Did You Ever See Anyone in a More Embarrassing Predicament?

Water & Light Bills Must Be Paid by Tenth

At a recent meeting of the City Council, the water and light superintendent was ordered to discontinue service to all patrons who have not paid their current month's bill by the 10th of the following month. Under this rule service will be cut off on the 11th of the month without further notice when a bill is unpaid.

It was also ordered that no more service in either water or lights be furnished patrons outside the city limits.

A motion was made to lease the city ice plant during the months of November and December for $115 per month to the Amarillo Poultry and Egg Co. and the Farmers Produce Co. of McLean.

Ordinances were passed covering arson reward, traffic stops, U turns and gas connections. These ordinances will be found on another page of this paper.

RAMSDALL POSTOFFICE MAY BE DISCONTINUED

The postoffice at Ramsdell has been ordered discontinued after Oct. 31st, when patrons will be served by rural route out of Shamrock.

Ramsdell citizens are indignant over the proposed move and have circulated a petition asking that the postoffice department reconsider the action, leaving the postal service as it is at present.

SCHOOLMEN IN ACCIDENT

Profs. Geo. Tummins and A. B. Chancey suffered minor injuries Saturday when their car was run into by another at the blind corner on the highway just east of town.

Mr. Tummins' car was proceeding slowly and was not damaged as badly as the other car that was being driven fast by men thought to be fugitives from justice. This car was abandoned by the drivers, who have not been heard from since.

The car was later identified as a stolen car by the owner at Borger.

Lefors Well 500 Barrel Producer

The Roxana Findley No. 1, 1 1/2 miles north of Lefors, struck the oil sand at 3018 feet Monday, and now has 2000 feet of oil standing in the well.

It is now a sure 500 barrel producer with the bit only six inches in the sand, and work began Wednesday on two 5000-barrel tanks for storage. When the tanks are completed the test will be deepened.

This oil was struck twenty feet below sea level, upsetting all theories that oil-bearing sand is not to be found below sea level.

Dr. A. W. Coffield of Lefors was in McLean Wednesday with a quart sample of the oil, which tests 42 gravity and has no sulphur or water intermixed.

No gas has been encountered in this well, which leads to the hope that the mother pool has been discovered. However, this will not be known until the well is finally brought in.

COTTON GINNED SHOWS DECREASE OVER LAST YEAR

According to government reports, only 122 bales of cotton were ginned in Gray county up to Oct. 1st, as compared with 133 bales last season.

CITIZENS BANK SHIPS FEEDER HOGS TO McLEAN

A carload of feeder hogs was shipped to McLean last week and sold to farmers at actual cost.

This shipment was made from St. Joe, Mo., by the Citizens State Bank, and the hogs averaged 70 pounds each and cost 15c per pound laid down.

C. C. Bogan, cashier of the bank, says that other cars will be shipped in the same way if a demand is shown for them.

The present price of feed would indicate a nice profit in feeding hogs this fall.

Too Much Efficiency

By E. J. Rath

Begin Here Today

JOHN W. BROOKE, widower and hardware magnate, arranges with a firm of efficiency engineers to manage his home for two months while he is out of the city. His three grown children, Constance, Billy and Alice, are unaware of this arrangement. Not until

H. HEDGE, efficiency engineer, appears on the scene do they realize the enormity of their father's digression. Hedge has cut off Billy's allowance because he refuses to work. Constance was reinstated when she, on the day after Hedge stopped her elopement with Tommy Treadwell, decided, for reasons best known to herself, to become his secretary.

One notable success in Constance's skill was the purchase of a complete outfit of wearing apparel with Hedge's personal approval. Today Constance has found the private drawer in Hedge's desk unlocked. Examination shows that Hedge is planning to write a book with "The Idle Rich" as the subject. She is filled with consternation when she finds that Hedge has decided to make her the subject of two chapters—before and after "the application of scientific control." Constance has ordered Horace, the butler, to produce Hedge immediately.

Now Go on with the Story

The efficiency man was prompt, and evidently expectant. When he walked briskly into the room he was smiling happily. He knew that no matter how coy or whimsical the young lady might be, she could not turn off daylight by pressing a button. H. Hedge told himself that the moment was at hand.

He stopped abruptly as he saw her, and there was swift questioning in his look. Constance was pointing with a rigid arm at the manuscript on the desk.

"Did you write that?" she asked grimly.

He followed the direction of her gesture, readily identified the manuscript at a glance, and nodded.

"And you dare even to think that you are going to publish it?"

Constance had abandoned all of the carefully plotted campaign. No more stealth now; it was war in the open.

"I've been thinking of that very thing," he answered coolly, with a swift change to his most efficient manner.

"I forbid you!"

"I think you are attempting to reverse our positions, Miss Brooke."

He decided that it would not be fitting, under the circumstances, to say "Connie."

The type of the idle rich surveyed her with a stabbing glance of scorn.

"My father will deal with you," she said in a tense voice.

"Let's not talk about that. It's futile. And please remember that, to all intents and purposes, for the time being, I am your father. And by what authority do you examine my personal papers?"

Constance did not condescend to him. She eyed him for several seconds from head to foot, and to his credit it must be admitted that he withstood the scrutiny with courage.

Suddenly she burst into laughter; but it was not of the friendly, mirth-provoking kind that invites accompaniment.

"What a fool you are!" she exclaimed.

H. Hedge stiffened visibly, but made no comment.

"And I'm the person who made a fool out of you!"

he laughed again harshly.

"Perhaps you'd better explain," he suggested icily.

"I will. That's exactly what I'm going to do—explain."

She pointed again to the manuscript.

"I'm a 'perfect type,' am I?" she said. "And I have a 'fairly good brain.' Thank you so much for that, Mr. Hedge. I'm idle and extravagant—or was. That's the funny part—was. I'm to have two whole chapters—one before and the other after taking. What a generous amount of space! I'm going to be a terrible lesson to the American public. I suppose, of course, you intend to use my full name?"

She paused to laugh again. The efficiency man remained impassive.

"I'm going to be made famous in a most wonderful book. I'm going to show the 'gradual influence of reform.' Delightful! And you are the reformer—the 'dominant mind.' Even I am not hopeless—it says so in your book. Already I show the effects of 'rigid discipline.' Oh, it's exquisite! Have I really reformed, Mr. Hedge?"

"Until just now you have shown gratifying progress," he answered. Constance's laughter overcame her again.

"And you believe—that?"

"I—er—had no reason to doubt it."

"You poor, poor creature!"

The efficiency man was mystified and beginning to appear uncomfortable. Was it possible he had made a miscalculation? The only thing that was very clear in his mind was an impression of a spirited and attractively angry young woman.

"Let me tell you something, Mr. Hedge, and then you will see what a fool you have been. You didn't know I was fighting you all the time, did you? You thought because I was willing to come in here and work that I had surrendered. Oh, it's rich! Just because I gave up making an open fight, you thought it was all over. Oh, you were so much easier than I thought!"

"See Here's for your book!"

She regarded him with a pitying smile.

"Why, I was just playing with you—for what I could get out of you!" she exclaimed. "And I got it, too. All sorts of things—hats, and shoes, and gowns and everything that you'd been saying I couldn't have. And I've made you break your rules a dozen times, until it has become positively monotonous."

A dull red crept into the cheeks of H. Hedge, but Constance was remorseless. The two chapters on the perfect type had proved to be the final turning point. She was burning her bridges now.

"Just playing with you," she repeated. "And your whole wonderful system went to smash under it. And you thought you were reforming me! It was so easy to lead you, too. You never even suspected. You were so sure that you wrote it all down, so it could be put in a book. A book! I think I'll write one myself. How would you like to be the hero of my book, Mr. Efficiency Man?"

Hedge made no answer.

"Well, why don't you say something?" she demanded.

"I'm waiting for you to get through, Miss Brooke."

She made a sudden dash for the table and seized the manuscript notes in her hands, waving them aloft with a hysterical gesture.

"See!" she cried. "Here's for your book!"

She tore the pages across and tossed them into the open fire. An instant later the diary followed them. The efficiency man did not make an effort to stay her hands.

For a full half-minute she faced him, her bosom heaving, her eyes alight with excitement.

"There! That's the end of that!" she exclaimed. "You'll never put me in a book! I—I—"

Her voice broke abruptly, and she was shaken by a tempest of weeping.

Opera Singer Outdraws Athlete

Marlon Talley (left) and Gertrude Ederle were rival attractions on the same night recently in Des Moines, Ia. The 19-year-old prima donna drew 5300 auditors, while Miss Ederle, channel swimmer, showed her strokes to a crowd of about 700.

H. Hedge surveyed her quietly and without emotion.

"Take a seat," he said sharply. "As soon as you get through with that sob stuff, I'm going to do the talking. And it's going to be some talk!"

Constance seated herself, not because of any command from the efficiency man, but in response to a sudden collapse of belligerency. She was terrified at what she had done. She had tossed another person's treasures into the fire without so much as asking leave or serving notice; and the reaction was abrupt. The calmness of H. Hedge frightened her.

Leaning limply forward in the desk chair, she buried her face in her arms and continued to sob.

The efficiency man watched her for a moment, alternately frowning and smiling. He had promised her a talk, but he was uncertain about the beginning of it, even though he had a clear notion of the ending.

"Miss Brooke!" he snapped. She did not look up.

"Are you listening, Miss Brooke?"

There was a faint nod, although she did not raise her head from the desk.

"You'd better listen," he said grimly. "Because everything is going to eternal smash in the next ten minutes. This is Judgment Day, and we are going to get what is coming to both of us—pronto!"

Still she did not stir. But she was listening in spite of her sobs.

"Pronto means all-of-a-sudden," he added.

There was a brief pause in which he devoted more study to the coil of brown hair.

"All bets are off, Miss Brooke. Do you hear that? Bets off—Miss Brooke!"

cient for the immediate present." Constance's sobs were becoming less frequent. Her ears caught every word and her curiosity was rising rapidly.

"H. Wellington Hedge," he repeated inclusively. "I have killed the 'Henry' and substituted an 'H.' You will presently understand why. I have here in my card case certain cards reading, 'H. Hedge, E.' There—they are in the fire."

What have you to say to that—Miss Brooke?"

She had nothing to say.

Friends New and Old
New friends are like a feeble flame
That only flares when fanned,
For we forget their very name

Old friends are like the essence drawn

Their fragrance fills the room.
So, boys and girls of this wide world,
To the old friends first be true,
And when the new friends become old
Then they will be true to you.

If anyone reads this ad who is not acquainted with McLean real estate values, the writer wishes to put his reputation as a real estate investor and builder of 25 years' experience, who has studied conditions from Illinois to California and Florida and back, that we have picked McLean as the safest place to make real money in real estate without wild speculation.
The growth of general conditions in the Panhandle will keep the present growth of McLean going for five years without an oil boom, but anyone will have to shut his eyes and stop his mind from working to keep from seeing that this will finally be a real city because of the oil field near at hand. We advise everyone who wants a home in a good town with good schools and everything else to match, or who wants to make some money on the rise of real estate values to get busy at once and buy something.

With Present city officials and everyone else favorable to a commission form of government, it should be easy to secure signers to a petition for an election.

Some of these days (McLean will experience a typhoid epidemic, and when some half hundred citizens have died, the rest of us will awake to the necessity of enforcing sanitary regulations.

With brick and asphalt paving over concrete base, the condition of the weather has nothing to do with the work of construction, and traffic may operate over it as soon as laid. This is an item worth remembering, if work on the paving could be started this fall.

Gray county cannot afford to be the only link in the Postal Highway that is unpaved. A bond election should result in a favorable vote. We are fortunate that the road is a Federal highway and the county will only have to pay for one-third of the paving.

There is not a man near McLean but who believes that we will have a full-fledged oil field here by next spring. Believing this, we should make every effort to get ready for the boom that is sure to come. Sitting still until the boom is on us will be an expensive matter.

The city ordinance against chickens running at large apply the year round and not only a few months during the summer, as some seem to think. The man who is trying to have a lawn, flowers and garden should not be forced to hail his neighbor into court to keep chickens from depredate on his property.

It is a strange thing that we will all obey the traffic laws when away from home and expect to do as we please on our home streets. The new traffic ordinance recently passed by the city council should be enforced to the letter. We like to prate of living in a new age and we might as well become accustomed to doing in a new way.

The buy-a-bale movement to help the cotton situation is child's play. Even if such a movement could affect the price, there could be no permanent help in it. There is only one way to prevent the recurrence of this fall's overproduction and that is for every cotton grower to treat cotton as a cash crop only, and plant just a few acres each year. The man who has plenty of other crops, together with chickens and livestock about the place, will be affected but little with the price of cotton.

An idea was advanced by C. S. Rice this week that would be a good solution to our tabernacle-fair building proposition. Mr. Rice says that the old lumber could be used to erect a two-story sanitarium in the park that would be a credit to our town. The need of such an institution is apparent to all and the actual money needed to finish the building would be only nominal.

There will be opposition to any plan of selling either building, and this idea should be thoroughly investigated by the Chamber of Commerce directors.

News from Lefors

Lefors is taking on an air of industry. Gone is the silence which existed when there was nothing but a cattle trail coming in and going out. Peacefulness reigned for time immemorial in its sleepy and quiet way, but now the air resounds with the music of the saw and hammer thud thud of the high-powered gas engines as they tap the bountiful supply of water which is to be found in the little valley of the north fork of Red river.

Dr. A. W. Coffield has recently returned from a trip to Oklahoma. The doctor reports conditions pretty bad in Oklahoma, due to so much rain.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. M. Clardy spent Sunday and Monday of this week in Clinton, Okla., visiting their daughter, Inabel, who is attending school there.

The Bathroom

The bathroom is the home's health room—not a good place to economize.

The finest type of fixtures is the best economy in furnishing or remodeling the bathroom. They're kept clean more easily, and they last longer.

In many a house, economy was practiced in selecting the bathroom fixtures. If you are building, or remodeling, don't fail to have the bathroom in keeping with the rest of the house. KEEPING IT AT HOME

The Shamrock Texan cites an incident that has happened in Wellington often. It relates that a farmer recently went to Shamrock on business, part of which was to send an order to a large mail order concern for four automobile tires and tubes. A local service station proprietor, seeing the order by chance, offered to sell him the tires and tubes for the same price and guarantee the quality to be as good or better. The deal was made, the man went home satisfied and the money was kept in Shamrock. Wonder if that service station proprietor realizes that it pays to tell people about the articles he has for sale and the price at which he will sell them?—Wellington Leader.

HOW TO HELP MAKE A BETTER NEWSPAPER

First of all, give the editor the news; he wants it. Give it to him, even though it doesn't get in the paper. He hasn't time always to tell you why some piece of news is not used; but ten to one he had a perfectly good and impersonal reason. Give him the news, even though you may not be especially interested in it. Some folks never think to give the editor news except when they are concerned in it one way or another.

Second, don't give him a piece of news and tell him you want it printed just as it is written. There is a right and a wrong way to do even a simple little thing like writing an article for a country paper. One editor had to be taken down because he printed every piece of news just as it was handed in—spelling, punctuation and all—and printed it with the name of the person who gave it to him.

Third, don't try to play a joke through the paper unless you explain it to the editor. A thing in old type looks a lot different from a thing repeated by word of mouth, when the voice, the facial expression and a gesture perhaps help to show its meaning.

Fourth, don't worry for fear the editor is making too much money; you should want him to be prosperous. He can and will give you a better paper. He will be less likely to have to compromise with his conscience over certain kinds of advertising. And, anyway, he can't make a big fortune out of the paper; he will be lucky if he can keep it going.

Fifth, be ready to tell your editor when something in the paper pleases you. Once in a while you tell your preacher he has a good sermon; so tell the editor the same about his paper.

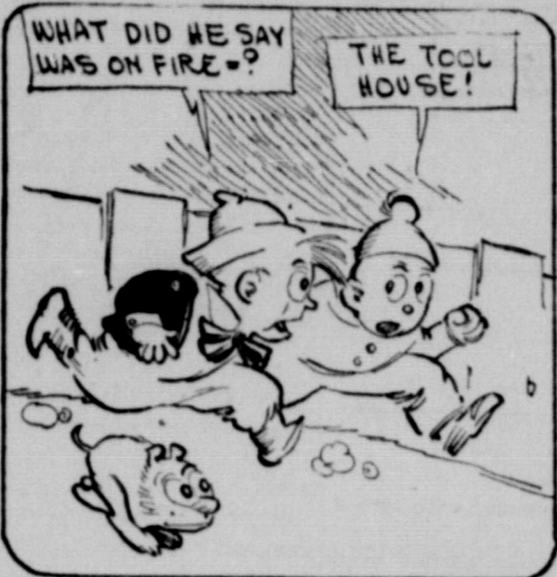

Sixth, get your copy to him early. Take it in for next week the day after the previous publication day if you can. It takes time to set type and to make a paper. Did you ever wonder what the editor did all the time between publication days? You wouldn't if you were a country publisher yourself.

Lastly, go in some day when the paper is being printed. Go in several times during the day and you will have more of a realization of what a job it is to make a country newspaper.—Cornwall (Ont.) Freeholder.

Gold From Silver Nitrate! Chemist Insists It Can Be Done

GOLD more plentiful than copper. Monetary standards of the whole world shattered to bits. The old fable of streets paved with gold actually come true.

These are some of the predictions of Thomas G. Cockings, 78-year-old alchemist of Los Angeles.

"I am making gold," says Cockings. "I am making it by a chemical and electrical process of treating chemically pure silver nitrate. For 32 years I have been trying to produce gold that could be made on a commercial basis. And I've succeeded."

Cockings protests the claim of C. F. Adams of Dayton, O. that he had made gold from a baser metal.

"Adams used mercury," he says, "and mercury contains gold. All he is doing is recovering a residue I use silver nitrate—which contains no gold—as my base. My process is transmutation. I first get signs of copper, then of lead, then nickel and finally gold."

"I have carried the process farther and secured platinum. And if carried still further, I believe radium would be the result."

"Making gold is nothing new. Millions of dollars' worth was made in Solomon's time. The walls of houses and public buildings were lined with it. But when Solomon's people died they took the secret with them."

"I have perfected my process and

Thomas G. Cockings in his laboratory

am netting $2,325 profit from every pound of silver nitrate used." Cockings plans to build a large laboratory for the commercial manufacture of synthetic gold. Scientists nowadays say "hosh!"

PRIZE FIGHTING DISGRACES AMERICA

The American people can derive little comfort or credit from the fact that while $2,000,000 was paid to see a professional prize fight, calls for funds to alleviate the suffering of thousands in the unprecedented calamity that befell Florida, went practically unheeded. Four days after the catastrophe less money had been subscribed for relief than was paid to see an exhibition characterized by brutality, betting and blood.

The incident has not gone by unnoticed, nor has it made prize fighting more popular. Indeed, it has made such affairs disgusting.

The Clearwater (Florida) Herald believes that this last affair will be the "handwriting on the wall for the ring 'sport' as now conducted."

"The fight game," says the Herald, "has been in bad odor for a long time. There is something repugnant at the spectacle of hundreds of thousands of dollars tossed into the laps of two unlettered bruisers. And the fact that the 'fight' was a fight, a brutal, savage, gory, elemental struggle of brute force is likely to arouse the pulpits, certain sections of the press and perhaps a great many citizens to demand that an end shall be put to this sort of thing."

"It is difficult to see what respect the Tunney-Dempsey affray was upon any higher level than the detested bull fight."

INCOMPLETE

The grocer's daughter went to a masquerade ball and met her father there.

"Hullo, dad!" she said, "how do you like my costume? I'm a salad."

"It's nice, my dear," replied her father. "But haven't you forgotten the dressing?"—Progressive Grocer.

EXTRACTS—AND EXTRACTS

Flavoring extracts are of two kinds—those made for flavoring foods and those made for flavoring the breath of alcohol drinkers. The first kind contains alcohol in only the necessary quantity for the preservation of the flavoring essence. The other contains alcohol largely, with as small a quantity of flavoring essence or coloring matter as will enable it to be passed as a flavoring extract. The alcohol content is plainly marked on the bottle because the pure food laws require it. The carton is always marked. The percentage of alcohol varies from 42 to 50 per cent. The latter is in great demand, of course, by those whose craving for alcohol, real or fancied, leads them to drink any old concoction offered to them.

A grocery merchant in Childress told us a few weeks ago that he believed home brew, made from the molts on sale in a number of places, had practically displaced flavoring extracts, saying that the two evils he believed the home brew the lesser.

The same merchant told us recently that he had been convinced that he was selling the wrong kind of flavoring extract—one with too small a percentage of alcohol. And he had been convinced, too, that its use had not decreased. His conclusions as to the amount of high-powered extracts sold in Childress were appalling. If they are true, there are grocer merchants in Childress who surely do not realize that they are doing to their fellow man in selling the stuff to them, humanity's consideration ought to make any grocery man unwilling to sell flavoring extracts that contain 5 per cent alcohol—or any other amount of any kind. And the grocer who has occasion to buy extracts should look well to the kind of extracts their grocery men offer them, and not contribute the penny to the nefarious traffic in the purchase of an extract of a high alcohol content.

And, in the name of humanity and decency, The Post appeals to all grocery men of Childress to refuse to sell an extract that has more than the necessary percentage of alcohol. Don't be parties to the encouragement of depraved appetites. It is bad enough for any man to buy to drink straight whiskey or some brew. But the drinking of extracts or drug store bitters and their decoctions for their alcohol content is freighted with the ruin of health and happiness. Would that every grocery man in Childress would promise himself that, as far as he is concerned, he will not sell another bottle of extract that was bottled for the benefit of a thirsty man. He will sell bona-fide flavoring extracts for legitimate uses only.—Childress Post.

IN BUSINESS SINCE '85!

Illinois Woman Manages Two Farms

WOMEN in business! Some think that is a new idea, but it dates back at least to 1885, when Mrs. Amanda Johnston took over the management of two farms in Illinois.

Today Mrs. Johnston—now 87—continues to manage those farms, totaling 300 acres, and sell the produce at a profit.

She comes to California every fall "just to see how western folks do." Mrs. Johnston has just completed her sixty-third journey from her Illinois home, Roseville, Ill., to San Diego, Calif. Hale and hearty, she travels alone, spurs the attentions of a porter, and swings her bags off the train like a woman many years younger.

In Corn Belt

For 41 years she has made these journeys, always alone. She missed a few winters in the west because of business depressions on the farm. Her farms are in the heart of the Illinois corn belt. She directs her workmen in the planting, care and harvesting—and she personally sells her output and pays off her hands. Work has not made her a withered old woman. She is bright and has an active mind.

"Some people think women have no chance in this world to do constructive work," she says. "When my husband died in the 50s I knew I could do one of two things—quit or carry on."

"I prefer to be active, as any normal woman would wish. It really is easier for any woman to work and keep both her hands and brain active than to retire to tabby's corner by the fire."

A "Manufacturer"

"I consider myself a manufacturer. I make and sell corn. Some women make a fine home but they don't sell it to anyone. Homemaking is as much a profession as doctoring, but women have not learned to sell their services even to their husbands."

"I help to harvest our crops and expect to do so a good many years yet. All women should have that attitude toward life and they'd be much happier."

Mrs. Amanda Johnston

Mrs. Johnston has proved her ability in the agricultural world and she conducts her two farms on a strictly business basis. That's why she's able to spend the winter in the west, she says.
