Kathy's Korner

There is a quotation by Philip Rourke Marston which reads,

"A little time for laughter,
 A little time to sing,
 A little time to kiss and cling,
 And no more kissing after."

I found this quotation one afternoon while thumbing through one of Sam's quotation books. This particular quote seemed to jump off the page at me, and I could not get it out of my mind the rest of the evening.

The quote bothered me, and I wasn't sure why.

After staying up most of one night with this quote dancing round and round in my head, I decided it bothered me because it hit too close to home.

Sometimes in my busy race with deadlines, I barely have a little time for these things that are so important. I find myself patting my children and husband on the head as I run out the door towards another meeting, or another event that needs to be covered.

Often, these civic events come during times that don't make me compromise my time with my family. Other times I have to make a choice - my family or news coverage, and it's often my family that has to take the back seat.

A friend of mine told me that once Kristina started school, I would turn around twice and she'd be graduating. Well, Kristina has started school, Charlie will be in school before long, and I don't want to miss out on their youth. I don't want them to remember their mother as one who was always on the run somewhere else - without them.

So, since Kristina is out of school for the summer, I am planning on taking off a little more time than usual to spend with her and Wayne and Charlie.

I am also going to make this the summer that I make good on some of my promises to other family members. We will be spending time with grandmother Lahoma, with my dad and his family, with Wayne's grandparents and parents, and my mom and Sam.

Perhaps this summer "breather" will give us the rest and family togetherness that we'll need to get us through the next nine months of school and non-stop activities.

Whittler's Bench

By Sam Haynes

Thanks to all of you, Lions Club members and others who helped clean up the cemetery in preparation for Memorial Day. I personally think it was as beautiful as I have ever seen it. It doesn't take but a little work by a group of interested and dedicated people to get a lot accomplished in a short period of time.

For those of you who may have missed the services in the cemetery Monday at 10:30, the program was presented again in a very capable fashion by Rev. Z.A. Myers and members and friends of the Assembly of God Church here in McLean. The singers led us in singing two patriotic numbers, accompanied by a brass ensemble, which added greatly to the effectiveness of the songs. Brother Myers brought his always appropriate and interesting talk, which was enjoyed and appreciated by all those assembled on a cold, windy, and otherwise unpleasant morning.

Mayor George Terry acted as master of ceremonies for the occasion, and the observance was terminated by a rendition of "Taps" by the brass ensemble.

I certainly think all democrats should get out and vote Saturday in the Democratic primary runoff...I voted for Bob Krueger in the first race because I had considered him an intelligent and capable candidate. I will now certainly vote for Kent Hance of Lubbock in preference to Lloyd Doggett of Austin.

Doggett is a known liberal, who once served as president of Texas Consumer Association, and spent ten years in the Texas Senate supporting bills to take care of "us po folks" who don't have enough sense to take care of ourselves, as well as being a consistent supporter of organized labor.

Kent Hance is a man from our part of the country (raised around Dimmitt) and my good friend Bill Graham has known Kent since he was a pup, and says he is a fine man and will make an excellent senator.

I'll certainly take Bill's word, and hope Hance gets overwhelming support up in this part of the country to counteract the heavy support expected for Doggett in the Houston and Austin areas. I personally think Hance will win Saturday and will then have a big battle on his hands to turn back Republican Phil Gramm next fall.

LOOSE MARBLES

LISA PATMAN

It was with great trepidation that the Marbles family entered the car lot. I say with great trepidation because we had decided that if we were ever going to get our college-bound son out of the house, it was clear that he would need something to leave in. We had long held to the hope that he would be able to use his old clunker, but that hope died as we tearfully watched auto parts fall off each time he drove away from the house. Therefore, we found ourselves at the car lot.

We carefully looked over the stock, and it was lucky that I had some emergency medical training, because we found it necessary to revive Old Dad with each passing list price. I admit that he had some cause, all of the prices were more than ten times my gross salary, which at its best is very gross, and that at times I felt a strong inclination to slash my wrists, but on the whole I was a bit calmer than Old Dad.

In a moment of weakness, when the male members of the Marbles menagerie were listening to a salesman expound on the virtues of something called turbo, I wandered over to the car in question, which not only happened to be the fanciest and most expensive in the world, but also the car of College-Bound's choice. I then made a fatal mistake; I got in.

While sitting in the driver's seat, trying to get comfortable on the rarer-than-the-Hope-diamond leather seats, I spied a neat-looking row of buttons which bore the title "systems check." And since I am by nature quite curious, I decided to find out what a systems check is. Quickly I looked around and, seeing that no one was watching me, I turned the ignition ever so gently to accessory. Suddenly, from out of nowhere came a burly man's voice, "THE KEY IS IN THE IGNITION!" it shouted.

I began whimpering as I looked around for the angry salesman. "Gee, I was only going to see what...er...uh." I stopped whimpering; there was no irate salesman. It was the car that had spoken to me.

It gave me an eerie feeling to be talked to by a car, especially one with the vocal cords of a hungover longshoreman, but after all, this might be my last chance at getting College-Bound college bound, so I pressed the systems check button just for the heck of it. Within a few minutes I had been told to close my door, make sure my tires were aired up, put more oil in, and get my stupid foot off the brake. Had I actually been driving I would probably have been ordered to slow down, watch out for that car, and be sure to wear clean underwear in case I was involved in an accident. To put it bluntly, this car knew everything, and was determined that I mind my driving manners.

We didn't get the car, but I'm working on it. If I can negotiate a loan, especially if I have to sell the other kid to make the payments, I'm going to get College-Bound that car. After all, it's the answer to a mother's prayer—how else can you get rid of a child and still make sure he's totally miserable than to send him away in a nagging car. I just hope it can make him get a haircut.

COST NOT A CONDEMNING FACTOR

AUSTIN — Simply because vocational education costs more to teach than academics, we should not base criticism on that fact.

Costs can be reduced somewhat by combining many classes and increasing the teacher/pupil ratio.

Eliminating vocational education — as the Select Committee on Public Education is recommending through slashes in funding — because it costs more than academics will drive costs up and increase the burden on rehabilitation programs down the road.

There is no intent that vocational education should be a tracking system for anyone, regardless of race. Vocational education wants students who desire to be in the programs and can benefit from the instruction.

The Select Committee says that only 15 percent of vocational training graduates enter employment in the field for which they are trained. At the end of the 1982 school year, 72,000 high school students completed vocational training.

One year later when a required follow-up was conducted, 60 percent of those who completed the course of instruction were in the labor force; another 32 percent were pursuing additional education; 4 percent were in the military; and 4 percent were not in the labor force or pursuing further education.

Of just those students who were in the labor force, 67 percent were employed in a field for which they were trained; 24 percent were employed in a field unrelated to their training and 9 percent were unemployed.

When all 72,000 vocational graduates in that 1982 class are lumped together, which includes those in the labor force as well as those not in the labor force, but pursuing additional education or military service, then the statement could be made that only 36 percent of all completions took a job related to their training.

13 percent took jobs unrelated to their training, and 5 percent were unemployed. If graduates are pursuing additional education or are in the military, then they are not in the labor force. Many, however, will eventually take jobs in the labor force and will relate back to their high school training.

McLean Briefs

Visiting with Collene Stewart over the weekend were her children, Karon and George Brownlee and Randy and Stacie Stewart, all of Dumas, and Charles and Leslie Stewart of McLean.

Friends and family got together at the Charles Stewart farm Saturday afternoon for a cook-out and games.

Those attending and enjoying the fun were Eldon, Sherry and Nicole Mason of Texola, Okla.; Johnny and Laurie Mann of Canadian; Randy and Stacie Stewart, and Karon and George Brownlee, all of Dumas; Thomas Wayne Tolleson and friend of Ft. Worth; Floyd, Nancy, and Carla Skipper, Collene Stewart, Joe Mercer, Johnnie Carpenter, and David Tolleson, all of McLean.

Zora and Milton Billingsley of Amarillo were in McLean Saturday to take care of gravesites of Zora's parents, grandparents and other relatives, and decorate them with pretty arrangements.

They also visited some friends at Thomas Nursing Home. They were accompanied by Milton's mother, Mrs. H.H. Billingsley of Amarillo.

Visiting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ott Moore Sunday were Mr. and Mrs. Ronnie McIlroy and children of DeSota; Mrs. Moore's aunt, Mrs. Allie Mae Trent; and Mrs. Moore's cousin, Donald Trent, and Florence

Butler of Childress.

Allen Patman, Ed Patman, and Scott Stubbs travelled to Six Flags for a fun-filled two-day trip. They were also the first McLean residents to see "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom".

The English of the 15th to 17th centuries believed that the color red was helpful to the sick. Patients were dressed in red nightgowns and surrounded with red objects.

Ellen Church, a registered nurse, became the first airline stewardess in 1930.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT!

A heady thought! The French, in the time of Louis XIV, ate sardines to bring out the flavor of their wine. Even today, people in the south of France consider sardines with red wine a delicacy.

Weigh in go! Sardines are a bargain in delicious eating for calorie counters. Sardines in Mustard or Louisiana Hot Sauce packed under the Port Clyde or Holmes labels, contain a remarkably few 160 calories per can. Wealth of health! Sardines or their brothers, fish steaks, have more protein than T-bone steak, more calcium than milk and more iron than cooked spinach. They're loaded with valuable minerals and other nutrients, too.

For more thoughts, write to Food, P.O. Box 1769, Portland, ME 04104.

During the American Revolution, many brides did not wear white wedding gowns; they wore red as a symbol of rebellion.

ATHLETE'S BEST BET: THREE SQUARE MEALS

Although some athletes may swear by exotic diets, mineral supplements and megadose vitamin regimens, when all's said and done, it seems the best bet for the athlete's training table is still the old-fashioned, well-balanced three square meals a day. "An astounding number of athletes haven't accepted this simple truth," says Ann Grandjean, nutrition consultant to the U.S. Olympic Committee Sports Medicine Division. "Often," she continued, "they put their faith in myths and misconceptions that, in some cases, do more harm than good." Under the Sports Medicine Division guidance, Ms. Grandjean has been conducting an ongoing study of athletes' perceptions of the relationship between nutrition and their athletic performances. Her studies indicate that athletes share with the general public some misconceptions about nutrition. Some in power sports and weightlifting think that large amounts of protein will increase muscle size and strength. Ms. Grandjean reported. Only exercise will accomplish that, she said. Excess protein is either used as energy or converted to fat and stored in the body. Protein requirements don't rise significantly when an athlete is on a program to increase muscle mass. Runners and cyclists, she continued, are more likely to consume large amounts of carbohydrates to maintain energy stores. Some look to honey, sugar, soft drinks, glucose and dextrose for "quick energy" before competition. Sugar products definitely provide energy, she explained, but the "quick" concept is misleading. Energy used by the muscles comes from food eaten several days to many hours before. Athletes training or competing daily should maintain stores of glycogen, a fuel for the muscles. To accomplish this, Ms. Grandjean recommends a diet relatively high in carbohydrates. One way she suggested to do this is through compact snack foods such as "M&M's" Chocolate Candies and Snickers Bar, which have been designated "Official Snack Foods of the 1984 Winter and Summer Olympic Games." Such snacks, she said, are easy to carry and effectively supply part of the caloric and nutritional requirements of an athlete's diet. Another misconception on the part of many athletes is their need for extra vitamins. Vitamins, reports this nutritionist, don't supply extra energy nor do athletes require larger amounts of them. Deficiencies of certain vitamins can make athletes tired, she said. However, once the needed amounts are obtained, consuming more will not result in additional energy. Vitamins taken in more-than-needed amounts usually are excreted.

Three well-balanced meals a day are the best bet for athletes in training.

Class of 1944...

Where Are They Now?

Editor's Note: The following information was provided by Zelda McClellan.

CLASS OF 1944 - WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

Dear fellow classmates: It has been my pleasure to have been in touch with so many of you and to have received the information contained in this report.

To those of you whom I had to send the second and third requests for information: I did not consider the requests as "coercion" [as some of you accused me!]. All I said was "If I do not hear from you soon, I suppose I will have to try to call to mind such information as I can remember -- perhaps something about Hobo Day of 1944."

I really would not have printed it because I [as well as you] would certainly consider that privileged information, not to be printed in just any old newspaper, but something we could recall with great amusement when we have our reunion and class party in June of 1985! See you then!

My very best wishes to all of you.

Zelda West McClellan
