THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR

CITY IN DARKNESS FOR FEW MINUTES TUESDAY NIGHT

A fuse was blown at the power plant Tuesday night, and in the darkness and confusion incident to hunting for extra fuses, the lights were out for a longer period than has ever happened since the plant was installed. No inconvenience was caused other than the few minutes of darkness. This is only the fourth fuse that has given way since the power was turned on; the other times happening when it was not noticeable.

News from Heald

This community was visited by another good shower Tuesday, which will benefit the crops. Most people are laying by feed crops and oil seems to be the order of the day.

THEY MAKE LIFE EASIER

Do you ever stop to think that your life would be without the advertised goods? Can you imagine your home stripped of curtains, glass, paint, carpets, telephone and phonograph? Imagine your table set without pepper, salt, sugar, and everything except home-prepared food. Honestly now, wouldn't your life seem both hard and drab? You would have little comfort and convenience. You would know nothing of the way to secure them. Unless you had the advertisements to help you, your ingenuity would tend to limit your progress by limps and leaps. In fact, your progress would be slower than the South American, which moves about on a wheel. Advertisements sweep you on in enjoyment—read them. Now about advertised products. They give your life new ease. They give your faith in advertised facts. They are worthy of your confidence. Remember this, the man who advertises pays for the advertisements you see in the papers and magazines. The merchant you read his advertisements will encourage him to give you more and better bargains.

THANK YOU.

Dr. R. R. Ezell of Rowie visited his father-in-law, M. M. Newman, this week. The doctor is interested in moving his dental equipment and locating here if suitable quarters can be secured. Jacobs Bros. hand us $2 for The News a year.

Only a part of the stock is on hand right now, but every train is bringing new goods and the store will soon be in full operation. Read the store's announcement on another page and watch for their advertisement next week giving prices on several articles.

ALL IS NOT FIT TO PRINT

A dearth of local news often leads to murmurs on the part of those who prize local gossip above all else, and it is not the fault of the publisher. Any live publisher will not fail to give all the local news worthy of note; therefore, when the local department is short, you should not rail at the editor, but remember you might have committed suicide, got married, quarreled with your neighbor, stole chickens, let your team run away or done a hundred other things to make a local item. If a newspaper should publish current gossip, or the hints and allusions of the best society in the community, it would be ostracized and the editor horsewhipped or burned at the stake. Think a minute of the mean and low things you say about your townsmen and your neighbors and imagine how it would look in print. Don't criticize the newspapers for what they print, but give them great credit for what they don't print. A newspaper that contained one-half the nonsense current among the best citizens would be considered unfit to read. Honest!—Patchogue (N. Y.) Advance.

Too Much Efficiency

By E. J. Rath

Begin Here Today

John W. Brooke, hardware magnate and widower, has arranged with the Economy and Efficiency Corporation, Limited, to have his household managed by their representative for two months while he is out of the city. He leaves town without informing his grown children, Constance, William and Alice, of the new arrangement.

H. Hedge, efficiency engineer, assigned to the work, announces the news to the shocked household. He shows documentary evidence and joins the family at dinner. Hedge takes time from his food to tell the butler how to walk efficiently and then enters into a discourse with the three "children."

He calls attention to his card which states simply "H. Hedge, E. E." After he has explained the economic points of the card Constance decides on a bit of heckling.

Now Go on with the Story

"And the 'H' instead of your first name—is that also an economy?" asked Constance.

"Assuredly."

"But there must be other 'H. Hedges' in the world, even in the city. It would seem very easy to get you mixed up."

"Theoretically, yes. Practically, no. Take your own case. Your name, I believe, is Constance T. Brooke. I care not what the middle name may be; it is superfluous and wasteful in any event. We will throw out the 'T.' to begin with. We will now assume that your card is printed 'C. Brooke.'"

"Engraved," amended Constance.

"Printed," said Mr. Hedge. "Engraving costs from three to four times as much. However, you are 'C. Brooke.' Now, you suggest that that is not sufficient identification. I insist that for your purposes it is. In the first place, nearly all persons to whom you distribute this card, owing to a silly social custom, are quite aware of your identity. In the second place, there is no other 'C. Brooke' residing at this number on Fifth Avenue. In the third place, I venture to say that not in all the circle of your acquaintance is there another C. Brooke with whom you could possibly be confused. There may be other C. Brookes in the world. Yet I should estimate, offhand, that your chances of being confused with one are about one in three or four million. So you see that practice and theory are not always in accord. Take my advice and leave the 'e' off the Brooke. It is cumbersome, unnecessary and silent. If you use it you ought to pronounce it. Otherwise it is alphabetic extravagance."

Mr. Hedge smiled gently and evidently awaited a refutation of his statement. There was none from Constance; she was annoyed and angry.

"That being the case," she said, controlling her voice, "why not leave the final 'e' off 'Hedge'?"

The substitute father studied her with quick interest.

"You are an apt pupil," he said. "The suggestion is excellent. When it is necessary for me to obtain new cards I shall do so. Thank you."

Somehow Constance did not feel that she had achieved an effective retort. She did not want to be an apt pupil; she did not intend to use of any assistance in promoting economy and efficiency.

Mr. Hedge sought to pursue his advantage.

"You children must understand," he said in a friendly tone, "that while my profession proceeds along certain well-defined lines, it is not necessarily a complete science. I shall always be glad to receive any suggestions, provided that they conform to the general theory and principles of scientific management. I want you to feel free to come to me at any time on such matters."

"And in all matters, so far as that is concerned, I expect, of course, that you children will make me your confidant and advisor."

"You children!" The expression caused the three Brookes to writhe in their chairs. Why, this interloper was scarcely older than Billy Brooke! Unknown to Billy, Hedge was watching the proceeding narrowly.

"Will you kindly explain to me," he said suddenly, "why you wave a match eight times in order to extinguish it?"

Billy gaped at him.

"You waved it eight times—so," declared Hedge, illustrating. "Waste energy. An unnecessary physical effort that might be employed. I extinguish a match—so."

He lighted one, waited until the flame had firmly caught the wood, then held it a few inches from his

"What is that for?"

lips and puffed gently.

"Waste of wind!" exclaimed Billy triumphantly.

"Not at all. It was necessary for me to expel my breath. I merely took advantage of an inevitable by-product."

The Hedge person was thus far impervious. He had an annoying faculty of turning a thrust to his own advantage.

There was an awful silence, during which Constance and Billy eyed their substitute father furtively.

"We will rise, if you please," he said.

The Brookes rose mechanically, as though it were useless to offer resistance. Besides, dinner was over.

"I should like to examine the other apartments on this floor," announced Hedge.

Constance, naturally assuming the lead, headed the procession out of the dining room. She touched a button at the entrance to an apartment across the hall from the library and flooded it with light. The efficiency man examined its rich furniture critically.

From a pocket he had produced a small note book and pencil in which he proceeded to make a few brief entries.

"What do you call this room?" he asked.

"Nothing particular," answered Constance. "It is used to receive guests, occasionally for dances or other entertainments."

"Parlor," observed Hedge, making a note.

"It is not a parlor," retorted Constance coldly. "Parlors are vulgar."

Nevertheless, the maker of notes made no erasures. Instead, he stepped across the room and paused on the threshold of a smaller apartment.

"A music-room," explained Constance. "Beyond is a conservatory."

Mr. Hedge made additional notes. "I wish to see the library again," he said.

The procession retraced its steps. Mr. Hedge paused at the hallway to extinguish the lights.

"It is customary to leave them burning," said Constance.

"Evidently." But he did not turn them on again.

The library, that apartment into which the efficiency man had made his original entrance, afforded him an extended opportunity for study. He inspected it more minutely than the rooms on the other side of the hall. He walked from end to end and side to side, stopping occasionally to examine a shelf of books.

He took note of the great table in the center and of two writing-desks that stood near a window.

He observed with a slight frown an innumerable number of electric bulbs, all glowing softly through their translucent glass. Several of them he turned out as he passed.

A Circassian-walnut phonograph arrested his attention.

"It plays tunes," explained Alice sweetly.

"You have music here?" asked Mr. Hedge.

"When we desire it," replied Constance.

"And in the music-room, also?"

"Certainly. I also have a piano upstairs."

He made another note.

"I suppose that is too much music," growled Billy, with a glance at his sisters.

"Exactly," said Mr. Hedge evenly.

He continued his exploration and presently arrived at a small button let into the wall.

"What is that for?" he inquired.

"It calls the butler."

The efficiency man pressed it, then took out his watch and kept his eye on the dial. He looked up as Horace entered the library and stood at attention.

"Thirty-two seconds," he observed. "Where did you come from, Horace?"

"I was in the dining room, sir."

"A distance of some twenty or twenty-five yards. You occupied thirty-two seconds in walking that distance. Now, while I do not require you to run, hereafter I shall expect you to cut your time in half. That will allow you sixteen seconds—ample. Please call the other servants and have them all report to me here at once."

It was a wide-eyed company that faced the efficiency man, with Horace standing a little in advance and at one side, like a non-commissioned officer. They started at the stranger with frank wonder written on their faces.

"All here?" asked Hedge with faint sarcasm.

There were eight in line.

"My own maid is away for the evening," said Constance.

"Very well; who are the others, please?"

"Horace, the butler, you know," began Constance, after a rebellious instant of hesitation. "Next to him is Mary, the cook; next to her, Elvira, the second cook; the next is Frank, the chauffeur; next are Minnie and Ruth, housemaids; next to Ruth is Fannie, the laundress. The one on the end is Giovanni, the furnace man."

Giovanni glowered as his name went down in the little book.

"This completes the list, then?" asked Mr. Hedge.

"I forgot; there is another," said Constance, counting. "George, the footman."

"He had an evening off, miss," explained Horace quickly.

"We will do without him for the present," said the efficiency man as he reached into his pocket and drew forth a document that was already ominously familiar to the three Brookes. "You will now give me your close attention."

GREAT SESQUI STADIUM OPENED AT PHILADELPHIA

The giant arena in the centre of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition site in Philadelphia was built in approximately 300 working days. It was completed and in use a month before the opening of the big exposition which celebrates the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. This photograph, made from the air, shows nearly 3,000 boys on the playing field, massed there for the dedicatory exercises on May 1 which yesterday opened the structure. In the stands are seated 10,000 persons watching the program. A group of 10,000 persons is a large crowd but they are only a "drop in the bucket" in the big Philadelphia stadium. The boys paraded on the field to the accompaniment of four ten bands and there went their drills and athletic exercises for the benefit of officials and parents.

News is the recording of something that has already happened. The notice of something that is to happen is either advertising or propaganda, yet some people fail to distinguish the difference.

An oil field worker of many years experience was in McLean one day this week and stated that our boom here will compare favorably with the older fields after their first well was brought in. He was surprised at the interest here and stated that in his opinion we will have one of the greatest oil fields yet discovered.

Our community is passing up one of the best assets it has in not making use of the city park. If this nice shady place was several miles out of town, we would see many cars headed that way each evening, but as it is, it is left for the tourist to use and praise as he sees fit. Of course the old tabernacle is an eyesore, out with some interest taken in placing some playground equipment and a wading pool for the children, we could have something to be proud of, with no expense to speak of.

The heavy traffic is damaging our city streets to such an extent that it is useless to try to drive a car in some places over five miles an hour, without risk to the springs as well as the comfort of the occupants. A visitor from a neighboring town drove into McLean one day last week and failed to slow up for the bumps, with the result that he had to have a broken spring repaired before leaving. If about four blocks could be paved as a starter, we could take care of this situation very easily.

GOOD HAWKS AND BAD

The red-shouldered hawk and the broad-winged hawk prey upon the destructive rodents of the farm, and they are enormously valuable to agriculture. The most destructive hawks we have over large areas of our Central and Southern states are the sharp-shinned and the Cooper's hawk. These hawks usually perch in a tree. In many places pole traps are set for the purpose of catching hawks. The broad-winged hawk and the red-shouldered hawk do not hide in a tree; they do not feel that it is necessary for them to secrete themselves. Along comes an enthusiastic, well-meaning but not well-informed game protector; he

Widow Remembers Massacre, But Hasn't Been West Since 1876

A little home in New York is the gray-haired woman sits with her eyes that are bright with a memory of the Civil War and sad tragedy of the western plains.

She was the wife of a soldier who learned 50 years ago that the life of a soldier must stand and die. He is Mrs. George A. Custer of the immortal general who down fighting with his men on the Little Big Horn just 50 years ago.

During the Civil War—in that Miss Elizabeth Bacon and the impetuous young West whose name was to go down in history forever as a symbol of the bravery of America's fighting men.

The Long March West
For the war in which Custer was honored for distinguished service at Gettysburg, Yellow Tavern, Fisher's Hill, Five Forks, Appomattox the couple took the journey west where Fate and hostile Sioux awaited.
They marched from Kansas to Abraham Lincoln on the Missouri where we were stationed," Custer recalled. Bismarck was the end of the Northern Pacific then the Seventh Cavalry (Custer's) was there to protect the road as it advanced. The Indians were greatly opposed to it and were many hostile tribes in the region.
"What a town Bismarck was! At the end of nowhere and full of the pomp of all kinds. Then as the road moved along the whole town would move along with it. It was when General Custer and he and the men of his command met death.

Two hundred men against 5000. Those were the terrific odds that Custer and the Seventh faced on the Little Big Horn when they fought and died to a man.

Lesson of Suffering

Mrs. Custer has kept the memory of that massacre in her heart for 50 years. But her heart is open, and she has been ready always with a response to others' sufferings.
"The way to go forward, to feel young and to keep young is to cast the bitterness out of one's life," she said recently.

"I learned this lesson through suffering, but it is a great truth. Steadfastness to ideals and a desire to work are the balance wheels of life.

"Since the late war I have thought more than ever of what true patriots the pioneers were. It was a wonderful thing to have done. It was a great honor to have had something to do with the making of this country.

Mrs. Custer has been invited several times to take part in the observance of the massacre at Hardin, Mont. But she has never been back to Montana since that day in 1876.
"I love the western spirit that is keeping the day sacred," she said. "But I couldn't go."

Hardin marked the event this year. At the observance for the first time the two Indian tribes, Sioux and Crow, bitter enemies since the memory of man, pledged themselves to brotherhood and peace.
Their vow to peace was a tribute to a great woman.

A Reserve Bank Account is a sum held in reserve, and is separate and distinct from the regular checking account. Such a fund, held in reserve, is a positive guarantee that the future will be provided for. A reserve may soon be built up by putting into it a certain percentage from each deposit made at the bank. This account—held in reserve—and not subject to regular check, is a constant safeguard for the future.

WARREN G. HARDING SAID:
"Perhaps I shall best express my opinion of the value of Life Insurance when I tell you that I took out my first policy as a youth of nineteen and have been writing new policies ever since that time until four years ago. I have found them a pretty heavy burden upon my resources at times, particularly in my earlier years, but I have always found them to be very comforting possessions, and if I had my life to live over again I would seek to take more rather than less."
