OCTOBER

Oh, how I wish that stained-window everybody-kneeling feeling would last. But it never does. Just the next morning, when I woke up, it rained. And I didn't feel pleased a bit. Still I remembered what had happened the night before, and a real glow came over me at the beautiful idea I had gone to sleep with.

I wanted to tell Mother, and ask her if it couldn't be, and wouldn't she let it be, if Father would. So, without waiting to dress me. I hurried across the hall to her room and told her all about it-my idea, and everything.

But she said, "Nonsense," and, "Hush, hush," when I asked her if she and Father couldn't fall in love all over again and get married. And she said not to get silly notions into my head. And she wasn't a bit flushed and teary, as she had been the night before, and she didn't talk at all as she had then, either. And it's been that way ever since. Things have gone along in just the usual humdrum way. and she's never been the same as she was that night I came.

Something-a little different-did happen yesterday, though. There's going to be another big astronomy meeting here in Boston this month, just as there was when Father found Mother years ago; and Grandfather brought home word that Father was going to be one of the chief speakers. And he told Mother he supposed she'd go and hear him.

"Weil, yes, I am thinking of going." she said, just as calm and cool as could be. "When does he speak, Father?

And when Aunt Hattie pooh-poohed, and asked how could she do such a thing, Mother answered :

Because Charles Anderson is the father of my little girl, and I think she should hear him speak. Therefore Hattie, I intend to take her."

And then she asked Grandfather again when Father was going to speak. I'm so excited! ' Only think of seeing my father up on a big platform with a lot of big men, and hearing him speak ! And he'll be the very smartest and handsomest one there, too. You The McLean News, Friday, October 13, 1922.

bags, Mother was on the floor in the corner crying. And when I exclaimed out and ran over to her, I found she was open; and across her law reat Company and S. P. Loftin are de I guess she was atraid Father would but that's what I wanted. I was open; and across her lap was a perfectly lovely pale-blue satin dress all trimmed with silver lace that had grown black. And Mother was crying and crying as if her heart would break. Of course, I tried and tried to stop her, and I begged her to tell me what was the matter. But I couldn't do a thing, not a thing, not for a long time. Then I happened to say what a lovely dress, only what a pity it was that the lace was all black.

She gave a little choking cry then, and began to talk-little short sentences all choked up with sobs, so that I could hardly tell what she was talking about.. Then, little by little, I began to understand.

She said yes, it was all black-tarnished ; and that it was just like everything that she had had anything to do with-tarnished; her life and her marriage, and Father's life, and mineeverything was tarnished, just like that silver lace on that dress. And she had done it by her thoughtless selfishness and lack of self-discipline.

And when I tried and tried to tell her no, it wasn't, and that I didn't feel tarnished a bit, and that she wasn't, nor Father either, she only ecuted the same. cried all the more, and shook her head and began again, all choked up.

She said this little dress was the one she wore at the big reception where she first met Father. And she was so proud and happy when Father -and he was fine and splendid and handsome then, too, she said-singled her out, and just couldn't seem to stay away from her a minute all the evening. And then, four days later he asked her to marry him; and she was still more proud and happy.

And she said their married life, when they started out, was just like that beautiful dress, all shining and spotless and perfect; but that it wasn't two months before a little bit of tarnish appeared, and then another and another

She said she was selfish and willful and exacting, and wanted Father all to herself; and she didn't stop to think that he had his work to do, and his place to make in the world; and that all of living, to him, wasn't just in being married to her, and attending to her every whim. She said she could see it all now, but that she couldn't then, she was too young, and undisciplined, and she'd never been denied a thing in the world she wanted.

She said things went on worse and worse-and it was all her fault. She grew sour and cross and disagreeable. She could see now that she did. But she did not realize at all then what she was doing. She was just thinking of herself-always herself ; her rights, her wrongs, her hurt feelings, her wants and wishes. She never once thought that he had rights and wrongs and hurt feelings, maybe,

She said a lot more-oh, ever so much more: but I can't remember it all. I know that she went on to say that by and by the tarnish began to dim the brightness of my life, too: and that was the worst of all, she ill of said notes, given in part paysaid-that innocent children should suffer, and their young lives be spolled by the kind of living I'd had to have, with this wretched makeshift of a divided home. She began to cry again then, and begged me to forgive her; and I cried and tried to tell her I didn't mind it ; but, of course, I'm older now, and I know I do mind it, though I'm trying just as hard as I can not to be Mary when I ought to be Marie, or Marie when I ought to be Mary. Only I get all mixed up so, lately, and I said so, and I guess I cried some more. Mother jumped up then, and said, "Tut, tut," what was she thinking of to talk like this when it couldn't do a bit of good, but only made matters worse. And she said that only went to prove how she was still keeping on assigned, transferred and conveyed tears to my bright eyes, when certainly nothing of the whole wretched business was my fault. She thrust the dress back into the trunk then, and shut the lid. And she began to talk and laugh and tell stories, and be gayer and jollier than I'd seen her for ever so long. And she was that way at dinner, too, until Grandfather happened to mention the reception tomorrow night, and ask if she was going. She flushed up red then, oh, so red! and said, "Certainly not." Then she added quick, with a funny little drawing-in of her breath, that she should let Marie go, though, with her Aunt Hattie. It was the only chance Father would have to see me, and she dian't feel that she had any right to deprive him of that privilege, and she didn't think it would do me any harm to be out this once late in the evening. And she intended to let me go.

TWO WEEKS AND ONE DAY LATER

Futher's here-right here in Boston I don't know when he came. But the first day of the meeting was day be fore yesterday, and he was here then The paper said he was, and his picture was there, too. There were a lot of pictures, but his was away ahead of the others. It was the very best one on the page. (I told you it would be that way.)

Mother saw it first. That is, I think she did. She had the paper in her hand, looking at it, when I came into the room; but as soon as she saw me she laid it right down quick on the table. If she hadn't been quite so quick about it, and if she hadn't looked quite so queer when she did it. I wouldn't have thought anything at all. But when I went over to the table after she had gone, and saw the paper with Father's picture right on the first page-and the biggest picture there-I knew then, of course, what she'd been looking at.

I looked at it then, and I read what it said, too. It was lovely, Why, I hadn't any idea Fither was so big. was prouder than ever of him. It told all about the stars and comets he's discovered, and the books he'd written on astronomy, and how he was president of the college at Andersonville. and that he was going to give an address the next day. And I read it all-every word. And I made up my mind right there and then that I'd cut out that piece and save it.

But that night, when I went to the library cupboard to get the paper, I couldn't do it, after all. Ob, the paper was there, but that page was gone There wasn't a bit of it left. Somebody had taken it right out. I never thought then of Mother. But I believe now that it was Mother, for-

But I mustn't tell you that part now Stories are just like meals. You have to eat them-I mean tell them-in regular order, and not put the ice cream in where the soup ought to be. So I'm not going to tell yet why I suspect it was Mother that cut out that page of the paper with Father's picture in

Well, the next morning was Father's lecture, and I went with Mother. Of course Grandfather was there, too. but he was with the other astronomers I guess. Anyhow, he didn't sit with us. and Aunt Hattle didn't go at all. So Mother and I were alone.

We sat back-a long ways back. we sat back—a long ways back. I ranted to go up front, real far front— be front seat, if I could get it; and told Mother so. But she said. Mercy, no!" and shuddered, and went ack two more rows from where she as, and got behind a big post.

glad we were to see each other. But he was looking for Mother-I know he was; for the next minute after he saw me, he looked right over my head at the woman back of me. And all the while he was talking with me, his eyes would took at me and then leap as swift as lightning first here. and then there, all over the hall. But he didn't see her. I knew he didn't see her, by the look on his face. And pretty quick I said I'd have to go. And then he said

"Your mother-perhaps she didn't--did she come?" And his face grew all red and rosy as he asked the question. And I said yes, and she was waiting. and that was why I had to go back right away.

And he said, "Yes, yes, to be sure,' and, "good-by." But he still held my hand tight, and his eyes were still roving all over the house. And I had to tell him again that I really had to go: and I had to pull real determined at my hand, before I could break away.

I went back to Mother then. The hall was almost empty, and she wasn't anywhere in sight at all; but I found her just outside the door. I knew then why Father's face showed that he hadn't found her. She wasn't there to find. I suspect she had looked out for that

Her face was still pinky-white, and her eyes were shining; and she wanted to know everything we had saideverything. So she found out, of course, that he had asked if she was there. But she didn't say anything herself, not anything,

In the afternoon I went to walk with one of the girls; and when I came in I couldn't find Mother. She wasn't anywhere downstairs, nor in her room. nor mine, nor anywhere else on that floor. Aunt Hattie said no, she wasn't out, but that she was sure she didn't know where she was. She must be somewhere in the house,

I went upstairs then, another flight. There wasn't anywhere else to go, and Mother must be somewhere, of course And it seemed suddenly to me as if I'd just got to find her. I wanted her set.

And I found her.

Deposit Your Money

The man who said "Money is only stored up labor" had looked deep into the affairs of man. He voiced a truth which we all unconsciously knew-but which is particulalry significant at this season of the year.

There are many, many methods of storing the harvest away. Maybe in a bin, granary or cellar, or-it can be in money-the easiest or most profitable way, if deposited in a reliable bank.

Let it earn while it awaits your cold day call.

High School Needs Classics Every growing High School Jas many calls for supplies of various kinds; and so it is with McLean High School. Perhaps the loudest ola." call of today is that for more classics for reading in the English courses. This call is most urgent, in that the need is greatest; but it is not necessarily the most serious, for it can be answered, partially at least, by those who are interested in the school.

The McLean Tigers, true to their name, crept through the "jungles" between here and Wellington last Friday afternoon and pounced upon their prey, Wellington, and gloriously devoured them.

The game was frequently interrupted with penalties, but aside from this it was a real good game. The final score was 20 to 13 in favor of the Tigers. The Tigers played straight football all the time, and when the end of the third quarter came they had the Wellington boys beaten 20 to 0. But due to an areal attack and "other things," the Wellington boys scored 13 points during the last quarter of the game. But our boys won, as they are

Many of us fail to reach our ideal in life, yet the fact remains that ene cannot attain any higher thing than his ideal. We must have that desire for better things to even approximate the better life. The fault is never in the ideal, but in our efforts to attain it. And one failure need not mar our ideal, but continual striving after the higher life will eventually bring success.

BOB PRESSEY ON THE BANKER

In looking through the country for men of prestige and rewho build and advertise a nown. we find the baker sets the place, There are some slant-eved pace. kings who keep small towns money from doing things, but they are scarce-death seals their doom and then ther towns enjoy a boom. When you've a chance to make a haul by buying pickles in the fall and peddling pickles in the spring and thus become a pickle king, you do not seek your maiden aunt and spring your coin-extracting chant; you don't salaam and meekly rend your robes before some wealthy friend; they'd help you, but-they've spent their last jack for camisoles and bric-abrac. The only chance to make that deal is at the bank; they hear your spiel and pave the way with gold in stacks, for you to pay an income tax. When some subscription project lags, committees call on "money bags;" they smoke his twenty-cent cigars, attend conventions in his cars and corkscrew ducats from his vault to cure the lame, the blind and halt. In time, however, you will learn that banking worms will turn, and there's no penance that compares with bearding bankers in their lairs. You suck their den with faltering step, without your usual nerve and pep and meekly stammer that you've "got some money coming-but you're not-at present-fixed to meet that note, you'd like-" the words won't pass your throat. The banker lays aside his pen and says: "Well, Bill, we'll let it ride." Outside the bank you fairly dance and go and buy your kids some pants and several books about the yaks and get your wife a bran-new axe. That chap in there behind the bars helps head off half your family jars. Oh, when I leave this earthly sphere I hope some banker will be near to supplement my stingy roll in case I can't pay charon's toll.

Mr. Merchant

Do you realize the importance of getting your advertising copy prepared early?

You know our old friend procrastination. He's a cousin to the cow's tail.

Why follow, when you can lead?

Supposing all your customers left their shopping in your store until an hour before you were closing up at night, what would happen? You know. It would make great confusion; you couldn't give service, and your customers would leave the store dissatisfied.

Well, in a way, that's what you often ask the newspapers to do. You wait until the ninth hour to prepare your copy, and when it reaches the office you expect the compositors to do two hours' work in one.

It can't be done.

The result is that your advertisement is slapped together in great haste, with a chance for errors and without proper display. It can't be otherwise.

Stop that old habit of putting off till the last day, the last hour, and the last minute, to send your copy to the newspaper office.

Get it our early when you have time to think and prepare it properly. Then send it to the newspaper office two or three days ahead. That will give the newspaper time to prepare your advertisement properly.

You can see the logic of it. It will mean better ads, better service and better results.

That's what you want. That's why you advertise. Give the newspaper a chance. Apply the Golden Rule.
