Russia to strike 1st

MOSCOW — Abandoning a longstanding Soviet policy, Russia now is ready to launch nuclear missiles in a first strike if it or its allies are attacked with conventional weapons, a top official said Wednesday. The United States and other Western powers have repeatedly refused to rule out a first strike, arguing that such a pledge would diminish the deterrent value of their nuclear arsenals and limit their military options. The new Russian policy is part of a military doctrine approved by President Boris Yeltsin on Tuesday./7A

747 misses runway

HONG KONG — A China Airlines Boeing 747 carrying nearly 300 people missed the runway and hit the sea in heavy rain at Hong Kong's airport Thursday, authorities said. Up to 17 people were reported injured. Rescuers formed a human chain and led all the passengers to safety, Hong Kong radio said. The Taiwanese jumbo jet was arriving at Kai Tak Airport from Taipei, carrying 271 passengers and 22 crew, said China Airlines spokesman Lu Sheng-fang.

Judge allows tape

LOS ANGELES — A crucial tape recording that lawyers for Erik and Lyle Menendez spent three years trying to suppress is admissible in their murder trial, a judge ruled Wednesday. The tape of a therapy session between the brothers and their psychologist, L. Jerome Oziel, had been barred from the trial by the California Supreme Court as an invasion of the psychotherapist-patient privilege.

Parents of Elizabeth Henry identify missing teen's items

By Katherine Poteet
Staff writer

The case of a missing Midland teen-ager moved one step closer to being solved Wednesday after jewelry items found on a ranch northwest of Midland were identified as Elizabeth Henry's by her parents.

The items, a watch and two rings, were found on private property off FM 1788, eight-tenths of a mile north of Highway 158, during a 2½-day search by law-enforcement officials after a skull and other skeletal remains were discovered there Sunday by ranchers who were out hunting.

Police said about 90 percent of a human skeleton had been recovered and would be tested for identification by a forensics anthropologist from Northwest Texas State University in Denton today.

Health insurers defend ad blitz as rhetoric escalates

By Vic Ostrowidzki
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration and the health insurance industry continued sparring Wednesday over the president's plan to restructure the system.

The White House reiterated that it will respond aggressively to attacks, while a major industry trade association said it would continue running ads critical of the plan.

In one of the sharpest attacks so far in the battle over health care overhaul, First lady Hillary Rodham Clinton on Monday accused the health insurance industry of greed and charged that it had broadcast lies about the plan.

"One of the great lies that is currently afoot in the country is that the president's plan will lim-

GOP's gains raise stakes for Richards

■ Although governor is considered popular among state voters, a recent poll shows her with a surprisingly close 8-point lead over George W. Bush.

By Dave Montgomery
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Republicans yesterday gloated over off-year election triumphs in New York, New Jersey and Virginia and intensified their efforts to bring down another big-name Democrat facing re-election next year: Texas Gov. Ann Richards.

President Clinton sought to dismiss any national implications from the races, saying the elections were decided strictly on provincial issues. But Republicans — and many independent analysts — said the Democratic losses resulted from an anti-incumbent rebellion that signaled a strong repudiation of Clinton's policies.

"The president has done a great job for the Republican Party," crowed Rep. Curt Weldon, R-Pa., in sarcastically recommending that Clinton be named honorary Republican co-chairman.

Clinton campaigned for losing Democratic candidates in two of the races and was a political issue in the third. Voters swept out Democratic Gov. Jim Florio in New Jersey and Democratic Mayor David Dinkins of New York. In Virginia, Republican George Allen came from behind in the polls to upset Democrat Mary Sue Terry in the governor's race.

Although Democrats won less-publicized mayoral races in Boston, Pittsburgh and other cities, the contests in New York, Virginia and New Jersey were considered the glamour races that measured Clinton's political strength one year after winning the presidency.

The impact of the East Coast results reached all the way to Texas, raising the stakes for Richards in her bid to win re-election next year. Some Democrats

Packwood vows to serve out term, fight subpoena in court

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a drubbing in the Senate and a call for his resignation, Sen. Bob Packwood said Wednesday he would serve out his fifth term and fight a subpoena for his diaries in court.

Packwood also declared he was "absolutely not" guilty of misconduct in attempts by two lobbyists and two businessmen to hire his wife.

The two lobbyists who offered jobs to Packwood's wife had a direct interest in issues over which the lawmaker held considerable influence.

The Oregon Republican said "that's correct" when asked whether he would serve out his fifth term despite a call from the Senate's senior Democrat for his resignation.

"I would hope just the keeping of a diary is not conduct unbecoming a senator. I would hope raising the Constitution as a de-

State comptroller discusses road ahead for West Texas

By Mella McEwen
Staff writer

State Comptroller John Sharp was in the Permian Basin Wednesday morning to give area businesses and officials an idea of where the area economy is heading.

"We began this project three years ago," Sharp said.

He said state officials began looking at the historical trends and future trends that will affect the state and performed an analysis of both the state and regional economies.

They decided to share those findings to help the state's regions — High Plains, West Texas, Upper Rio Grande, Central Texas, South Texas, Gulf Coast, Southeast, Upper East, Metroplex and Northwest Texas — focus their economic strategies, Sharp said.

Courtroom watches videotape of toddler's abduction

By Karin Davies
Associated Press

PRESTON, England — The videotape shown in a courtroom Wednesday played out every mother's worst fear: her frantic search in vain for her small child, who walks off trustingly with strangers toward a violent death.

The fuzzy images captured by a shopping mall's security cameras led to the trial, now under way, of two youngsters for the abduction and murder of James Bulger, 2.

The boys, now 11, stared intently at the video as it was played by prosecutors. The chubby boys were 10 when the killing occurred, and are the youngest children to be charged in Britain with murder.

They have pleaded innocent, although the prosecution said one of them confessed to the crime under police questioning.

Before the tape was shown, the court heard James' mother describe in a statement her fright at discovering her little boy had vanished.

"He had been at my side while I was being served but when I looked round he was gone. I panicked," Denise Bulger told police on Feb. 13, the day after James disappeared. "I was asking people if they had seen him. Nobody had."

Mrs. Bulger, 25, is pregnant and has not attended the trial, which opened Monday. Her husband, Ralph, 26, skipped Wednesday morning's session to take her to a medical appointment.

The tapes at the Liverpool shopping mall on Feb. 12 showed the two boys, who may be identified by the media only as Child A and Child B, playing with James, then taking him out onto a busy street.

Reconstructing the story from there, the prosecution says they then walked and dragged James 2½ miles across Liverpool.

Expect a return to 80s today

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high in the lower 80s and west winds at 15-25 mph. Tonight should be mostly clear with a low around 40, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Friday should be mostly sunny with a high in the upper 50s to lower 60s.

After an overnight low of 33, Wednesday's high reached 68, compared to the record high for that date of 86 set in 1988. The record low was 18 set in 1991.

STATE

Light rain and drizzle dampened the coastal plains Wednesday afternoon, while scattered patches of light rain also skipped across parts of the deep south.

The cold front which moved into the western sections of North Texas dissipated, causing winds to gradually shift to the south and southwest across the entire region.

Temperatures rose into the 60s across most of North Texas, but thick low clouds remained over eastern sections, keeping temperatures in the 50s. In contrast, Abilene was reporting clear skies with temperatures in the middle 60s.

In Amarillo, which was closer to a developing low-pressure area, afternoon winds blew at 30 mph with gusts to 35 mph.

NATION

Fierce wind gusted in the West on Wednesday and rain stretched from Texas to New England.

Wind near 50 mph damaged roofs and power lines in the Yakima Valley of Washington state. The National Weather Service issued advisories for blowing dust in the Columbia Basin of Oregon.

ROAD: Sharp discusses area's economy

(From 1A)

some good things down the road. He said residential permits are up 23 percent over the last year.

Along with Sharp, Don Hoyte, a regional analyst with the comptrollers office, discussed economic conditions.

Hoyte said his office is forecasting a very modest 0.9 percent growth for West Texas for the remainder of the decade, as opposed to a 1.9 percent growth for the state overall.

But, he said, the area had been looking at a 2 percent decline in recent years.

The comptroller's office forecasts that the region will add 16,700 jobs, with total employment rising from 183,200 jobs in 1990 to approximately 200,000 in the year 2000.

Hoyte said oil and gas will continue to play a large part in the West Texas economy, though the mining industry — which includes oil and gas — will see only a 0.1 percent annual growth over the entire decade and prices are expected to remain flat.

By the year 2000, officials say, mining employment will represent only 2 percent of total Texas employment, but nearly 15 percent in West Texas.

Bright spots for the area include business services, which Hoyte said are growing strongly, and health care, which could grow even more as Mexico's markets expand, Hoyte said.

According to the comptroller's office forecast, the fastest growing sector will be in services, which should grow by 1.7 percent annually. It is expected to add 2,400 jobs, with the sector growing from 44,600 in 1990 to 47,000 in 2000.

Both manufacturing and construction employment will grow at an average annual rate just above 2 percent, with 2,000 manufacturing jobs expected to be added during the 1990s, Hoyte said.

Retail sales are forecast to grow at 5 percent annually, to nearly $6 billion in 2000.

Though the oil and gas industry is expected to remain flat, Hoyte said West Texans can take advantage of both their oil and gas expertise and the area's proximity to Mexican markets to boost its economy.

As Mexico continues to open its markets, he said, local residents stand ready to offer such services as engineering and petroleum consulting services.

"Mexico has been opening its markets since 1986, when it joined GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade)," he said. "That will continue with or without the North American Free Trade Agreement."

He praised the area's aggressive efforts to attract businesses from California, efforts that have successfully persuaded four California companies to relocate to the area.

He said Midland and Odessa will benefit greatly from the Census Bureau's decision to combine the two cities into one metropolitan statistical area.

"This gives Midland-Odessa a higher profile (and) gives companies more incentive to relocate there," he said. He said the combination has moved the two cities from around 250 into the top 150 MSAs, which will at least give Midland-Odessa more chances to survive the first cut when companies consider areas for relocation.

Economist Ray Perryman, who also participated in the economic discussion, focused his attention on Texas as a whole, and said the state's future is bright.

The state — and the country — will benefit greatly from NAFTA, he said, predicting it will be a tough fight but the agreement will pass.

In addition, he said, the state is outperforming the national economy and has become a leader in job creation.

"We're got all the pieces in place for the long-term," Perryman said. "We have the right mix of businesses, a growing and young population, excellent human, capital and natural resources."

ITEMS: Parents identify teen-ager's jewelry day denied that any of the personal items found at the site had been identified, Midland Police Det. Rick Gilley said Wednesday that the watch was shown to Ralph and Lynn Henry on Monday, a ring was shown to them on Tuesday and he contacted the couple Wednesday about a class ring that had been found with Miss Henry's name on it. The couple positively identified the watch and the first ring as Miss Henry's, Gilley said.

Henry said Wednesday that he and his wife had seen the items and told police they were Miss Henry's, but he did not comment further on the discovery or the ongoing investigation.

Sgt. John Ingram, who has been working on Miss Henry's case since she was first reported missing, said the Henrys' confirmation of the jewelry was the first step toward solving the case since the teen disappeared two years ago.

"We had very few leads and those just went nowhere," he said. "This is the only real movement we've had in this case."

Although the remains have not been identified as Miss Henry's, Ingram said he believes they are hers.

"What are the chances of those items turning up in the same area as human bones and them not being related?" Gilley said.

If the remains are determined to be the missing teen-ager's, Ingram said the case will no longer be classified as a missing person, the Midland office of the FBI will step out of the investigation and the Midland Police Department will begin investigating the case as a homicide.

If the remains cannot be identified today, they will be shipped to Albuquerque, N.M., to a forensics expert who deals with dental evidence.

Ector County Medical Examiner Dr. Sparks Veasey estimated that the bones were on the property for approximately one to five years, a time frame that only fits Miss Henry among Midland's list of missing persons.

Miss Henry disappeared from her home at 3610 Apollo Court on Aug. 19, 1991, after she placed a 911 call, which ended after she said she had been tied up by her boyfriend and then screamed.

After the call, police arrived at the home to find the garage door open, the back door unlocked and no signs of struggle.

The next day, Miss Henry's vehicle was found at the Midland International Airport with her purse still inside.

Since that time, the case has gone nowhere. Local flyers and a nationwide ad campaign in June 1992 didn't turn up any leads.

In December, traces of hair and fiber were found on a Unocal oil lease in Andrews County, but police could not confirm that they belonged to Miss Henry.

The teen-ager is among four Midland women who have disappeared in the past 13 years.

Kristy Lynn Booth, who was 19 at the time, left the now-defunct Dimensions nightclub on Feb. 2, 1980, and didn't return; June Gilkerson, who was 24 on Nov. 8, 1986, was believed to have been abducted and killed after her abandoned car was found; and Carolee Anders disappeared from a 7-Eleven convenience store in February 1985.

(From 1A)

Beside a railway track, they beat him with bricks, stones and a metal bar, kicked him as his blood sprayed over their shoes, poured paint in his eye and stripped him half-naked. His body was cut in two by a passing train.

Child B has confessed to killing James, police say. Child A said he stood by while the other boy hurled bricks and stones at James until the toddler stopped trying to struggle to his feet.

The three boys' paths crossed at 3:41 p.m. James had been taken on a shopping trip. The older boys had skipped school.

Mrs. Bulger said James was in high spirits: He helped himself to some candy in one store, tossed a fallen baby suit over his head and ate a sausage roll for lunch.

With rapt attention the court watched a 16-minute videotape of James' last moments in the mall, compiled from several security cameras.

Defense attorneys agreed with prosecutors that the boys in the tape were Child A and Child B.

The tape, which includes a timer, showed the following sequence of events:

■ 15:37 and 42 seconds: Mrs. Bulger and James head for a butcher's shop.

■ 15.38:55: James, a blond, blue-eyed boy in a blue anorak, walks alone outside the shop door.

■ 15:40:24, Mrs. Bulger searches frantically amid a crush of adults outside the shop, then runs in and out again.

■ 15:41:29: James crosses a plaza in the mall near the two older boys.

■ 15:42:32: James holds Child B's hand.

■ 15:43:08: All three children are outside the mall on a busy street.

James' body was found two days later.

The last moments of the videotape were broadcast in Britain, then around the globe, in February. The sight of James trustingly holding a bigger boy's hand increased the anger of a public already outraged by so repugnant a crime and the young age of the suspects.

If convicted, the judge will order the boys held indefinitely in one of several secure facilities for young, very serious offenders.

Child B's lawyer, Laurence Lee, said the boys, if convicted, will be held "well into adulthood."

Officials liken the facilities to boarding schools rather than prisons. The youths, who do not wear uniforms, receive regular counseling and follow a strict regime of school and sports.

Social workers and psychiatrists make recommendations for release, or continued incarceration, to the legal authorities. The final decision lies with the Cabinet.

Mary Bell, an English girl who was 11 when she strangled to death two small boys in 1968, was held 12 years.

Ten is the youngest age children can face criminal charges in Britain.

GAINS: Rejuvenated GOP turns to Texas

acknowledged that her working friendship with Clinton poses a liability in a state where the incumbent president is immensely unpopular.

"Her biggest handicap is certainly the president," said Austin political consultant George Christian, who served as press secretary for President Lyndon Johnson. "I'm certain if the Republicans tie him around her neck, as they have with candidates in other states, that it could cause problems."

Richards is a close political ally of Clinton and has used her access with the Democratic president to promote Texas issues. She is scheduled to arrive in Washington today for a week-long stay to lobby for the North American Free Trade Agreement,

Although Richards is considered popular among Texas voters, a recent Texas Poll showed her with a surprisingly close 8-point lead over Republican George W. Bush of Dallas. Bush, the oldest son of former President George Bush and managing general partner of the Texas Rangers, is expected to announce his candidacy

GOP Chairman Fred Meyer of Dallas said Republicans plan to link the outcome of this week's races to the Texas campaign by pointing out that candidates aligned with Clinton tend to get defeated.

"It just reinforces the danger signals for Ann Richards," Meyer said. "Her kind of people — the tax and bigger-government folks — are getting beat all over the country."

it choice," she said. "To the contrary, the president's plan enhances choices."

The Health Insurance Association of America (HIAA) immediately defended its ads, saying their accuracy "cannot be questioned."

On Wednesday, White House Budget Director Leon Panetta told reporters that the administration had made a "deliberate decision" to respond "aggressively" to attacks on the plan.

"The decision has been made that the best way to get health care reform enacted is to make clear that you don't allow your opponents to be able to carve away at you day by day," Panetta said, adding that "the administration is not about to become defensive (on) health care. . . . I think you can lose a lot of momentum doing that. We'll aggressively go after those who attack the plan."

Later, HIAA President Bill Gradison said he was "puzzled by the harsh rhetoric" the administration had directed at the industry, especially after the president had sent him a letter Oct. 19 thanking him for the industry's interest in health care reform.

Gradison said the industry's ads, which are part of a $6.5 million media campaign on health care, "will continue to air."

He also said at a news conference that "our ads raise good questions. They ask the public to approach health care reform with open eyes and a healthy degree of skepticism."

The association represents 271 small and medium-sized companies that together insure 65 million people. Some of those firms could be forced out of business under the Clinton plan.

Panetta conceded that the campaign to win congressional approval of the plan won't be easy and will have to surmount the efforts of the insurance industry, which he said has "one of the most effective lobby groups in this town."

An ad that had upset the administration earlier asserted that the Clinton plan would require people "to pick from a few health care plans designed by government bureaucrats."

The administration said that ad was untrue because the Clinton plan would allow private companies to design health care plans and would give all workers the option to choose a traditional "fee-for-service" plan.

Gradison contended that the ad, which has been pulled off the air, had deterred the administration from proposing a plan that might have limited choice more drastically.

An ad being run now shows a couple sitting at a kitchen table raising the possibility that funding will be inadequate under the Clinton plan because it would put a cap on health care spending increases.

"What if our health plan runs out of money?" asks one of the actors. "There must be a better way."

The administration denies that the cap would limit care, as the ad implies. The White House says the country could avoid rationing of health care under the cap by eliminating bureaucratic waste in the system — much of which, it says, is caused by insurance company paperwork.

FIGHT: Packwood says he'll serve out term

(From 1A)

fense is not conduct unbecoming a senator," he said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Packwood declined further comment on a speech by Sen. Robert Byrd Tuesday night in which the West Virginia senator said Packwood "has lost his grasp of what it means to be a U.S. senator" and should resign.

Packwood spoke the day after the Senate voted 94-6 to demand full disclosure of his diaries as part of an ethics committee inquiry into alleged sexual harassment and possible criminal wrongdoing in connection with employment offers to his wife.

Packwood also confirmed statements by his chief of staff and attorney that he would resist the subpoena in federal court.

Although Packwood disclosed the job offers Tuesday on the Senate floor, this was the first time he denied any wrongdoing in connection with the hiring incidents.

He said that the Senate Ethics Committee is "wondering if I unethically tried to help Georgie (his ex-wife) find employment;" or whether — as the panel chairman said — he may have violated the law in connection with the offers.

"Absolutely not," he said.

Packwood said it would be "inappropriate to comment" on his relationship or any dealings with the four men. One wanted her to be a political consultant. Two others wanted her skills as an antique buyer. Another wanted to place her on a corporate board of directors.

One of the lobbyists, Ronald Crawford, represented several clients on tax issues. Packwood was the senior Republican on the tax-writing Senate Finance Committee, a post he still holds.

And Steven R. Saunders, a lobbyist for the government of Japan and such major Japanese companies as Seiko Epson and Mitsubishi Electric, handled a series of trade issues for those clients in 1990. The Finance Committee has primary jurisdiction over trade matters.

On the heels of the Senate's vote, the chairman and vice chairman of the ethics committee issued a statement that Senate lawyers would be ready to take the legal action within two weeks to force Packwood's compliance with a subpoena for his diaries.

Sens. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., and Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., also urged Packwood, "in view of the Senate's overwhelming support for the committee's subpoena," to "comply and not require the committee to go to court."

Packwood said he felt he did a good job of stating his case during debate in the Senate.

"I thought we made our case well, that I was willing to give to the Senate all information relevant to all charges plus this new issue that wasn't a charge.

"The issue I think is, if you are charged with something, can you have a fishing expedition to see if anything else can be found to charge you even though no one ever mentioned it or ever brought it up."

Yeltsin decides against early election, cuts regional powers

MOSCOW (AP) — Appearing confident in his growing strength, President Boris Yeltsin backed away Wednesday from a pledge to hold an early presidential election in June and told regional leaders they must accept reduced powers.

He presented provincial leaders with a draft constitution that would allow him to remain in office until 1996. He told the leaders he would put the constitution to a public vote whether or not they accepted the draft.

Yeltsin promised the early presidential election when he issued an order in September dissolving Russia's parliament and setting December elections for a new legislative body. He later said citizens also would vote on the constitution during the Dec. 12 election.

The president offered the June vote to win support in his showdown with parliamentary opponents of his reform efforts, but the crushing of the opposition last month has made his position more secure.

A major provision of the draft says Yeltsin will exercise his duties until his term expires — not simply until June. He was elected to a five-year term in 1991 that runs until June 1996.

Many of Yeltsin's advisers had urged him in recent days to cancel the June election, arguing he had already won voters' approval in a referendum last spring.

A top Yeltsin aide who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity said Yeltsin would forgo the June election "if he decides it doesn't contradict his earlier statements."

The proposed constitution also would set two-year terms for members of Russia's new parliament, and in an effort to stifle separatist forces tearing at Russia it would cut back the special rights of the republics.

Speaking with a stern voice, Yeltsin told provincial leaders in a speech Wednesday that the 21 republics should no longer be considered sovereign states and should not enjoy greater rights than the 68 regions.

Yeltsin once wooed leaders of the far-flung republics when he needed their support against hardliners in parliament, but now he is taking a tough line against any threat to Russia's unity.

Republic leaders listened in gloomy silence to Yeltsin's speech in a grand white marble hall in the Kremlin. Heads of regions shouted support.

Over the past several years, many of Russia's republics have sought to increase control over their political and economic affairs. One, Chechnya, has even declared independence from Russia, although the Kremlin has not accepted that.

The Russian leadership is worried Russia could fall victim to separatist tendencies similar to those that destroyed the Soviet Union .

Jerusalem's new mayor worries Arabs

JERUSALEM (AP) — At the 15 shacks set up illegally by Jewish settlers in an Arab neighborhood, the paths or Jerusalem's new mayor and the man he defeated diverge.

Teddy Kollek wanted them demolished. But Ehud Olmert, who unseated Kollek in Tuesday's municipal elections, said Wednesday that he probably would let the settlers build even more.

Jews, he said, should be able to live in any part of the city — a prospect that has alarmed Palestinians in Jerusalem's disputed eastern sector.

Rabbi Benny Elon had the huts erected this fall next to his Beit Orot seminary on the slopes of the Mount of Olives.

He and other Jewish settler leaders see the hawkish Olmert as an ally in their campaign to build Jewish bridgeheads throughout Arab east Jerusalem and cement Israeli control over the entire city.

"There are other plots of land in the city where we can build thousands of units," Elon said Wednesday.

In his first policy declaration as mayor-elect, Olmert didn't disappoint them.

Hours after being elected, Olmert declared his support for Jewish settlement in Arab neighborhoods and said he would likely issue a building permit to Beit Orot.

"Every Jew can purchase property anywhere in Jerusalem and anywhere in the land of Israel and I don't conceive of acting otherwise," Olmert said in an Israel Radio interview.

A major consideration in approving new construction projects would be to "ensure complete rule of the people of Israeli over it (the city)," he said.

Alarmed Palestinians warned that a Jewish land-grab in the city's Arab sector could sabotage talks on implementing the Israel-PLO peace accord.

"This will lead to an escalation of confrontations between Arabs and Jews," said Hanna Amira, a PLO official and newspaper editor in Jerusalem.

Palestinians in east Jerusalem did not respond to Kollek's campaign appeals to save the city from a right-wing leadership. They maintained their traditional boycott of city elections for fear of creating the impression that they accept Israeli control of the city.

The future of the city is the toughest issue in Mideast peace negotiations.

Croats flee as Muslim troops assault town

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Muslim-led government troops stormed through an isolated Croat district Wednesday, sending thousands of civilians fleeing into the countryside and leaving others cowering in cellars.

Government soldiers surrounded and entered Vares, the main town in the area 20 miles north of Sarajevo, after taking a string of Croat villages to the north, U.N. officials said.

About 15,000 Croat civilians fled, including 5,000 who sought shelter in a quarry southeast of Vares, said Ray Wilkinson, a U.N. relief spokesman in Sarajavo.

"The remaining 10,000 are basically on the run in the forests in the surrounding area, mostly in large groups," Wilkinson said.

Others were said to be holed up in cellars.

"We consider most people now at risk up there," he said later Wednesday. "Who knows what's going on there? The situation is so fluid."

The advance on Vares followed weeks of violence in the area, including the massacre of at least 25 Muslim civilians in the village of Stupni Do late last month. It also underscored the ascendance of the military in setting boundaries between Serbs, Croats and Muslims, since diplomats and politicans have been unable to agree on a plan to end 19 months of civil war.

Three Nordic U.N. peacekeepers were injured Wednesday night when their vehicle hit a land mine east of Vares, the Swedish news agency TT reported.

The identities of the soldiers, who belonged to a unit of Swedish and Norwegian troops, were not immediately available.

Envoy: Somalis realize necessity of fast, hard work

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Somalis realize they must start making stronger efforts toward achieving peace before American troops pull out, U.S. special envoy Robert Oakley said Wednesday.

"I think Somalis are coming to recognize they must work harder and faster to put their house in order if they want the international community to continue helping them," said Oakley, on the third day of a four-day visit to foster peace talks. "The time is getting short."

President Clinton has promised to return all U.S. troops from Somalia by March 31. The loss of American troops will deprive the United Nations-led mission of its strongest component and could lead to a further exodus by other countries.

Oakley praised moves to set up district and regional councils around the country, but added: "We're not at the point where we can say we're optimistic or pessimistic whether they can work out their differences to the point of having some sort of interim national authority."

However, State Department spokesman Mike McCurry said in Washington on Wednesday that "overall, the progress on disarmament has been disappointing. We recognize that."

That was 'taxes' talking Tuesday

Texas voter response in Tuesday's Constitutional Amendment Election was about what a number of major forecasts had predicted — an extremely light turnout at the polls and definite statements by the voters about a state income tax, denial of bail to persons who commit sexual or other violent crimes while on probation or parole, and overcrowded state prisons that have swelled inmate populations at county jails.

If state leaders were uncertain of the public mood in regard to a state income tax, they now have a clear understanding of how Texans view such a tax. Proposition No. 4 on the ballot, which prohibited enactment of a state income tax by the Texas Legislature without approval of the state's voters, passed easily, getting 69 percent of the vote statewide. In Midland County, 80.4 percent of the voters who went to the polls voted for Proposition 4.

Now Texans will have the opportunity to veto any state income tax the legislature might pass and if such a tax is enacted, two-thirds of the revenue from such a levy must be used to reduce school maintenance-and-operations property taxes. The remainder of the revenue must go to support education.

The other big issues — the authority for judges to deny bail to violent criminals who commit sexual offenses or other violent crimes while on probation or parole and authority for the state to issue up to $1 billion in general obligation bonds for the construction of state prisons and facilities to house mental health-/mental retardation patients — had become major topics during the past couple of years because of serious overcrowding in county jails across Texas and the state prison system.

Approval of the building program was a clear statement that Texans expect to be protected from criminals and are willing to pay for additional facilities to house the inmates.

Although the voter turnout was low, Texans have made their wishes known to the state's leaders. There's no excuse for the legislators not to act now on these matters of concern to Texas residents.

'First Vote' program could benefit schools

When teen-agers gained the right to vote in 1972, hopes were high that the 5 million newly enfranchised young people would become active participants in the democratic process. Unfortunately, however, after an initial burst of interest, the past couple of decades have seen a decline in younger voters. Many teen-agers are now oblivious to politics and government. As one teacher has lamented, "My kids look at community involvement and say, 'Well, that's not going to buy me a Gucci shirt.' "

Recognizing that the biggest barrier to voting is the failure to register, an advocacy organization called People for the American Way has been peddling a voter education and registration program to urban school districts. By all accounts, the high school civics program has made a big difference. At last count, "First Vote" had been implemented in 20 urban school districts across the country. Before last year's presidential election, it had helped to register more than 100,000 students.

Although People for the American Way has been identified with a number of liberal causes, its voter education program is strictly non-partisan. Through the use of a video presentation and classroom discussions, it conveys to young people the full meaning of citizenship. Dallas school officials have expressed an interest in the "First Vote" program and would be smart to adopt it. The compelling curriculum could serve as a nice complement to the district's existing voter registration efforts.

Bill to 'level playing field' should be enacted this fall

You gotta love two guys, one of whom a congressman described as not being "satisfied until we all live in public housing," and the other as someone whose "whole career revolves around making our lives miserable."

The former is Ralph Nader . . .

Congressional Enemy No. 2 is Common Cause President Fred Wertheimer. . . .

The "miserly" duo want members of Congress to be barred from accepting any gift, or meal, that costs more than $20 — except from family or personal friends. . . .

The Senate put the House in a pickle in May, adopting the $20 cap, 98-1. The House should quit dawdling and hold a recorded vote on this bill (HR 823) before adjournment this fall.

There is nothing unsophisticated or chintzy about limiting gifts when so much pork is larded on special interests. Taxpayers who pay Foghorn's salary ought to be on a level playing field with the lobbyists who seek influence with Foghorn at almost any cost.

Pork bullets reveal true Congress

WASHINGTON — By small as much as by large actions the government defines itself. It recently did so regarding the Civilian Marksmanship Program, a little — $2.5 million annually — speck of government immortality.

Will

The program began 90 years ago, after the Spanish-American War alerted the military to the fact that many recruits drawn from an increasingly urbanized society were lousy shots. So the program was created to encourage shooting clubs and marksmanship competitions.

This year Rep. Carolyn Maloney (D-N.Y.) asked the House to kill the program, noting that the Army, according to the General Accounting Office, cannot identify "any training or mobilization reliance" for the program that gives away 40 million rounds of ammunition and other supplies annually. The program, she said, is just a subsidy of a hobby.

But Rep. Paul Gillmor (R-Ohio) defended the program, saying that most U.S. Olympic shooters in 1992 had benefitted from it. And Rep. Bill Brewster (D-Okla.) said it is cheap compared with other youth programs. And Rep. Randy Cunningham (R-Calif.) said it is an anti-crime program teaching the safe handling of firearms and getting "kids off the streets." (More than half the participants in the program are over 26 years old.) He added tartly that Maloney had refused to cut even 5 percent from the National Endowment for the Arts, "a total boondoggle." And Gerald Solomon (R-N.Y.), announcing himself almost too angry to speak, said he votes constantly for benefits like mass transit subsidies for Maloney's New York City constituents, so she is an ingrate for opposing "a vital, vital program" benefiting his rural shooters. And Rep. Harold Volkmer (D-Mo.) invited everyone to his district to see the benefits of federally funded Boy Scout BB gun competitions.

And so it went, silliness invoked to justify reciprocal silliness, until the House voted 242-190 to preserve the program.

In the Senate, the story was similar when Sen. Frank Lautenberg (D-N.J.) proposed ending "the absolute outrage" of "the freebie firearms program." This drew upon him enfilading fire from the likes of Sen. Larry Craig (R-Idaho) who was eager to refute the idea that 1993 is all that unlike 1903. He said, "I know that many of us would argue that times have changed, but. . . ." Craig proved his point — not that the military is still running short of straight shooters, but that times have not changed in Congress, where no program is too anachronistic to command a majority.

Sen. Conrad Burns, a Republican, struck a judicious tone: "Like every Montanan, I want to cut wasteful spending. But. . . ." The Senate's 67 votes to preserve the turn-of-the-century program came from liberals and conservatives because, like most of what goes on in Congress, the argument had nothing to do with any idea other than this one: Any program with a constituency should be preserved.

The government, which becomes more broadly despised as it becomes more comprehensively solicitous, no longer has even a residual sense of the great tradition of constitutional reasoning about what is and what is not a proper federal undertaking. The episode is worth contemplating because it exemplifies what our career political class considers a productive use of its time and our money.

And when, a few weeks hence, Congress considers the constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget and a supermajority to raise taxes, opponents in the political class will solemnly warn that the amendment would dangerously diminish Congress' "flexibility." Ask yourself: What could be more inflexible than that class of political careerists who cannot terminate even a relic of the Spanish-American War?

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Lack of responsibility plagues America

Here comes the crime issue — again. Pending in Congress are bills that would curb handguns and outfit more policemen, so that if the scheme worked as planned, more crooks could be scooped up and incarcerated. A poll shows that 92 percent of Americans favor a five-day waiting period for handgun purchase. The mayor of the District of Columbia wants the National Guard to help police her community. Texas voters were asked Nov. 2 to approve $1 billion in prison bonds. And the president of the United States observes that Americans don't feel "secure in their homes, on their streets or even in their schools."

Murchison

We saw concern of this sort burgeon in the late '60s and early '70s, never, in fact, to be allayed. Gun control became the talk of the land. Congress appropriated money for local law enforcement, and presidents delivered tough anti-crime speeches. Texas juries began dishing out prison sentences hundreds of years long by way of demonstrating their conviction that the violent needed to be kept behind bars. Block watches formed in residential neighborhoods.

And, lo, it is as though all we had said and done these past two decades was in vain. It's worse now than ever, despite encouraging statistics touted by the federal government. Violent crimes are indisputably on the rise — 560 percent above the level of 1960 — and a general feeling of unsafeness pervades communities across the country.

We are supposed to fix this with gun control and federally financed cops? It will be interesting to watch this happen, if it does. Needless to say, where good remedies are ready at hand, we should grasp them. Our juvenile justice system, for instance, is out of whack, with prepubescent felons hitting the streets only a few days after they hit the jail cell. We can close the loopholes — a fine old anti-crime slogan — and probably stop some crime. But much we won't stop, any more than we stopped it in the '70s with our fine hand wringing.

The enduring problem is the lack of not external but rather internal checks on crime. In the end, criminals turn to crime because they want to. (If they didn't want to, they wouldn't do it, right?) What has happened gradually throughout this century — and with precipitate speed since the late '60s — is the equalization of just about all values: social, political, cultural, moral. You can believe pretty much what you want to in modern America. Such as, I owe you my wallet? It certainly follows from everything else that goes on today.

We have ceased to be a law-abiding people because we don't believe, frankly, there's much point in abiding by laws that, at best, represent other people's opinions of how to live and what to do. What's wrong with our own opinions? If it's good for me, isn't that enough?

No. Of course not. Society represents the delicate balancing of personal rights and responsibilities toward others. It's the responsibilities we no longer wish to hear about: They're too demanding, too confining.

A five-day waiting period for handguns? What we need much more of, surely, is citizens who, when they do buy handguns, buy them for responsible purposes instead of the commission of mayhem. For there to exist such citizens, they must be taught. Taught by whom? Parents, grandparents, older siblings, pastors, priests, teachers, neighbors — a whole network of indispensable folk imparting indispensable wisdom by precept and example.

Our great national tragedy is the disappearance of that network amid the chaos and clutter of this time. Our great national mission is the rediscovery, and reconstruction, of that network.

The worrisome part begins here. Ninety-two percent of Americans favor a five-day waiting period to buy handguns. How many favor firm — I said "firm," not brutal — parental discipline, church-going as a weekly duty, Bible-reading, the abolition of welfare incentives to run out on one's family, the removal of incentives to divorce, and so on? Gun control isn't the answer to crime, it's the backup answer propounded whenever morals fail and crime burgeons. Like now, my fellow countrymen. Like right this minute.

ART BUCHWALD

Sleuth exposes TV's diabolical geniuses

TV violence is now having its 15 minutes of fame. Legislators are ranting and raving about it, Hollywood is crying censorship, and no one has any idea what to do to cool the tube.

Buchwald

Congress is interested because nobody can disarm a street gang these days, but you can always take a TV license away from a station that features blood and guts on the screen.

What has never been publicized is that all the violent shows on television are written by two men — Moose Wentzel and Roy Jones. For years they have been turning out program after program, all of which feature shooting, killing, rape and torture — not necessarily in that order.

Moose told me that writing violent shows for television was not as difficult as people think. "We started in this business in October, 1969, writing a show called 'Crash, Bang, Choke.' It was the story of a gang of kids from Marin County who hold a priest, a minister and a rabbi hostage while they kill a policeman, a schoolteacher and a half-back on the college football team. In the end the three clergymen set the gang members on fire and the bad guys all fall to their deaths from the Golden Gate Bridge."

"It was a big smash," Roy said. "After it came out and gained a 70 share of the audience, whenever network executives discussed new shows they would say, 'Give us more like "Crash, Bang and Choke." '

"So we wrote another violent series using most of the elements of the first one.

"They liked it so much that we were asked to write yet another one. This time, instead of a car crash we used a speedboat chase on the Central Park reservoir. We also substituted the villain being churned up in a cement mixer for a scene of him being pushed under a train on the Eighth Avenue subway."

"It sounds as if you guys are really creative."

Moose shrugged his shoulders. "Writing violent shows is easy providing you have a good knowledge of what the special effects department can do. Straight shooting with a gun is old hat. Garroting a victim is still good, and if you can have one person standing on another's head under water you have a winner."

"Do either of you pay any attention to the plot?"

"Not if we can help it," Roy said. "Violent TV is not something for intellectuals. The people who watch it seem to be attracted by how much bodily harm the characters can inflict on each other. The funny thing is that when it comes to violence, it's easy to fool adults but you can't fool children. They know when you're faking it."

"I notice that all the stories you tell are very similar. Do you do that on purpose?"

"We don't have time to write a new plot every time. But we are expected to create new methods of mayhem. In the script we're writing now, for example, our victim is killed by a baseball bat thrown at his head. Everyone thinks that the pitcher did it when in fact it was the umpire behind the home plate. No one is wise to this except a kid who sells beer in the stands. He is about to yell out the name of the killer when he is shot from the press box by the umpire's lover, a sportswriter named Tina Trowbridge. Our chase scene takes place around the bases with cops finally filling the villain full of lead at home plate.

Russia issues 1st nuclear strike threat

MOSCOW (AP) — Abandoning a longstanding Soviet policy, Russia now is ready to launch nuclear missiles in a first strike if it or its allies are attacked with conventional weapons, a top official said Wednesday.

The United States and other Western powers have repeatedly refused to rule out a first strike, arguing that such a pledge would diminish the deterrent value of their nuclear arsenals and limit their military options.

The new Russian policy is part of a military doctrine approved by President Boris Yeltsin on Tuesday. The document had been demanded by the military as payment for its support in his fight with parliament last month.

The 23-page doctrine states that Russia's military mission is primarily defensive and that no nation is considered a potential enemy.

It also allows the military to intervene in domestic crises "to protect the constitutional system."

Valery Manilov, deputy secretary of the country's top policy-making Security Council, rejected suggestions that provision signified an expanded role for the army following October's violence.

The riots by hard-line parliament supporters, which killed dozens of people in Moscow, prompted Yeltsin to send tanks and troops to flush out defiant lawmakers from the parliament building.

This provision "reflects the objective reality of our society, which is passing through a transition period," Manilov said at a news conference.

Manilov said the new doctrine allows use of nuclear weapons "against states, nuclear or non-nuclear, which have undertaken aggression against Russia or supported such aggression."

"Russia reserves the right to use all means at its disposal to repulse aggression," Manilov said.

Moscow sends 9 warships to Georgia's aid

TBILISI, Georgia (AP) — Russia has dispatched nine warships to safeguard key Georgian ports and plans to send troops ashore in its largest step so far into its neighbor's civil war.

The move is meant to help the government of Eduard Shevardnadze, who is fighting rebels trying to restore to power Georgia's ousted president, Zviad Gamsakhurdia.

Government and rebel forces fought for a second day Wednesday around the western town of Khobi, with each side claiming it was making progress. Officials on both sides said armored vehicles and artillery were used, but neither side gave casualty figures or other details.

Government forces must take Khobi before they can attack the nearby town of Zugdidi, Gamsakhurdia's base.

Russia, which officially claims neutrality, already has deployed some troops to protect the railroad linking Georgia's vital Black Sea port of Poti with the capital of Tbilisi.

Russian troops guarding the tracks came under fire Wednesday from Gamsakhurdia supporters and fired back, suffering no casualties, Gen. Vasily Belchenko, deputy commander of Russian forces in the area, told the Russian news agency Interfax.

However, the ITAR-Tass news agency said one section close to Poti was seized and mined Wednesday by rebels in armored vehicles. There was no independent confirmation of the report.

Meanwhile, a flotilla of four landing ships, two escort vessels, a submarine chaser, a tanker and a rescue tug boat belonging to the Black Sea Fleet approached Poti on Wednesday, fleet spokesman Andrei Grachev said.

Japan, S. Korea urge easy U.S. stand on north

SEOUL, South Korea (NYT) — Japan and South Korea have urged Defense Secretary Les Aspin to avoid imposing sanctions against North Korea as long as possible, warning that action to force the North to open its nuclear sites to inspection could touch off terrorist campaigns or military attack if the North's government feels cornered.

But at the same time, officials in the two countries told Aspin, who is here on a four day trip to reassess the Clinton administration's strategy for dealing with the North Korean nuclear issue, that there would be little choice but to proceed with sanctions if the International Atomic Energy Agency declares that it can no longer verify that nuclear material is not being diverted to a weapons project.

Senior military officials traveling with Aspin say the reluctance of America's two key Asian allies to back up some strongly worded warnings to North Korea with action has left the administration with another major foreign policy problem with few good options.

North Korea is the test case, the military officials said, for the administration's commitment to its so-called counter-proliferation strategy, steps to prevent regional powers from developing nuclear weapons.

Specter defends Packwood on diaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arlen Specter emerged as the closest thing Bob Packwood had to a defender in the Senate dispute over access to his diaries, reviving criticism still smoldering from Specter's dogged interrogation of Anita Hill in 1991.

The Pennsylvania Republican stepped into the middle of the Packwood sexual-harassment issue by proposing to limit the Ethics Committee's access to the 8,000 pages of diaries. His proposal was attacked as a "cover-up" on the Senate floor and upbraided by women's advocates who again leveled charges of insensitivity.

"There's quite a bit of deja vu here," said Sally Simmons, executive director of the Women's Alliance for Job Equity, a Philadelphia group that works against sexual harassment and discrimination.

Specter's vote against forcing full disclosure of the diaries "shows a lack of understanding of the seriousness of accusations of sexual harassment," she said. "We had hoped Senator Specter would have learned looking back on that past experience that sexual harassment is a very serious issue and allegations need to be fully investigated."

Charlotte Comito, Oregon state coordinator for the National Organization for Women, said she found it disturbingly ironic that Specter and Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., pushed the amendment to limit a subpoena for Packwood's diaries.

In 1991, both men sided with Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas after Hill had accused him of sexual harassment.

"I think that anybody who would vote against the Ethics Committee in this case . . . to me is just unconscionable," Comito said.

Specter dismissed the contention by Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., that the amendment was a cover-up. And when asked whether he felt he risked inciting anger lingering from the Hill-Thomas affair, he said, "I have to do my job as I see it."

"It takes a substantial amount of courage, not a penchant for cover-up, to come to this floor and articulate . . . a concern for civil liberties," said Specter.

"I knew it would have been easier to keep my head below the trenches," he said. "But this is an important issue. . . .It goes beyond any individual senator."

Critics: USDA should not police meat

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Congressional critics and former top officials say the Agriculture Department does a poor job and should be stripped of its power to police meat and poultry safety. Their testimony will come at a congressional hearing Thursday.

Witnesses set to advocate the reorganization include a veteran insider — the man who headed USDA's food safety agency until 1991 — and the senior food safety specialist for the General Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress.

The Clinton administration has also endorsed the idea of consolidating food safety enforcement outside USDA, citing the need to prevent outbreaks like the undercooked hamburger tragedy in which three children died and 500 people were sickened in Washington state last January.

■ More news/4B

Proponents of reorganization say USDA, which is responsible for inspecting meat and poultry plants, has done a poor job and has a conflict of interest. In addition to safety, its mission includes promoting consumption and sales of meat and poultry.

The hearing is being held by a House Government Operations subcommittee on Human Resources and Intergovernmental Relations, which also announced it will examine the effectiveness of Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy's efforts over the last eight months to upgrade the federal food safety inspection system.

Espy's aides say he has done more in the past 10 months than all other Agriculture secretaries have achieved since 1980. But skeptics see little progress.

"We're not talking about a few stomach aches — we're talking about thousands of people infected with deadly microorganism," said Rep. Edolphus Towns, D-N.Y..

Senator seeks ammunition tax to finance health

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Senate Finance Committee Chairman Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., said Wednesday that a hefty tax increase on certain types of handgun ammunition will likely be included in any health-care bill approved by his committee.

He justified the proposal by citing the link between bullets and rising health costs.

"Guns don't kill people, bullets do," said Moynihan, who will be influential in crafting the health-care legislation.

He made the recommendation during a Finance Committee hearing attended by Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, who told the committee the Clinton administration would consider the tax hike.

The only tax increases in the current health-care proposal are an increase in the tobacco tax and a 1 percent payroll tax on large corporations that opt to create their own health care financing system.

But Moynihan suggested that taxes on ammunition for most handguns and other firearms that are not needed by hunters or police should be increased by as much as 50 percent to help pay for health care costs that result from an epidemic of gun injuries.

He said that proposal could raise "an instant $200 million."

Moynihan also suggested a 100,000 percent tax on some of the most deadly brands of bullets to discourage production.

"There's a lot of ammunition out there that has the sole purpose of destroying bodies, and I think we could tax it out of existence," Moynihan said after the hearing.

He also suggested raising the permit for ammunition manufacturers from $10 to $10,000.

The current federal excise tax on ammunition is 11 percent.

Smith bill

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Congressman Lamar Smith Tuesday introduced a bill that would reduce the cost of federal mandates on state and local governments by almost half over seven years, and require that their costs be tabulated and 'budgeted' thereafter. "We set a budget of how much taxpayer money we can spend each year," Lamar said in a press release. "We need to set a budget for how many mandates we can impose as well. We shouldn't be in the business of running local governments." The Federal Mandate Reduction, Reform and Budget Act of 1993, HR 3421, would reduce the level of federal mandate expenses by 6.5 percent in each of seven years, then cap it at not more than 3 percent of the Gross Domestic Product. Congressional Budget committees would bi-annually allocate the costs of federal mandates to the appropriate authorizing committees. The Smith bill would also require Congress to make proportional cuts in agency overhead costs and direct federal agencies to conduct a cost-benefit analysis for any new mandate with an annual cost of more than $10 million.

Family to mark room's opening

■ Papers, books, artifacts of Clayton W. Williams Sr., to be on display at library's reception.

Staff report

Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library officials have scheduled a public reception at 7 p.m. today to mark the opening of the Clayton W. Williams Sr. room.

On display will be the papers, books and artifacts of the Fort Stockton resident, who died in 1983.

Scheduled to be present for the event are Williams' widow, Chic Williams, who ranches in Fort Stockton; Williams' son, Clayton W. Williams Jr. and his wife, Modesta, of Midland; and Williams' daughter, Janet Pollard, and her husband, Bob Pollard of Midland.

Williams was born in Fort Stockton and lived there all his life. The Haley Library acquired the Williams Collection about a year ago and one room in the library has been designated to house the rancher, historian and author's papers, writings and memorabilia.

Preparing this week for the opening, Mrs. Williams, 87, noted that she and Williams married shortly after her graduation from college. "Clayton Williams and I had 56 years together," she said. He was 11 years her senior.

The Williams Room is divided into five groupings — his childhood and early years in Fort Stockton; his years at Texas A&M; his World War I years; his working years in the oil industry, ranching, farming and serving as a Pecos County commissioner; and his writing years.

As a writer, Williams is noted for a trilogy entitled "Never Again," published in 1969; "Animal Tales of the West," published in 1974; and "Texas' Last Frontier," published in 1982.

Williams was one of three West Texas ranchers nominated for induction next year into the State Fair of Texas Heritage Hall of Fame. Although he was not chosen for induction, his name remains on the list of those nominated for future induction.

Agencies hope to meet needs with coat drive

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

On cold winter days, teachers sometimes call a local community service agency because a child from a low-income family will come to school without a coat.

"Coats don't come easy," said Xochitl Meraz, director of social services for Casa de Amigos.

"They (needy families) come to our agencies looking for winter clothing, especially for children's jackets."

To meet that need, Casa de Amigos, along with the Area Methodist Outreach Services (AMOS) and the Baptist Crisis Center, will distribute winter wear collected during a coat drive sponsored by Texas National Bank.

'We get requests every winter but we get very few coats donated.'
—Margaret Thomas-Mouton
director of AMOS

"We get requests every winter but we get very few coats donated," said Margaret Thomas-Mouton, director of AMOS. "Even though we get clothes and winter clothes donated, winter coats are a scarcity."

Donated cold-weather outerwear, new and used, children and adult sizes, can be dropped off through Nov. 14 at any of the three locations of Texas National Bank or the Midland County Centennial Branch Library.

"This is the time of year people think about buying new jackets so this is a time they can think about donating their old jackets," Ms. Meraz said.

Local community service agencies have already witnessed the need for warm clothing this year.

"When the first cold front came in (about a month ago) we had a big rush for coats," Ms. Thomas-Mouton said.

"And this winter already promises to be very cold," Ms. Meraz said.

In addition to coats and jackets, the agencies welcome other winter clothing, blankets and heaters.

"A lot of (poor) people have no heater system and warm there homes with stoves and ovens . . . that can cause fires," Ms. Meraz said.

Former educator, bird watcher gets into woodcarving

By Ed Todd

John Bizilo fancies birds.

He is intrigued by them — their behavior, their characteristics, their coloring, their songs, their wiles and other ways more observed than understood.

Like his wife, Ef, Bizilo is a bird-watcher but not as active as he used to be.

More and more, the 74-year-old retired educator is into woodcarving.

"I started long about, oh, 1955, when I had Perry Holley's kids in school," the former school principal said.

The late Perry Holley was a Midland cabinet-maker who "went into bird carving," at which he excelled and impressed bird aficionados and fanciers and collectors of bird art.

Bizilo — who is to exhibit about 50 of his bird carvings from 1 to 4 p.m. on Sunday in the Sibley Environment Learning Center — was so impressed by Holley's realism in bird art that he decided to pursue the art of carving bird images out of bass wood.

"They (Holley's children) would bring stuff (bird art) to class," Bizilo said. "I didn't think anything about it at the time. Since then he (Holley) became pretty well known for his carvings."

Bizilio said Holley's carvings commanded $2,000 and $3,000 each. Bizilo sells his works for $49 each.

Holley was a "master craftsman," Bizilo said. "Old Perry Holley would say, 'I start whittling with a knife and cut away everything that doesn't look like a Emotion.

It keeps things interesting and lively by whatever name: passion, fervor, zeal, ardor. It's enthusiasm — sometimes enduring, sometimes lingering, sometimes momentarily.

Todd

It can be quiet, loud or just steadily reverberating.

It can be showy or plain or in the gray.

It can be righteous, damnable, or just not so good.

But it keeps all sorts of causes going and going and going. It pleases and thrills some folk and pesters and aggravates others. Some don't care one way or the other.

A fiery, misdirected passion can keep the money changers busy and the priests' confessional doors wide open.

Or maybe it's compulsion or impulsiveness.

Who can say what keeps people returning to casinos, brothels, the golf course, the ball park, the football field, the horse races? Perhaps it's just entertainment. Fun and games?

What causes fuel emotions?

What keeps the horse track open, the lottery going, the beaches and resorts open, the causes going?

What compels people to answer callings with such fervor and dedication? Why do people go into teaching, preaching, doctoring, lawyering and a thousand fields from coal-mining and railroading to flying airplanes and sailing ships?

The rewards, the fulfillments, must be there. Otherwise, why spend your precious time idling around?

While the initial lure into any field may be emotion tempered with thought, the ultimate drive must be the power to will it so: willpower.

Every soul ought to be doing something worthwhile or worth your while, though the two whiles may not be parallel.

Aside from careers, which are designed to fill time in an organized society, pay bills, and, ideally, to set aside cash — savings for the "what ifs" of life, there are emotions that fuel good causes, causes that benefit planet Earth and its life.

And that is a good thing.

There are organizations that actually care about people — keeping them fed, clothed and as healthy as possible.

HOBBY: Bird watcher turns interest to woodcarving

bird.' "

Bizilo carved his first bird, a warbler, in the 1950s. But he didn't produce too many carvings until the late 1980s after he had retired from the public schools and after he had suffered his first heart attack.

"I had time on my hands," he said.

Bizilo, who is quite fond of songbirds, has carved flightless representations of phalarope, hermit thrush, mountain chickadee, burrowing owl, tufted titmouse, killdeer, rose-breasted grosbeak, yellow-rumped warbler, robin, scissor-tailed flycatcher, house wren, house finch, hummingbird, cactus wren, red-headed woodpecker, red-breasted nuthatch, and his wife's favorite, the rotund and long-billed woodcock.

"I think it is very good," she said of her husband's works. "If it doesn't look right, I tell him so."

And she tells him of his good works.

For years, the couple, who are members of the Midland Naturalist, "used to spend a lot of time bird-watching," Mrs. Bizilo said.

"But we don't get around much any more."

"She's my counselor and adviser," Bizilo said.

His mother-in-law, 95-year-old former schoolteacher Tennie Pearl Reese, said Bizilo's works are "something else.

"I think it is something to take a piece of wood and make something out of it," said Mrs. Reese, who taught school in Brownwood and who now lives in Midland with the Bizilo couple.

"She's a jewel to me," Bizilo said.

In carving bird likenesses out of wood, Bizilo's favorite tool is his old relic of a straight razor, which he has fitted with a wooden handle. He also works with Old Timer pocketknives.

"That's really an old relic," he said of the straight razor. "It's sharp enough to shave."

Bizilo, who said he played golf until his "lame" back prevented him from pivoting on the swing, devotes much of his pastime to his bird-carving avocation.

"I had a feeling time was running out" following his heart attacks. "I figured I might as well do something worthwhile."

poles — which are bordering on extinction due to progressive mankind's lust for gain and disregard for the creatures' lives and habitats.

Other individuals and groups strive to preserve nature's endangered flora in the increasingly diminishing wildlife.

And why the fervor? Why the ardor? Why the concern for ensuring the life cycles of beings and rooted things in this life?

Well, it's something called survival for all. It's something called aesthetics. It's something called enhancement of life. It's something called fulfillment. It's something called doing what's right and what's responsible in the niche and niches of each person's world.

It's looking after life whatever the underlying motivation — hinged to what's right, desire, willpower and emotion — may be.

LEARN: School offers 'college' classes

participants. When the bell rings at 3:10 p.m., the young "collegians" head to the cafeteria for a snack break before heading to courses from 3:30-4:30 p.m.

Staying at school while others head for the bus to go home "feels weird" said third-grader Crystal Barrientez, 8.

On the first day of class Tuesday, Crystal said the afternoon snack included cinnamon cookies and juice. "And I learned lots of fairy tales," Crystal said, noting her brother is enrolled in "Go West Young Man — Texas, the Great Adventure."

South third-grade teacher Alison Montgomery said teachers take into account that multi-grades, (grades one through three) are taught together.

"But even in regular classes, we teach to different abilities every day," Ms. Montgomery said.

The after-school program, designed as a campus-improvement plan to motivate learners, "is more fun than the typical day but sneaks academics in the back door," she said.

Ms. Montgomery said the outcome is to motivate students to read.

"The whole focus is reading, reading, reading," said South Principal Retha Rae Wright.

"This is a federally funded program for students identified as Chapter One (economically disadvantaged)," she said.

The principal said eligibility for Accelerated Academy involved several factors other than being identified as Chapter One, including reading ability and test scores.

Teachers who volunteered for the program are being paid for the additional hour of teaching.

"Teachers spent three days planning for the program," Ms. Wright said.

Some teachers also received special training from national consultant Roger Taylor at a summer inservice. He taught eductators how to write interdisciplinary language arts curriculum. The idea is to integrate reading skills into class projects.

"Students have to want to be here when their other friends are going off to the Boys Club," said Karla Reeves, a second-grade teacher who teaches about the rain forest in the accelerated program.

"We may make models of the rain forest, taste foods from the rain forest and even bring in a vaporizer (to simulate humidity and fog)," she said.

Ms. Reeves said students are energized after a snack. "They are ready to have fun."

"They are what we call active learners," Ms. Wright said, laughing.

The campus previously piloted an extended-day program that lasted from 2:30-5 p.m. "Students and parents felt that was too long," the principal said.

She said the outcome of the program was that teachers "really could see the impact of the program on students. They were interacting more with adults, were more verbal, and became more responsible for working on computers in the classroom.

"What we saw wasn't measurable," she said, although there was a slight increase in some standardized test scores. "But it was laying the ground work and fostering a love for learning, and a love for being in school."

Another plus to the program is that some students are experiencing concepts and ideas for the first time — the type of experiences "that are on the reading and writing portions of the TAAS (Texas Assessment of Academic Skills) test," she said.

"We have got to get all of these students on grade level, every single one," Ms. Wright said, quoting an education expert who said, "There are no children at risk (of dropping out of school). They are just placed in at-risk situations."

"Sometimes schools are criticized for making learning too much fun. But we have to energize these students to make them want to learn, explore and research subjects," she said.

Allowing the youngsters to sample the college life by choosing courses "gets them used to the process and allows them to see themselves participating in that process so they won't be mystified later on," Ms. Montgomery said.

While most of the teachers in the extended-day program have specialized training, "the main qualifications were a high-energy level and a love for teaching children, since an extra commitment was needed," the principal said.

The children will also learn cheers. Crystal, who participated in the previous pilot program remembers her class cheer: "Accelerate, Cooperate, Investigate, Participate, We are great."

90 percent of the children received their first choice course for the first six-week class.

The program is expected to continue through March.

Richards shifts gears on voucher issue

Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — Texas Gov. Ann Richards, in a policy shift Wednesday, said she is "completely open" to the idea of creating a pilot program that would provide tuition vouchers to poor and minority students for private and parochial schools.

"If we can use vouchers as a tool to improve the quality of the public schools in a very limited way and prove that it works, I'm happy to do that," Richards said.

Richards' 1990 campaign for governor attacked Republican voucher proposals as "racist" and said private school vouchers would "destroy" the public school system. The governor lobbied against a pilot private school voucher program during this year's legislative session.

Richards' likely 1994 Republican opponent — Dallas businessman George W. Bush, son of former President Bush — has privately told Republican groups that he will support a pilot program to give private school vouchers to poor and minority students.

Richards said Wednesday: "I expect the next session of the Legislature we will try a voucher system, particularly aimed at those schools we need to upgrade."

The governor made the comments during a speech to the Texas Association of Taxpayers after an audience member asked her to comment on Tuesday's defeat of a school voucher proposal in California elections.

Karen Hughes, executive director of the Texas Republican Party, said the governor's comments Wednesday represented "an extraordinary flip-flop."

"The governor is now recognizing that her education policy has been a miserable failure and it could cost her her job," Hughes said. "She's now willing to look at Republican ideas."

Richards said she agreed to support a voucher program during Texas' last legislative session to get lawmakers to drop the issue during the fight over a school finance bill.

House OKs revised anti-crime package

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The House on Wednesday approved President Clinton's $3.45 billion plan to put as many as 50,000 new police officers on the streets over the next six years.

In addition, lawmakers approved three other anti-crime bills, one to develop programs to combat gang violence and two that call for drug rehabilitation programs in state and federal prisons.

Dozens of studies show that inmates who overcome addictions are far less likely to commit crimes again, and those bills enjoyed broad bipartisan support.

But a final bill suffered a temporary setback at the hands of Republicans when it failed to receive the two-thirds majority required under the peculiar rule used to bring it up for a vote.

The bill called for development of alternative sentencing programs, including boot camps, home detention, and community service. The inmates assigned to those facilities would be non-violent, first-time offenders under the age of 22.

Republicans charged it was soft on criminals, but Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said it was modeled after the boot camp program in Georgia, "hardly a bleeding-heart state."

Schumer is expected to bring the bill back up for a vote under a different rule, which would require a simple majority to pass it.

The bills passed after a four-hour debate during which Republicans criticized Democrats for abandoning a comprehensive crime bill that also called for prison construction and tougher death penalty provisions.

"This is a disastrous failure of the Democratic leadership and represents an abandonment of the victims of crime," said House Minority Whip Newt Gingrich in a testy exchange with Schumer.

But House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jack Brooks of Texas, the Democratic sponsor of the comprehensive bill, said the divisive death penalty provisions would likely kill it.

Scientists announce diabetes breakthrough

NEW YORK (AP) — Scientists have blocked the most severe form of diabetes by heading off a destructive mistake in the immune system of mice, a step that might lead to prevention in people.

Researchers had known that human Type I diabetes occurs when pancreas cells that produce insulin are attacked by disease-fighting cells of the immune system.

Past studies have suggested that a key target of that attack was an enzyme in the pancreas cells called GAD, for glutamic acid decarboxylase.

Now, two studies show that GAD plays the same role in mice, and that injecting mice with it can prevent diabetes.

The studies represent "major progress," commented Steinunn Baekkeskov of the University of California, San Francisco, who identified GAD as a target in human Type I diabetes three years ago. The work opens the door to mouse research that might eventually be used to prevent diabetes in humans, she said.

People with Type I, also known as juvenile diabetes, must take daily insulin injections to survive. About 1.4 million Americans have this form of the disease. Scientists are pursuing several strategies to prevent it by suppressing the immune system attack.

The new work is presented in today's issue of the journal Nature.

The researchers said the work suggested such treatments may be useful one day for people susceptible to developing Type I diabetes.

Crews work frantically to stall fires that destroy Malibu homes

MALIBU, Calif. (NYT) — One of the most massive firefighting efforts ever undertaken in California succeeded early Wednesday in saving thickly populated areas of Los Angeles from a stubborn wildfire, but not before more than 200 homes and 35,000 acres in the wealthy beachside enclave of Malibu and nearby canyons were destroyed.

All night fires of suspicious origin raged out of control, until the Santa Ana winds from the desert abated Wednesday morning. As winds changed, black and orange banks of smoke parted a bit, revealing a scene of terrible desolation to those in a helicopter above. Vast tracts of rutted hills were blackened, sprinkled with white ash and littered with the forlorn ruins of once magnificent homes.

But the fire was a capricious enemy. For just across Pacific Coast Highway, the ribbon of concrete that separates the beach from the hills, all but a handful of the costly beachfront homes emerged untouched by fire. Completely intact was the Malibu Colony, a private enclave on the water where many movie stars keep homes, which was apparently preserved by a lagoon and open fields that halted the fire.

Flames towering 60 feet or more continued to flare Wednesday in the upper, less populated reaches of Topanga, Tuna and Carrol canyons to the north of Malibu and in the Fernwood area west of Los Angeles. Wednesday afternoon 100 homes in imminent danger were evacuated on Fernwood Pacific Drive near Topanga Canyon Boulevard. County fire officials said it would take another three days to contain the remaining fires.

But a force of 5,000 firefighters, 765 engine companies and 6 air tankers achieved the top priority of preventing the flames from crossing the Rubicon of Topanga Canyon and spreading east into the City of Los Angeles, toward the J. Paul Getty Museum and populous areas like Palisades Highlands, Pacific Palisades and Castellamare.

Wednesday afternoon, however, a leading edge of fire managed to jump onto the east wall of Topanga Canyon, bringing it less than two miles from the Palisades Highlands.

Exhausted fire crews worked all Tuesday to hold the line along Topanga Canyon, just east of Malibu, aided by helicopters dropping fire retardants and 3,000-gallon buckets of water filled from the ocean.

"The worst is over," proclaimed Chief Donald Manning of the Los Angeles Fire Department just after dawn Wednesday morning, crediting "a good break in the weather."

After 24 hours of fast, hot desert winds, the winds abated and shifted Wednesday morning to onshore. The weather forecast called for mild winds Wednesday and today, but fire crews remained uneasy about the notoriously fickle Santa Anas that come every fall.

The day's actions capped an exhausting, nerve-wracking week of firestorms in Southern California that have now blackened about 200,000 acres in six counties and destroyed more than 700 homes, not counting the Malibu destruction. Two men were critically burned in the Topanga area Tuesday, and 125 firefighters were injured in the last 24 hours, none severely.

While not calling the fire arson, Los Angeles County sheriff's investigators were investigating reports of suspicious people seen near the point of origin of the fire on Old Topanga Canyon Road.

Clinton sends final NAFTA draft to Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — After months of haggling and some last-minute modifications, President Clinton sent Congress the final version of legislation to put in force the North American Free Trade Agreement.

The bill was sent to Capitol Hill on Wednesday after Mexico and the United States reached agreement at 4 a.m. on new side deals designed to protect U.S. sugar, citrus and vegetable producers, administration officials said.

Even so, Clinton conceded he still lacks the votes for the pact — which would lower tariffs and other trade barriers among the United States, Mexico and Canada — but predicted he would have them when the House acts on Nov. 17.

"We don't have them today, but we're getting there," he said.

Congressional committees have already worked with the administration in shaping the final measure and the legislation cannot be amended further.

Officials said privately that Clinton still appears about 40 votes short — even with some of the 11th-hour sweeteners.

The new items — designed almost exclusively to woo undecided lawmakers — included help for businesses ranging from appliance manufacturers to broom makers to a $10 million authorization to build a trade study center in Texas.

The pact, scheduled to go into effect Jan. 1 and be phased in over 15 years, would create the world's largest economic market, with 363 million people and a combined domestic product of $6.3 trillion.

It is being strongly opposed by organized labor and by Texas billionaire Ross Perot, who claim companies will move plants to Mexico to take advantage of low wages.

Rep. James Traficant, D-Ohio, an opponent, called it a "sad day, sad day" and said that if the agreement is enacted, "NAFTA will produce a national workers strike.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Use your ingenuity to acccomplish the seemingly impossible. The rewards will make all your maneuvering worthwhile! Career decisions made in early 1994 will work to your financial advantage. A relationship that has had its ups and downs can be put on firmer footing. Next summer, travel to places both near and far. Renewing old business acquaintances could lead to a once-in-a-lifetime offer. Save money for investment purposes.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: newscaster Walter Cronkite, actor Art Carney, humorist Will Rogers, actress Markie Post.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Voicing stored-up frustrations would be a mistake today. Rash moves may plunge you into confusion. Remain optimistic. Put romance on hold while consulting financial experts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A hectic morning may have you glued to the phone or scrambling to get to appointments on time. Behind-the-scenes work will win widespread appreciation once the results are tabulated.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stop worrying about insensitive people. You are on the right track and will soon have the results to prove it! Research is the best way to obtain information. Level with higher-ups.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Cultivate new friendships. Good working relationships are more important than you realize. Become a team player. Evening hours favor recreational fun. Get together with good pals.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Recognition for your hard work may still prove elusive. You make the most progress when you work alone and have time to think things out. Home is a real comfort zone tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An attempt to force an agreement could backfire today. Concentrate on projects already under way. Be wary about signing anything under pressure. Romance could be a guessing game.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Forging a bond with someone in your profession boosts your spirits. Networking leads to new business. A money-saving idea will impress an authority figure. Romantic partner could throw you a curve.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An emotional fog could keep you grounded. Try not to worry about the unknown. What you fear may never come to pass. A certain amount of skepticism could prevent a romantic mistake.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Someone may try to pry inside information out of you. Staying silent could mean a big financial payoff later on. Friends or members of a support group offer you timely advice.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A problem that resurfaces today can be solved once and for all. Expanded opportunities at work allow you to clarify issues with higher-ups. A promising project gets off the ground.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Powerful alliances take shape professionally and socially. When you bring your ideas to the table for approval, expect to win! Enjoy a modest celebration with your one-and-only tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Romance needs time to mature. Doing something unusual could enhance your chances for success. Go after what you want. Putting some money away for a rainy day will give you more options.

East	South	West	North

Pass	4 ◇	Pass	5 ◇
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡

Tricks can be found in the strangest of places. Look at all four hands and see if you can spot declarer's 11th trick.

South was not shy in the auction. After deciding the hand was strong enough to double and bid diamonds later, South then concluded that, on the strength of partner's free bid, suggesting strength in a key holding, the hand was worth a jump in diamonds. North, not surprisingly, raised to game.

West's opening lead of the king of hearts, followed by the queen, did not make declarer's work any more difficult—it virtually marked East with both the king and jack of spades for the opening bid. Declarer saw a way to 11 tricks if East started with specifically K J x in the suit, or a doubleton K J.

At trick three West shifted to the ten of clubs. South tried the queen from dummy just in case, captured the king with the ace, then tested trumps by cashing the ace. The queen of trumps was overtaken with the king to draw the last enemy fang while providing an entry to dummy.

A spade to the ten won, the table was reentered by overtaking the five of diamonds with the six and the queen of spades was finessed next. When both defenders followed to the ace of spades, dummy's nine of spades was set up as the fulfilling trick. And declarer could get to the board by overtaking the two of diamonds with the four.

Wasn't it obvious that declarer would score four spade tricks to make the contract?

Elton John sues British tabloid over false report of bizarre diet

LONDON — Elton John was upset and angry over a false newspaper report that he lived on a bizarre diet, spitting out chewed food rather than swallowing it, his manager told a jury.

John

"The article disturbed him deeply," John Reid testified during a trial on the rocker's libel complaint against the Sunday Mirror.

The tabloid admitted the story wasn't true but said it didn't know that last December when it printed it under the headline: "Elton's diet of death."

John said the paper acted recklessly by failing to check its facts. He told the High Court jury on Monday that he spent 16 years fighting the eating disorder bulimia and addiction to drugs and alcohol.

He said he was hospitalized in 1990 and later joined Alcoholics Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous, Overeaters Anonymous and Bulimics Anonymous.

AUCKLAND, New Zealand — Sam Neill, the anthropologist who learns to like children in "Jurassic Park," was honored by his native country as entertainer of the year.

Neill lives in Los Angeles and wasn't on hand to receive the award Tuesday at a ceremony.

"I feel honored to be named this year's recipient," he said in a statement.

Neill's latest role is that of jilted husband in "The Piano," about New Zealand settlers last century. It won best picture at the Cannes Film Festival this year.

NEW YORK — Jackie Mason is fighting for the right to be politically incorrect.

Comedy Central filed a federal lawsuit on Tuesday to block Mason from using the phrase on Broadway since it's also the title of a new series on the cable channel.

"People could get confused," said Steven Paul Mark, the channel's lawyer. "It tends to dilute the rights to the name that we've built up and spent a lot of money on."

Mason begged to differ.

"Everyone has always thought of me as politically incorrect," he said. "To keep me from using the title would be like keeping me from using the name Jackie Mason."

Mason is performing off-Broadway in his "Jackie Mason, Politically Incorrect," but plans to move to Broadway soon.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Goober says hey! Quit smoking.

Actor George (Goober) Lindsey is the honorary chairman of the Great American Smokeout in Tennessee. He appealed to smokers to give up cigarettes for 24 hours on Nov. 18, the day of the nationwide event.

Lindsey said in a news release Wednesday that he was a three-pack-a-day smoker for many years before quitting 2½ years ago.

"Do it for me, and join the quitters' club," he said. "You'll be so glad you did."

AUSTIN — Gov. Ann Richards has some advice and an invitation for Jay Leno:

"You stay here in California, you're going to think all the world's like California," she recalled telling "The Tonight Show" host after her appearance last week.

Richards invited Leno to broadcast the show from Texas for a week.

"I don't know if you could ever get David Letterman out of New York, but I think I've got a real shot at getting Jay Leno out of California," she said.

His name may not be legendary in the annals of charity, but Albert Herzstein of Houston has been selected by a panel that includes Jonas Salk, Marian Wright Edelman and Bill Moyers, as the winner of the 1993 American Philanthropy Award of the Columbus Foundation. The foundation is a trust that gives grants in the Columbus, Ohio, area.

Herzstein, who exemplifies rags-to-riches success, was a delivery boy and truck driver for a welding-supply company in Texas during the Depression. In 1930, he sold his wife's car and borrowed some money to buy, for $2,300, a one-third interest in the Smithweld Company.

He later became president of the company, before merging it with another firm. He has been retired from the welding business since 1965, but hardly idle. At the age of 86, he remains active as a real estate developer.

Herzstein said Tuesday, after receiving the award on Monday evening, that he began his philanthropy more than 20 years ago when his banker warned him that without children, he had nothing to leave to posterity.

"My banker told me, 'The only footsteps you will leave is by doing big things with your name on it,'" he recalled, explaining that his first project was the construction of a new church in his late wife, Ethel's, hometown of Fulshear, Texas.

The list of subsequent causes and projects to which he has contributed is voluminous, including religious institutions, hospitals, schools, libraries, programs for the disadvantaged and disabled,

As Herzstein prepared to drive from Columbus back to Houston, he still sounded a bit astonished by the attention. "I'm just a small guy from Texas."

James stays

ARLINGTON — The Texas Rangers, fighting the free-agent battle for first baseman Rafael Palmeiro, gained some security Wednesday by exercising a $500,000 option on outfielder Chris James.

James, acquired by the Rangers from Houston on Sept. 17, would have been eligible for free agency if the option hadn't been exercised. He also earned $500,000 in 1993.

He is only the fifth Ranger under contract for 1994. The others are Jose Canseco, Tom Henke, Manuel Lee and Gary Redus.

NFL rejects

HOUSTON — A new four-year $[illegible] million contract negotiated between the Houston Oilers and defensive lineman Ray Childress is being rejected by the National Football League, league sources told the Houston Chronicle.

The newspaper reported Wednesday the NFL will not approve the deal signed Sept. 3 because it contains a right-of-first-refusal clause. Such a clause is not valid unless a player's contract has expired. When Childress signed, he had a year remaining on his current pact.

The right-of-first-refusal clause guaranteed the Oilers could keep Childress by matching any offer he might receive when the contract expired.

The contract talks took nearly seven months and included a one-day walkout by Childress in training camp as he tried to speed up the negotiations.

Torborg denies

HOUSTON — Jeff Torborg and Houston Astros general manager Bob Watson on Wednesday night denied reports that Torborg is about to be hired as the team's manager.

Torborg, former manager of the New York Mets, Cleveland Indians and Chicago White Sox, was interviewed by Watson on Friday for the Astros' vacant job.

"I know nothing about it," Torborg said. "I have spoken with no one in the orgainzation since my interview in Houston."

Mavs cut Wiley

DALLAS — The Dallas Mavericks today waived guard Morlon Wiley, trimming their roster to within two of the maximum 12 players allowed on the active list by Thursday.

Wiley played in two preseason games for the Mavericks, averaging 2.5 points on .167 shooting in 14.5 minutes.

Cardtoons nixed

TULSA, Okla. — A company that parodied baseball cards by featuring "Tommy Lasagne," "Darryl Razzberry" and the "New York Crankees" was shut out Wednesday by a federal magistrate.

U.S. Magistrate Jeffrey Wolfe ruled Tulsa-based Cardtoons did not have First Amendment rights to sell its cards without a license from the Major League Baseball Players Association.

The players' union, unhappy over how players were depicted on the cards, had said it would never grant Cardtoons a license.

The cards poked fun at the New York Crankees, Los Angeles Codgers and Tofu Jays, and players and managers such as Tommy Lasagne, Robin Adventura, Ryne Sandbox and Darryl Razzberry.

Atlanta pitcher Greg Maddux was named the National League Cy Young Award winner for the second consecutive season.

Maddux joins exclusive club

■ Atlanta pitcher Greg Maddux becomes the first pitcher to win consecutive NL Cy Young awards since Sandy Koufax in 1965-66.

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

NEW YORK — Greg Maddux won his second straight Cy Young Award Wednesday, joining Sandy Koufax as the only National League pitchers to win it in successive seasons.

Maddux was 20-10 with a major league-leading 2.36 ERA in his first season for Atlanta, and became the first pitcher to win the award in consecutive years with different teams. He went 20-10 with a 2.18 ERA in 1992 for the Chicago Cubs, then signed a five-year, $28 million free-agent contract with the Braves.

■ NL Cy Young Award

Maddux got 22 of the 28 first-place votes in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. He easily outdistanced San Francisco's Bill Swift and John Burkett, and Braves teammate Tom Glavine, who all won more games than Maddux but had higher ERAs.

No pitcher was named on all 28 ballots. Jack McDowell won the AL's Cy Young award Tuesday and was the only pitcher listed on every ballot.

Koufax won the award in 1965-66, when only one Cy Young was presented. Beginning in 1967, a winner in each league was selected. Since then, Roger Clemens in 1986-87, Jim Palmer and Denny McLain have been repeat winners in the AL.

The only other pitcher to win the award for different teams was Gaylord Perry — in 1972 with Cleveland and 1978 with San Diego.

Maddux, 27, is the top winner in the majors with 107 victories in the last six seasons. He also won three straight Gold Gloves and is one of the best-hitting pitchers in baseball.

Maddux, just 7-8 a week before the All-Star break, won 13 of his last 15 decisions in leading the Braves' surge to their third straight NL West championship. The right-hander made 36 starts and pitched 267 innings, led the league with eight complete games and was third with 197 strikeouts.

He won his first start of the playoffs against Philadelphia, but lost Game 6 when the Phillies clinched the pennant. Maddux gave up five earned runs in 5 2-3 innings in that loss, although he was hit in the right leg by a line drive in the first inning and never got into a groove.

Maddux finished with 119 points in the voting. Swift, who was 21-8 with a 2.82 ERA, got two first-place votes and was second with 61 points.

Glavine, who won the Cy Young in 1991 and was runner-up in 1992, was 22-6 with a 3.20 ERA. He got four first-place votes and had 49 points. Burkett, 22-7 with a 3.65 ERA, got nine points. Jose Rijo of Cincinnati was fifth.

Rebel TE now starts for TCU

Most college freshman worry about getting to the right class on time, keeping up with all of the reading from class, trying to stretch one's allowance until the end of the month, pledging for a fraternity or sorority and hoping to have enough clean underwear until the next trip home.

While former Midland Lee standout Ryan Tucker worries about all of the above, he also must worry about stunts from opposing linebackers and a secondary blitzes as the starting tight end for the TCU Horned Frogs.

Ryan and the Frogs will be in Lubbock to battle Texas Tech noon Saturday in a regionally-televised game.

Regarded as one of the top tight ends in the state coming out of Lee last season, Tucker has taken over the starting tight end position for coach Pat Sullivan.

"I was surprised at first that I got to start, being a freshman and all. (Sullivan) never said 'Ryan come here and

The run-oriented, option teams are both 3-1 in district play and rely on speed for offensive success. The winner of Friday's game in Greenwood finishes second in the league standings. The loser, as Mitchell puts it, "goes home and puts up their pads."

No match for Shula

■ NFL coaches say that Shula's inevitable record may never be broken.

By Steven Wine
AP Sports Writer

DAVIE, Fla. — If there's a more imposing figure in the NFL than Don Shula, it's 325 victories.

Shula's peers say the record he's about to set will never be matched. The Miami Dolphins coach can break George Halas' mark of 324 victories against the New York Jets on Sunday.

Because 61-year-old Chuck Knox — two years younger that Shula — has 186 victories, Shula likely will hold the record well into the next century, and possibly beyond.

"I don't know how in the world in today's environment there's any chance of anybody ever breaking the record," said Kansas City Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer, who watched Shula tie the record against his team Sunday. "The game has changed so dramatically, with free agency and the demands

Weekend slate will clear SWC bowl picture

With four weekends remaining in the regular season, only SMU and Houston are out of any bowl talk in the Southwest Conference.

Petitt

Despite Texas A&M having the only over .500 record in the league, parity and a bowl coalition have given the league race all the excitement of the National Basketball Association where an even record is a ticket to the playoffs.

Tonight will begin Week 9 of league wars and will clear away some of the smoke in determining who will play in the John Hancock and Alamo Bowl this year.

Baylor (4-4, 2-3) must win two of its three remaining games to qualify for the postseason. The Bears travel to Georgia Tech Saturday and then must face Rice and Texas.

Houston is out of the bowl picture, with only one win in seven games, the Cougars will not win the six game minimum to qualify for a bowl game, but could finish second in the league by defeating Texas, Tech and Rice to end the season. A second place finish by the Cougars would give the John Hancock Bowl an out of its coalition contract and let them look elsewhere for a team.

Rice and Texas Tech must win its final three games to win a bowl berth. Tech could finished second in the league with a 5-2 record, provided Texas loses one of its final four conference games. The Red Raiders would then head to El Paso. Tech must defeat TCU, SMU and Houston, teams with a combined 6-14-3 record this season. Rice could win an Alamo Bowl trip with wins over SMU, Baylor and Houston.

Texas must win its last four games against Houston, TCU, Baylor and Texas A&M to win a bowl berth. Texas would win the SWC with a 6-1 conference record, but Texas is 2-13 against Baylor and Texas A&M since 1986.

Texas A&M has three games remaining — Louisville, TCU and Texas. One win would clinch a tie for the league championship and two league wins would assure the Aggies of their sixth Cotton Bowl in eight years.

TCU could earn a trip to its first bowl game since 1984 and its second since 1965 with two wins. TCU has Tech, Texas and Texas A&M remaining on its schedule. The Frogs have played poorly in November, going 4-20 since 1986.

A look at this week's schedule:

Texas 41, Houston 30: Texas should be able to rebound from a poor performance against Texas Tech. The Longhorns have been able to rebound with a win after a loss twice this season. Houston continues to have problems within its ranks after a 28-10 loss to TCU. The 'Cougs gained four yards rushing against the Horned Frogs. Houston is 96th in scoring defense, Texas is 92nd.

Texas Tech 35, TCU 26: The Red Raiders are making a run similiar to 1991 when Tech won five of its last six to finish 6-5. Tech's offense is averaging 32.6 points per game and leads the league in total offense. The Horned Frogs (4-4) have won three straight, allowing 10 points per game during the run.

Georgia Tech 24, Baylor 21: The Bears have lost three of four since beginning the year 3-1. Coach Chuck Reedy will leave three starters and backup running back Robert Strait, in Waco after they missed a team curfew Sunday. Baylor beat Tech 31-27 last year in Waco.

Rice 35, SMU 10: Rice is in a must-win situation to go to a bowl, SMU is still licking its wounds after losses to A&M and Texas. Rice enjoyed its only week off last week to recover from the first half of its schedule.

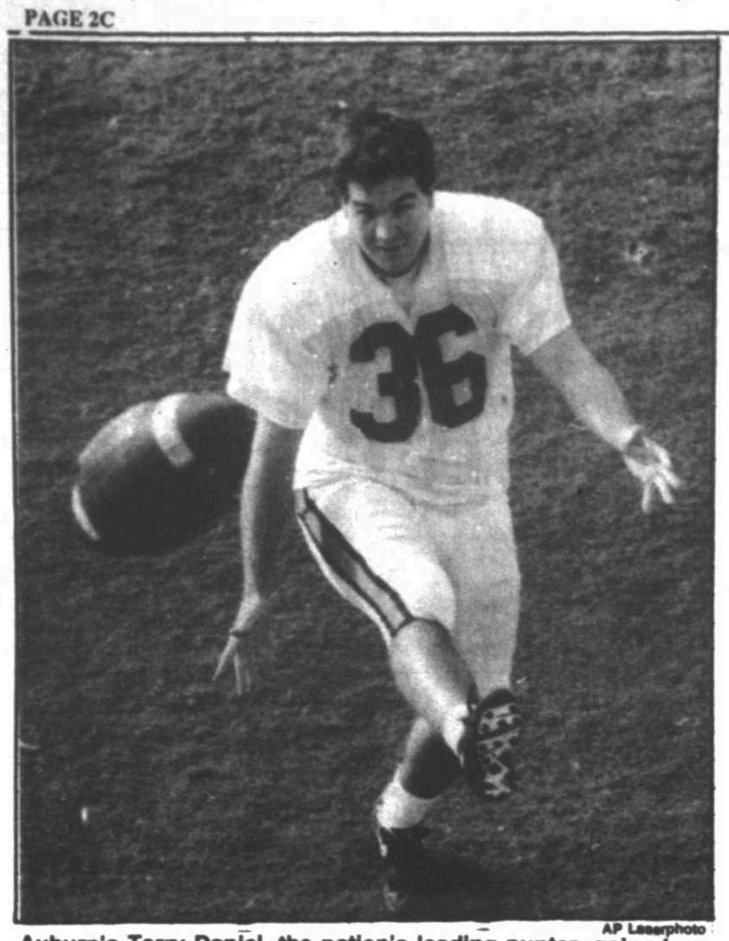
'Helium punter' leads nation



AP Laserphoto

Auburn's Terry Daniel, the nation's leading punter, gained notariety when Mississippi State coach Jackie Sherrill accused the Tigers of pumping helium into its footballs.

■ Mississippi State coach Jackie Sherrill made Auburn punter famous after accusing him of filling footballs with helium.

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Despite leading the nation, Auburn's Terry Daniel was as obscure as most punters. Then along came Jackie Sherrill.

"Everywhere I go, they say, 'Hey Helium, how you doing?' and 'What's up Helium?'" Daniel said with a grin. "Even at our last game against Arkansas ... coach (Danny) Ford came up and said, 'Let me see that ball. Let me check it out.'"

Daniel, who grew up in the small east Alabama town of Valley, is reveling in all the attention he has received since word broke last week that Sherrill, the Mississippi State coach, accused Auburn of pumping helium into its footballs.

Later, Sherrill denied that he thought Daniel was using the lighter-than-air gas when he punted twice for a 56.5-yard average in State's Oct. 9 loss to the No. 8 Tigers. Sherrill did concede that he asked for an investigation.

The balls were confiscated and sent to the Southeastern Conference office. The verdict: Daniel has used nothing but air to lead the nation with a 48.3-yard average.

"It was kind of a compliment," he said. "It was like, 'He's got to be doing something with those balls to kick like that.'"

Since then, newspapers around the country have conducted their own tests to determine if helium balls travel farther than those filled with just plain old air. Sports Illustrated even came to campus to conduct its own tongue-in-cheek experiment with Daniel and an Auburn physicist.

"I've enjoyed it," Daniel said. "I would like to thank Jackie Sherrill for making the accusation. He's kind of made me real popular overnight."

For SI, Daniel punted two balls — one filled with helium, the other loaded with air — 10 times each. The helium ball had an average distance of 57.7 yards with a hang time of 4.66 seconds; the air ball went an average of 59.8 yards with a hang time of 4.93 seconds.

"Giving Jackie his best case — that the initial velocity of the ball is inversely proportional to its weight — helium would still be detrimental to the trajectory, because lighter objects, even traveling at the same speed as heavier objects, are more susceptible to the opposing forces of wind resistance," physicist Stephen Knowlton told the magazine.

"The helium was heavier than air," Daniel said. "That ball felt like it had water in it. It would go up in the air and just die."

Daniel's success can probably be traced to his family tree. His grandfather was a punter. So was his father, who earned all-state honors at a Georgia high school. At 6-foot-1, 230 pounds, Daniel certainly has the size to boot the ball a long way.

"I think it's all hereditary," he said. "I remember when I was 8 years old, I entered this punt, pass and kick contest back in Valley. I won it because I was able to punt the ball 31 yards. I think I kicked it off the tee 10 yards and I threw it only 11 yards."

Daniel walked on at Alabama but never got a chance to play. So he transferred to Auburn, where he came out of nowhere last season to win the punting job and wound up 17th in the nation with a 42.6-yard average.

This season, he has been even longer. Daniel can recall only two bad punts — one for 35 yards, the other for 37 — in a game against Vanderbilt when he was ill.

"I had been sick all night the night before and all during the day before the game," he recalled. "I just had this weak feeling. The field was damp and wet and I think all those factors just caused a mental block."

Daniel has an outside shot to break Reggie Roby's record for best punting average in a season. Roby, now with the Washington Redskins, averaged 49.8 yards for Iowa in 1981.

With three games remaining, and figuring he will punt about 15 more times, Daniel would need to average around 53.7 yards to break Roby's record. If he doesn't get it this year, there's always 1994 — if Daniel decides to return for his senior season.

He's thought about entering the NFL draft, but said he expects to return to Auburn.

"A lot of people have come out as juniors and it seems like most of them have had real difficult, hard times," he said. "I don't think I'll do it."

Former Permian star back in Eagle lineup

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A year ago Britt Hager sat around wondering if he would ever play football again. On Sunday, he'll be the starting middle linebacker for the Philadelphia Eagles against the Phoenix Cardinals.

"I'm ready," Hager said Wednesday. "I've been waiting five years for this."

Hager gets his chance because Byron Evans broke his right forearm in Sunday's loss to the Dallas Cowboys.

The 225-pound Hager, a third-round draft pick out of Texas in 1989, suffered a herniated cervical disc against Green Bay last Nov. 15, and underwent surgery.

"With a neck and disc problem I didn't know if I was going to play again," Hager recalled. "One year later and I'm in the starting lineup. I'm very blessed that's for sure."

Hager described his rehabilitation period as "a very lonely and scary feeling."

"You didn't know if the nerves would come back," he said. "If you could ever get the proper feeling and get the strength back in your upper body. There is a long waiting process, because there isn't a whole lot you can do except just wait. The rehab and stuff was just rest for two, three months.

Hager said he began to think about life after football.

"I thought I was prepared," he said. "I had a degree (in speech communication). But you don't really know if you're prepared or not. You start looking at a lot of different options.

"A lot of things crossed my mind but at the time all I really wanted was to do was get healthy. That was my main priority. To get control and get my strength back."

Hager recovered and reported to training camp. Evans broke a hand during the exhibition season and Hager played considerably. Once Evans was able to play, Hager returned to his backup role and special teams performer.

Hager said that except for the time he spent on injured reserve he has never despaired of getting his chance as a starter.

"I knew there were a lot of guy who didn't start playing regular until their fourth or fifth years in the league," he said. "Steve McMichael (of the Chicago Bears) was one, and he's, what, in his 14th season."

Hager realizes that he's getting his chance only because of the injury to Evans, one of the top linebackers in the NFL.

"Anytime anybody gets an injury like that it's tough," Hager said. "I went through it last year and I don't wish that on anybody. But playing behind those three linebackers that we have (Evans, Seth Joyner and William Thomas), that's the only way my opportunity could come. Somebody had to get hurt.

"I got a lot to prove as far as being a linebacker," Hager said. "I came in on situations, but this is my opportunity to come out and show that I can play in the starting lineup."

He expects to be tested by the Phoenix offense, especially on the run. The Eagles — who gave up 271 yards rushing against Dallas Sunday, 237 by Emmitt Smith — are 25th against the run in the 28-team league.

SHULA: Could top 400 wins at current pace

on an individual."

Shula, an NFL head coach for 31 years, shows no signs of slowing down. Miami is 6-1 with five wins in a row.

Even if Shula quits after one more win, can anyone match his total?

"No," Jets coach Bruce Coslet said Wednesday. "I just don't think in this day and age anybody will even approach it."

"I would say it's unlikely, more so now than it's ever been," said Shula's son David, coach of the Cincinnati Bengals. Because of free agency, he said, "You're not able to keep your team together for any length of time."

When David became the Bengals' coach last year, he trailed his father by 306 victories. Now he trails by 319.

On the verge of becoming football's winningest coach, Shula may pull away from the field by working for several more years. While 325 looms large enough, Shula's final victory total could be much higher. Even 400 isn't out of the question.

The pending sale of the Dolphins by the Robbie family could affect Shula's future, but he has given no hints about retiring. His current contract runs through 1994.

"At the end of the contract — and I do plan to honor it — I'll look at where I am and what I want to do," Shula said.

"When you try to figure out what you'd rather be doing, with the excitement, the intensity, the emotions we have on Sunday afternoons from the time the game kicks off until it's over, the roller coaster ride with the success and failure, there's not anything I'd rather be doing. I don't know of any profession that gives you those same types of thrills."

That doesn't sound like a coach who's about to hang it up.

"I don't know what else he'd do," said Dolphins security chief Stu Weinstein, who knows Shula as well as anyone in the team's organization. "If his health stays good and he feels he can get along with the new management, I can see him going on to coach for six or seven more years."

That would allow Shula to approach 400 victories. By maintaining his career winning percentage of .678 and winning one playoff game a year, he would reach 400 by the end of the 1999 season at age 69.

"As long as Don has his health and enjoys what he's doing, he's going to keep coaching, in my mind," said Schottenheimer, one of Shula's closest friends in the NFL. "That's the thing he's always said to me.

"One measure of Don is that he wins 100 games in his first 10 years, another 100 in the second, another 100 in the third and he's on his way to — who knows, he may hit 400."

Even at 325, Shula's win total would deserve to be included on a list of the toughest records to break in all of sports. A rookie coach could compile 17 consecutive perfect seasons (19-0) and still finish two wins shy of 325. Winning 10 games a season, it would take him until 2025 to reach 325.

"The record is going to rank right up there with Joe DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak," said Buffalo coach Marv Levy, fourth among active coaches with 112 wins.

Only one coach seems to regard Don Shula's record as breakable — and that's Don Shula.

"People didn't think Halas' record would be broken, either," he said.

AREA: Yellowjackets, Rangers battle for playoff spot

and it looks like they've done about the same."

Both teams keep the ball on the ground — Greenwood with the wishbone and Kermit with a split-back veer. And both teams have speedy offensive backfield. The Rangers, 6-2-1 overall, average 326 yards rushing per game. The have scored 39 touchdowns on the ground and only two passing this season.

Mitchell calls Ranger leading rusher and halfback Cody Hall (638 yards) one of the fastest backs in West Texas. Purser says Yellowjacket quarterback Devalon Bryant "is probably the best athlete in the district."

"I think it's going to be one of those games that comes down to one or two plays," Mitchell said.

The visiting team has won in the last two years, with Greenwood knocking Kermit out of playoff contention last season in Kermit, 22-14. The Rangers were out of the playoff chase at the time, making Friday's affair a grudge match for the Yellowjackets. But Mitchell believes the postseason reward for the winner is motivation enough for Kermit.

"I think that's kind of on (the players minds), that bitterness of missing that opportunity," Mitchell said. "Now we've been blessed with an opportunity to do it again and it's good in that respect but I think it's going to be a tough, tough job."

Bryant, a junior, heads the Yellowjacket veer and has 683 yards rushing. But fullback Garron Halterman leads the team in rushing with 723 yards. Halfback Edward Draughan, whose speed has Purser's attention, has 548 yards.

Michael S. Smith has 485 rushing yards for the Rangers. But Greenwood uses several backs in their wishbone.

The Yellowjackets have bounded back from a 2-4 start to win three in a row, moving to 5-4. Early season injuries had the team without as many as six starters before district started. But Kermit has since healed and improved over last season partly because it has had three years to learn Mitchell's system, the head coach said, in his third season.

"They're coming in on a pretty good roll," Purser said. "They're just about at their peak."

The Yellowjackets have only one player over 200 pounds, which should give Greenwood a power advantage. Ranger starting fullback Damon Cumba weighs 215.

"(Speed) has been our forte ... (but) we don't have much size," Mitchell said. "If it comes down to brute force they have the upper hand on us. It's going to have to come down to some other thing."

Said Purser: "We're more of a power football team and they're more of a big play football team. They can score from anywhere on anybody."

Win or lose, Purser is glad to be in a position where his team can determine its own fate.

"You don't have to worry about what's going on somewhere else," Purser said. "It's been three years since we've been in this position and we've wanted to be in this position for a long time."

Playoff situations for other area schools are not as simple as Greenwood's. STANTON'S regular season is over. The Buffaloes improved over last year by two wins at 5-4 and have an outside chance of finishing in a four-way tie for second in District 6-2A.

Stanton's backfield tandem of Ricky Lucas and Jerele Lee did finish the season with more than 1,000 yards each. Lucas had 1,037 and Lee 1,136.

In Distrcit 3-4A ANDREWS (9-0 overall, 5-0 in district) has clinched a playoff spot and appears headed for a district championship showdown with Sweetwater Nov. 12. The Mustangs are open this week and Sweetwater (6-2, 4-0) hosts Monahans. BIG SPRING (4-3, 2-2) plays Pecos (5-4, 1-4) at home Friday. They could still tie for second with Sweetwater and Monahans.

In District 8-1A RANKIN (6-2, 1-1) plays at Fort Davis (2-5, 0-2). The Red Devils will host GARDEN CITY (2-6, 2-1) Nov. 12, and if they beat Fort Davis that game decides the runner-up playoff spot. Garden City is open Friday.

MIDLAND CHRISTIAN (7-0, 1-0) ends its regular season at El Paso Agape Saturday. A win would give the Mustangs a TAPPS six-man District 1 championship.

LAMESA (0-9, 0-4) ends its painful season against probably the best squad it's played all year — 9-0 and sixth-ranked Plainview.

TUCKER: Former Rebel starts for TCU

(From 1C)

you'll start'," said Tucker. "I came in here and stayed all summer and worked real hard. We have another good tight end in Brian Collins. He's a pass receiving tight end and I knew to get any playing time I was going to have to work on my blocking.

"I've got probably one of the best backgrounds of anybody," said Tucker. "The coaches at Lee taught me things, got me on weights. Other players weren't on weight programs and that just gave me an advantage coming in. Use the 'bone offense if you don't block you're not going to play."

Tucker caught 14 passes for 280 yards and one touchdown his senior year at Lee, but Lee offensive coordinator Mike Quimby credits Tucker's work ethics for his early success at the Division I college level.

"He was an excellent worker," said Quimby. "He stuck with it and tried to better himself everyday. I would hope that we helped him as far blocking, but he is a good receiver too."

Tucker's receiving statistics are not eye-popping, but five receptions for 31 yards and two touchdowns have given the Frogs an added boost during its current three game winning streak that has TCU talking bowl for the first time since 1984.

"Things have started clicking lately," said Tucker. "At the start of the season nothing was going our way, but the last couple of weeks we started getting some breaks and scoring in the red zone. It made me feel I made the right choice. People said 'Why did you go to TCU?' and this is why. We are turning the program around."

TCU's last bowl game was a 31-14 loss to a Major Harris-led West Virginia team in 1984. At 4-4, TCU must win two of its final three games against Tech, Texas and Texas A&M. The Horned Frogs have been dismal during the month of November — going 4-20 since 1986.

Saturday's game in Lubbock will be the closest to a homecoming game for Tucker.

"A lot of my friends are at Tech. About 90 percent of my friends went there so it will be good to go west to see them," said Tucker. "(Former Lee defensive standout) Tony Olivas is a walk-on at Tech and we keep in touch and a lot of my family will be there."

Prices rebound

NEW YORK — Oil prices recovered from a low start early in the session Wednesday, but recovered sharply in heavy volume after oil was cheap enough to encourage more buying.

Next-month delivery of light sweet crude oil settled at $17.49 per barrel, up 37 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange. Crude had fallen as much as 36 cents a barrel early in the day, before swinging back to a gain of 46 cents shortly before the close.

Local crude purchasers raised their poste dprice 50 cents to $16 a barrel.

Strong weekly inventory figures released the night before by the American Petroleum Institute sent prices lower at the start of trading, hurting home heating oil in particular.

The petroleum commodities rode a wave of buying inspired by investors who believed the market's downward trend was ready for a reversal.

Various market trend theories showed prices were ready to rise, according to analysts at Pegasus Econometric Group.

Natural gas prices were mostly higher, with contracts for delivery in December settling at 2.441 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 3.4 cents.

Flying Subway

HOUSTON — Subway Sandwiches are being served on 116 Continental Airlines flights originating in Houston and Denver as part of an expanded partnership between the two companies.

After a successful six-week test that included serving Subway's four-inch sandwiches on Houston flights, the program was put in place permanently on Sunday for Continental's Houston and Denver hubs.

The program now includes 75 daily flights from Houston and 41 from Denver. Continental said there are plans to eventually serve Subway products on flights from its Newark, N.J., hub.

Dollar slides

NEW YORK — The dollar slid against most other currencies Wednesday as investors took profits following the greenback's recent rise. The drop in the stock market also helped push the dollar lower, traders said.

Stocks plunge

NEW YORK — The stock market plummeted Wednesday in a crush of trading exacerbated by computer-triggered selling.

The Dow Jones industrial average shed 35.77 points to close at 3,661.87.

Declining issues outnumbered advancing ones by about 3 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Fed: Consumer spending increases

■ Central bank delivers moderately positive assessment of economic conditions across country.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve delivered a moderately positive assessment of economic conditions across the country on Wednesday, noting strength in consumer spending, particularly for autos.

It said business activity is spotty in California and New York and mentioned some signs of inflation in the raw materials that manufacturers buy. But overall the Fed's assessment of regional business activity was seen by economists as a bit more optimistic than its last report in September.

"Activity has been increasing at a slow to moderate pace," the Fed said in the "beige book," named for the color of its cover. "... Consumer spending rose in a majority of districts, with particular strength noted in sales of autos and other durables," big-ticket items intended to last three or more years.

Wednesday's report summarized anecdotal material collected before Oct. 26 by the Fed's 12 regional banks. It will be used by monetary policy-makers at their next meeting on Nov. 16.

The Fed has left short-term interest rates unchanged since September 1992, and economists said the latest beige book, while a bit more positive, did not show enough growth or inflation to prompt the central bank to nudge rates higher anytime soon.

"The message to the Fed here is, 'Stand pat, you're doing fine. Things are picking up and inflation is a non-problem,'" said economist Robert Dederick of Northern Trust Co. in Chicago.

In addition to autos, the Fed mentioned housing as another bright spot and said the long-moribund commercial real estate market was experiencing some pickup as well.

Autos sales were so much above expectations that some dealers reported inventory shortages before the 1994 models showed up. Consumers also were buying appliances and furniture. Retailers were expecting year-over-year gains in Christmas sales, but less growth than between 1991 and 1992.

Manufacturing "showed some improvement," with production gains reported in autos and parts, construction-related products such as cement, brick and glass and electronics, semiconductors and paper.

But aerospace and defense plants in the West and clothing factories in Mississippi and Georgia continue to pare employment, the Fed said.

Crop damage continues to be reported from rain in the Midwest and drought in the South, but reports from livestock producers were favorable.

Tourism is doing well in some areas. Loan demand is "steady to slightly improved" in most districts. Mining activity was unchanged, but oil and gas exploration is on the upswing.

Price increases were noted for some building supplies and raw materials going into manufactured goods, but so far that is not feeding through to the retail level, where prices were described as "flat or competitive."

The Fed's compilation of anecdotal material fits with recent economic statistics showing growth improving overall nationally.

The Commerce Department said last week that the economy grew at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 2.8 percent in the July-September quarter, after managing only a lackluster 1.4 percent rate during the first half. Most private analysts and Clinton administration economists are projecting growth at better than a 3 percent rate in the fourth quarter.

"The interest-sensitive sectors of our economy are responding, and we are well on our way to a healthy and steady, investment-led recovery," Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen said Wednesday in testimony to the Senate Finance Committee.

Comptroller: Pro sports pump up Texas economy

AUSTIN (AP) — Professional sports hold a place deep in the heart — and pocketbook — of Texas, generating about $860 million a year for the economy, State Comptroller John Sharp said Wednesday.

"Whether it's football or rodeo, basketball or auto racing ... the high-profile, high-stakes professional sports industry is pumping millions of dollars a year into the state's economy," Sharp said.

The comptroller's office estimates that the seven major-league teams based in Texas in 1992 spent a combined $263 million on operating expenses, such as staff, equipment and travel.

An economic "ripple effect" generated another $603 million in business activity, according to the comptroller's monthly publication, Fiscal Notes. For example, it said, stadium operators use cleaning services that buy supplies from local businesses.

The figures include the Dallas Cowboys and Mavericks; Houston Oilers, Astros and Rockets; Texas Rangers; and San Antonio Spurs. They don't take into account the latest addition to the pro team ranks: The Dallas Stars of the National Hockey League.

The Dallas, Houston and San Antonio metropolitan areas, where the pro clubs have headquarters, reap about two-thirds of the overall economic benefits, according to Fiscal Notes.

The comptroller's office said there are 263 professional athletes signed with the four major leagues in Texas, earning a total $167 million annually. That's an average $635,000 per player.

Major-league professional sports attract 6.5 million paying fans, plus the millions who watch on television and buy team merchandise.

The most direct benefit to the state is in sales taxes, Fiscal Notes said. The 1992 combined sales tax funds from tickets, stadium revenues and licensed merchandise totals $51.2 million, according to comptroller's office estimates.

Richards takes on 'myths' of NAFTA opponents

DALLAS (AP) — Fear stirred up by opponents of the North American Free Trade Agreement is threatening congressional passage of the pact, Gov. Ann Richards said Wednesday.

"If we listen to all of the scare stories, we're going to do serious long-term damage to our own economy and to our relationship with the neighbors of this hemisphere," the governor said during a speech at a small business conference on North American Free Trade presented by the Greater Dallas Chamber of Commerce.

President Clinton on Wednesday sent Congress the final version of legislation to put in force the trade agreement, which would lower tariffs and other trade barriers among the United States, Mexico and Canada.

Richards also was heading to Washington for her latest trip to urge congressional support for the agreement. She asked forum participants to let their representatives know they support the trade agreement, too.

"I think we are down to the difference between 10 and 20 votes on this issue, and what you do can make the difference," she said.

In her speech, Richards contradicted what she said were myths surrounding the proposed accord: that Mexicans cannot afford to buy U.S. goods and that NAFTA will hurt the environment, cost U.S. jobs and destroy America's manufacturing base.

Mexico is the United States' second-largest trading partner.

Taxpayers wrestle with 'provisional income'

By Bill Doyle

Q: At present, up to 50 percent of Social Security benefits are subject to federal income tax if "provisional income" — also called "modified adjusted gross income" — exceeds a threshold, which is $25,000 for single taxpayers and $32,000 for married couples filing joint returns.

Doyle

Under the Clinton tax law, up to 85 percent of Social Security benefits will be taxed when provisional income is more than $34,000 for a single person or $44,000 for a married couple.

Does this mean no Social Security benefits will be taxed when provisional income is below the new, higher thresholds? Or, will the 50 percent rule continue to apply to provisional incomes between the new and old thresholds, with 85 percent kicking in at the higher number?

The latter, if true, should make for a real dilly of a "Social Security Benefits Worksheet," as printed in federal income tax return instruction booklets.

A: The latter is true. Did you have some happy idea that, in writing the new law, our mutton-headed Congress would let senior citizens escape tax on Social Security benefits when provisional income was between the old and new thresholds?

"Dilly" is the word, by the way. We won't know exactly what that worksheet will look like until we get the instruction booklets in our tax return packages. But I've seen drafts of a couple, prepared by accounting firms. They are enough to send ordinary folks up the wall — and into the arms of professional tax preparers.

Q: Can a married couple duck the tax on Social Security benefits by filing separate federal income tax returns?

A: Not if they live together. In that case, their provisional income threshold number is zero. However, if they do not live together for even one day in the tax year, that number becomes $25,000 for each of them.

Q: There is a great deal of confusion about what constitutes provisional income in determining if up to 85 percent of Social Security benefits will be taxed.

I maintain it will be all income that previously was taxed plus 85 percent of Social Security benefits and all otherwise tax-free municipal bond interest. A colleague claims his teacher's retirement benefits will not count for this purpose.

Can you clarify this?

A: Unless your friend's retirement payments are tax-free disability benefits — which is unlikely — you win the argument. Tell your teacher friend to do his homework.

One more obscure point: Besides the things you mentioned, any foreign-earned income or income from U.S. possessions and Puerto Rico excluded from adjusted gross income must be added back to arrive at the provisional income figure.

Q: Will it be possible to withdraw money from individual retirement accounts and 401(k) and other retirement plans in alternate years to keep provisional income below the point where income tax must be paid on Social Security benefits every year?

A: Yes, until you pass age 70½. After that, you are required to make withdrawals from IRAs and most other retirement plans based on your life expectancy or the joint life expectance of you and your beneficiary.

You raise an interesting point. By scheduling retirement plan withdrawals carefully, in some years you can keep your provisional income below the threshold at which the 85 percent income tax bite on Social Security benefits takes hold.

Q: Early this year, I withdrew a large amount of money from my IRA to buy a lovely automobile. Because the withdrawal is taxable income, it put my 1993 provisional income way, way over the threshold at which 85 percent of my Social Security benefits become taxable. Is there any legitimate way to solve my problem?

A: There is no need for a solution, because you don't have a problem. That Social Security provision of the new tax law does not take effect until next year. "Only" — and I use that word advisedly — 50 percent of your 1993 Social Security benefits will be taxed.

Michael Chang returns a shot to Malival Washington Wednesday in Chang's Paris Open indoor second round victory.

Sampras rolls past Wheaton

■ Paris Open Indoors

PARIS (AP) — Top-ranked Pete Sampras expects a tougher match from Marc Rosset than he got from in a 6-4, 6-2 victory over David Wheaton on Wednesday in advancing to the third round of the Paris Open tennis tournament.

"Marc's got one of the best serves in tennis. On indoor courts you just basically roll the dice," Sampras said. "And I hope the dice roll my way.

"A match like that can just be determined by a couple of points," Sampras said.

Wheaton didn't help himself by giving away two points. He had two double faults in the first game of the second set that gave Sampras a 1-0 lead. Sampras breezed home from there in the 68-minute match.

Sampras has clinched the No. 1 world ranking heading into the ATP finals starting Nov. 16 at Frankfurt. Jim Courier, who was trailing Sampras in the rankings, lost to Sweden's Magnus Gustafsson on Tuesday night.

In the only third-round match of the day, Stefan Edberg, the No. 6 seed, survived 13 double faults to beat No. 12 Petr Korda of the Czech Republic 4-6, 6-4, 7-5.

In second-round matches, No. 4 Michael Stich of Germany, fresh from a victory in the Stockholm Open last week, downed Magnus Larsson of Sweden 7-6 (7-4), 6-2; ninth-seeded Goran Ivanisevic of Croatia held off a match point in the third set to advance past Jonas Svensson of Sweden 3-6, 6-3, 7-6 (7-3), and Michael Chang, seeded seventh, beat Malivai Washington 6-7 (7-1), 6-2, 6-3.

Sergi Bruguera of Spain, who won the French Open across town earlier this year, was eliminated 6-4, 6-4 by Arnaud Boetsch of France. Bruguera, a clay court specialist, is 20-21 indoors on carpet.

Jared Palmer, a qualifier from the United States, beat No. 12 Richard Krajicek of the Netherlands 7-5, 7-6 (7-3). Krajicek had 17 aces but couldn't get a break point against the American. Palmer converted just one break point out of eight chances but it was enough to give him the first set.

The 22-year-old Palmer, a former college champion, is 127th in the world. He and Boetsch will meet in the next round with a possible quarterfinal matchup against Boris Becker ahead.

Ivanisevic lost to Stich in the Stockholm final last week. The Croatian saved a match point against Svensson at 4-5 in the third set.

"Last week I was two match points down and I went to the final," Ivanisevic said. "So maybe I am going to win this tournament."

He will have to play Chang in the next round.

"Last time he beat me but I have to play good tennis to beat him," Ivanisevic said. "He is never giving up. He is like a fly, a little mosquito, everywhere he is just running and you have to win points three times to win one point."

"Goran is tough to play on any surface," Chang said. "When he gets his serve going, he is capable of beating anyone."

Stanton's Jeremy Stallings was recently named to the 1993 Track & Field News High School All-America Team in the 800-meter run. He was also in the Top 15 for the Men's Athlete of the Year Award.

Stallings won the 800 at the 1993 National Scholastic Outdoor Track & Field Championships and was second in the 1993 Keebler International Prep Meet. He also won the bronze medal at the 1993 Pan American Junior Championships held in Winnipeg, Canada, last July.

Currently, Stallings is a freshman at the University of Florida where he is running track.

'Horns, Cougs enjoy short week

HOUSTON (AP) — There are no complaints about the short work week for tonight's game between Texas and Houston in the Astrodome.

Both teams had disappointing Southwest Conference losses on Saturday, and they're both eager to show they can play better.

Houston coach Kim Helton was ready to play on Sunday.

"They're going to have a chance to play against bigger and faster and better people in front of the whole world and have a chance to redeem themselves," Helton said.

Texas coach John Mackovic is also anxious to get started.

"Sometimes when you have a setback in life, the best thing for you to do is to just get up and go right back to work the next day," Mackovic said. "Our guys have come out and responded well."

Texas Tech dampened the Longhorns' bowl aspirations with a 31-22 victory in Austin last week, and the Cougars played their worst game of the season in a 28-10 loss to Texas Christian.

Texas (2-4-1, 2-1 in SWC games) can still reach the Cotton Bowl if it wins its final four games against Houston, Texas Christian, Baylor and No. 10 Texas A&M on Thanksgiving night at Kyle Field.

At 1-5-1, 1-2-1, Helton is just trying to get some momentum going into his recruiting program.

"Texas is going to watch the film and say, 'If TCU can blitz them and cover them, the University of Texas can," Helton said. "They sure are big. I don't know where they get all their guys from, but I need to start shopping there."

By the numbers, it could be a high-scoring game. Houston ranks 96th among the 106 NCAA Division I-A schools in scoring defense and the Longhorns are 92nd.

But both offensive teams have been erratic. Texas hasn't won consecutive games all season and the Cougars have has been hard-hit by injuries, especially at running back. Houston quarterback Jimmy Klingler may play against Texas, but he has a bruised shoulder and sore ribs.

The Longhorns haven't lost confidence despite the disappointing season.

"We're sitting at the back of the roller coaster right now trying to push our way to the front," running back Rodrick Walker said. "The people in front of us, we're going to have to push them out of their seats."

"This team has the potential to beat A&M," wide receiver Mike Adams said. "I think we can beat A&M and I think everybody else (on the team) does too."

Texas leads the series with Houston 10-7-2, but the Cougars have won four of the last six games and the last three in the Astrodome. Texas won last year's game 45-38 after blowing a 28-0 lead.

Sports brings bucks to Texas

AUSTIN (AP) — Professional sports hold a place deep in the heart — and pocketbook — of Texas, generating about $860 million a year for the economy, State Comptroller John Sharp said Wednesday.

"Whether it's football or rodeo, basketball or auto racing ... the high-profile, high-stakes professional sports industry is pumping millions of dollars a year into the state's economy," Sharp said.

By Francine Parnes

NEW YORK (AP) — Sartorially speaking, spring has sprung.

New York's spring fashion showings got under way with fanfare Monday, introducing the first Anne Klein collection by the fashion house's new head designer, Richard Tyler.

The career woman's clothing line marked its 25th year by unveiling what may be the season's most anticipated collection, and Tyler didn't disappoint.

The Australian-born designer, who is known for dressing Hollywood types and rock 'n' roll luminaries, offered naughty schoolgirl styles, lingerie-looking slip dresses, army-green rubber boots and some hemlines hovering near indecent.

But he also managed to stay the classic Anne Klein course with meticulously tailored jackets.

Next up were Bill Blass and Byron Lars, representing, respectively, polished and pretty, and wacky and witty.

Blass pleased his luncheon audience with little black lace dresses and floaty chiffon ball skirts. Lars honored Emma Peel of the television series "The Avengers" with shirtdresses unbuttoned over hot pants and holster belts carrying lipstick as ammunition.

Tyler opened with sexy schoolgirl looks reminiscent of those at last month's Paris and Milan shows. There were super-short wool jumpers, flippy pleated suspender skirts and black leather kilts, all worn with anklets and leather backpacks.

And there were jackets.

In earth tones, black and white, Tyler served up twill riding jackets, wool bombers, satin golf jackets and work jackets in a rayon-linen blend.

Evening wear was a black-and-white story, with slip dresses and fluid pantsuits in sheer silk chiffon.

Evening is the best time of day for Blass, whose signature remains unexpected fabrics and silhouettes. Menswear-inspired gray pinstripes or glen plaid pants went with feminine blazers in silk chiffon or black lace, or point d'esprit jean jackets.

"A certain amount of surprise is always necessary in clothes," Blass said. "A bit of wit doesn't hurt."

Apropos wit, Lars once again reworked fashion basics with novel proportions and shapes.

Nodding to the Superfly '70s, he trotted out exaggerated bell sleeves tumbling over fingertips and towering Afro wigs.

Stripped of the props, such as crochet bras over dresses and black patent gloves with swim wear, there were wearable shirt dresses and Chinese red silk jackets with frog closures.

For some, this week's collections will be remembered as much for their venue as their styles.

Forty shows are being staged in a central location, copying the format used in Milan and Paris. The move is designed not only for convenience but also to help elevate American fashion to international status.

The reorganization comes courtesy of Seventh on Sixth, the group also responsible for the new cap on modeling fees, which had soared to $10,000 apiece for certain models per show.

French fashion designer Yves Saint Laurent recently lost the right to use the name Champagne for his new fragrance. Here, Yves Saint Laurent, left, waves to the audience after the presentation of his 1994 spring/summer ready-to-wear collection showing in mid-October in Paris.

Yves Saint Laurent loses new perfume name in court

By Roger Cohen
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — After a bitter legal battle between the Champagne industry and a top name in French fashion, a court ruled a week ago that Champagne is Champagne, and Yves Saint Laurent has no right to use the name for perfume.

The ruling, which ordered the confiscation and destruction of publicity and packaging for Yves Saint Laurent's new perfume, "Champagne," ended a court fight that began when the association of Champagne wine growers and three individual producers filed suit over use of the name.

The perfume was introduced in Europe to enormous fanfare Sept. 20. The company has spent about $17 million on advertising for the fragrance.

Yves Saint Laurent had planned to sell Champagne in the United States next year. While Thursday's ruling affects the name only in France, it was not immediately clear whether Yves Saint Laurent would go ahead with its American plans. Similar suits have been filed in Britain and Germany, but courts there have not ruled on the matter.

France's Champagne producers, who are notoriously touchy about the use of the name of the most famous sparkling wine, contended that the perfume would confuse consumers and compromise the image of Champagne, especially because the perfume is packaged in a bottle resembling a Champagne cork.

Nonsense, said Yves Saint Laurent, who registered the Champagne trademark for his perfume last year.

But Judge Lydie Dissler said, "Consumers risk making a connection between the name of the perfume and that of the wine, and they may believe that Champagne producers have reached an understanding with Yves Saint Laurent in order to reinforce their prestige."

He ordered Yves Saint Laurent to pay $8,600 to the three Champagne producers that filed suit — Moet-et-Chandon, Lanson and Marc Brugnon — and a symbolic 17 cents to the association.

Yves Saint Laurent, which is part of the state-owned Elf Sanofi pharmaceuticals group, said it would appeal.

America: Freedom to overeat

By Erma Bombeck

The programs to keep America fit are right up there with the Edsel and the Susan B. Anthony dollar.

Bombeck

The more we talk about healthy food and exercise, the fatter we get.

The National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey polled more than 8,000 adults and found that more people are overweight today than they were 15 years ago. It has been categorized as an "epidemic."

I have just clipped two articles from a current magazine. One is a diet guaranteed to drop five pounds off my body in a weekend. The other is a recipe for a six-minute pecan pie.

That sums up what is wrong with the fitness program.

Never give a dieter a choice. If a waitress is offering a baked potato (which is nutritionally great) she will add, "Do you want sour cream, butter, chives and bacon bits on it?" She shouldn't do that. In fact, never let the customer know there is sour cream in the building.

We're not all as strong as Oprah Winfrey, who recently ordered broiled whitefish for dinner (which should win her the Nobel Prize for character) and a plate of french fries, which she just wanted to look at.

I could have attached 50 reasons for eating those french fries ranging from starving children somewhere to a promise to myself to eat more vegetables.

We are a nation that is focused on food. America, The Beautiful dwells on amber fields of grain. Our Bill of Rights alludes to freedom from hunger. Tammy Bakker used to buy fresh doughnuts to put in a hotel room in place of a deodorizer.

We eat at our desks, in cars, at sporting events, weddings, funerals and movies. When we cannot eat everything that is served to us, we cart it home in a doggie bag. I have never seen my kids without a three-quart paper cup filled with a beverage floating in ice. It's like an appendage.

We all try. I can never forget an 80-year-old woman at a Weight Watchers meeting who said in a quivering voice, "Tell me again what I can eat." The battle goes on forever.

The answer would be to take away our options. Have menus that would include only celery sandwiches on 18-grain bread. Serve tofu hot dogs at the baseball games. Use blue milk for our shakes and serve plastic desserts that could only be looked at and have our pictures taken with them.

When that happens, I'll feed the contents of my doggie bag to my dog.

Erma Bombeck's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Handbags are in softer styles

By Anne-Marie Schiro
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — As clothes become less structured, so do handbags.

A stiff, boxlike bag just doesn't look right with a slouchy fluid jacket or tunic. So pouches and drawstring bags have made a comeback, in soft materials like suede, velvet and nylon for day and in velvet, beadwork or metallic cloths for evening.

Saks Fifth Avenue has crushable nylon bags by Citysac for $100 to $200.

At Henri Bendel, the most popular bags are soft, slouchy drawstrings or, surprisingly, backpacks in smaller, lighter versions.

There are even mini-backpacks no more than six to eight inches long "for the customer who likes the look of a backpack but doesn't want to carry a lot of weight," said Louise MacKenzie, the store's vice president and general merchandise manager. They are priced from about $100 to $150.

Barneys New York also has these "ladies-who-lunch kind of backpacks," said Sandra Constantine, the store's vice president for women's accessories. They are smaller and neater than those preferred by youngsters and are priced at a very grown-up $600 to $700.

Newest designs for spring flowing with fluid lines

By Trish Donnally
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — The freshest fashions for spring are all about movement. Layers flow like liquid — fluttering blouses, long swingy vests, easy jackets and fluid pants.

Last month, Claude Montana did an about-face from the hard-edged clothes he's shown for years, this time showing asymmetric hems, flowing trapeze jackets and vests, and cropped wide pants with slits up the side.

Gone is the bold, bright palette that was a signature. Montana's layers of sweeping beige coats, long ivory vests and black pants looked especially good. Pale dove-gray suits with wide or slim pants and asymmetrically cut jackets with swishy peplums looked great.

His black baby-doll dresses over lace-trimmed bloomers reinforce the nightie trend that started in haute couture in July. Karl Lagerfeld showed bloomers with micro-mini baby-doll dresses in his Chloe collection too. But come on! Who really wants to wear baby-doll dresses and bloomers unless you're invited to a black-tie pajama party?

More pajama looks (printed robes, fluid pants and bra tops), harem outfits with cropped tops, and belly-button-baring long circle skirts make you curious about just who buys these clothes.

One retailer, who asked to remain off the record, said Chloe is a very tough sell because women don't have any place to wear these clothes.

But the fashion world looks to Lagerfeld for direction, and what emerged as important yesterday was his soft palette. He colored the collection with the palest pinks, peaches, sky blues and sands.

Emanuel Ungaro is using a washed-out palette too. When his colors are stronger, they're rich, but not bright. Silhouettes are much looser in Ungaro's spring collection compared with the days when he wrapped women's torsos with skintight silks.

Ungaro mixed a myriad of textures, too. In one ivory group, for instance, he showed floaty blouses; easy, unlined, small-shouldered jackets; and fluid pants that combined cord, crepe, waffle-weave, twill, pebble and basket-weave textures. He even showed a taupe burlap jacket embroidered with white leaves.

Long, loose vests worn over slim pants; turbans; and dangling necklaces of wood, coral, shells or scarabs gave an Indian feeling to many Ungaro ensembles.

His pastel, summer-weight cut velvets were so feathery light, you could actually imagine wearing them in warm weather.

Ungaro's black evening dresses, made of fragile laces, were the most deliciously delicate designs in the collection.

The Hermes collection mixed easy shapes with a few of the top trends. Leather mid-calf apron dresses; high-waisted, drawstring waterproof silk raincoats; and easy tunics over wide satin silk and viscose pants looked current.

Unfortunately, au courant does not describe the Pierre Balmain collection designed by Oscar de la Renta. Did it ever look dated.

Proper little luncheon suits with square shoulders and short, straight skirts; high-heeled sandals with ankle straps; nude hosiery; and pith helmets or coolie hats just didn't cut it.

Company is low-key source of fashion

By Susan Phinney
N.Y. Times News Service

SEATTLE — Some apparel companies beg, threaten, even bribe to get their names and merchandise publicized. The C.C. Filson Co. isn't one of them.

Seattle-based Filson has been quietly making and dispensing high-quality outdoor wear for 96 years. It has always been a status symbol for folks seeking function. Ditto, now, for those seeking fashion.

In a year when clothing manufacturers and retailers are whining about a lack of orders and customers, Filson says its business is up about 40 percent. It has taken its retail outlet (it used to be hidden on the second floor of a warehouse) to street level in a tasteful new shop. It now has about 1,500 dealers in the United States. Even L.L. Bean sells Filson products at its big store in Maine.

BLAME IT ON the television series "Northern Exposure" or the current craze for work clothes as high fashion, but Filson is hot stuff. Japanese customers covet its quality and appearance. Italians, the fashion trend-setters of Europe (some say the world), import it by the boxful.

Steve Matson, vice president and general manager, isn't the sort to roll his eyes and clutch his chest, but he looks pained when fashion and Filson are used in the same sentence.

He admits to concerns that fashion customers might overwhelm the supply, leaving loyal customers in the lurch. Matson says it has happened to other suppliers of quality work clothes. People who depend on such apparel get angry, real angry, when they can't replace heavy-duty pants, shirts or jackets because some kid in suburbia is wearing them to make a fashion statement.

Somewhat reluctantly, Matson reveals that Filson's best-selling garment is the Double Mackinaw Cruiser, named after the timber cruisers who originally wore them. The jacket comes in gray, forest green and the red/black or blue/black squares known as lumberjack plaid.

IT HAS A one-piece "cape" over the chest and shoulders and a side-opening pocket across the back that's perfect for maps or papers. Four large patch pockets adorn the front, two more hand-warmer pockets are in the side seams. It sells for $216 or $222, depending on the size. They even have women's sizes 8-16. Made in 24-ounce virgin wool, it is one heavy jacket.

The cruiser has a matching vest, around $70, which Matson says is selling well in Western stores. Those who dress Western — today that's everybody from businesswomen to cowboys — are layering it over shirts.

These aren't the only Filson pieces fashion buffs are collecting. A heavy-duty duster made of canvas impregnated with paraffin, about $215, was designed as a working coat for cowboys. It even has a back pleat that covers the saddle. But outdoor-oriented professionals are wearing it to work in the city.

Matson says the coat, so stiff it resembles cardboard, softens up after it's been broken in. And he guarantees that wind and rain won't go through it.

ANYONE UNWILLING to commit to Filson's heavy-duty gear can sample the look with a packer hat — another big seller. It's made of a waxed cotton, commonly called tin cloth, that can be pinched or smashed into customized shapes.

Each hat, about $30, comes with a postage-paid "hat warranty" reply card. Customers are asked for name, address, age and reason for buying. Matson says he's gotten some wonderful responses and has discovered shoppers are younger than anticipated — as young as 20.

Businesses that think they invented customer service could probably learn a few things from Filson. It's not unusual for the company to get back for repairs a pair of pants sold 20 years ago. Filson has seen its famous tin-cloth pants come in with chainsaw marks on them. The pants are mended and returned, no charge. If it isn't convenient for a customer to send a garment to the factory, Filson sends out fabric for on-site repairs.

HEAVY WOOLS and treated cottons dominate Filson's assortment of about 100 items, but the company does offer some lightweight poplin garments. Recently it added heavy-duty suspenders and other accessories. All items except hats are made at the company's plant in Seattle.

Matson says the hats, along with leather-trimmed canvas luggage, are big hits in Japan right now.

'Layered look' for spring means chiffon

By Linda Gillan Griffin
N.Y. Times News Service

MILAN, Italy — Spring ready-to-wear from Italian designers may look all over the map and the history books, but distinct trends already are emerging.

Sheer fabrics — lightweight enough to float as models walk — are everywhere, and because of the sheerness, they're layered.

Alberta Ferretti, whose 1920s-style beaded chemises defined a new look for fall evenings, is adding layers of chiffon for spring — sometimes three or four. Models trailed chiffon ribbons from their wrists and walked the runways in pale colors combined with floral prints in chiffon, chiffon, chiffon. There were long sheer blouses with pantsuits, dove gray empire-waisted pleated dresses and one-shouldered tunics over pants.

Ferretti's linen sheath jackets and skirts measured up to the finest table linens. And at Byblos, pale yellow handkerchief linens were layered with soft, matching crepes.

The three silhouettes seen at most of the fashion houses are tunics over pants or shorts; long dresses with coats; and jackets with short dresses.

Taupe, stone, cream, wheat — all the shades of brown — and bright white are the colors to have next spring. The Byblos boys, Keith Varty and Allen Cleaver, like many others, began their shows with the new three-piece suit of bright white jacket or coat, trousers or short shorts and a tunic/vest. No shirt.

The single item to lust after come spring is the new T-shirt, which has nothing in common with the Hanes Beefy variety. In Ferretti's case, it was a long-sleeved chiffon worn under a gold-beaded sari. At Anna Molinari Blumarine, it was a turtleneck under a white lace sundress.

Blumarine also combined cropped cable knit sweaters with pleated white chiffon skirts, and added shocking chartreuse, robin's egg blue and candy pink. Her new sweater set is an ankle-length cardigan over a cropped pullover.

DEAR ABBY

Pneumonia can be stopped with one shot

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Because pneumococcal pneumonia, when combined with flu, is the sixth leading cause of death, Voluntary Hospitals of America, with help from Merck & Co. and AT&T, is sponsoring the Pneumonia Pnockout Campaign. Although a vaccine for pneumococcal pneumonia exists, fewer than two out of 10 people get immunized; consequently, an estimated 40,000 adults die each year from this killer.

Van Buren

In a recent Gallup poll, we learned that most adults are not aware that there is a vaccine, but they were pleased to learn about it, and eager to be immunized.

Abby, please help us spread the word so that those for whom it poses a danger can protect themselves against this serious illness. — JAMES S. ROBERTS, M.D., VOLUNTARY HOSPITALS OF AMERICA

DEAR DR. ROBERTS AND READERS: I was surprised to learn that pneumococcal pneumonia is preventable — with only one shot, the cost of which is covered by Medicare Part B.

According to the U.S. Public Health Service, anyone 65 or older, and those with recent serious illnesses or chronic diseases, are candidates for this immunization. Consult your physician now, before the pneumonia/flu season is upon us.

DEAR ABBY: I have been meaning to share this with you started your column.

I was never comfortable with the reference to death in that little nighttime prayer we teach our children, so I changed it for my children, and their children, and now for my great-grandchildren. May I share it with you for your approval?

Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep.
In the morning when I wake,
I pray the Lord my hand to take.

Abby, isn't that a happier message to go to sleep on? We think so. — JANICE TODD, PALM DESERT, CALIF.

DEAR JANICE: It is indeed a "happier message," but as we oldtimers would say, "I don't think it will play in Peoria."

DEAR ABBY: A videotape of the garden wedding of a Dave and Nancy Shiro was mailed to us from Boise, Idaho.

The wedding took place on June 6, 1993. There was a note inside indicating it was sent by "Dorothy." (There is a palm tree in the picture.)

I have no idea who these people are, but I'm sure they must be distressed to have lost their wedding pictures.

A friend suggested I write to you, saying, "Everyone reads Dear Abby."

I hope you can help these newlyweds retrieve their priceless videotape. — ISABEL MAYER, LEBANON, ORE.

DEAR ISABEL: I'll try. If I hear from Nancy and Dave, I'll let you know.

DEAR ABBY: I have lived on a farm for 27 years. Within that period of time, I have seen hundreds of animals (mostly dogs) dropped off and abandoned by owners who think they are doing their animals a service by giving them a chance to find another home rather than putting them to sleep.

I realize that some of these owners don't care what happens. Most of these animals slowly starve to death. Some of them don't get that far because they get hit along the road waiting for their owners to come back for them.

The dogs that do make it to a house either get run off by the dogs that already live there or the homeowner shoots the dog in the head because it's more humane than letting the animal starve to death.

We own five dogs. Each dog costs us about $100 a year to feed. That doesn't include licensing, shots, worming, spaying, flea collars, vet bills, etc.

Abby, I ask you, do these people think country homeowners take in an unlimited number of animals and everyone lives happily ever after? — DIANE SMITH, DUNDEE, OHIO

DEAR DIANE: No, they are irresponsible people who are unwilling to bear the expense of disposing of their pet in a more humane and responsible manner, so they just dump the pet like a discarded toy. Everybody who can read or watch television knows what the options are.

Abigail Van Buren's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

As we mature we are inclined to abuse our bodies, with bad habits and eating the wrong foods, which destroy the cells. A good diet and natural supplement of herbs will replace these cells, and let the body heal itself. Nature's Sunshine has blended the best herbs to be found in the world.
