Panel again backs out on plans for stockade

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County commissioners today for the third time reneged on a stockade site, bowed to community appeal for "fairness and justice" and promised the 40 protesters in today's meeting that the Commissioners' Court would ask the community's support for a multi-million bond issue for a jail tower.

"A fool never changes his mind," Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis said moments before he tendered a motion to rescind last week's 4-0 decision to build the stockade on a 17.7-acre site at Fairgrounds Road and the southside of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. Tracks, "and a wise person does."

"If that applies to you or the gate post," Davis told the predominantly black audience in the gallery, "let the chips fall where they may."

The rejected site is near the black community and would border on a proposed 118.9-acre industrial-commercial development.

Earlier, the court had set aside votes to build the stockade on a 7.5-acre county-owned site near a more southward commercial area in far southeast Midland and another proposal to build the stockade on a remote site on city-of-Odessa soil in far west Midland County. Businessmen in the southeast Midland site objected to the stockade's site there, and commissioners opted against the Odessa site due to the mileage (54-mile round trip) and expense of installing water and sewer lines.

After considering arguments by those against the stockade's railroad site, Commissisoner Davis offered a motion to rescind the court's action of last Wednesday, Commissioner Durward Wright seconded the motion, and County Judge Bill Ahders cast the required third vote to set aside the previous order.

Commissioner Win Brown, who, like the others, aside from Commissioner Charlie Welch, had supported the stockade's railroad site, was out of town. Welch, who is ill, submitted a prepared statement which suggested alternatives if a stockade is needed.

Among those protesting the railroad site was Margrett Brown, who suggested that the previous decision to locate the stockade near the black community showed a lack of respect for black people.

"You gave us your railroad track, your stinking sewer plant, and now you want to give us your asinine prison," she lashed out.

Also protesting the railroad site and asking for the court to rescind its previous action was Freddie Nelms.

"This location would be very undesirable for the people of that (southeast Midland) area," Nelms said. It's too close to the residents, too close to Booker T. Washington Elementary School, and also a few blocks from four of our churches. We fear for the safety of our children...(and) further question it as being a health hazard.

"We also look forward to developers coming in, and building something that would help upgrade the value of our property, but

Britain joins other nations in defiance of pipeline ban

LONDON (AP) — Britain has joined America's three other major European allies in official defiance of President Reagan's embargo of U.S. technology for the Soviet gas pipeline and has ordered four British firms to honor $236 million in contracts.

Trade Secretary Lord Cockfield told the House of Lords Monday that the ban "is an unacceptable extension of American territorial jurisdiction in a way which is repugnant in international law."

Cockfield said he was invoking the Protection of Trading Interests Act to prohibit compliance with foreign regulations that would restrain British industry. The French and Italian governments have also ordered firms in their countries to honor pipeline contracts, while the West German government said it would support any company that did so.

These nations contend Reagan cannot interfere with contracts signed before July 1, when he banned use of U.S.-licensed technology to build equipment for the pipeline. The embargo was intended to force an easing of the martial law restrictions in Poland, which the United States blames on the Soviet Union.

"We regret that the British have taken this action," said Reagan's deputy press secretary, Larry Speakes. "We regret any action that has been taken that would weaken pressure on the Polish authorities."

But as he spoke, Reagan invoked the contract principle in telling Iowa farmers that current U.S. grain agreements with the Soviet Union would be extended for one year without any limit on the size of shipments.

The president told the convention of the National Corn Growers Association in Des Moines that the extension "would have the sanctity of a contract, ensuring U.S. farmers access to the Soviet market." And he told farmers in State Center, Iowa, that the United States must "restore that faith in us that if we've made a deal or a contract, it'll be a contract and we'll keep it."

Reagan last Friday announced that his government would not negotiate the new long-term grain agreement with the Soviet Union that U.S. grain farmers are demanding. But in an attempt to hold the farm vote, he said the current agreement would be extended for a year.

Many Europeans cite Reagan's refusal to ban U.S. grain sales to the Soviet Union — totaling $1.8 billion or more this year — as justification for opposition to his bans aimed at the Siberian pipeline, which is scheduled to begin operating in 1984.

Midland, nation still recovering from air controllers' strike

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

It was a year ago today that a strike by the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization caused chaos at many of the nation's airports.

In Midland, some flights were canceled and others were delayed on Aug. 3, 1981, in the wake of an unprecedented nationwide walkout by the PATCO members.

Midland Regional Airport's 18 controllers joined some 12,000 PATCO members nationwide and walked off their jobs.

The strike was not really a surprise. In the last 11 years, relations between the national's air traffic controllers and the Federal Aviation Administration had been tense. In 1970, approximately 3,600 controllers walked off their jobs for two and a half weeks to protest working conditions. In 1972, PATCO was recognized and by 1981 the 14,500 members included all but 1,000 of the nation's working controllers.

In 1980 PATCO officials said when its contract expired in March 1981 it would seek numerous new contract provisions which included the 1981 negotiations with the FAA — a package of 99 separate items that would have cost the government an additional $600 million per year. FAA came back with an offer of a $40 million per year increase.

After 75 percent of the union voted to strike on June 22, 1981 — 80 percent is needed for approval — Robert E. Poli, PATCO president at the time of the strike, signed a contract and submitted it to PATCO members urging its disapproval. Ninety-five percent of the union members rejected the contract. A strike was imminent.

Drew Lewis, department of transportation secretary, declined to submit another offer to PATCO because he said the two sides were too far apart, but he did request that PATCO extend the negotiations by seven days.

PATCO rejected and on Aug. 3, 1981, 12,700 of the 16,000 working controllers walked off their jobs.

The Reagan administration immediately took a stong stand with the president announcing on that first day of the walkout that controllers would be allowed a 48-hour grace period — but no more — to report to work or be fired.

Within five days of the strike, two of Midland's 18 controllers — Michael Fiddes and Michael Janssen — returned to the control tower.

But, Midland's 16 remaining striking contollers stood firm. On Aug. 5, the striking controllers were fired.

Bill Hill, FAA control tower chief at the Midland Regional Airport, mailed the controllers' official dismissal notices Aug. 13 which allowed the striking controllers seven days to appeal orally and in writing to their supervisor (Hill).

All but one of the Midland's remaining striking controllers were fired. Bob O'Hara, 53, retired Aug. 14. After he had received his notice of dismissal, O'Hara opted to retire.

Many of the local controllers had stated earlier they would go through the appeals process. However, a year later most of them could not be reached for comment.

Nationally, statistics compiled show that 10,898 have filed for an appeal. Out of those, 346 have had hearings. Decisions for most are pending. However 22 cases which have been completed resulted in sustaining the original dismissal decision and three cases have

Return to control tower 'rough,' but worth it

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

On Aug. 3, 1981, Mike Fiddes and 17 other air traffic controllers walked off their jobs at Midland Regional Airport. Today, one year later, Fiddes has left the tower again.

Fiddes is one of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers who opted to return to his position after more than 12,000 controllers voted to shut down the nation's air traffic system in a strike for better pay and better working conditions.

It was a 100 percent walkout at the Midland facility. Two controllers, including Fiddes, returned; one controller retired and 15 others were fired.

President Reagan deemed the action an illegal strike and gave an ultimatum to the PATCO members to return to work within 48 hours or be fired.

Because Fiddes' scheduled days off were on Monday (the day of the walkout) and Tuesday, he was allowed to return to the tower on Friday (Aug. 5, 1981).

"I knew that Monday morning when Reagan came on the TV what I was going to do," Fiddes recalled. "It was one of the most difficult decisions I've ever made, but I was thinking of my career. I like being a controller."

Fiddes said it was a difficult move because he was a member of the executive board of the local PATCO union.

"The first two weeks were very rough on me," Fiddes remembered. "If I had stayed on strike my career was in jeopardy; at the same time if PATCO had won it would have meant the the same thing (career in jeopardy). I felt I was between a rock and a hard place."

He recalled that in the beginning there was harassment from the controllers who had been his friends.

"We were very close because of our type of work," he said. "We got to know each other at work, more than you would in any other profession. You have to know what the other guy is thinking. You're working airplanes and you have to make sure they don't run into each other."

Prior to the strike, Fiddes said the tension in the Midland tower was unbearable, waiting hours upon hours for a contract.

"On July 22 (1981), President (Robert) Poli said the contract was fair and equitable — which it wasn't," he said. "We didn't have the numbers to go out on strike the first time. We needed 80 percent. We came up short."

But on that Monday morning the 80 percent of votes needed were there and when Fiddes walked out with his co-workers he felt justified about the move.

He now says the "actual cause of the strike was justified," adding that "there were legitimate problems and the Federal Aviation Administration is now trying to examine themselves to make things better."

Fiddes said the media nationwide made the union "look bad by overplaying the 32-hour work week with the

A police officer and an emergency medical technician place 20-year-old Michael Barry Manning into an ambulance at the Polo Park apartment complex construction site about 4:45 p.m. Monday. He was pronounced dead at Midland Memorial Hospital at 5:18 p.m. Manning may have been electrocuted by a hand saw he had been using. An autopsy has been ordered.

Autopsy ordered in worker's death

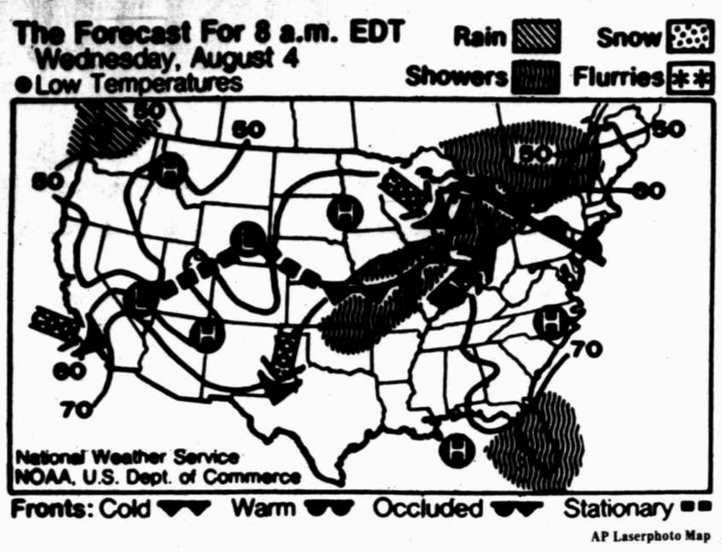
Justice of the Peace Robert Pine has ordered an autopsy following the death of a 20-year-old California man on a westside construction site late Monday afternoon.

Michael Barry Manning, believed to be from Hot Springs, Calif., was pronounced dead at Midland Memorial Hospital at 5:18 p.m., about 45 minutes after being found sitting on the ground holding an electric hand saw at the Polo Park apartment complex under construction at Loop 250 and North A Street.

A fellow worker told police he turned around after hearing a "yelp" and saw Manning sitting on the ground with the saw in his lap. When the worker touched Manning on the shoulder, he fell over.

Although the blade guard on the saw had been tied back, authorities aren't sure if Manning was electrocuted or not. He was wearing rubber-soled boots and was not standing in water. In ordering the autopsy, Judge Pine noted that there were no apparent burn marks on the body, which was taken to the Ellis Funeral Home. Arrangements are pending.

WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts showers for Wednesday from the southern Plains to the Great Lakes and for Florida. Rain is forecast for northwest Washington. Most areas will be sunny. Warm weather is forecast from the Gulf states to the Midwest. Other areas will be cooler.

Thunderstorms possible for Midland

Thunderstorms and hot temperatures, the two main ingredients in Midland's weather of late, continue in the forecast.

Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. Tonight's temperatures should slide into the low 70s with winds from the southeast at 5 to 10 mph.

Wednesday should be partly cloudy and very warm with a high in the upper 90s. Southerly winds at 10 to 15 mph should help stir the hot air.

Monday's high of 94 was an even dozen less than the record 106 set in 1944. The overnight low of 71 was much warmer than the record 60 set in 1971.

A trace of precipitation overnight was not enough to push monthly and yearly rainfall amounts past .35 and 9.87 inches.

Sunset tonight will be at 8:44, sunrise tommorrow comes at 7:06.

$10,000 increase in pay for everybody."

"You shoot for the maximum and negotiate," he said, referring to the 99 items PATCO was seeking. "We could have negotiated but Reagan meant business and he had the public's support."

Were there any winners in the strike and what is the situation actually like today?

"It looked as though Reagan and the FAA won and the strikers lost, but there were no winners — the system has been crippled," Fiddes said. "We're (system) running with large delays — Midland is better, but there's an entire new workforce now...young and inexperienced.

"There were an awful lot of intelligent, experienced people lost. This job needs experience," he said.

"Before the strike, a controller worked on a position for two hours and then rotated or got a break," Fiddes said. "Two hours of heavy traffic can wear and tear you down. Now it is not uncommon to work up to six or seven hours on one position — it's been rough.

"I still believe the actual cause of the strike was justified," he said. "Controllers have a high burnout rate. When you're 40 years old, it's not easy to get into a new career."

Since the strike, Fiddes has been in touch with some of the controllers he used to work with.

"I have been in contact with a few and those who I have (talked to) wished they would have stayed and wished they would have come back when they had the opportunity," he said, adding that "if they win, I'll be glad to work with those controllers who have filed for appeals."

Fiddes said the system is "running at 83 percent pre-strike level and in September the FAA projects that figure to be up to 90 percent with a 100 percent capacity by 1984."

"At one time 17,000 controllers handled the peak and valley times. Now we don't have the workforce. Now there is a flow control system which everybody must follow to make a more even flow of air traffic," he said.

"The flow only makes sense. There's a more even flow of traffic now."

And would the five-year veteran make the same decision if he had it to do all over again?

"I had an obligation, but it didn't take me long to realize I personally like what I'm doing. It takes a certain person to be a controller," he said.

Overheated wheel bearings were blamed for a Monday afternoon fire that did extensive damage to this 1974 Honda owned by Kerri Cole of 3707 Tanner. The blaze broke out in the alley behind 109 N. Main St. and near the Midland Chamber of Commerce shortly before 3 p.m. Monday. No injuries were reported.

Effects of 1981 PATCO strike still felt

Reagan's ultimatum to all PATCO members to either return to work or be fired prompted local union members Barry Vaughn, president of Midland's PATCO chapter local 428 at the time of the strike, and Tommy Urps, secretary of the union at the time of the strike, to work harder for the organization. It has been reported that Vaughn is now in Florida and Urps is in Lubbock.

These two, along with the 13 other Midland PATCO members picketed, held news conferences and monitored activities at the tower.

Although they and other controllers nationwide brought their cause to public attention, believing that Reagan would change his mind, within a month from the strike date many of Midland's controllers found new jobs.

Today they are scattered throughout Texas and other parts of the U.S.

Richard "Ski" Szczawinski, who was the only ex-PATCO member who could be reached, said a new organization — United States Air Traffic Controllers Organization (USATCO) — has been formed. He said it is open to all former and present controllers.

However, Szczawinski declined to give a personal interview, stating: "I'd rather not discuss the past. I have no comment whatsoever."

During the strike the controllers were very vocal, stating it was unsafe for Midlanders to board the airplanes.

But, Hill, who recently left Midland in June for a post at the FAA headquarters in Washington, D.C., felt differently.

On Aug. 3, 1981, he was in the midst of the walkout. It had been some time since Hill had donned the controller headsets directing the massive aircraft safely into the airport, but he did.

Hill, FAA supervisors, controllers who were non-participants in the strike and military controllers manned the tower. And while the air traffic controllers' strike was causing turmoil throughout the nation at many airports — some of which were operating at 50 percent — Midland's airport flights were reported to be running at 90 percent of normal.

Safety was the main concern at this time. The FAA responded by implementing a "flow control" contingency plan which prioritized all air traffic separation and imposed restrictions, reducing the air traffic at many airports throughout the nation. And today the walkout still is having an effect on air travel.

The airline industry, which was deregulated during the Carter administration, is operating under strict controls established by the FAA.

In September 1981, while the Reagan administration claimed the airways were safe, PATCO said with 3,000 supervisors performing controllers jobs and 1,000 inexperienced military controllers substituting, the remaining controllers would not be able to handle the traffic as safely as before the strike.

But Midland's airport officials, airline staff, pilots and the public praised Hill and his makeshift crew.

Pilots said "it's never been smoother or safer than it is now, and the terms "excellent cooperation" and "proficient and professional" were used over and over again.

Gerald Kubiak, the present acting chief at the FAA control tower at the Midland Regional Airport, said there is a "good spirit among the controllers in the tower now."

Kubiak said traffic is handled safely and the tower is adequately staffed.

"We're still averaging a 48-hour work week, but we have 13 controllers in various stages of check-out, three supervisors and one training officer," Kubiak said.

He added that in the Southwest region, there are 782 controllers employed — 310 working in the towers and 472 working in Air Route Traffic Control Centers.

Also, as of July 1, 2,016 trainees had been graduated from the FAA's school in Oklahoma City.

Kubiak said 1,550 more are presently enrolled in the school which has the capacity to graduate 180 trainees for the centers every 12 weeks and 160 trainees for tower postions every 15 weeks.

He added the failure rate is about 27 percent which is "pretty close to what is considered normal."

According to FAA statistics, "operational errors, which is a term used to report controllers who used less than acceptable separation between airplanes and not necessary near misses," have decreased by 5.1 incidents per week, Kubiak said.

Before the strike, Kubiak said statistics showed that there were 11.7 incidents of "operational errors" per week and now there are an average of 6.6 of these incidents.

Mid-air collisions recorded in the period of August to May before and after the strike resulted in less fatalities since the strike, Kubiak said.

Since the strike there have been 18 collisions with nine of those involving 29 fatalities. Before the strike there were 18 collisions, but 13 of these involved 50 fatalities.

Although nationwide today airports are still experiencing delays and there are fewer flights at rush hour, locally the picture looks brighter for some airlines.

MMH has influx of patients, cancels unscheduled vacations

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital experienced an influx of patients this weekend which resulted in calling in additional nursing staff and a temporary cancellation of unscheduled vacations.

"The patient census (number of patients) went up significantly Sunday," Ray Branson, MMH president, said. "It is the highest since I've been here and today (Monday) we wouldn't want anybody having a vacation."

At MMH's governing board meeting last week, Branson stated because there was a decrease in patients and an increase in salaries, he was urging department heads to allow employees to take vacation without pay.

Salaries totaled $1,230,355 in June, exceeding the budget by $319,356 because of a wage and compensation program initiated in May to hire nurses. Consequently, MMH's total expense for June exceeded the budget by $599,256.

Although it was reported at the board meeting that 51 nurses have been hired, Branson said there had been a misunderstanding about staffing of nurses.

"Al Kelm, (MMH vice president of patient-care services) reported that there were professional personnel (registered nurses) on each floor for each shift. He did not say the hospital had a full staff of nurses," Branson said.

Until recently the hospital had not been staffed with the required number of registered nurses needed.

And when Kelm made his statement Thursday, Branson said the media misconstrued Kelm's statement to mean the hospital was fully staffed.

"I can see where it could be misconstrued or construed by someone who doesn't understand nurse staffing," Branson said. "In a time of low census, you don't need as many registered nurses on the floor."

Kelm also reported Thursday that the hospital was holding applications for licensed vocational nurses because MMH had been successfully staffed with these nurses, but on Monday Branson said even this had changed because of the influx of patients over the weekend.

Branson did not know how many of the 51 nurses hired were registered nurses and Kelm, who is out of town, could not be reached for comment.

"We called a couple of nurses to work this weekend because we were short," Branson said.

According to Arlene Strickland, MMH public relations director, the nurses were unhappy because they thought the hospital was staffed.

Suspect charged in armed robbery

ODESSA — An Odessa man has been charged with last Thursday's armed robbery of the Bill Sears Super Market at 1600 N. Grant St.

Municipal Court Judge Larry McMillion set bond of $25,000 on 31-year-old Charles Lonnie Gentry after his arrest about 5 p.m. Monday.

Police said Gentry was arrested after he entered the store Monday afternoon and was recognized as the man who help up the establishment at gunpoint last week. An undisclosed amount of money was taken in the robbery.

Odessan arrested for child abuse

ODESSA — An Odessa man was arrested early this morning on a warrant charging him with sexual abuse of a child.

Raymond Earl Hughes, 34, was arrested on the July 30 complaint of a woman who said Hughes had "deviant sexual intercourse" with her 10-year-old daughter from July 1 to July 10 of this year.

Hughes was arrested shortly after midnight and remained in jail pending arraignment.

Midland City Council picks three municipal court judges

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland City Councilmen in a special session on Monday appointed three additional judges to give relief to the city's two full-time Municipal Court judges but held off on any decisions on the city's planned agricultural site for disposing of up to 15 million gallons of effluent per day.

Coucilmen named Midland lawyers Carmen Eiker and Rusty Wall, both former prosecutors in the District Attorney's office, and Steve Stewart to the pool of attorneys to rotate with Municipal Court Judges James Fitz-Gerald III and Michael Abrams II on Thursdays, when the courts are in session until 7:30 p.m., and at times when the judges are "temporarily unable to act."

Already in that pool are Max Wright, John Hyde, J. Michael Cunningham and Hal Brockett.

"We just appointed three relief judges for the court," Councilman G. Gordon Marcum II said as the council wound up its three-hour-plus session, which was spent mostly in executive session.

The council met with Mark Hoelscher, spokesman for the Glasscock County Underground Water District.

The district, which includes farmers in the St. Lawrence-Midkiff-Garden City area, has been petitioning the council for rights to use the city's cleaned-up wastewater for irrigating crops, primarily cotton.

The city's proposed site, on land owned by J. "Timber" Floyd, for disposing of the effluent is about 16 miles east of Midland. Midland's current holding ponds and the sewage treatment plant are in far southeast Midland and border Midland Draw. Midland County residents, particularly those in the Greenwood area east of Midland and in the Midland Draw area, have complained of the city's effluent contaminating their underground water systems.

The Midland-Glasscock County line is near the Johnson Draw area where the council is seeking Texas Water Commission approval to pipe effluent for agricultural uses.

The city is considering securing land in the Johnson Draw area should the TWC approve the city's permit application to build a $20 million effluent line and holding ponds and irrigation system in the area. At the same time, the city apparently is considering directing some of that effluent to Glasscock County farmers.

"We believe we're getting close to making a decision on it," said Akins.

Hoelscher's predecessor, Kathy Kohls, had insisted that the city, which plans to send its primary-treated effluent eastward to the agricultural land, further clean-up the wastewater via a secondary-treatment method before the Glasscock County farmers would consider using it for irrigation. Furthermore, Ms. Kohls had expressed fears that the primary-treated effluent would pollute the district's exisiting underground water.

"Primary-treatment is fine (for irrigation)," Akins said in referring to the high-concentration of nutrients in treated sewage waters. "Anybody who knows their farming knows that."

Ector High School to close due to desegregation decision

ODESSA — Odessa High School and Permian High School each will receive some 200 additional students due to the closing of Ector High School this fall, according to a decision announced this week following a lengthy desegregation suit.

Federal Judge Fred Shannon's decision was announced by Ector County Independent School District Superintendent Bill Holm during a news conference Monday evening.

Although Laurence Hurd, spokesman for CRUCIAL, a group that entervened in the desegregation suit against ECISD on behalf of Ector students, said the group was not satisfied with the decision, ECISD attorney Jack Tidwell said he thought it was a good ruling.

"It's a good plan," he said. "From what the educators tell us, it's an excellent plan. The court was looking for a good plan, and I think this is it."

About 400 10th through 12th graders will attend either Odessa High or Permian and Ector will be transformed into a junior high school. Tidwell said the two high schools should not have any problem handling the extra students and that "this decision will relieve some of the crowding. We have adequate room in the high schools, but it will relieve some overcrowding in high schools."

Teachers who voiced concerns about retaining their jobs this year, as well as the possibility of student unrest due to the newly integrated schools, should not worry, according to Tidwell.

"We're not going to have to lay off any teachers. We may have to hire some. That's a real possibility now," he said.

"I am not pleased about the closing down of Ector, and I believe there could have been a better way to solve the problem," Hurd was quoted as saying.

No plans for appeal have been made by CRUCIAL, represented by the Mexica-American Legal Defense and Education fund, he said.

"That's (the decision) the only plan the court had," Tidwell said. "They've been messing with the damn thing for 12 years, and there comes a time when you have to quit."

God not defendant, says judge

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — A federal jurist has ruled out God as the judge of Alabama's new school prayer law, and will hear further arguments Thursday in a case that challenges the law's constitutionality.

Gov. Fob James contended no court "has jurisdiction over God" and had asked that the case be thrown out, partly for lack of jurisdiction. U.S. District Judge W.B. Hand rejected the dismissal request on Monday.

"I do not perceive of this as a suit against the Almighty," the judge said, adding: "I would have to agree to the statement that the Lord is not a defendant. The state is, through the actions of its agents."

The law allows "willing" students to participate in prayer led by a teacher.

Fob James III, a Mobile attorney representing his father, said the state would appeal the judge's decision.

Ishmael Jaffree, a Mobile lawyer, filed the suit, claiming his three children, all under the age of 10, have suffered emotionally for refusing to join in prayer in the classroom.

Jaffree filed the suit in May against three teachers. After the Alabama Legislature passed the new prayer law in July, the case expanded to include the governor, the state attorney general and the state board of education.

However, Hand split the case Monday into separate proceedings — one for the teachers, the other for the state officials.

Realtors feature Republican Meier

The reception is a come-and-go affair and the public is invited to meet Meier.

Dr. Dennis Shermeta, chief of pediatric surgery at University of Chicago Children's Hospital, examines an X-ray of a set of Siamese twins that died after surgery which was performed in an effort to separate them. Shermeta is one of many doctors who can now call upon sophisticated diagnostic and surgical tools when attempting to safely separate Siamese twins.

Panel reneges on stockade plans with such a (stockade) facility being built, they may change their minds nows.

"To some of the Anglo people, this is not just our problem," Nelms said. "It's yours, too. There are a large percentage of Anglo children being bused to Washington Elementary School. Do you want them exposed to this?"

Welch's spokesman, Midland attorney Reagan Legg, offered the court the commissioner's prepared statement, which in part noted:

"Probably the most important thing I discovered (in researching stockades) was that a stockade must be isolated," Welch said in his statement. "If a facility such as this is built with access to the public, many possibilities exist for narcotics and other forbidden items to be projected into the area without the knowledge of guards....

"I also feel that Midland County government should be the best neighbor possible, and not impede the development of any area of our city."

After several black leaders, including ministers, an educator and a lawyer had spoken against the stockade's location, Commissioner Wright assured them and those they represented that the railroad site "had more going for it" than other proposed sites. "We had no intent of jeopardizing the neighborhood or impairing the progress of upgrading economics of the neighborhood.

"It had absolutely nothing to do with that part of town," he said of the court's now-rescinded vote to put the stockade at the Mo-Pac railroad site.

In a pertinent sidenote, Commissioner Davis noted that the county's budget has no surpluses to spend on developing a stockade, and proposed that the county would asked the voters to support a bond issue to build a new jail. Currently, the commissioners are considering calling for a bond issue to build a 225-prisoner jail tower on the courthouse square and to renovate the 52-year-old courthouse. Cost is projected at $9 million.

"We're all conscientious," Judge Ahders said at the onset of today's meeting. "We want to do what's best for the people of Midland County."

Meanwhile, Sheriff Dallas Smith, who said he was "sick and tired" of the on-and-off stockade proposals, bypassed the Commissioners' Court meeting. "Go talk to the judge and the commissioners," he told inquiring newsmen. "I've talked to them for two months" about the need for a stockade.

Repeatedly, the sheriff, who is a member of the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, has said that it's the Commissioners' Court's responsibility to provide confinement facilities for prisoners and his job to run it. Though today's prison count is at a legal 80 ("We're OK today," he said.), the count has gone to 100 to 120, which is blatantly illegal. He said the county now runs the risk of being de-certified by the jail commission and of being sued by prisoners and by the federal government for violating rights of prisoners.

Reagan focuses on family, church themes

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — President Reagan saluted a major Roman Catholic fraternal society today and vowed to fight for private school tuition tax credits and school prayer while seeking an end to "abortion on demand."

"I think you'll agree with me. We need a prayer amendment, we need it badly," the president told the Knights of Columbus. "We are to have freedom of religion not freedom from religion."

Reagan, who arrived here after an overnight trip to Iowa where he courted farmers, called attention to "the importance of family, community and church" — themes he often hit two years ago as he campaigned for the presidency.

"These values ennoble man, they make him something more than just the plaything of hedonism or the vassal of dictatorship," Reagan said.

The president made his comments in a speech prepared for delivery before the centennial convention of the Knights of Columbus, which he said was the world's largest Roman Catholic fraternal society.

Delivering a report card on the first 18 months of his administration, the president said: "We said we were to cut spending, reduce the tax burden, rebuild our national defenses, strive for legitimate arms reductions and be firm with totalitarian powers. I believe the record shows that we kept our promises."

The president said his tax credit plan would "raise the standards of the competing (public) school systems." The measure, which is pending in Congress, would allow parents to reduce their taxes by up to $500 a year by 1985 to help offset tuition and related costs at private elementary and secondary schools.

Referring to lower-income people, Reagan said "as the cost of education has skyrocketed, it is these groups that have been particularly hard hit by the 'double burden' of supporting private and public schools" — private schools through tuition payments and public schools through tax payments.

"This administration wants this bill passed, the Knights of Columbus want this bill passed and I believe the voters next November will demonsrate that they want this bill passed," the president said.

Technology improves chances for separation of Siamese twins

By SHARON COHEN

CHICAGO (AP) — He was a doctor and she was a nurse but no medical training prepared them for the birth of their two sons — Siamese twins, severely deformed, joined at the waist and sharing three legs.

A medical chart read, "Do not feed infants, in accordance with parents' wishes." Soon after, Dr. Robert Mueller and his wife, Pamela Schopp, were accused of trying to kill their children, but a judge dismissed the charges because of insufficient evidence.

Doctors initially gave the boys little hope for survival. But 14 months later, Jeff and Scott were separated in a nine-hour operation at Children's Memorial Hospital here. The surgery was July 15, and Jeff went home last week. Scott, who has a heart ailment and is the weaker twin, remains hospitalized.

Their surgery was the latest example of the risky, complex and emotionally wrenching operation that separates Siamese twins.

"Of all the operations, this probably has the most psychological effect on all concerned...just because of the uniqueness of it," said Dr. Ted Votteler, director of pediatric surgery at Children's Medical Center in Dallas.

The birth of Siamese twins is rare, and so is their successful separation. Doctors estimate Siamese twins are born once in every 45,000 to 60,000 births — one in every 600 set of twins is joined. Most Siamese twins die during birth or immediately after.

For those who live, modern technology is significantly improving chances of survival — and for successful separation.

"The bottom line is we are better able to evaluate the children with various new techniques," said Dr. J. Alex Haller, chief of children's surgery at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Doctors say there are more sophisticated surgical tools, much safer anesthesia for children, and improved equipment, such as the sonogram — ultrasound — which provides a picture of the fetus.

Haller said the pictures can show whether a woman is carrying twins and if they are joined. "Twins who are not hooked together float around," he said. "The ones who are hooked can't."

The advantage of pictures and diagnostic tests is that problems can be identified before surgery, said Dr. Dennis Shermeta, chief of pediatric surgery at the University of Chicago Children's Hospital.

"Success," he said, "depends on how much knowledge you have before going into the operating room."

Shermeta said it's difficult to estimate how many Siamese twins have been successfully separated, because uncomplicated cases aren't publicized. But he estimated about a dozen operations have been attempted in the past five years, with both twins surviving in five or six cases.

Success depends, doctors say, largely on where the babies are joined. If there's a shortage of vital organs — one heart, one lung or a fused brain — one baby, at least, will certainly die.

But many other separations can be performed. "In a case where there's two kidneys, both in one twin, you could transplant one kidney to the other twin," said Dr. Clifford Snyder, chairman of the plastic surgeon division at the University of Utah. "You can take a liver and even divide it."

Snyder was among doctors attending Elisa and Lisa Hansen, the Utah girls joined at the head who were successfully separated in May 1979.

The surgery is a painstaking, laborious process. Even preparing the babies can take four hours.

The operating room must be kept warm. There are monitors for the babies' vital signs. And there can be as many as 26 nurses, surgeons, anesthesiologists, and pediatricians working as a team for as long as 10 hours in the operating room.

"It's very exciting surgery," Haller says. "You start out with one patient. You end up with two."

In somes cases, a shortage of vital organs forces a decision — which baby to save. Doctors say the decision is made before surgery and after talks among parents, clergy and doctors.

"Obviously you try and have two normal babies," Shermeta said. "If you don't have the necessary equipment, that's not possible."

Some surgeons say getting the babies sutured poses as much a problem as separation, because of a lack of skin.

And in many cases, one twin is weaker. "Mostly in conjoined twins, one is the runt and one is the powerhouse," Snyder said. "One governs the other."

If the weaker child has serious medical problems, doctors recommend saving the child who has the better chance of surviving.

Votteler said in one of his cases, one baby had severe brain damage and could not have survived. A decision was made to save the other.

When the surgery is to be performed is also a factor. In March, Haller separated 2-day-old twins because of an intestinal problem. Surgery can be necessary if one child's life is endangered because one joined twin cannot survive if the other dies.

He said few attempts are made in newborns because the risk of separation declines as the child grows.

But Votteler said if twins are older than a year, "the situation gets more confused psychologically for the parents (and) the kids..."

At least one doctor, Kenneth Vaux, professor of ethics at the University of Illinois Medical Center, predicts that with improved medical technology, there will be better detection of birth defects and women can choose to abort.

U.S. to have mail service with Korea

The U.S. Postal Service has completed arrangements to start an international postal money order service between the United States and the Republic of Korea.

Effective immediately a service will be available for the exchange of postal money orders for any amount up to $500 between individuals and business establishments in both countries.

The Postal Service said this new arrangement reflects the rapidly expanding two-way trade relations between the United States and the Republic of Korea, now in excess of $10 billion a year.

Boy tries to hide gunshot wound

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Police say a 7-year-old boy accidentally shot himself in the stomach with his family's pistol and then hid the wound from his parents for hours to avoid punishment.

Davis Wagstaff was in stable condition late Monday night in the intensive care unit of Baptist Hospital here.

Rioters may be further charged

UNIVERSITY PARK, Texas (AP) — Additional charges may be filed against some of the 33 supporters of Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini charged with criminal trespassing after a disturbance on a university campus, police in this fashionable Dallas suburb say.

Agents of the Immigation and Naturalization Service also were reviewing the files of the Iranians arrested Friday and said they will begin deportation proceedings against any of the demonstrators determined to be in the country illegally.

Two Iranians opposed to the Khomeini government were stabbed and two others were treated for minor injuries and released after the disturbance at the Southern Methodist University student center.

A spokesman at Parkland Memorial Hospital refused for security reasons to comment on the condition of the two stabbing victims or say if they were still hospitalized.

Chanting pro-Khomeini Iranians clashed Friday with police and some members of the anti-Khomeini Moslem Iranian Society that was holding a university-sanctioned assembly at the student center, police said.

Officers said they are pursuing charges of assault on a police officer against some of the demonstrators who fought with police outside the student center.

Police Capt. Ray Fletcher said the additional charges will be presented to the Dallas County district attorney's office this week.

"Our main concern is to identify them correctly," he said. The suspects "have given us so many bad names, that we just want to know who we are filing on."

Just a little deception can go a long way. Israeli internationalist, Shaya Levit was the star of this hand from a recent tournament in Monte Carlo.

We have to admit that we have become somewhat more cautious as we have grown older, and we doubt that we would have sat for three hearts doubled with the East cards. Almost certainly our prudent retreat to three spades would have been vindicated because it's unlikely that we would have found the defense against three hearts that Levit did.

West opened a low club, declarer played low from dummy and East's eight was captured by the jack. Declarer led a low trump and successfully finessed dummy's nine. The queen of clubs was covered by the king and taken by the ace. After declarer ruffed his last club on the table, he led the king of hearts, which lost to the ace.

The jack of spades from West was ducked, and Levit made his first fine play when he went up with the ace. He reverted to a club, which promoted his partner's jack of hearts to a trick via an overruff. The defenders still needed two tricks, and with the king of diamonds onside, it would seem that one would be their limit. But watch what happened.

West continued with the ten of spades. Declarer played the queen from dummy and Levit followed with the three! Declarer won a trick to which he was not entitled, but Levit had a count of the hand and knew that one diamond discard was not going to help declarer.

However, now declarer thought that West held king of spades, so East had to have the king of diamonds for his opening bid. With this picture of the hand in mind, declarer continued with the ace of diamonds and another, playing low from dummy after West smoothly produced the ten, in the hope that East had started with a doubleton king. East scored the jack of diamonds, and West still had to make his king for the setting trick. The 200 East-West scored for down one doubled and vulnerable was a top score on the board.

About Muris' theory

When the Federal Trade Commission last Wednesday adopted, by a 3-1 vote, a rule regulating the funeral industry, it rejected by implication a theory of regulation advanced by the 32-year-old director of the commission's Bureau of Consumer Protection, Timothy J. Muris. We think the Muris theory deserves further examination, however, because it could be applied to all kinds of regulation and because, despite its plausibility, it is fundamentally spurious.

Mr. Muris' theory would impose on regulatory agencies a burden of proof that, in the practical world, is likely almost never to be met. When issuing rules that affect an entire industry, the commission, he says, should act only when there is unambiguous evidence that benefits will exceed costs. It should consider only "hard evidence," such as "methodologically sound" surveys and expert evidence about technical details. Citizen complaints, however numerous, are not enough, he says; they are mere "anecdotal evidence." In considering evidence, Mr. Muris says, the commission should assume that markets work. In other words, it should assume that consumers have information in sufficient amount and of sufficient reliability to make sound decisions — unless a statistically valid survey proves otherwise.

None of this sounds unreasonable — until you start applying these principles to actual cases. Take the funeral industry, on which Mr. Muris' reasoning proved unpersuasive not only to the single Democratic commissioner but also to two Republicans. Mr. Muris' presumption that "there is a market for information that generally works" runs up against the voluminous evidence the FTC gathered — and against common sense, which tells us that most people who must arrange a funeral know little about what they are buying and are in no position to comparison-shop. Mr. Muris' insistence on statistically valid surveys sounds sensible, too, until one starts thinking about it. Does the FTC really need a statistically valid survey — something that can cost the government several hundred thousand dollars — to conclude that people arranging funerals do not operate like consumers in most transactions? The insistence on unambiguous evidence that benefits will exceed costs sounds sensible, until one understands that Mr. Muris is ready to assume there are costs to regulation but demands statistical proof that there will be benefits — though no one can forecast the future with certainty.

We have criticized agencies, including the FTC, for acting without sufficient evidence, and we think such criticism often has merit. But if there is such a thing as acting without enough information, there is also such a thing as requiring so much information that one can never act at all. Mr. Muris' theory amounts to a prescription for paralysis, which is not what we think Congress had in mind when it set up regulatory agencies.

Mr. Muris' free-market world, full of perfectly informed consumers and smoothly functioning markets, reminds us in an eerie way of the equally theoretical worlds of some of the liberal regulators who have received in previous administrations appointments similar to his and have used them to impose their own pet solutions on society. None of these theories provides an automatic solution to the difficult practical problems of regulation. For those, there is no substitute for good judgment, wisdom and common sense.

Fight for whales

The International Whaling Commission has taken a massive step in voting 25-7 to stop the commercial killing of whales throughout the world beginning in 1986.

The commission's action serves notice of a moratorium on an industry that dates back to the 900s when the people of Southern France and Spain set out in open boats to hunt baleen whales commercially in the Bay of Biscay. Whaling really reached a peak here in America, from 1820 to 1850, when more than 700 sailing ships plied from such ports as Boston, New Haven and Nantucket, seeking the sperm whale for its oil to fuel the nation's lamps and manufacture its candles.

The worldwide annual harvest of whales in those early days was no larger than now, when some 14,000 are killed. Next year the quota will be reduced to a worldwide total of 11,331.

Environmentalists strove for years to stop the harvesting, even placing themselves in inflatable boats between the whaler's harpoon and the target. They say the slaughter of the giant mammals has brought five or six of the 10 great whale species to the brink of extinction. Endangered are the blue, bowhead, humpback, fin, sei and right whales.

The major whaling nations today are Russia and Japan, which each take 39 percent of the catch, and Norway, which takes 12 percent. All voted against the moratorium because the loss of their whaling industry will mean the loss of thousands of jobs.

In Japan, whale meat is an important food source. Each year the whale harvest amounts to a year's supply of animal protein for 1.2 million of Japans 120 million inhabitants. Japan and the other whaling nations are not expected to give up their whaling industries easily.

The United States, which has led the campaign against whaling, understands that economic pressures may be necessary to ensure Russia, Japan and Norway conform to the International Whaling Commission's ban. It threatens to cut fishing and import privileges for any nations that defy the ban. The future of several whale species hangs in the balance.

Noticeably quiet

When daily prayers rose from America's public schools years ago, the youngsters who rotely offered them were never informed they had the right to remain silent or to step outside and contemplate the mysteries of algebra. Not that they would have anyway. Going along with the program is part of what school is all about.

So it is of little solace that the forces pushing for a return to organized praying in the classroom assure that it would be "voluntary" this time around. For starters, the public schools have no business dabbling in religion. But let us consider only "voluntariness" for a moment.

In Alabama, which is awash in several brand new (and freshly contested) laws allowing school prayer, a Mobile lawyer has filed suit against the school board, accusing teachers of hassling his children for refusing to take part in classroom prayer.

Nathan Z. Dershowitz of the American Jewish Congress warned of just that prospect in Senate testimony opposing a constitutional amendment to permit school prayer. "To a child in the classroom," he said, "no part of the school routine is voluntary.

"It cannot be made so by the cruel device of telling them that they are allowed to brand themselves as pariahs by leaving the classroom or by staying there and remaining conspicuously silent."

Amen.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

VOA broadcasting equipment needs update

WASHINGTON — Two weeks ago, President Reagan announced plans to modernize the "old and deteriorating" equipment with which the Voice of America beams news and commentary to much of the world, particularly to countries in the Soviet orbit.

Jack Anderson

The upgrading is necessary to overcome Soviet jamming of VOA broadcasts, which are often the only source of objective information in those lands.

The White House declined to reveal how much this modernization program will cost. But my associate Indy Badhwar has seen an internal briefing paper prepared for the president, giving details of the proposed expenditures.

The confidential document, sent to the White House by the International Communication Agency, puts the situation in stark terms: Unless VOA gets about $300 million for construction and land acquisition, it will be a bush-league operation compared to Radio Moscow's high-powered propaganda operations.

Quoting from an eyes-only memo from ICA Director Charles Wick to White House aides Ed Meese and James Baker, the briefing paper states:

"Without assurances that VOA will be able to operate with state-of-the-art equipment from sites in Germany, the United Kingdom, Morocco and Sri Lanka, we will no longer be a principal competitor in the international broadcast business, a field already dominated by the Soviet Union."

The Soviets now have at least 39 500-kilowatt transmitters on the air, the paper explains. "In addition to booming their broadcasts wherever they please, their power is beginning to crowd weaker signals such as our own from nearby facilities," the document warns.

The $300 million is designed primarily to improve the quality of VOA's reception in Eastern Europe, Soviet Central Asia, the Middle East, Africa and Latin America. It would also allow an increase in broadcasting hours and in the number of languages in which VOA transmits its programs.

The ICA briefing paper lays out several suggestions for overcoming "critical gaps in our coverage" around the world. Here are some of them:

— VOA is negotiating for a site on Grand Cayman Island in the Caribbean, from which it could send medium-wave broadcasts to Central America.

— Negotiations are also under way for transmitter sites in Sri Lanka, from which VOA broadcasts could reach all of China, large parts of southern and western Asia and Soviet Central Asia.

— The relay station in Tangier would be upgraded by the installation of 10 500-kw and three 250-kw transmitters, antennas and a power plant, at a cost of $150 million. Tangier beams to Eastern Russia, the Caucasus, the Persian Gulf area and central Africa.

— The Munich relay station would get eight 500-kw transmitters with antennas, at a cost of $45 million. The present equipment, "manufactured before World War II, operates with vacuum tubes," the briefing paper notes, adding with understatement: "It is no longer reliable."

The proposed modernization of the Munich facility "would assure VOA of a strong signal as far as Soviet Central Asia and Western Siberia in the U.S.S.R.; it would reach Pakistan and Afghanistan, to which Pushtu language broadcasts will soon be initiated, and Iran in Southwest Asia, the entire Saudi peninsula including Oman and the two Yemens, and the strategic Horn of Africa."

Negotiations with West Germany may be tricky, the document warns, because the proposal would involve allocation of new frequencies in an already crowded broadcast band, and would also draw fire from leftists. But the briefing paper concludes that "Bonn's response would probably be positive."

FALSE ECONOMY: Voluntary compliance is the pillar of the American tax system. But it will begin crumbling under the weight of severe reductions in the Internal Revenue Service's free taxpayer-assistance program, according to an unpublished report of a Senate Govenmental Affairs subcommittee.

The report, reviewed by my reporter Michael Binstein, warns that the budget cuts will result in "huge revenue loss" to the Treasury. The proposed cut of 10.2 percent in the assistance program's funding would actually reduce by 60 percent the number of taxpayers who get help with their returns.

Though the taxpayers who need assistance are mainly low-income Americans, the potential revenue loss from improperly filed tax returns would be significant.

Interestingly, IRS Commissioner Roscoe Egger is the source of the Senate committee's conclusion that it would be penny-wise and pound-foolish to cripple the assistance program. A mere 1 percent reduction in compliance costs the government $4 billion a year, Egger estimated in a memo only last October. Yet by March of this year, Egger had changed his tune. He told the subcommittee the budget cuts could be absorbed without adverse impact.

INSIDE REPORT:

Cairo warns U.S. to stand up to Israel

WASHINGTON — The real message from Cairo, shrouded by polite terms and not put to paper, warns President Reagan that a U.S. failure to stand up to Israel will thrust the Middle East into a malignant era with the influence of Washington and its moderate Arab allies reduced to near zero.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Reagan administration officials easily recognized that warning between the lines of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's letter to Reagan. Delivered July 31 by Egyptian Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Ali, the letter's precise and pointed message was that the Camp David "peace" process will end beyond hope for revival if the U.S. does not get Israel out of Lebanon. That will be no easy task, considering the mounting evidence that the Israeli government plans a long stay there.

The president and George Shultz, his so-far silent secretary of state, face these alternatives: take on the pro-Israeli political lobby in the middle of the congressional election campaign; or give Israel its head to nullify remaining U.S. influence and prestige throughout the Mideast.

Israel's freedom from U.S. restraint in its Lebanon operation has saddened Cairo and the moderate Arab world. Reagan seemed to flash another green light to Israel when he failed to react to a report from CIA Director William J. Casey last week. Casey gave the president new intelligence that Israeli civilians were taking over occupation duties from the military in Lebanon.

Other indications of Israeli intentions to stay in Lebanon considerably longer than the White House wants are piling onto the president's desk. All shipping into and out of the ports of Tyre and Sidon, Lebanese cities devastated in the Israeli invasion, is being shifted to the Israeli port of Haifa. A new macadamized highway between Israel and Lebanon is used by Israeli trucks to tranship cargoes. Israel seems to be pointing toward controlling all commerce between southern Lebanon and the outside world.

A new office for El Al, Israel's state-owned airline, has just opened in Sidon. El Al is using an old PLO airfield with a new runway for monopoly service in densely populated southern Lebanon. The standard currency there has become the Israeli shekel.

These are signs of Israeli intentions to solidify economic and military control over the border regions and to prove to Arabs it can defy the U.S. without fear of punishment.

But the Egyptians see another motive: narrowing the Camp David autonomy talks to the U.S. and Israel alone. Mubarak has told the Reagan administration it is inconceivable for Egypt to negotiate with Israel on West Bank-Gaza autonomy while Israeli troops remain in occupation of one square foot of Lebanon.

That makes a prolonged Israeli visit in Lebanon all the more attractive to the designers of what Prime Minister Menachem Begin calls "eretz (greater) Israel." Begin has warned Reagan face-to-face that Israel never will negotiate West Bank autonomy except under the Camp David umbrella. If Egypt refuses to join those talks in the future, Begin will charge Mubarak with sabotaging Camp David. Any Arab voice in the West Bank talks would be eliminated.

This chain of events distresses Mubarak and other pro-American Arab leaders. For Mubarak, the distress goes beyond Lebanon and the Palestine problem. Without spelling it out in morbid detail, Mubarak wants Reagan to remember that Anwar Sadat was killed by Moslem fanatics who believed he had sold his Arab birthright. That was long before Lebanon. Today, U.S. refusal to expel Israel from Lebanon could give Moslem fanaticism irresistible force.

Yet, the Reagan administration has opposed Egypt's appeal to use the Beirut crisis as a lever to encourage concessions from both Israel and the PLO in hopes of forcing a Palestine solution. As the Arab moderates see it, there can only be one reason: The U.S. cannot bring itself to confront Israel head-on, even though failure to do so threatens future domination of the region by anti-Western fanaticism.

CHARLEY REESE

Luck and lies aid Hussein in surviving

His Highness and Royal Majesty King Hussein, monarch of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan, is a liar and a hypocrite.

Charley Reese

One of the reasons the American people are so easily confused by the Middle East is the tendency of some American newsmen to toady up to Arab leaders and repeat cliches that have no basis in fact.

Hussein is always referred to as "moderate and pro-Western." In all my study of the area, I cannot find a single instance where King Hussein has ever done anything for the United States except spend its money.

I have been in his country and it is a dictatorship with a controlled press and a quite active secret police. Not one year in the history of Jordan, unless it's been since 1978, has this phoney country ever paid its own budget. In other words, it has always been on somebody else's payroll — first the British, then ours, and now the Saudis.

King Hussein is a clever little opportunist who has managed to survive longer than most Arab leaders by a combination of luck and playing one side against another. Let me give you some examples of his lies and hypocrisy taken from an interview he granted Time Magazine.

Of the Israeli action in Lebanon he says, "There is talk of a holocaust. This is a holocaust."

What a laugh. The Israelis have not yet come close to killing as many Palestine Liberation Organization guerillas as the good King Hussein himself did in 1971, an event commemorated by Palestinians as "Black September."

The king neglected to mention to the Time editors and they courteously neglected to remind him, that in 1971 under similar provocation — the PLO was operating a state within a state inside Jordan — Hussein ferociously attacked them and drove them into Lebanon. Estimates of the dead range from 18,000 to 30,000. The king ringed Palestinian refugee camps with tanks and pounded them to pieces. So savage was his attack that faydayeen guerillas fled to — you guessed it — Israel, preferring prison in Israel to the tender mercies of Hussein.

On Camp David, King Hussein says, "Israel has destroyed Camp David by invading Lebanon."

What the king neglected to mention, and the Time editors neglected to ask about, is that he himself on the day the Camp David Agreement was signed, denounced it, flatly refused to participate, and attacked Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. The Camp David Agreement is predicated on Jordanian participation in the talks to achieve autonomy for the West Bank, but he has immoderately refused to participate from the beginning.

Here is a beaut of an example of hypocrisy. King Hussein says, "We wish the two principles that were applied to the Falklands crisis had been applied here — the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war and the right of self-determination."

Who do you suppose originally acquired the West Bank by war in 1948 after the United Nations partitioned the remaining one-fifth of Palestine? You guessed it: Jordan. Jordan's Arab Legion invaded from across the Jordan River, took the territory, and kept it.

Who do you supposse annexed it without so much as asking West Bank residents? That's right: Jordan. Only two countries in the world recognized the Jordanian annexation, but King Hussein held on to it until 1967 when, despite Israeli pleas for him not to enter the war, he attacked Israel and consequently lost it.

As for self-determination, King Hussein, whose family was plopped on the throne by British colonialists, has never allowed the people of Jordan, 80 percent of whom are Palestinian, self-determination. Believe me, it is not healthy for a Jordanian to suggest that King Hussein should be replaced. There is a blue building in Amman into which more people go than ever come out.

Hussein then repeats the Arab bromide that the root cause of instability is the Palestinian question.

That is a lie. The root cause of the instability is the refusal of Syria, Jordan, Iraq and Saudi Arabia to recognize the right of Israel to exist.

Furthermore, there is a Palestinian homeland. Jordan did not appear because a fairy waved a wand. Jordan was created by the British who simply drew a line down the Jordan River and designated four-fifths of Palestine as Jordan.

Jordan is geographically and demographically a Palestinian state. Hussein does not like to admit this because his family was brought in from the Arabian peninsula by the British and given an artificially-created country as a payoff.

So much for the moderate king.

Hinckley remains danger to himself

By LARRY MARGASAK

WASHINGTON (AP) — If a federal judge follows the advice of John W. Hinckley's doctors, the man who wounded President Reagan will remain hospitalized because he's a danger to himself and actress Jodie Foster.

Sources said a medical team from St. Elizabeths Hospital wrote U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker on Monday that Hinckley has serious personality disorders and should not be released.

Parker refused to make the report public immediately, but the sources, familiar with the two-page letter of findings and 200 pages of medical records, confirmed the contents. They spoke on condition that they not be identified.

The judge has scheduled a hearing Monday to determine whether Hinckley should be let out of St. Elizabeths, the federal mental facility he entered June 21 after a jury found him innocent by reason of insanity.

Hinckley has not asked for his freedom and could decide to waive the release hearing he's entitled to under the law. If he remains at St. Elizabeths, either voluntarily or because Parker orders it, Hinckley could return to court every six months to ask for his release.

To let Hinckley out Parker must find, by a preponderance of the evidence, that he is not likely to injure himself or other persons due to mental illness.

According to the sources, the St. Elizabeths doctors said Hinckley is afflicted with the depression and personality disorders described in detail at his trial for shooting Reagan, White House Press Secretary James Brady and two law enforcement officers.

According to that trial testimony, that means Hinckley has fantasies, exhibits odd behavior, has an exaggerated feeling of self-importance and is socially isolated.

One doctor said at his trial that Hinckley has a lonely person's disorder, like some cowboys and librarians.

Twice since he's been in custody, Hinckley has attempted suicide — once by taking an overdose of the painkiller Tylenol and another time by hanging himself. The St. Elizabeths doctors believe this danger still exists.

Hinckley, in an interview after his trial, spoke about his current feelings for Miss Foster, the actress who rejected him.

"I don't think I would go stalking after her...if we were in the same room there might be some problem," he told Washington Post reporter Laura Kiernan, who he telephoned a week after the trial.

Smith speaks to Urban League

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Criticism from blacks that the U.S. Justice Department has abandoned efforts to protect their civil rights is unfounded, Attorney General William French Smith told delegates at a National Urban League conference.

But while Smith defended President Reagan's record in promoting equal rights, Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley harshly criticized the president's plan to shift key social programs from Washington to the states.

Smith said during a conference luncheon Monday, "I have reviewed our record in the area of civil rights and suggested that record does not satisfy some of our critics because they would have us embrace remedies designed to achieve equal group results rather than secure the right of individuals to opportunity."

Smith, who practiced law in Los Angeles before joining the Cabinet, rebuffed criticism that the Reagan administration has retreated from civil rights protections by putting aside hiring quotas and busing.

"We believe those remedies disserve the constitutional and statutory guarantees of freedom to participate in our society as an individual regardless of race, religion, sex or ethnic background," Smith said.

After his speech to about 4,000 of the 10,000 conference delegates, Smith said Reagan's record on civil rights "is as good as that of any other administration."

The attorney general cited Justice Department efforts to protect civil rights, including 62 criminal civil rights cases filed and more than 1,000 pending investigations into alleged criminal violations.

But Bradley, California's Democratic gubernatorial nominee, touched off cheers from the crowd, gathered on the second day of the conference, when he objected to the lack of funds to accompany some programs turned over to the city by the federal government.

"We must not be misled by sleight of hand because, my friends, what you are seeing is literally a shell game. We cannot take that," Bradley said.

Bradley said he has "no objection" to a city takeover of "new programs, new authority, new opportunities."

"But if the pattern follows as we have seen already of substantial cuts in everything from education to health care, transportation, to clean air — if these are the kinds of directions the government is going to take, we want no part of it."

ERA Illinois lifts Chicago ban

CHICAGO (AP) — A coalition formed to support the Equal Rights Amendment has lifted a four-year boycott against Chicago as a tourism and convention site.

Edna J. Schade, president of ERA Illinois, said Monday the move was a response to Mayor Jane Byrne's sponsorship of an equal rights ordinance approved by the City Council last month.

The boycott had been intended to pressure the Illinois Legislature to ratify the amendment, which would have banned sex discrimination. Earlier this summer, the Illinois General Assembly failed to approve the ERA. The June 30 national deadline passed without the amendment becoming part of the U.S. Constitution.

"The mayor gave us more assistance than any political leader in the state," Ms. Schade said. The lifting of the boycott applies only to Chicago and "we are not speaking for the rest of the state," Ms. Schade said.

ERA Illinois also said it has notified Charles Manatt, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, of its decision so Chicago could be considered "without prejudice" as a possible site for the 1984 Democratic National Convention.

The Chicago Convention and Tourism Bureau said the Legislature's failure to pass the measure will have cost the city about $25 million in lost convention business between 1978 and the end of 1982.

Traffic-watch plane crash lands on court

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A small plane monitoring rush-hour traffic made an emergency crash-landing on a tennis court, leaving the craft's two occupants slightly injured and the tennis players unhurt, police say.

Tennis players on the Los Angeles City College courts scattered as the single-engine Cessna 150 approached, Central Traffic Division Officer Michael Pinnaro said.

Randal Martin, 29, a reporter for the local radio news agency L.A. Network, was filing aerial traffic reports Monday evening when the plane developed engine trouble over the Hollywood area, Pinnaro said. The pilot was identified as Byron Jaffe, 22.

"The pilot was looking for a place to set it down safely," Pinnaro said. "He was trying to get to Dodger Stadium but he didn't think they could make it.

"He spotted the college and made a couple of passes around it to lower speed," Pinnaro said. "As he approached, he clipped the top of a fence and flipped over and came to rest right there, upside down."

Martin was taken to Hollywood Presbyterian Hospital, where he was released after being treated for cuts on his head and bruises on his arm and knee.

INS tries to deny treatment to stowaways

DANIA, Fla. (AP) — Four Haitians who stowed away aboard a Bahamian freighter have been ordered back to their homeland and tied up aboard the ship until it leaves here later in the week, officials said.

The four men were found Monday on the Yeocomico II, which had just arrived here from the Bahamas. Two wore only tattered underwear and had to be hospitalized for treatment of dehydration and heat exposure, said Capt. Nelson Pink of the Dania Fire Department.

He said he had them treated at a nearby hospital against the directions of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, which he said had instructed him not to allow the two stricken men ashore.

According to Pink, the four aliens said they paid a Haitian crewman between $200 and $300 to stow away aboard the 140-foot cargo vessel. The ship's captain, Ceilay Higgs, said the crewman, identified only as Altis, jumped ship on arrival here.

"I don't know how they are still alive," said Norman Yates, the vessel's chief engineer who found the men when they pounded on a bulkhead after the ship arrived in this small port south of Fort Lauderdale. "For three days they are in this dark hole. They have no food, no water, nothing."

Pink said the four men identified themselves as Anslo Desinor, 20; Emanuel Destinor, 40; Mercidie Phillipe, 22, and Lucien Mare Noel, 25.

Higgs said he notified the INS and was instructed to tie the men with rope and take them back to the Bahamas when the ship leaves here later in the week.

The four stowaways were led onto the deck and bound to the ship's rail, Higgs said. Noel collapsed as they were fed hamburgers and french fried potatoes from a nearby fast-food restaurant, and Higgs said he mopped the man's brow with water and alcohol while awaiting paramedics.

Pink said paramedics contacted INS, who directed that the Haitians not be brought ashore for treatment. Pink said he ordered the man taken to Broward General Medical Center in Fort Lauderdale anyway.

"It sounds like a lot of bureaucratic — well I won't say it," Pink said later of the instructions he received from INS.

Hoffa kin want legal definition

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Relatives of James R. Hoffa filed legal papers to have the former Teamsters union president declared legally dead, seven years after he vanished outside a suburban Detroit restaurant.

A Dec. 8 hearing in Oakland County Probate Court was scheduled to appoint Hoffa's son, James P. Hoffa, executor of the estate, Victor Coen, chief deputy probate register, said Monday. Judge Norman R. Barnard will hear the case.

When Hoffa disappeared July 30, 1975, he had been trying to regain the presidency of the nation's largest labor union. FBI agents have said in court papers they believe he was killed by organized crime members.

Under state law, Hoffa's relatives had to wait seven years before asking the court to declare the former union boss legally dead.

Hoffa's estate is estimated at less than $1 million, mostly in a lump-sum pension payment, said the younger Hoffa, a local attorney. He and his sister, Barbara Crancer of St. Louis, are the sole heirs, he said. Hoffa's wife, Josephine, died in 1980.

As executor of the estate, the younger Hoffa would manage it for 10 years, a period required under state law, before the property can legally be distributed among Hoffa's heirs, Coen said.

Coen said if the heirs want any of Hoffa's estate during that time, they must post a corporate bond for the value of the property.

Forest fire expected to keep burning

FORT NELSON, British Columbia (AP) — A 400,000-acre forest fire burning for more than a week in northeastern British Columbia was bogged down by light rain and favorable wind conditions, but officials weren't hopeful it would be put out soon.

"It's not moving, nor has it gained anything for about 30 hours," Vern Barge of the Canadian Forest Service said Monday night. "There's not much that one can do at this point. We've got 64 people fighting the fire, but we'll be fighting it more than likely until winter."

The wind blew the flames and smoke away from the small resort community of Coal River, which was threatened last weekend by the spreading blaze, Barge said from Dease Lake, about 150 miles southwest of the fire.

The wind direction allowed authorities to reopen the Alaska Highway Sunday night and keep it open Monday, he added. The highway lies between Muncho Lake, south of the fire, and Watson Lake, Yukon Territory, northwest of the fire. The road connects Alaska and the lower 48 states.

Traffic had been halted Saturday due to heavy smoke.

The blaze, ignited July 26 by lightning in the pine and spruce forest near the Yukon border, covers an 816-square-mile area and has engulfed two smaller fires.

Committee will hold hearing on child abuse

A special committee from the Texas House of Representatives will hold a public hearing on child abuse and child pornography in the El Paso City Council Chambers at 9 a.m. Monday.

Chairman Doyle Willis, state representative from Fort Worth, said the House Select Committee on Child Abuse/Neglect and Child Pornography will listen to anyone who wishes to testify about the problems of child abuse, child neglect and child pornography.

"We want to hear testimony that will help us pass some legislation to effectively count the rising incidence of child abuse and child pornography in Texas," Willis said.

"Everyone is welcome to attend the meeting and listen to the testimony as one of our purposes is to make the public aware of the existence of hideous crimes against our children," he said.

"Child abuse is increasing in Texas and sexual abuse of children is escalating rapidly."

Willis pointed out the Texas Department of Human Resources had confirmed reports of child abuse or neglect increased from 24,673 (involving 35,608 children) in 1980 to 30,129 reports (involving 53,473 children) in 1981. "Sexual abuse cases increased from 2,678 in 1980 to 4,041 in 1981, and these reported cases are said to represent only the tip of the iceberg."

Continuing, Willis said, "After the Texas Legislature made reporting of child abuse mandatory in 1974, the number of reported cases shot up and has increased annually ever since. What we find most horrible is that 110 children died from child abuse in 1980. The Department of Human Resources is still verifying child death reports for 1981, but should have those figures ready soon."

Willis said the El Paso hearing will be the last before the special committee meets in Austin to prepare a report and legislation for the next session of the legislature.

"Testimony to date has revealed that while our Texas reporting laws are very good, we are falling down in other areas — investigation, prosecution, prevention and education. Funding is a major problem. We have more cases to investigate but fewer caseworkers to investigate them. Federal cutbacks in funds have prevented the Department of Human Resources from hiring more child protective service workers. The ones we have are overworked and burned out, resulting in a big turnover."

Postal Service to lose Luck

Douglas "Bob" Luck, former Andrews postmaster and recently a superviser with the Midland Management Sectional Center, will retire from the Postal Service on Friday.

Luck, 55, served with the Navy during World War II and began his postal career in Andrews as a temporary substitute clerk on Oct. 1, 1946. He became a regular clerk in that office on July 1, 1951, and assistant postmaster on Sept. 29, 1961.

He was appointed acting postmaster of the Andrews post office in July 1961, and postmaster in September 1961.

On Feb. 17, 1973, Luck transferred to Midland, where he became field operations manager. In February 1974 he was selected to become support representative. In August of that year Luck was appointed sectional center director.

Luck became sectional center director of finance on April 8, 1978, being responsible for the finance activities of 168 post offices throughout West Texas. He served in that capacity until February 1982 when the Midland Sectional Center was divided between El Paso and Waco management sectional centers. He was named manager of finance for the Midland post office and served in that position until his retirement.

Judge postpones trial

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — An angry judge refused, but later agreed, to postpone the second capital murder trial of prison inmate Eroy Edward Brown until Aug. 30.

Brown, 32, of Waco, is accused in the April 4, 1981, drowning of Ellis Unit Warden Wallace M. Pack.

Mitterand, Premier Mauroy lead funeral for wreck victims

CREPY-EN-VALOIS, France (AP) — President Francois Mitterrand and Premier Pierre Mauroy lead the mourners today at the funeral of 44 children killed in a fiery bus wreck last weekend. But "their presence will not bring back the children," said the mother of four of the victims, her face swollen by tears and sleepless nights.

A fifth child of Monique and Jacy Syx, 13-year-old Eric, returned to his parents' arms at twilight Monday outside their rundown home in a housing project in this ancient town 40 miles north of Paris.

The bodies of his four younger brothers and sisters — Christian, 12; Valerie, 11; Patrick, 10, and Natalie, 9 — were with those of the other dead in plain pine coffins in a nearby gymnasium. Only six were identified, and the Syx children were not among them.

The Syxes were among 107 underprivileged children, 6 to 15 years old, from Crepy-en-Valois and five surrounding communities who boarded two buses Friday night for a summer camp in the Alps.

Some six hours later, a West German tour bus braked suddenly on a rain-slicked highway 200 miles south of Paris, setting off a chain-reaction collision in which the two camp-bound buses and seven other vehicles piled up. Fifty-three people were killed, including 44 children, two camp counselors and the two drivers aboard one of the camp buses.

That bus exploded, but another counselor and 15 children escaped through a rear emergency exit. The second camp bus caught fire, but no one aboard was hurt.

"I saw them all die, my brothers, my sisters, everybody," said Eric, sitting in his mother's lap in their small living room crowded with mourners, pictures of the children and religious statues.

"We were sleeping and suddenly there was a loud boom and there was fire all around us."

Camp aids young women in controlling weight

By JUANA E. DUTY
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Emily Terry, an appealing, bright 11-year-old, is, like thousands of other youngsters, spending most of her summer at camp.

But Terry's stay at Camp La Jolla, a private camp housed on the Loyola Marymount University campus here this summer, is not just for fun and games.

This camp's program centers around teaching young women from 8 to 29 how to lose weight and keep it off through good nutrition and improved exercise habits.

While some may think 8 is a bit young to start worrying about one's weight, studies have shown, medical experts say, a poor self-image, that often may be lifelong, may be the most damaging of all the problems suffered by overweight youngsters.

Over a lunch of egg salad, plain yogurt, blueberries and a mixed green salad, Terry and several of her campmates explained why they wanted to lose weight.

"IN SCHOOK, SOMETIMES I was made fun of," Terry said, a complaint echoed by several others at her table. "We'd have dances and stuff at school and I was always the last one picked because I'm so fat," said the 5-foot-1 sixth-grader who wants to lose 15 or 20 of her 113 pounds.

"I was trying to lose at home," she added, " but I kept gaining instead."

"I eat too many portions," said Dion Sandifer, 10, when asked why she was overweight. "I played basketball and I swam a little bit," she said of her activities before coming to camp, "but when I lose weight, I'll be able to run faster. "This camp is pretty good. They encourage us. They push us. Nancy's real nice to us," Sandifer said of camp director Nancy Lenhart.

"The problem is that everybody teases me," said Abbi Hatch, 11, when asked what prompted her to come to such a camp. "I've been trying to lose weight but it's hard. My mother fixes real good dinners and after basketball games we always go out to dinner and stuff.

"So far, I've lost six pounds in the first week of camp and I want to lose 20 altogether."

Colleena Alves, 10, offered this: "At first, I didn't want to come because I would miss my mother, but I like it. The food's not too great," she added, making a face at the yogurt in front of her.

"Put your berries in it," another camper advised, "it makes it better."

Fat is the enemy here, and it is treated accordingly. There are no fad diets, no exercise machines, no masseuse to pound it off and no steam rooms where campers can try to melt the excess pounds away.

Here, fat is viewed as the result of bad habits that must be changed, so campers are not encouraged to just lose weight but rid themselv3s of the life styles and attitudes that made them overweight in the first place.

"We don't use any drugs, no diuretics, we don't prescribe any medications," said Judy Wachs, a family counselor who leads rap sessions on the campus, as well as generally keeping tabs on their progress.

"The most important thing about this camp," she said, "is that we try to teach them about the underlying reasons why they overeat.

Since more than half of the 140 campers are still at home with their parents, the staff holds meetings with the parents before and during their youngsters' stay at camp La Jolla.

It is important that the parents realize their role in their child's weight problem and how they can change, Wachs said.

Parents are encouraged to evaluate their own nutrition habits, how food is regarded in the home and how they can help their youngster to maintain the improved eating habits they learn while at camp.

The word diet is avoided because it implies something temporary that one can abandon after the desired amount of weight is lost. It is that attitude that leads to failure for so many dieters.

After the "diet" is over, they go back to old eating habits, regain the weight and the cycle starts all over again.

In addition to improved eating habit and nutrition counseling, Camp La Jolla offers rap sessions and behavior modification with a licensed psychologist to help the young women understand why they overeat and what they can do to stop.

Then there's the exercise program. The young women rise at 6:30 a.m. so they can be out on the track for the 30-minute early morning "exercise and jog" at 7 a.m. After that, there is another hour of activity, until breakfast at 9 a.m.

FROM 10 A.M. to noon, campers have a choice of swimming, softball, basketball, soccer, exercise classes, jazzercise or supervised workouts on mini-trampolines.

Lunch is followed by a one-hour rest period and then three more hours of exercise in the form of sports or aerobics classes.

After dinner, there's another hour of free time or a rest period, followed by another hour and a half of activity — jogging, tennis, swimming or whatever campers prefer.

At 8:30 p.m., campers may have a snack, which consists of graham crackers, fruit or popcorn, the latter unbuttered.

By 10 p.m., campers are usually in bed.

It's not an easy program, both staff and campers admit, but the young women of all ages said it is worth it if they can lose weight and keep it off. "It is tough," said one camper, "but I don't care. I don't want to ever be fat again."

THE CAMPERS OR their parents plunk down $2,250 for the seven-week program. The 8- to 10-year-olds are considered too young for such a long stay so their time is limited to four weeks which costs $1,550.

That includes their dormitory rooms, where the young women are housed in twos, and field trips to the beach, films, Marine World, Disneyland and the like.

Camp La Jolla was started three years ago by Max Shapiro, who has been involved with specialty camps for 12 years.

He also has several sports camps throughout California as well as in Dallas and Portland, and he operates another weight-loss camp for young women in a small college community in Florida.

His operation is headquartered in Corte Madera in Marin County, about 10 minutes north of San Francisco.

Terri Murphy, 25, came from Denver to attend Camp La Jolla, after having seen it advertised in a popular women's magazine.

Many of the campers come from out of state and a few even come from out of the country. This year several are in attendance from Mexico. "I find it pretty positive," said Murphy, who wants to lose 60 pounds. "I worked at a (weight-loss) camp once and the thing I like about this one is that they're not just emphasizing eating. They also stress being physically fit.

"THERE'S REALLY A stigma in our society about being overweight," she said, noting that was the major influence in her decision to try a weight-loss camp.

"It's like being discriminated against. They (society) make you feel like you're worthless. I want to be healthy, too.

"My father was very overweight. He died of heart disease. I don't want to be old and sick."

Parents urged to become involved in children's lives

By MARLENE AIG
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Children are, far too often, "treated shabbily" by authorities, simply because they are children. And, says child psychiatrist Dr. David Gottesman, parents don't have the time or just don't know how to protect their children.

"We're too damned trusting of delivering our kids to other systems," says the Albany physician who has penned "The Powerful Parent: A Child Advocacy Handbook," in an effort to help parents control the world their child lives in.

"People surrender their kids to society to raise because they're too busy and then wonder why things go wrong."

Children, Gottesman says, "are the nation's largest unspoken minority with no representation. Someone has to advocate for the children and the best person is a parent because a parent loves him."

The book is a detailed guide to dealing with schools, doctors, hospitals, lawyers, police, courts, schools — everyone and everything with which a child may come in contact.

"Parents," Gottesman says, "must be the better consumer for the child."

Gottesman's book is the result of 10 years of work with parents and children. Over the past two decades, the psychiatrist says, there have been disturbing trends in child-raising. Economic need has created the two-job family, taking both parents out of the home for long periods of time and giving both parents career concerns.

People have also decided to, as he puts it, "go out and find themselves and do their own thing," turning away from the family and into themselves. This "vacuum of responsibility" has allowed society's institutions to take greater control over a child's life and has left parents unaware of how to handle too many situations.

"Parents must be very involved in every aspect of their children's lives," Gottesman says. "Some people think parenting begins at conception and ends at birth. Parents sometimes are too busy with themselves."

Too many parents have "crisis reacting," says Gottesman, who explains that this occurs when there is a phone call about a school fight, about shoplifting or an accident, or even a bad report card. The parent panics because he doesn't know what else to do since he is unprepared for it.

That reaction, Gottesman says, "scares the child and doesn't solve the problem."

Himself the father of five, Gottesman says, "Kids act it out rather than say they're unhappy. If a child is feeling abandoned by a parent who is too involved in a career or with himself, he'll say, 'How can I get an adult to pay attention to me?' And the adult he's looking for is a parent."

Once a child is in trouble or is sick, the authorities take over and often ignore basic legal rights, simply because they're dealing with children. Gottesman says, "Parents need to be informed about getting the best for their child."

Too often, parents — ignorant of the child's rights — are cowed by authorities as well. Gottesman advises parents to regain self-control immediately in all situations and not be afraid to ask questions about what is happening, no matter what the circumstance.

"The system," Gottesman says, "will gladly take control if you'll let it. Don't let a doctor, for example, control you. Find the information you need to know and tell the doctor what YOU want."

"It's all a matter of being heard," Gottesman maintains. "Parents wonder what's wrong with schools today. Parents aren't involved."

He wants parents not only to recognize their responsibility to their children, but to act on it.

"Parents need to learn to advocate for children. If they do, the child learns to respect the powerful parent. It makes the child feel the parent cares."

Nothing too absurd to become reality

By ERMA BOMBECK

A couple of years ago, comedian Jonathan Winters told a joke about how he taped 173 pigeons to his arms to fly to Los Angeles, but just as he took off, "some clown threw out a handful of peanuts and it was all over."

Everytime I thought about that full-grown man with all those pigeons flapping, I killed myself laughing over the absurdity of it.

After Larry Walters floated three miles into the atmosphere a few weeks ago in a lawn chair, held aloft by 45 weather balloons, holding a BB gun, I don't know what to laugh at anymore.

Remember when people used to fall apart everytime Jackie Gleason as Ralph Cramden said to his wife, "One of these days, Alice, I'm sending you to the moon!"? The first U.S. woman astronaut is training now for a flight.

Life isn't imitating art anymore. It's surpassing it.

I guess it's the old story where a cave woman went up to her cave teenager one day and said, "Would you keep those drums down? I can't hear myself think for that music," and their father said, "Why don't you stick it in your ear?" They laughed at that for a few thousand years and then it became reality.

I told my husband I wouldn't be at all surprised if, give or take a few years, the lawn-chair shuttle would be the transportation wave of the future. It's energy efficient, can be assembled cheaply and is quiet, other than the blast of the BB gun.

He said I was out of my mind. I reminded him, "Nothing in this country is too ridiculous for success. Take that gum you're chewing. Can you imagine the first gum salesman to make the rounds? I can hear a storekeeper asking, 'What do you do with it?'"

"Put it in your mouth and chew it, but don't swallow it."

"Then why do you chew it?"

"To get the sugar out of it until we perfect a way to make it without sugar."

"I see, and then when you're tired of chewing it, what do you do with it?"

"You hunt for a piece of paper and spit it out and try to get rid of it or drop it on the ground where someone's shoe will get stuck on it."

He put down his paper and said, "Look, why don't you take that theory, put it in a pop bottle, put it in your ear and fly."

We wanted to laugh — but we were afraid to.

Trend in fall 1982 menswear is reflected in unmatched three-piece suit, left, and bulky weave double-breasted overcoat, right, both by American designer Jhane Barnes, with Italian designer Nino Cerruti's checked topcoat and herringbone suit in center.

Men's fashions for this fall is checkmates

By GARRY ABRAMS
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Corporate executives may be reluctant to shed their conservative attire for a herringbone suit topped by a checked overcoat or a suit with mini-checked vest and pants and a large-checked jacket. But checks are what designers on both sides of the Atlantic are advocating this year. This kind of visual interest has not been seen since the 1930s, fashion experts say.

The season's menswear offerings seem to represent an effort by designers to be innovative but not threatening. Thus, the cut of the clothes is traditional and familiar, but many of the rules for "safe dressing" have been thrown out the window.

One indication that the concept has been widely accepted — at least by designers — appeared at this year's Cutty Sark menswear awards. In the third year of the awards, the similarity among designers' efforts was great. Nino Cerruti, an Italian, and Jhane Barnes, a New Yorker, took top honors for collections that include rustic, tweedy and multi-patterned looks adapted for city streets.

Virus may fight cancer

BENNINGTON, Vt. (AP) — Scientists at a Bennington research center say they are experimenting with a virus that appears to stimulate immunity to cancer in hamsters.

The researchers, at the Institute for Medical Research, say hamsters injected with parvovirus H1 at birth appear to be partially immunized against various types of tumors. They said hamsters injected with the virus developed markedly fewer tumors than a control group.

Other members of the parvovirus family were responsible for widely publicized outbreaks of sometimes fatal illnesses among dogs and cats in recent years, Dr. Helen Toolan, one of the researchers, said Sunday.

Dr. Solon Rhode, director of the institute and a member of the research team, said it is too early to tell whether the virus can be used in humans to prevent cancer.

"We know the infection inhibits the growth of tumors," Rhode said. "Our next step is to determine how the virus infection has its effect on cancer."

Mrs. Toolan also warned that the findings could be overdramatized and refused to call the research the most promising in the field.

"It's interesting. Let's see where it leads," she said.

Rhode, Mrs. Toolan and Dr. John Gierthy published their findings in the July issue of the Cancer Research Journal.

DEAR ABBY
Rumors give firm devil of a time

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I just received a mimeographed letter in the mail telling me not to buy products made by Procter & Gamble. It was signed, "A Good Christian." It said the Procter & Gamble Co. supports a religious cult dedicated to witchcraft and the devil. As proof, I was sent a picture of the P&G trademark insignia — a man's face in a half-moon with 13 stars, a symbol of Satan.

The letter stated that the owner of Procter & Gamble appeared on "The Merv Griffin Show" and also on "Donahue," saying he owed his success to "Satan"!

Abby, can you find out if the Procter & Gamble Co. has any connection with Satan and witchcraft, because if it has, I am not buying any more of its products. — NEEDS TO KNOW IN OHIO

DEAR NEEDS: Letters such as the one you received have been circulated through the U.S. for the last two years, and there is not a shred of truth in the rumor that P&G is connected with Satan, witchcraft or the devil.

Furthermore, neither Merv Griffin nor Phil Donahue has had anyone from Procter & Gamble on their shows, but this rumor has been so widespread that both Griffin and Donahue have had to send out form letters to deny this false accusation.

Some of the nation's most respected Christian religious leaders have issued public statements in an effort to put an end to this vicious campaign. They include the Rev. Jerry Falwell, the Rev. Jimmy Draper, president of the Southern Baptist Convention, the Rev. Donald E. Wildmon, Methodist minister and executive of the National Federation for Decency, Bishop Emerson Colaw, United Methodist Church, the Rev. William C. Black, bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Southern Ohio.

All "good Christians" who have specific information about anyone distributing this propaganda should write to: Procter & Gamble, P.O. Box 599, Department D.A., Cincinnati, Ohio 45201. Please include your name, address and telephone number.

DEAR ABBY: This is in regard to "Finders," who sought advice on how to obtain an honest appraisal for an "expensive-looking" piece of jewlery he said he had found, but had no luck in locating the owner.

You suggest that he take it to a reputable jeweler. I am a reputable jeweler, and when someone comes to me with a piece of jewlery valued at more than $100 and tells me he "found" it and wants it appraised, the first question I ask is, "Did you notify the police?"

If the answer is "yes," I check with the police to verify it.

If the answer is "no," I advise him to do so immediately.

Often jewlery is passed off as "found" when in fact it has been stolen. — SAMUEL S. FINCHLEY, E. ROCHESTER, N.Y.

DEAR MR. FINCHLEY: Thank you for raising an excellent point that I had not considered. I also heard from many lawyers advising me that in some areas there are laws requiring the finder to turn over the found item to the police department. After a certain length of time, if it is not claimed and identified by its rightful owner, it becomes the property of the finder.

(If you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents) self-addressed envelope to Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Castro's revolution heavily mortgaged

MIAMI (AP) — Fidel Castro's communist revolution has been heavily mortgaged by Western banks, according to a study by an anti-Castro lobbying group.

The Cuban-American National Foundation reported July 28 that much of Cuba's foreign debt to the West, $2.6 billion, comes due next year, and institutions such as the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Tokyo have been informed that Cuba will not be able to repay it all.

The foundation said Cuba faces severe near-term loan restructuring or actual default.

U.S. banks will not be affected by Cuba's debt problems. No American institution has loaned Cuba money since a trade embargo was imposed 10 years ago because $2 billion worth of U.S.-owned property was seized in 1959 by Castro.

Western banks with a large stake in Cuba's financial well-being are aware that low revenues from plummeting world sugar prices and the lack of a second major source of income in Cuba could hurt their firms.

The Royal Bank of Canada knows well that "Cuba is facing financial problems," senior economist Kurt Van Dem Hagen said.

The Cubans know it too. "We have (financial) problems, but who doesn't these days?" said Pedro Oviedo of the Cuban Interests Section in Washington.

In 1981, the Financial Times in London reported that U.S. pressure from the Reagan administration may have killed a planned German deal with Cuba for some $60 million in Deutschemarks. Although some short-term loans were granted, a second deal with Italian bankers also fell through when European banks became fearful Cuba might go bankrupt, the foundation said.

Cuba's sugar crop not stable currency

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG

MIAMI (AP) — Sugar, the white gold that Fidel Castro banked on to fund Cuban communism, is proving not to be the trustworthy currency he thought it was, analysts say.

Castro has proclaimed the 1982 cane crop as "one of the best," but some observers say it won't be enough.

On July 26, Castro told a cheering crowd in the city of Bayamo that Cuban raw sugar production this year totaled more than 8.2 million tons, up from 7.3 million tons in 1981. In the United States, by comparison, 6.2 million tons were harvested last year.

The 1982 Cuban harvest was "one of the best in the past years," Castro proclaimed before an estimated 500,000 people.

"It is a sizeable, substantial harvest," agreed Franklin Knight of Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, who two years ago observed Cuban attempts at mechanizing the chopping and refining of cane. "...But this year's crop is not going to do very much for the Cuban economy."

The reason, the political scientist said, is the cheapness of sugar on the Western market. "In short, the Cubans complain they have to sell sugar for less than it costs to make it," says Knight.

Bulk pure-cane sugar now sells for less than 10 cents a pound, but Cuban authorities say it costs at least 13 cents a pound to grow, process and market.

"If they were operating in a pure capitalist economy, they'd have no choice but to go out of business," said Knight.

Sugar, Cuba's most important export, accounts for some 70 percent of its earnings abroad. Even before Castro came to power in 1959, the island's economy was alternately buoyed and crushed by wild swings in the Western world's commodity price for sugar.

In the past two years, low demand and record sugar exports by other nations have dropped world prices to their lowest since 1972.

Cuba's chief customer is the Soviet Union. At the close of the harvest, hundreds of freighters ply the Atlantic, carrying tons of refined sugar to the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

Secret treaties commit the Eastern bloc to absorb an estimated 4 million tons of Cuban sugar at more than double the free-market rate — a financial burden that University of Pittsburgh Professor Cole Blasier said "is well worth it to the Soviets because of the political and diplomatic help and prestige a revolutionary Cuba brings them."

Blasier estimates direct Soviet aid to Cuba at $3 billion a year, or more than $300 for each Cuban man, woman and child.

A harvest of only 7.4 million tons was forecast this year, of which a maximum of 3 million tons can be sold to the Free World under international sugar accords. Castro told his countrymen last week that any overrun "will go to the socialist market, and of course to our own domestic market."

Speech reaction wide-ranging

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The reaction of farm leaders to President Reagan's speech to the National Corn Growers Association ranged from pleasure and satisfaction to disappointment, with critics saying it held "nothing new."

"I think it was pretty favorable," said Raymond Heck, who farms near the central Iowa community of Perry and is president of the Iowa Soybean Association. "I'm a lot more satisfied with things now than I was before the speech."

In Monday's address, Reagan said the extension of the grain trade agreement with the Soviet Union "would have the sanctity of a contract, ensuring U.S. farmers' access to the Soviet market."

Heck recalled that at the Iowa Governor's Export Conference in late June in Cedar Rapids, representatives of the U.S. State Department and U.S. Commerce Department had said the issue was not a long-term grain agreement with the Soviet Union. The issue, the officials had told Heck, was whether or not to trade with the Soviets at all.

Heck, who toured the Dee Brothers Farm near the Marshall County community of State Center with the president after the speech, said he asked Reagan if his remark applied to all contracts and the president replied it did.

"Put the two together," said Heck, refering to the extension and the sanctity comment, "and I'm pretty pleased."

That pleasure, however, apparently was not widespread in the agriculture community.

De Von Woodland, a farmer-rancher from Blackfoot, Idaho, and president of the Corning-based National Farmers Organization, saw no landmark signal in Reagan's comments.

"It's taken for granted that we'll honor contracts," Woodland said. "We've never intended to break contracts. Sanctity of contracts is just a simple way of doing business as usual in agriculture. We expect the government to do things the same way."

Woodland said the speech contained "nothing new." The export theme is overworked, he complained.

"Exports have their place, and we need to look for and expand those," Woodland said. "But you've got to have more than a market, you've got to have a price."

Curt Sorteberg, assistant to the president of the Iowa Farmers Union, was another critic of the president's remarks.

"I would say he said nothing in as long a period of time as I've ever heard," Sorteberg said.

"I think that what we've done is send a message to the rest of the exporting countries that they can move in on the Soviet market.

"This is a sad day for American farmers," he continued. "I was sincerely hoping that the president would come up with something new" to get rid of the huge grain surplus.

Louis Faivre, a DeKalb, Ill., farmer and vice president of the Illinois Corn Growers Association, complained of the lack of administration urgency to deal with the Soviets.

"We don't control the market," Faivre said. "Even our closest allies, like Canada, are snickering at us, I imagine," because they plan to make their grain available to the Soviets, he said.

Dean Kleckner, president of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, was kinder.

"I think it should be pleasing to farmers," he said of the speech. "He emphasized the area of exports. He said we must restore confidence in our reliability as a supplier, and that is the No. 1 area that we have to work on."

Stock market showed a lot of enthusiasm for a Monday

By LORRAINE CICHOWSKI
AP Business Writer

Banks nationwide dropped their prime rates to 15 percent and the stock market reacted enthusiastically, with the Dow Jones industrial average gaining 13.51 points for its best rally in four months.

Also on Monday, new Commerce Department figures showed construction nationwide was up slightly in June, but orders for new factory goods were down again.

The 15 percent prime rate took hold at virtually all the nation's major banks Monday, the third half-percentage point decline in two weeks.

In response, the Dow Jones industrial average rose to 822.11. And yields on three-month treasury bills at the weekly auction fell below 10 percent, indicating more softening of interest rates.

"I see a further edging down of interest rates, but not a plunge," said Sandra Shaber, a senior economist at Chase Econometrics Associates, after the banks lowered their primes, the base rates used to calculate interest on loans to the best corporate customers.

Other economists have predicted a sharp climb in short-term interest rates by year's end and a return to record highs for long-term rates.

The drop in the prime follows the Federal Reserve Bank's decision last week to lower its discount rate to banks. With the banks paying less for funds, they are able to charge their borrowers less.

The Commerce Department said U.S. builders increased the pace of new construction by 1.3 percent in June, the fourth monthly gain. Home building fell 1.1 percent, but jumps in building of industrial plants and commercial offices offset the decline.

David Cross, a senior economist with Chase Econometrics in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., said the recent interest rate reductions could mean "some very modest recovery this year in housing."

Commerce also announced new orders for manufactured goods declined 0.3 percent in June. New factory orders, which can indicate how well manufacturers are likely to be doing in coming months, rose 1 percent in May after falling 1 percent in April.

Government officials and private analysts said orders could improve later this summer because of the falling short-term interest rates.

One struggling company, International Harvester Co., was promised $1 million in state aid Monday by Illinois, and some local officials said they would try to raise another $6 million for the farm-machinery maker through bond sales.

Meanwhile, Harvester, which is expecting losses of $1 billion this year, said it will make deeper cuts than already announced in its white-collar workforce. Harvester's workforce of about 32,000 already is half the size that it was four years ago.

In other economic news:

—Steel production fell 3.4 percent in the week ended July 31 to 1.248 million tons, the American Iron and Steel Institute said. The trade group said production so far this year used 53.9 percent of capacity compared with 83.6 percent in the period a year ago.

—The Conference Board said foreign companies have sharply cut their manufacturing investments in the United States because of the sluggish U.S. economy. The number of investments in U.S. manufacturing by foreign concerns fell to 136 in the first six months of 1982 compared with 172 in the 1981 first half, according to the business-sponsored research group.

Prime lending rate cut; Depressed industry may get relief

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

Three successive declines in the prime lending rate to a 21-month low of 15 percent may provide some relief to depressed auto and housing industries, economists say.

But they also warn the economy is not expected to come roaring back from recession and are divided on whether rates will continue their descent into autumn.

A half percentage point reduction in the prime lending rate took hold nationwide Monday, the third such drop since July 19, when the prime stood at the 16.5 percent level it had held since February.

The prime, the base upon which banks compute loans to their best business customers, is not tied directly to consumer rates, but its movement gives an indication of trends in interest rates.

Banks have been able to cut their prime rate because the cost of raising money for loan investments has declined sharply recently.

For example, as of today the maximum interest rate banks and savings associations may pay on popular six-month money-market certificates, available in minimum denominations of $10,000, fell to 11.614 percent from 12.190 percent a week ago.

That ceiling is pegged to results of the Treasury Department's weekly auction of six-month bills, where the average yield fell Monday to 10.671 percent from 11.378 percent a week ago. It was the lowest average yield on six-month bills since the 10.234 percent of Sept. 8, 1980.

In addition, the Federal Reserve cut the interest it charges banks for loans from 11.5 percent to 11 percent Friday, the second half-point reduction since July 19.

High interest rates have brought about a recession that pushed the jobless rate to a post-World War II high of 9.5 percent and forced 13,212 businesses to close, a 45 percent increase over last year.

"Despite the encouraging drop of interest rates, we do not expect a robust recovery," said Jack Lavery, chief economist at Merrill Lynch Economics Inc., a private research firm.

Lower rates will help bring about a muted recovery in the housing and automobile industries, "but we don't think it will have any staying power," he said.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said Monday that evidence has yet to point to any broad revival in manufacturing activity, but predicted consumer spending in the current quarter will stimulate demand.

"Further declines in interest rates will be necessary, though, if we are to see a strong, sustained recovery," Baldrige added.

Fred Plemenos, an economist and financial analyst at the private consulting firm of Data Resources Inc., said he believes interest rates have peaked and will steadily fall over the next three years.

The relaxation of the Fed's tight grip on bank reserves was prompted by the economy's continued slump and a slowing of the growth in the nation's money supply, analysts said.

Lavery says one factor that may result in a resurgence of high interest rates later this year is the deficit-spending of the federal government, which the Treasury Department estimates will require up to $100 billion in new cash over the second half of this year.

This week, the Treasury is selling $28.25 billion in government bills and notes to raise nearly $10 billion in new cash and pay off previous loans. Interest payments on the $1.09 trillion national debt exceeded $90 billion for the first nine months of the fiscal year.

Lavery also said despite federal income tax cuts last October and in July, consumer spending may be dampened by rising Social Security taxes, increased taxes by financially strapped state and local governments and tax increases currently being debated in Congress.

Survey finds higher grocery prices for third month

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Higher prices for basics like meat and butter helped boost grocery prices during July for the third straight month, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey.

Last month's average rise in the price of a random list of 14 food and non-food items was less than the rate of increase in either May or June, but was almost twice the rate of increase last July.

The AP survey is based on a list of commonly purchased products which were priced in one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973. Prices have been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month.

The latest survey showed the marketbasket bill went up last month at the checklist store in eight of the cities surveyed, rising an average of 2.9 percent. The bill went down in five cities, dropping an average of 2.8 percent. Overall, the marketbasket bills increased by an average of seven-tenths of 1 percent.

The July rise followed a May increase of 1.3 percent and a June jump of 1 percent. The July 1981 increase was four-tenths of 1 percent.

The food items rather than the non-foods were to blame for most of the increase last month.

Non-foods represented 21 percent of the items on the AP checklist, but accounted for 14 percent of the increases. Foods, by contrast, represented 79 percent of the items and 86 percent of the increases.

There were widespread increases at the meat counter, generally reflecting smaller supplies of beef and pork at the wholesale level. The price of a pound of chopped chuck went up during July in six cities; so did the price of a pound of center-cut pork chops.

Butter prices also were on the rise, increasing last month at the checklist store in eight of the cities surveyed.

Consumers looking for eggs, however, found some bargains. The price of a dozen, medium white eggs dropped at the checklist store in eight cities last month.

Comparing today's prices with those at the start of the year, the AP found that the average marketbasket bill at the checklist store was 5.6 percent higher at the start of August than it was at the start of January.

The government is predicting that prices for domestically produced farm foods — not including things like coffee which is imported — will rise an average of 5 percent to 6 percent during all of 1982. That would be the smallest annual increase since 1976.

A look at the overall number of items in the AP survey showed about the same number of increases during June and July, but last month's increases generally were larger in size. Here are the percentages of increases and decreases:

	June	July
Up	29.1	28.0
Down	21.4	25.8
Unchanged	46.7	41.2
Unavailable	2.8	5.0

No attempt was made to weight the AP survey results according to population density or in terms of what percentage of a family's actual grocery outlay each item represents.

The day of the week on which the check was made varied depending on the month. Standard brands and sizes or comparable substitutes were used. Items temporarily out of stock on one of the survey dates being compared were not included in the over-all total.

The AP did not try to compare actual prices from city to city — to say, for example, that eggs cost more in one area than another. The only comparisons were made in terms of percentages of increase or decrease — saying a particular item went up 10 percent in one city and 6 percent in another.

The items on the AP checklist were: chopped chuck, center cut pork chops, frozen orange juice concentrate, coffee, paper towels, butter, Grade A medium white eggs, creamy peanut butter, laundry detergent, fabric softener, tomato sauce, milk, frankfurters and granulated sugar. A 15th item, chocolate chip cookies, was included on the original list, but was dropped when the manufacturer discontinued the package size used in the survey.

The cities checked were: Albuquerque, N.M., Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, R.I., Salt Lake City and Seattle.

ARCO's business booms

NEW YORK (AP) — Business has mushroomed since Atlantic Richfield Co. banished credit cards from its service stations and instituted a cash-only policy on all gasoline sales.

James Morrison, president of Arco Petroleum Products Co., told a news conference Monday the 2,800 Arco-owned service stations increased volume by more than 50 percent in May, June and July compared with the same period a year before.

The news conference was held in Los Angeles and beamed by satellite to New York, Washington and Philadelphia.

Morrison said the average Arco station sold 106,000 gallons of gasoline in June compared with an industry average of 50,000 gallons. In March, before credit cards were eliminated, Arco stations averaged sales of 62,000 gallons a month, he said.

Arco, the nation's seventh largest oil company, stopped accepting credit cards at its service stations April 15 in an attempt to boost gasoline marketing profits. Arco said eliminating the credit program saved it $73 million a year.

At the same time, Arco shaved 2.8 cents per gallon from the wholesale price of gasoline to its dealers and suggested dealers pass the savings on to the motorist.

No other major company followed Arco's lead in eliminating credit cards, but several, including Exxon Corp., are experimenting with charging dealers a fee for every credit sale. Some stations also are discounting gasoline to customers who pay by cash.

"Our studies had said the consumer wanted and would respond to lower prices, and that has been confirmed," Morrison said.

Dan Lundberg, a Los Angeles analyst who publishes a national survey of gasoline marketing trends, said the latest reports from service stations indicated Arco dealers were passing along the price savings to motorists. And, he said, Arco was increasing its share of some major markets in the process.

For instance, Lundberg said, a July 23 survey found Arco's average price for leaded regular gasoline sold at self-service stations in Los Angeles was 5.85 cents a gallon cheaper than the average for other major companies and 1.45 cents cheaper than the independents.

Lundberg said Arco moved into second place in California with a 13.96 percent share of the market in May. It was in fifth place in January, with a 9.19 percent share.

In the first six months of the year, Arco's profit increased 4 percent to $795.2 million on a 13 percent decline in sales compared with the 1981 first half.

At the same time, other major companies reported sharp earnings declines for the period. Exxon's profit was off 77.9 percent, Mobil's fell 53 percent and Texaco Inc.'s plummeted 44.6 percent.

Oil shale, coal workers being studied

DENVER (AP) — A Denver hospital specializing in lung diseases has started a long-range program aimed at a better understanding of some of the risks facing workers in the oil shale and coal industries.

Dr. Kathleen Kreiss, director of the program at the National Jewish Hospital-National Asthma Center, said Monday the goal is a reduction of occupational and environmental exposures that can cause asthma and such debilitating diseases as silicosis, black lung and lung cancer.

The project will be carried out in conjunction with the hospital's established treatment and research programs in asthma, tuberculosis, and other lung diseases, she said.

Ms. Kreiss, formerly an epidemiologist with the National Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, said studies are being carried out with coal miners, but research involving workers in the oil shale industry is limited.

Until now, Ms. Kreiss said, the hospital "didn't have the capability to go out into the workplace to check occupational hazards. Now we have that capability, but it will be done only with the permission of the industry involved."

She has conducted preliminary studies of oil shale workers' health and safety since 1980 while on assignment from the federal group to the Colorado Department of Health.

Letting cheaters play is good for competition, Justice says

WASHINGTON (AP)— The Justice Department says competition could suffer if too many firms convicted of bid-rigging are barred from bidding on airport and highway construction projects.

William F. Baxter, head of the department's antitrust division, has asked officials in 13 states and the Transportation Department to consider the effects on competition before "debarring" such firms for specified periods of time.

The request, disclosed Monday, come in the wake of the department's bid-rigging probe, which now covers 17 states. The investigation is the biggest antitrust probe in U.S. history.

"The decision whether to debar a guilty firm or individual is properly subject to the discretion of the relevant state or federal authority. I would urge you, however, to consider the competitive consequences in each case," Baxter said in his letter to the state officials and the federal agency.

"It would be ironic if competition were to be impaired because of additional sanctions derivative from our own enforcement efforts," Baxter's letter continued.

In explaining the reasons for his request, the assistant attorney general said, "Less competition could be the result if debarment of many firms within a region during the same period left only a handful of firms eligible to bid."

Baxter vowed that the antitrust division's bid-rigging probe will continue despite his concerns about the effect on competition.

Baxter's letter was sent to the state attorneys general in Florida, Georgia, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Those 13 states are among those where the department has brought bid-rigging cases.

Amoruso AAPG's 1982-83 president-elect

Amoruso

John J. Amoruso, and independent geologist from Houston, has been elected 1982-83 president-elect of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

AAPG, with 35,000 members in 80 countries, is the world's largest professional geological association.

A Certified Petroleum Geologist, Amoruso has been a member of AAPG since 1958 and has served the association in a variety of capacities, including presidency of the Gulf Coast Association of Geological Societies in 1981-82.

He earned a B.S. degree in geology from Tufts College in 1952 and an M.S. degree in geology from the University of Michigan in 1957. His petroleum industry experience includes service with Stanolind Oil & Gas Co. and Pan American Petroleum Corp.

Other officers elected by AAPG for the 1982-83 term include John M. Parker, a consulting geologist from Englewood, Colorado, president; John P. Lockridge, president of Mountain Petroluem Corp., Denver, vice president, and Norman H. Foster, an independent geologist from Denver, treasurer.

Likely candidates meet with AFL—CIO

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The AFL-CIO, its relations with the Reagan administration seemingly as strained as ever, begins a policy-making meeting today featuring appearances by three likely 1984 Democratic presidential aspirants.

The federation's executive council also is expected to renew AFL-CIO opposition to President Reagan's social and defense policies in a three-day meeting that convenes a year after the chief executive infuriated big labor by firing some 11,500 striking air traffic controllers.

The 33-member executive council, which wooed former Vice President Walter F. Mondale and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., at the federation's convention here last November, has invited three presumed White House aspirants.

Over the next three days, the labor chiefs will meet privately with Sens. Alan Cranston of California, John Glenn of Ohio and Gary Hart of Colorado.

"We had Mondale and Kennedy last fall so we thought this would be a good opportunity to give some others a chance," federation spokesman Rex Hardesty said.

The AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education briefed labor leaders Monday on prospects for the November congressional elections, in which unions hope to reverse some of the losses they suffered in the Reagan presidential landslide two years ago.

Later in the week, the executive council will get a report from a political works committee on the progress of the AFL-CIO's plans to abandon its traditional neutrality during the presidential primary season.

Federation President Lane Kirkland has said he hopes "a consensus" can be reached on a Democratic candidate either in late 1983 or the first stages of the 1984 primary campaign season.

Kirkland wants to convene the AFL-CIO's general board, consisting of the leaders of about 100 union affiliates, to seek such a unified labor stance on the 1984 campaign. Two-thirds of the general board members would have to agree on a candidate before the AFL-CIO could make such an endorsement.

Relations between Reagan and big labor seemed to improve after a peacemaking session at the White House last Dec. 2. But in recent weeks, direct contact between the administration and the AFL-CIO has been infrequent.

Kirkland did meet July 26 at the White House with Vice President George Bush, but there has been no indication what transpired at that session.

Meanwhile, a new dispute has erupted between the administration and the AFL-CIO on the highly emotional question of whether an anti-union group should be authorized to receive money from a federal charity fund-raising drive.

Several union leaders protested on Monday the inclusion of the Right to Work Legal Defense Foundation in the Combined Federal Campaign, a fund-raising charity drive affecting 2.7 million government workers.

Following a meeting of union leaders, Kirkland said it was decided to seek expulsion of the right-to-work group from the 1982 campign.

But Kirkland also said the labor leaders concluded a boycott of the charity drive would be a bad move "because to do so would damage the many worthy organizations that we think serve a vital purpose in our society."

He said the approximately 1 million federal employees who belong to unions are being urged to designate which charities they wish to receive their contributions, so that no union member's money will be donated to the right-to-work group, whose mission is to protect workers from pressure to join unions.

Kirkland said, however, that a recent decision allowing the right-to-work group to receive money from the drive "can't help but impair the degree of enthusiasm" of federal workers who belong to unions.

Kirkland said the Reagan administration was responsible for the decision "through the OPM (Office of Personnel Management) and its control of the committee which screens" eligibility for participation in the drive.

Moe Biller, president of the American Postal Workers Union, and a participant in Monday's session here, said a boycott "just would be wrong. Charity is part of what this country is all about."

Top salesmen win customers with hypnotic suggestion

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Top salespeople don't make customers stare at a swinging watch or intone, "Your eyelids are getting heavy." But they use indirect hypnotic suggestion to sell everything from cars to oil and gas leases, a pyschologist says.

Successful sellers "instinctively use weapons from the arsenal of the skilled clinical hypnotist" to get customers' attention, confidence and interest, Dr. Donald Moine said Monday.

Interviewed by telephone at his Redondo Beach, Calif., home, Moine said the best salespeople use indirect hypnosis on their customers without even knowing it.

Moine, 28, published the findings of his two-year study of 70 salespeople, comparing superstars and average achievers, in the August issue of Psychology Today.

He told of sales wizards who intuitively lure customers into a state of mild hypnotic suggestion — not with what they say, but how they say it.

He described salesmen who breathe in and out at the same time as their customers, who act depressed if the customer is depressed, who are so determined to gain sway over others that they practice their techniques on wives and waitresses.

"By changing their speech rate, volume and tone, they can give certain phrases the effect of commands," Moine said.

First, the salesman relaxes and wins over the customer by "hypnotic pacing" — matching the customer's physical movements, posture, mood, voice tone and speech rate.

Moine recalled a Cessna jet salesman who dressed, spoke and acted like a banker but "changed just like a chameleon" to match his customer: "If he was selling a farmer, he was a farmer. If it was a doctor, he was a doctor."

Having won a customer's confidence, the salesman then proceeds with the pitch, linking fact with suggestion, just like a hypnotist. "You're listening to my voice, and your eyelids are getting heavy," becomes "you're 27 years old, and we figure you need $50,000 life insurance," he explained.

Other techniques of indirect hypnosis can be used to sell real estate, stocks or computers. "Some of the top salesmen do almost nothing but tell stories or parables," Moine said. "They talk about their grandmother or about walking their dog. They break all the rules and make hundreds of thousands of dollars a year."

The reason: When a story begins, critical judgment ends. "The customer goes into an entertainment mode and relaxes. When he came in, he was on the alert for a sales pitch," he said.

If the customer smiles, the seller may nod hypnotically, and perhaps even reach over with a pat on the shoulder, establishing "a hypnotic anchor." At the end, the pat is repeated.

These links between sales and hypnosis have gone virtually unnoticed, Moine said.

"They teach salespeople things like time management, but when the best salesmen try to pass it on to others, it usually doesn't work. They can't teach the magic they do."

The magic has a method that works so well some salespeople feel guilty. "I had one salesman for an oil and gas leasing company tell me that only one of his customers in two years took the time to read a prospectus," Moine said.

Loggers say Japanese made chip price dip, going to court

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A $60 million antitrust suit has been filed against 27 Japanese paper manufacturers and trading companies, accusing them of conspiring to depress American wood chip export prices.

The suit was filed Monday by an export cooperative for Northern California lumber companies, North Coast Export Co. of Eureka and its operating arm, North Coast Export Cooperative Inc. Wood chips are used in paper production.

The defendants included Mitsui and Co. USA, Daishowa Paper Manufacturing Co. and two subsidiaries, Mitsubishi Corp., Marubeni Corp. and subsidiaries, Sumitomo Corp. and subsidiaries, the Japan Paper Association and the Japan Paper Manufacturer's Association.

The suit also alleges the defendants boycotted the California cooperative when it stopped delivering wood chips at the allegedly illegally depressed prices.

The suit said the defendants conspired to fix prices, divide the market and boycott the American companies, and that these actions caused damages believed to be in excess of $20 million. Triple damages, or $60 million, can be awarded if the suit is successful.

The suit stemmed from a 1981 breach-of-contract action by Diashowa against the cooperative. Diashowa alleged North Coast repudiated its wood chip contract in 1981 when the market price exceeded the contract price.

In May, U.S. District Judge Robert Aguilar issued an injunction ordering the Japanese firm to stop the alleged boycott. But he refused to require that before Diashowa bought any chips in the United States it had to give North Coast Export "the right of first refusal on the sale."

The judge turned down a Diashowa request to dismiss antitrust claims and defenses asserted by North Coast. He ruled U.S. antitrust law applied to Japanese companies and said the evidence "raises serious questions of illegality under the antitrust laws."

The new suit alleged that since before 1974, the defendant and others conspired to restrain and monopolize the wood chips trade.

Recently, some Japanese companies have come under fire for alleged business improprieties, such as allegations that some employees of Japanese companies tried to buy U.S. technology secrets and antitrust allegations that Japanese steel was illegally dumped.

Chrysler asks union for cut in benefits

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — Chrysler Corp., saying it spends "too much money" on workers' medical care, is asking the United Auto Workers for cuts in worker pension and medical benefits.

"We're more than willing to address (the union's) problems," Thomas W. Miner, Chrysler vice president of industrial relations, said at a news conference Monday. "But in order to generate revenue in which to raise benefits costs and rates, we simply must look at areas where cost savings are possible."

The company planned to complete submitting written proposals to the union today. The two sides are negotiating a contract to replace the current one, which expires Sept. 14.

Miner said the No. 3 U.S. carmaker wants autoworkers to help pay for medical costs through co-payments and deductibles — an idea repeatedly rebuffed by UAW President Douglas A. Fraser.

"We estimate that our medical care costs will be $750 per vehicle in 1982," Miner said. "We say that's too much money. And there's no incentive for any cost savings ... Chrysler is paying the bill, so who cares?"

Currently, no co-payments or deductibles are included in autoworker health plans, Miner said.

Chrysler has 43,200 autoworkers on the payroll, with another 40,000 on indefinite layoff.

The pension program, allowing anyone with 30 years' service to retire, also is too costly, Miner said.

Chrysler has about 40,000 retired autoworkers — nearly equal the number at work — and "it means that each active Chrysler worker has the benefit package on his back for one other," he said.

At General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co., there are at least two active workers for each retiree.

"That cost in 1982 (for Chrysler retirees) is going to be about $10,000 per (working) employee," Miner said, noting that employees who start working at age 17 can retire at 47.

"They're retiring earlier and living longer," he said.

The company wants to "reduce the incentive for workers to retire early" perhaps by putting a minimum age limit on retirements, Miner said.

Karl Mantyla, UAW spokesman, said the union had no comment.

Rested Cubs' short homestand spotlight for fans

The Clown Prince of Baseball, San Diego trip highlight return

Max Patkin, the Clown Prince of Baseball, will go through his crowd pleasing antics tonight at Cubs Stadium as Midland opens a five-game homestand against San Antonio.

Despite the longest swing trip of the year to the Texas League East, the Midland Cubs should be well rested for today's 7:30 p.m. series opening game with Western Division leader San Antonio.

Rain wiped out three games with the Jackson Mets and the Cubs have been sitting around for the better part of a week. The eastern rain could have been a blessing in disquise since the Cubs had lost five of seven games on the road trip. The games with Jackson are forever lost since the two clubs don't meet again this year. Midland finished with a 4-3 record against Jackson for the year. The Cubs were 1-1 against Jackson, but lost four of five in a stop at Shreveport.

Despite the poor performance on the road, the Cubs moved to within 1½ games of San Antonio. That makes this week's five-game series at Cubs Stadium even more important to the two clubs involved.

The Cubs were only one-game out of first after Saturday, but San Antonio defeated Arkansas, 2-0, Sunday to regain the ½-game. San Antonio, who has had its own problems with the East Division, is 19-19 in the second half while Midland is 17-19.

The Cubs just haven't played well on the road this year and feel they must make up ground while at home. But despite the road disaster of the current trip, the Cubs were able to gain ground and are now at home in hopes of overtaking the Dodgers.

Three nights will be special occassions on the short homestand, which runs through Saturday. Tonight's game will feature the antics of Max Patkin, the Clown Prince of Baseball. He will strut his stuff during the game today.

Friday is two-for-one beer night and Saturday's game is a joint venture of the Midland Association of Retarted Citizens and Taco Villa. During the game, an all expenses paid trip for two to San Diego will be awarded to some lucky fan. The trip will include air fare, motel and tickets to three San Diego Padres-Chicago Cubs games. Tickets for that game may be purchased at Taco Villa and half the proceeds will go to the MARC.

The swing east was not a good one for most of the Cubs as batting averages, for the most part, took a tumble. Joe Carter had the hottest stick with a 10-for-27 road trip with two homers and five RBI. Carger raised his average from .301 to .307, and he now has 18 homers. Reserve catcher Don Hyman was the only other Cub to raise his average on the trip with a 4-for-12 performance to raise his average from .217 to .231.

Mike Kelley leads the Cub hitters with a .322 average, but Carmelo Martinez is only a point back at .321. Fritz Connally is still the major RBI threat for the Cubs with 81 RBI and also leads the Cubs with 21 homers. Martinez has 20 and is followed by Carter with 18 and catcher Mike Diaz with 17.

Other Cubs hitting over .300 for the year are Henry Cotto, .304; Connally, .313; and Dave Owen, .308.

Martinez has driven in 68 runs to follow Connally in that category while Carter has 63 and Diaz 55 RBI.

Texas deals with Expos

Flynn headed for Canada

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Montreal Expos have "agreed in principle" to acquire infielder Doug Flynn from the American League's Texas Rangers for an undisclosed amount of cash or a player to be named later.

Expos President John McHale made the announcement here Monday night, prior to the first of the Expos' four games against the Philadelphia Phillies.

McHale said he didn't want to make a flat announcement that Montreal had acquired Flynn because Rangers officials have been unable to reach Flynn to notify him of the deal.

"I'm borrowing a term from a State Department news release that we have reached agreement 'in principle,' " Mchale said.

McHale said Texas wanted to hold up the announcement until 11 a.m. EDT Tuesday.

Flynn, 31, hit .211 in 88 games with the Rangers through Sunday. He scored 13 runs and 57 hits with 19 RBIs.

The Expos probably will use Flynn, who was a member of the 1975 and 1976 world champion Cincinnati Reds, at second base, where this year they already have used six players.

Bryan Little, who started against the Phillies Monday night, was the sixth Expos second baseman of 1982.

Wallace Johnson was the opening-day second baseman and started 10 games. Rodney Scott played the position in five games, Frank Taveras in 17, Time Raines in 36, Mike Gates in 29 and Little in four.

McHale declined to say that Flynn would be the Expos seventh second baseman of the season.

"That's up to (Manager) Jim Fanning," McHale said. "I get the talent and he plays it. I like that he (Flynn) plays both positions (second and shortstop). I like middle infielders."

The Montreal president said he had superscout Eddie Lopat watch Flynn in the player's last nine games.

"Obviously he (Lopat) liked him or we wouldn't get him," Mchale said.

Mrs. Robinson rides America's black earthquake with class

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Those early years when Jackie Robinson was adding a different hue to baseball were turbulant and trying ones, but Jackie and his wife Rachel rode the waves together.

"We loved each other and we battled the problem together," says the gracious, classy widow, recalling the stormy period when Jackie, as a black man, was breaking down the curtain of what had been a strictly white man's game.

Commissioner Bowie Kuhn called it an "earthquake in America — the country trembled."

"I attended most of the games then and I'm not sure the abuse Jackie took didn't offend me more than it did him," Rachel related. "I had to just sit there. At least, Jackie was on the field. He could take out his anger in the game."

Robinson's role as the first black man in the majors and later the first to be named to the Hall of Fame became virtually the theme of the 1982 celemonies, which saw the induction of two of the game's greatest black stars, Hank Aaron and Frank Robinson, az well as former Commissioner A.B. "Happy" Chandler and oldtime New York Giants shortstop Travis Jackson.

The festivities were climaxed Monday when the U.S. Postal Service issued a Jackie Robinson commemorative stamp, loosing another torrent of tributes to the Brooklyn Dodgers' black pioneer, who died at age 53 in October 1972.

Now Rachel is carrying on the fight, contending that "much is yet to be done, the challenge is ongoing."

"Jackie didn't just fight it on the ball field. He continued to battle for human rights the balance of his life," she said.

Attired in an ankle-length white dress and with a little gray showing in her hair, she was easily the star of the show. Everybody remarked about her tremendous poise, grace and articulate response.

Two huge replicas of the Jackie Robinson stamp, designed by Jerry Pinkney, stood on each side of the rostrum, and the faces of her closest family members — son David, 30; daughter Sharon, 31; grandchildren Sonya, 16, and little Jessie, 3; Jackie's older brother, Mack, and sister, Willie Mae — beamed from the front row of the stands in Cooper Field.

Once while Rachel was giving her emotional speech, Jessie yelled, "Hi, grandma." The widow smiled, waved and continued without a hitch.

Rachel hasn't forgotten that crusading period when abuse of fans, opposing players and even teammates, cut deeply.

The Robinson display in the Museum, which includes blown-up action portraits and relics of his playing days, also relates the circumstances under which Rickey brought the young athlete to Brooklyn in 1947.

Rickey used a Biblical ploy, gently slapping Jackie on the cheek and reminding him "always turn the other cheek, don't fight back."

"That was very contrary to Jackie's nature," Rachel recalled. "He was always very assertive, very competitive.

"Surely we talked about it afterward at home. But it was a very subdued, unemotional kind of conversation. Jackie was careful not to upset me.

"When the anger swelled up too much inside him, he would go out and hit golf balls."

Prior to the pre-noon stamp ceremonies, Rachel escorted her large family flock through the museum with its walls of copper plaques, pictures and game memorabilia.

"I think what Jackie did had greater impact on the nation as a whole. Everybody understood baseball. If there was injustice on the ballfield, there must be injustice everywhere."

Midland baseball teams win in state tournaments

Midland was a double winner Monday as Elcor Chemical in the Senior Tournament in Waco and Midland Western Trott & Co., in the Sophomore Tournament in San Angelo came away with opening-round victories.

Elcor, after trailing 1-0 for the first few innings, scored two runs in the fourth and three in the fifth to take a 5-1 lead and went on to defeat Tyler 5-3

Kenny Robertson struck out 10 batters while walking four to pace the Midlanders to victory while Yancy Price suffered the loss.

Robertson also helped his own cause at the plate as he knocked in Jose Carrasco and Scott Carrell with a double to give Elcor a 2-1 lead.

Barry Blackwell led off the big fifth inning with a walk, went to second on Randy Pepper's single and to third when Pepper was forced out on a fielder's choice leaving Botley at first.

Jose Carrasco singled to bring Blackwell home for the first run of the inning. Elcor came up with a big threat when Monte Chastain loaded the bases when he reached on an error. Mike Mercurio singled in one run and Joe Williamson walked to score the final.

Tyler's attempted rally in the seventh inning fell short as only two runs were able to cross the plate.

In San Angelo, Midland Western Trott & Co., scored the winning runs in the bottom of the fourth for a 6-4 victory over Conroe and will play in Saturday's second-round game against San Angelo.

MWT&C overcame a 1-0 defecit in the first inning when George Matta drilled a two-run home run for a 2-1 lead. Conroe went up 3-2 in the third inning only to see the Tall City team rally to knot the score in the bottom of the frame. Conroed took the lead for the final time in the fourth inning, 4-3. Home runs by Paul Colwell and David Gazan, a two-run blast, punched MWT&C into the lead for the final time.

Terry Baxter struck out seven batters while walking none to gain the victory.

Richard suffers first loss, gets promoted to AAA

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — J.R. Richard, the 6-foot-8 right-hander, has completed a tour of duty with the Class A Daytona Beach Astros in his comeback from a life-threatening stroke two years ago.

Richard, who has been promoted to the Houston Astros' Triple A farm club in Tuscon, Ariz., pitched nine innings Monday night in the team's 4-1 loss to the Tampa Tarpons.

He yielded 11 hits, walked two and struck out nine, while absorbing his first loss since launching his comeback June 28.

Richard, who compiled a 3-1 record in six appearances with Daytona Beach, gave up two runs in the second inning, one in the third and one in the eighth.

A crowd of 3,539 at City Island Stadium, where a banner was hung behind home plate saying, "Good Luck J.R. — See You In The 'Dome," gave Richard a standing ovation when he struck out the final batter.

Sutcliffe handcuffs Texas, Cruz doubles Astros win

By the Associated Press

Bo Diaz drove in both runs with his 17th home run and a sacrifice fly Monday night as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Montreal Expos 2-1.

Larry Christenson, 7-5, scattered eight hits over seven innings before leaving with a sore back and then got shutout relief help from Ron Reed and Tug McGraw, who posted his fifth save of the season. Christenson had back spasms and was carried out on a stretcher from the dugout.

Bill Gullickson, 8-9, was the loser although he gave up just five hits.

The Expos took a 1-0 lead in the third, on Gary Carter's RBI groundout. Diaz tied the score in the fourth when he led off with his homer.

The Phillies scored the game-winning run in the fifth. Ivan DeJesus walked with one out and raced to third on Gary Matthews' second double in the game. Mike Schmidt was intentionally walked to load the bases before Diaz hit a sacrifice fly.

Elsewhere in the National League, Mario Soto tossed a six-hitter and Mike Vail singled twice and drove in two runs to lift the Cincinnati Reds to a 5-1 victory over Los Angeles, ending the Dodgers' four-game winning streak.

Atlanta reeled off five consecutive two-out RBI singles in the third inning, including one by pitcher Bob Walk, as the Braves snapped a four-game losing streak with a 7-3 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Jose Cruz hit a two-run double in the eighth inning to cap a five-run rally that lifted the Houston Astros to a 6-4 victory over the San Diego Padres.

In the American League, John Tudor posted his first victory in six weeks with relief help from Bob Stabley as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Baltimore Orioles 5-2.

Alfredo Griffin drove in three runs and Buck Martinez and Damaso Garcia each knocked in a pair as the Toronto Blue Jays trounced the Milwaukee Brewers 9-4.

Rick Sutcliffe pitched a five-hitter and Mike Fischlin's two-run single keyed a six-run second inning as the Cleveland Indians downed the Texas Rangers 6-2.

Frank White singled with one out in the 10th and scored on a bloop double by Don Slaught as Kansas City edged the Detroit Tigers 6-5 for the Royals' fifth straight win.

In a contest that lasted nearly five hours, Johnny Ray hit a two-run triple with one out in the 17th inning, giving the Pittsburgh Pirates a 4-2 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals in the National League's longest game of the ear.

Rickey Henderson stole his 100th base of the season, tying his American League record, and scored the winning run in a four-run seventh inning which gave the Oakland A's a 6-5 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

Ron Washington's two-run single in the ninth capped a furious Minnesota rally as the Twins scored nine times in the last three innings to down California 9-7, dropping the Angels .002 behind first-place Kansas City in the American League West.

Henderson steals 100th base easily

OAKLAND (AP) — Rickey Henderson made No. 100 look easy in his chase after Lou Brock's stolen base record, which appears to have about three weeks of life remaining.

"It's good to get to 100. Now I can start concentrating on getting to 118. I think I'll be able to relax for the next 15 or 16, then there will be some pressure," said Henderson, who equaled his American League record of 100 steals in a season while helping the Oakland A's beat the Seattle Mariners 6-5 Monday night.

Brock stole 118 bases for the St. Louis Cardinals in 1974, erasing the major league record of 104 set by the Los Angeles Dodgers' Maury Wills in 1962.

Houston changing predictable offense

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — The statistics tell the grisly truth and Houston Oiler offensive coordinator Jim Shofner didn't try to sweep them under a rug.

"We were definitely too predictable last year," Shofner said as he pondered last year's 7-9 fizzle.

"After the fourth game last year we felt we had to draw back and give the ball to Earl (Campbell). We decided we had one superstar so let's use him."

It didn't work. The Oiler total offense ranked fourth in the National Football League in 1980 when Coach Bum Phillips took them to the playoffs for the third straight year.

Last season, the rank dropped to 27th, a plunge aided largely by an unsettled quarterback situation.

New Coach Ed Biles had gone to his first camp a year ago with grand plans to open up the Oiler offense. He would use a multiple scheme, give Campbell an occasional rest, get him into the passing patterns and expand on the passing game.

It all started to come apart before camp even started when Ken Stabler announced his retirement. Shortly after training camp started, quarterback Gifford Nielsen departed for most of the season with a shoulder injury and Stabler tried to come to the rescue.

"You hate to put it on one position (quarterback), but that's what it was," Shofner said. "Kenny came back and he was not in shape and because of that we went into the fourth game against the (New York) Jets in the I formation. We didn't line up in anything else for eight or nine games."

Stabler has been waived to make room for promising rookies Oliver Luck of West Virginia and Ron Reeves of Texas Tech and Nielsen returned in the final three games last season to claim the starting job.

Now Shofner is starting all over in training camp, putting in the offense he wanted to use a year ago.

"But we're farther ahead than we were at this time last year because Gifford came back the last three games and proved he was ready to play," Shofner said. "This year we've got to stay on the field longer and we've got to convert more third downs.

Louganis best when he takes a dive

He outgraced a pair of Soviet divers Monday to win the gold medal in the men's springboard competition. The United States earlier got a gold at the meet's first diving event when Megan Neyer of Mission Viejo, Calif., won the women's springboard championship on saturday.

Louganis chose 11 tough dives and executed them almost flawlessly to earn 752.67 points, 116.52 points ahead of silver medal winner Serge Kuznin of the Soviet Union. A 2-3 showing by Kuznin and teammate Alexander Portov, who got the bronze medal with 631.56 points, gave the Soviets their first medals after four days of final events at the four-sport aquatic championships.

Louganis, a 22-year-old drama student at the University of California at Irvine, had no sooner stepped down from the winners' tribune than he began talking about the platform competition coming up friday and saturday.

"I feel strong for the platform, although I'm glad there is a three-day break before they begin," he said. "I'm real tired."

Louganis received wild applause from when he went from one difficult dive to another beginning with his eighth, a seemingly effortless reverse 1½ somersault that five out of seven judges rated a perfect 10. His choice of difficult dives, combined with the grace of a ballet dancer — he practices five hours daily when not training for diving — put him into what one fan called "a league of his own."

"I like a high level of difficulty," louganis said after the medal ceremony.

Gribble left standing in the blocks

Gribble was left on the starting block in the 100-meter butterfly final Monday night, but he recovered to record his second meet record of the day. He was timed in 53.88 seconds, .07 over the world record, after he went 54.09 in the preliminaries.

"The start really caught me off guard," Gribble said. "The starter's been holding us all through the meet on the first start, and he surprised me. I'm happy with the win, but I would have been happier with a 53.80. That was the fourth time I've been under 54."

A time of 53.80 would have been a world record, but for now Gribble has to be content with having the second through fifth-fastest times in history.

Prado, who will enter Southern Methodist University in Dallas this fall, was not disappointed, however, as he splashed to a time of 4:19.78 in the 400 individual medley, breaking American Jesse Vassallo's four-year-old world mark of 4:20.05.

The partisan Ecuadoran crowd at the Alberto Vallarino pool, largely quiet for the two days of swimming competition, cheered wildly when it realized a South American was going to win the race and possibly set a world record. When the time was posted on the scoreboard, Prado leaped for joy and the crowd loved it.

"The crowd was great for me and helped me a lot, especially in the breaststroke when you can hear the crowd yell 'go'" Prado said. Much of prado's training has come in the United States under Mark Schubert, the U.S. coach here whose regular job is as the coach of the Mission Viejo, Calif., club team. "I'm pretty proud of him," schubert said. "As U.S. coach, I wanted my swimmers to do well, but I also was rooting for Ricardo. In this race, the result was a foregone conclusion the way he has been swimming this year."

Of Gribble, Schubert said, "His start was so terrible that I was afraid he was rushing his stroke in the first 25 meters.

Dorsett heavier but feels good

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Tony Dorsett's marriage is on the rocks, but he says he can handle the emotional strain and give the Dallas Cowboys another All-Pro year in 1982.

His wife, Julie, filed for divorce in June, but the domestic problems haven't kept Dorsett from working perhaps even harder than he did prior to the 1981 season in which he gained 1,674 yards.

"I've always been the type of guy that no matter what was happening on the outside I could keep it in perspective as far as my football was concerned," Dorsett said. "I'll be OK."

Indeed, Dorsett reported to training camp heavier than he has ever been in his six-year National Football League career — 192 pounds.

However, the weight is well distributed.

"Coach (Al) Lavan looked at me and thought I weighed the same as I did last year (185) because the weight looked good," Dorsett said. "It's amazing that I'm carrying that kind of weight and not feel sluggish."

He said the additional weight is an experiment.

"I used to think I was fat if I weighed 190 pounds," Dorsett said. "But I feel good ... I can still move. Maybe I can break more tackles and stay healthier."

Dorsett has looked extremely fast in the early two-a-day Dallas practices.

Watching from the sidelines, scout John Wooten watched a Dorsett explosion up the middle, shook his head and joked: "He'd really be great wouldn't he, if he just had some quickness."

"I feel physically strong and mentally strong," said Dorsett, who finished just 28 yards behind New Orleans' George Rogers for the NFL rushing title.

Dallas is 28-1 in games in which he has rushed for 100 yards or more.

An older Sherrill wouldn't coach at College Station

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Jackie Sherrill, who compiled a 50-9-1 football record at Pittsburgh before signing a 6-year, approximately $1.6 million contract at Texas A&M, says college football is big business.

"Our profession is not what it used to be," said Sherrill, who spoke Monday at the Kings Island Inn during a stop on the NCAA-ABC football promotion tour.

"It's a business operation," he said. "We've made institutions aware during the last six months that the athletic department is a business. You have to deal with management, marketing — all the things you have to deal with in a business. They bring in $5 million or $6 million, and it's not a business?

"Twenty years ago, football coaching was different. You talk about pressure ... the coach has to produce. Twenty years ago was easy. Twenty years ago, how many times did you leave town? If I were 55, I wouldn't be at College Station," he said.

Sherrill, 38, said his salary is not the first of its kind.

"I didn't create it. This is the first time it has ever been publicized. Everyone has been hiding in the woodwork and keeping things private," he said.

Top basketball coaches are the wealthiest, Sherrill said, adding that they can make $300,000 a year by instructing at summer camps alone.

Sherrill reportedly is making roughly $267,000 a year, but the income is not all paid by the school.

He is paid a base salary of $95,000 from athletic department funds, and the rest of the money comes from a television show, a mortgage, two cars and a $200,000 insurance policy.

The hefty salary did have something to do with him choosing Texas A&M, but he also wanted to prove his talents, Sherrill said.

Walton may return to Clippers again

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The San Diego Clippers, encouraged but guardedly optimistic by Bill Walton's spectacular start in his latest comeback bid, say it's too early to start counting on his return.

Walton, his career blunted 2½ years ago at age 26 by a brittle foot, scored 24 points, had 21 rebounds and seven blocked shots Saturday night in his first major test of the injury-prone foot. His performance came Saturday night at Las Vegas in an alumni game between former UCLA and University of Nevada Las Vegas standouts.

But Ted Podleski, general manager of the Clippers, said Monday "One game is just one step back. Every time progress is made you're pleased, but if you don't keep things in the proper perspective you could lose your mind."

Based on what he saw and heard of Walton's effort, Podleski said, "There's no question in my mind he's still the best center in basketball if he's capable of playing."

Walton, still under contract to the Clippers and on the club's injured reserve list, is welcome to attend the Clippers' 1982 training camp, Podleski said, and he "looks like he's capable of playing." However, he said, there "are no promises here, not by the Clippers and not by Bill. He'll be treated like any other player."

Vilas seeking elusive U.S. clay title

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Top-seeded Guillermo Vilas of Argentina won 11 consecutive points in the second set Monday night in overpowering U.S. Junior Davis Cupper Jon Levine, 6-3, 6-2 in opening round action at the $450,000 U.S. Open Clay Court Championships.

Vilas, seeking his first victory here in the only major clay title that has eluded him, scored$four service breaks in the first set. Enjoying his best year since winning 13 tournaments in 1977, Vilas broke the second set open in the third game when he had two aces to take a 2-1 lead. Levine, a 19-year-old from Phoenix, Ariz., then lost his serve at love to give Vilas a 4-1 advantage and lost the match when he double-faulted after trailing 15-40.

"I had to get my pace," said Vilas. "I was not playing well. I was playing point by point."

In the evening's first match Dana Gilbert charged to a comeback 4-6, 7-6, 6-1 upset of third-seeded Zina Garrison in second round women's play.

"She pretty much just wore me down, moving me from side to side," said Garrison, an 18-year-old from Houston who had moved to the No. 17 spot in the computer rankings. "Nothing seem to work. I just couldn't control the ball tonight."

"I got more comfortable and got more confident," said Gilbert. "This summer I feel like I picked up my game. I've been trying to work on my movement and my attitude on the court."

Gilbert, who won the tournament as an amateur in 1978, trailed 0-3 and 2-4 in the second set. The 22-year-old former UCLA student tied the set with her second service break at 4-4 and each player then held serve to force the tiebreaker.

Let Grandpa know the kids miss him.

Give him a call.

The kids are still talking about their weekend with Grandpa. And they want to visit him again. Even if you live in Houston and he lives in El Paso, you can still stay close... by phone.

That's because Long Distance is the little touch that says so much. And when you call on the weekend you can say so much... for less. Just call between 11 pm Friday and 5 pm Sunday, or weeknights between 11 pm and 8 am.

This weekend call anywhere in Texas and talk 10 minutes for $2.34. Or less.

Long Distance. The little touch that says so much.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Any family pet, including bird, can worsen allergies

Dear Dr. Solomon: I got rid of the family dog when my doctor told me it might be causing my daughter's allergy, and her allergy did get better. Now he says I should get rid of the parakeet. Do you think he's got a thing against pets? — Mrs. N.H., Moline, Ill.

Dear Mrs. H.: What your doctor probably has against pets is an awareness that they might be contributing to an allergic reaction. Pets, including birds, can cause such reactions. Microscopic particles from their feathers can contaminate the air in the home, causing a great deal of distress to the susceptible person.

For some patients, treatment by immunotherapy may be successful even while the bird remains in the home; for others, however, the treatment may not be satisfactory. If your daughter's allergic condition is severe, it might be best to part with the bird.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father has diabetes. At his last visit to his doctor, he was told that he had high blood pressure, but the doctor didn't give him anything for it. Would you have any explanation for this? You have written that there are a number of drugs that are valuable in the treatment of high blood pressure, so why shouldn't a doctor use them. — Salvatore, Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dear Salvatore: There are two possible answers to your question that come to mind. In the first place, your father's blood pressure may not have been high enough to warrant treatment. If the pressure was just slightly elevated, the doctor may have decided that the best course of teatment was simply to observe it for a while.

Another possibility is that the doctor was concerned about a possible interaction between any antihypertensive medication he might prescribe and any drug that your father might be taking for his diabetes. Sometimes the combination can produce serious complications.

For example, Dr. Harold Rifkin, of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York, points out that oral diuretics can reduce potassium levels to the point where insulin secretion is inhibited. This possibility emphasizes the importance of bearing in mind that two drugs, each of which may be extremely valuable when used alone, can be dangerous if used haphazardly in combination.

For Mr. O.G. (Dallas, Texas): I have no program in Texas for stopping smoking. The only programs I have are in Baltimore and New York. I no longer inject in the nose and the ears. I now only inject into the arm. This newer, safer, more effective technique, coupled with behavioral education and cleansing the blood of nicotine, is by far better than the old, more painful technique.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a 6-year-old niece who is beginning to develop around the breasts. I know that her mother has had her seen by a doctor, but she doesn't tell me anything and I don't ask. Does something like this continue in a young child? — Agnes, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Agnes: The development of breasts in girls under 8 years of age who give no other evidence of puberty is called "premature thelarche." One study indicated that the condition disappears in about 32 percent of all cases, remains but does not progress in about 57 percent, and continues to enlarge in about 11 percent.

The cause of premature thelarche has not been established, but it apparently has nothing to do with the mother's obstetric history or her use of drugs during the pregnancy.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I feel very guilty about something, and I'm hoping that you can help. I am very close with my sister-in-law, and she has always come to me for advice. She's gone through some very bad times, and about one year ago, she started showing signs of stress. By six months ago, she found it difficult to get out of bed in the morning. Always a loving and attentive wife and mother, she seemd to lose all interest in taking care of her husband and little boy and girl. Because she has never been the type of person to dwell on herself, I became very concerned. Matters kept getting worse, until I stepped in and convinced her to see a psychiatrist. The psychiatrist put her on medication that was supposed to help relieve her depression. That was 2½ weeks ago. She has had no relief from her depression, but she has begun to have side effects. Her mouth is constantly dry; she says her heart is pounding, and she thinks that she has developed stomach problems. I am so frightened that she will give up and stop the therapy and medication altogether. I hate to see her in this situation. — Sarah, N.Y.

Dear Sarah: Your sister-in-law is very lucky to have you for a friend. It is very important that she not stop the medication. Have her call her doctor and talk with him. It usually takes about three weeks for the antidepressant to take effect. I suspect that these side effects are the signal that the medication is beginning to do its job. Soon, your sister-in-law should begin to feel a great deal more like her old self.

For Ms. O.O. (San Diego, Calif.): I think that your pituitary tumor might best be treated by Proton Beam Therapy. I would suggest consideration of Proton Beam Therapy because of your age and since immediate control of symptoms and fertility is not a high priority, and since surgery may represent an excessive risk. This is a relatively new procedure which I have recommended to about a dozen patients. Most of them have had good results. I think that your doctor is quite correct and I concur that you should have human growth hormone. It is currently available from Cadaver Pituitaries, and I recommend its use to you to achieve satisfactory growth. Human's Growth Hormone from Recombinant DNA Technology will soom supplant human pituitary sources, but it's just not available yet.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Penthouse libel case transferred

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The $522 million libel case by Rancho La Costa Inc. against Penthouse magazine has been transferred to a different judge "for administrative reasons," says the presiding judge of the California Superior Court.

Judge David Eagleson on Monday said the reassignment from Kenneth Gale, supervising judge of the south-central court in Compton, to Robert H. O'Brien, a judge in the same court, had no connection with attempts by Penthouse to have Gale disqualified from the case.

"I don't place any stock in that. It was done for administrative reasons and that's the beginning and the end of it," Eagleson said of the reassignment issued Friday. "Judge Gale has other things to do."

Exempted from the transfer was a contempt action still pending against Penthouse lead counsel Roy Grutman. Gale accused Grutman of trying to improperly influence the jury.

Eagleson said it was not known whether a new trial in the case, if one is held, would be tried by O'Brien.

"The next round, if you will, is with the assigned judge," but the case could be reassigned in the future, he said.

The libel suit, filed after a 1975 Penthouse article linked the San Diego County resort with organized crime, has been the subject of seven years of complex legal actions.

They culminated in a 5½-month trial before Gale that ended in May when a jury cleared Penthouse.

However, on July 9, Gale ordered a new trial on behalf of two plaintiffs, La Costa co-founders Merv Adelson and Irwin Molasky, although not for La Costa itself or four corporate subsidiaries that also had been plaintiffs.

Gale ordered the new trial on grounds that Grutman tried to influence the jury and that the jury "should have returned a different verdict."

Penthouse appealed, saying Gale should be disqualified because he failed to acknowledge prior to the trial an acquaintance with a defense witness, confessed Mafia hitman Aladena "Jimmy the Weasel" Fratianno.

Gale said he knew Fratianno only slightly, from his days as a private attorney, and had been told the witness wold give a deposition rather than appear in person.

An appeal was rejected by the 2nd District Court of Appeal and is currently before the state Supreme Court.

Mistrial declared in newspaper suit

HONOLULU (AP) — A mistrial was declared in the city's antitrust challenge to the 20-year-old joint operating agreement between the Honolulu Advertiser and the Honolulu Star-Bulletin.

U.S. District Court Judge Martin Pence declared the mistrial Monday when the six-member jury split 3-3 after two days of deliberations on whether the survival of the Advertiser depended upon its entering into the joint venture with the Star-Bulletin in 1962.

The suit sought to dissolve the agreement, which provided for separate editorial staffs, but joined production, advertising and circulation activities.

The Newspaper Preservation Act grants antitrust exemptions for such agreements if they are necessary for one of the papers to survive.

The city's suit, filed in 1979, claimed the agreement led to unfair and uncompetitive rates for advertising.

Singer Carole King weds ranch foreman

STANLEY, Idaho (AP) — Singer-songwriter Carole King says she's got a friend and husband in Rick Sorenson, the foreman of the isolated Idaho mountain ranch she bought last year.

Carole King

Miss King announced she and Sorenson were married in a sunrise ceremony Sunday at the Robinson Bar Ranch, located on the Salmon River near here.

At a court hearing in May, Sorensen said he owns 5 percent of the historic ranch.

Miss King is involved in a lawsuit over an access road at the ranch. She announced the marriage Monday in a telephone call to a Boise TV station while she was in town to make a deposition in the suit.

She also issued a prepared statement in which she said her life and music "shine like a beacon in the forest of lies and the sea of rumors." Those are the words to a song about herself that she's started but hasn't finished, she added.

Miss King, 41, wrote the hit songs "You've Got a Friend," "It's Too Late" and "So Far Away," among others. She won four Grammy awards for her 1972 album "Tapestry."

Miss King has been married three times before, to Gerry Goffin, Charles Larkey and Rick Evers. The first two marriages ended in divorce and Evers died a few months after their marriage. She has three children.

NEW YORK (AP) — Lionel Hampton, the composer and jazz vibraharpist, has been asked to bring his swinging style to New York City's Human Rights Commission.

Edward Koch

"Lionel is a powerful creative force in American jazz," Mayor Edward Koch said Monday before swearing in Hampton to the unsalaried post on the 15-member panel.

Koch pointed out that the 68-year-old Hampton, who is black, played in the 1930s with one of the first integrated jazz bands in America, the Benny Goodman Quartet.

The Human Rights Commission administers the city's Human Rights Law, which forbids discrimination in employment and housing and works to reduce racial tensions.

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The state attorney general says Neiman-Marcus has settled a lawsuit filed against it for offering items made from endangered species animals at its Beverly Hills store.

Attorney General George Deukmejian said Monday a stipulated judgment was entered without the Dallas-based firm admitting any wrongdoing.

Under the judgment, Neiman-Marcus is enjoined from offering any product made of crocodile, python or any other animal protected by the California endangered species statute. Deukmejian said the products offered at the Beverly Hills store were made of crocodile and python.

In addition, Neiman-Marcus agreed to pay $5,000 in civil penalties, $5,000 as attorney's feees, and $1,785 to the state Department of Fish and Game for investigative expenses.

Neiman-Marcus also agreed to pay $15,000 to be divided equally between the Los Angeles Museum of Natural History Foundation, the Zoological Society of San Diego, and the Fish and Game Reservation Fund, Deukmejian said.

The company must also send a memorandum to its executives about the Neiman-Marcus policy of complying with federal and California endangered species statutes. Buyers will have to carry cards quoting the state law when buying merchandise.

Deukmejian said it is often difficult for executives to comply with the state law because they are not aware that California imposes higher standards than the federal government in protecting endangered species. He said it often takes experts to identify the animals used to make exotic products.

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — A man on a 3,500-mile walk to raise money for the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation was listed in fair condition today after being struck by a hit-and-run driver.

Clint Cook, 32, of Cedar Lake, Ind., underwent surgery Monday night at St. Joseph Hospital for a fractured pelvis and a broken ankle.

He was struck as he walked along Kansas Route 96 near Fredonia early Sunday morning, a Kansas Highway Patrol spokesman said. Another hiker, James Witke, 39, of Hammond, Ind., was not injured.

The two left Indiana in early July to try to raise $50,000 on the walk. They said in an interview with the Independence Sunday Reporter that they were five days behind schedule but still expected to arrive in San Francisco by Nov. 1, the date they set as their goal.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Former first lady Bess Truman, remained in serious but stable condition today following her weekend hospitalization for irregular breathing and pulse, officials said.

The 97-year-old widow of President Harry S. Truman was "looking a lot better" Monday and may be allowed to go home before the week is out, her doctor said.

She was hospitalized early Sunday for hyperkalemia, a buildup of potassium caused by diminished kidney function.

"Her pulse is good...she's looking a lot better," said Dr. Wilson Miller, who is attending to Mrs. Truman while her regular physician, Dr. Wallace Graham, is out of town.

Miller said both Mrs. Truman's pulse and respiration have improved. He said a decision on when she can return to her Independence home probably will be made when Graham returns to Kansas City Wednesday.

"I think she'll be about ready to go home at the end of the week," Miller said.

LONDON (AP) — Cathleen Nesbitt, the British character actress whose career spanned 70 years and who played Mrs. Higgins in the original 1957 New York production of "My Fair Lady," has died at the age of 93, her family announced today.

She died peacefully at home on Monday.

Her roles on stage ranged from Perdita in "The Winter's Tale" to Honor Brady in "The Playboy of the Western World" and Julia in "The Cocktail Party."

Her film appearances included "An Affair to Remember," "Three Coins in the Fountain," "Separate Tables" and Alfred Hitchcock's "Family Plot."

Even in her 90s she was in demand, appearing in "The Aspern Papers" in a Chichester Theater production two years ago.

The London Daily Telegraph wrote of Miss Nesbitt:

"As a supporting actress she was an asset to any cast that she was called upon to join; she had a great gift of versatility, and her skill was such that the appearance of her name on the program was a guarantee that a part would be carefully studied and imaginatively played."

In 1921 she married the actor Cecil Ramage. She leaves one son and one daughter.

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — Col. Joseph H. Baugh, a surgeon who treated both President Dwight D. Eisenhower and Gen. Douglas MacArthur, has died of an apparent heart attack at age 56, officials said.

Baugh, commander of Fort Benning's Martin Army Hospital, died Sunday. He had taken part in his retirement ceremony Thursday and was on final leave from service awaiting formal retirement Oct. 1.

Baugh was working in his yard Sunday evening when he felt pain in his back and went inside to lie down, said post public affairs officials. His wife found him and called an ambulance, but Baugh was dead on arrival at the hospital.

A native of Wilmington, Ohio, Baugh served in Europe during World War II, then attended college and medical school, earning a medical degree from the St. Louis University School of Medicine in 1953.

From 1956-1971 he was chief of the Surgery Service and assistant chief of the Department of Surgery at Walter Reed Army Hospital in Washington, D.C.

He operated on Eisenhower in February 1969 for an intestinal obstruction, and had also attended MacArthur at Walter Reed Army Hospital, a spokesman there said.

Flying new plane like something 'in Star Wars'

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LEMOORE NAVAL AIR STATION, Calif. — "Flying this baby is like flying an X Wing in Star Wars," declared Marine Maj. Cliff Wyllie, 26, as he climbed out of the cockpit of the latest supersonic strike attack fighter used by the Navy and the Marines, the FA-18 Hornet.

Wyllie had just returned from mock dogfights over the Nevada desert.

"Flying the Hornet compared to the other Marine jets is like stepping from a World War I Jenny to a Buck Rogers spaceship," Wyllie said.

The Navy and Marines have ordered 1,366 Hornets to replace F-4 Phantom fighters and A-7 Corsair light attack aircraft.

The price tag on each plane is $25.1 million.

The first 17 Hornets to come off the production line are being phased into a training squadron are here at Lemoore, about 60 miles south of Fresno.

A nucleus of 35 pilots and 300 enlisted support personnel make up the instructional squadron.

In the "Hornet's Nest," the squadron ready room, Maj. Don Beufait, 35, explained the mission of the new plane.

"Previous Navy and Marine planes have been either fighters, designed to shoot down other aircraft, or attack planes, designed to destroy targets with air-to-surface bombs, missiles and rockets," he said.

"The FA-18 does both, with the multiple effect giving us added combat effectiveness."

As he was being strapped into the cockpit of one of the Hornets for his two-hour daily run over Nevada, the training squadron's commander, Navy Capt. Jim Partington, 43, observed:

"She turns better and climbs better. The sheer performance and maneuverability of this airplane flying at treetop levels or at 45,000 feet is incredible."

Facing him in the cockpit were three computer consoles.

"As sophisticated as you can get in theso micro-digital times. It takes advantage of all the advances in the state of the art," Partington added, fondly tapping a computer screen.

Partington flew 277 missions in Vietnam as a Navy attack pilot.

Fully loaded, the Hornet is equipped with Sidewinder and Sparrow air-to-air missiles, a 20-millimeter cannon and 19,000 pounds of mixed ordnance in nine places.

Rear Adm. Glen "Corky" Lenox is head of the Hornet program and has been program manager for the Hornet for eight years.

"We don't think there is a better airplane in the world," he said. "It is equally good in its air-to-air capabilities as it is in its air-to-ground."

Capt. Jim Partington is strapped into the cockpit of an FA-18 Hornet before taking off from Lemoore Naval Air Station. Another flyer described piloting the Hornet as "flying an X Wing in Star Wars."

Sources feel coup attempt crushed

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Rebel airmen defied an ultimatum to surrender, seized houses in a Nairobi slum and told residents they were prepared to "fight to the death."

Scattered firing was reported in the Kibera shantytown and other areas around the capital. But most sources said the main force of the attempt Sunday to overthrow President Daniel Arap Moi had been crushed.

Other rebel airmen were seen discarding their camouflage jackets and blue uniform pants and fleeing into the bush.

IN AN ADDRESS to the nation today, Moi called on people to "hunt down those who are armed and hiding in various places," and not to give them refuge.

He also asked for help in cleaning up the city following Sunday's widespread looting. "Because life has been hard for everybody in this short period, we will try and see that life goes back to normal," he said.

Three truckloads of corpses were seen leaving Kibera, but witnesses could not give the number of bodies or say how many might be military personnel and how many civilians. The Nairobi mortuary said 90 bodies had been brought in since the attempted coup Sunday morning, but other sources put the death toll higher than 110.

A government spokesman said Monday that 71 air force personnel had been killed, including 30 at the Eastleigh base, and 300 had been arrested. The newspaper The Nation said government troops arrested more than 1,000 people in massive mop-up operations after the attempt by junior air force officers to overthrow Moi and the government.

Hospitals reported they treated more than 500 wounded, most of them civilians, and said more than 200 were in serious condition.

Moi's military commanders had given the rebels until noon Monday to surrender or be treated "ruthlessly." The government extended the deadline until noon today (4 a.m. CDT), but a clergyman with contacts at the Embakasi Air Force Base 8 miles south of Nairobi said pro-government troops entered the base Monday pretending to join the revolt, then shot rebels still holding out there and secured the base.

There was no official confirmation of the report.

SPORADIC RESISTANCE was also reported at the Eastleigh base, the air force headquarters near Embakasi. But the holdouts did not appear to be a threat to the government.

The government continued a 6 p.m.-to-7 a.m. curfew in Nairobi and Nanyuki, the site of the country's third air base 120 miles north of the capital, for the second night Monday. There was no indication when it might be lifted.

The government also closed the University of Nairobi, charging that some students supported the rebellion and took part in the wholesale looting that devastated shopping areas of Nairobi Sunday.

Occasional gunfire was heard late Monday in Nairobi's downtown shopping district. Military sources said policemen and soldiers were shooting into the air to prevent more looting.

Police Commissioner Fred Waiganjo night urged businessmen and shopkeepers in Nairobi to reopen their businesses today "since the security situation in the city has reverted to normal."

Kenyan and Western observers said the foiled coup would cost the country millions of dollars, deepen its economic slide and increase its dependence on the United States, its main source of economic aid. They said tourism was expected to decline, investments by local and foreign sources would probably fall off, and shortages of consumer items would increase.

Report: Soviets supply most arms

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union, not the United States, is by far the world's largest supplier of arms to the developing Third World, according to a State Department report.

The report, based on "conservative U.S. intelligence estimates," states that over the last 10 years, the Soviet Union delivered 74,000 tanks, aircraft, warships, missiles and other major weapons of war to nations in the Middle East, Asia, Latin America and Africa.

That compares with some 44,000 delivered by the United States, the report said.

It depicts the Soviet Union as escalating arms deliveries in the latter half of the decade from 1972 until now.

"In some weapons categories, Soviet deliveries have exceeded those of the United States for all or most of the decade," the State Department said.

"In the other categories, the Soviets surpassed U.S. deliveries by the mid-1970s," it said. "Today the Soviets exceed U.S. levels in most weapons categories considered in this report," with the exception of certain types of warships.

The report acknowleges that when arms sales to the Third World are measured by dollar values, the United States is ahead of the Soviet Union by a margin of roughly 2 to 1.

"The major reason for this is that well over half the dollar value of U.S. military transfers during this decade consists of construction, training and various other services, not weapons," the department said.

"By providing actual weapons transfer data for the first time, the new report gives the public a choice of perspectives from which to study this important issue," the department said.

The report said the Near East and South Asia make up the greatest Third World regional arms market.

States in that region buy the largest quantities, the greatest variety and the most sophisticated weapons, it said.

"Over the last decade, the region has received about 85 percent of the surface-to-air missiles, and some 70 percent of the heavy and light armor and the supersonic fighters exported," it said, in addition to about half of the artillery, missile-equipped patrol boats and helicopters.

Most of the states of the region have a rudimentary arms producing capacity of their own with major arms industries in Israel, Egypt and India, it said.

It said the Soviet Union does little if any construction in other countries and that training costs borne by Moscow are unknown.

Returnees find shipboard life unpalatable

TABARJA, Lebanon (AP) — The distant thunder of exploding shells shattered the calm aboard the small ferry Liban waiting for docking clearance from an Israeli gunboat off the Lebanese coast.

"Oh, my baby," Catherine Ibrahim, 23, cried softly, clutching a picture of her 6-month-old son, Camille. Her 30-year-old husband, Adel, said they had left the infant with her parents four months ago when they went to Kuwait to work.

"We are worried to death because her parents live south of Beirut where heavy fighting has occurred," said the young father. "We have sent them telegram after telegram but have heard nothing from them."

Government and military authorities estimate up to 1,000 Lebanese a day have been returning from overseas by land and sea since Israel invaded the country eight weeks ago. They come back to be reunited with their loved ones and, if possible, to take them out of their war-torn country.

For most the homecoming is costly.

The Cyprus-Lebanon ferries have tripled their one-way fare to $150 for the 16-hour voyage. A news photographer said he was asked by one ferry to pay $40 extra for a cot on the open deck and $150 extra for a berth in a cabin.

Fady Badawi, a lawyer returning from Saudi Arabia to get his fiancee, said on an earlier trip by land via Syria guards at each of the seven checkpoints between Damascus and Beirut demanded "presents."

"The Lebanese people leaving Damascus for home are routinely told by taxi or bus drivers to take cartons of foreign cigarettes or $10 bills for these boys," he said.

With Beirut closed to air traffic, many travel through Syria. But Lebanese Christians prefer the sea route via Cyprus because the ferries land them in Christian territory.

A Lebanese businesswoman from Marseille, France, said she paid $2,000 to a broker to get a visa for another Arab country for a sister in Beirut.

"A lot of other people have done it through these brokers who hang around the consulates," she said, asking not to be identified. "You just have to pick a right one with right connections."

As the artillery and naval bombardment continued, a group of Moslems knelt to pray at one corner of the sun-baked steel deck of the 235-ton converted military landing ship.

Volunteers take off for Israel

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 200 American volunteers plan to leave New York Wednesday night to work in farming and industry in Israel while Israeli civilians are drafted to fight in Lebanon.

The contingent is the first wave of about 750 volunteers who are to go to Israel in mid-August and early September. They will take up the slack created by the loss of civilians drafted into the Israeli military, said a group spokesman, Eli Meleh.

The 230 people plan to farm, guard settlements and help with industrial work in the Golan Heights area for 30 to 60 days.

Their trip is part of a privately organized plan approved by the Israeli government.

Meir Indor, 33, a captain in the Israeli military who served in Lebanon, came here to coordinate the effort, which has the Jewish Agency as a sponsor and uses office space donated by The Jewish Press.

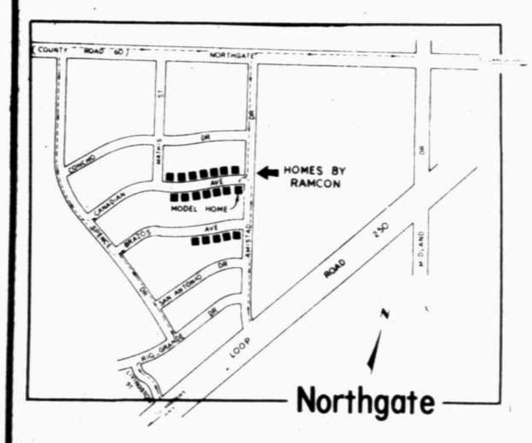
$673.30 Per Month



You can't afford NOT to buy any longer!

Total move in costs of $5250 is based on 5% down or $3800 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first year's payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivas lent to a rate of 10 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be changed at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage bases upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. Annual percentage rate approximately 16.575%.
