

I. C. C. Recommends Federal Bus Regulation
Cardinal Oil Company's No. 2 Settles Good For 400 Barrels

Attorney General, Believing Line Eventually Will Be Built, To Continue Attack Upon I.C.C. Authority Over Rail Construction Within State

AUSTIN — Officials regret on the part of the state that an interstate commerce commission division has disapproved building the 230-mile Big Spring-Vega-Amarillo, Texas and Pacific Northern Railway line, was voiced here by Assistant Attorney General T. S. Christopher.

He pointed out the state officially challenges power of the interstate commerce commission to interfere in building of a line wholly in Texas.

"I believe a rehearing will be granted, and finally the road will be authorized. The records and proceedings show a clear demand for construction and need for this additional system of transportation; and denial of the application showed the unresponsiveness of the bureaucracy at Washington to local needs, as well as a discriminatory sectional administration of government."

Cardinal Oil Co.'s No. 2 Settles in Howard county Saturday drilled 10 feet into the line pay, topped at 2,325 feet and was swabbed after filling 700 feet with oil without lowering the column, according to a report from the company's headquarters. The well was rated good for 400 barrels daily and an increase was expected upon deepening.

'VOICE FROM THE SKY' AROUSES HOARDED DOLLARS

Report Urges Greater Use Of Highways

Five-Year Study Finished; Inequalities Seen In Present Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interstate commerce commission finished its report for transmission to congress recommending federal regulation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce and the encouragement of railroads and water lines to make more use of the highways, saying that a combined use of them would benefit the public and that it considered the present close regulation of railways without regulation of motor traffic was producing traffic inequalities.

Chief Bacon Rind

THERE was something elevating, something inspiring, in the career of Bacon Rind, the sub-chief of the wealthy Osages, who died a short time ago at Pawhuska.

A magnificent figure of a man, Bacon Rind clung to the costumes and customs of his ancestors to the day of his death. He was once elected principal chief of his tribe, but through enmity of a white politician he was refused permission to serve in that capacity by the Great White Father at Washington.

Bacon Rind allowed his disappointment with typical stoicism, drew his blanket a little closer about his enormous figure, and continued to serve his people as assistant to the principal chief. But he never forgot the injustice. He continued to live the life of an Indian, spending part of the year in his mansion made possible by large oil royalties, and part in a tipi pitched in the yard of his home.

Bacon Rind was called a savage. Probably he was, measured by our standards. But he was dignified, proud and true to his convictions. In those qualities at least he might be emulated with profit by a good many of his white compatriots.

The Thrill That Comes Once In A Lifetime

THE BOY WHO READS A THEATRICAL TRADE PAPER AND CAN REMEMBER THE LINGO —

the MAN HUNTERS
BY MABEL McELLIOTT
©1932 BY NEA SERVICE INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

SUSAN CAREY, 19, pretty and an orphan, lives with her AUNT JESSIE on the West side of Chicago. On finishing a business course she is employed by ERNEST HEATH, architect. She meets JACK WARING, man about town, and RAY FLANNERY, stenographer in the office across the way. Waring seems flirtatious but Susan discourages him. MRS. HEATH openly snubs Susan. BOB DUNBAR young millionaire who attended business school with her, invites Susan to lunch, starts to say something important and is interrupted by DENISE ACKROYD, a society girl. Dunbar sails for Europe and Susan realizes she cares for him deeply. BEN LAMPMAN, another admirer, takes her to a studio party but she dislikes his friends. Aunt Jessie departs to visit her sister and ROSE MILTON, slightly older than Susan, comes to stay with her. Susan, lonely, accepts Waring's invitation for an evening's fun.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
The "place out on the Milwaukee Road" proved to be a big old house, set back from the highway and flanked by rows of ancient maples. It was such a house as one of Chicago's meat-barons might have built in the nineties—all curlicues and hybrid ornamentation. Outside it had a sort of remote, Victorian dignity, but inside it was hung with the cheap colors of a temple of jazz.

The colored girl in the coat room accepted Susan's wrap with superb disdain. Susan was terribly nervous. There was something about the atmosphere of the place that disturbed her. Ray, however, seemed perfectly at ease. She demanded hairpins, spilled powder about, and bullied the check girl unmercifully. Delighted with the effect she had produced, Ray ordered Susan to follow her and the two—tall brunet and petite blond—joined their escorts.

At the end of the long room an orchestra thumped out a monotonous jungle dirge. It was strange, sullen music. After a brief consultation of menus Waring asked Susan to dance. The tempo of the music had quickened. There was more life in it now. The saxophone had ceased complaining and seemed to be beating as merrily as a saxophone can. Susan gave herself up to the moment. It was months since she had danced and then with some awkward boy. Waring's performance had an ease and smoothness of which she had never dreamed. It was like poetry. It was like flying. His arm tightened around her, imperceptibly.

"Good girl," he said in her ear. "I knew you'd dance like this." Susan leaned back a little to read the expression in his eyes.

"You knew?" she questioned.

"How?"

"Something about the way you walk—"

She was pleased, though she could not have said why. When the music ended Susan was sorry to return to the table. It was rather like coming back to earth after a trip to Mars. For the first time she had a really good look at Ray's escort. He had been introduced as Mr. Webb. After a moment or two Susan realized who he was, the junior member of the real estate firm in whose office Ray worked. He seemed a vapid, amiable young man. He had red hair and, she discovered, had been recently graduated from Harvard. Susan was not very favorably impressed. Indeed, Mr. Webb (known to his intimates as "Sky") did not seem to have much to offer beyond a ready laugh and a trick of twirling his mustache. The mustache, small as it was, revolted Susan. She found Jack Waring's clean shaven face a likeable contrast.

Waring was at his best in the role of host. Considerate, agreeable and amusing. If the flask he carried in his pocket was emptied with alarming alacrity as the evening wore on Susan was too inexperienced to notice it. As a matter of course she refused to have her ginger ale "spiked." Waring's urbanity seemed to increase and if Schuyler Webb laughed noisily now and then she put it down to collegiate high spirits and gave it no further thought.

They ate and danced and danced again. Susan had no idea of the time. But as group after group drifted in and the smoke began to hang in clouds over the big room she was conscious of a sense of uneasiness.

"Isn't it terribly late?" she murmured to Waring. They were dancing a waltz and the sensuous strains of the music made Susan's pulses throb.

"Nonsense!" he laughed at her. "The night's young. We've only started to play. I knew you'd be a wonderful playmate," he whispered. "Only you were so stand-offish I never had a chance to find out." He was holding her closely, too close, thought Susan, her instinct sharpened and revolted for an instant by the scent of liquor on his breath.

A moment ago he had been a quiet friend—flushed and voluble, it is true, but still a friend. Now Waring was becoming a menace, a strange man with a reddened face, a man who had been drinking. Susan could see the little lines around his eyes. All of a sudden she thought of Bob Dunbar, his firm, clean, youthfulness. It was as if a clean, sweet breeze had blown across a stagnant waste. She knew with aching certainty why she had been trapped into this indiscretion. If she could not have the real thing she had been willing to take second best.

"Really, I must go," she pleaded. "Rose—my friend—will be waiting for me. She hasn't a key."

Waring smiled at her a little foolishly. "Be nice!" he muttered in an unsure voice. "Don't spoil everything while the evening's still on the make."

Uncomfortable, but determined, Susan persisted. At last Waring, annoyed, stopped at their table and consulted his watch. The girl gasped at what she saw.

"It's 11:30," she exclaimed. "And it will take a good hour to get home! Whatever shall I do?"

Ray reddened her lips unconcernedly. "Don't crab the party," she said calmly. "It's going good."

Miserable, Susan stared at her. "Sky" Webb laughed foolishly. "Let's move along, anyhow," he said. "Lot of riff-raff here. We can go to Tony's. Like Tony's better, anyhow."

What followed was to be a nightmare in Susan's memory forever. The rocketing ride in the car to another noisy scene of hilarity, the band whose unremitting music seemed never to come to an end, the wild bursts of laughter from the crowd at the next table. White-faced, her eyes ringed in shadows as the night unwound itself, Susan surveyed the scene. If this were pleasure, she'd be glad to take her share of misery.

"I want to go home . . . I want to go home," she wailed in her inmost heart, although outwardly she appeared contained and calm. How blessed, from this vantage, was the thought of the white haven of her narrow room, how marvelously safe the tiny house on the shabby street!

And what would Rose think? She would be frantic.

Susan's head began to ache. A steady, deep throb of pain, it was. She smiled with difficulty and when she danced her feet were no longer light.

What a little fool she had been! Why had she come?

It was one o'clock. It was two. Through it all Ray remained pert, fresh and composed. She drank little. Ray "didn't believe" in it. But the shifting scene did not shock or startle her. Ray was a true child of the pavements. Nothing bothered her except the menace of unpopularity. It was enough to have "a date" for the evening. Where she might go or who her escort might be did not seem greatly to matter. Ray said she "knew how to take care of herself" and Susan, glancing at her, decided that probably she did.

"But I don't belong here," Susan decided. "This isn't what I want. Somewhere there must be the things I've dreamed of—glamorous, romantic, places with music and gaiety that aren't cheap. This isn't it!"

At half past two they departed. In the car Waring tried to put his arm around her but Susan shrank away.

"Don't like me, eh?" His laugh sounded foolish.

She forced a smile to her stiff lips. She must not offend this man

He paid the price of a "doomed" life!

"Of course, I do. But I'm nervous about your driving. And it's so dark out here."

Ray called. "Don't worry about that. Jack's used to one-arm driving, aren't you?"

"Atta girl. Atta baby!" That was Sky. Sky was almost asleep on Ray's shoulder. Waring's arm remained where it was though. Susan shrank from it. They were on the outskirts of the city now. The little, mushroom houses of the truck gardeners huddled together. They passed a cemetery, the white stones arising up eerily in the gloom.

"Tired, sweets?"

Susan shook her head. The man's fingers gripped her slender arm. "You're a nice kid and I like you but you're only half alive. Come to and enjoy yourself. Don't be a crepe hanger!"

She said, "I'm sorry you think I spoiled everything."

"That's all right. His voice thickened, blurred again. "We'll paint the town some time. You'd be grand if you'd just let yourself go."

Susan scarcely heeded him. She was counting the blocks now. Eight—six—four—they were almost home.

"The next corner," she murmured, turning to Waring. Now that the dreadful evening was ended she was almost effusive. To be home, safe and sound, seemed to good to be true!

"Don't bother to get out with me," she said hurriedly. She could see Rose's figure, a mere blur, on the porch. Poor Rose! There would have to be a great deal of explaining.

Before Susan could open the car door and slip away she felt strong arms around her, a mouth pressed to hers.

"Good night, sweet child!" Jack Waring murmured.

Susan tore herself away, shaking in every limb.

Oh, she hated him, she hated him for doing that!

Don't Call It Advertising

From Better Business Bulletin, March 16, 1932

Solicitors are constantly trying to sell "advertising" space in fake directories, programs for alleged benefits, pages in all types of books and tickets to alleged benefits.

Most of these are merely devices through which promoters mult business men. The amount of money yearly wasted in this dubious publicity, if invested in legitimate advertising would result in an appreciable increase in sales and goodwill.

If you must dissipate your funds through these needless channels—do so with your eyes open and knowing you will get no return. But in the name of good business, don't call it advertising.

Graft Exposed By Candidate

Corpus Christi Man Says Much Money Is Being Taken

CORPUS CHRISTI — Taking money under false pretenses in graft pure and simple, says a prominent Corpus Christi man who is running for office, and there is a lot of it being taken.

This man, who asked that his name not be published, revealed that there was a good deal of extortion, legal but never the less extortion, going on in connection with campaigns now being waged by candidates for city and county offices.

Usually, where graft is mentioned in connection with elections and campaigns, it is the candidates themselves who are accused. In this instance, however, the shoe is on the other foot—the money in the other pocket, if you prefer it. In other words the candidates are the victims.

It is quite legal to advertise for political support and as a rule, the office winner is the candidate who advertises most intelligently. Campaign time is harvest time for sellers of "gyp" advertising. Candidates are approached and assured that the sales person is representing some periodical which is sponsored by a civic, religious or fraternal organization. To buy space in this periodical, the candidate is assured, is to win the support of the organization. To fail to do so is to incur their enmity and active political opposition.

Some of the boiler of these sales persons hint that the editors of this periodical are in possession of information concerning the candidate that might prove highly embarrassing if published.

Experienced campaigners accept these promises or threats at their face value, which is nothing. The politically inexperienced, however, frequently are misled by statements of this nature.

Sane reflection would show them that the only influence their political advertisement may have is upon the people who read it. Advertising influence, then, is in direct ratio to circulation.

"Racket" periodicals, mushrooming into being as an undesirable product of political campaigns, have no circulation. They are distributed without regard for the interests of the political advertiser. Glib salesmen mention "guaranteed circulation" in fancy figures, but the guarantee is nothing more substantial than the salesman's putter.

The man with a poll tax receipt among his papers usually has a subscription payment receipt from an established newspaper to go with it.

Communications From Readers

The Herald will print communications that are acceptable to it. They must be free of libel and personal abuse. Short ones will be given preference. Author's names and addresses must be signed for publication. Only original communication addressed to The Herald will be printed; open letters or letters otherwise addressed to various persons in public life are not acceptable.

STATEMENT BY M. H. WOLFE, OF DALAS

Many people are urging me to run for Governor, and while it is known that I have never had any political ambitions, my friends believe and urge that in this distressful hour there is a chance to render valuable service in the reconstruction of the country.

If I were a candidate for Governor I would have only two words in my platform, namely, "Do Right." On that platform I would start reconstruction at the bottom and build upwards instead of starting at the top and building downward like some people are now doing.

"Doing right" would reduce taxes, perhaps one-half, within the next few years and reduce the cost of government in the same proportion.

"Doing right" would give the farmers simple, economic organizations for the purposes of limiting acreage, controlling sales and other cooperative measures so that the price of farm products could be fixed by the farmers themselves and place them on an equality with other industries.

"Doing right" would reconstruct our transportation systems, railroads and truck lines, which must be done before any measure of prosperity can come back.

"Doing right" would reconstruct the oil industry on the vital principle of "equal rights to all and special privilege to none."

"Doing right" would take drastic measures with some of the public utilities that are now charging the people war time rates.

So the platform of "doing right" would correct all of the important problems that some body must have the backbone and ability to solve in order to save all we can out of the wreck.

Big Spring Drug Store Order Received in China

The following letter dated March 7, was received by Cunningham & Phillips in reply to their filling an order from Miss Lora Clement, Baptist Mission, Kong Moon, S. China:

"Your letter of Jan. 23 and the package of Bakerwell Crystals reached me March 5. I do thank you for your promptness in sending out this order to me. I am enclosing two one dollar bills in part payment. I have these on hand so am sending them instead of getting a check for such a small sum. I am writing my sister in the U. S. A. to mail you the 50 cents in stamps. I had no duty to pay on these salts, which is unusual.

Thanking you again for your kindness, I am sorry you have to wait so long for your money, from Jan. 23 to possibly April 15. Sincerely yours, Lora A. Clement."

West Nolan To Get Test

4,000-Foot Well On 10,000 Acre Block Is Soon To Be Spudded

SWEETWATER — T. S. Holden, independent oil operator of Cross Plains, announced that surveying of a 10,000-acre block he has leased in west central Nolan county will be begun this week, preliminary to staking the location for a scheduled 4,000-foot wildcat.

The block is in the Champlon Mitchell county line and southwest of Roscoe, which is 8 miles west of Sweetwater on the T. & P. Mr. Holden owns the tools to be used in drilling the test and says sufficient acreage to finance its completion has been sold.

Whether the city shall be represented in the Broadway of America motorcade also will be taken up. Attention will be given the agricultural program being promoted by a group of farmers and the Chamber's agriculture committee, headed by Fred Keating. A financial report also will be presented.

C-C Directors Meet At 8 This Evening

How much shall be spent by the organization in its effort to secure the 1933 general convention of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce will be decided this evening at the regular meeting of the board of directors of the Big Spring Chamber of Commerce, beginning at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Hutto delivered the closing number on the program, a sketch of the history of the Big Spring country. This paper will appear in the Sunday Herald in two or three installments, soon.

Lost, Six Hundred Million—

Where is that six hundred million dollars in old, large size currency? It has not passed through the banks or it would have been replaced by the new, small size money, introduced two years ago.

Think of it—six hundred million dollars, hoarded away in sugar bowls, mattresses, safe deposit boxes, etc.

If you hold any part of this vast sum, please put it back into circulation—it is earning you nothing and is useless when idle.
