Judge Warns Sympathy Not To Be Factor

Ten Years, $20,000 Fine Possible For Former Banking Leader

NEW YORK (AP).—The case of Charles E. Mitchell, until recently a powerful figure in the banking world, who is charged with defrauding the government of more than $850,000 in income taxes was given a federal jury Wednesday.

As he concluded his charge to the jury Judge Henry W. Goddard warned it against being swayed by "any sympathy you may feel for this defendant."

Maximum prison sentence, should Mitchell be convicted, would be ten years; maximum fine $20,000.

GERMAN DISARMAMENT

Getting Ready For The Next War The threat by the French to publish the contents of their famous secret dossier of detailed data on Germany's illegal armaments is a thorn in the side of the Hitler government. Such revelations, and they could be checked easily by an official international mission—would not harmonize with the Hitler's great disarmament speech on May 17th.

Last fall an excerpt of the dossier was given here (Whirligig No. 45). In the meantime the war machinery of the Fatherland has been further strengthened but with the expanding scope of technical armament activities an increasing number of Germans gained knowledge of what was going on. The result was that in spite of the most minute precautions taken by the authorities and the most draconic penalties decreed in a set of laws made for this specific purpose, the French dossier has been conspicuously supplemented with new information.

The Versailles treaty provides that Germany shall have a maximum of 84 pieces of 10.5 cm heavy artillery with not more than 67,200 rounds of ammunition and 204 7.7 cm field pieces with 204,000 rounds of ammunition.

The actual picture is this: First of all the German artillery today is made up entirely of heavy types of 10.5 cm and 7.7 cm cannon which from the viewpoint of military value are almost two and a half times as efficient as the types permitted under the treaty. Second, the number of pieces in the possession of the Reichswehr is about 100 per cent more than they should have.

In addition to these two treaty violations the Germans have secretly constructed a new 75 mm cannon which is closely patterned after the famous French seventy-five mm field gun. Estimates as to the number of these guns in use vary between 35 and 50.

Other recent German armaments which are expressly forbidden by her treaty obligations consist of several dozen batteries of anti-aircraft artillery and particularly a number of arms which serve principally in case of attack. These include a number of motorized battalions, motorized artillery regiments and motorized technical troops. About 50 heavy "anti-tank" cannons are the special pride of the German army.

Instead of the 1929 machine guns provided for by the treaties Germany, has in use over 4,100.

Particular attention has been devoted to the development of the cavalry—in case of war that would really be a motor corps. Although the German cavalry is supposed to have only 36 heavy machine guns and no light machine guns it is equipped today with at least 75 heavy and about 480 light machine guns. Furthermore the German cavalry has enough machine guns and carbines stored in reserve (and not included in the above figures) to supply an army of close to one million men.

The German munitions and armament ledgers has been completely reorganized under the direction of the Reichswehr. Tanks and the heaviest artillery—the only two

Reagan And Inkman Give Interesting Facts Regarding Local Club

Alms and objects committee, Harold Homan, chairman, was in charge of Tuesday's Rotary meeting held at the Settles ballroom. President Bennett acted as program chairman.

B. Reagan, charter member of the club, gave an interesting history of the club. He said: "The Big Spring Rotary club was sponsored, or organized, by the Sweetwater Rotary club. About two or three years before the organization, Rufus Wright and R. K. McAdams came here and made a survey of the town, and I helped them fill out the questionnaire. At that time we did not think a Rotary club could succeed here on account of the small number of classifications that could be filled."

"By the middle of the year 1927 the town had grown so rapidly that several former Rotarians were of the opinion that our little city could support a club. About November, 1927, Rufus Wright and R. K. McAdams were here again. I think they were on their way to Midland to organize a number of clubs. For some reason I could not go down, but I asked them to come up to my residence. After canvassing the situation thoroughly it was our opinion that it was time to organize. Fred and I had both been members before, and we wanted the Rotary to organize in Big Spring first in order to get first pick of our citizens."

We were invited to bring four or five with us and attend an inter-city meeting of the Rotary clubs the next week at Sweetwater. J. Fred Phillips, Dow Heard, George Wilke, C. T. Watson and I went to the meeting. Bruce Frazier, who had been down to Hillsboro, happened to get there in time, making six from Big Spring. Midland also had a delegation there. It is needless to say that the clubs had a great meeting, and our boys thoroughly enjoyed it.

On January 8th, 1928, Rufus Wright of the Sweetwater Rotary club visited Big Spring again for the purpose of selecting a committee to elect from the business and professional men of the city, the charter members of the Big Spring Rotary club. This committee was composed of the following men: J. Fred Phillips, chairman; Bruce Frazier, Dow Heard, George L. Wilke, B. Reagan.

The committee held its first meeting in the West Texas National bank building on January 9, 1928, and selected 23 of the leading business and professional men of the city, and this list was divided among the five members of this committee. It was necessary for us to secure at least 25 in order to get a charter.

Following is a list of the twenty-five who became the charter

DES MOINES, Ia., (UP)—Reports from Tuesday's repeal election with 92 of state's 2,433 precincts missing showed 126,533 majority for repeal.

By The Associated Press Hitherto dry-voting early Wednesday joined Connecticut and New Hampshire in pouring out an avalanche of ballots in favor of crossing the eighteenth amendment from the constitution—making it 14 states in a row.

Eyed anxiously by prohibitionists and anti-prohibitionists alike at the outset of yesterday's voting, the Hawkeye state upset a recorded sentiment of two decades by rolling up a substantial total of 364,473 to 239,858 for repeal, with only a few precincts to be heard from. Since those opposed to prohibition were gaining steadily with each new return there was no possibility this lead of 124,615 could be overturned.

Polk county (Des Moines), the largest in the state, gave repeal a majority of approximately 2 to 1. Repeal received a heavy favorable vote in the avowedly "wet" counties along the Mississippi river, while many of the interior counties, considered "dry," gave compromise.

Good, Big Battlers Get Further Than Good, Big Boxers Fight Film Shows

Good, big boxers are excellent fighters, but good, bigger battlers are better.

After looking at ten rounds of pictorial description of the battle of the Maxes, Max Schmeling and Max Baer, nothing could be more convincing.

Baer, enjoying a staggering weight advantage and a six inch reach advantage, held the scrappy German at bay with his left and pummeled him with his right.

All through the fight the plucky Teuton carried the battle while the listless Baer stood back and cuffed him about the ring.

Only once or twice when Schmeling's stinging right was used did Baer dance off on his feet. The rest of the time his huge ungainly legs were used for nothing more than props for a savage, swinging pair of arms.

Touton Tireless Despite press accounts of the battle, the pictures show Schmeling as a tireless worker that came out apparently fresh as a daisy in the tenth only to be clubbed down in a savage attack by the bludgeoning Californian.

Little Max stopped an unbelievable large number of punches with his arms, but a still greater number of the most withering blows Baer had to offer without visible effect. In fact he took ten rounds of solid punching, punching such as would have pulverized most of the ranking heavies.

Baer opened his attack in the first without waiting to feel out Schmeling, astounding and electrifying a large gallery. He used the trick of spinning his smaller and lighter opponent around with his long left and then suddenly crashing him with a potent right.

His stinging backhand blows drew warning from the referee several times and no few of his punches appeared a shade low.

However, he seemed to loaf through most of the fight, waiting for Schmeling to come within range. When he did Baer showed round punches all over his head.

Baer was a two handed fighter. Schmeling used only his left. During the fight Schmeling scarcely utilized his right cross more than a half dozen times. Perhaps it was because Baer did not let him bore in close enough.

The Californian dragged himself around the ring, leaning on his foe until such a time as he chose to abuse him. And he abused him almost at will.

Baer left himself open as a gate when he swung but Schmeling was too busy catching the drives to strike back. And when he did, he was usually just about those six precious inches short.

The victor vanquished his foe in the tenth with a vicious volley of terrific rights and lefts of the barrel house variety. A long slazing right rocked Schmeling back to the floor. At the count of nine he sprang up to fight back, but there was more of it left.

The pictures are being shown as an added attraction today and Thursday at the Ritz theatre. They were presented in a preview Wednesday morning.

Southern Rusk Separate Field Suit Contents

AUSTIN, (UP)—The southern part of Rusk county comprises a separate oil field from the rest of the vast East Texas field, the Wemack Oil corporation claims in a petition filed with the state railroad commission here.

A hearing was set for July 1 at Austin to decide if the contention is correct. If so, wells in the new field can not have production restricted until the total daily production aggregates 10,000 barrels.

There are now three wells on the 1,000 acres covered by the application. Beside that of the Wemack Corporation, there is a Texas company well and another owned by Joe Marr.

The claim is made that the south boundary of the East Texas field is an east and west line passing thru the J. B. Camp, J. H. Parks, and J. Hembly surveys. South of that there is a structural difference, it is asserted.

As further indication, a list of gas wells that have blown off large quantities of gas without effect on the East Texas field, is cited. The Wemack Corporation well is approximately two and half miles south of the producing horizon of the East Texas field, the application says. It is located on a 97 acre tract, the Arnold Farm of the William Christian survey.

State Commissioner Of Agriculture Accepts Invitation

Farmers of six drought stricken counties of this section are being urged to attend a mass meeting scheduled for 2 p. m. June 30.

J. E. McDonald, state secretary of agriculture who has just returned from a three weeks' conference in Washington on the acreage reduction plan, will be chief speaker. He has already accepted an invitation to appear.

Wednesday a wire was sent to C. A. Cobb of the cotton division, Department of Agriculture in Washington, urging him also to participate in the June 30 meeting here. Four of the counties mentioned had a total yield of 145,195 bales of cotton last year. Average yield for the past three years for the four has been more than 125,000 bales.

Papers of the six counties were asked by the local chamber of commerce Wednesday to cooperate in having as many farmers present as possible.

A public address system will be used to handle the crowds.

THERE'S A LOT IN LIFE THAT WE MISS.

The small-town lad who thinks that life would be just fine if he could only get to the bright lights of Broadway ought to have a little talk with Captain Amador O. Hayes, who has just retired after spending a number of years in charge of the West 47th street police station in New York City.

In that job Captain Hayes was more or less the overseer of Broadway. The brightlights section was his bailiwick, and everything that happened in the busiest and most famous play spot in America was his business; and when he retired he remarked that "nothing much ever happened to me."

His job, in fact, had been rather dull, and all things considered Captain Hayes was rather glad to get out of its monotonous routine.

"Nothing much happens to me," he added, "they just have tough hours and do what they're told."

And right there, it would seem, there is an ironic little commentary on the nature of romance and adventure.

"Nothing much ever happened to me" is the complaint of every real lad who is tied down by a prosaic job when he would like to spend for a bit of real adventure. The lad who follows a plow or drives a bakery wagon or files invoices in a freight office or hammers a typewriter nine hours a day generally has the notion that romance is something he could get hold of very nicely if only he could slip into the right kind of job.

But romance and adventure are, after all, the commonest things in the world. The only trouble is that most of us fail to recognize them when we see them. Captain Hayes, supervising Broadway's bright lights for year upon year, finds his job boring and monotonous; nothing ever happened to him, or to any other cop on the force, and he's glad to get out of it.

And so it goes. An especially daring airmail pilot who pioneered in the early days of night flying over the Alleghenies, when that particular job was about the riskiest and most adventuresome thing aviation had to offer, told an interviewer that the main trouble with it was that it was hard for him to

WOODIN WEARS CREAM COLORED WOOLIES AT LABORS IN TREASURY

WASHINGTON (UP)—A white flag upon which is embroidered a blue anchor, around which is a tangled rope, beside which is a five pointed star—flutters over the door of Assistant Secretary of Navy Roosevelt.

It is a fouled anchor, and hence a hint, say superstitious critics. And that is a foul aspersion on a lucky old piece of navy heraldry, replies the navy department, with the marine corps joining in angrily. (The marine corps uses the same kind of insignia.)

Pictures of the flag, in any number, have gone to newspapers the country over with some such caption as this:

"Fouled anchor flutters over Secretary Roosevelt's door."

The navy department, therefore, is in the throes of indignant denying.

Another photographer has uncovered some more unusual news to wit, Secretary of the Treasury Woodin's long underwear.

The camera man said he wanted a picture of Woodin hard at work "Go ah" and shoot," said the secretary, "I'm working."

"But you've got your coat on," replied the photographer.

The secretary doffed it.

"Now if you'll just roll up your sleeves so you'll look busy," continued the photographer, mopping his brow in the heat of a June day.

Again Woodin obliged, revealing cream colored woolies which reached to his wrists.

Processes To Be Shown For Visitors

'House Warming' Arranged To Acquaint People With Details

The Herald's principal reason for holding a neighborhood 'house warming' in its new quarters at 210 East Third street Thursday evening from 7 to 9 p. m. is to give the public better opportunity to acquaint themselves with the real 'inner workings' of a modern daily newspaper plant.

Comparatively few people know of the many details included in the process of producing a newspaper.

"How do you get enough to fill the paper every day?"

"How do you make the type

"How do you get those pictures in the paper?" There are but a few of the many questions newspaper workers are asked most every day.

During the open house Thursday evening an effort will be made to explain to visitors the answer to these questions.

Entire Process The entire process, from the reporter gathering information for news stories and the advertising salesman arranging and selling ad copy through the front office to the typesetting machines and compositors, and stereotyping to the actual printing of the paper and its distribution to readers the entire line of operations will be shown.

Comparatively few persons realize that in Big Spring there is not only one of the best arranged daily newspaper plants in this section of the nation, but also one of the most complete and most modern.

The Herald is the only newspaper in this section of the country with stereotyping process rotary press with exceptions of Abilene, Lubbock, San Angelo and El Paso. The Herald has more typesetting equipment than any newspaper in this section with the exception of those in the four cities named above.

The Herald management feels that its additional investment represented by expense of moving will reap fine dividends in terms of increased efficiency of employees, greater accessibility to the office by the public. Working conditions have been greatly improved through better lighting and ventilation, sanitary facilities.

In addition to these factors The Herald feels that the people of Big Spring and territory will find a greater pride in the newspaper as a public asset and facility.

Among those figuring in various phases of The Herald's move and the arrangement and improvement of its new quarters were the following: Joe B. Neel Warehouse and Transfer, using as many as fourteen men; E. A. Reagan, contractor; Roy Lay and John Chaney, painters; L. E. Coleman, plumbing; D. & H. Electric Co.; J. A. Williams, John Cross, carpenters; Tammit & McGinnis, Burton Lingo Lumber Company; Hookwell Brothers, lumber; S. P. Jones Lumber company; Thorp Paint & Paper company; Heinie Johnson, sign service; J. M. Morgan, contractor.

"Tiny" Hays of San Angelo, widely known linotype expert and veteran composing room foreman, superintended moving of linotype and intertype machine and other composing room equipment.

A. T. Blease, Corpus Christi, superintended dismantling and re-installation of the printing press.

Austria Uses Martial Law To Stamp Out Nazis

VIENNA, (UP)—Martial law was in force in parts of Austria as the government moved to eradicate the Austrian Nazi party.

The Nazis were ordered dissolved after a series of bombings and terroristic outrages. The cabinet was convinced the Nazis sought to overthrow the government. Police, augmented by the military, began an immediate round up of Nazi leaders.

Foreign observers feared the dissolution order would lead to a complete break in German-Austrian relations, a strain since the cabinet began suppressive action against the Austrian Nazis ten days ago.

In proclaiming dissolution, the government made a faint effort to avoid an out and out break with Nazi Germany. Minister of Justice Gurt Schuschnigg announced that the order was not anti-German because the German Nazis only recently said they would make no affiliations with Nazi organizations abroad that were not made up of German citizens.

He appealed to the populace to recognize that the government had to use "force to meet terror."

Many Jobs Created By Moving Of Daily Herald Plant

Press Chief Problem For Work Crews

Working Conditions Greatly Improved For Entire Personnel

When a daily newspaper's plant is moved, men of a number of trades, must be called upon to join in performing the task.

When The Herald completed arrangements to move from the old location on West First street to larger and more modern quarters at 212 East Third street, on the Broadway of America, carpenters, painters, tinners, plumbers, lumber dealers, paint and paper dealers, machinists, laborers, and moving van operators were called into service.

Money spent for labor of various kinds ran well into the hundreds of dollars and approximately 35 men were given employment for from two to three days to two weeks at good wages.

First and by far the most difficult step in the moving process was complete dismantling and re-installation of the 35-ton printing press.

Several days before A. T. Blease of Corpus Christi, one of the best known and most successful printing press engineers and machinists in the country, started with a corps of four helpers, to dismantle the machine, a large pit had been dug and walked with reinforced concrete in the new building.

R. A. Reagan had the contract for that work. The pit, of course, had to be made by strict specifications for the specific purpose.

Press Big Job
Mr. Blease and his helpers began dismantling the press on a Saturday afternoon.

Sunday morning everything except the cutter and folder had been hauled by the Joe B. Neal crew to the new location.

Then the reconstruction process started. With thousands of parts ranging from the smallest bolt to the frame weighing several tons arranged in rows and stacks to save as much time as possible the men stayed on the job through Saturday afternoon and night and until Sunday evening.

Four hours of sleep, and they were back again for a 24-hour stretch. They were paid and worked as rapidly as nature of the job would allow.

Principal object in moving was to do so with as little disturbance of the daily schedule as possible. It was a tribute to the crews that the press was moved and reinstalled, re-adjusted and regulated with such dispatch that the paper was printed on The Herald's press except for two days. On those days the type was set, the page forms made up and mats of each page rolled, the mats driven to a nearby city, where plates were cast, the papers printed and returned here by 6:30 p. m.

After a few days' rest from moving, they were taken until another weekend, when the moving of the remainder of the equipment was started.

At 12:30 p. m. Saturday this job was begun. At 3 a. m. Sunday everything had been moved.

Typesetting Machines
This included the moving of three Linotype and one Intertype machines. These heavy, delicate machines were jacked up, bolted on skids and pulled along by trucks along the street paving to the new location.

Monday morning the operators were setting type on the machines as usual.

Numerous pieces of stereotyping equipment, the machine for casting borders, slugs and rules used in making up the paper, the fonts and cabinets of hand type, the files of back copies of the paper, the steel "turtles," 14 of them, on which display ads are made up, the business office equipment—

Mr. Arliss and Miss Davis are two of several interesting personalities in the feature unit of the five unit program, the highly spiced comedy drama, "The Working Man," termed by eastern dramatic critics the "happy picture of 1933."

Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy still the ranking comedy team of the screen after all these years, contribute the unit second in importance, the comedy "Me and My Pal."

Robert Benchley, celebrated for his humorous contributions to Life and to Liberty, contributes to the pursuit of happiness by theatre patrons—and no man was intended in this paragraph—with the maidenly single reel subject of all time, "Your Technocracy and Mine."

Cliff Friend, hero of Tin Pan Alley, as writer of the high record number of popular song hits, does nobly by the program by showing himself in person in a review of his most tuneful numbers.

Whatever other stars add lustre to the Perfect Program will depend upon what news breaks are caught by the camera's eye, and the fifth unit is the ever popular Sound News.

Manager Robb comments on the above that it looks like a new deal for amusement seekers, adding that home office advice indicates that this will be the "finest and best of all the roadshow unit programs of the past year, or more."

and many other items were loaded in the Neal trucks and hauled away.

For two weeks before the actual moving was finished carpenters, electricians, plumbers, painters and others were busy in the new building.

The entire interior was redecorated, the business and editorial office floor painted, signs painted on the front windows.

Following the standards provided by city and state law in all details, electric power connections, including setting of several motors, natural gas service and the special plumbing that was needed in several instances were finished.

Before the moving was called completely finished all desks, chairs and tables in the offices were done in uniform oak finish. Counters and railings were done in green and cream carrying out the color scheme of the interior walls.

Death Claims Barry Miller

Was Prominent In Texas Politics Of Two Generations

DALLAS (UP)—Barry Miller, former lieutenant governor of Texas, died at his home, "Millersora," near Dallas, at 3:10 p. m. Tuesday. He had been in a serious condition for some time, suffering with complications which developed after a fall at Austin, in which he suffered a broken hip.

He was three times lieutenant governor of Texas and was admitted to the Texas bar in 1883 when 19 years old. A short time later he was appointed assistant county attorney, his start in the political world.

He was the father of three sons, Tom Barry Miller, William B. Miller and Philip R. Miller, and a daughter, Mrs. Evelyn Miller Pierce.

Barry Miller, for two generations an active figure in Texas politics, was born Dec. 25, 1864, on a plantation near Barnwell, S. C., the son of Dr. Thomas Johnston Miller and Rachel Barry Miller.

His father, a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, was a member of the Hampton Legion, Charleston Dragoon, and served during the Civil War, as assistant surgeon at McPhersonville Hospital.

His mother was a daughter of Major Philip Barry, who won a medal for bravery at the Battle of Waterloo when he was only 17.

Barry Miller's father died when he was 5 and his widowed mother took him to Washington, D. C., where she made her home with her mother, Mrs. Margaret Nealey Barry. In Washington his mother obtained a position with the treasury department while he attended public school and private schools.

Was Printer's Devil
When he was 16 Miller worked as a printer's devil on the Washington Post, his ambition at that time being to become a newspaper man. When he was 17 a letter from his uncle, Tom Barry, held out to him the prospect of great opportunities in Texas for a young man.

Railroads were extended into Texas in 1880 and young Barry Miller arrived in 1882. He went to work in the law office of Sawie Robertson and Jerry Coke in Dallas. He was admitted to the Texas bar at 19 and soon afterward was appointed assistant county attorney under Charles Client later, served four years as chief assistant under Col. D. A. Williams.

He was 30 when his friend, Charles A. Culbertson, retiring as governor, sought to become United States senator. Miller ran for state senator and was elected in 1898. He sought the office principally in order to be able to vote for Culbertson's selection as United States senator. He served four years and refused to stand for re-election.

Miller was appointed judge of the criminal district court of Dallas county in 1911, later being elected to the same office for a four-year term. When he had cleared the docket, he recommended to the legislature that his court be abolished.

With Senator Culbertson, enfeebled and old, unable to leave Washington and come to Texas, Barry Miller was his spokesman and representative in the state. In 1916 he successfully managed the Culbertson campaign for re-election. Culbertson was defeated in 1922 as he died soon afterward.

That year, for the first time in his life, Miller also suffered a political defeat. He failed of re-election to the Texas house of representatives, where he had served three terms. Two years later, however, he was elected lieutenant governor and was reelected in 1926 and 1928.

In 1930, he suffered a second political defeat when he ran for governor falling in the primaries to receive the democratic nomination.

Miller married Miss Minnie H. Miller, daughter of William B. Miller, one of the earliest settlers of Dallas county in 1885 when he was 20. The Miller family home at "Millersora" was built nearly 80 years ago by William B. Miller and occupied by his family during the Civil War.

Barry Miller was a Master Mason for more than 30 years and for more than 40 years an Odd Fellow, serving in 1929 at Grand Master in Texas. He also was a member of the nights of Pythias for 40 years.

His mother was a daughter of Major Philip Barry, who won a medal for bravery at the Battle of Waterloo when he was only 17.

Barry Miller's father died when he was 5 and his widowed mother took him to Washington, D. C., where she made her home with her mother, Mrs. Margaret Nealey Barry. In Washington his mother obtained a position with the treasury department while he attended public school and private schools.

CLEBURNE, (UP)—The selection of a jury to hear the trial of J. D. Martin, 50 year old Grandview farmer, charged with murdering his wife, was resumed in district court here.

Seven jurors were chosen from a venire of nearly 100 before the court recessed last night. The death penalty was mentioned once in the examination of jurors when the prosecution asked a prospective juror if he objected to inflicting the extreme penalty.

Martin is charged with causing the death of his wife, Aug. 1, 1932. Her body was exhumed in December and examiners at Dallas reported traces of strychnine in her body. At the time of her death it had been reported she died of convulsions after taking a dose of medicine.

Her husband was accused and indicted by a grand jury.

CHAPTER XLIII

One day in late February, a day of premature spring, Monnie was walking along High street on her way home. Suddenly it seemed to her that the thaw had come to her heart as well as to all the brooks and rivulets. It was as if the pieces of a puzzle had fallen into place and she saw her life again in its true proportions. She had been frozen up since Dan's death, had not really believed in the coming of a warmer, happier time.

"Is it wrong to feel this way?" she wondered, innocently. After all, in the eyes of the world, she had no right to mourn Dan. She must hide her sorrow and be secret about it. Sandra was his widow and Sandra was far away by this time, seeking to reclaim her lost beauty.

But it was true that life had color for Monnie again, had regained meaning all on a sudden, as if someone had flung wide a casement, showing her a dim, remembered beauty.

"This is what it used to be like—before—before I was in love with Dan," the girl confessed to herself. Every day then had been an adventure and a promise. She had taken pleasure in simple things, had laughed joyously at nothing. Then, almost without her knowing it, Dan had taken possession of her heart. She had lived only for the sound of his voice, for a chance sight of him in the street, for the hope of some further meeting with him. It had all been so unsatisfactory, so bitter, so sad. Nothing had come of it and here was she, almost 21, wondering what to do with her days.

The high clouds, scudding across a piercingly blue sky, matched her mood. How strange she thought a little sadly, Charles was these days. Before he had been her friend, always there, a very tower of strength to lean on. Now he seemed cold and distant. His manner with her was formal. He never "dropped in" casually any more, except when she was away. In Dr. Waterman's office she heard of him casually. He was going here, going there. He appeared to be much in demand. His health was completely restored now, the doctor had told her, hinting, too, that Charles expected to move on shortly.

"He's getting restless here," the white haired, keen eyed old gentleman had remarked that morning. "He's perfectly fit and he wants to get back to his work."

Timidly Monnie had asked what that was. Charles had always been curiously reticent about it. Dr. Waterman had fixed her with a penetrating glance.

"Why, the boy's an architect and a very good one. Didn't you know that?" he had asked briskly. "Overworked and hat to take a rest in the south of France. Some girl played hob with him over there. She was an American married to a title. Charles got into the papers—a duel or something. His nerves weren't mended. The boy was far from normal, really, and I wrote him to come here. I knew this little town of ours would be good for him. And it has been. For a while I thought he meant to settle here. He talked of it but now he's changed his mind and wants to get back to New York. Perfectly natural, I suppose.

Again Monnie felt that queer little pang. The town would be strange, unfriendly almost, without Charles Eustace. She would miss him greatly.

As if in answer to her thoughts, his tall figure swung into view just as she turned the corner of her own street. Monnie's pulse quickened at sight of him.

"Hello."

"How are you?" He stood, staring down at her, his frown giving way to a smile.

"I'm well," Charles fell into step beside her.

"You look it." He gave her an oblique glance.

Monnie said, offhandedly, "I hear you're going away."

His face fell into grim lines again. "Who's been tattling?"

"Oh, I didn't know it was a secret." Monnie flushed, feeling resentful. Why would he behave like this? It was so stupid. She wanted to be his friend and he pushed her away.

"It's not exactly. Yes, I'm pushing along. Got to get back to work. I've loafed long enough."

It was on the tip of her tongue to say, "Why not work here?" But she curbed the impulse. Besides that would be a very silly thing to ask. Naturally his kind of job would take him to the big cities. He belonged there.

"Did you stop at the house?" she inquired a moment later, for want of something better to say. A half constrained silence had fallen between them.

"Yes, to see Kay about those dance-tickets. She stopped by to ask if I wanted to buy some and I wasn't in. It's a benefit, I believe."

His voice, Monnie thought, softened when he spoke Kay's name. Well, that was all right. Charles and Kay would be a wonderful couple. Monnie had a cinema flash of herself, the maiden aunt, hovering over Kay's rosy children.

"They say she used to be a pretty girl years ago." She suppressed a sigh but Charles caught the half-uttered sound and whirled.

"You're not ill!" His voice seemed so accusing that Monnie almost jumped.

"No. What made you think so?" He stared down at her, almost angrily. "You're thinner—and so pale. It makes me—" he broke off, refusing to finish.

"Makes you what?" Curious how she longed to have him finish the sentence. But he set his lips tight and would not. He stalked on.

"Charles, you're tearing along so I can't possibly keep up with you. She was laughing but there were tears close to her eyes. Why was she so cross with her? What had she done?"

"Sorry." But he didn't look it. His dark, handsome face with grim,

Midland Beaten By Odessa 9 To 7

ODESSA—The Odessa Oilers downed Midland's Indians on the latter's field Sunday. The score was Odessa 9, Midland 7. The Oilers made nine errors, some of them at critical times, as Midland earned only two runs.

Park Allen pitched seven hit ball, as his mates collected twice that many from Brown. Dameron led the Oiler attack, with four hits-out of five trips. Watson, Oiler short-stop, started also, launching two double plays, while collecting a single and a double to help with the hitting.

The first meeting was held at the Episcopal parish house on January 24, 1928, with 21 members of the Sweetwater club present. Rufus Wright of that club acted as chairman. This meeting was full of pep and enthusiasm and a wonderful spirit of fraternal fellowship. At the conclusion of the program, the following men were elected as the club's first board of directors: J. Fred Phillips, George L. Wilke, Dow Heard, Bruce Frazier, E. O. Ellington, Homer McNew, B. Reagan.

The board of directors elected the following officers to serve until June 30th, 1928, the end of the Rotary year: J. Fred Phillips, president; B. Reagan, vice president; George L. Wilke, secretary.

The club was elected to membership in Rotary International on February 22, 1928, and the charter, number 2771, was delivered to us on April 22, 1928, by District Governor Ellis Boyd of Fort Worth and 22 members of the Sweetwater Rotary club—our mother club.

During the first year the club's membership increased in numbers from 25 to 41. That year eleven members attended the district convention at Lubbock, J. Fred Phillips and George L. Wilke being the delegates.

In May, 1928, all the officers were re-elected. The minute book of the club has been lost, and after a thorough search we have been unable to locate it. In April, 1928, the following directors were weapons which Germany does not possess in considerable numbers. It is produced on a large scale within three months from any given date.

Although Germany is supposed to have only 44,000 military rifles and 18,000 carbines the total number of rifles exceeds 3 million. Most of these are not in the custody of the regular army but are held by members of the Nazi storm detachments and the Street Militia League. Many thousands of rifles and millions of rounds of ammunition are still hidden on the estates in East Prussia, Silesia and Bavaria.

All these arms do not include of course the private arsenal which the Nazis have imported from abroad during the last 20 months. A wholesale smuggling business in rifles, revolvers and ammunition is being conducted on a large scale under the eyes of German customs guards on the Dutch frontier. This business was organized by one Szynanski in Venlo (Holland) who specially equipped the major part of the 500,000 Nazi storm troops with firearms. Many of these arms are of Belgian origin is one of the curious sidelights of this situation. The shipments also included much automatic fire arms from the factories of One of Papen's and General von Schleicher's most intimate friends, Count Metternich who has an "air" close to the German border at Sittich near Limburg in Holland, was instrumental in carrying out these "imports."

Under The Dome At Austin

By Gordon K. Shearer

AUSTIN, (UP)—That former Governor James E. Ferguson may again enter the field of politics personally by running for United States senator against Morris Sheppard, is being heard about Austin.

Liberal forces make no secret of the fact that they were disappointed that Governor Ferguson did not name Congressman Joseph Weldon Bailey to call the next convention of June 27 by order. They would have welcomed selection of Bailey whom they had hoped to pit against Sheppard.

If James E. Ferguson intends to match a race with Sheppard, the cards were well played to that end. By naming Senator Sheppard and B. Y. Cummings for the rural posts, the governor keeps Bailey out of the spotlight as Sheppard's opponent. Ferguson is outspokenly wet in the campaign fight and has announced he will probably make a speaking campaign. If he can focus attention on himself as the chief opponent of the dries, led by Sheppard, he would be a logical candidate in event of a wet victory Aug. 26.

Senator Tom Connally, who will vote dry, has a race coming up before that of Senator Sheppard. A wet victory on Aug. 26 may give him an outstanding opponent. State Senator Welly K. Hopkins of Gonzales, is mentioned as the possible opponent.

The gubernatorial race more now than ever appears likely to have Attorney General James V. Allred in it. He refuses to discuss it but gets evident pleasure out of the references being made to him as "the next governor."

The list may also contain Mrs. Ferguson as a candidate for reelection thought many Ferguson stalwarts have proposed that Speak Coke Stevenson of Junction be a candidate. If her husband declines to run against Sheppard, it would help his chances for her to hold another term as governor.

Lieut. Governor Edgar L. Witt of Waco and Tom Hunter of Wichita Falls runner-up of the Ferguson-Sterling campaign, can definitely be counted upon as entrants in next year's primaries. Senator Walter Woodward of Coleman, might be in if he does not run for Wichita Falls, president of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, mentioned as a possible candidate last time, might be available timber if the clash over whether federal relief for Texas must pass through Austin or go direct to communities becomes acute. At present, rivalry is keen between the regional chamber of commerce plan and the central state plan. It might become a state issue.

The next session of the state highway commission is to be held in the large hearing room of the new state highway building. Completion of the $300,000, nine-story, modernistic office structure means the moving of numerous state offices. The state highway department, which had its first office in a committee room at the rear of the house of representatives hall will occupy seven floors of the building which cover a quarter of a city block. Grouped on these seven floors will be the highway forces now occupying a floor in the state land office building, a floor in a downtown office building; quarters for the state motor patrol in the old Travis county court house and the board for payment of county and district road bond indebtedness. The latter has been occupying space in the state capitol.

Quarters in the land office building, vacated by the state highway department will be used by the state board of health and the industrial accident board, which now occupy rooms off the house and senate galleries in the main capitol.

A floor of the new building will be used for the state board of water engineer, the state reclamation department and affiliated activities. The state auditor's office, which occupied temporary quarters in the governor's reception room at the capitol, now turned over to the state relief commission, will be housed in the old Travis county court house.

This building renovated and remodeled, was built by the county on a lot leased from the state. When the county decided on a new court house recently the lease was turned back, the state buying the old building. In its renewed state it has been designed as the "Walton" building. The name is in memory of an early Austin attorney.

Whether the divisions of the state department of education can be grouped under the new arrangements seems doubtful. It is now badly scattered. There are divisions on various floors of the state capitol and divisions in the Walton building.

Basement of the new building will house records of all departments.

The revival meeting in progress at the Church of Christ, Fourteenth and Main streets, goes forward with splendid interest manifested. The church building was practically filled for the service Tuesday night to hear Evangelist James Powell of Fort Worth, speak on the subject of "Obedience."

He spoke, in part, as follows: "When we rightly divide the scriptures we are confronted with three dispensations. The patriarchal age began in the Garden of Eden and lasted for 2500 years until the Ten Commandment law was given to Moses on Mount Sinai. Then began the Jewish era which continued until Christ called the law to the cross in his death. Fifty-three days later on the memorable day of Pentecost, the birthday of the New Testament church, the Christian age began, and shall last until time shall be no more. God's man's first existence on earth until the present time, God has always demanded strict obedience on the part of men. In every age, when man obeyed God, it was pleasing to Jehovah, and the obedient was always justified through his obedience. On the other hand, the disobedient was always condemned.

"Under the first dispensation God made Abraham a promise conditionally, which condition was that he was to leave his native country, kindred, earthly possessions, and make a journey into the land of promise. Abraham obeyed God and became obedient to God's instructions, and Jehovah fulfilled His promise to Abraham after obedience, and not before. Abraham became an heir to the promise of God according to his obedience. Heb. 11:8.

"Under the second dispensation, God demanded Nadab and Abihu to make a sacrifice unto Him. It was necessary in making this sacrifice that they use fire and Jehovah told them where they were to secure the fire. They did not believe God as was true of Abraham.

Two services are conducted daily at 10 a. m. and 8:30 p. m. A most cordial invitation is extended to all to attend these services.

LOOK at the packages on your pantry and bathroom shelves, and see what a multitude of brand names you recognize. Some of them have been familiar for years. You may have made the acquaintance of others only a few weeks ago. But even these are not suspected strangers. You have bought them confidently because they were advertised. And it is the same with your sheets and towels, your shoes and clothes, your electric appliances, the car in your garage—nearly everything you use.

Advertised products have a standing that commands respect. They are not nameless, but vouched for by responsible firms. The fact that they are advertised is in itself an indication that their standards of quality are strictly maintained, that they represent honest value.

As science and discovery go on, newly developed products are constantly being advertised—ready to help you save money and improve your standard of living. Every advertisement of such a product you read in your daily paper is a letter of introduction to a new and possibly useful friend.

It will pay you to read the advertisements in this paper every day. By so doing you will meet many choice products—worthy to become friends of the family.
