"MARY CELESTE" - A CENTURY - OLD MYSTERY

One hundred years ago a ghost ship was discovered wandering east of the Azores in the mid-Atlantic. While the ship and her cargo were saved, the ten persons aboard had disappeared. After a century of searching, the "Mary Celeste" is still one of the most celebrated mysteries in the history of the

With her cargo of 1700 barrels of alcohol, the "Mary Celeste" sailed through the Narrows of New York Harbor on November 7, 1872 bound for Genoa, Italy.

Like many cargo carriers of the day, she was a fast little ship, rigged as a brigantine. According to the famed "Disaster Books" of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company, the ship's master was Captain Benjamin S. Briggs. Two mates, a cook and four hands comprised the crew. Captain Briggs' wife and two-year-old daughter were also aboard. The books also note that the Atlantic Ocean was unusually stormy during the latter months of 1872, with heavy seas and gale force winds constantly buffeting ships.

For twenty-seven days after she set sail from New York, there was no further word of the "Mary Celeste". Then, on the fourth of December, a British ship, the "Dei Gratia", which had sailed from New York on November 15, sighted a ship under very short sail and apparently in distress.

Concerned that the ship was yawing, and receiving no response to his hail, Captain Morehouse sent three men to investigate. The derelict was the "Mary Celeste".

The boarding crew stepped into an eerie silence and the mystery unfolded before

No one was aboard. The ship's boat was missing. The fore and aft hatches were open, but the main hatch was battened down.

Atlantic's records note that, "Her jib and fore-topmast sail were set on the starboard tack. Two of her sails - the fore-sail and upper fore-topsail - had been blown away; the lower top-foresail was. 'hanging by the four corners'; the main-staysail had been loose on the forward-house. All the rest of the sails were

The captains' chronometer, sextant, navigation book, story does not end here, howship's register and other papers were missing. Threeand-a-half feet of water was so, the "Dei Gratia's" captain in the hold. The galley stove agreed to put a small crew was stone cold.

Yet the men's clothing, books and oil skins - even their pipes - had been left behind. A blood-stained sword was found under the captain's berth, and all his effects were on the ship.

Atlantic Mutual note that the Although reluctant to do aboard the "Mary Celeste" and to claim her as salvage by sailing her to Gibraltar. At stake was a possible salvor's award which was thought to be worth as much as $80,000.

The trip was hazardous: The log slate, or tempor the "Mary Celeste" was almuch a mystery as ever.

Gratia", the trip was over some 600 miles of stormy ocean and both ships were sailing short-handed. Nonetheless, a mate and two hands boarded the "Mary Celeste" about a half hour before sundown on December 4th. By 9 p.m. they had her pumped dry and set sail. On the evening of December 12th the "Dei Gratia" sailed into Gibraltar; the "Mary Celeste" made port the following morning.

Because of the mysterious circumstances, the Marshal of Vice Admiralty Court held the "Mary Celeste" for three months before deciding the salvor's award. In the end, the award was settled at the equivalent of $8,300 -an amount considered unjustly low by many. As one of the five underwriters insuring the "Mary Celeste", Atlantic Mutual paid a share of this

One hundred years after the settlement, Atlantic is the only one of the vessel's five American insurers remaining in the business.

During . the intervening century, data and memorabilia on the "Mary Celeste" have been sent to the Atlantic Companies. All such materials have been kept and a special room commemorating the ship was incorporated into the Atlantic Building on Wall Street as a museum of marine history. To mark this centennial, the Atlantic Companies commissioned a special engraved seal for use on its stationery. This new rendering of the "Mary Celeste" is shown en-with precautions taken against air, land and water pollution.

The most practical form of solid waste disposal in Texas has been the sanitary landfill. In a properly operated sanitary landfill, refuse is disposed of by burial, often on land which can be filled and reclaimed for some use such as a park or golf course. The wastes are systematically dumped, compacted and then covered daily by a thin layer of dirt. In this manner, the landfill is kept Toys having keys should made so the keys won't revolve when the toy is working.

Another consideration is the child's use of the toy, Miss Fleischer continued. The child needs to be able to manage it by himself.

"A toy for any age should give the child a feeling of adequacy and set the appropriate standard for physical and mental development. Most mechanical toys are too intricate for children under four years

Nor should toys be too restrictive. Instead, they should stimulate imagination and make-believe, encourage quiet play or vigorous body activity, and allow for playing alone and in group activity.

"Pets and toy gardening equipment fit this category," she added. The toy also needs to fit the child's stage of development, the specialist continued. Although toys are usually marked with an age range, this can vary with the individual child's development. "Pre-schoolers, for example, need activities to develop large muscles. is now holding revival at United Thus, their toys should stimulate Pentecostal Church, preaching the imaginative play and require use
