Why the kickoff, any way? Why not start by giving the receiving team the ball on, say, its own 25yard line, first down and ten to go? Probably the average return of about the 25-yard line. Nothing is gained by the kickoff except to add spectacularity to the play and cause injury to a good many play-

It is true that the kickoff is about the most spectacular and thrilling of all the set plays, but the flying wedge would save a good many broken bones, but it would likewise take most of the glitter out of the play. Abolishing the kickoff altogether would be simpler. In the old days play was started at midfield in pretty much the same manner as polo is startedby giving each team an equal nce to get possession of the ball.

Gridiron fatalities this year are fifty per cent greater than in any previous year-just why, nobody knows for sure. But that something should be done about it is pretty wel lagreed among lovers of the
