Friction

Congress has now reached the stage where personalities are beginning to enter into legislation...

The row between Senators Carter Glass of Virginia and Duncan Fletcher of Florida last week is typical of the touchy condition...

Some undercover personal feelings also prevailed in the House concerning the stock market bill...

The only measures on the "must" calendar are the $1,322,000,000 recovery appropriation, the communications bill, extension of bank deposit guarantees...

Another dead turkey that has stirred up hot discussion is the new Food and Drug bill, sponsored by Senator Copeland of New York...

The Farmer-Laborites from Minnesota have a grievance. They think they have been double-crossed by the Roosevelt administration...

After voting with great regularity for administration measures as they came up in the House the Farmer-Labor bloc has just learned the Democrats are going to try to grab their seats this fall...

Both the Eberly and Rix ambulances rushed to the scene, but Horn had been taken to a hospital in Hartman's car.

U. S. GREATNESS LIES WITHIN ITS BORDERS

It is rather strange, when you stop to think about it, that more attention was not paid to the past age of the Philippine independence bill.

This measure, recently accepted in Manila does more than bind the United States to give its island wards the freedom it promised them so long ago.

Who can remember that turbulent and excited Spanish war era now? It seems very remote, almost as far away from us as the Civil war period.

It was the signal of our coming of age, the violent and erratic announcement by a giant that he had attained his growth and meant to do great things in the world.

Doing great things in the world meant, in those days, becoming an empire, planting the flag overseas, taking up the white man's burden, and all that sort of thing; it meant looking with pride at new spots on the map, and learning strange names like Mindanao and the Sulus and of meditating on the pride and glory of a great nation.

So we took over the Philippines, not knowing precisely what we wanted of them, but sure that taking them was a good thing.

Now, a generation later, we turn them loose again, giving them the independence they wanted in the first place; and in the time between something has happened to our dream—something has taken our conception of greatness and turned it inside out.

The truth of the matter probably is that we have learned that we have problems enough at home.

We have become great and strong, just as we told ourselves we should, back in '98. But we have begun to realize that greatness and strength don't rest on lonely garrisons in far-off seas, or on grim squadrons at anchor in tropical bays; they need as a foundation, property and happiness and freedom among the people at home, and if they lack those things they lack everything.

Our outposts of empire are no longer places like Luxon and Cavite; they are the bread-lines in our own cities, the farms that drain the blood from the men who work them, the slum areas that need to be rebuilt, the industries that profit neither seller nor buyer, the injustice that await settlement.

No longer will we prove our greatness by sending khaki-clad patrols into steaming jungles to die far from home. We have bigger jobs, closer home.

Dawson County Team Edges Out Cosden 7 To 6

Father And Son Team Up For Victory

Ackerly Entry Continues To Set The Pace In US Eighty

By HANK HART
Father and son joined together to turn defeat into victory for Ackerly Sunday, when the Dawson county team edged out the Cosden Oilers, 7 to 6, in ten innings.
"Dad" Pollock tied the score with a home run in the fourth after the Oilers' lead had appeared safe, and "Grandpa" Pollock bobbed up with two triples to knot the count in the ninth, and gave room to Ackerly to score a run in the tenth to take the game.

Although Pap Payne whiffed 15 of the "enemy's" batters, he could not overcome the jinx which Ackerly held over him. As history goes, Payne has never turned in a victory over the Dawsonites. Both teams hit frequently, Ackerly coming through with 16 singles and Cosden with 12.

Cosden took a one run lead in the rule all such wrecks off the road?
The highways are well equipped and in perfect condition.
To permit 45 cars from the junk-yard to operate is sheer folly.

FUTURE FLIGHT
Prof. Auguste Piccard, the dauntless Belgian who flies up into the stratosphere for recreation, believes that man may some day solve the problem of interstellar travel and make round trips to the moon or to some of the planets.

It is his notion that this may be possible, not through the use of rocket engines or by firing huge projectiles from gigantic guns, but through discovery of the secret of disintegration matter. He says that the disintegration of 120 pounds of lead, for instance, would provide ample energy for a round trip from the earth to the planet Mercury.

Now all this doubtless sounds remarkably like a pipe-dream, and it probably shows that scientists, no less than any other men, have moments in which their imagination goes on the loose.

But it makes a nice picture, anyway. Dizzy or otherwise, it's something to look forward to.

GREEK'S LUCKY ESCAPE
The people of Greece don't really know how lucky they are. If they read American newspapers, however, they may yet find out.

Samuel Insull, bound home in spite of himself, reveals that he had laid careful plans to erect a gigantic power empire in Greece.
He says that after a long study he became thoroughly convinced that "we could quickly make Greece the leading commercial and industrial country of the Near East"; and only his untimely flight prevented him from putting his plans into execution.

Mr. Insull once had a similarly grandiose plan for the United States, and the place is still sore.
Someone ought to explain to the descendants of Pericles and Demos-tohenes that this seems to be their lucky year.

The Insull brand of industrial greatness failed to descend on them.

REMEMBER CHICAGO!
Members of the Massachusetts Real Estate Owners' association are told by a fellow member that "bums who own no property and pay no taxes" have been dictating to politicians and causing undue heavy public expenditures, and that the solution is for the property owner to stop paying taxes.

"After all," says the speaker, "while we taxpayers may be in the minority as far as numbers of voters go, it's our money which pays the bills."
The taxpayer, heaven knows, has been getting it in the neck for a long time; and yet to class those who pay no taxes as bums, and to suggest that only the taxpayer has a right to tell the politicians what money to spend, is a peculiarly in-American and undemocratic contrivance.
After all, the majority of people own no real property and pay no income taxes. Are they to be disfranchised therefore? Chicago not long ago showed what happens when property owners stop paying taxes.
Does any other city care to duplicate Chicago's experience?

COWBOY BOOTS

Believe it or not—we don't

Storekeepers tell us Cowboys seldom want a cheap boot.
We don't believe it. If you can afford "Starnes" you want them. If any one called you a "Cheap Guy," you would kick the blues. Well, a cheap boot is like a "Cheap somewhere. We could make Starnes boots, cheap boots, but we won't. Starnes boots are good boots. They feel fine, they look fine, they wear fine. That's what you want in a Cowboy boot. We don't sell every store, but a good dealer can get Starnes for you if you insist. If he won't, just write us direct

Starnes boots start at about

MURDER AT MOCKING HOUSE

BY WALTER C. BROWN

Chapter Nine THREE SHOTS

The scene of the crime was a well-furnished breakfast-room, resplendent with polished wood, gleaming silver, sparkling glass, against a background of dark-stained wainscoting and richly embossed wallpaper, hung here and there with the bright colors of hunting scenes. In the center of the room stood a refectory table, with eight chairs ranged around it—three at each side, one at the foot, and a more formal armchair at the foot's place.

On this table six slender wax tapers had burned down to guttering stubs. There was an open tin fireproof, its wide hearth protected by a finely meshed copper screen, and a massive log was still burning. Its heat was sufficient to give the room a comfortable temperature.

Unfortunately, there were two dead men to turn the scene into a mockery. There was the friendly light of heart-logged and candle—with its acrid fumes of gunfire still lingering in the air.

Officer Hamill lay just inside the door. He was sprawled at nearly full length, his legs drawn up just a trifle, the weight of his body resting on his right side.

The cause of death was fully apparent without moving the body—two bullets had been fired into his left breast, one directly into the heart, the other slightly higher and closer to the sternum. So much for young James Michael Hamill—Officer 1045.

At the head of the table, seated limply in the host's chair, but in a very natural position, was the other man. His body had posed in such a life-like position that the jagged black holes filled through the frontal bone seemed an incongruous mark. This man was faultlessly attired in evening clothes, and the bullet's impact had not even jarred loose his gold-rimmed nose-glasses, with their thin black silk cord.

His features, adorned by a well-trimmed mustache and goatee, were tilted slightly, as if he were bored or abstracted in thought. Both his arms rested on the table. His right hand still clutched an automatic gun, his left held a cigarette, which had burned itself out, searing the flesh on two fingers.

A number of things stood at his place. There was a packet of cigarettes of a popular brand, with an open paper of matches beside it. Both were about half used. There were two small carafes, each holding a different liquor. A used, but now empty, whiskey glass stood near his hand.

Harper was inwardly amazed at this tragic scene, but his astonishment was self-contained. Not so Officer Clymer's, on whom a great light had dawned. "Hey, that must be Pierre Dufresne himself," he blurted.

Harper had ordered the others to keep their posts by the door while he went forward to get a better view of the bodies and to examine the wounds at close range. He had leaned over the man in the chair, looking long and thoughtfully at his face. Then, without disturbing the position of the body, he had gone through all the pockets. Nothing of importance came to light. Harper turned and herded them all out of the room.

"I want every one to stay out of this room until the photographers have been here," the detective ordered, "and keep your hands off anything that looks as if it might have a fingerprint on it."

The reporter, Doyle, buttonholed him as he was closing the door on that grim scene. "I thought Dufresne was under guard for the night?" he said. "How the devil did he get up here—alone?"

Sergeant Harper's reply was cryptic. "You'll want to know a great deal more than that before the night's over."

The reporter pricked up his ears at this mysterious prediction. He lingered longingly at that closed and locked door, but he had covered Sergeant Harper's cases before and knew that his statements were never film-film.

Harper stood in the center of the spacious hall, the key to the room of tragedy in his hand. Doyle wondered why the detective had so promptly locked up the scene of the shooting after his first scrutiny had shown him that both victims were beyond medical attention.

The candle flames reared high and cold, their fluttering casting weird shadows of the six men up the walls and obliquely across the ceiling. "Have you tried all the lights?" Harper demanded. "Are you sure none of them is working?"

Connolly spoke up. "Yes, sir. The juice must be cut off."

"It must be cut off at the meter. Supposing you go down in the cellar and see if you can find out about it. And while you're there, take a look at the heating arrangements. We're going to be here the rest of the night, by the look of things, and we can't work without light or heat."

Officer Connolly went to the cellar door, drew the bolts after some fidgeting, and descended the stairs. In a very short time he called up to say that he had pulled the lever on the electric meter. The candles were blown out.

Harper turned to Hillary. "You and Connolly were first on the scene, weren't you?"

"Yes, sir. We followed Officer Hamill's footprints from the call-box to this house."

"What did you do while you were waiting? Were you here in the hall the whole time?"

"We had a look around, carrying those candles, but we didn't leave this floor. It was dark everywhere and we couldn't see much, but found all the doors locked—except the front door, of course. Everything seemed to be in order."

Harper nodded and turned to his men. "I want this house searched from top to bottom. And keep your eyes open for any signs of recent occupancy. For instance, there must be a hat and overcoat somewhere about."

Officers Clymer, Smith and Hillary scattered for their search. Harper picked up the telephone and dialed the homicide bureau. He made a very terse report of the double killing, giving only the address of the house and the telephone number. To the listening police, he suppressed any mention of names.

Harper put in a requisition for the police ambulance to be sent up once, with a coroner's deputy, the official photographer, and the usual technical experts whose duty it was to make the basic survey in homicide cases. He also requested that Detective John Lafferty be notified of assignment to the case and told to report at once to Headquarters.

By the time the detective had finished telephoning, Connolly had come up from the cellar. "Everything will be O.K., Sergeant," he reported. "There's one of those new-fangled oil heaters down there. It was going all right, but the gauge was set very low. I moved it to seventy-five."

"That's fine. How are the arrangements down there?"

"Very neat, sir. Everything clean and wide open. You can see all around it from the foot of the stairs. I spotted the meter right away."

"Is there a shovel down there?"

"Yes, sir. There's a carpenter's bench in one corner with a whole stack of tools lying around."

"All right, Connolly, here is a job for you. Get a shovel and clear a narrow path from the front door to the sidewalk. But do not disturb or cover over any of the footprints that are already out there in the snow. That is most important. Then go on duty at the front door and see to it that every one who enters or leaves the house walks in that path."

One by one the men returned from their search upstairs. All had the same report to make—everything spick and span, with no signs of recent occupancy.

Harper glanced at his watch. "I've got to make a flying trip downtown," he declared, then turning to Smith and Hillary, of the Bandit Chaser Squad, "you two had better stay here until the Headquarters men arrive. Then you can check out."

Harper gave the key to the locked room to Officer Clymer. If they get here before I return, get them started in there. Tell the photographer that I want an extra set of prints. And warn everybody that that room is to be left exactly as it is. Nothing is to be disturbed. Tell the doctor to wait for me. I'll be back soon."

Connolly appeared as Harper was buttoning his overcoat. "Just all right while I'm gone. Don't go poking around for clues until we have a better idea of what to look for. And don't go outside the house on any account, or you will be confusing the tracks in the snow."

To some of the candidates for governor, running for office is an old story. To Charlie Cleveland McDonald of Wichita Falls, first of the candidates this year to announce for governor, holding public office and taking part in public campaigns also are an old story, but he this year is making his first race for elective office. In an arduous "speech-a-day" campaign which he entered immediately after his opening address last San Jacinto day, McDonald is setting the pace for the big field of contestants in the governor's race. Mr. McDonald was appointed secretary of state when he was 28. At 30, he was made state prosecutor before the court of criminal appeals. Last year, he was chosen to lead the state repeal fight. Now, at 49 years of age, he is in the middle of his aggressive campaign for the highest elective office in the state. His early years were given to education as a teacher, school principal and superintendent. He read law while engaged in school work, took the bar examinations and entered upon his career which has brought him wide distinction as a lawyer. McDonald was born at Trenton, Fannin county, April 5, 1885. He graduated from the Baylor high school at the age of 15 and at 18, in 1903, he graduated from the Lenton state teacher college, with a permanent teacher's certificate. He became principal of the Elmo school. He became principal of the Kemp school of Kaufman county. One of his pupils, Miss Eugene Folsom, Mason, graduated in June, 1905. Dec. 21 of that year she and Mr. McDonald were married. From Kemp, Mr. McDonald moved to Athens, where he was chosen superintendent. While in Kaufman county, Mr. McDonald read law, and between school terms worked in the law offices of J. C. Adams, recent democratic national committeeman and Jim Young, Congressman. In Athens, he read law in the office of Watkins and Richardson. Even this early, Mr. McDonald was keenly interested in political affairs and political campaigns. Gov. O. B. Colquitt appointed him secretary of state in January, 1911, when Mr. McDonald was 26 years of age. This opened to him the new chapter of a political career and a
