the years, the hospital has served faithfully and well.

Limited expansion and remodeling projects were made during the intervening years, but there came a time two or three years ago when it became evident, due to Midland's rapid growth, that a large expansion and renovation program was essential if Midland Memorial was to continue to serve the purpose for which it was intended.

It also became evident to community leaders that no longer could the hospital expect voluntary contributions in sufficient amounts to fund the required expansion and renovation. It took a lot of research, planning and hard work on the part of hospital officials and others over a period of time, but they came up with a plan to create a hospital district and to issue bonds to finance the necessary program as recommended. Citizens approved the plan as presented, and here we are at the construction stage.

Sure it was hard work, and time consuming, but the overall effort certainly was worth it, as everyone who worked in the project will attest. And with the completion of the project, the entire community can and will glory in the realization of another dream come true, while praising those far-sighted leaders who labored so long and diligently to bring it about.

And this makes it all worthwhile.

The final barrier to starting construction on the expansion and renovation project was hurdled last Thursday when the Texas Health Facilities Commission approved a certificate of need for the hospital. An $8.5 million contract with Area Builders for the construction project was included in the certificate of need.

This was all that the hospital authorities were waiting on. They had been more than busy since the hospital election in completing and approving plans, in making all other arrangements in connection with the big job. They were aware of the urgency of the situation and they definitely had not been fooling around.

This is why it was possible to hold the groundbreaking and launch construction almost immediately upon receipt of the certificate of need by the appropriate state agency. And this is just what residents of the hospital district desired, once the district was created and the bonds approved. Action is the name of the game. Commendation is due all persons and groups who have worked so hard to make it all possible.

It all adds up to a great and meaningful community-wide happening of which all residents may be proud.

As the late Addison Wadley used to say, "Midland always was a good town!"

Judge Sirica cited

The Philadelphia Daily News, in commenting on the recent retirement of Judge John J. Sirica, said he now will work when he feels like it and still will pick up his $54,400 annual salary.

"He deserves every penny of it," the Philadelphia newspaper said.

"Everybody who can read or hear knows who he is now."

"He's the judge," the Daily News continued, "who stayed 'Maximum John' when the big shots came before him. He was the force behind the pressure that drove Richard Nixon from the presidency and exacted punishment from Nixon's henchmen. It's not his fault that the biggest ones got away.

"As citizens, we can only hope his retirement will be an active one."

HEMISPHERE REPORT:

Latin Americans don't know each other well

By WILLIAM GIANDONI
Copley News Service

William Giandoni

Latin Americans sometimes seem to know as little about their hemisphere neighbors as do North Americans.

Venezuela's president, Carlos Andres Perez, brought up the point recently, after making a quick trip to Brazil, Venezuela's neighbor to the south.

Perez checked back into Venezuelan history and discovered that he was the first president of his country to have visited Brazil, or so he said.

Upon his return to Caracas, Perez sounded pleasantly surprised by his encounter with Brazil and Brazilians, and he seemed to think that there is ample opportunity for at least closer business and trade relations between the two countries.

As a practical matter, though, there will be little chance of much people-to-people contact between Brazilians and Venezuelans, other than those wealthy enough to be able to travel by airplane.

There are no highway or railroad links between Venezuela and Brazil. The 900 miles of border they share is mostly undeveloped jungle that has not even been thoroughly explored.

Too, there is a language barrier in that Venezuelans speak Spanish while Brazilians speak Portuguese.

True, of course, educated Brazilians seem to have little difficulty understanding the Spanish language, but the reverse is not so. For the most part, those Spanish-speaking Latin Americans who do not live in populated areas along Brazil's borders with Uruguay, Argentina, Paraguay, Bolivia or Peru have difficulty understanding Portuguese.

That, of course, makes for considerable misunderstanding elsewhere in the hemisphere about relations between Brazil and its neighbors.

In fact, it appears quite easy for reporters who are unaware of how well persons living on both sides of Brazil's border get along with each other to write occasional "scare" stories about the Brazilian "invasion" of neighboring countries.

When a careful check is made of the reports they normally turn out to be references to non-documented Brazilian workers who move back and forth across the often unguarded, poorly surveyed borders when job opportunities arise.

But Latin American ignorance of Latin America is not just limited to a lack of knowledge of Brazil.

Even educators and prominent editorial commentators seem to have short memories, assuming they once knew something of the recent history of Latin America.

One such, writing in the newspaper Excelsior of Mexico City after having attended the 16th Latin American Sociology Congress in Quito, Ecuador, declared that "Latin America has been scourged since 1973 (the military coup in Chile) by an anti-democratic, militarist offensive."

If the writer meant that the Chilean armed forces ousted the Marxist government of President Salvador Allende a little over four years ago, he should have said so. If he meant that the military government in Chile is shooting innocent people in the streets, he was wrong, completely.

Franz-Josef Strauss, leader of West Germany's Christian-Social Union, visited Santiago recently and commented upon departing that "Chile is more peaceful than Argentina or Brazil."

Of course, Strauss' statement stirred up some unfavorable comment, particularly in those countries that have been convinced that military governments are scourging Latin America.

Another instance where misinformation or ignorance seems to be poisoning people's minds throughout the hemisphere is the matter of U.S. support for the military regimes that are in power in most of the South American countries.

To hear the Marxists tell it, the presidents of Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, Paraguay and Peru are little more than U.S. puppets. Yet those same Marxists ridicule U.S. diplomacy when, for example, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance or his deputies fail in their efforts to get one country or another to renounce its ambitions to achieve nuclear power status or amend its human rights policy to conform with President Jimmy Carter's thinking on the matter.

The truth of the matter is that the only puppet or satellite country, in the Americas is Communist Cuba. The rest of the American republics are proudly sovereign nations.

Philippine exile accuses Marcos

By JACK ANDERSON and LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — A prominent Philippine exile leader has accused dictator Ferdinand Marcos of stooping to a vicious form of blackmail in an attempt to enlist his support of the martial law Marcos has clamped on his countrymen.

In an affidavit Sergio Osmena Jr. swore that on three occassions Marcos emissaries used his imprisoned son as a weapon to obtain his endorsement of the martial law imposed in 1972. Osmena ran against Marcos in the island nation's last free elections in 1969.

Osmena's son and several others were seized by the military in 1972 on what are widely regarded as trumped-up charges of plotting to assassinate Marcos. Osmena himself would also have been rounded up had he not come to the United States a few weeks earlier. From Los Angeles, he has become a rallying point for democratic opposition to the iron-fisted Marcos.

Osmena's affidavit says the blackmail attempts began in 1973 when Anelito Mutuc, former Philippine ambassador to the United States and a Marcos crony, told him the dictator was willing "to let bygones be bygones" in return for an endorsement of martial law. Osmena spurned the proposal.

The following year, the former Philippine senator said under oath, his daughter brought him a message from Marcos' press mouthpiece Francisco Tatad, asking Osmena to patch up the quarrel with Marcos. Again his son and martial law were mentioned and again Osmena refused.

In 1975, the affidavit continues, another Marcos intimate, ex-Supreme Court Justice Estanisiano Fernandez, visited in Los Angeles. To win young Osmena's freedom, the jurist suggested, the father should endorse U.S. aid to the Marcos regime. Osmena did so on grounds it would help the Philippine people.

Summarized the exiled leader in his sworn statement: "I was made to understand by the aforesaid emissaries that the only way I could effect the release of my son Serge was for me to openly endorse President Marcos' martial law."

His affidavit added bitterly: "His proposal that I endorse his regime in exchange for the safety and/or release of my son (was) political blackmail of the highest order."

The story has a happy ending. Several weeks ago, Osmena's son made a daring escape from his Philippine prison and reached the United States. Until his son's escape, Osmena said, he was afraid to make public Marcos' blackmail attempts.

Footnote: A Philippine embassy spokesman told us he was "unaware" of any such tactics by Marcos and had no reason to believe they had ever occurred. He promised to cable Manila for a formal response. As of this writing, we have had no word from Marcos.

JACKIE SPEAKS: It appears that Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis got a bum rap from the press over her abrupt and highly publicized resignation from Viking Press last October.

The former First Lady resigned shortly after a New York Times article implied she was associated with the publication of a novel featuring a fictional attempt to assassinate her brother-in-law, Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass.

In defending the book, "Shall We Tell the President?" Viking President Thomas Guinzburg said he went ahead with publication because of "the generous and understanding response of Mrs. Onassis at the time we discussed the book and before the contract was signed..." He insisted to us he would never have purchased the novel without her explicit consent.

That would necessarily have been before Feburary 13 — the date Guinzburg agreed verbally to purchase publishing rights to the thriller.

But Mrs. Onassis — who has remained virtually mute on the controversy — informed us through a spokeswoman that the first she heard of the book was on March 2, when two luncheon companions disclosed the existence of the novel.

Not until then, Mrs. Onassis recounts, did she ask her boss, Guinzburg, about the book. Only then did she learn that the novel portrayed the last of the Kennedy brothers as an assassin's target. His comment to her, she remembered, was "We have a great story."

Mrs. Onassis "categorically" denies approving the book or that Guinzburg even asked for approval. She described his claim of a "generous and understanding response" as simply untrue.

In an attempt to resolve these conflicting accounts, we talked to Mrs. Onassis' luncheon companions of March 2. Both say it was evident to them that she had never heard of the publishing venture until they mentioned it. They added that there was no reason for her to dissemble with them.

Guinzburg and the author's agent, Deboreh Owen, wife of Britain's foreign minister, still dispute Mrs. Onassis' side of the story. Mrs. Owen, by phone from London, said that when she and Guinzburg agreed on the book during a trans-Atlentic phone call on February 13, she asked whether Mrs. Onassis had "cleared" the book and was told by the publisher that she had.

Geinzburg, in a further conversation with us, declared he is certain that he spoke to Mrs. Onassis prior to that because her sanction was a firm precondition of sale.

There are obviously two sides to the story. But until now, as has often been the case in the past, Mrs. Onassis' penchant for privacy has prevented her side from ever getting to the public.

Footnote: In the interest of disclosure, it should be noted that Mrs. Onassis' spokeswoman, Nancy Tuckerman, works for Doubleday, a rival firm, which has published some works by Les Whitten, a reporter for this column.

INSIDE REPORT:

Arms control theology of White House task force

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

Evans

Novak

WASHINGTON — A White House task force of scientists, whose members and findings reflect the administration's dominant arms control philosophy, has recommended that President Carter kill Defense Department plans for full development of the proposed MX mobile missile.

What makes this recommendation remarkable is a top secret Defense Department study in October rejecting the possibility that any arms control (SALT) agreement could conceivably protect the U.S. land-based Minuteman missile — a finding fully endorsed by Secretary of Defense Harold Brown. Moreover, new tests show the Soviet SS-18 missile to be more accurate than ever, further increasing the vulnerability of U.S. Minuteman silos.

Why, then, would a panel of distinguished scientists not urge the President to move rapidly toward deployment of a mobile missile? Because the key figures on the task force subscribe to a fixed theology of arms control that deplores any new weapons system as a destabilizing sin and preaches that striving for U.S./Soviet strategic parity is no salvation.

The makeup of the task force was guaranteed to oppose the MX, reflecting the arms control theology prevailing among the White House officials who selected the panel. This, in fact, is what the current SALT debate is about: can national safety be found in a policy that automatically bans new weapons, or through a policy that insists on strategic parity?

The MX panel was headed by chemist John Deutch, chief scientist for the Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) who is respected by hard-liners. But the mild-mannered Deutch is not assertive enough to win against the stacked deck: Richard Garwin (IBM), Wolfgang Panofsky (Stanford), Marvin Goldberger (Princeton) and Saul Buschbaum (Bell Laboratories), all physicists, and engineer Jack Ruina (MIT). All are ardent arms controllers.

The stacked deck, with Garwin on top as the ace, foretold the outcome. During the week of Nov. 28, a report went to the President's desk denying urgent need to do anything about the vulnerability of Minuteman silos. The scientists claimed that the Air Force, instead of seeking deterrence, is pushing the MX for a war-fighting, war-winning capability.

Accordingly, the task force reached its verdict: it is premature to begin full-scale development of the MX in fiscal year 1978-79 as proposed. At the Pentagon, this recommended delay is viewed as a ploy to kill the MX, already delayed two years from the original Ford administration scheme.

Yet without a mobile missile, there will be no secure land-based leg in the U.S. retaliatory triad (land-sea-air). A recent test of the Soviet SS-18 suggests, according to Defense officials, a dramatic breakthrough in accuracy further threatening the Minuteman. Even before the news of this test, the October Defense Department study presented bleak news for its top-secret readership.

While supporters of the Carter administration's SALT proposals had boasted that they could [illegible] the big Soviet missile systems to guarantee security of the Minuteman, the Defense Department report emphatically disagreed. Nothing in the SALT proposals could prevent the Soviet Union from achieving enough accuracy to destroy the Minuteman force.

Soon after reading this report, Secretary Brown — not permitting direct quotation — talked bluntly to reporters Nov. 6: "People who say we have to have Minuteman survive are going to have a hard time with lots of SALT agreements... A SALT agreement that will insure the survivability of Minuteman is very different from any that has ever been discussed by both sides."

Yet, more than two weeks later, a leading congressional SALT enthusiast was putting out precisely the opposite information. Rep. Bob Carr of Michigan, an observer at SALT negotiations in Geneva, told Aerospace Daily on Nov. 23 that "if a SALT agreement is as effective as I think it will be, Minuteman will not grow in vulnerability."

If the Minuteman is not vulnerable, there is no need for the MX in the view of the arms control lobby. So, Sen. Thomas McIntyre of New Hampshire, a leading congressional foe of the MX, signed a Nov. 29 letter to the President from like-minded Senators declaring it is necessary to limit Soviet missile development to protect the Minuteman.

But the invulnerability that the Senators want through SALT limitations on Soviet missilery is deemed unattainable by Dr. Brown and his experts. Their alternative is the MX mobile missile, but that violates the theology of arms controllers in the Senate, in the administration and now on the President's special scientific task force. It is Jimmy Carter who must consider whether these theologians know where the nation's safety lies.

Four years later, he remains unsure

Some four years later, Douglas is headed back to Austin, an ex-convict with bitter memories of life in a Mexican prison — and still unsure about what to do with the rest of his life.

The 27-year-old Douglas, a former political science student at The University of Texas, is one of the first Americans to be freed from the Metropolitan Correctional Center after arriving home last week from a Mexican prison under the inmate exchange treaty.

Douglas was one of 41 inmates freed Tuesday who had served at least two-thirds of their Mexican sentences and were thus eligible for immediate release.

Another 101 Americans were ineligible for immediate release and most face parole hearings with the earliest possible date for freedom expected to be February.

Douglas was arrested in 1973 after he and his girl returned from a six week vacation in Peru. The couple was arrested at the Mexico City airport after police found a kilo of cocaine strapped beneath Douglas' clothes, he said.

"I was confused then...I am confused now," he said. He said he may return to college.

Conditions at Lecberri Prison where Douglas spent the first two years were "very bad," he said.

"There was a lot of extortion," he recalled. "If you didn't go along with them, you'd have to scrub the bathrooms without any clothes on. So instead, you'd pay an inmate trusty. He'd take his cut and pass on the rest to the prison directors."

While so much has happened south of the border, Douglas said it didn't alter his attitude toward his own society.

In the early 1970s, he said, he was disenchanted with the goals of the middle class American life he was expected to lead. He's still unsure of what kind of future he wants for himself. And as a convicted drug offender, he knows he is on shaky ground.

"I have no job skills," he said. "And what can you do with a political science degree?"

Reporter felt illegal's plight

By PETER H. KING

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Seeking a first-hand look at illegal aliens, reporter Louie Gonzalez donned grubby work clothes and traveled the underground railroad from deep Mexico to the California border. He got some story.

In four days, the 27-year-old journalist says he experienced bigotry, felt a knife's cutting blade and stared into the twin barrels of a bandit's shotgun.

He says some of the autumn odyssey's most terrifying moments still haunt him. In a recurring dream, a robber who held a shotgun to Gonzalez's head — but did not fire — instead pulls the trigger.

"It's messed up my mind," Gonzalez said Tuesday in an interview. "I have recurring nightmares, the whole shot."

He said his journey has also greatly altered his perception of the flight and plight of illegal aliens from Mexico.

"They have been characterized as a class of people spreading like a cancer across the country, depleting the resources of America," Gonzalez wrote at the beginning of his six-part series published recently in the Oakland Tribune.

"They are known by many names — wets, wetbacks, mojados, ilegales, undocumented workers and illegal aliens. But no matter what you call them, they are victims of hardship, brutality, exploitation and violence, as they expend every ounce of their energy in reaching for something better."

This "stash house" at Tijuana, Mexico is like others where illegal aliens hide out before making their attempt to cross into the U.S. (AP Laserphoto)

Gonzalez's original plan was to dump all identification papers, fly to Guadalajara, take a rattling 54-hour bus ride to Tijuana, join up with other illegals, cross into California and eventually sneak north to Oakland.

But he never made his illegal crossing, stopping instead at a secluded mountain shack a short walk from a secret border entry point. The next day he crossed at a legal U.S. immigration checkpoint near San Ysidro. "I had seen more than enough," Gonzalez recalled.

Gonzalez said he never slept during his journey for fear of being robbed of the few hundred dollars he had taken to pay alien-smugglers. It was a trip marked by four key experiences:

—Getting off the bus in Tijuana's roughest section, Gonzalez was stabbed in the side by a teen-ager. The attacker slashed at him three more times before Gonzalez grabbed his arm. He heard it snap — twice.

—Trekking through rugged canyons toward the border, the group of about 70 illegals were told by their guide they must not make a sound. But a 7-year-old boy Gonzalez had befriended tripped and impaled himself on a thorny cactus.

The boy, choking back tears, never made a sound — despite the dozens of long thorns protruding from his chest.

—During the same night, a group of 10 bandits sneaked up on the group and robbed them of money they needed to pay the men who arranged their border crossing. Gonzalez lost $190 to the bandits.

—Flying back to Oakland — still dressed in his disguise — Gonzalez felt the sting of bitter bigotry when he was seated away from other customers in a restaurant.

FBI agent went underground to help engineer group's arrest

By JONATHAN WOLMAN

LOS ANGELES (AP) — For four years, a young FBI agent lived in poverty and developed a convincing dialogue of Marxist jargon in an effort to enter the clandestine world of the political underground.

Last month, says undercover agent Richard Giannotti, the word came down from radical cohorts in the Prairie Fire Organizing Committee to help bomb the office of a conservative California legislator.

Instead, he and agent William Reagan — considered trusted members of a small "combat team" that called itself the Revolutionary Action Squad — ditched their secret lives to help engineer the group's arrest.

Giannotti, officials say, was in the underground for seven years.

It has the earmarks of another dramatic FBI success story, but bureau officials concede privately that the big fish got away.

Although one alleged radical leader was arrested, 62-year-old Clayton Van Lydegraf, the best known remain at large — including Bernardine Dohrn, Jeffrey Jones, William Ayres, Cathy Wilkerson and Kathy Boudin — all of them with the radical Weather Underground, officials say.

"If we knew where they were, we'd pick them up tonight," says one FBI official.

Besides Van Lydegraf, others arrested were Judith Bissell, who had been sought for a 1969 Seattle bombing, Leslie Mullins, Curtis Marc Perry and Michael Thomas Justesen. All were active in New Left political groups during the 1960s in the Seattle area.

The five were to be arraigned in Superior Court today on charges stemming from an alleged plot to bomb the office of state Sen. John Briggs, an outspoken opponent of homosexual rights.

Van Lydegraf, according to the FBI, is a leader of the Prairie Fire unit, an above ground group that in the past has been a support group associated with the super-secret Weather Underground.

The group takes its name from a writing by Mao Tsetung, who encouraged revolutionary activity by noting that a single spark can start a prairie fire.

Correct zip code urged

Midland Postmaster D. E. Holster this week reminded Midlanders that the city now has three ZIP codes. "We urge you to notify your correspondents of your correct ZIP code," Holster said. "To know your correct ZIP code in Midland is quite simple," he added. All addresses on Midkiff Street and east of Midkiff Street are in ZIP code 79701. All addresses west of Midkiff Street are in 79703. Rural route addresses use 79701, as do post office boxes in Village Station. Main Post Office boxes are in 79702, and Graves Station boxes are 79703. Holster said the Christmas season is a good time to let all your correspondents know your correct ZIP code since many greeting cards are being mailed to friends.

Anyone with questions about their ZIP code may telephone the Main Post Office at 684-5801.

Massachusetts, New Hampshire wage tax war

By ART PINE
The Washington Post

AMHERST, N.H. — For an American taxpayer, Keith Hunt is a happy man. The 47-year-old former Massachusetts resident has a good job, a four-bedroom home in the scenic Merrimack Valley and plenty of skiing just a short ride from his door. Most important, apart from federal income tax and local property taxes, he pays almost no taxes.

"I'm really enjoying it," he tells visitors here.

Hunt escaped the tax bite simply by moving 30 miles north — to New Hampshire. The Granite State is alone among the 50 in having neither a broad-based income tax nor a statewide sales tax. When Hunt's firm opened a new plant in nearby Nashua, N.H., last June, the chief engineering manager could have stayed in Westford, Mass., and commuted. But he chose to move to Amherst — mostly to save on taxes.

As a result of the move, Hunt figures this year he'll save almost $900 in state income and sales taxes he otherwise would have paid if he'd stayed in Massachusetts. And the Hunts are paying $800 less in property taxes — even though their house here is larger than their place in Westford, with twice the lot-space.

"It's worked out very well," Hunt says with satisfaction.

The hunts weren't the only Massachusetts family to be lured across the border recently by New Hampshire's bargain basement tax laws. According to the state's figures, more than 25,000 persons have made the same sort of move in the past 6½ years — part of an influx that has swelled the state's population by 21 percent. Many have come with companies that have built new facilities here.

In fact, since the boom accelerated in 1971, some 516 companies from around the United States have located new plants inside New Hampshire, creating 20,950 new jobs and 10.6 million square feet of new construction — plus thousands of new restaurant and other service jobs. "It's really tremendous," gloats Paul H. Guilderson, New Hampshire's director of industrial relations."

Not everyone, however, is as enthused as Guilderson about New Hampshire's free-spirited tax structure in Massachusetts, resident Michael Dukakis fumes that the disparity in tax rates gives New Hampshire an unfair advantage over neighboring states. Of the 516 firms that have built here in the past six years, 106 have come from Massachusetts.

As if the tax incentives weren't enough, New Hampshire has compounded the problem by offering Massachusetts residents Sunday store hours and cheaper liquor and cigarettes, enticing droves of shoppers every weekend. (The toll plazas along the major freeways leading in from Massachusetts all have New Hampshire state liquor stores built along the median.)

Howard N. Smith, Massachusetts' Secretary of Economic Affairs, estimates that the loss in retail sales may have hurt his state even more than the plant movings.

"There's no question the Merrimack Valley retail trade in Massachusetts has suffered," he says. Smith concedes New Hampshire has sapped away much of the potential new industry from the Midwest and Southeast.

As might be expected, the drainoff of jobs and sales has brought the two jurisdictions to a state of economic warfare over the past two or three years — often with bitter results. (In one unseemly gesture, New Hamsphire once threatened to impose an income tax on the handful of Massachusettans who work in the Granite state. It since has retreated on that issue.)

To be sure, bargain tax rates aren't the only factor that has drawn Bay State dwellers to New Hampshire recently. Local planners also cite the northward creep of the Boston suburbs, the opening of downstate New Hampshire freeways, the state's easy access to Boston's airport, a stable labor market and the newly fashionable back-to-the-land movement.

But officials on both sides concede the tax break is the big turning-point in most instances. A case in point is the new Wheelabrator-Frye Co. facility, built in nearby Hampton. Although company spokesmen insist the tax factor wasn't dominant in the firm's decision, critics note the move involved only the firm's headquarters operation — replete with high-income executives.

The figures are indisputable. According to the latest tally, for 1975, New Hampshire's absence of state income and sales taxes gives it the lowest state tax burden in New England. New Hampshire residents pay an average of only $503 per capita, compared to $786 in Massachusetts. The average for the United States as a whole that year was $667.

The results have been dramatic. While the rest of New England barely has recovered from the double-digit unemployment of the 1974-75 recession, New Hampshire boasts a jobless rate of only 3 percent — one of the lowest in the nation. (The Massachusetts rate is 5.8 percent). And the influx has bloated state and local property tax revenues here by an estimated $4.7 million.

Predictably, New Hampshire's tight-fisted Yankee tax stance has aroused widespread clucking from liberals and many academics, who contend a state must have a broad-based tax of some kind nowadays or risk bringing on a fiscal disaster. Tax experts warn if a state shuns sales or income taxes, it either must pare services drastically or shift the burden to property taxes.

New Hampshire's maverick Gov. Meldrim Thomson Jr. disputes this assessment. Thomson argues that the increases in government costs can be borne easily enough by the burgeoning business tax revenues brought in by the influx of new industry and no new taxes are needed. (New Hampshire has a limited income tax, but it only affects dividends and interest.)

The silver-haired conservative Republican delights in rubbing Massachusetts' nose in the dirt by using the disparity in tax rates to paint his southern neighbor as a spendthrift. Massachusetts now has one of the highest tax burdens in the nation. The reason, Thomson asserts repeatedly, is that it insists on maintaining overly generous social programs.

Apartment units were lifted from their foundations and smashed Tuesday by a tornado that struck the northeast area of Houston. One person was killed and many were injured by the unseasonal storm. (AP Laserphoto)

About 600 buildings destroyed by tornado

By ROB WOOD

HOUSTON (AP) — Many told of miraculous escapes from death or injury when a tornado struck Tuesday near a crowded Houston freeway, but one person was killed, at least 40 others injured and an estimated 600 homes and buildings were destroyed.

Civil Defense Director Bland McReynolds said if the twister had moved into the downtown area "it would have gutted most of the modern buildings."

Authorities said if the funnel had crossed the bumper-to-bumper freeway during the morning rush hours, the death toll would have been staggering.

Rescue and repair workers scrapped and dug through the shambles left of the homes and the buildings in search of other victims until halted by darkness.

Police and sheriff's deputies then set up tight security in the devastated area to prevent looting.

Whitey Martin, chief of the Houston Fire Department's ambulance service, said, "There could be more dead. There could be many more injured. Some maybe under debris or lying somewhere in a ditch. We hope not, but that is a possibility."

Many of the 40 injured persons suffered minor injuries.

McReynolds, who flew over the path of the tornado, five miles long and 300 to 500 feet wide, said, "The destructive force I saw snapped trees two feet in diameter like a matchstick and would have destroyed anything in its path."

Police officers said Billy D. Hester, about 50, a superintendent for a construction company, was killed when the tornado lifted his pickup truck from a highway and hurled it about 350 feet into an oak tree.

Describing the death of Hester, Dave Largent, 29, a coworker said, "It started raining and we all went into the office. Somebody outside yelled tornado, We went out and saw it. It was coming right at us."

Largent said most of the 100 workers at the site took cover in a nearby culvert, but Hester jumped into his truck and drove off. He died.

The area looked like it had been heavily-shelled during a war.

A large metal warehouse was molded into a surrealist sculpture. A mobile home rested atop another residence. Tree limbs, hunks of metal, slabs of wood, strips of tin, and other debris blocked many nearby roads, snarling traffic and causing additional troubles for police.

Thunderstorms continued to rumble across the area during the day, building muddy, slimy pools, and hampering the work of those attempting to replace the snapped electric lines and the humpbacked telephone poles.

Marilyn Gordon, 21, of Crosby, Texas said she was driving to her job early Tuesday when "suddenly this house was coming toward me. It was flying as I stopped in the middle of the road. I managed to duck down."

Her new car was demolished by the house, and, she said, "It was a miracle I wasn't killed."

Nunnie Stevens, 75, was in bed when the twister hit. She said, "I was just dazed as pieces of glass flew across my bed. Wasn't the Good Lord good to spare me."

James Boyer, 55, was en route to his feed store and trading post when, "I began having trouble holding my car on the road. Then I heard some CBers reporting a tornado right where my store is located. I turned around and got out of there. I was lucky."

Mrs. R.L. Neyland, 77, said she heard a loud roar and "I stepped into the kitchen and here came glass and everything else. I stretched out on the floor and then saw the china cabinet coming at me. I would have been crushed if the cabinet had not fallen partly across a chair. Praise God for saving me."

Manuel Hernandez, his wife and four children, sorted through the wreckage of their home, wondering what happened to their pet dog "King."

Hernandez said when the twister hit, "The walls started to cave in on the house. I grabbed my wife's hand and put my feet up and caught the wall and then it flew over us.

"I just hope King got away okay. I just hope he's all right," Hernandez said.

Another funnel cloud was reported Tuesday by the Texas Department of Public Safety west of Jersey Village on the outskirts of Houston. No deaths or injuries were reported.

Bob Rushton...speaks at breakfast

Jaycee president tells gathering 'young men must change the world'

By ED TODD

Given enough strength in nunbers, the young men's organization called the Jaycees possibly could be a healing force for the troubled world, Bob Rushton, president of the United States Jaycees, said in Midland this morning.

"We run up the streets, saying, 'Young men can change the world,'" he said. "What we ought to be saying is that 'Young men must change the world.'"

However, Rushton, speaking at a Midland Jaycees' past presidents' breakfast in the Hilton ballroom, conceded that "We just don't have enough people involved" to bring about those changes.

Rushton, a 33-year-old real estate developer from Marietta, Ga., is the 1977-78 president of of the 350,000-member national organization, which is primarily designed for leadership training and personal development for men ages 18 through 35.

Speaking of the Jaycees' national purpose, Rushton said Jaycees must foster hope for "continued success in the free enterprise system, under a Supreme Being. . . .

"The hope is getting young men involved in improving their . . . communities and personal lives."

Rushton urged the approximately 70 Midland and area Jaycees at the breakfast to drum up membership. Bringing more and more young men into the Jaycees was Rushton's forte as president of Georgia Jaycees in 1975-76.

"Have you ever given anyone else the opportunity to be a Jaycee?" he asked.

Like others before him, Rushton set records.

"Let's go out and embarrass the guys (Jaycees) before" and set more records, Rushton said.

Earlier, in leading into his talk to fellow Jaycees, Rushton said that maybe he should be in the audience, rather than at the speaker's platform.

He was dressed casually, from his leather jacket on down, and was speaking to a mostly coat-and-tie group. He implied that there was much expertise in the gathering.

"I feel like I ought to be listening instead of speaking," Rushton said. "But we never have done anything right in the Jaycees, anyway. I guess today is no exception."

For a few moments, Rushton focused on the Jaycee movement in his home state.

And, in a speculative fling, he suggested that had there been a Jaycees chapter in Plains, Ga., years ago, Billy Carter today might be the United States President rather than his brother Jimmy. Jimmy was always the "perfect" Carter child, Rushton said.

A Jaycees chapter was organized at Plains last year, he said.

Prior to Rushton's speech, emcee Bud Harger recognized past presidents of the Midland Jaycees, organized in late 1939 in the second-floor ballroom of the old Scharbauer Hotel. (The Hilton has since replaced that landmark.)

Past presidents at the meeting included the chapter's first, Curtis Inman, and Spencer Blocker, Jim McClatchy, Bill Malone, LaDoyce Lambert, Ken Green, Don Roderick, Joe Campbell, John Nobles and Larry Bell.

The current president of the 314-member Midland Jaycees is David Howard.

Among others cited in the audience were former national Jaycees vice presidents Rocky Ford and Harry Clark, both of Midland, and Jim Reese of Odessa. Clark was president of the Mississippi Jaycees.

Also recognized was W. H. "Bill" Collyns, charter secretary of the Midland Jaycees.

The president of the 13,000-member Texas Jaycees, Charles Cotten of Garland, described the Jaycees as the "finest young man's organizations, the only young man's organization, in the country."

In citing the growth of the Midland chapter, Cotten said "You guys are doing a great job out here. Keep it up."

Moments before, Midland Mayor Pro Tem Carroll Thomas presented Rushton with a key to the city. Thomas was representing Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr., who was unable to attend the breakfast.

Bell's idea to abolish LEAA elicits officials' criticism

By RONALD J. OSTROW
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—Atty. Gen Griffin B. Bell has propsed abolishing the much-criticized Law Enforcement Assistance Administration and replacing it with a National Institute of Justice.

Some White House officials criticized the proposal, submitted to President Carter Nov. 17 and disclosed by the Justice Department, as little more than a name substitution. However, the changes would give state and local governments much more leeway in spending federal anti-crime funds.

The proposal also would reduce federal support for state planning agencies and paperwork that critics have claimed hampered the nine-year-old program.

The LEAA wss established in 1968 to improve state and ocal police courts and prisons through federal grants.

The most far-reaching of the proposed changes would be accomplished in a reorganization plan that the House or Senate could veto within 60 days and in an amendment to current law authorizing the LEAA.

The reorganization plan is expected to be sent to congress next spring. The legislation must be submitted by May 15, but no action on it is likely before 1979 when LEAA's authorization runs out.

The changes, if adopted, would:

—Eliminate the requirement that states submit for federal approval annual criminal justice plans. The need for project-by-project authorization also would be ended.

—Limit the use of federal funds for administrative costs and require that state and local governments match, dollar for dollar, federal money used for planning the administration.

—Create a bureau of statistics, headed by a presidential appointee, that would pull together the various criminal justice data programs that exist in several agencies. The proposal would leave unsettled the question of whether the new agency should take over the uniforn crime reports program of the FBI, the most widely used measurement of seious crime in the nation.

—End federal subsidy of ¢60 regional planning unit boards now operating under the LEAA program.

Bell noted that President Carter's reorganization group is now studying issues related to the system of federal justice, but he said his plan would not conflict with any steps later recommended by that group.

Bell said it was necessary to move no "in view of the gravity and urgency of the problems posed by the existing LEAA program."

Bell created a study group last April 8 to review LEAA, which was criticized by Carter during the 1976 presidential campaign.

The group issued a report June 23 that pinpointed weaknesses in the program, currently budgeted at $647.25 million. It recommended a major restructuring.

Some 4,000 copies of the report then were distributed to members of Congress, governors, mayors and others with interest in the criminal justice system. Bell's proposal was issued after comments, including a strong opposition to the study's recommendations, were reviewed.

Christmas letter tells traumas

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

Mulligan's Stew

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Every December the Crockleys, a couple we met on a cruise years ago, check in with one of those mimeographed Christmas letters that for trauma and tribulation make a prime time suds opera like "Soap" sound like the worst of Louisa May Alcott.

We don't even recall what the Crockleys look like, it's been so long, but we feel we know them all intimately, better than our own kinfolk, from this annual inventory of family births, graduations, travels, marriages, operations and allied gossip. Grannie Hotchkiss, Uncle Phil (the bachelor who is always going off somewhere to be cured of an unspecified ailment), the twins Enid and Persimmon, Aunty Eugenia (lonely, frail, keeper of some secret flame or scandal), the boys Tom, Elwood and Reggie (now grown up with children of their own) and baby Rudy (the last left in the nest) are forever going off on exotic vacations, taking up strange hobbies, changing from and getting into adventures one can hardly bear the 12-month wait between letters to catch up on.

Hearing from the Crockleys at Christmas is like having Dickens arrive on your doorstep with his analyst. My wife and I race each other to the mail box to find out what befell our favorite fun and frenzy family during the past year. Did Tom remarry? Is Uncle Phil cured and of what? Was Persimmon able to women's liberate the Yale wrestling team? Will Elwood ever come home?

Wait, it's here. The latest Christmas letter from the Crockleys:

"Dearest Friends,

"Hi there, again, and what a year it has been for all of us here at the ranch. You'll notice we've moved again. Daddy Crockley just had to carry out his dream of raising musk ox in Vermont. He's had the idea ever since President Nixon went to China and brought over a pair for the Peking Zoo. Mother Crockley, game for anything, just loves the big bovine ruminants, even if she did get a bad shock from the electrified fence last month.

"Speaking of accidents, Grannie Hotchkiss broke her collarbone on Rudy's skate board going down Mather Hill and had to give up her tango lessons. For a while she and Uncle Phil were in the same hospital, but he was sent home after burning a hole in the sheets with his water pipe.

"Not to worry. They are both fine now. Uncle Phil is into transcendental meditation with Carmine Sutra, a guru from Butan he met on the all-night bus coming back from the sanitarium in Calgary. Phil brought him home for Thanksgiving. He speaks only Urdu but strums that sitar like a regular Johnny Cash and the twins were enchanted. But for her job down at the abattoir, all computerized now, Enid would have run off with him. You know what a romantic she is.

"The whole family was together at Thanksgiving for the first time in ages. Elwood walked in just as Aunty Eugenia was popping her bourbon brownies into the oven, giving us the happiest shock of our lives. He had been living with some Lapp reindeer herders in Saivomoutka, Sweden, and hadn't heard the Vietnam war was over. Elwood had some kind of operation out there and now wants to be called Elvira.

"Reggie and Kathy celebrated their 10th wedding anniversary in June. As usual, he was off on the gold cruise with his nuclear submarine somewhere under the North Atlantic, and she went to see "Jaws" to sort of be with him on their special day. Next Sunday we are all going over to the Beatrice Webb Nursery school to see their youngest, Nancy, almost 5 now, in "Oh! Calcutta!" What a cute idea, and it didn't cost Kathy or the other parents a sou for costumes.

"Tom and Rita, the new wife, went backpacking along the upper Amazon on their honeymoon, taking along both their sets of children to help with the long portages. There was some trouble coming through customs because Frampton, Rita's youngest nipper, wouldn't surrender his tarantula collection. She seems so right for Tom. Her analyst gave her away at the wedding and tore up half his bill as a present. Aunty Eugenia, who dotes on Tom, even danced at their wedding upstairs in the Moose Hall. "It did her so much good to get out after all those years, she consented to read her poems at the library. There was some fuss from a reactionary element who complained even D. H. Lawrence never used language like that.

"Persimmon dropped out of Yale, saying she didn't want to be a jock after all, and is now demonstrating water beds in the Claussen's window. Since the Crockleys are an ancient family, with a crest and a motto and for all we know a castle somewhere, we all crossed into Canada for the queen's jubilee and brought back a trunk load of duty free whiskey. So as another year of trips and tribulations and trials, plus a few laughs and many memories, draws to a close, we wish one and all the happiest of Christmases and a great New Year ahead. Be sure to keep in touch ... from all the Crockleys."

Dual search reunites mother, grown daughter

MIAMI (AP) — Judith Rosen surrendered her infant daughter to a New York adoption agency in 1946, then fought guilt and sadness for 31 years.

Then on the day after Thanksgiving this year, long after she gave up her search in the face of official indifference and silence, came a voice on the telephone: "Mother!"

The daughter, too, had been searching.

One week after the telephone call, Judith Rosen Leibowitz and her daughter, Barbara Frey, clasped each other in joyous reunion at New York's LaGuardia Airport.

"We grabbed each other's hands and never let go. We never will," says Mrs. Frey, 31, who lives near Fort Lauderdale north of Miami.

The reunion was the result of Mrs. Frey's determined sixyear search and the help of the Adoptees Liberty Movement Association in Florida.

The story began when Judith Rosen, frightened, 21 and unmarried, gave birth to a daughter in a New York hospital. The father, she says, was a 42-yearold widowed dentist who refused marriage.

The baby was named Rochelle.

"I saw her and fed her," says Mrs. Leibowitz. She left the hospital without the infant, but says she does not remember signing papers relinquishing claim to the baby.

The young mother was trapped in anguish. She went to the agency that handled the case. "They told me, 'You gave her up. You gave her a new life. She is probably with wealthy people who can give her everything you can't.' They practically threw me out," she recalls.

She finally abandoned the effort. She married, bore another daughter, remarried and settled in the Bronx. "But all this time, she has never been out of my heart and mind," Mrs. Leibowitz said of her daughter.

The daughter, meanwhile, had been named Barbara and was growing up in Connecticut, where her adoptive father was a businessman. It was a comfortable life, but "somehow, I never thought I belonged."

In 1971, a divorcee living in Florida with two daughters of her own, she began a search for her natural mother.

By early 1975, Mrs. Frey had found out which adoption agency handled her case. She began a series of letters pleading for information.

She says the brief responses from the agency always included a recommendation that she seek psychiatric counseling.

Mrs. Frey met ALMA's Florida coordinator, Rachel Rivers, in 1975 at the recommendation of Donald Frey, who became her husband last June.

The women worked together, a tedious process of chasing down birth certificates of mother and daughter, searching through the genealogy department of New York's public library, trying in vain to trace her grandparents.

Schultze can't get ideas across

By ART PINE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — When a questioner at a panel discussion here recently sallied forth with a home-made solution for the nation's economic problems, Charles L. Schultze, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, wryly reached for his pencil and conspicuously began taking notes. It was good-natured self-mockery, but a twinkle in Schultze's eye flashed an underlying message: When it comes to economics, you can't afford to risk passing up a good idea.

The gesture was ironic for several reasons: Not only was the man's proposal a dubious one (Just encourage everyone to engineer price cuts the way the pocket calculator industry has, he suggested), but the advice was misdirected. Of all the key officials on the administration's top economic policymaking team, Schultze is the one credited with the most new ideas and the soundest analysis. The only problem is, he can't seem to get it across.

When President Carter first won office, Schultze seemed closest of all to becoming the president-elect's economic alter ego. With other top officials virtually all new both to Washington and to economic policy making, Schultze gained Carter's ear and quickly earned his trust. The January economic stimulus package was the logical, well-put-together work of Schultze. There was talk the Brookings liberal would become as close to Carter as Alan Greenspan was to Gerald Ford.

But that closeness quickly faded last spring as the economy proved more buoyant than Schultze expected and the new administration ran into trouble with Congress and business. By April, Schultze stood by and watched as Carter — over his advice — threw out his carefully nurtured $50 tax rebate proposal, and the president began dropping hints that he was disappointed in Schultze's economic forecasts.

Since then, Schultze's fortunes in the unpredictable Carter White House have had their peaks and slumps:

—The craggy-faced former Johnson administration budget director was almost completly left out of the planning for the Carter energy program last March — having to read about it in the newspapers until virtually the final moment. Schultze got his first look at the plan only in early April, after the proposal essentially was completed — and too late to make any major changes. (Perhaps partly as a result, it's been attacked as an economic boondoggle.)

—Schultze has been undercut in virtually all his efforts to begin an anti-inflation program, from the broad-scale wage-price "prenotification" plan he was hoping to put in place last spring to individual actions on specific legislative measures The council chairman was overruled flatly, for example, on his warnings that carter's cargo-preference bill would be inflationary, and he lost, ultimately, to political aides over the farm subsidy bill.

(Along with most other economists, Schultze had argued vigorously that the cargo-preference measure, which owuld have required that 9 1-2 per cent of all U.S.-bound shipments be transported on American-flag ships, would spur shipping costs seriously. Not only are U.S. ships often more costly to operate, but there aren't enough to fulfill the bill's requirements. Carter rejected this, and endorsed the bill as a gesture to the maritime unions.

(On the farm bill, Schultze opposed the measure on the grounds that it would boost subsidy costs unnecessarily and exacerbate the budget deficit. But Bob Bergland, Carter's secretary of agriculture, insisted the increases would be necessary to hold Midwestern votes in any coming election. As he has with other measures, the president scrapped the anti-inflation considerations in favor of the political.)

—Schultze was partially succcessful, at least, in preventing hard-liners in the administration from taking a strongly protectionist line on the foreign imports issue. Although the White House ultimately pushed through agreements for "voluntary" quotas on foreign-made shoes and color television sets, it was Schultze who insisted on restrictign them only to three years to avert increasing permanent barriers. But even this was a modest gain.

—And the presidential adviser won half a loaf on another venture — a bid to prevent another hefty jump in the minimum wage. Schultze succeeded in holding Carter's recommendation for a minimum wage boost only to $2.50 an hour, with a moderate automatic cost-of-living escalator. But in the end, Carter accepted a bill that ultimately would push the minimum to $3.15 — effectively undercutting his own goal of spurring more teenage employment.

—By far Schultze's most checkered performance has been his bout over monetary policy — specifically the recent round of credit-tightening by the Federal Reserve Board. When the monetary agency went further last summer than Schultze thought was tolerable, the council chairman became the first administration official in recent memory to stand up and say so — provoking a virtual confrontation with Fed chief Arthur F. Burns.

Almost as soon as conservative began reacting, however, Carter pulled the rug out by publicly denying any differences with Burns and gushing praise for the Fed chairman.

Chairman Hua Kuo-feng takes up calligraphy

Agence France-Presse

PEKING — Chairman Hua Kuo-feng has taken up both the shovel and the paint brush in moves inspired by the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

The party paper, The Peopel's Daily, Tuesday published on the front page a facsimile of the party leader's calligraphy put forward as encouragement to technicians working for the Chinese electornics industry.

Earlier this month, Mao's successor was shown in color photos published by the official press wearing a blue working outfit and a helmet, wielding a shovel, taking part along with other leaders in a session of manual labor in the grand tradition of Mao.

"Display the revolutionary spirit of self-reliance and hard struggle, speed up the development of the electronics industry and strive to scale the heights of science and technology in electronics," said the calligraphy for the electronics workers who recently held a national conference in Peking.

The calligraphy, received on Dec. 6 by the Fourth Ministry of Machine Building, was immediately shown to a mass meeting of officials, engineers, researchers and members of electronics enterprises. There was "thunderous applause and rolling of drums," The People's Daily said.

All over the country the chairman's calligraphy was distributed to the people and companies concerned for "study and discussion," the newspaper added.

Water shortage becomes acute, especially in West

By MARGOT HORNBLOWER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In the dry plateaus of the Far West, Colorado and Arizona are competing urgently for the water in the Colorado River, which does not have enough for both. Among the things riding on this competition is which major city will have its growth restricted by lack of water, Denver or Tucson.

In the Panhandle region of Texas, farmers are mining the Ogallala Aquifer so heavily that the water table is dropping as much as seven feet a year. In 35 years, about 4 million acres, which now produce one-fifth of all U.S. cotton, could revert to desert.

In California, 9 million people were ordered to ration water this year. Water cutbacks were also imposed in Northern Virginia.

Is the nation running out of water? So it seems.

Everyone knows there is an energy crisis. Oil, which once was plentiful and cheap and became the basis of our economy and culture, is suddenly scarce and expensive.

The same thing is happening, although at an uneven pace, with another basic commodity: water. Aggravated by recent droughts, serious shortages are occurring in many parts of the country.

And just as this year an alarmed Carter administration sent Congress an energy plan aimed at conserving oil, so next year it will propose a major new water policy that is likely to rely on similar techniques: On the one hand, raise the "price" of water, and on the other, subsidize steps to save it.

The water problem is at its worst in the West, where water is known as "liquid gold," and a frenzy of competition has erupted among farmers, energy companies, fast-growing cities and rights-conscious Indian tribes. Battles over water have pitted Northern California against Southern California, Eastern Colorado against Western Colorado and Mexico against the United States.

Even in the rainy East, temporary droughts, poor planning and antiquated delivery systems have made cities such as Washington, New York and Boston increasingly vulnerable to critical supply problems. And, where water is abundant, it is often polluted.

"In the arid West and across the entire nation, we must begin to recognize that water is not free — it is a precious resource," said President Carter last April, as he riveted national attention on water by trying to cancel $4 billion worth of "wasteful" dams, irrigation and flood control projects.

In May, the president called for "comprehensive reform of water resources policy, with water conservation as its cornerstone." Three agencies, the Office of Management and Budget, the Council on Environmental Quality and the Water Resources Council, will make recommendations to Carter in February for changes that could have far-reaching economic and political effects.

While Carter's water policy is likely to be less imposing than this energy policy, it promises to be at least as controversial. It will affect the $10 billion a year the federal government spends on dams, reservoirs, canals and sewage plants — which in turn affect profits in the private economy, thus rousing powerful political interests across the nation.

A preview of general water revision options in the Federal Register a few months ago roused a storm of protest from Western governors and congressmen. Fearing a "federal takeover" of states' water allocation rights, 35 senators sponsored a resolution in October imposing a six-month moratorium on any new water policy while Congress reviews the proposals.

"Water has an almost religious mystique," said Rep. Morris K. Udall (D-Ariz.) "The attitude in the West has always been that there's no limit to what water could obtain for you."

Nonetheless, the resolution's chief sponsor, Sen. Carl Curtis, R-Neb., agrees to the need for a new policy. "The issue of future water sufficiency of our nation may be the most important domestic concern we will have to face, overshadowing even the energy shortage," he said.

At the turn of the century, the United States used 44 billion gallons of water a day; we now use 420 billion gallons. During the same period, individual consumption rose from about 10 gallons to 168 gallons a day. If population trends and wasteful practices continue, the nation will use about 33 percent more water by the year 2000, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.

"For most of the country, water demand in the year 2000 will significantly exceed supply," predicts Loe F. Laporte, a University of California expert. 'Of the major drainage basis within the 48 states only three — regions in the Northeast, Southeast and Ohio valley — will have an assured supply if current water use trends continue."

Ironically, the nation's driest states are among its fastest-growing — a fact that can only lead to even more critical water problems. In the last three decades, with the mirgration from the Northeast to the Sunbelt, population has increased 197 percent in Nevada, 91 percent in Colorado, 75 percent in Utah.

These states are often the greatest water wasters, not only because the climate requires more water to grow a bright green lawn around a suburban house, but also because antiquated state water laws and huge federal irrigation projects discourage conservation. Arizona, for example, the second driest state in the nation with an average of 10 inches of rain a year, has a per capita water consumption double the national average.

The rapidly dropping water table in Arizona has resulted in saltier water, which destroys crops, and 1,000 square miles of subsided land.

"If we are neighbors, I am free to pump as much water as I wish — even though it lowers the water table under your land, making your well run dry and perhaps causing subsidence that can crack the foundation of your home and break your water and gas pipes," Udall said.

"The only price I have to pay for that water is the cost of running my pump. As a practical matter, this law creates an incentive to pump now —before somebody else sucks the basin dry — instead of conserving," he said.

People don't realize groundwater is crucial to the supply, says Sen. Milcom Wallop, R-Wyo. They think "underneath the earth's crust run little men in brown coats and green hats that mix chemicals and come out with water ... But you can't mine water as a resource and not face human disaster."

In the East, much groundwater is lost, but not from overuse. A recent Environmental Protection Agency survey of 50 industrial disposal sites in 11 Eastern states found that 43 had poisoned water with arsenic, cyanide and other chemicals.

Sewage and industrial chemicals have made many Eastern rivers unswimmable, unfishable and undrinkable, requiring billions of dollars in expensive treatment systems. The EPA is examining ways to tie conservation requirements to federal grants, thus reducing the need for large taxpayer-funded plants.

The rivers of the West have become battlegrounds for a host of interests, all competeing for the same molecules of water.

The Colorado River which serves Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Nevada, Arizona and California, doesn't have enough water for all the people that want it. Thus, Colorado is frantically building storage facilities it doesn't yet need, so that Arizona won't become dependent on water Colorado will later require.

Economics often determines the outcome of competitions among farmers cities and industry. Denver suburbs and oil shale companies are buying up Colorado farmers' water rights. In Arizona, Udall said, "We've got to make plans to phase out agriculture. Irrigated farming is based on cheap water. Homes and factories will pay 10 times what you get for growing alfalfa."

Thus water is becoming a commodity, subject to the law of supply and demand, which is forcing up the price. However, unlike oil, which sells for a fixed amount per barrel and is ruled by federal price cotrols, water rates vary from city to city and from irrigation project. Under state laws in the West water was allocated on a first-come, first-served basis. Unless it is used, it is lost, so the incentive is to use as much as possible.

Citing speeders not easy for CHP

"Any law is a losing battle when you don't have public backing of it."
—Sgt. Dave Helsel of the California Highway Patrol

By DAVID LARSEN
The Los Angeles Times

On Jan. 1, 1974, with long lines at California's service stations and a fuel crisis on everyone's mind, the maximum speed limit was reduced from 65 m.p.h. to 55 m.p.h. A similar limit holds in other states.

Since residents are pretty well recognized as law-and-order people, a visitor went along recently in a California Highway Patrol car to see how motorists are complying with the speed limit.

"Now we aren't going to see as many speeders as you do when you are in your private car," patrolman Jerry Johnson predicts as he wheels onto the Hollywood Freeway.

"This is a marked car and the drivers will slow down as soon as they spot us."

It is a Tuesday morning and the 41-year-old Johnson, as he has done for 10 years, will be assisting operators of disabled vehicles, investigating accidents, removing objects from roadways, and handing out citations — a lot these days for heavy-footed drivers.

And so the game begins, the officer somewhat in the position of a football referee knowing he has to drop a penalty flag, when practically everybody on the field is holding.

"What I kinda look for is vehicles passing the flow of traffic," he explains. "So many are going over 55 that you look for the ones in the 60s before you start to cite."

"Anyway, even though our speedometers are calibrated regularly, you have to allow for a certain margin of error. To write somebody a ticket for 58 m.p.h. is calling it pretty close.

"And our superiors prefer that we stop just one at a time. Too hazardous to try for more."

And so the game begins, the officer somewhat in the position of a football referee knowing he has to drop a penalty flag, when practically everybody on the field is holding.

Johnson sights a blue Ford whose driver obviously feels he is at Indy, but as soon as the patrolman moves up for a closer look, the motorist switches out of the fast lane and slows to a lawful speed.

"I wouldn't write a ticket on a quick estimate like that," the officer volunteers. "I like to get to within 200 feet and follow at the same speed for at least a quarter of a mile. There's no regulation that requires this. It's just a preference on my part."

When a CHP officer writes a speeding ticket, his estimate will be sufficient in court, should the citation be contested.

"But only a small percentage of the speeding tickets are ever contested," Johnson discloses. "The drunk drivers will fight it but not the speeders."

Truckers are doing their share of violating the reduced limit.

In the spring, when we began a voluntary compliance campaign, I got a ton of letters from the public saying there is no way we can comply until you get the truckers to do so," Glen Graig, CHP commissioner, recalled. "In fact, half the letters I received complained about trucks following too close."

In the summer the CHP launched a crackdown against speeding and tailgating truckers.

"On any given day, according to our most recent statistics, 60 percent of all motorists in California are exceeding the 55-m.p.h. limit," said Sgt. Dave Helsel, public affairs officer for the CHP.

"There are 14.7 million registered vehicles in the state," he went on. "There are 103,000 miles of highways to be patrolled.

"We have 5,100 uniformed officer, and 4,000 of them are working the highways. You spread those men over three shifts a day, seven days a week, and you can see what we are up against."

What they are up against is a speed limit that very few people obey. The CHP is writing 1.2 million speeding citations a year — more than double the total when the maximum was 65 m.p.h.

"We are using 50 percent of our available manpower simply to enforce the 55-m.p.h. limit," Sgt. Helsel said.

"Normally in law enforcement you direct your efforts toward the 15 percent or so who don't comply with the law. But in this situation you have a majority who don't care to comply with the law."

Ken Milton, public affairs officer for the CHP headquarters in Sacramento, has a theory on the scott of laws:

"A lot of drivers may feel they are complying simply by dropping their speed to 60 m.p.h. from the old 65 m.p.h."

"A lot of people think that since they are seeing everybody else doing 60, the CHP is giving its approval," he said. "And then when they get a ticket, they feel they have been singled out unfairly."

Leonard de Groff, a CHP deputy chief, said the patrol has tried to create a better public awareness:

"Initially the drivers did abide by the new speed limit because they were convinced there was an energy crisis. My opinion is that they don't feel there is this crisis anymore."

Commissioner Craig has statistics to bear this out:

"The miles traveled in the state are the highest they have ever been."

California isn't alone with its enforcement problem. Brock Adams, U.S. secretary of transportation, said recently that for the first half of this year no state came close to having 85 percent of its vehicles traveling 55 m.p.h. or less — the percentage the federal government considers acceptable.

But California keeps trying — with about as much success as holding back the evening tide.

"We have changed our employment," said Deputy Chief De Groff. "We have taken officers off the county road system to be used on the freeways. We have to maintain our credibility. We have never had to contend with such a gross disregard of a law."

There is a nasty little offshoot of all this, according to Sgt. Helsel:

"Our officers have never taken as much flack on anything as they have on enforcing the 55 m.p.h. speed limit."

There is no question about the accuracy of his speedometer. They are, according to Lt. Ken Rude of the CHP, calibrated every three months or 20,000 miles, whichever comes first. In fact, if the speedometer on a new car is more than three m.p.h. off, the vehicle is not accepted. The patrol cars themselves are used for 75,000 miles.

"You know," Johnson emphasizes, "I sure could be more effective in enforcing this 55 m.p.h. limit if we had a radar."

The CHP does use radar. To calibrate the speedometers of its patrol cars. But other than that, California is apparently the only state in the nation which denies its highway patrolmen the use of radar.

Police in 250 cities in this state alone use radar but not us," Commissioner Craig lamented.

But tickets must be written, and one offshoot of the public's disdain has been an increase in revenue from them, although there is no way of determining how much.

Stamps lacking religious theme

By ADRIAN PERACCHIO
Newsday

NEW YORK— This year the U.S. Postal Service is offering a choice of two small Christmas stamps: one with a red rural mailbox stuffed with gifts, the other showing George Washington kneeling in prayer in the snow at Valley Forge.

The question put to postal service officials in Washington, drew elaborate verbal variations of the shrug, embellished with semantic pirouettes.

"The U.S. Postal Service has never had a policy of specifically issuing Christmas stamps with a religious theme," a spokesman said. "However, we have had a policy of issuing a festive stamp and another one from a famous masterpiece with a Christmas theme. It so happens that famous art masterpieces about Christmas tend to have religious themes, so the confusion is understandable. Besides, it is debatable that the George Washington stamp is not religious in connotation. He is praying, isn't he?"

It turns out that the fiscal deficits forever haunting the postal service may well have had a dispiriting and shrinking effect on the Christmas stamps and, coincidentally, may have short-circuited a religious theme. (Last week, the postal service reported a $625 million deficit for the previous fiscal year, substantially higher than the $400 million it had predicted. This year's deficit will be even higher, a post office official said: a forecast for a surplus next year has been retracted.)

To save $1 million, the spokesman said, the postal service decided to reduce the size of the two stamps issued for this year's holidays. Instead of displaying a special design or reproduction on the large commemorative format generally used since Christmas stamps first were issued in 1962, the postal service decided to make do with the smaller size used for everyday first-class mail.

But using the smaller size also limits the designer's scope. No vast nativity scenes, no medieval tapestries or altar pieces, no Currier and Ives lithographs.

Jean Stapleton's ahead of Bunker

By DIANE CLARK
Copley News Service

Actress Jean Stapleton says that her already strong commitment to the women's movement was deepened 100 percent by what she saw and heard at the National Women's Conference in Houston. But when she spoke about her other personality — as Edith on "All in the Family" — her attitude changed.

Despite the fact that Edith has begun to speak up for herself and even threatened to leave Archie on the program, Stapleton concluded: "I don't feel Edith is at the point of clear vision and curiosity and concern that would lead her to watch the proceedings of the conference or read in detail about them."

Here we have two women, both very likable, who are at opposite ends of the women's movement spectrum.

The walkout by many women from the Southern and Central United States on the last day of the conference shows that there still are many women who will not be ready for the progressive plan of action adopted by the majority.

It is also true that Congress and the President may well not be ready to support the action plan which calls for government-funded abortion and child care, elimination of discrimination against lesbians, setting up family planning programs for teen-agers and taking numerous steps to protect women of various minorities.

(The legislation which set up and funded the narional women's meeting required that the women's proposals be submitted to Congress within four months and that the President's recommendations on those same proposals be given to Congress within the following four months.

There are many delegates who secretly expressed their fear that support of the lesbian rights will make many politicians leery of associating with the movement and seriously harm chances of getting legislation in support of its plan.

Phyllis Schlafly, an outspoken foe of ERA, abortion and lesbian rights, was gleeful at the liberal stands taken by the conference because they offer opponents new grounds for attack.

But while battle lines are being drawn for the admittedly tough road ahead on enactment of the women's "bill of rights," there are many who argue that the true meaning of the National Women's Conference lies elsewhere.

"Fifty percent of what we want has already happened," said feminist leader Gloria Steinem. "That we got together, that we made coalitions, that we talked and worked together toward one common goal. That's what was beautiful."

The significance of the Nov. 18-2, event can be described through many happenings.

Women, old and young, from the city and the country, white and minority, straight and gay, religious and atheistic, famous and unknown, career women and unemployed — all got together to discuss women's rights. For instance, among the delegates were a poultry farmer, a nun, a professional astrologer, a cattle breeder, a Girl Scout, a lawyer and a MacDonald's waitress, to name a few.

One of the most touching moments was the reaction of minority women — Hispanic, black, Asian, Eskimo, native American — who were elated because they had overcome individual minority interests to work together to draft a recommendation that dealt with all minorities together, then addressed specific concerns.

"Many black and minority women have been reluctant to work in the women's movement because they felt more attention was given to sexual discrimination than to racial discrimination," explained Dorothy Height of New York, president of the National Council of Negro Women.

"But 300 of us got together. I think the one thing we learned, and the one thing we learned back in the days of slavery was that when we were divided we were conquered. But when we were united, we achieved those goals we have."

Steinem advised, "We're past the stage that we're working outside the system. From now on, we have to work inside the system."

Make memories with dough, microwave oven

Let your imagination soar and you can be as creative as you would like in making Christmas ornaments of bread dough.

BENTON HARBOR, Mich—The Christmas holiday season seems to bring out the creativity in all of us as well as an even deeper appreciation of our friends and family ties. Here's an easy and fun way to involve the entire family in making Christmas tree ornaments as well as fond memories that you'll all treasure for many Christmas holidays to come.

Everyone can enjoy cutting out their favorite shapes and then painting them to suit their own creative fancy. Just follow the simple step-by-step instructions listed below and you'll be on your way to having a beautifully decorated tree that uniquely expresses Christmas for your family.

Ingredients and Materials

2½ cups all-purpose flour
1 cup salt
1 cup water
Cookie cutters or cardboard patterns
Glass pizza plate or plastic microwave plate.
Needle and a small straw
Water color paints and lacquer
Yarn, ribbon or ornament hangers

In large mixing bowl, combine all ingredients; flour, salt, water. Mix thoroughly with spoon until all the flour is moistened. Turn dough out on lightly floured surface. Knead dough until smooth, about 10 minutes. Shape into a ball, then return the dough to the bowl. Keep dough covered with a damp cloth or paper towel until ready to use.

Before using, check the consistency of dough. If dough is sticky, add a small amount of flour. If dough is too stiff, knead in additional water by teaspoons. Divide dough in half. Keep one-half covered in bowl. Roll half on floured surface to ⅛ inch thickness. Cut with cookie cutters or cut around your cardboard pattern. Repeat the process with your remaining dough. Use excess dough to add 3-dimensional trim to ornaments. Make sure to moisten trim pieces with water and then press trim, moistened side down, firmly to ornament.

Place ornament on ungreased glass pizza plate. Prick in several places with a needle to allow steam to escape. Use a skewer or small drinking straw to make hole in top of ornament for hangers.

Cook at HIGH in microwave oven for 3 minuts, giving dish half turn once. Check to see if ornaments are firm and not wet on bottom. Add more cooking time in 1-minute segments if ornaments are not dry enough. Cool on rack.

Paint ornaments with water colors to make desired designs. When paint is thoroughly dry, spray with lacquer or, for an extra shiny appearance, paint with lacquer. Insert colored yarn, ribbon, or ornament hangers through the hole in the top of the ornaments. You may use the ornaments to decorate trees, wreaths or holiday packages. This recipe makes about 3 dozen ornaments.

DEAR ABBY

Laziness of few brings dread of Christmas meal

dy ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Christmas is coming soon and I dread it. I belong to a large family and we all go to Mom's for Christmas dinner. Some of us bring prepared dishes and help fix the rest of the meal once we get there.

After dinner all the men retire to the living room, and along with them go a couple of their wives. The wives just sit without even offering to help with the dishes or to clean up the mess. It,s always the same ones. They arrive with their husbands and children just in time to eat, and they never lift a finger to help.

How would you word it to let them know that they are expected to pitch in and help?—HAD ENOUGH IN VA.

DEAR HAD: Use the direct approach. Go into the living room and ask for "volunteers" for K.P. duty. And if they don't volunteer—draft 'em!

DEAR ABBY: A very likeable and popular girl whom we shall call "Ya' know" is driving us all batty with a habit she has acquired.

Her otherwise intelligent conversation is punctuated by frequent and seemingly endless "ya' knows."

We are so distracted by all those "ya' knows" in every sentence that we would like to say something to her, but we don't want to hurt her feelings or get her angry at us. Any suggestions?—HER FRIENDS

DFAR FRIENDS: Tell "Ya' know" in a friendly, nonjudgmental manner, and observe her reaction. If she appreciates being made aware of this distracting habit and says she'd like to overcome it, offer to help her further by responding, "Yes, I know" each time she drops a "ya' know" into a sentence.

But if she resents your well-intentioned criticism, say no more and accept her, "ya' knows" and all.

Sixth graders will perform

DeZavala sixth graders Thursday will present a program entitled "Christmas Music Around the World" to members and guests attending the Christmas luncheon of the Midland Woman's Club.

The hospitality hour will begin at 11:30 a.m., followed by the luncheon at noon and the program at 1 p.m.

Songs from six countries will be included in the program with "White Christmas" from the United States, "La Caminata" from Mexico and "Silent Night" from Austria. A choir of 120 children will perform in Spanish, English and German.

Bill Cormack, coordinator of fine arts for the Midland Independent School District, will narrate the program, and Martha Lewis, sixth grade teacher at DeZavala, will direct the group.

Karen Eggieston will be featured violinist for the "Silent Night" arrangement and Lawana Row will accompany the students on the clarinet for "Pat-a-Pan," a French song.

The event is being arranged by the Book Review Unit of the Midland Woman's Club and Mrs. Doris Bruce will play Christmas music during the luncheon.

HOROSCOPE

By CARROLL RIGHTER

(Thurs., Dec. 15)

GENERAL TENDENCIES: There is some confusion and muddled thinking now so first make sure of your motivations and standpoints, then of your facts and figures. Later, you are able to gain the goodwill of those you like by letting them know you are aware of their wishes and aid them to obtain them.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) A good time to take care of small annoying situations. Evening best spent in company of good friends.

TAURUS (Apr.20 to May20) Avoid arguments with a good friend or there could be a serious severance of connections. Don't be forceful with anyone.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Get all the facts and figures connected with some project before you get into it. Don't go off on unwise tangents.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Be careful of your good name and don't take any unnecessary risks. Don't be arrogant with those in authority or you get into deep trouble.

LEO (July 22 to Aug.21) Study obligations well and then know how best to discharge them. Try to please a loved one more.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Partners can be very demanding, but if you hold your ground you can come to a good understanding.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Instead of complaining about the work ahead of you, get into it and get it done. Take care of a health matter that has kept you under the weather for so long.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Not a good time to consider entertainment or recreation now. A loved one may be out of sorts. Be careful in driving.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Don't take your anger out on closest ties. Regain your equilibrium and accomplish a good deal.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Arguing with a partner could bring serious trouble so avoid and then you can accomplish a good deal. Be careful in motion of any kind.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Some practical problem needs your undivided attention. Make property more functional and attractive as well.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Get rid of that feeling despondency and get to work and accomplish a good deal. Improve appearance and feel better.

Choose right play for hand as a whole

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

You should consider the best play of a suit all by itself if you play bridge with only one suit. If, like the rest of us, you have to contend with more than one suit, look at the whole hand before you choose the right way to play a key suit.

Opening lead — ◇ Q

South took the first trick and led the queen of hearts for a finesse. East won and returned his singleton spade.

West took two spade tricks and led a third spade for his partner to ruff. The only thing you can say for South is that he went down without wasting any time.

South should put up dummy's ace of hearts and the second trick and retrun a heart at once. As the cards lie, this would draw all the trumps. South could afford to give up one trump trick and two spades.

GIVES UP OVERTRICK

South would go down if East had K-x-x instead of only K-x of trumps, but in this case it would do South no good to take the trump finesse. The recommended play would give up an overtrick if West had the king of hearts, but South's contract would be safe.

If you consider the trump suit all by itself, the right play is a finesse. If you consider the hand as a whole, you must refuse to finesse.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes. You hold: S6; JK3; DK843; C1095432. What do yo say?

ANSWER: Bid 1-NT. The hand is strong enough for a response, but not strong enough for a bid of two clubs. If you are doubled at 1-NT, however, run to two clubs.

Doctor advocates aid for 'fit' persons

By DAVID ZINMAN
Newsday

Dr. Kenneth Cooper would like to see a national system of fiscal incentives for physical fitness.

Cooper, the aerobics pioneer, says he belives that by getting government agencies and insurance companies to reward the practitioners of aerobic exercise and other health-maintenance measures, the country can be rescued from its expensive, after-the-fact, sickness-oriented system of medicine.

He advocates "superselect" health and life insurance for people who work hard at preventive medicine: if a medical examination shows a low coronary-risk profile, that patient would qualify for lowered insurance rates.

Another way to promote fitness, he says, would be to have health insurance cover the cost of annual health exams. Some insurance companies do it now, Cooper says, but not many.

He also suggests the possibility of a tax incentive for fitness. He says that $115 billion in government money was spent in the United States in 1975, not on preventive care, but on treatment for existing ailments. "We currently allow income tax deductions for a number of things that have far less potential for saving the government's revenue," he says.

Columbus may have had four ships, letter says

By EDWARD MAGRI

ROME (AP) — An Italian ambassador's letter written in 1493 indicates that Christopher Columbus made his first voyage to America with four ships rather than three as history records, Prof. Marinella Bonvini Mazzanti of Urbino University says.

Mrs. Bonvini Mazzanti says the letter was written from Barcelona on March 9, 1493, by Annibale de Gennaro, the ambassador of the king of Naples. It went to de Gennaro's brother, the ambassador to the duchy of Milan, and the scholar said she found it in the archives of the Este family, which ruled in Modena then.

According to history, Columbus' first expedition in search of a westward water route to the Far East consisted of three caravels, the Nina, the Pinta and the Santa Maria. But Mrs. Bonvini Mazzanti says de Gennaro, in telling his brother about the explorer's departure from Spain, wrote:

"For the entreaties of one called Columba, it pleased the king that he should rig four caravels because he said he wanted to go across the Grand Sea and sail straight westward long enough as to reach the Orient since the world being round he could but make a turn and find the eastern part."

"Columbus returned aboard the Nina, followed by the Pinta," said Mrs. Bonvini Mazzanti, a 36-year-old history professor, in a telephone interview from her home in Senigaglia, near Urbino.

"The Santa Maria was wrecked on Christmas Day of 1492 when Columbus left 40 men in a fort called 'Navidad' on the island of Hispaniola. The fourth ship remained behind with those in the fort."

She said there are references to this fourth ship being left behind in Columbus' diary, although the diary is never precise about the number of ships, and in the report he sent to King Ferdinand's treasurer from Lisbon on March 14, 1493, 10 days after he docked there on his return journey. But she said they were never interpreted as meaning he had departed with a fourth ship.

"When Columbus returned to the fort on the next journey, he reported the men had been killed and everything had been destroyed. Obviously, the caravel also had been destroyed by the infuriated natives," the professor said.

She said the ambassador's letter was based on Columbus' report from Lisbon to the Spanish monarch and Queen Isabella, and the envoy told his brother four times he had read it.

Jogging, exercise lengthen life

By DAVID ZINMAN
Newsday

With all the popularity of jogging in recent yeas, there is one question that still has not been scientifically and definitively answered: does running add years to life?

But Dr. Kenneth H. Cooper, a pioneer of the current physical fitness movement, thinks it does. The data won't be in until ongoing studies are finished sometime in the 1980s. But Cooper says this much about longevity is already known:

"According to today's actuarial standards, if you exercise regularly, you'll gain four years of future.

"If you don't smoke, you'll gain from three to eight years.

"If you're moderate in your drinking, you'll gain one year.

"If you practice weight control, you'll add between two and eight years, depending on how many pounds you aren't overweight.

"And if you simply take time every year for a preventive medical checkup, you'll add two more years to your future."

Cooper is the man who wrote "Aerobics," the widely read book espousing an exercise program based on activities like jogging that demand large intakes of oxygen.

Before jogging became popular, the "big" physical-fitness exercises had included isometrics, which pits muscle against muscle or muscles against a "static force" like a wall, and weight-lifting. But Cooper was one of a group who felt it was more important to get people outside and moving. Cooper said he believed it was more beneficial to take part in an extended, moderately strenuous, deep-breating activity — which is what aerobics is all about — to strengthen the heart, lungs and circulatory system.

As it turned out, his book, published in 1968, promoted the right idea at the right time — right for a sedentary society whose No. 1 killer is heart disease. Since then, Cooper, who was an Air Force officer at the time, has ridden the crest of a physical fitness revolution.

In the ensuing nine years, he wrote two more books — together, those three volumes have now sold 6 million copies — left the Air Force, opened a big "executive exercise" center in Dallas, and has become one of the gurus of the country's fitness boom.

Now, he has produced his fourth book, "The Aerobics Way" (M. Evans and Co. Inc., $10.50). In it, Cooper looks back over the past decade with satisfaction. In 1968, he writes, there were only 100,000 joggers. Today, there are 8 million to 10 million. Many others are cycling, walking, swimming and jumping rope.

At the same time, the national death rate from heart disease has dropped almost 14 percent. there has also been a slight increase in the average American's life span from 70.9 years in 1970 to 72.0 in 1974. To his credit, Cooper doesn't atttribute those improved statistics to jogging alone. He said in an interview that "there are four major factors to preventive health care: proper weight, proper diet, avoiding tobacco, and exercise. But exercise may be the most important of all."

Basically, Cooper's training program calls for regular aerobic workouts to build and then maintain fitness. He awards "points" for jogging certain distances at certain speeds; one must earn 30 points a week for cardio-vascular benefit. The most popular way to reach that goal is by running two miles in 13 to 16 minutes three times a week. (To Cooper, "jogging" becomes "running" at nine minutes a mile.)

But there are other ways of earning aerobics points. Football is worth six points an hour, soccer six points for 40 minutes, badminton and tennis (singles) 4 1-2 points an hour, fencing six points an hour, hockey three points for 20 minutes, and rope skipping three points for 10 minutes. Volleyball provides two points for 30 minutes, basketball and racquetball 4 1-2 points for 30 minutes, and rowing four points for 18 minutes. Even golf has some value, though not much. Golfers get 1 1-2 points for nine holes.

Cooper rates cross-country skiing and swimming ahead of running as the best cardio-vascular exercises with, at the same time, the least risk of muscular and skeletal injury. He puts bicycling and walking in fourth and fifth places. "Walking is an excellent exercise with probably the least muscular skeletal problems," he says. "But it requires much more time."

Cooper — a 46-year-old jogger who says he runs about 15 miles a week — is not without his critics. Some even emphasize that people have died while jogging. but most of those deaths, Cooper says, have occurred in the first six weeks of training; and nearly all involved men over 40 who had had no medical clearance, a "must" in Cooper's program.

Other critics hold that jogging leads to problems like varicose veins, dropped organs and skeletal wear and tear.

But Cooper insists that, although extended running may sometimes produce foot and leg problems, there is no evidence to prove that running is generally harmful for the muscles, bones and veins. On the contrary, he says, there is a large body of evidence to show the opposite.

He even says he has found at his center that in most cases, varicose veins improve after jogging. X-rays have also demonstrated that the hip joints of long-distance runners undergo only half as much wear and tear as the hips of a control group of nonrunners, he adds. "The human body didn't evolve through millions of year to be fragile and sedentary," he says. "You'll wear out a lot faster from the stress of inactivity than you will from exercise."

One criticism he finds more difficult to cope with is the charge that his aerobics point system turns jogging into drudgery, a spartan chore that may turn people away from discovering the real pleasure of running for its own sake. Cooper responds by saying that his aerobics chart was created to enable him to measure the benefits of running scientically. Also, the vast majority of Americans are goal-oriented, he says, and his program helps them to exercise in a disciplined way.

In nine years, Cooper has kept charts on more than 10,000 joggers in his Dallas center. In his new book, he says, he has documented several facts:

-There is a correlation between physical condition and coronary risk factors. Men in the best physical shape tested best in the risk factors of cholesterol, triglycerides, glucose, uric acid, blood pressure and body fat. Men in the poorest condition showed uniformly poor results across the board.

Louisville topples Purdue at buzzer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Denny Crum had been there before, and he didn't like the territory.

Crum's 10th-ranked Louisville Cardinals trailed Purdue 66-62 with 1:25 left to play, and Tuesday's spine-tingler had all the earmarks of the close season-opening loss at Providence.

"They (Purdue) were giving us the outside shot, and we couldn't buy one," said Crum. "We wanted to work it inside ...but our guys simply don't have much patience against a zone. This was similar to the Providence game, except we hit the crucial buckets at the end this time."

Indeed, Louisville managed to shake off the effects of a cold shooting performance (40 percent) in the final minute, sufficient time for a 6-0 run capped by Rick Wilson's 20-footer with a second to go that iced a 68-66 win.

The game was actually decided through two key defensive plays by Louisville guard Darrell Griffith, the Cards' leading scorer, who suffered through a 2-for-12 shooting night.

After a Wilson basket made it 66-64, Griffith took a charge from Purdue's Eugene Parker with 54 seconds to play, and tied the game with a 20-footer 10 seconds later.

On the ensuing play, the 6foot-3 Griffith forced a jump ball while defending 6-foot-8 Walter Jordan, and then won the tip with 21 seconds to go.

That set the stage for Wilson's winning shot.

Purdue Coach Fred Schaus, who was upset over the charging call against Parker, also felt that his team was robbed of two seconds at game's end.

"I know three seconds were left," he said, although the officials ruled that only one second remained after Wilson's shot.

Louisville and Purdue were the only members of The Associated Press Top Twenty to see action Tuesday night.

Elsewhere:

—Duke, 5-2, belted the University of Chicago 99-61 behind Jim Sparnakel's 24 points. Chicago Coach John Angelus called the Blue Devils "potentially one of the better teams in America."

Seattle Slew top Horse of the Year

NEW YORK (AP) — "He's just doing super," says Mickey Taylor of Seattle Slew who stands today as the Horse of the Year for 1977 on the basis of a relatively short but super campaign.

There was criticism from some quarters about the fact that Seattle Slew raced only once after his march to the Triple Crown and was a badly beaten fourth in that race July 3.

"We thought that he deserved it," said Taylor, who co-owns Seattle Slew with Dr. Jim Hill, after the 3-year-old colt won the Eclipse Award for Horse of the Year Tuesday, beating out Forego who had won the honor the three previous years. "...next year he'll show that it was the right vote."

Slew edged Martha L. Gerry's Forego 105½ to 84½ in voting by members of the National Turf Writers Association, the Daily Racing Form and the Thoroughbred Racing Associations.

Seattle Slew now has won three Eclipse Awards in two years of racing. He also was named 3-year-old champion over Loblolly Stable's Cox's Ridge and was 2-year-old champion in 1976.

While Forego had his string of Horse of the Year Awards snapped, the 7-year-old gelding once again was voted the best 4-year-old and up, besting Connie Ring's Crystal Water.

Evansville cage team dies in plane crash

By CHARLES ROBERTS
Associated Press Writer

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — A chartered DC-3 loaded with college basketball players and team supporters was trying to turn back to the airport here with a spluttering engine when it crashed into a muddy hillside, witnesses say.

All 29 aboard were killed, including the entire 14-member Evansville University basketball team and their coach.

Searchers slogged through the mud today looking for two bodies still missing.

THE TWIN-engine propeller plane, chartered from National Jet Service Inc. of Indianapolis, left Dress Regional Airport here at 7:20 p.m. Tuesday bound for Nashville, Tenn., and "encountered some type of difficulty," said Bill Phipps, deputy coroner for Vanderburgh County.

He said the plane appeared to have turned back to the airport when it crashed into the hillside.

"We saw it go into the clouds. We heard a loud 'pop.' We heard an engine rev up, then we heard the crash and saw an explosion," said Patrick Alvey, a licensed pilot and owner of Metro Beechcraft Corp., a charter service at the airport.

Alvey said he and a companion were among the first people to arrive at the crash scene, near railroad tracks north of a new residential subdivision.

"The fuselage was intact, the left wing was ripped off," he recalled. "Very many bodies were still in their seatbelts and many were strewn around. It was a mess — just a total mess.

"We had four people alive. They were just strewn around. The wreckage was on fire. There was nothing we could do for the people inside of it," said Alvey.

"It looked like he was at least trying to get back to the airport," he said of

Seattle happy with trade

SEATTLE (AP) — Never mind that Tony Dorsett is a shoo-in to rush for 1,000 yards this season for the playoff-bound Dallas Cowboys.

If the Seattle Seahawks next year could swing a deal similar to the one they pulled off last May — in which they peddled the rights to Dorsett to Dallas for four top draft choices — they would, no questions asked.

In fact, John Thompson, the Seahawks' general manager, said Tuesday, "The trade looks better today than the day we made it."

What the Seahawks did in the last National Football League draft was surrender their firstround draft rights to Dorsett, college football's all-time rushing leader from Pittsburgh, to the Cowboys for Dallas' first-round pick and three second-round selections.

Seattle in turn selected offensive tackle Steve August from Tulsa as its No. 1 pick, and acquired linebacker Terry Beeson from Kansas, guard Tom Lynch from Boston College, and wide receiver Duke Fergerson from the Cowboys in the second round.

"If we could make that type of trade again next year, we would," says Jack Patera, Seattle's head coach.

Of the four players obtained in the deal, Beeson has developed the quickest.

"Terry has come on strong," Thompson said of the Seahawks' starting middle linebacker. "He's a very serious contender for rookie of the year on defense, and it looks like he's going to be around for a long, long time."

On the other hand, August has spent most of the season on the bench recovering from an ankle injury suffered last summer before the start of training camp. Lynch, who missed all but the final week of training camp because of a contract dispute, won a starting job in the offensive line two weeks ago. Fergerson has been one of the club's top receivers all season.

Thompson says the trade has enabled Seattle to develop ahead of schedule.

"We feel the same way we did on draft day. We felt we had two drafts in one because of that trade," Thompson said. "We've had a number of young people play our skill positions. All three quarterbacks, three of our wide receivers and all of our running backs, with the exception of Ed Marinaro, are first or second-year players."

It would be unrealistic, Thompson believes, to predict how Dorsett would have done this season running behind Seattle's line.

"Number one, with all due respect, our line has done a heck of a job this season," Thompson said. "Dallas has far more tools at this stage than the Seahawks do. It would be unreasonable to say he would have had as big a year as he is having now (with Dallas).

"That doesn't mean he wouldn't look good in a blue and green uniform, because he would. He's quite a football player."

One player who is tired of hearing about the Dorsett trade is August.

"It's frustrating because I haven't been able to prove myself," said August, whose playing time has been limited to the special teams.

The tag "the one they got instead of Tony Dorsett" is wearing thin on him, August says.

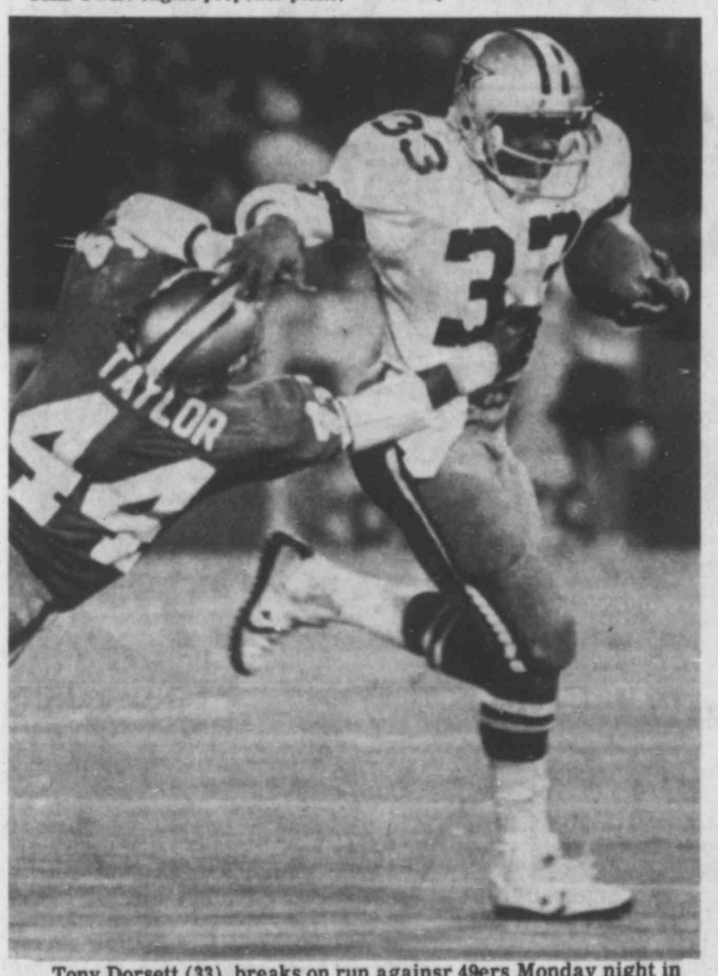
"A lot of people look at it like it was just me for him," August said.

Before the season, Thompson said, no one in the Seahawks' front office expected the club to be in a position to win five games in 1977. Seattle could become the first expansion team to win five games in its second season if it beats Cleveland in the Kingdome Sunday.

"We hoped we could do that well, but we didn't expect to win five games, particularly when we lost August and Steve Niehaus and the fact we moved into the very tough AFC this year," Thompson said. "It's a pleasant surprise being where we are right now."

Niehaus, the big defensive tackle, who was Seattle's No. 1 draft pick in 1976, has played only sparingly the latter half of this season following shoulder surgery in the offseason.

Seattle will stick with its philosophy of selecting "the best player available" in future drafts, Thompson said.



Tony Dorsett (33), breaks on run againsr 49ers Monday night in 42-35 victory for the Cowboys. Coach Tom Landry feels that offense has arrived just in time for the playoffs in two weeks.

Landry evasive about opponent

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — Tom Landry is refusing to play the "who-he-wants-in-the-playoffs game."

Either Chicago or Minnesota will meet the Dallas Cowboys in the first round of the National Conference playoffs Dec. 26 in Texas Stadium.

A writer slipped Landry — still groggy on only two hours sleep after a wild 42-35 victory over San Francisco Monday night — a sneak question at the Cowboy coach's weekly press conference Tuesday.

"Would you prefer Chicago or Minnesota?" Landry was asked.

Landry laughed off the question and then proceeded to list reasons why either team would provide formidable opposition.

"I do know that Walter Payton is a problem," said Landry of Chicago's record-smashing runner. "He doesn't look like he's doing anything and he's got 100 yards. He lets you know he is in town.

"Minnesota has all that playoff experience and the Vikes can beat you on any given day. Tommy Kramer may be a rookie quarterback but he can get hot."

"When the Cowboys show up you don't know what you're going to get," said the Cowboy coach, shaking his head. "We'll definitely keep you loose."

"Sometimes this happens when the division race is settled," said the red-eyed Landry who arrived back in Dallas with his team at 4 a.m.

"I heard a lot of people say how exciting the game was," said Landry. "Well, I didn't think it was too exciting.

"This team has greater potential than any we have had," said Landry. "We just don't have enough experience on defense. They (the defense) can play extremely well or bad. We'd played pretty good defense until last night."

Landry said he thought his defense was too tentative against the 49ers.

"We were overcautious in the secondary because the field was slick as a putting green and we didn't have a good pass rush," said Landry. "But I don't think this will continue. We'll put in a lot of work on defense this week.'

Landry said the Cowboys will be playing Denver for pride Sunday in Texas Stadium.

"We've got to play hard to keep our momentum going," he added. "It looks like our offense is in fine shape now."

Scribe picks Irish, Seminoles, OU, Aggies

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

NEW YORK (AP) — After last season's bowl predictions, the question was what were we going to do for an encore?

Certainly you remember that this corner called the correct winners of all 11 bowl games, exclusive of the Independence Bowl.

This time, we have an additional treat in store for you. Not only are we going to take a crack at all 13 bowl games — including the Independence — but we're going to do it twice — once on a won-lost basis and also against the point spread.

The final week of the regular season, by the way, produced a 21-7-1 mark for a .750 percentage, bringing the season's count to 568-227-16 — .714.

We'll run down the bowl games in order, but to give you a sneak preview and so you don't have to jump to the end to find out our Cotton Bowl pick, it's Notre Dame over Texas.

Independence Bowl — Louisiana Tech, 7-1-2, vs. Louisville, 7-3-1, no line: Maxie Lambright's Louisiana Tech Bulldogs are a perennial power in the Southland Conference and they have a potent aerial game with Keith Thibodeaux pitching and Rod Foppe catching. Vince Gibson's Louisville Cardinals can run the ball, but Tech has one of the nation's top defenses, too. Strangely enough, we're picking...Louisville 21-14.

Liberty Bowl — Nebraska, 8-3, favored by 6 over North Carolina, 8-2-1: When Oklahoma polished off Nebraska 38-7, Coach Barry Switzer crowed, "We're going to the beach (Miami), not the river (Mississippi)." Nebraska's at the river when they'd rather be at the beach. This formula's called desire...North Carolina 24-21.

Hall of Fame Classic — Maryland, 7-4, favored by 7½ over Minnesota, 7-4: Minnesota's Gophers must have peaked in that 16-0 upset of Michigan because they haven't been very impressive since. The high spot of Maryland's season came way back in its opener, a 21-14 triumph over Clemson. The Terps' injuries should have healed by now...Maryland 24-10.

Tangerine Bowl — Texas Tech, 7-4, favored by 7 over Florida State, 8-2: This one presents a formula known as the lame duck coach. It's Steve Sloan's finale at Tech as he heads for Ole Miss. That's got to hurt the Red Raiders, no matter how fired up they are. Besides, the Tangerine Bowl's in Florida State's neighborhood...Florida State 27-17.

Fiesta Bowl — Penn State, 10-1, favored by 6½ over Arizona State, 9-2: This is one of those formulas where Penn State really has nothing to gain while Arizona State is itching to knock off a big-name team like the Nittany Lions, just as it did to Nebraska two years ago. But Joe Paterno keeps saying this could be his best team ever and Joe usually says what he means. Forget the formula...Penn State 28-14.

Gator Bowl — Pitt, 8-2-1, favored by 7 over Clemson, 8-2-1: Same reasoning as the Fiesta Bowl. Clemson is striving for big-time recognition, but Pitt has too many guns...Pitt 35-21.

Sun Bowl — Louisiana State, 7-3, favored by 3½ over Stanford, 8-3: A game of contrasts — LSU's Charles Alexander, one of the nation's top runners, against Stanford's Guy Benjamin, one of the top passer. LSU has been here before and the Tigers should know enough to keep their distance from friendly Juarez, Mexico. In a wild one...LSU 38-31.

Peach Bowl — Iowa State, 83, favored by 2½ over North Carolina State, 7-4: The Cyclones from the Big Eight Conference finally got a bowl invitation after being overlooked a year ago. It's up to them to make the most of it...Iowa State 26-13.

Bluebonnet Bowl — Southern California, 7-4, favored by 4 over Texas A&M, 7-3: In John McKay's last college game, USC embarrassed A&M 20-0 in the 1975 Liberty Bowl. McKay is gone — he finally won another game last Sunday when Tampa Bay knocked off New Orleans — but the Aggies haven't forgotten...Texas A&M 28-21.

Rose Bowl — Michigan, 10-1, favored by 13½ over Washington, 7-4: Are you aware that Michigan hasn't won its final game since beating Ohio State 17-3 in 1966. Since then, the Wolverines have dropped three Rose Bowls, one Orange Bowl and are 0-4-1 when they closed out with regular-season windups. Time for a change...Michigan 35-14.

Sugar Bowl — Alabama, 10-1, favored by 1½ over Ohio State, 9-2: In combined victories, no coaching match-up in history — in a bowl or anywhere else — can match Alabama's Bear Bryant (272) vs. Ohio State's Woody Hayes (231). Even Woody has to play second fiddle to the Bear...Alabama 24-14.

Orange Bowl — Oklahoma, 10-1, favored by 13 over Arkansas, 10-1: Why the large spread between a pair of 10-1 teams? While Arkansas was struggling to beat Texas Tech 17-14 in its last game, Oklahoma was drubbing Nebraska 38-7, after bombing Colorado 52-14, after crushing Oklahoma State 61-28. Get the picture? It looks like...Oklahoma 27-17.

Cotton Bowl — Texas, 11-0, favored by 6½ over Notre Dame, 10-1: If Texas wins, the Longhorns are the national champs. That would be too cut-and-dried. If Notre Dame wins, however, imagine all the fun when the final AP poll comes out. The controversy might last forever...Notre Dame 24-23.

Bryson sparks Pack over Monterey five

LUBBOCK — Walter Bryson flipped in 17 points here Tuesday night to spark the Midland High Bulldogs to a 57-49 victory over the Lubbock Monterey Plainsmen in basketball action.

The victory gives Coach Don Humphery's Pack a 10-4 record going into the Wichita Falls Tournament Thursday through Saturday.

Bryson was backed up by Roy Lee Jefferson and Kiffy Hickey with 11 points each.

It was a sweet win for the Bulldogs after they lost to the Plainsmen, 41-40 in overtime last weekend in the Canyon Reef Tourney in Snyder.

Midland took an 18-12 first period lead and kept the pressure on Monterey the rest of the way.

The Bulldogs waxed hot in the final period, hitting nine of 10 shots from the floor in a pleasing performance for Humphrey.

THE LOSS dropped Monterey to a season record of 6-7 going into Thursday's game with the powerful Abilene High Eagles in the Monterey Gymnasium.

Midland held on to a 38-36 advantage going into the final period and for the game, hit 39 per cent to Monterey's ice cold 29 per centage percentage.

Tony Hamby was the big gun for the Plainsmen with 22 points and he was the only Monterey player in the double figures.

Rebs rout Mustangs by 71-43

SWEETWATER — The Midland Lee Rebels rolled to their eighth victory of the season here Tuesday night, as they crushed Sweetwater, 71-43.

The win ended a two-game losing slide for Coach Paul Stueckler's team, and upped their season record to 8-4. They'll be in action again Thursday night in the opening round of the San Antonio Invitational tourney.

The Rebs got a balanced scoring effort in the win, with Ernest Merritt leading all Lee scorers with 19 points. Also hitting in double figures were Mike Oestmann, 14, and Joe Garner, 12. Mark Duncan of Sweetwater was the game's leading scorer with 22 points.

The Rebs sped out to an 18-6 first quarter lead behind the scoring punch of Oestmann, Garner and Merritt and never looked back. At the half they were up 36-17.

In the junior varsity tilt, Lee's Stonewall Brigade won easily, as they dumped the Baby Mustangs, 68-30.

Cagers perish

the pilot. Alvey said the plane hit the hillside at an angle of 240 to 250 degrees from takeoff.

"I would say he lost an engine and tried to get back."

The bodies were taken in a Louisville & Nashville Railroad boxcar to a temporary morgue set up in the city Community Center in downtown Evansville, 10 miles from the crash site. In the room where the rows of bodies lay beneath white sheets, which is sometimes used as a basketball court, a volleyball net was pushed aside for extra space.

JOHN ED Washington, one of the dead players, "used to come in here and play ball in the gym," said Walter Thomas, a local resident who remembered pickup games with Washington.

"Now that's where they (the bodies) are. It's unreal."

The bodies were later taken to area funeral homes.

Assistant coach Mark Sandy, 25, did not accompany the team because he was on a scouting mission at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale, Ill.

"I heard it on the radio coming back," said Sandy as he awaited relatives of the victims in the Community Center gym.

Forrest Gregg resigns Brown post

CLEVELAND (AP) — Art Modell, owner of the Cleveland Browns, said Tuesday the search will begin immediately for a successor to stormy tempered Coach Forrest Gregg, who has resigned.

Modell said, "I've tried to follow a system of internal growth, but maybe it's time to go outside (the organization) for some new thinking and new perspective.

"We'll pick the best man for the job, regardless of his popularity or recognition," Modell added. "Name value is not important and we'll proceed with deliberate speed."

Peter Hadhazy, general manager of the Browns said, "We're leaning toward an assistant coach in the National Football League. We're zeroed in on someone and we have complete confidence in him. But, if he turns us down, we'll look elsewhere."

Gregg, 44, first turned in his resignation Monday to Modell, who immediately accepted it, but agreed that Gregg would finish the season. However, news of the resignation leaked out and, after a hurried conference Tuesday, Modell, Hadhazy and Gregg agreed that Gregg's resignation would be effective immediately.

Defensive coordinator Dick Modzelewski was put in charge for the final week of the regular season and the windup game Sunday at Seattle.

Gregg had infuriated some members of his team this season with what they claimed were unfair tongue lashings and verbal flareups.

"Forrest is an emotional man," explained veteran placekicker Don Cockroft. "He says things on the spur of the moment. When he can control that better, he can be (a) championship coach. Sometimes he doesn't know what he has said that hurts someone."

Thom Darden, a six-year pro defensive back and one of the most outspoken critics of Gregg, said, "I feel sorry for him. I know what kind of pressure and mental strain he's been under the last few weeks."

"Forrest has a lot to offer as an offensive line coach. But, as an overall advisor, he lacks personality, charisma, to make guys perform 100 percent week in and week out," he added. "Maybe it's the players, but I don't think so."

Star running back Gregg Pruitt, was one of the few players who expressed disappointment over Gregg's departure, saying, "I'm not happy. I don't think we needed an overall coaching change. He's the guy who gave me a chance and I appreciate that. I think he had the rug pulled out from under him. Besides, no matter who they get, there will be disagreements. You can't please all 43 guys."

The Browns, 6-7 this season, enjoyed their usual day off Tuesday and were scheduled to begin preparations today for the Seattle game, with Modzelewski in charge. Hadhazy emphasized, however, that Modzelewski, a longtime Browns aide and former star player, would direct the team only for this week and is not under consideration for the coaching job.

Newcombe nears top form again

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — John Newcombe, australia's three-time Wimbledon winner, Wednesday gave notice that he was nearing top form despite losing to American Roscoe Tanner in the New South Wales Open championship.

Tanner won the 90-minute match 6-3, 5-7, 6-4 at Sydney's White City courts.

But Newcombe made it clear that his illustrious tennis career was far from over, pointing out afterwards that he was only 80 percent up to his best form.

"I wanted something more at the finish and couldn't get it but you can't expect miracles," Newcombe said.

"It's tough against Roscoe on this surface as he serves so well. But on what I did today, I'm very confident I'll put up a good showing in the Australian Open in Melbourne next week."

Tanner, the No. 4 seed, is renowned as one of the fastest servers in the game and with 18 aces in just 16 service games Wednesday, he lived up to his reputation.

Tanner said he was never really confident of victory until it came because the match was so tight.

The current Australian Open champion, Tanner took the first set 6-3 and looked like he'd race away with the match with the aid of his powerful service in the second.

Final tribute given to basketball great

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Adolph Rupp, eulogized as a man who strove for excellence in all things, was buried Tuesday as many of his former players paid a final tribute to their coach.

Rupp, who in 42 years transformed the University of Kentucky's basketball program into a national power, was buried after a brief funeral service.

Rupp, 76, died Saturday night at the UK Medical Center, where he had been hospitalized since Nov. 9. He suffered more than a year from cancer of the spine, and was also plagued by diabetes and heart and kidney ailments.

Among the players on hand were representatives of each of Rupp's four NCAA champions — Wah Wah Jones and Ralph Beard from the 1948 and 1949 teams dubbed "The Fabulous Five"; Cliff Hagan and Frank Ramsey from the 1951 titlists, and Vernon Hatton, Adrian Smith and John Crigler from "The Fiddlin' Five" of 1958.

Dr. M. Glynn Burke, pastor of Central Christian Church where Rupp was a member, characterized college basketball's winningest coach as a man whose life "was a quest for excellence."

"He wanted to bring out the best in the game itself, the best in each of his players, the best in his teams. He wanted firstclass performance and wasn't satisfied with anything less," Burke said.

"Of course, some of the coach's language did not exactly come from the Bible," Burke said, adding, "his mind was on basketball, even when he could on occasion be heard to quote that familiar psalm, 'I will lift up mine eyes to the hills from whence does my help come,' but he was thinking of those hills in eastern Kentucky, where help came in the form of some big, strong players."

Those players to whom Burke referred helped Rupp win 874 games in 42 seasons, including the four NCAA titles, a National Invitation Tournament crown and 27 Southeastern Conference championships.

Also on hand for the services was Joe B. Hall, who played and coached under Rupp before replacing The Baron in 1972; Rupp's longtime assistant, Harry C. Lancaster; Alabama Coach C.M. Newton, who played for Rupp's 1951 national champions, and Cincinnati Coach Gale Catlett, a former Rupp assistant.

Kentucky Gov. Julian M. Carroll, who declared Tuesday a day of mourning and ordered flags flown at half-staff across the state, also attended, as did University of Kentucky President Otis Singletary.

Rupp's wife, Esther, sat with the coach's son, Adolph Jr., his wife, and Rupp's two grandchildren.

After the service, the 10 pallbearers — including former Commissioner of Baseball A.B. "Happy" Chandler, Rupp's longtime friend — placed the walnut coffin into a black hearse. The procession to Lexingttn Cemetery wound past UK's Memorial Coliseum, the 11,500-seat facility where Rupp's teams played from 1950 until he was forced into retirement in 1972.

Former Tech assistant gets Air Force post

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. (AP) — Bill Parcells, an assistant coach at Texas Tech with experience at West Point, has been selected to head the football program at the Air Force Academy.

The 36-year-old Parcells will become the Air Force's third coach, succeeding Ben Martin, who coached the team for the past 20 years. Martin, 56, announced his retirement on Nov. 10, ending the longest term of any coach at the 22-year-old school.

A 1963 graduate of Wichita State, Parcells coached at Hastings College in Nebraska in 1964, then returned to Wichita State in 1965 as defensive line coach.

He got his first taste of military academy coaching in 1967 when he joined the staff at West Point, serving under Tom Cahill.

He also was an assistant at Vanderbilt under Steve Sloan before following Sloan to Texas Tech in 1975. At the Lubbock school Parcells built a reputation as being one of the top defensive coaches in the nation, guiding the Red Raiders to high rankings in defensive statistics during the last two years.

Parcells is a native of Englewood, N.J.

Clemson fans come up short

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Clemson University booster club officials say they could have sold 50,000 tickets to the Gator Bowl football game if they had been available.

But Clemson, which plays Pittsburgh in the Dec. 30 contest at Jacksonville, Fla., had only 25,000 allotted to it.

"There were just not enough tickets to go around," said George Bennett, secretary of the IPTAY (I Pay Thirty A Year) booster club. "I know that we have some people who are really upset, but we had money in hand for over 50,000 tickets."

Left out were faculty members — unless they gave more than $100 to IPTAY — all IPTAY contributors of $30 to $100 and more than a third of the $100-plus contributors. Students grabbed 9,000 of the tickets, which cost $10 apiece.

Monroe captures win

JUNO, Fla. (AP) — Larry Monroe, a Morristown, N.J. golfer, needed a three-under par 143 to win $3,500 and the third event of the second PGA club professional tournament series.

Monroe birdied the last three holes Tuesday to give him a final-round 70 and the victory.

The 39-year-old Monroe now has won $10,000 to date this year.

New Orleans rips Los Angeles

By The Associated Press

The Los Angeles Lakers, their ranks thinned by trade and suspension, were no match for the New Orlreans Jazz, who let Pete Maravich and Truck Robinson do the things they do best and sent a big Superdome crowd home happy.

Maravich, the defending National Basketball Association scoring champion, tossed in 40 points and Robinson, the league's leading rebounder, grabbed 26 rebounds to lead the Jazz to a 117-94 victory over the Los Angeles Lakers Tuesday night before a crowd of 31,119, the second-largest in NBA history.

When Philadelphia came to New Orleans last month, that game drew 35,077 — but the Jazz lost.

"It's always great to win, but especially so at home with this big crowd," said Jazz Coach Elgin Baylor.

The Lakers had to fly in a sick player, Jamaal Wilkes, to muster the eight-man squad required by the league. Los Angeles was down to seven men after the suspension of Kermit Washington and the trade which sent James Edwards and Earl Tatum to Indiana. The two men obtained in the trade, Adrian Dantley and Dave Robisch, had not yet reported.

Three other Lakers, Kenny Carr, Brad Davis and Don Chaney, are on the injured list.

But Coach Jerry West declined the alibi. "Being shorthanded was not a factor because I felt we could play the Jazz well," he said. "We've worked a lot harder, but we are not having much success. It's very frustrating."

All eight NBA games played Tuesday night were won by the home teams. In addition to New Orleans' victory, the Milwaukee Bucks beat the Philadelphia 76ers 129-117, the New York Knicks edged the Atlanta Hawks 107-106, the Chicago Bulls defeated the Denver Nuggets 99-96, the Portland Trail Blazers topped the Buffalo Braves 111-108, the Boston Celtics beat the New Jersey Nets 122-108, the Cleveland Cavaliers stopped the Seattle SuperSonics 116-104 and the Washington Bullets trimned the Golden State Warriors 102-96.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 33 points and grabbed 16 rebounds for Los Angeles, but it was not enough. A 20-2 burst during one stretch of the second period erased an early Los Angeles advantage and New Orleans led 49-48 at halftime and 77-71 after three quarters before pulling away.

The victory snapped a sevengame losing streak for New Orleans.

Rookie Marques Johnson scored 29 points and Brian Winters added 27 as the Bucks built a 19-point lead in the third period and held on. Johnson said there was added incentive playing the Sixers.

"They are some of the greatest ballplayers in the world," he said. "It has to motivate me to go out and play against a Dr. J (Julius Erving) or a (George) McGinnis." Erving scored 29 points but McGinnis was limited to 11.

Knicks 107, Hawks 106

Lonnie Shelton's jumper from the foul line at the buzzer sent the Hawks to their fifth straight loss and capped a wild finish which saw the lead change hands four times in the final 14 seconds. Shelton, limited to 15 minutes because of foul trouble, scored 19 points while teammate Bob McAdoo had 30 points and 21 rebounds.

Blazers 111, Braves 108

Portland posted its 31st consecutive home-court victory — including last season's playoffs — before its 27th straight sellout crowd. But it wasn't easy as the Blazers led only 84-79 going into the final period and had to stave off numerous threats in the fourth quarter.

Maurice Lucas led Portland with 26 points.

Bulls 99, Nuggets 96

Artis Gilmore scored five points in the final 1:47 as Chicago snapped Denver's fivegame winning streak and moved within one game of the first-place Nuggets in the Midwest Division. Gilmore finished with 20 points and 26 rebounds.

"I knew near the end I had to take charge and either score or get fouled," said Gilmore. "That's why I went to the basket."

Celtics 122, Nets 108

Dave Cowens and Charlie Scott scored 23 points each and Jo Jo White added 21 as the Celtics stopped the Nets' twogame winning streak.

Bullets 102, Warriors 96

Phil Chenier took over for the injured Kevin Grevey in the first quarter and scored 25 points to lead the Bullets to their 12th victory in the last 15 games. Grevey needed six stitches to close a cut in his upper lip, but returned to action in the final period.

Cavaliers 116, Sonics 104

Lenny Wilkens suffered his first loss after six victories since he took over as coach of the Sonics from Bob Hopkins. Campy Russell scored 30 points for Cleveland and Jim Chones had 20 points and 14 assists.

Gets promotion

SAN DIEGO (AP) — San Diego Padres promotion director Jim Weigel has been promoted to director of minor league operations of the National League baseball club.

Weigel, after five years as promotion director, was succeeded in his old job by season ticket manager Andy Strasburg, the Padres said Tuesday.

Winnipeg posts win

By The Associated Press

The Winnipeg Jets produced their "best disciplined" game of the year Tuesday night to defeat a touring Czechoslovakian team 5-1 in a game that counts in the World Hockey Association standings.

Jets Coach Larry Hillman had special praise for his top line of Bobby Hull, Ulf Nilsson and Anders Hedberg, each of whom got a goal and combined to produce a solid effort.

"I guess it's true that as that line goes, so go the Jets," said Hillman after the game, one of two in the WHA Tuesday. In the other league game, Birmingham defeated Houston 5-3.

"They set the pace on every shift. Anders asked me to shorten the shifts because they were going a hundred percent all the time. That's why I used four lines later."

The teams played through a scoreless first period

Islanders, Hawks in 2-2 deadlock

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — It was a red-hot team against a freezing cold one. The New York Islanders, who had lost just one of their last 14, met the Chicago Black Hawks, who had won just three of their last 17.

Momentum mattered not at all. The Black Hawks and Islanders tied 2-2 in an admittedly lackluster contest.

"Both teams played bad," said Chicago Coach Bob Pulford. "Our team isn't skating well and we gave up the puck too much. I felt fortunate to get the tie."

Islanders Coach Al Arbour wasn't particularly thrilled with his team, either. "We're both usually close-checking but tonight it was a wide open game," said Arbour. "We try to stickhandle too much in our own zone."

Chicago, which trailed twice, pulled even at 2:16 of the third period when Jean Savard scored his seventh goal of the season. Seconds after Islanders goalie Bill Smith made key saves on Dale Tallon and Darcy Rota, Savard picked up the puck drove it in from close range.

New York had scored first when rookie Mike Bossy tipped a Pat Price shot past Black Hawks goalie Mike Veisor at 9:21 of the opening period. The goal was Bossy's 22nd of the year, pulling him even with Colorado's Paul Gardner for the National Hockey League lead.

In the other NHL games Tuesday night, the Colorado Rockies beat the Buffalo Sabres 4-1 and the Vancouver Canucks beat the Washington Capitals 31.

Rota tied it for Chicago at 7:10 of the second period, lifting a loose puck over the fallen Smith, but the Islanders went back in front at 14:21 of the period when Gerry Hart's shot glanced off the skate of J.P. Parise and into the net.

The tie was the second of the season between the teams. The other meeting ended in a 4-0 New York triumph last Wednesday night. Islanders center Bryan Trottier thought that game might have spurred the Black Hawks to a stronger performance Tuesday.

"They came at us because we did a job on them in Chicago," he said.

Pulford didn't exactly agree. "I thought we played better against them in losing 4-0 last week," he said.

Rockies 4, Sabres 1

Stock plan announced

The board of directors of Olix Industries, Inc., this morning announced the implementation of a stock repurchase plan whereby up to 100,000 shares of its common stock will be repurchased by the company.

The funds to be utilized in the repurchase plan will be taken from the cash reserves of the company which constitutes earned surplus.

In adopting the plan, Kenn S. George, president of Olix Industries, stated that the board of directors determined that the repurchase of the stock would provide additional stock to be utilized for corporate purposes and constitute a good investment program for Olix.

Olix Industries, Inc., is engaged in the manufacturing of office and business furniture, real estate subdivision and the oil and gas business.

Recently the company announced its intent to sell its Arizona real estate and increase its involvement in the exploration for energy resources. The stock is traded in the over-the-counter market.

Increase opposed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Jerry Eubanks, Longview engineer for Sun Oil Co., said Tuesday that operators supporting an increased allowable for the huge East Texas oil field merely want to hike their current income.

This, Eubanks told three Texas Railroad Commission examiners, "is not a duty of the commission, particularly if the change would be detrimental to the maximum ultimate recovery from the field."

Sun opposes an increase from the current allowable of 86 percent.

Other operators contend, however, that the field should be allowed to produce at the current statewide market demand factor of 100 percent.

A Tyler engineer, Homer Key, testified that water levels in the field have risen by 32 feet since 1973 and threaten to water-out wells.

Key, speaking on behalf of the "C.M. Beckett Group" of 33 independent operators, recommended that production allowables be reduced.

The group wants the field in Rusk, Upshur, Gregg and Smith Counties divided into north and south sectors, with a 75 percent allowable for the north and 50 percent allowable for the south.

The East Texas hearing is in its third week.

Government starts oil recovery at Elk Hills

By JEANIE ESAJIAN

But the controversy goes on, even as the oil trickles out of the ground under the rolling hills of the San Joaquin Valley 200 miles north of Los Angeles.

ENERGY
OIL & GAS

The 46,000-acre reserve was set aside in 1912 as a strategic reserve for national defense, should the need arise. But it was largely ignored until the energy problems of the last decade focused attention on America's dependency on foreign oil.

About 16 months ago, the estimated 1.3 billion barrels of oil — the nation's largest oil reserve outside Alaska — were opened to domestic production as part of a five-year, $500 million development program.

Navy Cmdr. Roger Martin, administrator of Elk Hills, says he sees "no evidence commercial production here is benefitting the nation at large."

And the 18-year Navy veteran said there is no evidence that Elk Hills production is decreasing foreign imports, which account for 50 percent of the nation's oil. In fact, noted Martin, imports have increased by 30 percent since last year.

But John Walker, head of the Elk Hills staff for Standard Oil of California, says the reserve's crude "very definitely" benefits the nation because "every barrel of domestic crude still lessens our dependence on foreign oil."

At the urging of then-President Gerald R. Ford, Congress approved Elk Hills for domestic production and plans called for production of 160,000 barrels daily after six months, increasing to a maximum of 300,000 barrels daily within six years after full production. A barrel holds 42 gallons.

But production has been limited to 125,000 barrels daily, about two-thirds of 1 percent of the nation's oil use.

Output has been hampered by the limited amount of pipelines to carry the oil. Full production is also hampered by a small, antiquated gas plant, which extracts marketable butane, propane and natural gas from the natural by-products of crude oil.

The limited pipeline capacity means the crude must remain in California and can't be sent to the Midwest where it is most needed, Martin said. California, which receives oil by tanker from the Alaskan North Slope, has no crude shortage.

Critics of production from this oil field say it should be held as a hedge against the time — if ever — when foreign oil is not available.

President Carter last April reversed the position of his predecessor and asked Congress to retract its demand for full production. But that idea was later dropped.

Thus, production continues, with 450 new wells having been drilled, in addition to the almost 1,000 previously in place.

Energy action points to failure of Carter

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — For most of the fall, senior White House officials have been saying that President Carter's first year in office could be judged by the fate of his energy program in Congress. By that standard, according to numerous congressional and administration sources, 1977 can now be judged a failure for Carter.

The administration's acknowledgment that it is now impossible to get energy legislation this year represents more than a brief postponement or temporary setback, according to many well-placed lobbyists, legislators and officials.

"The thing has fallen flat on the floor," according to an oil industry lobbyist who has been pressing for an energy package.

Others are more upbeat, but such pessimism is widespread.

According to the most pessimistic view, the administration has now missed its best chance to get an energy program enacted. "We won't see another window like this for at least four years," a former federal energy official said.

According to this view, the momentum created by Carter's energy messages last April and speedy House approval of most of his program last summer, plus the implicit pressure Carter applied this fall, particularly when he canceled his world trip last month, created the best possible conditions for early passage of the legislation.

Next year, according to this pessimistic analysis, the momentum will be dissipated. If they spend the holiday month at home, members of Congress will hear many compalints about unpopular aspects of the Carter program, particularly its high taxes. Then in January they will be intersted in a new agenda — most of it provided by Carter himself.

Most tantalyzing in an election year will be the administration's new package of tax cuts, expected early in 1978. The Panama Canal treaty fights will heat up next year, and Carter's first budget will provide much grist for the legislative mill. With all this before it, will Congress want to turn back to energy, and pass huge new taxes on top of the whopping increase in Social Security taxes expected to pass both houses this week?

Speaking to reporters Tuesday, Vice President Walter Mondale took the view that the energy conferees — who have been stalled for weeks — could reach agreements "in principle" this week, enabling both houses to pass the energy package early in the year. It is difficult to find a source in the Capitol who thinks it will be that easy.

One House leader said Tuesday that Carter's best asset in the next sessin may be congressmen's guilt over their failure to enact an energy program after spending most of 1977 talking about it.

Coast Guard releases explosion information

The Los Angeles Times

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Coast Guard investigators blame the Sansinena oil tanker explosion in Los Angeles Harbor on deficient ship maintenance, poor operating procedures by the crew and faulty design of the ship in their report released Tuesday.

Inadequate safety inspections by the Liberian government, ship operators and the crew also were cited by the Coast Guard Board of Inquiry that held three months of hearings into the blast that destroyed the Liberian tanker last year. The explosion killed nine men and caused $21.6 million damage.

The panel's findings were released by Rear Adm. Robert I. Price, commander of the 11th Coast Guard district in Long Beach, at a press conference where he called the explosion "a freak accident caused by accumulation of deficiencies."

The 44-page report calls for federal requirements that all tankers calling in U.S. ports be equipped with system to neutralize flammable gas and seeks establishment of tough international standards for crew qualifications and training.

The panel's conclusions and recommendations followed an account of what investigators believe happened the night of Dec. 17, 1976. The ship was taking on fuel and ballast at the Union Oil terminal in San Pedro after discharging a cargo of Indonesian crude oil.

According to the account, a vapor cloud formed over the ship as gases in the empty cargo tanks were displaced by ballast water. It was an uncommonly still night, so winds did not disperse the vapors.

Instead, a slight breeze from the stern trapped the gas cloud against the midship's deck house — the ship's four-story control center — where a spark from a water pump motor is believed to have ignited the cloud.

Once ignited, the cloud became a fireball and the flame entered corroded cargo vent pipes, the report said, and traveled through the vent system to cargo tank No. 10 setting off the explosion.

Price said it was a case of "everything going wrong together." The Board of Inquiry singled out for specific criticism elements of ship operation and maintenance, crew qualifications and ship design.

"It is evident that this casualty resulted from poor operating procedures and design features on the Sansinena," the report said.

Board accepts bank's bid for North Elementary

The Midland Independent School District Board of Education accepted the $705,000 bid from The Midland National Bank for the sale of the North Elementary School property at its regular meeting Tuesday in the school administration building.

No other bids were submitted.

The school board further voted to retain The Midland National Bank as a depository for the $705,000. School Superintendent James H. Mailey said the school district plans to use the money to build a new vocationaleducation facility for Midland High School and to acquire property.

Currently, the former North Elementary School building serves as the Midland High annex for its vocational education classes.

With the sale of the property, Mailey said the district will be able "to get vocational education facilities back on the Midland High campus" and to build improved facilities.

North Elementary School, located on city block 48 of the homestead addition, was built around 1937. Originally, the property for the the school was bought for $2,000 in July 1936. The property was appraised at a minimum of $650,000 for the sale.

North Elementary School was one of the first schools to be built in Midland, Mailey said.

During the meeting, board members heard a report on fundamental school programs given by Douglas W. Brown, assistant superientendent for instructional services.

In his report, Brown said fundamental school programs vary from community to community across the country.

He said, "People in a community develop what they think is a fundamental school program."

Brown outlined the basic concepts of a fundamental school program based on a survey he did of this kind of school program in the United States.

He said the emphasis of a fundamental school is on discipline and that this kind of school usually has a disciplinary code, detailing what actions the school will take whenever the student brakes a rule.

The school's curriculum is a "little more limited in range" that the socalled traditional schools that the Midland school district now has, Brown said.

In the fundamental school classroom, he said, the teacher is an authoritarian figure and it is up to the teacher to motivate the students to do their studies. The students work in an envioronment free of distractions, he said.

Fundamental schools stress acheivement in reading, writing and computational mathematics, the basic skills, he said. These schools tend to be more textbook-oriented with more restricted goals than the traditional school.

Memorization is an important part to learning in a fundamental school, Brown said. "Students have one lesson, and they are expected to do that," he said.

After hearing the report, board members authorized Brown to check into the feasibility of implementing a fundamental school program in Midland and how this could be accomplished.

In other business, J. Durwood Owen, general director of the Midland YMCA, appealed to the board to allow the YMCA boys' junior high basketball teams to use the San Jacinto Junior High School and Goddard Junior High School gymnasiums free of charge. The YMCA had been paying an hourly fee to the school district for the use of the gyms.

Owen said contributions which have paid the cost of using the gyms over the years are no longer available to the YMCA, so the basketball program would have to be discontinued if the board did not let the YMCA use the gyms for free.

Sam C. Cox, director of MISD athletics, said he was against the YMCA using the school gyms free of charge.

Edward E. Runyan, a board member, spoke in favor of the YMCA's appeal. He said he had a boy who was cut from the school junior high basketball team. His son maintain his interest in playing basketball by joining the YMCA program, he said.

Warren said he thought Midland needed a "noncompetitive" program for younsters who are unable to make the regular teams.

Owen said further that some boys who join the YMCA basketball program later become eligible for the school teams.

Board member David N. Grimes raised a question on what plans the YMCA had for girls' athletics. He said girls are cut from basketball teams, too, but no one has stepped forward to help them.

"If (the school district) is going to treat the boys, then it also should treat the girls," Grimes said.

Owen replied that there was no demand for a girls' basketball program right now. Board member Don L. Sparks said he thought the YMCA is "already making strides in girls' sports."

On the other hand, Grimes said, "I was on the (YMCA) girls' sports committee, and they don't do anything but talk about the girls' dressing room."

Nevertheless, the board agreed to grant the YMCA's request, because most of the members seemed to think the benefits of the YMCA program outweighed the other factors.

The school board approved the application of the MISD transportation department for an additional school bus route. Garland R. Chapman, assistant superintendent of administrative services, said a new bus route was needed due to the rural growth west of Midland. More students were needing bus transportation to Henderson and Emerson Elementary Schools than could be provided, accourding to state approved bus route capacity, he said.

Mary Porter, president of the Midand League of Women Voters, came before the board to urge its members to support holding joint elections with other governing bodies in the spring. She said, "Combining the elections should increase voter turnout."

Board members agreed to consider holding joint elections and to negotiate with the other governing bodies.

At one time during the meeting, the board went into executive session to discuss a real estate matter, but no action was taken.

The board awarded a total of $27,519 in bids to Jones Brothers Paving in Odessa to pave the parking lots at Washington Elementary School and the bus parking space at the warehouse on 801 S. Moran St. It accepted a bid of $3,120 from South Texas Construction for paving the extension of Lee High's vocational building driveway.

Total awards for bids for science equipment were given to Petroleum Analytical Lab, $87.59; Sargent Welch, $725; Science Kit, $422; Scientific Product, $1,788, and Turtox Combosco, $194.

Total awards for bids for shop equipment were alloted to Brodhead-Garrett, $2,068; Eubanks Service, $155; Hargrove Auto, $316; Mac Austin, $2,195; PaxtonPatterson, $221; San Antonio, $136; SATCO, $7,637; Snap-on Tools, $118, and Alamo Iron, $987.

Awards were accepted from American Desk of Temple, $55,936; Indeco Sales of Lubbock, $51,037, and Vaughn Storage Systems of Lubbock, $43,947.

Board approves firm's requested zoning change

Overruling a recommendation by the Midland Planning and Zonning Commission, the Midland City Council on Tuesday voted to approve a zone change request by ABCO Development Co. between Godfrey Court and McDonald Street on the south side of the Andrews Highway.

The 3 to 2 decision came after residents of the area and developer Gene Abbott gave detailed explanations of their views before the council.

Residents expressed concern that property values would diminish if an apartment complex were built on the land site, while Abbott maintained it would be unlikely for any other type of development to occur there because of heavy traffic counts in the area.

Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr., Councilmen Mark S. Martin and G. Thane Akins voted to approve the zone change. Council members Doris Howbert and Gordon G. Marcum II voted against the motion.

In other action, the Midland City Council passed an emergency request by the Midland Memorial Foundation for a zone change from LR-2, local retail district, and MF-2, multiple family district, to PD, planned district land bounded by West Illinois Avenue, North N Street, West Ohio Avenue and the Andrews Highway for construction of the hospital additions as approved in the recent bond election.

The council also:

— Approved a preliminary floor plan for the new Hogan Park Golf Pro Shop.

— Referred to the Parks and Recreation Commission a request for a paved jogging track in the city.

— Referred to the Parks and Recreation Commission a request by Midland College for the city to participate in the construction of a tennis center building.

— Authorized the preparation and execution of a contract with the Midland Housing Authority for the use of private funds for housing rehabilitation.

— Postponed a decision on setting a 10 mile per hour speed limit in all alleys in the city of Midland.

— Approved a request by Charles Younger for a zone change from 1F-1, single family district, to 2F, two-family district, MF-1, multiple family district, and LR-2, local retail district, on a 31-acre tract of land located in the southwest corner of the intersection of Wadley Avenue and Midland Drive.

Church 'shunning' leads to sale of potato farm

By PAUL CARPENTER

CARLISLE, Pa. (AP) — Today is Robert Bear's 19th wedding anniversary, to be observed in a tragic ritual culminating five years of religious strife and family woe.

Bear, 48, lost his wife and children when he was excommunicated and shunned by his Reformed Mennonite Church because he criticized church officials. Shunning meant no one in the church, including his family, could speak to or have anything to do with him.

Now he is losing his once prosperous and beloved 400- acre potato farm. A sheriff's sale to auction the farm was ordered for today because Bear has not paid taxes or interest on the mortgage.

"I'm going to lose a lot of money, but ... what does money mean if you don't have someone to spend it on? ... Without children, a farm has no purpose," he said recently.

Bear's wife, Gale, and their six children, now mostly teenagers, moved out in 1972 after the ultraconservative 600-member church imposed its "doctrine of avoidance," commonly called shunning.

His parents died shortly after the sanction was taken.

"To the moment they died they looked at me with disgust. I was already burning in hell," he said.

The excommunication came after Bear criticized his wife's brother, Bishop Glenn Gross. Bear said Gross violated church rules by giving communion to Gross' parents after one had accused the other of being unfaithful.

Bear's dispute with the church goes back many years, however. He and his wife were excommunicated in 1964 but readmitted in 1965. He was excommunicated again in 1972.

Bear went to court to try to force the church to relax some of the provisions. He claimed the shunning hurt his thriving potato business when employees quit and Mennonite business associates refused to handle his potatoes.

A Cumberland County judge said the flap was Bear's fault and refused to halt the church sanctions. Bear appealed, but has changed his mind several times about whether to continue the legal fight.

Last year Bear wrote a book about his experiences, titled "Delivered Unto Satan." He once peddled the book by parking his truck, covered with signs attacking Gross, in the parking lot of a farm market run by Gross.

Gross and Gale Bear have refused to talk to reporters.

In July, Bear was found guilty of defiant trespass when he broke into a home being used by his wife and children and took some of their clothes. He was fined $50.

Harvard dean offered presidency of Yale

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Henry Rosovsky, dean of the faculty of arts and sciences at Harvard Unviersity, has been offered the presidency of Yale, sources said Tuesday.

Rosovsky, an economist and expert in Asian affairs, has not formally accepted the offer, sources cautioned, and is thought to be making up his mind on whether to take the job, one of the most prestigious posts in American higher education.

If he chooses to accept, he would become the first Jew to serve as president of one of the Ivy League's "big three" universities — Harvard, Yale and Princeton.

The decision to offer the post to Rosovsky was apparently made at a meeting of the Yale Corp. last week in Washington. It ended one of the most secretive and extensive searches for a college president in recent times.

The Yale presidency became vacant last spring when Kingman Brewster, a controversial spokesman for campus liberalism in the 1960s, was appointed ambassador to Great Britain.

The list of potential candidates to succeed him has at one time or another included some of the nation's most prestigious academicians and a bevy of influential Yale alumni, including former Pennsylvania Gov. William Scranton and former President Ford.

If Rosovsky takes the job, it would be the second time in the last two decades that a top post at Harvard served as a stepping-stone to the presidency of Yale.

Before he came to the new Haven campus as provost, Brewster was a professor of law at Harvard.

Rosovsky would become Yale's 18th president at a time the university is facing serious financial and labor pressures as well as questions about its continued role as a leading private educational and research institution.

Rosovsky, 50, has been on Harvard's faculty since 1964 and has served as dean of the faculty of arts and sciences since 1973.

His selection was seen as a welcome one to the Yale faculty, which had strong fears that someone with a purely political or administrative background, rather than one as a scholar, would be selected.

Rosovsky, a mild-mannered scholar who wears tweeds and speaks softly, is a respected economist with a commitment to social concerns. In 1969, he chaired a controversial committee that recommended a black studies program at Harvard.

He was born Sept. 1, 1927, in the free city of Danzig, now part of Poland, and came to the United States in 1940. He was graduated from William and Mary College in Williamsburg, Va., and earned a master of arts degree at Harvard in 1953 and a doctorate there in 1959.

Three-year-old Shera Sneed was found alive in the wreckage of this plane, that crashed in the rugged hill country north of Kerrville. Killed in the crash were her parents and 5-year-old brother. Young Shera was found in the wreckage Tuesday, 35 hours after the light plane crashed. (AP Laserphoto)

Three-year-old found in wreckage

By RICK SCOTT

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — A dying father's last act of love, moments after his airplane crashed into a brushy ridgetop in the rugged Texas hill country, may have saved his 3-year-old daughter's life, officials say.

Shera Sneed, trapped for 35 hours in the wreckage of the small plane, was rescued Tuesday morning by searchers who said they found her "mumbling and groaning."

Her father, Gerald Wayne Sneed, a 33-year-old San Antonio lawyer who was piloting the single-engine airplane, was killed along with his wife, Susan Parr Sneed, and their 5-year-old son, Shannon.

Rescuers unstrapped Shera from the back seat of the plane, which had crashed Sunday night on an 1,800-foot hill about three miles from the Kerrville Municipal Airport, about 65 miles northwest of San Antonio.

A hospital spokesman said Shera was in stable condition in intensive care Tuesday evening, suffering from a fractured leg and arm.

"Shera was just mumbling and groaning when we got there," said Dan Waters, president of the First Texas Flying Service in Kerrville and a family friend. "It was nothing you could understand. She had a few abrasions but other than that she looked pretty good."

Maj. Anne Farrell, Civil Air Patrol search project coordinator, said the back seat of the airplane apparently loosened and slid foward on impact, jamming partially under the front seat.

It appeared, she said, that Sneed tried to drape himself over his daughter to protect her from the 28-degree nighttime, a gesture "which undoubtedly helped her survive the elements."

Maj. Farrell said the plane did not burn and that "the wreckage wasn't so bad. But the plane hit hard."

The wreckage was spotted Tuesday morning by a plane flown by Jim Thompson, co-owner with Sneed of the wrecked aircraft. A helicopter airlifted the little girl off the hilltop.

Maj. Farrell told departing searchers Tuesday afternoon that, "Looking at that wreckage, it looks like the boy and the father might have lived, certainly for a few hours.

"But the weather was so bad, we just couldn't find them and get to them," she added.

The plane crashed Sunday night during a persistent drizzle. Air traffic controllers in San Antonio had received a radio signal from the plane reporting it was low on fuel and was attempting to reach the Kerrville airport.

The family almost made it.

Maj. Farrell, Thompson and others at the crash site said the aircraft needed only about another 20 feet of altitude to clear the ridge as it approached the airstrip.

Spencer Treharne, also of the First Texas Flying Service, said Sneed was "an excellent pilot" who knew the Kerrville airport.

First Texas Flying Service put five airplanes on the search and worked independently of the Civil Air Patrol, Treharne said.

A thick, low overcast kept searchers out of the air until Tuesday morning when the skies cleared.

Thompson and Waters "reenacted" the route that Sneed was following and found the Sneed plane "just about where we thought it would be," Thompson said. "It looked like they just ran out of fuel before getting over the ridge. It would have been downhill from there."

The crash site was about three miles northeast of the airport.

The plane was on a flight from Winters, Texas where Sneed's parents live. The family lived in Boerne, a rural community about 25 miles northwest of San Antonio.

Justice of the Peace Spencer Brown said Sneed's body was in the pilot's seat. Mrs. Sneed was in the seat next to him. The son and daughter were in the back seats of the four-place aircraft.

Officials of the Federal Aviation Administration and the National Transportation Safety Board were probing the plane's wreckage Tuesday evening for further clues to the mishap.

Grant awarded to Midland

U.S. Rep. George Mahon's office in Washington, D.C., received notification this morning that Midland County has been awarded a $20,000 Community Development Block Grant from the Department of Housing and Urban Development, a spokesman for Mahon's office said.

The grant is to be used for the Mental Health and Retardation Center, according to the spokesman.

Lubbock banker tells candidacy

He said he has resigned his post as senior vice president of Lubbock's First National Bank, effective Dec. 31, to devote full time to his campaign.

Burglaries net $700 in tools

Police were told Tuesday afternoon that sometime Monday or Tuesday morning, tools worth $325 were taken from a car belonging to Jerry Doyle. The car was parked in the 3900 block of Monty Drive.

Also taken sometime Monday night or Tuesday morning were two tool chests with tools from a vehicle parked in the 3800 block of Monty Drive. The chests and tools belonged to Scooters Plumbing and were valued at about $370, police were told.

FIREARMS TAKEN

Robert Britton told police Tuesday that sometime between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. Tuesday someone entered his residence in the 1200 block of East Cottonwood Avenue and removed a .38-caliber pistol and a 20 gauge shotgun.

Approximate value of the firearms is $180, according to Britton.

PARTS TAKEN

Automobile parts valued at about $800 were taken between 7 p.m. Monday and 10 a.m. Tuesday from a vehicle parked in the 3100 block of West Wall Avenue, police said.

According to William P. Reynolds, taken were a set of car wheels, tires, wheel ring covers, rearview mirrors and a hood scoop.

U.S. agriculture diverse, complex

By DAN MORGAN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — American farmers today are deeper in debt than at any time in history. In terms of what their earned dollars actually can buy, their income is the lowest since the 1930s. Wheat prices this week are only 20 cents a bushel higher than they were at the end of World War I.

The value of U.S. farmers' land and other assets has reached a record $730 billion, up $59 billion from 1976.

In Iowa, farmland gained an average 225 percent in value from March, 1972, to February, 1977. American farmers will earn some $20 billion in 1977, the fifth largest amount in history. Banks polled by the Agriculture Department admit to some concern about debts of farmer clients. Five percent of the agricultural loans they have out now are risky, but there have been few foreclosures.

As those numbers suggest, nationwide statistics are not much help in understanding the economics and politics behind the farm strike effort being launched today by the American Agricultural Movement.

The reason is that American agricultural is a mosaic of enormous diversity and complexity, one in which weather, soil, farming practices, farm incomes, agricultural costs and even levels of federal support often vary widely from county to county, not to mention from state to state.

The nation's farmers are no monolithic bloc.

Within this diverse group are farmers in Georgia and other parts of the Southeast where crops were ruined this summer by drought and floods; drought-afflicted farmers from the Maryland and Delaware Eastern Shore; and wheat growers from the western Great Plains where grain was damaged and the livestock business has had hard times for several years. Government officials say the movement has been most active in those affected areas.

Elsewhere, though, there are Wisconsin dairymen, Iowa hog farmers and growers in the rich Corn Belt who are doing well. Operators of giant Western cattle fattening yards who feed beef animals a ton each of corn are thankful for the low grain prices.

Given this diversity of interests, it is hard to say whether the protesters constitute an isolated minority or the core of a rural movement with enough appeal and power to achieve political and economic objectives. There are only 2.8 million farmers (compared with 2.2 millin teachers). As a group they are economically and politically strong — but they have long had trouble organizing for action.

"I haven't detected an awful lot of panic or reaction in Congress," said an administration aide. Officials in government and on Capitol Hill have been listening attentively, but they are not rushing to hand farmers new concessions.

In some sectors, the malaise apparently is a delayed result of the farm policies of the previous, Republican administration.

Those policies left American farmers very exposed to changes in the world's food economy. Every country protects and supports its agriculture to some degree. But under Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz, the safety net of government price supports and acreage controls (to prevent stocks from building up) was a minimal one, and farmers were encouraged to grow and sell all the food they could.

Critics called these policies "boom and bust," since the government allowed farm and food prices to fluctuate widely, and let farmers decide what and how much to plant, many months before those crops were sold.

Foreign demand for the large surpluses of American wheat, corn and soybeans kept up prices, so farmers didn't need to worry about the low safety net.

The unprecedented prices gave crop farmers record returns and contributed to the sharp increase in the value of agricultural land. Farmers went on a prosperity binge, buying new equipment and machinery and taking out large loans with their valuable land as collateral if they needed cash.

But this year, the country's revved-up agricultural factor — still operating with very little control under the old Republican-era system — ran full tilt into demand abroad. As a result, the country produced unsold surpluses reminiscent of the glut era of the 1950s and 1960s.

But, by this year, there was too much grain, no place for it to go, and slumping prices.

Under Butz, farmers were supposed to take the lean years with the good ones.

The new Carter administration four-year farm bill moderates, but does not entirely abandon that policy. The new law sharply increased subsidy payments to grain farmers, and increases price supports. The administration is also committed to a system of food reserves that would stabilize international prices.

Administration officials say all this help — which includes $1.2 billion to wheat growers in the next 12 months — is necessary because production costs are rising rapidly. The farmers who are calling for the strike claim that even this is inadequate.

"Their concern is loss of income in violatile markets," says Dawson Ahalt of the Agriculture Departrment. "Farmers rely more and more on a non-farm sector — chemicals, energy and so on — that doesn't adjust."

One problem is that some of the hardest working farmers — those who lease the land of others — have not gotten the breaks of mortgage interest tax write-offs enjoyed by their landlords. These family farmers have had a particularly hard time keeping up. Administration officials say they may be the biggest victim of the Butz policies.

So far, though, the American agriculture movement's demands in Congress for "100 percent of parity" has not won wide support.

"Parity" is what a farmer would need to get for a bushel of wheat (or other commodity) to give him the buying power he had between 1910 and 1914.

This would push wheat prices from their current $2.70 a bushel to just over $5 a bushel. Corn — the basic animal and poultry feed — would also rise, increasing meat prices. "Within a year, food prices would reach 20 to 25 percent above current levels," the Agriculture Department says.

Chairman Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, said he could not "quarrel" with the goal. But he added that such high grain and commodity price supports would have to be accompanied by costly and detailed government controls on planted acrease, and marketing quotas — something he does not "foresee."

Aspirin, non-aspirin ad battle cease-fire asked

By CHRIS CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration is calling for a cease-fire in a bitter advertising struggle between makers of aspirin and non-aspirin pain relievers.

FDA Commissioner Donald M. Kennedy has asked Sterling Drug Co., makers of Bayer aspirin, to stop a "one-sided" advertising campaign against Tylenol, the top selling aspirin substitute.

Bayer's broadcast and print advertisements quote an FDA news release and an FDA advisory panel that said Tylenol and other acetaminophen products are no safer than aspirin, and large doses of them can cause liver damage.

At the same time, Kennedy faulted Tylenol for taking statements about aspirin's safety out of context from the panel's report and not mentioning the potential liver damage problem from overdoses of Tylenol.

The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction over nonprescription drug ads. Kennedy wrote FTC Commissioner Michael Pertschuk last week, asking him to consider action against misleading ads in the $750 million a year market for over-the-counter pain killers.

"I'm concerned that the fierce competition among manufacturers of nonprescription drugs and their advertising battles currently being waged in the media are causing confusion that will ultimately result in erosion of public confidence in self-medication products," Kennedy told Pertschuk.

He wrote to Dr. J. Clark Wescoe, chairman of the board of Sterling, saying the Bayer ads "misrepresent the safety issue presented in the panel report and associate the FDA in what is clearly a one-sided presentation of that issue."

Kennedy also wrote Paul L. Perito, a lawyer for McNeil Laboratories Inc., asking the Fort Washington, Pa., firm "to carefully and objectively review the current advertising for Tylenol to make certain that it meets the criteria of fairness and accuracy."

A McNeil representative obtained a copy of the letter to Sterling under the Freedom of Information Act and released it to the media Tuesday. The firm did not release copies of the admonitory letter it received, but the FDA later released all the correspondence.

Tylenol, with a $10 million yearly advertising budget, outsells any other single brand of aspirin or acetaminophen. It has 21 percent of the market, according to Eugene H. Kone, its public relations consultant.

Oakland dynasty finally comes to end

The Los Angeles Times

OAKLAND — When he wasn't trying to brighten his own spirits by talking cheerfully about "what tomorrow might bring," Joseph W. (Young Joe) Knowland was brooding over what yesterday had brought.

"You bust your — for what?" he demanded recently in his apartment overlooking lake Merritt. "Was it all worth it?"

For a moment he let the question hang in the air, half-listening to the sound of traffic along the avenue. Then he sighed and slumped in a chair by the window.

"Yes," he said wearily. "I guess it was."

It had been only four months since the Knowland family newspaper, the once powerful Oakland Tribune, had been sold to "foreign" hands.

Young Joe, son of the late Sen. William F. Knowland, had been its publisher three years and was on the brink of "putting everything together" when a cousin engineered the Tribune's sale and the new owners fired Joe.

The Knowland family was split, their newspaper — a seeming of power as well as symbol of unity — was gone, and Joe Knowland was trying to figure out what to do next.

"Let's face it," he said. "I'm 47 years old and out of a job." He shook his head.

A few miles away, cousin Joseph R. (Jay) Knowland III, more than a million dollars richer than he was four months ago, shot his three-iron at a bar called the King's X.

Jay had been architect of the sale that ended the family's 62-year ownership of the Tribune, the self-proclaimed black sheep who topped Joe to the ranks of the unemployed.

"I wish it could have been different," he would say of his unsettling triumph, "but that wasn't possible. There just wasn't a Knowland he capable of running the paper."

Thus passed the glory of dynasty in Oakland.

---

The Knowlands have been a part of the city since Joseph R. Knowland — J.R.K. — elbowed his way into ownership of the Tribune just after the turn of the century.

Even from the beginning, politics in one form or another were inexorably mixed with journalism at 13th and Franklin.

J.R.K. served first in the state Assembly and then in the House of Representatives, and his son William F. — "the Knowland who would make it" — made it all the way up to the U.S. Senate.

Both lost important races on what both considered paths to the presidency. J.R.K. failed in his bid for the Senate and W.F.K. in his bid for the governorship of California, but they remained active in backroom politics even when they were out of the front-room footlights.

When the senior Knowland died in 1974, Sen. Bill took over the Tribune. When heavily in debt and in emotional disarray, Bill committed suicide in 1976 on a lonely Pacific beach. Young Joe, who had worked at the paper all his adult life, became publisher.

"They begged me to take over," he said now, barely masking the irony with which he views the chain of events that ended in fratricidal warfare.

"The family called to me and said, 'Joe, we need help.' Eleanor (Eleanor Dorr, his aunt), Jay, all of them. They said, 'Get us out of the mess we're in.'" That mess, according to Joe, was a newspaper on the brink of disaster. Circulation had plummeted from a high of 225,000 to 155,000, a strike was being threatened, staff morale was at rock bottom and the product was tragic.

"I said, give me five years and full authority," Joe remembered.

What he got was three years. But during that period he said he turned circulation around (up to 175,000 at the time of the sale), rebuilt the company's cash flow, brightened the paper, modernized its production and gathered awards for both himself and the Tribune.

There was no thought of sale then.

"In fact, when dad died I gathered the family together, Jay included, and we voted on a resolution not to talk sale with anyone unless we had discussed it first."

He lit a cigarette, almost chain-smoking, and gestured grandly. "I said, let's communicate! Let's share! No one had ever communicated in the family before. They were stunned."

And then he discovered that cousin Jay — second largest stockholder in the family company — was busily gathering a majority of shareholders and looking for a buyer.

"I was stunned!" Young Joe said, his expression reflecting what he felt back then.

"I accomplished all that for the paper and then, whoomp!" — one arm swept the air — "this happens! Just when everything was going in a positive direction!"

He was puzzled at first ("Why? Didn't they know what was going on?"), then angry and then despondent.

"I thought to myself, 'What a shame, what a waste. It didn't have to be.'" The memory was painful. "We were all losers..."

Young Joe never asked Jay his reasons for organizing the sale of the Tribune, although he hinted darkly that the motive was rooted in family vengeance, which Joe would not explain and which Jay would dismiss with a laugh.

When Combined Communications Corp. of Phoenix Daily bought the paper for $18 million it was the end of the line for the man who had grown up with the Tribune and thought he would grow old with it.

The new management informed Joe at first that they might want him to stay on, but when the deal was closed, Joe said, "they told me I was the wrong person in the wrong place at the wrong time."

He was asked how long it would take him to clear his office. "I said 'In tomorrow morning, soon enough!'" A tight smile. "They replied that it was."

He opened a can of beer and took it onto a balcony off the living room, looking toward the downtown section. He could barely see the green-tipped Tribune Tower peeking out from between two taller buildings.

Jay Knowland is 32 and wears his hair almost shoulder length. His father was Sen. Bill's brother Russ, who died of a heart attack in 1961 after half a lifetime of heavy drinking. Russ' wife died a few months later.

Jay has always considered himself an outsider in the family — even though he lived with Uncle Bill for awhile after his own parents died — and admits that feeling might have had something to do with his desire to see the Tribune sold.

He felt no part of any "family tradition," Jay said in his stately two-story house on a tree-lined street in nearby Piedmont, five minutes from his favorite hangout, the King's X.

"I looked upon the paper only as a business and as a business it was not being run properly."

While he owned 13.5 percent of Tribune Publishing Co. and 10 percent of Tribune Building Co., Jay said, he was realizing no dividends from either of them.

He worked as a roofer for awhile to support his wife and three children, once owned his own bar and spent some time in "the golf business."

What galled him, Jay said, was that he owned the second largest share of stock in the paper and was receiving no income from it, while Joe owned a minuscule 0.02 percent of the publishing company and 0.9 percent of the building company and was earning $95,000 a year as publisher.

"It became apparent," he said coldly, "that in order for me to realize any money from the paper, it was going to have to be sold."

But that would come later. First, Jay applied for a job at the Tribune. Instead of appointing him to the executive capacity Jay felt his stock ownership warranted, Joe made him a "trainee" to learn the business.

Joe thought it was all working out beautifully while Jay hated both the learning process and the trainee's salary he was receiving.

"Joe was unable to see," an observer would write later, "that he was looking down the barrel of a gun whose itchy trigger finger Jay had become."

"I'm not good at going to my boss," Jay said dryly, "and saying, 'Look, I'm not getting enough salary and I want more.' Especially in this case, why should I have to beg?"

Joe was doing the best joe he could, he added, "but when you talk about business, he just wasn't business-oriented."

Why didn't Jay simply pull the majority stockholders together and fire Joe, rather than sell the paper?

Because, Jay said, he wanted money from the sale at that point and also because "there just wasn't anyone left in the family capable of running the paper the way it should be run."

He leaned over a steaming cup of coffee in the living room of his home and added almost reluctantly, "The tradition (of newspapering) died the day Bill shot himself..."

His pursuit of the sale was not done in secret as his cousin has charged, Jay said. He was simply exploring the possibility of a sale and was in the preliminary stages of that exploration when Joe found out.

He had fully intended to go to the family and discuss selling the paper before anything was actually done about it, he insisted.

Why hadn't he gone to Joe personally to discuss his displeasure both with the way the Tribune was being run and his unhappiness with a trainee's role?

Jay shrugged. "We never communicated in our family," he said quietly. "My father came to every football game I ever played at Piedmont High, but I never knew it until after his death. He just never told me..."

It bothered him to see the newspaper sold, Jay said. Even though he felt no part of the tradition, "I happen to appreciate what my family had. Whether they were right or wrong, they were very good people."

He tried to raise the money to buy the Tribune himself. Jay said, but failed. What remained for im to do, then, was to go to his two sisters and to an aunt and to two cousins and put together a majority that would, and did, force the sale.

That he ended up with something more than $1 million did not cause him to turn cartwheels, Jay said. But neither did it cause him to weep over Joe's sudden unemployment.

"I guess I learned growing up," the black sheept Knowland said evenly, "that everybody is fair game."

Joe Knowland was lighting another cigarette when he looked over the top of it and said Jay was more to be pitied than censured.

"Naivete was at play," he said of his cousin, "and so was a human weakness. Call it selfishness if you want."

It is difficult for him to deal with the subject, and he finally said he wanted no part of a story that involved "me versus Jay."

As for the fall of a dynasty, Joe shrugged. He never thought of the Knowlands in those terms, he said, and therefore he suffered no trauma at the end of their power trip.

What did bother him, however, was that "the family is broken and the wounds are deep." This was said very softly.

"Those wounds will heal, I suppose, and the hurt will go away, but the scars will always be there..."

Meanwhile, Young Joe is spending his time "thinking and smelling the roses."

He is living off his Tribune severance pay, the sale of a house in Piedmont and the income brought in by his wife Dolores' health studio.

Because he held almost no stock in the Tribune, he realized nothing from its sale. Its stock that would have been his inheritance paid off his father's debts.

"I have no financial problems," Young Joe said, "but I've got to go out and get a job. I've got to bring in money."

Maybe it will come from newspapering again, he said, or the entertainment business or politics. He wasn't sure.

"I try to look on the bright side," he said, a dark mood lifting. "I can be something else now or someone else. I'm liberated."

He thought about that for a moment, then: "You know those little things you carry on your belt that beep when you have a telephone call?"

Manpower probe continues

Most of the attention focused on a $3,000 loan former director E.A. Gonzalez made to Carlos Rodriguez, owner of the Texas Language Academy, which later received a federal contract.

Market little changed

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was little changed today, unable to break the stalemate of the past two sessions.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up .52 on Monday and down .52 Tuesday, managed a .26 gain to 815.49 by noontime today.

Declines outnumbered advances by about a 4-3 margin among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

But they also said the market was held down more by an absence of buying interest than by any concerted selling pressure.

Marshall Field, which has filed an antitrust suit seeking to block the proposal, today issued a statement from its board of directors rejecting the offer as "inadequate."

The NYSE's composite index of more than 1,500 common stocks was off .06 at 51.63. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index rose .40 to 124.36.

Volume on the Big Board came to 8.22 million shares by noontime against 8.23 million at the same point Tuesday.

More money requested for lawyer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court today rejected a client's attempt to get nearly $20,000 more in fees for her Dallas lawyer, who was described as having made a "career" of her case.

Madelyn Coker won a $3,967 judgment against The Travelers Insurance Co., after her lawyer, John Vorhies, appealed her group insurance policy case to the Dallas Court of Civil Appeals.

The case was sent back to the trial court to determine the attorney's fees, and the woman sought $23,850. The court awarded $3,932.

The trial court found that it was a "routine" case, and that Vorhies had "unnecessarily complicated the case by raising a multiplicity of dubious legal theories."

Few grasp concept of finances

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Repeated surveys show that relatively few Americans understand corporate finance and the private enterprise system. Many believe that what a company takes in is used to line the pockets of a privileged few.

Asked what percentage of a dollar of sales is kept as profit by most companies, many individuals told John Q. Jennings, a labor-management consultant, that the figure was more than 30 per cent.

The truth is that manufacturing companies in the first half of this year retained as profit about 5½ cents of each dollar of sales. In 1967 the return was a nickel. In 1957 it was less than that.

Measured another way, as a percentage of shareholder money invested, these companies earned after-tax profits of 14 per cent, 11.7 per cent and 10.9 per cent respectively for the same periods.

Neither do many people know how the corporate pie is cut. This is the circular graph divided into wedges indicating the distribution of corporate revenues.

In 1976, the world's largest manufacturing corporation, General Motors, used 51 per cent of its gross revenue to pay suppliers. Employees received 32.4 per cent, taxes 8.5. Depreciation accounted for 2 per cent, and 2.7 per cent was used in the business.

That accounted for 96.6 per cent. The rest went to shareholders, the people who put up the money to keep the operation solvent.

Businessmen often complain that popular arithmetic, if it ever arrives at this stage in analysing the corporate dollar, seldom goes beyond. To divide that 3.4 per cent by the 1,223,406 shareholders, for example.

In 1976, GM profits of $2.9 billion averaged out to $2,372 when divided by the number of shareholders. If the total were divided by the number of shareholders it would come out to $10.08 a share.

Neither, say business executives, do many people stop to think of who those shareholders are: pension funds, employees, other small investors and the like, as well as speculators and the rich who are said to line their pockets.

But all this arithmetic still doesn't tell a complete story. In spite of what appear to be solid profits, some businessmen are complaining about the erosion of profits.

Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, most recently sounded the warning. The figures do not tell of inflation's devastation, said Burns. When companies seek to replace inventories and build new plants they will be in trouble, he said.

In a speech, Burns said that replacement of plants and inventories last year alone came to $50 billion more than corporations were able to claim for tax purposes.

Harold Williams, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, also believes the big profits reported in 1977 were deceptive. In reality, he said, they were "dangerously low."

Jack Carlson, vice president and economist of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, agreeing with Burns and Williams, observes that corporations have been unable to afford replacements for their worn physical assets.

Ag fund board begins session

Agence France-Presse

ROME — The board of the newly established International Fund for Agricultural Development Tuesday began its first session here to finalize criteria for handing out over $1,000 million to help Third World countries boost their food output.

The board, chaired by Abdelmuhsin Al Sudeary of Saudi Arabia, consists of representatives of industrialized and oil producing countries, which put up most of the funds, and developing nations.

The fund was set up as the 13th specialized agency of the United Nations following a decision by the World Food Conference held in Rome in November 1974.

It will grant assistance to agricultural development projects mainly in the form of loans. But the fund will also be able to distribute up to 12.5 percent of its resources in the form of grants.

The 91 member countries have so far agreed that the fund should be able to distribute "special loans" on easy terms to the most severely affected countries.

These loans will be interest-free and repayable over 50 years. Other countries may be granted loans on intermediate or commercial terms.

Following long negotiations between the various groups of donor countries and the nonoil-developing nations, the initial contributions to the fund have overshot the target of $1,000 million set by the 1974 Rome conference. The Western industrial nations have pledged a total of $567.3 million while the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries have put up $435.5 million, including $400 million via the OPEC special fund.

Nonoil-developing countries have contributed another $19.3 million, for an overall total of $1.02 million.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Principles aid low-salt dieters

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: My husband has high blood pressure and his doctor told him he should go on a 2- to 4-gram salt diet. I have the diet, but aren't there some simple general principles that I could follow—Gladys S.

DEAR GLADYS: I suggest these seven points for your consideration:

1—A moderate amount of salt may be added in cooking, but no salt is to be served at the table.

2—Avoid obviously salted foods, such as bouillon, canned soups and stews, bread and rolls with salt toppings, salted crackers, salted nuts, popcorn, potato chips, pretzels and other salted snack foods.

3—Avoid smoked or cured meats, such as bacon, bologna, chipped or corned beef, frankfurters, ham, Kosher-style meats, luncheon meats, salt pork sausage, smoked tongue.

4—Avoid salted and smoked fish, such as cod, herring, sardines.

5—Avoid sauerkraut, olives, pickles, relishes and other vegetables prepared in brine.

6—Avoid seasonings such as catsup, prepared mustard, celery salt, garlic salt, Worcestershire sauce and soy sauce.

7—Swiss, American and other processed cheeses should be served in limited amounts (approximately twice a week).

But above all, stick to your doctor's diet

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: I'm not at all clear on whether we are supposed to drink milk when we are adults. The milk cartons tell you how fortified it is—all that vitamin D you get. But just how important is vitamin D for a grown-up? Would it help it help to drink lots of milk? I'm perfectly willing to do whatever is supposed to be good for me.—Devon G.

DEAR DEVON: The food and nutrition board of the National Academy of Sciences says that the vitamin D needs of a normal adult can be met by exposure to sunlight, but it adds that it is advisable to have some in your diet if you get very little sun. Fortified milk is certainly a good source of vitamin D and a good all-around food for people of any age. However, you do not have to go on a milk binge. A daily pint of milk or its equivalent is a good rule of thumb for an adult.

Vitamin D is synthesized in the deeper layers of the skin under the stimulation of ultraviolet radiation. A tip from Dr. Lowell Goldsmith of the dermatology department of Duke University Medical School: During the winter months, when the only part of your skin that is exposed to the sun is your face, do not wear opaque make-up; this prevents the sun from getting through to your skin and cuts down on the natural production of vitamin D in your body.

Hepatitis vaccine may aid cancer research

By LEW SCARR
Copley News Service

Tests so far of a vaccine against viral hepatitis are encouraging, and the Nobel laureate who developed it is hopeful they may lead to science's first vaccine against cancer.

Dr. Baruch S. Blumberg, who won the 1976 Nobel Prize in Medicine, says there is a strong association between serum hepatitis (hepatitis B) and cancer of the liver.

And if the vaccine developed by him and Dr. Irving Millman at Fox Chase Center's Institute for Cancer Research in Philadelphia is successful, Blumberg believes it also may prevent the eventual development of primary liver cancer in the majority of cases.

If it does, it would be the first vaccine ever developed to prevent human cancer.

Blumberg said results of tests of the vaccine on chimpanzees "are very encouraging."

"The investigators have been able to show the vaccine offers good protection (against hepatitis B)," he said in an interview.

Tests on animals are being conducted in the United States, France and China.

Tests also have begun on humans in the United States and are being conducted by the National Institutes of Health and by Merck and Co.

Blumberg said, however, that it will take a long time to determine if the vaccine is safe and effective for humans. He hesitated to outline any specific strategy for inoculation once the vaccine is available.

However, he said it would be ideal to begin vaccinations in childhood since hepatitis infections often begin in the very young.

Hepatitis B is often contracted from unsterile hypodermic needles and incidence runs high among drug users.

Another major contributor to the incidence has been the transfusion of blood, because physicians are unable to screen out all donors who carry the virus in their blood. Most often the carrier does not know he has it.

A hopeful note is that the hepatitis B antigen test is being used to detect and eliminate some of the infectious blood.

The infection also can be passed from one person to another by close or intimate contact. Kissing and sexual intercourse are suspected means of transmission.

Blumberg said scudies in countries with a high incidence of liver cancer — Japan, Korea, China, the Philippines and parts of Africa — show that almost all of the victims of the disease have had hepatitis B.

Buy mom flowers

By ROBERT WALLACF, Ed.D.
Copley News Service

Dear Doctor Wallace: I am 13 and I have a very ungrateful mother. Anything that the family buys for her is the wrong thing or she will find something wrong with it.

With the holiday season coming, we would like to know what we can do about it. In the past, she has hurt my dad's feelings even more than mine. — Jerry, Columbus, Ohio

Dear Jerry: Enlist the aid of a relative or friend close to Mother, to find out what she would like.

An alternative would be to give her a gift certificate. If that sounds too impersonal, give Mother flowers. I have yet to meet a woman who doesn't enjoy beautiful flowers.

Doctor Wallace: I hope you can help me. I'm about ready to pack my bags and leave home, and I'm only 15.

My problem is my mother.

I have friends who attend parties where beer is served. They go to talk with friends and do not drink. Because of this, my mom thinks that I drink beer and that my friends have corrupted me.

She is always telling me she has "sources" who know where I go and what I do. That's when Mother and I start fighting. She does all the talking. I can never defend myself.

Our neighbor tells Mom that I shouldn't hang around with "so-and-so" but her 17-year-old son drinks and smokes pot. Mom never believes me and it's getting worse. Help!—Cathy, Elizabethtown, Ky.

Dear Cathy: Mother is wrong in her approach concerning your selection of friends. It is important for her to know who they are and how they behave, but not to find out secondhand from a neighbor.

I would agree with Mother on one phase of the problem. Fifteen-year-olds do not belong at parties where beer is served. Why don't you have a party and invite your friends. This way, Mother will get a chance to see your friends as they really are.

Dear Doctor Wallace: I read recently in your column where a 19-year-old boy wanted to stop smoking. If I might, I would like to share how I broke my eight years of being hooked on cigarettes.

I was introduced to a five-day plan sponsored by the Seventh-day Adventist Church. It is international in scope and has helped thousands — and the cost is only $10.

With the help of a physician, films and lectures on changing behavior (walking, drinking juices, taking vitamins) it was much easier for me. The moral support of these people, plus the sharing with fellow smokers gave me great encouragement.

One doesn't have to be a member of their church to enroll in the plan, and they do not preach to you on religion. I figure that in the 10 months that I have been a non-smoker, I have saved over $300, but the best part is that I have not smoked since the clinic. — Jan McGrew, Sacramento, Calif.

Dear Jan: Anything that has helped a fellow human being stop smoking is worthy of mention. Thanks for your letter.

Texas gains control of fishing rights

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas now has undisputed authority over foreign fishing as far out as nine miles into the Gulf of Mexico.

Attorney General John Hill said Tuesday that the federal government has given up its claims to jurisdiction over foreign fishing in Texas' coastal water beyond three miles offshore.

The only other state with similar jurisdiction is Florida.

"We secured this jurisdiction through extended Congressional and court battles with the federal government in the 1950s in order to preserve our state's right to offshore mineral and other natural resources which the federal goverment wanted for itself," Hill said in a statement.

Famed Kings reject flamboyancy for life on ranch

By NICHOLAS C. CHRISS
The Los Angeles Times

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex. — A few miles south of this city by the sea, the land becomes parched and flat, so desolate in places there are few sounds to be heard — the wind off the Gulf of Mexico, the occasional bellowing of a cow, the sluicing of an oil pump or the whiz of an automobile on lonely Highway 77.

Headed south toward Brownsville and the Mexican border, the motorist enters the vast King Ranch, driving mile after barren mile for more than 70 miles surrounded by the lands and history of Capt. Richard King, the steamboat captain who founded a financial empire.

The ranch, one of the largest in the world, is the bedrock of one of the nation's biggest oil and gas fortunes.

It was the King Ranch and its people, the Kings and the Klebergs in Kingsville and in Kleberg County that led Edna Ferber to write her epic novel, "Giant," about how oil changed Texans and their traditional ties to the land and how that desolate land effortlessly yielded riches beyong imagination.

The King money is some of the oldest, quietest money in the Southwest. And the family — many of whose members reside in Corpus Christi — abides by the code of modesty when it comes to its wealth.

Richard King III, who is 46 and four generations removed from Capt. Richard King, is no different from any other man — except for his money. And it would be difficult to detect that difference unless you pried into his life.

"He's a pretty regular guy," said a family friend, who might have added that Dick King is also a friendly, outgoing sort who in his wash-and-wear poplin suit and rep tie, looks and acts like other Southern businessmen whether he is in Corpus Christi, Dallas or New York City.

For a vacation not long ago, he and his wife did nothing more exciting than travel to New England to look at the leaves changing color. When the energy crunch sent gasoline bills soaring, Dick King sold his small airplane.

"There's never been much ostentation, if any, if this family that I know of," King remarked, as he sat in his plain vanilla-colored office in the family bank here where he is chairman of the board. Capt. Richard King, also a plain man according to the history books, probably couldn't have stated it better.

Capt. King founded the ranch in 1853 by purchasing a Mexican land grant about 50 miles south of here known as the Rincon de Santa Gertrudis. It was an uncommon purchase. The area was so sparsely populated, he had to go deep into Mexico to find people and animals to inhabit the ranch — a strange place for a steamboat captain.

King, then only 27 had made his fortune running supplies up and down the Rio Grande River for Gen. Zachary Taylor during the Mexican war. Before coming to Texas and Mexico, he had been known in such places as Alabama, New York, Pennsylvania and Florida.

"No one is sure where Capt. King came from," Richard King said, smiling and enjoying the mystery. "But we're all descendants of him, I suppose, like people are from Adam and Eve."

So much publicity has been given the King Ranch for its breeding of incokparable Santa Gertrudis bulls, its impeccable quarterhorses and its tremendous size — 860,000 acres — that few realize that the heirs of Capt. King share in mineral wealth equal to that of a miniature Middle East oil sheikdom.

Under the ranch is a reservoir of oil and gas that has been pumping a flow of dollars to King's heirs since 1933, when the Humble Oil Co. leased the mineral rights for the entire ranch. It is the largest purchase of mineral-rights leases ever made.

Today, even the smallest shareholders earn at least $50,000 monthly. The entire royalties amount to approximately $680 million a year, divided in widely varying shares among about 90 members of the family.

His father, Richard King Jr.; his uncle, Alfred King; his sons, Richard King IV and Gene Harrison King and his aunt, Mrs. Minerva King Patch, all vow that there is no earthly reason why anyone should be interested in the King family.

"I have not found that people in Texas worry too much about the King name," said Alfred King who lives in austin. "It's more the historical event than anything else."

The Kings are indeed a few pages in the history of Texans and the country. But jetsetters they are not.

"Who wants to get in the international jetset?" asked Richard King Jr., like his brother Alfred, a man in his 60s. "I'd just as soon be in a high-priced whorehouse. I think they are the poorest class of people in the world. So if anyone is looking for the flamboyant side of this family, they've come to the wrong place."

In 1961 when author John Bainbridge published his bestselling book "The Super Americans" about the hijinks of Texas millionaires, there was only a brief mention of the Kings, and the Klebergs, a branch of the family that has taken over the management of the ranch. And that mention had nothing to do with high jinks.

"The Kings don't do a lot of other things that other Texas millionaries are supposed to do," said a knowledgeable family source. "They have never been flamboyant and neither have the Klebergs."

"They never had any ownership or interest in football teams and things like that: They don't go off to New York to attend glittering balls so they can gat their names in the gossip columns. Oh, there may be one or two. But when Jim Clements, who married a Kleberg girl and runs the King Ranch, had his daughter's coming out party at the ranch, no photographers were allowed."

Mrs. Richard Mifflin Kleberg, who lives on the ranch, and loves to hunt and fish, agreed.

"Some people like it (publicity) and some people don't," she said. "We happen to be some of the ones that don't like it. Call it a very low profile. That's a nice way to put it."

Richard King IV also agreed. "I've thought about that. We do keep it pretty low keyed," he said. He is 21, a college student in Georgia.

Richard King III, says that there is nothing very unusual in his family's history. He has seen some alcoholism and some financial fiascos — after all, there are dozens of descendants now. Around 40 of them share in the business of the cattle ranch, King Ranch Inc., privately held by the family, and 89 of them share — quietly — in the oil wealth.

For several decades now, the Kings have had no financial interest in the management of the cattle and horse breeding side of the ranch. It is run mainly by the Kleberg branch, the line descended from Robert Justus Kleberg who married Captain Richard King's daughter, Alice.

The ranch became famous for the development of the quarter horses and the Santa Gertrudis breed of cattle, the first breed native to this country. Kleberg built up the ranch business by buying property at 50 cents an acre, but it was his son, "Uncle Bob" who made the ranch famous, expanding its holdings and operations into Florida, Australia, Brazil, Argentina, Venzuela, Morocco and Spain.

Uncle Bob Klebert died a few years ago and since then, one family member says, there has been "considerable turmoil" in the operation of the ranch.

Two of the pricipal owners, Robert shelton and Belton Kleberg Johnson, have sold out. Johnson, reportedly for $70 million.

Meanwhile, the wealth that oil provided has allowed members of the family to enter many businesses.

"What I'm doing today doesn't have much to do with my heritage," remarked Alfred King, who runs a computer company in austin. His three children own and operate a chic jewelry store there. And as for the rest of the family he added:

"We generally know where everybody in the family is, but it's not a real close thing among us. I think for the most part, everyone thinks very well of everyone else."

And that, thank you, is where the Kings would like to leave the matter.

Mrs. Churchill services planned

LONDON (AP) — Sir Winston Churchill's "darling Clemmie," his wife for 57 years and his widow for 12, will be buried alongside him Friday in the family plot in an Oxfordshire village, her family announced today.

Baroness Spencer Churchill died Monday of a heart attack at the age of 92. She was lunching with her secretary in her London appartment overlooking Hyde Park, in the fashionable Knightsbridge section.

"My mother died very peacefully and quietly," said her daughter Mary Soames. "It was all over very quickly."

Her grandson Winston Churchill, a Conservative member of the House of Commons, said the funeral will be private and will be conducted by the Rev. John James, who officiated at Sir Winston's funeral in 1965.

Burial will be in the churchyard at St. Martin's Church in Baldon, near Blenheim Castle, the ancestral home of the Churchills.

Tributes flooded in to Lady Churchill's family.

Queen Elizabeth II's message of condolence was private and its contents were not disclosed. But Prime Minister James Callaghan's message read: "Her character, dignity and charm made her greatly loved."

Israelis said rethinking policies toward peace

By DIAL TORGERSON
The Los Angeles Times

JERUSALEM — Israelis are trying to get used to a new idea, the idea that Egypt really wants peace.

It means rethinking traditional policies. And, according to people who should know, it might mean a softening of hardline positions on a variety of issues.

"Always," an Israeli official said, "we have based our policy on the theory that the Arabs did not really want peace. There was a lot of talk about peace, but it was between different factions inside Israel.

"For years, we wanted peace and no one would talk to us. Now, suddenly it seems that Egypt really wants peace. It puts everything in a dramatically new context."

For Israelis, peace is a startling idea. Since Israel's birth in 1948, Israel and its Arab neighbors have had no peace, only cease-fires that have been broken regularly.

Throughout the country, the price of peace is being discussed not just in the corridors of power but in gatherings of almost every kind.

At Shabat (Sabbath) dinner, with the candles of the Chanukah rites burning as a reminder of an ancient war, families argued far into the night. Could a treaty — any piece of paper — give them the same security as that provided by their soldier sons?

Along the frontiers, in the mess halls of the kibbutzim built to help hold the occupied territories, young farmers debated what peace might mean. Would they have to withdraw from their outposts, abandon the fields wrested from the harsh countryside?

Men who have fought in four wars wondered how Israel could safely give up the military advantages it has won. What could replace the high ground? What treaty could defend Israel better than 100 miles of the Sinai desert?

Despite all this, a recent survey found that 90 percent of the Israelis polled agreed that some sort of concessions should be granted in exchange for peace. Despite fears of finding themselves once again under Arab guns, Israelis want their government to reach out for peacae while it is being offered.

Any shift from traditional thinking would almost certainly involve Israel in relaxing — or at least rephrasing — some of the basic positions of Prime Minister Menahem Begin's government:

—No return to the frontiers that existed before the Six Day War of 1967, in which Israel took most of the Arab territory it now holds.

—No establishment of an independent Palestinian state on the West Bank or in the Gaza Strip, formerly Arab areas.

—No peace without normalization of all relations, trade and tourism as well as diplomatic.

—No dealing with the Palestine Liberation Organization, which the Arabs have designated as the official representative of the Palestinian Arabs.

—No repartition of Jersusalem into Israeli and Arab sectors.

"I think more rethinking has been going on than you would have expected," a Western diplomat said, using the word "rethinking" to indicate a possible Israeli softening. "Some rethinking goes on about the Sinai, but it's the same rethinking as before. "When Israel looks for a place for decisions, it comes down to the West Bank and the Palestinian problem.

County group selects Welch

The Midland County Governor's Committee to Make Texas No. 1 in Agriculture Production and Profitability named Charlie Welch its chairman at its first meeting Tuesday.

The committed members discussed soil fertility, erosion and marketing and formed four committees to study farm problems.

Frank Cowden Jr. was named chairman of the energy committee and Chris Schaurbauer and F. A. Crook were appointed to that committee.

Named to the water committee were Aldredge "Button" Eates, chairman, and Vernon Chandler and Danny Robertson.

Russell Jones was appointed chairman of the sales committee, and Jerome Hoelscher and E. A. Bauman were named as members.

Appointed for the crop production committee were Alvey Bryant, chairman, and John Braun, Roy Graham and John Crosby Jr.

Chandler also was appointed reporter for the group.

Governor's committees have been formed for each county in Texas.

Hospital unit steps to be eyed

Steps in organizing the Midland County Hospital District are to be considered when the district's directors meet at 3 p.m. Thursday in the Midland Memorial Hospital board room. Those steps include sale of $10 million in bonds approved by voters, transfer of assets to the district and long-range growth.

The directors also are to consider a contract among the city, the hospital school district and district for collection of ad valorem taxes.

The group is scheduled to hear reports on the certificate of need granted last week by the Texas Health Facilities Commission for Midland Memorial expansion and 1978 county funding of indigent hospital care.

A hospital management agreement with Midland Memorial Foundation also is to be discussed at the meeting.

Boer War site back in news

By JACK FOISIE
The Los Angeles Times

MAFEKING, South Africa — This northwest town, famous for withstanding a seven-month Boer siege during the Boer War, is back in the news again.

This time it is a siege of another kind. Mafeking, "place of stones," is a white community almost completely surrounded by the new independent black republic "homeland" of Bophuthatswana.

The Bophuthatswana capital of Mmabtho is just a couple of miles down the road, but so far consists only of a Parliament building, a new hotel, the president's house and a gas station. It depends on Mafeking for everything else.

Chief Lucas Mangope, 53, who was sworn in as president last Tuesday, demanded that South Africa stop the gerrymandering that has created his nation, which consists of seven separate segments of Tswana tribal lands scattered throughout South Africa. Together the segments would cover an area slightly larger than Maryland. Mangope wants his nation consolidated, and Mafeking stands between two important segments.

Mafeking Mayor Andre Bloem, who operates a recruiting agency for black mine workers, would not speculate on the town's future beyond saying that "according to promises made by the South African government, Mafeking will remain white-controlled."

But many of the town's 7,000 whites consider that a black takeover is inevitable, although the way racial relations are finessed by the South African government the town may remain for a time under white control.

The South African prison in Mafeking has already been turned over to the Bophuthatswana government, and on the first day of independence, the new nation's blue flag with a diagonal orange stripe was flying over the prison gate.

Another blue and orange flag was flying over the Mafeking army camp, which will be the home of the newly formed Bophuthatswana 400-man light infantry.

"Fact is," said a young white man interviewed in a multiracial Mafeking bar, "I don't really know where the border of Bophuthatswana ends and the township line begins."

The almost 100 years of Mafeking's existing has been a jumble of drastic changes in character, shape, role and people.

In 1899, it was an English settlement surrounded by a Boer force that tried to starve its people into submission. The siege was lifted after seven months. Commander of the besieged force was a British colonel named Baden-Powell who was later knighted and is best remembered as being the founder of the Boy Scouts.

Chocolate increasingly isn't—chocolate, that is

By A. KENT MacDOUGALL
The Los Angeles Times

Americans have taken in stride the nondairy creamer, the reconstituted potato chip, "bacon" made from soybeans and other synthetic foods. So why not the ersatz chocolate bar?

Stung by sharply rising prices for cocoa beans, from which real chocolate is made, manufacturers of chocolate candy, ice cream, beverages, cake mixes and other foods are increasingly turning to substitute ingredients — some natural, most synthetic, all cheaper.

Though less discriminating chocolate lovers don't seem to be noticing the substitutions, manufacturers are proceeding cautiously les connoisseurs of fine chocolate lose confidence in brands now known for quality.

Hershey Foods Corp. has no present plans to use substitutes in its famous milk chocolate candy bar. But it has been marketing an imitation chocolate chip for baking cookies for nearly three years. And it hopes a substitute for cocoa butter that Procter and Gamble Co. has just developed will prove good enough for use in many Hershey products.

The nation's largest candy maker, Mars, Inc., which coats its Snickers, 3 Musketeers, Milky Way and other bars with real chocolate, has just introduced its first candy bar with an imitation "chocolaty" coating.

Manufacturers stand to gain a great deal by using substitutes for the increasingly costly ingredients in real cholcate. Americans spent more than $3 billion on chocolate candy last year, and billions more on chocolate-flavored milk, ice cream, cookies and other foods. Yet sales of chocolate candy are down this year because of consumer resistance to the higher prices necessitated by increased ingredient costs. Profits are also down — by more than $10 million at Hershey alone.

To make matters worse, chocolate manufacturers find themselves forced to defend products they consider nutritious against charges that they contribute to tooth decay, obesity and sugar addiction. The federal government is threatening to ban the sale of cholcolate candy and other sugared snacks in school lunch rooms. And it is considering restrictions on television commercials that allegedly mouthwash impressionable children into becoming junk food junkies.

Urging the government on to even sterner measures is a small but vocal group of nutritionists, consumer advocates and other critics of the food industry. Among other things, they question the safety of many of the synthetic flavors, preservatives, emulsifiers and other additives that are finding their way into chocolate products and other foods. Though their impact on federal regulators may be minimal, the critics seem to be making the buying public more conscious of the ingredient labels on the highly processed convenience foods that dominate supermarket shelves.

As any vacationer who has stopped for a guided tour of a chocolate factory knows, chocolate itself requires extensive processing. This starts with the cocoa beans that grow in large pods on the tropical cacao tree. At the factory the coca beans are cleaned, roasted, crushed and ground. This produces chocolate liquor, a bitter liquid. Cooled and molded into blocks, chocolate liquor is sold as unsweetened baking chocolate, the nearest-to-natural form of chocolate available to consumers.

Further processing of chcolate liquor squeezes out some of its major constituent, coca butter, the fat that gives chocolate its melt-in-the-mouth consistency. This leaves cocoa powder, which is used to flavor cakes, puddings and other foods and, when added with sugar to milk or water, makes hot cocoa, the breakfast beverage.

The Food and Drug Administration, which sets standards of identity for chocolate and cocoa products, allows some products — puddings and ice cream, for example — to be labeled "chocolate" even though they contain no chocolate liquor but only the less flavor-intense cocoa powder.

In contrast, a candy bar must contain chcolate liquor, usually enriched with an extra shot of cocoa butter, to qualify as "chocolate." Other ingredients permitted in chocolate candy include milk solids; sugar, which typically comprises 40 percent to 50 percent of a chocolate bar's weight; emulsifiers to aid mixing and improve consistency; and vanillin, an artificial flavor derived from a byproduct of wood pulp that acts to enhance the chocolate flavor.

So-called real chocolate, then, is far from a naturally occurring food. Some natural food devotees avoid it for this reason. Indeed, the extensive processing that chcolate undergoes renders it chemically complex. Chemists have identified 310 compounds in cocoa powder, including 34 hydrocarbons, 28 alcohols, 53 carbonyls, 38 acids, 46 esters and 33 bases. Many more compounds in cocoa remain unidentified, and cholcate is even more complex.

Undaunted by the formidable task of matching the flavor and aroma of real cocoa and chocolate, manufacturers of imitation flavors have accelerated their efforts to come up with acceptable substitutes. Like medieval alchemists seeking to transmute base metals into gold, flavor chemists across America have been toiling in their laboratories to find the right mix of cheap chemicals and other ingredients.

The chemists labor under some handicaps. They must stick to substances that are regarded as safe by the Food and Drug Administration or the Flavor Extract Manufacturers Association. They cannot use caffeine or theobromine, though both stimulants are present in real chocolate. And they must get along without the most effective coloring agent, Red Dye No. 2, which was banned last year as a suspected cancer-causing agent.

At least 20 companies have artificial cocoa and chocolate flavors on the market. They bear such names as Nocoa, Mate 'n Match and Counterfeit Chocolate. Most are priced substantially below the $2.15 to $2.50 per pound cost of cocoa powder. National Food Ingredient Co., a subsidiary of National Can Corp., charges 62 cents to 93 cents a pound for its dozen artificial cocoa and chocolate flavors.

But do the imitations come close to the real thing? Not really, chocolate manufacturers agree. Wilbur Chocolate Co., a subsidiary of MacAndrews and Forbes Co., reports it has tested 50 imitation flavors and "not a single one was close to the true chocolate flavor." Hershey says it has found none good enough to use in candy.

Be that as it may, makers of the imitation flavors say they are supplying ersatz cocoa flavors to producers of such non-candy products as cake and pudding mixes, ice cream and beverages. But which brands? Who knows? The flavor makers won't identify their customers. And food processors generally need not specify on ingredient labels which artificial flavors they are using. Ice cream makers need not list any ingredients at all.

If flavor chemists are still a ways from matching chocolate and cocoa flavors, vegetable-fat chemists are close to duplicating cocoa butter. This is because cocoa butter is less complex and the chemists have had 50 years to develop substitutes.

Cocoa butter is unique among vegetable fats because it is a solid at normal room temperatures, melting at 90 to 92 degrees, just below body temperature. Under proper storage conditions, a chocolate bar can be kept for years without deteriorating. If the bar melts and then resolidifies, cocoa butter will infiltrate to the surface, turning it gray or white as the cocoa butter recrystallizes. This condition, called bloom, renders a chocolate bar unsightly and unpalatable, though still safe to eat.

Bloom isn't much of a problem nowadays because most stores selling candy are air-conditioned. But especially in the South in summer, it used to be the scourge of the chocolate trade, seriously depressing sales. "Many chocolate plants closed down for three months a year," recalls L. Russell Cook, a retired chocolate executive and author of the definitive book on the industry.

One chocolate manufacturer that decided to do something about the chocolate-melting problem was Curtiss Candy Co. Curtiss developed a coating for its popular Butterfinger and Baby Ruth bars that replaced cocoa butter with hydrogenated vegetable oils that had higher melting points. Such substitute "compound coatings," as they are known in the candy industry, have been used on Butterfinger since the early 1920s and on Baby Ruth since the early 1940s.

Two other popular chocolate-coated bars, Clark and Oh Henry!, went over to compound coatings in the 1950s when cocoa bean prices shot up and spurred substitutions.

How well candy lovers took to the early imitation chocolate is lost in history and the traditional secretiveness that pervades the highly competitive candy industry.

Economy of East Germany not growing as before

By MURRAY SEEGER
The Los Angeles Times

BERLIN — The East German economy, traditionally the leader of the European Communist bloc, still provides the highest standard of living in the Communist world. But it has lost much of its buoyancy.

The rate of growth is slowing and the already strained labor force is being exhorted to work even harder to meet official planning targets.

Seeking new ways to impress the world that East Germany — the German Democratic Republic — is a viable, independent state that will never be reunited with its bigger and much richer neighbor — the Federal Republic of (West) Germany — East Germany's Socialist Unity (Communist) Party and its government have announced a massive celebration of the state's 30th anniversary, two years in advance.

"We will prepare the jubilee with new labor achievements in all areas of society's life," declared the statement that covered two pages in the official newspaper, Neues Deutschland.

A country with few natural resources, a chronic shortage of labor and a bigger military budget than most other members of the East European trading group Comecon, East Germany established an enviable record both for exporting goods and raising individual standards of living in the 1960s.

The nation's leaders felt a particular challenge, not only to excel within the Communist world, but to keep its own living standard within hailing distance of West Germany's.

Since 80 percent of the East German population of under 17 million can see West German television — and several million receive regular visits from Western relatives — the difference in living standards is more graphic than in the other, more isolated Communist countries.

The difference is most telling in Berlin, where thousands of foreign tourists daily cross through the huge wall that divides the city and can compare the gaudy, rich life of the western part of the city with the drab streets of the eastern Zone.

The quality and supply of goods in East German stores are better than in other East European countries but still are far inferior to Western Goods. Lines from daily outside most stores and individuals complain there is little they want to buy.

Under Erich Honecker, now head of state as well as Communist Party boss, East Germany attempted to raise individual living standards rapidly in the 1970s without raising prices.

The regime had seen the results in neighboring Poland when the government there tried to raise prices in 1970, and was overthrown by a workers' uprising. Instead, the East German planners poured billions of marks into subsidies to reward collective farmers for their production, without raising retail prices.

Forced to import most of its raw materials, including energy, East Germany tried to pay its bills with manufactured exports, especially machinery.

The formula started to break down following the oil embargo of 1973, which led to a worldwide recession and the raising of petroleum prices by the Soviet Union.

East Germany, obliged to pay more for its energy supplies and imports from the West, could not sell enough of its products. The machinery it produced could not compete with Western-made products, and the recession reduced the size of potential markets. Moreover, bad weather forced the East Germans to import grain from the United States and pay the cost with its limited hard currency reserves.

But the government held firm to Honecker's policy of not raising prices, except for new and improved products. The party chief, who took power in 1971, fixed basic prices at the 1960 level so that the cost of price subsidies are estimated at $27 billion in the current five-year plan, which ends in 1980.

As a result, the cost of food, housing and basic living supplies is low, but the prices on appliances, automobiles and other so-called luxury goods are high.

A skilled worker who earns the equivalent of $360 a month in gross pay for 2 1-2 months to buy a black and white television set and 9 1-2 months to buy the smallest domestic car, a plastic-body Trabant with an engine that uses a combination of oil and gasoline.

The Honecker policy now has resulted in a slowdown in the economy and an apparent shift back to traditional planning schemes to put more emphasis on export industries.

In 1976, the economy grew at only 3.7 percent instead of the planned 5.3 percent. The growth rate in the first half of 1977 was 4.5 percent instead of 5.1 percent. The government has announced that next year's growth targetr would be 5.2 percent compared with the 1977 goal of 5.5 percent.

With the price-raising alternative removed, trhe East German planners have determined that they will stimulate growth by trying to raise labor efficiency, investing in greater development of fuel sources — almost exclusively lignite (brown coal) — and increasing export sales.

The government announced recently that the country's last underground hard coal mine would be closed because of dwindling supplies.

Many Western experts believe the East German plan is unrealistic, especially its scheme for enlarging export sales to the West by 100 percent and by 50 percent to its Comecon partners.

Joy, bitterness accompany release of U.S. prisoners

The Los Angeles Times

SAN DIEGO — There were displays of joy and bitterness here Tuesday as 41 of the U.S. citizens repatriated from Mexican jails were given their freedom.

Starting at 9:30 a.m. and continuing through the balance of the day, men and women who had spent the last three or four years in Mexican prisons walked and ran out the front door of the Metropolitan Correctional Center here.

Some were greeted by friends and relatives whom they met with whoops of joy and tearful embraces. Some walked out alone, carrying only their belongings and enough money and transportation tickets to get them home.

A few showed no joy at all. They walked past a crowd of reporters and cameramen, hid their faces and refused to be interviewed. And some would only criticize the U.S. government for the way in which the historic prisoner exchange was handled.

All of those released Tuesday were freed because they had served more than two-thirds of their Mexican prison sentences and were thus eligible for mandatory release under U.S. parole regulations. They must still report regularly to federal probation officers for the duration of their sentences.

Four additional prisoners who were technically eligible for release were detained by officials at the high-rise downtown prison. They were held on warrants for other crimes committed in the United States.

Prior to the Tuesday releases, officials at the Metropolitan Correctional Center said 142 inmates had been repatriated from Mexico since the prisoner exchange began Friday. An additional 100 prisoners are due to arrive at the center from various Mexican prisons on Friday and Saturday.

The first prisoner to be freed Tuesday morning was Alison Baughman, 24, of Jefferson Town, Ky., who ran by reporters without a word and literally leaped into the arms of a male friend.

Vows of peace open Cairo negotiations

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Israel and Egypt began negotiations today with mutual vows to work for a general Arab-Israeli peace settlement and an Egyptian expression of hope that the historic meeting was "the dawn of a new era for this region and the entire world."

"We want peace and we shall be friends," said the chief Israeli delegate, Eliahu Ben-Elissar.

"We have transcended the barriers of fear and mistrust," said Egypt's A. Esmat Abdel Meguid.

The key issues — a Palestinian state and Israel's withdrawal from territory captured from the Arabs in 1967 — were glossed over in the 29 minutes of televised speeches that opened the historic conference in the hotel near the Great Pyramid of Cheops where President Roosevelt, Winston Churchill and Chiang Kai-shek held their 1943 Cairo conference.

"Tangible results are expected, and should be forthcoming without delay," said Meguid, opening the conference after cordial greetings and general handshaking among the delegates.

"People of good will everywhere hope and pray for the success of our talks," Ben-Elissar replied. "This is why we have come to Cairo — to talk, to reason and to conduct a dialogue in confidence."

Both emphasized that a "comprehensive settlement" between Israel and all its Arab neighbors was the goal, not an Israeli-Egyptian agreement.

The speeches at the 10-foot-round table in the gilt-domed dining room of the century-old Mena House were to be the only public part of the conference. It is expected to last about two weeks.

Also present for the first open, face-to-face peace negotiations between Israel and one of its Arab foes in 29 years of recurrent war were representatives of the United States and U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, and an observer sent by Pope Paul VI.

Israel's other Arab foes and the Soviet Union boycotted the talks, but seats were left for Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, the Palestinians and the Russians at the conference table, and their flags were raised outside the hotel. All the speakers expressed the hope that they would join the talks later.

Shortly before the talks began, Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin left Tel Aviv for the United States, saying he was going to inform President Carter of "problems connected with the real chance of establishing peace in the Middle East."

Begin refused to say what the problems were, but there was speculation in Israel that he was taking new peace proposals that called for U.S. guarantees of Israel's security in exchange for the return of Arab territory occupied in the 1967 war.

Ben-Elissar is Begin's chief aide, and the other members of the Israeli delegation are Meir Rosenne, the foreign ministry's legal expert, and Maj. Gen. Avrahim Tamir. Meguid, the Egyptian ambassador to the United Nations, is assisted by Osama El Baz, senior undersecretary of the foreign ministry, and Gen. Taha el Magdoob.

Alfred L. Atherton, the assistant secretary of state for the Near East, is the U.S. delegate, and Gen. Ensio Siilasvuo, chief of U.N. peackeeping forces in the Middle East, is representing Waldheim.

Lee High football coach submits his resignation

By LINDA HILL SCHAFFRINA

Under the terms of the resignation, Acree will be paid his full salary until Dec. 31, 1978, the date his contract with the school district was to expire. That salary is $21,995 per year.

After a 15-minute executive session in which a real estate matter also was discussed, Warren read Acree's letter of resignation. The board unanimously approved the terms of resignation without discussion during the open portion of the meeting.

Attempts to reach Acree for comment Tuesday were not successful.

Warren said he and Acree and Acree's representatives began discussions on a potential resignation immediately after football season.

Acree hand-delivered a letter to Warren "a few days ago" outlining the circumstances under which he would resign, including payment for the remainder of his contract, Warren said.

"Obviously there was a tense situation. I appreciate Coach Acree's representatives coming to see me and wanting to discuss the situation concerning a settlement," Warren said.

"I admire the man for stepping down. I think he did the right thing," Warren said, "and I wish him well."

Warren said Acree's involvement in a University Interscholastic League rule infraction this fall "caused some people some concern," but it was not the "total reason" that it was good for Acree to leave the school system.

Warren said Acree is "controversial," and anytime there is a controversial coach, there are going to be coaching changes. "I think the coaches expect it," he said.

Trustee Don Sparks said he "had been made aware" that Acree would resign. "I think that Coach Acree has assessed the situation and is doing again . . . what he thinks is best for the entire school district," Sparks said.

"Under certain circumstances, I think it (the resignation) is in the best interests of the community and Coach Acree," Sparks said.

Athletic Director Sam Cox arrived at the meeting after the resignation had been approved and missed the item.

"Coach Acree never indicated to me he was resigning," Cox said, although he said he had talked to Acree. "We discussed the fact that under the circumstances, I did not think he could continue to function as head football coach at Lee," Cox said.

This past season was Acree's eighth in Midland, Sparks said. During that time, his team won 46 games, lost 32 and tied two. The Lee team won the district championship in 1974 and 1975.

Council votes against applying for grant again

By JIM STEINBERG

By a 4 to 2 vote, the Midland City Council on Tuesday voted to "pass" on a chance to apply for a fourth year Community Development Block Grant.

The decision probably will cause no tears to be shed in Washington, where on Sept. 21 officials of the Department of Housing and Urban Development turned down the city's $946,000 Community Development grant application for 1977 because it did not have a rental assistance plan.

Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr., and council members Doris Howbert, Mark S. Martin, and Carroll M. Thomas voted against the reapplication effort, while councilmen G. Thane Akins and Gordon G. Marcum voted for it — if for different reasons.

"I felt our application (to HUD for the third year application) was legal and in the spirit of the act (of Congress) that created it...I wouldn't mind applying again, but with the realization that there is a low chance factor of our getting it... it would be helpful from the standpoint of publicity to go through the motions and it might encourage other cities to do what we did," said Akins. It was Akins, who along with council members Angelo, Martin and Thomas voted against adding a rent subsidy program to the city's 1977 Community Development grant.

Akins said for the Midland protest against the HUD requirement for a rental assistance plan, as a condition for the Community Development grant, to be meaningful, it would be necessary to go through the application process all over again.

Of his decision Councilman Marcum said, "Although we have disliked the regulation that HUD has tried to impose on our community, they (the Community Development funds) are block grants to our community...and our community should not be held from the funds."

Marcum was the lone dissenter in a 5-1 council vote on July 27 to resubmit the city's $946,000 application without the rental assistance plan. The vote followed a notification that without the plan the area office of HUD in

Farmers launch strike to raise living standard

By DENNIS ESKOW
Associated Press Writer

Farmers seeking a return to the standard of living enjoyed by their turn of the century counterparts began a nationwide strike today. The number of participants and the strike methods varied widely from region to region.

Much of the protest today, in the form of tractorcades, boycotts against grocery stores and grocery warehouse picketing, involved Midwestern and Pacific Northwestern farmers. Farmers in the South were planning action later in the week and watching to see how much support they could gather.

Related stories on Pages 6, 7C

Some southern farm-related businesses said they would close today, but the extent of their support was unclear. Dairy farmers appeared to be ignoring the strike, except in Nebraska, where some vowed to turn grade-A milk into powder and store it until after the strike.

It was difficult to gauge what effect the strike would have. If farmers, food processors and the transportation industry all participated in a general farm strike, "it would only take about 15 days for the consumer to feel it," Iowa's agriculture secretary, Robert Lounsberry, said Tuesday.

But the Teamsters union has said that contracts will not permit its truckers to honor farmer pickets and no supportive moves have surfaced in the food processing industry. Some independent truckers have said they will support the strike but their numbers are not known.

The strike, called by American Agriculture, a group formed three months ago, is aimed at getting Congress to guarantee farm prices at 100 percent parity, a move that would give today's farmers the same buying power that farmers had from 1910-1914.

Part of the reason for weak support in dairy country is that milk is selling at 82.3 percent of parity, some Wisconsin farmers said. New York State dairy farmers also appeared to ignore the strike.

In Fayetteville, N.C., a group of farmers planned a tractorcade through the city Saturday, when President Carter is scheduled to attend the weddding of a nephew. But the announcement late Tuesday that Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin would visit Carter on Friday cast some uncertainty on the Fayetteville trip.

Declining examination scores 'extremely complicated' issue

By MARLEEN RAY

The problem of declining college entrance examination scores in the Midland Independent School District is "extremely complicated,' and doesn't "yield to one answer," Douglas W. Brown, assistant superintendent of instructional services, said Tuesday to the Board of Education at its regular meeting.

In a report of Scholastic Aptitude Test scores and ACT scores of Midland High School and Lee High School students from 1972 to 1976, test scores for Midland High students in 1976-77 averaged 436 for the verbal section and 493 for the math section, both on a scale from 200 to 800.

In the same year, Lee High students scored 456 in the verbal part and 498 in the math part, surpassing the Midland High student scores.

Bryant Saxon, director of program development and research, said this discrepancy may be due to the frequency distribution of the test scores. He said on the SAT verbal section more Midland High students scored on the lower end of the grading scale and less scored on the upper end. On the other hand, more Lee High students scored on the upper end of the scale than did on the lower end.

He said, on the SAT math section, more Lee High students received scores in the middle range of the scale, but Midland High students ranged in the upper end of the scale

Tax office arrangement step nearer dissolution

and MARLEEN RAY

The Midland City Council and the Midland Independent School Board each moved one step closer to ending a joint tax office arrangement in separate action taken at meetings Tuesday.

For the second time in a row, the School Board rejected a contract that had been adopted by the City Council. Both Board actions followed lengthy negotiations by representatives of the School Board, City Council, as well as representatives of Midland College and the Midland County Hospital District.

What the City Council accepted — this time — was a proposal to split the operating costs — roughly $325,000 — of the tax office between the four governing bodies by the following ratios: 53.29 percent to the school district, 27.33 percent to the city, 10.91 percent to the college district and 7.81 percent to the hospital district.

During the Nov. 22 City Council meeting a proposal whereby MISD would pick up 58 percent of the city tax office expenses, the city 23.3 percent, Midland college 10.9 percent and the hospital district 7.8 percent was approved.

During the council session Tuesday, Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. said he was reluctant for the council to take a position again unless the School Board had acted, but Councilman G. Thane Akins, who attended the contrat negotiations Friday, said the new agreement would cost the city a little more money than the first, but

Since the CB radio craze hit the land, the 10-4 signals have peaked to the lower heavens.

The 10-4 lingo, in some circles, became a fad particularly after the shock waves of the 1973 fuel crisis and of the 55 mph speed limit overtaking the 70 mph.

Ten-four talk and "look out for Smokey Bear" jawing created a new vocabulary.

But for those uniformed and undercover men and women of the law, the 10-4 signals have been around for a long time. And they do differ from the layman's 10-4 jargon . . . CB talk.

— 10-0: Caution.
— 10-4: Okay. Acknowledgement.
— 10-6: Busy — unless urgent.

— 10-7: Out of service.
— 10-8: In service. (Back to work)
— 10-10: Fight in progress.
— 10-11: Dog case. (Which may or may not be a dog fight)
— 10-12: Stand by. (Hold on)
— 10-13: Weather-road report.
— 10-14: Prowler report.
— 10-16: Domestic problem.

Odessa store reports man took money

ODESSA — A white male in his late 40s or early 50s robbed the U-Tote-Em, a convenience store, at 2608 Kermit Highway at approximately 9:51 p.m. Tuesday, Capt. Jack Fillyaw of the police department here said.

Fillyaw said a male, about 180 pounds, entered the convenience store last night and produced a revolver, demanding money from the manager of the store, Raymond Dowell of Odessa. The man took an undetermined amount of money from the store manager, he said.

After the man walked out of the store, Dowell tried to stop him by firing shots at him from a pistol he had, but it is not known whether the man was injured, Fillyaw said. Dowell was unharmed.

Fillyaw said the incident is still under investigation.

Begin takes off for Washington before Cairo conference opens

By LARRY THORSON

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Menahem Begin left for Washington today a few hours before the start of the Egyptian-Israeli conference in Cairo. He said he was going to inform President Carter of "problems connected with the real chance of establishing peace in the Middle East."

The Israeli leader refused at an airport news conference to be specific about the problems he would discuss in Washington but said, "It does require very serious consideration by the president of the United States."

He said he was taking "suggestions connected directly with the peace-making process" and that Carter "should be informed in detail. ... He should hear this in direct private talks."

The problems did not appear to be urgent. Begin told Secretary of State Cyrus Vance last Saturday that he wanted to see Carter, the president agreed within four hours, but the two will not meet until Friday.

Accompanied by Atty. Gen. Aaron Barak, overseas information chief Shumel Katz and two military advisers, Begin was scheduled to arrive in New York this afternoon, but it could not be learned if he would go on to Washington immediately. Aides said his meeting with Carter was being delayed until Vance's return from his Middle East trip, and the delay would also give the 64-year-old prime minister a chance to rest up from the flight.

Tax credit for parents of students in college holds up final SS bill

By JIM LUTHER

WASHINGTON (AP) — With only one day left until planned congressional adjournment, Republicans are trying to salvage a $250 income tax credit for parents of college students in the final version of the Social Security bill.

All sides in the dispute over the tax credit, which is blocking a vote on Social Security, were talking optimistically as a Senate-House conference committee prepared today to try to settle their differences.

But sheer numbers gave the Democratic leadership the upper hand, and those leaders — especially on the House side — don't want the tuition credit attached to the Social Security bill.

Anticipating an agreement, House leaders scheduled final floor action on Social Security for Thursday, the target adjournment date for this year's congressional session.

Social Security is in deep financial trouble. The pending bill would correct most of the problems with a tax increase that would cost workers and their employers $227 billion over the next decade.

There is no compelling reason the bill has to be passed this year. But President Carter and Democratic congressional leaders want the bill out of the way before the 1978 election campaign, which could discourage many congressmen from voting for a tax increase.

There was increasing evidence that Senate members of the conference committee would give in and allow the credit to be stripped from the bill. Three of the 10 senators on the panel have indicated publicly they would turn against the amendment in the interest of clearing Social Security.

Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., chairman of the conference committee, said he thinks a Social Security bill will emerge this year. But Sen. William V. Roth, R-Del., chief sponsor of the tax credit, said he will be satisfied with nothing less than a House vote on that provision.

House Republicans are trying to figure out the best way to get such a vote.

One proposal being considered would remove the Roth amendment, as most House Democrats on the conference committee insist. But when the compromise bill gets to the floor of the House, Republicans would ask their colleagues to send it back to the committee with instructions to accept the Roth amendment.

Either way such a move went, Roth would have the vote he wants.

Leptophos workers' health hurt

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Federal occupational health officials said Tuesday they have uncovered widespread neurological and psychological problems among workers who handled the pesticide leptophos at a plant owned by the Velsicol Chemical Company in Houston.

Officials of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health also charged during a Senate subcommittee hearing that Velsicol withheld vital information from federal inspectors about health problems the company's leptophos workers were having.

The Chicago-based chemical company was indicted Monday by a federal grand jury on charges in an unrelated case that it concealed laboratory test results from the Environmental Protection Agency that indicated two of its best selling pesticides might cause cancer.

A Velsicol spokesman Tuesday said he was not prepared to comment on the NIOSH testimony on leptophos. He said, however, that the chemical company's policy was to cooperate fully with federal health inspectors.

Velsicol's problems were further compounded during the hearing yesterday on pesticide control before the Senate subcommittee on agricultural research and general legislation. NIOSH officials told subcommittee chairman Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., they recently learned of still more health problems among workers exposed to the pesticide DBCP at Velsicol's Eldorado, Ark., plant.

Dr. Channing Myer, an official of the NIOSH hazard evaluation and technical assistance branch, said he received preliminary information from the company that about half of a group of 24 workers who handled DBCP at the Arkansas plant showed abnormally low sperm counts in medical examinations.

DBCP is a pesticide which has been widely used on fruit and vegetable crops to kill worms and other soil insects. Last July DBCP manufacturing workers were reported to have been made sterile by the chemical at the Occidental Chemical Co.'s plant in Lathrop, Calif., and Dow Chemical Co.'s DBCP plant in Magnolia, Ark.

Velsicol's spokesman said Tuesday that his company manufactured the pesticide at Eldorado, Ark., plant for only two months in 1975. He said the company's report of low sperm counts among the Eldorado workers was part of a study which he called "inconclusive and still going on."

Dow officials announced Tuesday that some of the workers at their Magnolia plant who had been made sterile by DBCP appeared to be regaining their fertility. The company announced "significant" improvements in sperm counts in seven of 47 pesticide workers whose counts last summer were at or near zero.

However, some doubt was cast upon the Dow results by NIOSH officials Tuesday who said Dow was using a standard of 20 million sperm per cubic centimeter as a "normal" reading. The NIOSH officials said the Dow standard was low and that a "normal" sperm count should be about 40 million sperm per cubic centimeter.

Testifying before the Senate subcommittee Tuesday on leptophos, Dr. Bobby Craft, director of the NIOSH division of surveillance, hazard evaluation and field studies, said that among 155 Velsiocl workers tested from the company's Bayport plant in Houston 63 showed abnormalities.

The tests included nerve and muscle functions as well as psychological examinations to determine performance in thinking, perceiving and carrying out certain simple tasks. Eleven of the workers showed nerve and reflex problems while the rest had a wide variety of psychological problems, Craft said.

Dr. Charles Xintaras, NIOSH's leptophos project coordinator, said the abnormalities found in the medical tests were "significantly higher" than those found among a similar group not exposed to the chemical.

Craft said that during a visit by NIOSH investigators to the Bayport plant in February 1976 the NIOSH officials found that two of 26 persons showed mild neurological problems.

"What we did not know at the time was that at least 12 cases of serious neurological disorders had been identified in June of 1975 by a medical consultant to the company," Craft said. NIOSH was not informed of the additional cases by the company and only learned of them from another government agency in September of last year, he said.

Pentagon officials didn't realize gravity of breach

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pentagon officials, apparently kept in the dark for 18 months by West Germany, say they didn't realize the seriousness of a NATO security breach until they read published reports this week.

Defense officials said NATO informed the Pentagon last year there was a security problem, but gave no indication it was as big as disclosed by a Frankfurt newspaper.

On the basis of what he called "sketchy information," one Pentagon official said, "We don't believe there has been a serious compromise of U.S. weapons technology or other classified U.S. information."

But he stressed that the assessment should not be given too much weight because of the lack of information available to Pentagon officials.

The Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung reported Monday that an East German spy ring passed more than 1,000 secret NATO and West German documents to the communists, including assessments of Western and Soviet bloc military strength and details on new weapons and equipment.

Navy Capt. Kurt Fischer, a defense ministry spokesman, said the newspaper account was "essentially correct."

Officials say the United States first learned of the possibility of a security breach after three West German defense ministry employees were arrested in June 1976. Word of this came from NATO security officials, it was said.

This October, more than a year later, the NATO security office told the Pentagon the situation was "more serious than originally thought," officials said. Even then, however, there was no tone of urgency or indication that the problem was as bad as pictured in the subsequent newspaper reports.

Pentagon officials offered little speculation on why the German defense ministry did not keep American military officials informed of the extent of the spy operation and its possible consequences.

But they acknowledged that Defense Secretary Harold Brown was not informed of the depth of the military security breach last week when he met in Brussels with other NATO defense chiefs, including West Germany's Georg Leber.

Suit filed by atheist

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Starting early on her "year of litigation," atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair has filed a federal court suit to force state officials to remove a nativity scene from the Capitol rotunda.

Mrs. O'Hair said Tuesday that the scene is "sectarian" and as such, violates the principle of church-state separation.

"If they are going to have this, they should have Hanuka . . . and a representation of the birth of Krishna," she told reporters.

She also asked the court to award her, her son Jon and "the class they represent" $9 million in punitive damages from the defendants, Gov. Dolph Briscoe, Attorney General John Hill and Homer Foerster, director of the State Board of Control.

Mrs. O'Hair held a news conference next to the 20-foot Christmas tree in the Capitol. The nativity scene is just beneath the bottom branches.

She said the tree doesn't offend her because it "is pagan and we are happy to see pagan symbols."

Asked how an atheist could accept even pagan symbols, Mrs. O'Hair said, "Everybody understands the pagan gods were made up by pagans. It's time everyone understands that Christian gods were made up by the Christians."

Her suit joins one filed previously in federal court to stop the Austin City Council from opening its weekly meetings with prayer.

She said Texans and Austinites could look forward to "a year of litigation" to end all religious activities by government.

"If you think the Negroes put up a good fight, or the women, wait until you see the atheists," Mrs. O'Hair said.

Her suit says maintaining the nativity scene or creche in the Capitol amounts to an unconstitutional "establishment of religion."

She also asked the court to require Briscoe, Hill and Foerster to answer 20 questions in writing, such as the meaning of the nativity scene "in Christian historical tradition."

Council votes against grant reapplication

As HUD creeped along with what to many Midlanders — on both sides of the issue — was a torturous denial process, Councilwoman Howbert joined Marcum in a vote to add the plan on Sept. 13. The majority of the council, however, again voted against adding the subsidy.

Mrs. Howbert said Tuesday that her main concern in voting for the addition of the rent subsidy program this summer was to preserve a city-run housing rehabilitation program. Now, with the recent creation of the Midland Commission for Local Development by Mayor Angelo she had "great hopes" that the project could be carried on locally, without federal funds. Concilwomen Howbert said HUD guidelines for Community Development funds were written for large cities like New York, not for smaller ones like Midland, and that changes should be made in the guidelines to accomodate the smaller cities.

Councilman Martin said it would be a "wasted effort" for the city to apply for the HUD funds and that although the publicity factor cited by Akins has some merit, he said he could not justify the efforts on the part of the city staff to prepare a fourth-year HUD application.

Angelo and Thomas said that from all they have been able to learn about HUD, the guidelines were becoming more stringent. And Angelo pointed out that since Midland had lagged a year in its program participation, a new application would be singled out for even tighter scrutiny for compliance with federal regulations.

By the same 4-2 margin, the council also decided not to apply for $230,000 in "supplemental" Community Developments, made available either to the city or county governments by virtue of the city losing the original $946,000 grant. As these funds had the same requirement for a rent subsidy program as a condition for acceptance, Angelo said he saw little point in applying now.

In other action the council approved on first reading an ordinance establishing regulations and requirements for motor vehicle wreckers to be used by the police department in handling of abandoned, improperly parked, and other vehicles normally removed to the city pound and also the regulations and requirements for those wreckers serving as the on-duty wrecker for the police department to respond to accidents.

The ordinance authorized the chief of police to solicit bids for such service and specified that a successful bidder must have a minimum of two wreckers with drivers available for service on a 24-hour basis. It also defined weight and equipment standards that the equipment must meet. The ordinance allowed the chief of police to remove from the duty roster any wrecker service that he determines is charging prices for its service that are substantially in excess of the usual and customary fees charged and also to eliminate a wrecker service for unsatisfactory service.

Angelo denies deduction plan

By JIM STEINBERG

Approximately 30 policeman — including two of the department's three captains — were present, when at 6:15 p.m. Tuesday, Attorney Robert F. Griem of the International Brotherhood of Police Officers' national organization asked the Midland City Council to grant police union members here payroll deductions from their dues.

Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr., citing a long-established city policy, flatly denied the request. Angelo said that the city has "a very clear-cut policy regarding deductions from payroll checks...no deductions are allowed unless required by law unless it is to the benefit of all the employees of the city."

During his presentation to the council, Griem of Burbank, Calif., said the deductions would be used to provide an insurance plan and legal assistance for the member officers.

In September and October all but three men of the 122-man Midland police department joined Local 584 of the IBPO, Griem said.

During his presentation to the council, Griem charged the city with "petty harassment" by placing the item concerning the police last on a 67 item agenda.

He said that during a telephone converstation with Mayor Angelo last Thursday he was told it would "not be in the interests of the police officers or the organization" for him to show up at the meeting.

Later Mayor Angelo said that during the telephone conversation he told Griem there would be no point in coming to Midland because he could tell him (Griem) by telephone that what he was asking was against city policy.

Griem said that when he and other out-of-town representatives came by the council's 10 a.m. session, they were told by Mayor Angelo to come back at 6 p.m.

Later, Angelo said he wanted Griem back at the later time so that more police would be able to attend the meeting. Angelo added that he "resented the implication" that police do not now have round-the-clock protection for their life insurance and he pointed out that the city attorney's office has "always gone to bat" for officers sued as the result of a job-related incident.

Robert F. Griem

"We are not preventing them in any way from getting additional insurance coverage on their own," Angelo added.

Griem said the allowing the deduction was nothing more "than a common courtesy."

After the council meeting, several officers said they were not as surprised at the mayor's decision as the they were at the "shabby" treatment they had received at the council meeting.

"This has strengthened us, brought us closer together," Griem said after his council appearance. "The union would have gone away, if the council had granted this request. Now it will grow in strength," Griem said.

"We've done so much for them...like the police car program," one council member said. Griem said there is no legal recourse to the council's decision. He added, however, that he could think of nowhere else where this request by IBPO memberships had been denied.

"I'll be back," Griem said just before walking out the doors of City Hall. "There's a lot that needs doing here."

Tax office arrangement step nearer dissolution

that it was still "a good deal for everybody."

He urged the council to adopt the agreement and pointed out that "we (the city) have conceded in every way at every meeting," adding that this second meeting should be the last.

Following the unanimous vote accepting this second proposal, Mayor Angelo instructed City Manager James Brown to call MISD Superintendent Dr. James H. Mailey and tell him the city had taken a final position on the contract agreement.

Instead of accepting the second proposal, however, the School Board, by a 4-3 vote, Tuesday authorized Board President Johnny R. Warren and Edward E. Runyan to negotiate a more acceptable contract with a city representative. Mailey was also asked to attend the negotiations — assuming there would be more.

The need to renegotiate the tax office agreement was brought about by the recent entry of the hospital district into the local tax scene.

Mrs. Page recommended the board not accept the contract at this point. She said even though the cost of operating the tax office is shared by four parties, the school district here still is paying as much as Ector County Independent School District does for running its own office. The Ector County school district has budgeted $167,000 for its office's operations for this school year. Midland school district would have to pay $162,916 for running the tax office if it had approved the contract.

Mrs. Page said, "I think the city has seen this as an opportunity to them to not pay as much" for the cost of running the tax office. She spoke out in favor of a contract proposed by Reagan Legg of the Midland College Board of Trustees, which split the tax office's costs between the college district and the hospital district based on income generated by the two. The school district then would pay 60 percent of the remaining costs and the city would pay 40 percent.

On the other hand, Sparks said he saw "no reason" to accept the proposed contract approved by the city council. He said he felt it was in the "best interest of the taxpayer" to get the question of the operation of the tax office out of the way.

However, Warren said he didn't see what the big hurry" was about. He said if the proposed contract was not what the board members wanted, then they wouldn't have to accept it just because the city council did.

Warren said he thought taxpayers outside the city limits would be penalized if the school district had to take on "too high a load" of the cost burden.

Runyan said if the board agrees to the proposed contract, the school district would exceed its budgeted amount for the operation of the tax office. The district has allocated $160,000 for tax assessment and collection for 1977-78.

He also pointed out that the cost burden of operating the office would decrease by 8.41 percent for the city, but the burden would lessen by 1.31 percent for the school district if the members approved the contract. He said it "doesn't seem fair" for the school's costs to decrease by a lesser amount than the city's.

Declining examination scores 'extremely complicated' issue

and the lower end of the scale with not too many scoring in the middle. Thus, the scores on both sections of the test averaged higher for Lee High students than for Midland High.

Compared to the average scored by all students in the state and the nation, both local high schools received higher scores for 1976-77. The state average was 424 in verbal and 464 in math, while the national mean was 429 in verbal and 470 in math. However, Midland school district students fell below Ector County Independent School District students in their test scores that same period. Midland students averaged 447 in verbal and 496 in math, while Odessa students scored 450 in verbal and 498 in math.

Saxon did not know how many students in the Ector school district took the SAT or what their grade point averages and other similar information were.

In 1975-76, Midland students received scores of 449 in verbal and 498 in math, while Odessa students averaged 452 in verbal and 496 in math. In 1972-73, Midland students scored 448 in verbal and 488 in math, and Odessa students averaged 450 in verbal and 487 in math.

Saxon said school officials haven't come up with anything concrete about the cause of the scores. He pointed out that overall, the Midland students who took the SAT had a better than B grade point average in English, math, foreign language, physical science and social studies. They hoped to earn at least a B.A. or B.S. degree in college. About 86 percent came from families who earned $15,000 or more a year.

On the other hand, more Midland students taking the ACT in 1976-77 did not aspire to earning a B.A. or B.S. degree and planned to take not more than two years in college. Saxon noted that more girls than boys took the ACT at both high schools. At Lee High, 114 girls and 74 boys took the exam, and at Midland High, 66 girls and 45 boys took it.

In 1976-77, Lee High students achieved a composite score of 18.3, and Midland High students received a composite score of 17.3. The state average composite score was 16.8, and the national score was 18.4. The ACT includes sections in English, math, social studies and natural science.

Saxon said female students at both local high schools scored lower than the male students in the math and natural science sections. He explained this difference may be caused by girls usually not being encouraged to pursue math and science studies.

Assistant Superintendent Brown said he thought the school district ought to "concentrate on looking for answers on policies affecting the upper level students" to help improve test scores. He said people are apt "to be enchanted" with establishing minimum standards, but he doesn't believe those standards have any effect on students who take college entrance exams, the top students of their class.

Brown said, "Maybe the use of fundamental school concepts have application to top students and the program they're in."

He suggested a more rigorous criteria for students who want to be in the honors program. "We need to sort out the average achiever from the honors student," he said.

Honors students, he said, should have to work hard to get into the honors program and should have higher achievement levels in order to stay in the program. According to school officials, the number of honors classes has increased tremendously.

It's not hard now for students to carry several honors courses, Brown said, because the classes aren't difficult enough.

At the end of the report, the school board authorized school officials to continue to study what is causing declining test scores and to find out what to do about it.

Runway mishap leaves jet stuck

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — All 77 passengers and crewmen escaped injury Tuesday night when their DC9 jet skidded off a Ryan Airport runway and got stuck in the mud, officials said.

Workers were trying today to free the Texas International Airlines jet, which airport firemen said was bogged down 150 feet off the end of a 5,800-foot runway.

The cause of the accident, which occurred during bad weather, was not immediately known.

The plane had been landing at the end of a flight from Houston. Since Baton Rouge was the final stop, no passengers had to be diverted to other flights.

The runway was closed, but a staffer at the Ryan Airport control tower said the airport was continuing to use its other runway, which measures 6,900 feet.

Fair skies continue

As the first day of winter creeps closer and closer, Midland should continue to have fair skies through Thursday with Thursday's high temperature in the middle 70s, the weatherman said.

The low temperature tonight is expected to drop to the upper 30s. Southwesterly winds at 5 to 10 mph are predicted for tonight.

Tuesday's high temperature was 65 degrees, and the overnight low temperature was 34 degrees, the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal said.

Some frost was reported this morning in Rankin and Big Lake. Otherwise, skies were clear and temperatures were on the cold side in all area towns.

Clear skies, light winds and cool temperatures prevailed in Texas today as a weak high pressure area settled over the state during the night.

Forecasts called for fair skies and warming temperatures today. Highs were expected to be in the middle 60s in North Texas and the 70s over the remainder of the state. Gusty winds were expected in the Panhandle during the afternoon, but most of the state could expect calm weather.

Early morning temperatures ranged from 21 at Marfa in Southwest Texas to 54 at Galveston on the coast.

Some early morning readings included 29 at Amarillo, 30 at Wichita Falls, 45 at Texarkana, 38 at Dallas-Fort Worth, 47 at Austin, 38 at Lufkin, 42 at Houston, 50 at Corpus Christi and Brownsville, 41 at Del Rio, 35 at San Angelo, 29 at El Paso and 34 at Lubbock.

A large band of thunderstorms moved from Alabama, across Texas and the Gulf Coast Tuesday night in advance of an eastern cold front.

Five tornadoes were reported in southeastern Texas and one touched down in southern Mississippi.

Apartment units were lifted from their foundations and smashed Tuesday by a tornado that struck the northeast area of Houston. One person was killed and many were injured by the unseasonal storm. (AP Laserphoto)

About 600 buildings destroyed by tornado

By ROB WOOD

HOUSTON (AP) — Many told of miraculous escapes from death or injury when a tornado struck Tuesday near a crowded Houston freeway, but one person was killed, at least 40 others injured and an estimated 600 homes and buildings were destroyed.

Civil Defense Director Bland McReynolds said if the twister had moved into the downtown area "it would have gutted most of the modern buildings."

Authorities said if the funnel had crossed the bumper-to-bumper freeway during the morning rush hours, the death toll would have been staggering.

Rescue and repair workers scrapped and dug through the shambles left of the homes and the buildings in search of other victims until halted by darkness.

Police and sheriff's deputies then set up tight security in the devastated area to prevent looting.

Whitey Martin, chief of the Houston Fire Department's ambulance service, said, "There could be more dead. There could be many more injured. Some maybe under debris or lying somewhere in a ditch. We hope not, but that is a possibility."

Many of the 40 injured persons suffered minor injuries.

McReynolds, who flew over the path of the tornado, five miles long and 300 to 500 feet wide, said, "The destructive force I saw snapped trees two feet in diameter like a matchstick and would have destroyed anything in its path."

Police officers said Billy D. Hester, about 50, a superintendent for a construction company, was killed when the tornado lifted his pickup truck from a highway and hurled it about 350 feet into an oak tree.

Describing the death of Hester, Dave Largent, 29, a coworker said, "It started raining and we all went into the office. Somebody outside yelled tornado. We went out and saw it. It was coming right at us."

Largent said most of the 100 workers at the site took cover in a nearby culvert, but Hester jumped into his truck and drove off. He died.

A large metal warehouse was molded into a surrealist sculpture. A mobile home rested atop another residence. Tree limbs, hunks of metal, slabs of wood, strips of tin, and other debris blocked many nearby roads, snarling traffic and causing additional troubles for police.

Thunderstorms continued to rumble across the area during the day, building muddy, slimy pools, and hampering the work of those attempting to replace the snapped electric lines and the humpbacked telephone poles.

Marilyn Gordon, 21, of Crosby, Texas said she was driving to her job early Tuesday when "suddenly this house was coming toward me. It was flying as I stopped in the middle of the road. I managed to duck down."

Her new car was demolished by the house, and, she said, "It was a miracle I wasn't killed."

Nunnie Stevens, 75, was in bed when the twister hit. She said, "I was just dazed as pieces of glass flew across my bed. Wasn't the Good Lord good to spare me."

James Boyer, 55, was en route to his feed store and trading post when, "I began having trouble holding my car on the road. Then I heard some CBers reporting a tornado right where my store is located. I turned around and got out of there. I was lucky."

Mrs. R.L. Neyland, 77, said she heard a loud roar and "I stepped into the kitchen and here came glass and everything else. I stretched out on the floor and then saw the china cabinet coming at me. I would have been crushed if the cabinet had not fallen partly across a chair. Praise God for saving me."

Manuel Hernandez, his wife and four children, sorted through the wreckage of their home, wondering what happened to their pet dog "King."

Hernandez said when the twister hit, "The walls started to cave in on the house. I grabbed my wife's hand and put my feet up and caught the wall and then it flew over us.

"I just hope King got away okay. I just hope he's all right," Hernandez said.

Another funnel cloud was reported Tuesday by the Texas Department of Public Safety west of Jersey Village on the outskirts of Houston. No deaths or injuries were reported.

'Buy now, use later' principal lies behind coffin movement

By JANIS JOHNSON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — When Judith Davis' mother-in-law died a year ago, the funeral director persuaded the family that an airtight metal casket would be most appropriate for her burial.

But Davis was unsettled by that experience. "I decided I didn't want that to happen to me. I have very strong feelings about wanting to return to the earth naturally," she said.

So Davis, now 40 and someone who doesn't expect to die for a long time, bought herself a pine coffin kit and entered a fledgling movement aimed at providing alternatives to the contemporary American way of burial.

"I haven't put it (the coffin) together," said Davis, who lives in Washington. "I want to do it with friends. That's not something you just pick up the phone and ask them."

Several weeks ago, a 14-year-old Bethesoa, Md. girl who died of cystic fibrosis, was cremated in a pine coffin painted by artist Margo Nehouse of Potomac, Md.

The girl's mother wanted something that represented her daughter's "spirit toward living," Newhouse explained. She painted the coffin in turquoise with a rainbow of red, orange, yellow, purple, blue and green extending around the sides and a butterfly on the lid.

The St. Francis Burial Society, a local group promoting simple, inexpensive and biodegradable coffins and cremation ash boxes is behind all this. They produce coffin kits, preassembled rectangular and mummy style coffins and cremation boxes, all of pine. They also sell sturdy cardboard coffins and instructions for making a coffin from scratch.

What's more, the society urges living with coffins rather than just getting buried in them. Blanket or toy chests, coffee tables, desk and tool boxes are among the uses they recommend. Paint, varnish or handcarve them or convert the boxes into a combination planter-bookshelf-wine rack, the society recommends.

Accompanied by a coffin during lectures on death and dying, the Rev. Robert Herzog, a St. Francis founder, has watched people eyeing the unfinished box cautiously. "They're intimidated by it. Then they begin to move their hands across the wood. How many times have you had that experience of knowing what you'll be in when you die?" he asked.

The pine coffin concept harkens back to medieval Europe and colonial America when simple folk hewed tree trunks or hired carpenters to build their burial boxes.

Later metallic caskets were developed. Frequently ornate, lined with silk and molded from bronze or copper, they range in price from under $300 to several thousands of dollars — the lion's share of funeral expenses.

The society originated four years ago after Jenny Moore, wife of former Washington Episcopal Bishop Paul Moore, now of New York, expressed the wish to be buried in a simple pine box.

"She was offended by what most funeral homes offer," Herzog explained.

However, Herzog could not find what he wanted. Instead, he discovered a local English cabinet maker willing to build one.

The St. Francis pine coffins are available with or without metal nails, since Orthodox Judaism (which teaches that nothing should delay the natural decomposition process) forbids metal in coffins. The cremation boxes cost $24; the coffin kit, $115; the contemporary (rectangular) preassembled coffin, $160, and the traditional (angular) one is $185. Cardboard coffins are just $25.

"We're not against the funeral industry," said Herzog. "What we want to do is make available some options."

In Herzog's family, a coffin used as a quilt storage chest serves as an educational tool. "The presence of the coffin gives us a chance to explore our feelings about death, grief and living fully," said Herzog. When his children leave home, they each will receive a quilt handmade from their youthful clothes. "It's kind of a departure gift," he said.

Bell's idea to abolish LEAA elicits officials' criticism

By RONALD J. OSTROW
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—Atty. Gen Griffin B. Bell has propsed abolishing the much-criticized Law Enforcement Assistance Administration and replacing it with a National Institute of Justice.

Some White House officials criticized the proposal, submitted to President Carter Nov. 17 and disclosed by the Justice Department, as little more than a name substitution. However, the changes would give state and local governments much more leeway in spending federal anti-crime funds.

The proposal also would reduce federal support for state planning agencies and paperwork that critics have claimed hampered the nine-year-old program.

The LEAA wss established in 1968 to improve state and ocal police courts and prisons through federal grants.

The most far-reaching of the proposed changes would be accomplished in a reorganization plan that the House or Senate could veto within 60 days and in an amendment to current law authorizing the LEAA.

The reorganization plan is expected to be sent to congress next spring. The legislation must be submitted by May 15, but no action on it is likely before 1979 when LEAA's authorization runs out.

The changes, if adopted, would:

—Eliminate the requirement that states submit for federal approval annual criminal justice plans. The need for project-by-project authorization also would be ended.

—Limit the use of federal funds for administrative costs and require that state and local governments match, dollar for dollar, federal money used for planning the administration.

—Create a bureau of statistics, headed by a presidential appointee, that would pull together the various criminal justice data programs that exist in several agencies. The proposal would leave unsettled the question of whether the new agency should take over the uniform crime reports program of the FBI, the most widely used measurement of seious crime in the nation.

Bell noted that President Carter's reorganization group is now studying issues related to the system of federal justice, but he said his plan would not conflict with any steps later recommended by that group.

Bell said it was necessary to move no "in view of the gravity and urgency of the problems posed by the existing LEAA program."

Bell created a study group last April 8 to review LEAA, which was criticized by Carter during the 1976 presidential campaign.

The group issued a report June 23 that pinpointed weaknesses in the program, currently budgeted at $647.25 million. It recommended a major restructuring.

Some 4,000 copies of the report then were distributed to members of Congress, governors, mayors and others with interest in the criminal justice system. Bell's proposal was issued after comments, including a strong opposition to the study's recommendations, were reviewed.

Dawson wildcat develops crude

Tom Brown, Inc., of Midland No. 1 Alta, rank wildcat in Dawson County, eight miles northwest of the Milagro (Fusselman) field, recovered oil on a drillstem test in the Devonian.

The zone tested was from 12,050 to 12,296 feet and the test tool was open one hour.

Recovery was 4,950 feet of fluid, including 28 barrels of oil and 7 barrels of water and 2,500 feet of heavy gas-cut mud. More hole is being made at 12,317 feet.

Location is 12 miles northwest of Patricia and 660 feet from south and west lines of labor 20, league 273, Loving County School Land survey.

REEVES WELL

Texas Pacific Oil Co., Inc. No. 2 ARCO-State is a new well in the Reaves, N (3,200) field of Reeves County, eight miles south of Orla.

The well finaled for a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 2.791 million cubic feet of gas per day, through perforations from 3,221 to 3,258 feet after 250 gallons of acid and 8,000 gallons of fracture fluid.

Gas-oil ratio during the potential was 72,000-1, with gravity of the oil 34.6 degrees.

MARTIN WELL

Extending the field ¾ mile south, it finaled for a daily flow of 112 barrels of 44.3-gravity oil, no water, through a 5/64-inch choke and perforations from 11,741 to 11,802 feet. Gas-oil ratio was 62-1.

Duncan Drilling Co. No. 1 Coleman Ranch will be drilled as a 4,500-foot project 1½ miles south of the depleted Hodnet (Strawn reef) field of Mitchell County.

MOBIL TEST

Mobil Oil Corp. announced plans to drill its No. 1-JJ University of Texas in the Dun, East (Canyon) area of Crane County.

The project is ½ mile south of the discovery well of the field. Operator plans to dual complete from the Canyon and Cisco.

Contract depth is 9,200 feet.

Increase opposed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Jerry Eubanks, Longview engineer for Sun Oil Co., said Tuesday that operators supporting an increased allowable for the huge East Texas oil field merely want to hike their current income.

This, Eubanks told three Texas Railroad Commission examiners, "is not a duty of the commission, particularly if the change would be detrimental to the maximum ultimate recovery from the field."

Sun opposes an increase from the current allowable of 86 percent.

Other operators contend, however, that the field should be allowed to produce at the current statewide market demand factor of 100 percent.

A Tyler engineer, Homer Key, testified that water levels in the field have risen by 32 feet since 1973 and threaten to water-out wells.

Key, speaking on behalf of the "C.M. Beckett Group" of 33 independent operators, recommended that production allowables be reduced.

The group wants the field in Rusk, Upshur, Gregg and Smith Counties divided into north and south sectors, with a 75 percent allowable for the north and 50 percent allowable for the south.

The East Texas hearing is in its third week.

Governmet starts oil recovery at Elk Hills

By JEANIE ESAJIAN

But the controversy goes on, even as the oil trickles out of the ground under the rolling hills of the San Joaquin Valley 200 miles north of Los Angeles.

ENERGY
OIL & GAS

The 46,000-acre reserve was set aside in 1912 as a strategic reserve for national defense, should the need arise. But it was largely ignored until the energy problems of the last decade focused attention on America's dependency on foreign oil.

About 16 months ago, the estimated 1.3 billion barrels of oil — the nation's largest oil reserve outside Alaska — were opened to domestic production as part of a five-year, $500 million development program.

Navy Cmdr. Roger Martin, administrator of Elk Hills, says he sees "no evidence commercial production here is benefitting the nation at large."

And the 18-year Navy veteran said there is no evidence that Elk Hills production is decreasing foreign imports, which account for 50 percent of the nation's oil. In fact, noted Martin, imports have increased by 30 percent since last year.

But John Walker, head of the Elk Hills staff for Standard Oil of California, says the reserve's crude "very definitely" benefits the nation because "every barrel of domestic crude still lessens our dependence on foreign oil."

At the urging of then-President Gerald R. Ford, Congress approved Elk Hills for domestic production and plans called for production of 160,000 barrels daily after six months, increasing to a maximum of 300,000 barrels daily within six years after full production. A barrel holds 42 gallons.

But production has been limited to 125,000 barrels daily, about two-thirds of 1 percent of the nation's oil use.

Output has been hampered by the limited amount of pipelines to carry the oil. Full production is also hampered by a small, antiquated gas plant, which extracts marketable butane, propane and natural gas from the natural by-products of crude oil.

The limited pipeline capacity means the crude must remain in California and can't be sent to the Midwest where it is most needed, Martin said. California, which receives oil by tanker from the Alaskan North Slope, has no crude shortage.

Critics of production from this oil field say it should be held as a hedge against the time — if ever — when foreign oil is not available.

President Carter last April reversed the position of his predecessor and asked Congress to retract its demand for full production. But that idea was later dropped.

Thus, production continues, with 450 new wells having been drilled, in addition to the almost 1,000 previously in place.

Coast Guard releases explosion information

The Los Angeles Times

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Coast Guard investigators blame the Sansinena oil tanker explosion in Los Angeles Harbor on deficient ship maintenance, poor operating procedures by the crew and faulty design of the ship in their report released Tuesday.

Inadequate safety inspections by the Liberian government, ship operators and the crew also were cited by the Coast Guard Board of Inquiry that held three months of hearings into the blast that destroyed the Liberian tanker last year. The explosion killed nine men and caused $21.6 million damage.

The panel's findings were released by Rear Adm. Robert I. Price, commander of the 11th Coast Guard district in Long Beach, at a press conference where he called the explosion "a freak accident caused by accumulation of deficiencies."

The 44-page report calls for federal requirements that all tankers calling in U.S. ports be equipped with system to neutralize flammable gas and seeks establishment of tough international standards for crew qualifications and training.

The panel's conclusions and recommendations followed an account of what investigators believe happened the night of Dec. 17, 1976. The ship was taking on fuel and ballast at the Union Oil terminal in San Pedro after discharging a cargo of Indonesian crude oil.

According to the account, a vapor cloud formed over the ship as gases in the empty cargo tanks were displaced by ballast water. It was an uncommonly still night, so winds did not disperse the vapors.

Instead, a slight breeze from the stern trapped the gas cloud against the midship's deck house — the ship's four-story control center — where a spark from a water pump motor is believed to have ignited the cloud.

Once ignited, the cloud became a fireball and the flame entered corroded cargo vent pipes, the report said, and traveled through the vent system to cargo tank No. 10 setting off the explosion.

Price said it was a case of "everything going wrong together." The Board of Inquiry singled out for specific criticism elements of ship operation and maintenance, crew qualifications and ship design.

"It is evident that this casualty resulted from poor operating procedures and design features on the Sansinena," the report said.

The gas came on a drillstem test from 11,300 to 11,334 feet, with tool open 2 hours and 28 minutes. Gas surfaced in one minute on a ½-inch choke and flowed at the rate of 14 million cubic feet per day. After one hour, the flow stablized at 12 million cubic feet per day.

Church 'shunning' leads to sale of potato farm

By PAUL CARPENTER

CARLISLE, Pa. (AP) — Today is Robert Bear's 19th wedding anniversary, to be observed in a tragic ritual culminating five years of religious strife and family woe.

Bear, 48, lost his wife and children when he was excommunicated and shunned by his Reformed Mennonite Church because he criticized church officials. Shunning meant no one in the church, including his family, could speak to or have anything to do with him.

Now he is losing his once prosperous and beloved 400- acre potato farm. A sheriff's sale to auction the farm was ordered for today because Bear has not paid taxes or interest on the mortgage.

"I'm going to lose a lot of money, but ... what does money mean if you don't have someone to spend it on? ... Without children, a farm has no purpose," he said recently.

Bear's wife, Gale, and their six children, now mostly teenagers, moved out in 1972 after the ultra-conservative 600-member church imposed its "doctrine of avoidance," commonly called shunning.

His parents died shortly after the sanction was taken.

"To the moment they died they looked at me with disgust. I was already burning in hell," he said.

The excommunication came after Bear criticized his wife's brother, Bishop Glenn Gross. Bear said Gross violated church rules by giving communion to Gross' parents after one had accused the other of being unfaithful.

Bear's dispute with the church goes back many years, however. He and his wife were excommunicated in 1964 but readmitted in 1965. He was excommunicated again in 1972.

Bear went to court to try to force the church to relax some of the provisions. He claimed the shunning hurt his thriving potato business when employees quit and Mennonite business associates refused to handle his potatoes.

A Cumberland County judge said the flap was Bear's fault and refused to halt the church sanctions. Bear appealed, but has changed his mind several times about whether to continue the legal fight.

Last year Bear wrote a book about his experiences, titled "Delivered Unto Satan." He once peddled the book by parking his truck, covered with signs attacking Gross, in the parking lot of a farm market run by Gross.

Gross and Gale Bear have refused to talk to reporters.

In July, Bear was found guilty of defiant trespass when he broke into a home being used by his wife and children and took some of their clothes. He was fined $50.

Three-year-old Shera Sneed was found alive in the wreckage of this plane, that crashed in the rugged hill country north of Kerrville. Killed in the crash were her parents and 5-year-old brother. Young Shera was found in the wreckage Tuesday, 35 hours after the light plane crashed. (AP Laserphoto)

Three-year-old found in wreckage

By RICK SCOTT

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — A dying father's last act of love, moments after his airplane crashed into a brushy ridgetop in the rugged Texas hill country, may have saved his 3-year-old daughter's life, officials say.

Shera Sneed, trapped for 35 hours in the wreckage of the small plane, was rescued Tuesday morning by searchers who said they found her "mumbling and groaning."

Her father, Gerald Wayne Sneed, a 33-year-old San Antonio lawyer who was piloting the single-engine airplane, was killed along with his wife, Susan Parr Sneed, and their 5-year-old son, Shannon.

Rescuers unstrapped Shera from the back seat of the plane, which had crashed Sunday night on an 1,800-foot hill about three miles from the Kerrville Municipal Airport, about 65 miles northwest of San Antonio.

A hospital spokesman said Shera was in stable condition in intensive care Tuesday evening, suffering from a fractured leg and arm.

"Shera was just mumbling and groaning when we got there," said Dan Waters, president of the First Texas Flying Service in Kerrville and a family friend. "It was nothing you could understand. She had a few abrasions but other than that she looked pretty good."

Maj. Anne Farrell, Civil Air Patrol search project coordinator, said the back seat of the airplane apparently loosened and slid foward on impact, jamming partially under the front seat.

It appeared, she said, that Sneed tried to drape himself over his daughter to protect her from the 28-degree nighttime, a gesture "which undoubtedly helped her survive the elements."

Maj. Farrell said the plane did not burn and that "the wreckage wasn't so bad. But the plane hit hard."

The wreckage was spotted Tuesday morning by a plane flown by Jim Thompson, co-owner with Sneed of the wrecked aircraft. A helicopter airlifted the little girl off the hilltop.

Maj. Farrell told departing searchers Tuesday afternoon that, "Looking at that wreckage, it looks like the boy and the father might have lived, certainly for a few hours.

"But the weather was so bad, we just couldn't find them and get to them," she added.

The plane crashed Sunday night during a persistent drizzle. Air traffic controllers in San Antonio had received a radio signal from the plane reporting it was low on fuel and was attempting to reach the Kerrville airport.

The family almost made it.

Maj. Farrell, Thompson and others at the crash site said the aircraft needed only about another 20 feet of altitude to clear the ridge as it approached the airstrip.

Spencer Treharne, also of the First Texas Flying Service, said Sneed was "an excellent pilot" who knew the Kerrville airport.

First Texas Flying Service put five airplanes on the search and worked independently of the Civil Air Patrol, Treharne said.

A thick, low overcast kept searchers out of the air until Tuesday morning when the skies cleared.

Thompson and Waters "reenacted" the route that Sneed was following and found the Sneed plane "just about where we thought it would be," Thompson said. "It looked like they just ran out of fuel before getting over the ridge. It would have been downhill from there."

The crash site was about three miles northeast of the airport.

The plane was on a flight from Winters, Texas where Sneed's parents live. The family lived in Boerne, a rural community about 25 miles northwest of San Antonio.

Justice of the Peace Spencer Brown said Sneed's body was in the pilot's seat. Mrs. Sneed was in the seat next to him. The son and daughter were in the back seats of the four-place aircraft.

Officials of the Federal Aviation Administration and the National Transportation Safety Board were probing the plane's wreckage Tuesday evening for further clues to the mishap.

Texas farmers kick off national parity strike

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Texas farmers kicked off a national strike Wednesday with an array of plans for demonstrations and murky rumors of blockades against food storage warehouses.

There was no official confirmation of such blockades.

Store closings, rallies, picnics and other gatherings were scheduled in several area towns and cities to show support for the American Agriculture group-called strike.

The farmers are dissatisfied with parity, which is the price they receive for their products compared with the cost of producing them.

So far, the farmers' strike demonstrations have fizzled in Texas, with only several hundred showing up for a rally earlier this month in Irving's Texas Stadium that was expected to draw thousands.

But the national strike drew official as well as private support Tuesday.

The mayors of Amarillo and Hereford issued proclamations supporting the strike, and Herford Mayor Bartley Dowell urged city and county businesses to shut their doors Wednesday as a signal of sympathy with the farmers.

"I've been amazed at the number of stores that will be closed here," said Bob Dulaney of Dimmitt. "This is not a radical move, this is a desperation move."

Orin Watson of Tulia, a delegate to this week's American Agriculture meeting in Denver, would not disclose the group's entire plan, but hinted that picket lines and other actions "could pop up at any time."

"About 40 businesses have committed to close their doors Wednesday," said Conrad Renner of Friona. "Everybody is voluntarily supporting this thing."

Henry Harnly of American Agriculture in Pampa said grain elevators in several area towns would be closed.

In nearby Guymon, Okla., farmers planned to park pickup trucks along inbound U.S. Highway 54, with each pickup bearing a strike sign. Ernest Campbell of Guymon said farmers would also descend on the local unemployment office to seek "food stamps or whatever." Campbell said, "We're not going to try to hurt anybody."

Bob Graves of Paducah said stores in that town would be shut down.

Lubbock banker tells candidacy

He said he has resigned his post as senior vice president of Lubbock's First National Bank, effective Dec. 31, to devote full time to his campaign.

Burglaries net $700 in tools

Two burglaries within a block of each other netted about $700 in tools.

Police were told Tuesday afternoon that sometime Monday or Tuesday morning, tools worth $325 were taken from a car belonging to Jerry Doyle. The car was parked in the 3900 block of Monty Drive.

Also taken sometime Monday night or Tuesday morning were two tool chests with tools from a vehicle parked in the 3800 block of Monty Drive. The chests and tools belonged to Scooters Plumbing and were valued at about $370, police were told.

FIREARMS TAKEN

Robert Britton told police Tuesday that sometime between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. Tuesday someone entered his residence in the 1200 block of East Cottonwood Avenue and removed a .38-caliber pistol and a 20 gauge shotgun.

Approximate value of the firearms is $180, according to Britton.

PARTS TAKEN

Automobile parts valued at about $800 were taken between 7 p.m. Monday and 10 a.m. Tuesday from a vehicle parked in the 3100 block of West Wall Avenue, police said.

According to William P. Reynolds, taken were a set of car wheels, tires, wheel ring covers, rearview mirrors and a hood scoop.

Oakland dynasty finally comes to end

The Los Angeles Times

OAKLAND — When he wasn't trying to brighten his own spirits by talking cheerfully about "what tomorrow might bring," Joseph W. (Young Joe) Knowland was brooding over what yesterday had brought.

"You bust your — for what?" he demanded recently in his apartment overlooking lake Merritt. "Was it all worth it?"

For a moment he let the question hang in the air, half-listening to the sound of traffic along the avenue. Then he sighed and slumped in a chair by the window.

"Yes," he said wearily. "I guess it was."

It had been only four months since the Knowland family newspaper, the once powerful Oakland Tribune, had been sold into "foreign" hands.

Young Joe, son of the late Sen. William F. Knowland, had been its publisher three years and was on the brink of "putting everything together" when a cousin engineered the Tribune's sale and the new owners fired Joe.

The Knowland family was split, their newspaper — a scepter of power as well as symbol of unity — was gone, and Joe Knowland was trying to figure out what to do next.

"Let's face it," he said, "I'm 47 years old and out of a job." He shook his head.

A few miles away, cousin Joseph R. (Jay) Knowland III, more than a million dollars richer than he was four months ago, shot liar's dice at a bar called the King's X.

Jay had been architect of the sale that ended the family's 62-year ownership of the Tribune, the self-proclaimed black sheep who toppled Joe into the ranks of the unemployed.

"I wish it could have been different," he would say of his unsettling triumph, "but that wasn't possible. There just wasn't a Knowland let capable of running the paper."

Thus passed the glory of dynasty in Oakland.

---

The Knowlands have been a part of the city since Joseph R. Knowland — J.R.K. — elbowed his way into ownership of the Tribune just after the turn of the century.

Even from the beginning, politics in one form or another were inexorably mixed with journalism at 13th and Franklin.

J.R.K. served first in the state Assembly and then in the House of Representatives, and his son William F. — "the Knowland who would make it" — made it all the way up to the U.S. Senate.

Both lost important races on what both considered paths to the presidency (J.R.K. failed in his bid for the Senate and W.F.K. in his bid for the governorship of California), but they remained active in backroom politics even when they were out of the front-room floodlights.

When the senior Knowland died in 1966, Sen. Bill took over the Tribune. When, heavily in debt and in emotional disarray, Bill committed suicide in 1974 on a lonely Pacific beach Young Joe, who had worked at the paper all his adult life, became publisher.

"They begged me to take over," Joe said now, barely masking the irony with which he views the chain of events that ended in fratricidal warfare.

"The family called to me and said, 'Joe, we need help!' Eleanor (Eleanor Lion, his aunt), Jay, all of them. They said, 'Get us out of the mess we're in!'" That mess, according to Joe, was a newspaper on the brink of disaster: Circulation had plummeted from a high of 225,000 to 155,000, a strike was being threatened, staff morale was at rock bottom and the product was turgid.

"I said give me five years and full authority," Joe remembered.

What he got was three years. But during that period, he said, he turned circulation around (up to 179,000 at the time of the sale), rebuilt the company's cash flow, brightened the paper, modernized its production and gathered awards for both himself and the Tribune.

There was no thought of sale then.

"In fact, when dad died I gathered the family together, Jay included, and we voted on a resolution not to talk sale with anyone unless we had discussed it first."

He lit a cigarette, almost chain-smoking, and gestured grandly. "I said, Let's communicate! Let's share! No one had ever communicated in the family before. They were elated!"

And then he discovered that cousin Jay — second largest stockholder in the family company — was busily gathering a majority of shareholders and looking for a buyer.

"I was stunned!" Young Joe said, his expression reflecting what he had felt back then.

"I accomplished all that for the paper and then, whoompf!" — one arm swept the air — "this happens! Just when everything was going in a positive direction!"

He was puzzled at first ("Why? Didn't they know what was going ong?"), then angry and then despondent.

"I thought to myself, 'What a shame, what a waste. It didn't have to be.'" The memory was painful. "We were all losers..."

Young Joe never asked Jay his reasons for organizing the sale of the Tribune, although he hinted darkly that the motive was rooted in family vengeance, which Joe would not explain and which Jay would dismiss with a laugh.

When Combined Communications Corp. of Phoenix finally bought the paper for $18 million it was the end of the line for the man who had grown up with the Tribune and thought he would grow old with it.

The new management indicated to Joe at first that they might want him to stay on, but when the deal was closed, Joe said, "they told me I was the wrong person in the wrong place at the wrong time."

He was asked how long it would take im to clear his office. "I said 'Is tomorrow morning soon eough?'" A tight smile. "They replied that it was."

He opened a can of beer and stood drinking it on a balcony off the living room, looking toward the downtown section. He could barely see the green-tipped Tribune Tower poking out from between two taller buildings.

Jay Knowland is 32 and wears his hair almost shoulder length. His father was Sen. Bill's brother Russ who died of a heart attack in 1961 after half a lifetime of heavy drinking. Russ' wife died a few months later.

Jay has always considered himself an outsider in the family — even though he lived with Uncle Bill for awhile after his own parents died — and admits that feeling might have had something to do with his desire to see the Tribune sold.

He felt no part of any "family tradition," Jay said in his stately two-story house on a tree-lined street in nearby Piedmont, five minutes from his favorite hangout, the King's X.

"I looked upon the paper only as a business and as a business it was not being run properly."

While he owned 13.5 percent of Tribune Publishing Co. and 10 percent of Tribune Building Co., Jay said, he was realizing no dividends from either of them.

He worked as a roofer for awhile to support his wife and three children, once owned his own bar and spent some time in "the golf business."

What galled him, Jay said, was that he owned the second largest share of stock in the paper and was receiving no income from it, while Joe owned a minuscule 0.02 percent of the publishing company and 0.9 percent of the building company and was earning $95,000 a year as publisher.

"It became apparent," he said coldly, "that in order for me to realize any money from the paper, it was going to have to be sold."

But that would come later. First, Jay applied for a job at the Tribune. Instead of appointing him to the executive capacity Jay felt his stock ownership warranted, Joe made him a "trainee" to learn the business.

Joe thought it was all working out beautifully while Jay hated both the learning process and the trainee's salary he was receiving.

"Joe was unable to see," an observer would write later, "that he was looking down the barrel of a gun whose itchy trigger finger Jay had become."

"I'm not good at going to my boss," Jay said dryly, "and saying, 'Look, I'm not getting enough salary and I want more.' Especially in this case, why should I have to beg?"

Joe was doing the best joe he could, he added, "but when you talk about business, he just wasn't business-oriented."

Why didn't Jay simply pull the majority stockholders together and fire Joe, rather than sell the paper?

Because, Jay said, he wanted money from the sale at that point and also because "there just wasn't anyone left in the family capable of running the paper the way it should be run."

He leaned over a steaming cup of coffee in the living room of his home and added almost reluctantly, "The tradition (of newspapering) died the day Bill shot imself..."

His pursuit of the sale was not done in secret as his cousin has charged, Jay said. He was simply exploring the possibility of a sale and was in the preliminary stages of that exploration when Joe found out.

He had fully intended to go to the family and discuss selling the paper before anything was actually done about it, he insisted.

Why hadn't he gone to Joe personally to discuss his displeasure both with the way the Tribune was being run and his unhappiness with a trainee's role?

Jay shrugged. "We never communicated in our family," he said quietly. "My father came to every football game I ever played at Piedmont High, but I never knew it until after his death. He just never told me..."

It bothered him to see the newspaper sold, Jay said. Even though he felt no part of the tradition, "I happen to appreciate what my family had. Whether they were right or wrong, they were very good people."

He tried to raise the money to buy the Tribune himself. Jay said, but failed. What remained for im to do, then, was to go to his two sisters and to an aunt and to two cousins and put together a majority that would, and did, force the sale.

That he ended up with something more than $1 million did not cause him to turn cartwheels, Jay said. But neither did it cause him to weep over Joe's sudden unemployment.

"I guess I learned growing up," the black sheept Knowland said evenly, "that everybody is fair game."

Joe Knowland was lighting another cigarette when he looked over the top of it and said Jay was more to be pitied than censured.

"Naivete was at play," he said of his cousin, "and so was a human weakness. Call it selfishness if you want."

It is difficult for him to deal with the subject, and he finally said he wanted no part of a story that involved "me versus Jay."

As for the fall of a dynasty, Joe shrugged. He never thought of the Knowlands in those terms, he said, and therefore he suffered no trauma at the end of their power trip.

What did bother him, however, was that "the family is broken and the wounds are deep." This was said very softly.

"Those wounds will heal, I suppose, and the hurt will go away, but the scars will always be there..."

He is living off his Tribune severance pay, the sale of a house in Piedmont and the income brought in by his wife Dolores' health studio.

Because he held almost no stock in the Tribune, he realized nothing from its sale. Its stock that would have been his inheritance paid off his father's debts.

"I have no financial problems," Young Joe said, "but I've got to go out and get a job. I've got to bring in money."

Maybe it will come from newspapering again, he said, or the entertainment business or politics. He wasn't sure.

"I try to look on the bright side," he said, a dark mood lifting. "I can be something else now, or someone else. I'm liberated."

He thought about that for a moment, then: "You know those little things you carry on your belt that beep when you have a telephone call?"

Manpower probe continues

Most of the attention focused on a $3,000 loan former director E.A. Gonzalez made to Carlos Rodriguez, owner of the Texas Language Academy, which later received a federal contract.

Stock market declines

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined slightly today, weighed down by renewed weakness in the dollar.

The noon Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was off 2.77 at 812.98.

Losers held a 5-3 lead over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The dollar fell sharply today against leading European currencies and the Japanese yen.

Analysts say the dollar's problems lately have unsettled the stock market because the situation tends to discourage foreign investment in U.S. stocks.

Philip Morris was the most active NYSE issue, down ⅜ at 59⅝. A 100,000-share block traded at that price in the overthe-counter market.

The Big Board's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .18 to 51.55. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off .10 at 124.00.

Volume on the NYSE came to 8.23 million shares by noontime against 8.07 million at the same point on Monday.

Few individual issues showed more than fractional price changes.

Few grasp concept of finances

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Repeated surveys show that relatively few Americans understand corporate finance and the private enterprise system. Many believe that what a company takes in is used to line the pockets of a privileged few.

Asked what percentage of a dollar of sales is kept as profit by most companies, many individuals told John Q. Jennings, a labor-management consultant, that the figure was more than 30 per cent.

The truth is that manufacturing companies in the first half of this year retained as profit about 5½ cents of each dollar of sales. In 1967 the return was a nickel. In 1957 it was less than that.

Measured another way, as a percentage of shareholder money invested, these companies earned after-tax profits of 14 per cent, 11.7 per cent and 10.9 per cent respectively for the same periods.

Neither do many people know how the corporate pie is cut. This is the circular graph divided into wedges indicating the distribution of corporate revenues.

In 1976, the world's largest manufacturing corporation, General Motors, used 51 per cent of its gross revenue to pay suppliers. Employees received 32.4 per cent, taxes 8.5. Depreciation accounted for 2 per cent, and 2.7 per cent was used in the business.

That accounted for 96.6 per cent. The rest went to shareholders, the people who put up the money to keep the operation solvent.

Businessmen often complain that popular arithmetic, if it ever arrives at this stage in analysing the corporate dollar, seldom goes beyond. To divide that 3.4 per cent by the 1,223,406 shareholders, for example.

In 1976, GM profits of $2.9 billion averaged out to $2,372 when divided by the number of shareholders. If the total were divided by the number of shareholders it would come out to $10.08 a share.

Neither, say business executives, do many people stop to think of who those shareholders are: pension funds, employees, other small investors and the like, as well as speculators and the rich who are said to line their pockets.

But all this arithmetic still doesn't tell a complete story. In spite of what appear to be solid profits, some businessmen are complaining about the erosion of profits.

Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, most recently sounded the warning. The figures do not tell of inflation's devastation, said Burns. When companies seek to replace inventories and build new plants they will be in trouble, he said.

In a speech, Burns said that replacement of plants and inventories last year alone came to $50 billion more than corporations were able to claim for tax purposes.

Harold Williams, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, also believes the big profits reported in 1977 were deceptive. In reality, he said, they were "dangerously low."

Jack Carlson, vice president and economist of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, agreeing with Burns and Williams, observes that corporations have been unable to afford replacements for their worn physical assets.

Ag fund board begins session

Agence France-Presse

ROME — The board of the newly established International Fund for Agricultural Development Tuesday began its first session here to finalize criteria for handing out over $1,000 million to help Third World countries boost their food output.

The board, chaired by Abdelmuhsin Al Sudeary of Saudi Arabia, consists of representatives of industrialized and oil producing countries, which put up most of the funds, and developing nations.

The fund was set up as the 13th specialized agency of the United Nations following a decision by the World Food Conference held in Rome in November 1974.

It will grant assistance to agricultural development projects mainly in the form of loans. But the fund will also be able to distribute up to 12.5 percent of its resources in the form of grants.

The 91 member countries have so far agreed that the fund should be able to distribute "special loans" on easy terms to the most severely affected countries.

These loans will be interest-free and repayable over 50 years. Other countries may be granted loans on intermediate or commercial terms.

Following long negotiations between the various groups of donor countries and the nonoil-developing nations, the initial contributions to the fund have overshot the target of $1,000 million set by the 1974 Rome conference. The Western industrial nations have pledged a total of $567.3 million while the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries have put up $435.5 million, including $400 million via the OPEC special fund.

Nonoil-developing countries have contributed another $19.3 million, for an overall total of $1.02 million.
