On The Divide

Discussing conflicting opinions regarding the elevation of Eldorado, H. T. Finley, County Clerk, says that during the past decade everything else has gone down, and he sees no reason why Schleicher county might not do likewise.

On signs erected at each side of the city by the Lions club, elevation will be given as 2553 feet, government figures.

"Parks around the court house in Eldorado are eye-sores even to citizens of the city," says R. L. Sample. "Not to mention other people who pass through our city." Mr. Sample thinks that home-folks can get used to most anything, but weeds grow so fast in the parks, we can't even help noticing them.

As school days approach, various traffic safety regulations are being discussed in the city. Safety of school children is of vital interest to every home in Eldorado and Dave Williamson, school superintendent, says that wider streets and side walks along the highway are among most needed safety measures for the prevention of accidents to school children.

ABOUT SALESMANSHIP

In a radio talk some time ago, W. J. Cameron made some rather surprising statements concerning salesmen and salesmanship, among which was the assertion that about 70 per cent of all sales are made on the initiative of buyers themselves, and only about 30 per cent through personal selling efforts.

He also said that 70 per cent of all goods sold personally through the initiative of salesmen are sold by only 20 per cent of the salesmen.

These figures apply, we assume, to salesmen who personally call on prospective customers, rather than to clerks in stores or other regular places of business, whose results could hardly be checked or estimated.

Mr. Cameron does not believe in so-called "high pressure" salesmanship in which the prospective buyer is harangued by a lot of bombastic and meaningless sales talk, which is exceedingly distasteful to any intelligent buyer. The best salesman is one who studies the needs of his customer, and gives him information that will lead him to buying intelligently, and such a salesman is usually welcome on a return visit. Mr. Cameron significantly adds:

"The salesman who comes in with a lot of orders dangling like scalps from his belt is not a good salesman, for you can scalp a man only once. Making a customer is more important than making a sale."

A MODERN MARTYR

In the opinion of many, the force which will lead to the ultimate downfall of Hitler may not be British or French military power, but resentment among Germans themselves, caused by racial and religious persecution at his hands.

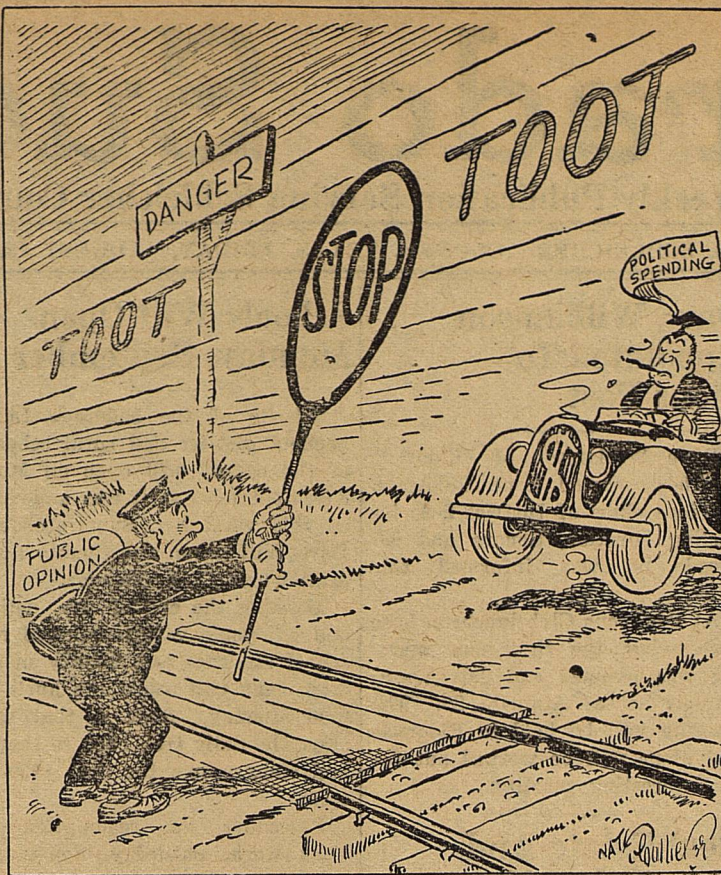

While this persecution has been directed with particular fiendishness against the Jews, it has also been directed against both Catholics and Protestants through oppression of their clergy.

Perhaps the most potent opponent of Hitler living today is Pastor Niemoeller, now beginning his third year in solitary confinement in a concentration camp, because he refused to bow to dictation in religious matters. This courageous man, who was a submarine commander during the World War, prefers to remain in prison in protest, rather than accept Hitler's control over the church.

As a result of Niemoeller's example, many other Protestant ministers have lately grown bolder in denouncing Hitler's religious dictatorship, and organized groups are said to be forming throughout Germany to fight for Niemoeller and the cause of free worship.

Speaking of this modern martyr, the Philadelphia Record says: "Hitler is powerless against this man. He can kill him, but that would avail him nothing. For Niemoeller is now established in the German mind as the symbol of the struggle for freedom, and as that symbol he is beyond the dictator's reach."

THE WATCHMAN ON THE JOB

Nobody's Business

By Julian C. Capers

AUSTIN — The contempt in which Gov. W. Lee O'Daniel holds the press of Texas is one of the singular phenomena of an administration that has been marked by the smashing of precedents.

Inspired, no doubt, by the spectacular success which rewarded his freakish radio campaign a year ago, the Governor is said by those in his confidence to regard the printed word as unimportant, and rapidly growing less important, in the conduct of state affairs. The governor held two or three press conferences after his inaugural, and then called the whole thing off. Since early January, he has not received the representatives of the newspapers. If a correspondent wishes to ask a specific question of the governor, concerning any particular public matters, he may write out his question, and send it in to the chief executive, by one of the secretaries. If the governor wants to, he answers. If he does not, (and he usually does not,) he doesn't answer. Personal audiences have been granted only to a few correspondents, on rare occasions.

WHY HE PREFERS RADIO

A great many people do not understand why the press has a vested right, well recognized by the statutes and the constitutions of both state and nation, to inquire into public affairs and the official acts of public servants. It is not that the newspaper business is singled out for any special favor or consideration that this wise provision has been made. It is because the press is the only articulate representative of the people, — it is the only agency which can ask questions about matters of public policy, and which is equipped and inclined to present both sides of controversial issues.

The newspaper reporters, when they interview public officials, listen carefully to the statements of the governor, or whoever the particular official being interviewed may be. They accept his statements, weigh them, and then, when there are obvious omissions, or controversial issues, they ask the questions which these issues suggest, and record the answers.

ASKS NO QUESTIONS

A radio-microphone asks no questions. It merely takes whatever the governor (or any other speaker) pours into it, and transmits that to the people, or at least, to whichever of the people may happen to be listening at the moment. If the governor sponsors a certain piece of legislation, for instance, he selects all of the favorable aspects of that legislation, and discusses them over the radio. If he desires to tell half truths, or downright misrepresentations, or if he omits explaining at all, certain sections of the legislation, the radio makes no complaint and asks no questions. Neither can the people who listen ask questions.

For example, Gov. O'Daniel in a recent radio broadcast, urged the people to attend the hearings upon the county budgets in their communities, in the interest of economy in government. The following week, the Automatic Tax Board, which includes the governor, the State Treasurer, and the State Comptroller, met in the Capitol—behind locked doors—and increased the State ad valorem tax rate about 60 percent. The public was not invited, nor permitted to attend and hear the board's discussion. Newspaper reporters, if there had been a press conference, would have asked the Governor to explain this inconsistency in what he tells the people, and what he does himself. The reporters didn't get to talk to the Governor about the matter, and the radio microphone didn't ask any embarrassing questions.

PRESS STILL POTENT

The radio is a comparatively new agency of communication, having come into general use only within the past decade. The press, since Gutenberg and Caxton began nearly four centuries ago, producing printed words in quantity, has been the agency which pioneered the breaking down of monarchies and dictatorships, and building up freedom and democratic institutions. Until printing came, there was virtually no liberty in the world; since it came, the printing press has been more potent than artillery in every battle where liberty has been at stake. The first act of every dictator has been to suppress or control the press. The pet hate of every demagogue has always been the newspaper. People have long since formed the habit of believing what they see in their newspapers. The psychologists tell us that a man remembers seven times as much of what he reads as of what he hears.

The governor, if he actually believes what those near him he does—and his relations with the press would indicate that he does—may learn yet that the press is a symbol of a very sacred and jealously guarded right of the people of Texas.

OIL CRISIS

The oil industry in Texas today faces what many oilmen declare to be the most serious crisis since the days of martial law in East Texas. Federal court decisions over-ruling the allowable granted in East Texas by the Railroad Commission to Rowan & Nichols, and later to the Humble, Texas largest producer of crude, were followed immediately by price cuts led by Sinclair, and Humble. For the first time in over two years, East Texas crude price dropped below $1. The public doesn't understand the more-for-gasoline and less-for-crude policy of the major companies at the peak consumption period of the year. The entire proration structure may be undermined as a result of the lawsuits, and if that happens, particularly if gasoline price hikes continue, while crude prices fall, it seems inevitable that the Federal government may revive the movement so dear to the hearts of some of the present national administration, to take control of the oil business. The hot oil scandals in Louisiana, with indictments involving both the Huey Long political ring, and some Texas operators, has not helped the situation. Greed may yet kill the goose that lays the golden oil eggs in Texas.

Lois Carr, Priddy, Texas, visited last week-end with Miss Helen Thompson here.

Kitchen Improved By Ventilated Pantry

A ventilated pantry is one of the improvements Mrs. J. Tom Williams has made in her kitchen at a cost of ten dollars and fifty cents.

The pantry is 22 inches by 40 inches and extends the height of the eight foot ceiling. The ventilation is six inches by ten inches in both floor and top of the pantry. About 16 in. of the pantry is partitioned and this is a storage closet for canning equipment. The pantry has six slatted shelves twelve inches apart with top shelf being eighteen inches apart. From the floor to the first shelf is 24 inches which allows for storage of pressure cooker, cured meat which is put in oil and other things. By having the openings in the floor and ceiling and slatted shelves this allows for the circulation of cool air through the pantry into the attic.

Mr. Williams constructed the pantry.

Mrs. Williams has also repainted the woodwork of her house at a cost of $2.40.

Clubs Hear Short Course Reports; Have Fun At Camp

Talks from short course delegates and a demonstration of fresh fruits in the diet were things to remember on the program of the annual County Home Demonstration Club encampment held at Christoval last Thursday and Friday. More than 50 were present for the barbecue dinner Friday.

The encampment opened with a swimming party at five o'clock in the afternoon of August 10. recreation for the remainder of the evening was directed by the county recreational leader, Miss Ruth Baker.

Friday morning a miniature short course was characterized by women who went to short course. Mrs. Gordie Alexander, delegate of the county Woman's club cited the theme of short course, "Land Use Planning". She mentioned that farmers and ranchers should join hands with education and land planning and that good citizens will not keep taking from the land and giving nothing in return. She also stated that county organizations of land use planning pointed toward the "live at home" idea. She said that people who give up before a thing is tried should take a lesson from the little engine who puffed "I think I can" all the way up a difficult hill and chuckled "I thought I could" as he rushed down the other side.

Mrs. J. R. Conner of the Busy Bee Club and 4-H sponsor who accompanied the girls to short course told of the trip there, some of the activities and the return trip.

Mrs. W. J. Humphrey discussed the talk on the "Democratic Family" and stressed that our first duty is to our family. "Children should be allowed to take a part in family planning", she said, and advised that all bad children aren't the worst children in the world. A child who rebels now and then shows that he has a mind of his own and not the "yes, yes" type that is portrayed in the child who is obedient all the time.

Mrs. Elvin Bawcom of the Cliff club told about the talk of "the Fruit Festival of West Texas" and Miss Margaret Stewart gave a demonstration displaying fresh fruit dishes to be used in the diet. She suggested fresh fruit topped with ice cream or half a cantaloupe filled with grapes for breakfast, a fruit cup for lunch and a salad made of pear and peach halves, garnished with grape leaves. She also stated that fruit makes an excellent garnish for meats. Pickled or saute peaches, pears, or pineapple go with any pipping hot meat dish. And, she declared, "someone must try this," broiled steak with buttered cauliflower and baked tomatoes on pineapple slices. Arrange all on one platter and serve egg custard for dessert. "Another you would like" said she, is standing rib roast with baked onions stuffed with spinach, buttered or creamed carrots and whole pickled peaches and a jello fruit dessert."

Mrs. Bawcom created a little thinking when she related the talk on "Can You See Ghosts". She advised that we look in the mirror and criticize ourselves from top to toe. The ghosts she speaks of happens to be the image other people see when they look at us created in our own minds. She stated that we should face the facts of our short-comings and listen to none of the excuses we give our ghosts but to settle down with a will to make the best of our good points.

Club delegates gave the things that impressed them most at short course, and, according to Mrs. Alexander, the fact that the Extension staff and all others on the program strived to leave the realization of the importance of the live at home program with them. Mrs. Humphrey mentioned that seeing old ladies as well as young trying to learn something from the programs made her realize the real importance of Home Demonstration work.

ONE THING And THEN ANOTHER
By Fred Gipson

CORPUS CHRISTI—I saw a woman making a string trellis for her flowers the other day and it reminded me of old Tumbleweed Turner.

Tumbleweed farmed right close to our place and he never would let his wife or daughters grow any flowers in the yard. He'd make them plant beans and tomatoes and other vegetables. "If they're going to lose time out of the cotton patch fooling with things in the yard, they just as well be growing something worth something," he'd say emphatically.

Judging by this, one would think Tumbleweed was a very thrifty, hard-working man. Which wasn't the case, at all. Tumbleweed believed in thrift and hard work—for his wife and family. And he saw to it that they practiced what he preached. But as for himself, whenever any real hard work stared him in the face, it always seemed to put a catch in the middle of his back or start the rheumatic cramps in his legs. Then about all he was able to do was to hobble up to our house and sit around and grunt out his pains and pester Papa with advice on just how he should run his farm and do his work.

Sometimes, he'd come up to the house in the winter and sit and cuss the government and chew his tobacco and spit in the fireplace. I guess he was the best spitter I ever saw. I'd usually get right up close to his chair and fork my fingers across my lips and try to spit like him. But spitting, without something to chew on is a pretty futile effort. You can't get a sizzle out of the fire that's worth a darn.

One time when Papa sold a bale of cotton and brought us kids some candy back from town, I sneaked a black bar of licorice out and saved it until Tumbleweed came. And when we all sat down before the fireplace and Tumbleweed got out his knife and whittled off a chew of tobacco, I twisted off a corner of the licorice bar and got all set to give him some competition. And every time he'd lean over in his chair and squirt a brown stream that exploded in the bed of mesquite coals, I'd lean over and spray the hearth with black splatterings, trying to do likewise.

But directly Mama saw what was taking place and quietly led me off by one ear. And I never did learn to spit like Tumbleweed.

Tumbleweed was dead set against the Republican Party, in power in those days. And he could show you how the country was all going to hell with the way things were going around Washington, D. C. And when cotton went to 35 and 40 cents a pound right after the World War, Tumbleweed wouldn't pick a lock of it because farmers were only paying $2.50 per 100 for picking and he didn't figure he could afford to stoop all day long for less than $3 a 100, at least.

He'd show those damn Republicans about keeping the price of cotton-picking down to starvation wages!

Tumbleweed let his family pick some $2.50 per 100 cotton, though.

During those times, Tumbleweed would go to town on Saturday's and price the salt pork and the fancy breakfast bacon in the stores and ask the groceryman if he ate the salt pork and the groceryman would admit that he ate the fancy bacon and Tumbleweed would speak up real loud, so everybody could hear and say: "Well, if you can eat 60-cent bacon, I can, too!" And he would.

I saw Tumbleweed not so long ago. His rheumatic pains had become, with so much nursing, an actuality, at last. He was dead set against the Democratic party and could show you where the country's going to hell under its administration.

Why, just a few days before that, they'd cut off his relief. And him an old man, all crippled up with rheumatism, too!

"They don't care how hard we old people worked to build this country!" he said.

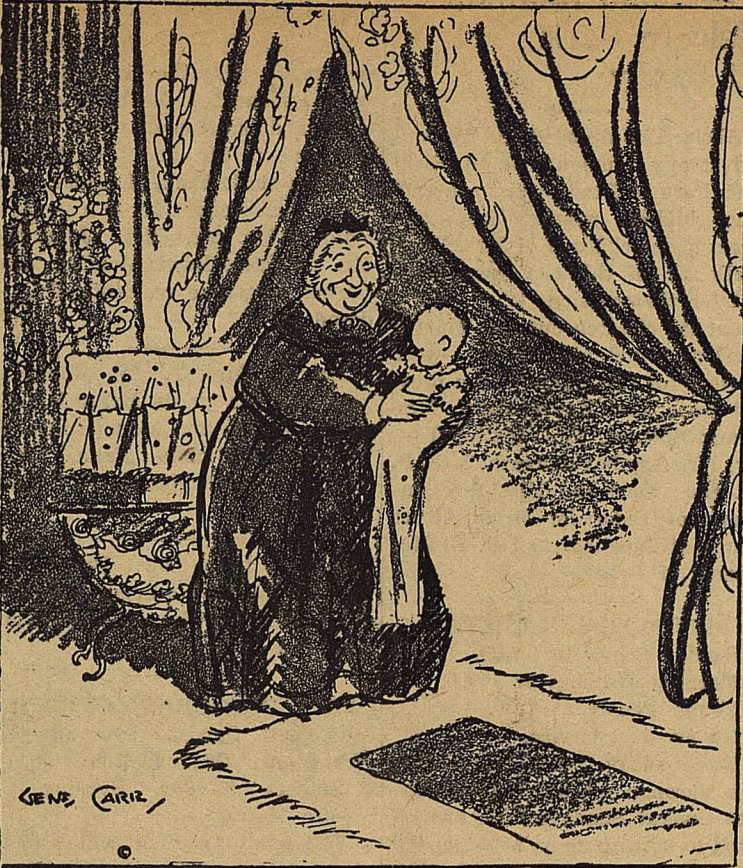

And he forked his fingers across his lips and squirted a brown stream out into the street.

When the country goes all to hell under the Socialist Party administration, I bet it doesn't phase old Tumbleweed's tobacco-spitting one bit.

A fireman in Danville, Pa., was convicted of sending in a false alarm, so he could stand in the street and direct traffic.

Constable P. Lapre, Montreal, Can., shamefacedly reported to his superior officers the theft of his uniform, revolver and badge from the back of his car.

BE SAFE—FIRE PROOF
COTTON FABRICS

Cotton fabrics catch fire easily. So sometimes it's a good idea to fireproof pot lifters, curtains near the stove, and ironing board covers. The following simple home fireproofing method has been worked out.

Make a fireproofing solution by stirring into 2 quarts of hot water 3 ounces of boric acid and 7 ounces of borax. Stir this until the solution is clear. Or if powdered boric acid is used, mix it to a paste with a little water first so it will dissolve more readily.

Then take the fabric to be fireproofed, which is clean and dry, and thoroughly saturate it in this solution. Squeeze it out—hang it to dry. Then iron it after it is practically dry. Do not try to iron the treated fabric while it still damp. Naturally this treatment must be repeated each time the fabric is washed. Incidentally, curtains treated in this way will wear longer.

CHEWING GUM
on your SHOE?

... Yes? Then you'll know what we're talking about when we say that motor oil oxidation in your motor causes a stickier mess than gum on your shoe. And let us advise you, motor oil oxidation is fairly common when you use an inferior oil in a modern car. It's a chemical change brought about by higher operating temperatures, faster speeds, narrower clearances between pistons and cylinder walls; even streamlining contributes to it. As inferior motor oils combine with oxygen—that is, oxidize—under heat and pressure, they form a gooey mess of sludge, gum and varnish-like substances; and this mess in any case retards engine efficiency, and at worst causes expensive repair jobs. . . . So you want to avoid it, of course. . . . The best way is to use a modern motor oil in your modern car—to drain your crankcase and refill with Humble's Balanced 997. . . . This definitely improved Humble product is balanced to give you: a clean motor, low oil consumption, safe service, great stability at high and low temperatures, minimum engine wear, freedom from sticky gum and varnish-like formations on pistons and piston rings, easy starting in winter, instant lubrication, a perfect seal between piston rings and cylinder walls, low carbon, easy pumpability and circulation. . . . Stop at the nearest Humble sign and ask for BALANCED 997—why not today!
