MINERALS IN YOUR DIET

Have you had your iron today? Are you deficient in calcium? What does iodine do for you? Will plenty of phosphorus give you that glow of health? Can you use too much salt? What's potassium good for? Maybe these questions aren't plaguing you. They ARE a constant concern of your physician. Mineral substances are important factors in good nutrition, even though they contribute no calories except as they are associated with caloric foodstuffs. Some minerals enter into the composition of glandular secretions. Some are essential for the integrity of particular tissues. Some are of greatest importance to the electrochemical activities that constitute the procedure known as metabolism—the total functioning of the complicated physiological process of living.

You Need A Normal Supply
Essential minerals must be available in normal supply — either too much or too little is detrimental. Fortunately the healthy body has mechanisms which regulate the quantities if the supplies are available. So let's take a look at the more important minerals, one at a time:

Salt (sodium chloride) is essential both for the sodium and the chlorine; it is present in all body fluids and tissues; oversupply is normally eliminated through the kidneys; it is restricted in some forms of heart and kidney disease; it is poorly utilized in adrenal deficiencies (Addison's disease); it is widely and easily available. Iodine is essential for thyroid function and the prevention of simple goiter; it is supplied through iodized salt and frequent use of deep-sea fish and crustaceans. Calcium is essential to the health of blood, bones, teeth, nerve and heart function, and glandular secretion of the parathyroid glands; the best and only good sources are milk and its products; calcium is important at all ages. Iron is a necessary ingredient of hemoglobin, the red-blood-cell pigment which carries oxygen to the tissues; the best sources are liver, meats, eggs, poultry and fish; iron is especially needed by women and girls during their years of menstrual functioning. Potassium plays an important role in many body functions including the regulation of heart action. Poor nutrition, especially during rapid growth, pregnancy, nursing a baby, and a long list of diseases and injuries, may disturb the electrolyte balance of the body. Fortunately, it is easy to be sure of an adequate mineral supply. Just eat a large variety of good foods of all kinds.

Early Detection Will Help Defeat Cancer

What is cancer?
All of us are well aware that cancer is a serious health problem, one of the major killers. But how many of us really know what cancer is?

A pamphlet of the American Medical Association explains that during the process of cell division—the basis of normal body growth and repair—cells become differentiated into the specific kinds needed for each organ or body function.

Each kind of cell divides into its own kind, equipped to do the job it was designed to do. Under certain conditions not yet completely understood, some cells do not differentiate in this way. They multiply in irregular and disorderly fashion and compete with normal cells for nutrition and space. These cell masses are called tumors.

Tumors that remain localized are benign tumors and may not be troublesome unless they mechanically interfere with some body function. Tumors that grow rapidly and destroy tissue are known as malignant tumors. These are called cancers.

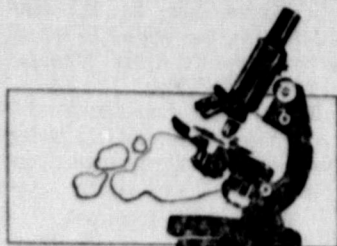

Cancers may affect any part of the human body. They also attack animals and even plants.

In man (and most animals) the untrained growth of cancer cells will infiltrate vital organs and destroy them if not checked.

Cancers spread by infiltrating adjacent tissue, by traveling through the circulatory system and lymphatic system, or by any combination of these.

The cause of cancer in man is not known. If treated promptly and properly, some cancers are highly curable. One-third of all cancers in the United States are being cured today. Cancers are most readily curable before they have spread from their original locations. To be cured, they must be found early.

More than 300,000 persons will die of cancer in this country this year. About one-third of these might have been saved through earlier detection and treatment.

Cancers spread by infiltrating adjacent tissue, by traveling through the circulatory system and lymphatic system, or by any combination of these.

Restocking Efforts Pay Off With Deer

Forty-two counties which formerly had few deer now have a huntable deer population due to restocking according to Lyndon Schatz, leader of the trapping and transplanting project of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept.

In a report on an evaluation of results of white-tailed deer restocking efforts, Schatz says that during the past 21 years, 55 counties have been restocked with white-tailed and mule deer under the program.

Seventy-six per cent of the counties restocked have huntable deer populations, and 24 per cent have either low deer populations or none remaining.

Three counties which were restocked during the past two years have not had a chance to develop, but were averaged in with the low population counties.

The evaluation was derived from estimates of game wardens and wildlife biologists on kills in the restocked counties. These data plus field survey information were used to calculate deer population in the restocked counties.
