Groom Officials Review County Emergency Plan

The Carson County Emergency Management Plan was reviewed with officials from Skellytown, White Deer and Groom during the regular meeting of County Commissioners on Monday. Attending the session were Mayor Al Homer of Groom, Mayor R.W. Standerfer of White Deer, Mayor Tommy Owens of Skellytown and Tony Treadwell of Groom. Judge Roselius stressed the importance of coordination of efforts of all participating entities and the importance of a plan of action in case of an emergency.

Wanda Hood, Emergency Management Coordinator, presented a program and film entitled "Why Plan." She then submitted the plan to each entity for approval.

The plan covers in detail the procedures to follow in case of various emergencies. It was approved and signed by Judge Roselius and all three mayors.

Commissioners also reviewed letters from Enron Gas Co. and Westar Transmission Co. concerning excavation near the companies' lines. They also addressed the coming Fourth of July celebrations and various jobs that need to be done to prepare for the event. In view of the dry conditions existing in the county, they urge residents to use extreme caution with fireworks during the holidays.

Upon a request by Commissioner Britten for air conditioning for the County office building in Groom, it was agreed that appropriate action will be taken to solve the problem.

Roslyn Watson, County Tax Assessor-Collector, asked and received the Court's approval of her appointing Flois Reed as First Deputy and set her salary at the current rate for that post.

Also receiving Court approval was a 20 percent homestead exemption and discounts of 3 percent, two percent and one percent for early payment of taxes.

Judge Roselius gave a brief update of the elevator modification project and said that it would probably be complete by July 14.

School Receives PEIMS Guidelines

This week, each of the nearly 1100 school districts in the state of Texas received the Public Education Information Management System guidelines for the 1990-91 school year. This system has been a part of the Texas Education Agency's information gathering and storing for the past two school years, according to Joyce Hutsell, PEIMS coordinator for the Groom School District.

Most school districts across the state are computerized, with the same system of record keeping that the Groom district utilizes, so that the method of submitting the computer data has been standardized. The few districts which are not using the state-generated software and computer programs submit either computer data or manual reports to their regional education service centers for conversion into state acceptable data.

As part of continuing efforts from the State to equalize and standardize education, the PEIMS reporting was implemented. The data is gathered twice yearly, in the fall and in the spring. Hutsell estimates that the final diskette she submits to the state twice yearly contains more than one million different pieces of information which the state utilizes in comparing the district to other districts.

To arrive at the final million bits of information for the transmittal to the State, many more millions are put into the computer. Information compared will involve state reports regarding Education, Pg. 6

Education

ing the number of teachers; the number of subjects taught; the race, age, degree, experience, contract pay, additional pay, and number of days worked for all personnel hired by the district. Student data includes ethnicity, test scores, student schedule, subjects taken, days in attendance, any degree of giftedness or handicapping circumstances, age and identification.

The laws requiring this transmission of district data to Austin provide severe penalties, including loss of funding, for districts who fail to cooperate. The Education Agency guarantees the confidentiality of personnel records, such as student test scores, teacher evaluations, and student income records. The public portion of the records are only in the general comparison reports by the State. District financial officers, such as Hutsell, have always been required to file with the State the budget adopted by the Board of Trustees in August, along with the amended budget made final the next August. The report of the independent auditor is then filed in addition to district reports.

"Now," says Hutsell, "the traditional financial data is submitted in budget, amended budget, and audit report and the same information is encoded into the PEIMS transmittal in the spring and fall, so that the State now monitors what a district budgets and how it expends the money and arrives at ratios for comparison."

"If any resident of the District is interested in the PEIMS reports, the data is a matter of public record and is available to any taxpayer," continues Hutsell.

"The state now knows where each of our students is at any time of the day, where the teacher is, how many students the teacher is teaching, how much the teacher is earning that hour, and how well the district is teaching children."

"Each year it seems that more information, and therefore more control, is centered in Austin," concludes Hutsell.

Social Security Record Keeping

If you work in Social Security covered employment, and almost everyone does, you should keep your records up to date. This means reporting circumstances that could affect your eligibility for, or the amount of, Social Security payments. Among the changes that should be reported is a change in name.

Newly married women may continue to use their maiden names at their places of employment. If you intend to use your married name, however, you should report the change to Social Security and apply for a new Social Security card. Your card, showing your old number but with your new name, will usually be issued within 2 weeks after we receive the information we need. This same advice applies if you are divorced.

You can use your original or a certified (not notarized) copy of your marriage certificate that shows both your old and new names for evidence of name change and identification. If you are foreign born, you will also need evidence of United States citizenship or lawful alien status. Some firms advertise that they will provide this service for a fee; however, Social Security offers this service--as it does all other services--free of charge.

The process can be started simply by calling the Social Security Toll Free telephone number 1-800-234-5772 and ask for an application (SS-5) or most of the time you can find the form at your local post office.
