WHAT A HIGH SCHOOL EDUCATION SHOULD GIVE

A high school education gives first of all the foundation of any higher education...

High school is the place where ambition is started to a great extent...

It is true that many students leave high school having accomplished very little...

We get from high school just what we put into it.

McLEAN HIGH SCHOOL DEFEATED BY GROOM FRIDAY

Playing their first game away from home this season, the McLean Tigers were defeated by Groom by a score of 6 to 0.

Groom was first to receive, and after losing the ball several times, plunged across the line for a touch-down early in the first quarter.

McLean showed up well in the game, but were not up to their usual standard.

Starting line-ups table with columns for Groom, Position, and McLean.

The Parent-Teacher Association

met Thursday, Oct. 11. Plans were made for the Halloween circus, according to Miss Lillian Park. The lesson was taken out of "The Child, His Nature and His Needs," and was led by Mrs. E. H. Henry. The following program was enjoyed by all present: Prayer, led by Rev. B. W. Wilkins, pastor of the Methodist church. Following was a piano solo by Miss Verla Hibler. A short discussion was made on the child. A business meeting followed.

GRADE SCHOOL NEWS

The grade school had their examinations last Thursday and Friday. The children worked very hard and the teachers are expecting good grades. Miss Lillian Park stated last week.

"WHEN A FELLER NEEDS A FRIEND"

Our six weeks exams are over. Some of us have won and lost. But we're going to stick to M. H. S. Regardless of the cost.

But the cost sure is paid for. When you're taking an exam. And your thoughts are very distant. And you think you're such a "ham."

And those exams they give us. Do you think they'll ever end? And sometimes when we take 'em. Is when a feller needs a friend. —El Poetico Estudiante.

FORTUNE HUNTING

By Cleone West CHAPTER 3

Bradford was unable to believe his own ears. Never before had any man dared dispute his word. Always before his determination to have his own way overcame other men until they submitted to him. Now to think of this man, such an uncultured human, to say such a thing to him. Anger filled Bradford's mind and the warm blood began running through his veins. He attempted to rise, but only to find himself pushed back again by a rough brown hand and a voice sharply saying, "Stay where you are. Another attempt to rise and it will be your last."

Bradford was settled back to his former place and lay facing this ugly creature. Just then steps were heard coming down the hall toward Bradford's room. The captor heard these, and turned his head toward the door. Now was Bradford's chance. In a flash he grabbed the gun. There was a struggle, a flash of fire! That was all.

As Joan opened the door of her grandfather's room, a cloud of smoke came pouring through the door, a most stifling her. She was almost knocked down by an ugly black figure as it darted past her and out of the hall window. She was so amazed that she could only stand still, nor did she regain her senses till the smoke had cleared away and she caught sight of her grandfather piled in a heap by the bed.

Fear gripped her throat as she stood swaying to and fro. She tried to scream, but she could not. She tried to move, but it seemed as though she was frozen to the floor. She tried again; this time she succeeded in taking an unsteady step forward. At last she reached her grandfather and gently knelt beside him as the sobs shook her body.

How long she had been there, she did not know. It seemed ages to her. At last her grandfather's faithful old servant entered and gently placed him upon his bed and led Joan to her room. The family doctor and nurse were summoned at once.

When the doctor arrived and examined Bradford, he stated that he was not in a serious condition. There was only an ugly wound in the right shoulder. The doctor departed, giving the nurse his orders and wishing Bradford a peaceful afternoon.

That afternoon Bradford asked to speak with Joan alone. When she had entered and was seated and the nurse had left the room, Bradford told her of the will and of the visitor.

Joan protested and tried to persuade her grandfather to destroy the will rather than endanger his life. What was a silly old will compared with a human life, any way? However, Joan's pleadings had no effect upon Bradford. He only cautioned her to keep a sharp look-out all the time and that the visitor would not leave a stone unturned until he got the will.

Bradford seemed to be doing fine until the third day, when a sudden change came over him. His shoulder was unusually painful, and it seemed as though a million mill wheels were grinding inside his head. About four o'clock he could stand it no longer, so he called for the doctor. When the doctor arrived, he was very much alarmed at Bradford's condition. He could not imagine the cause of it.

By morning Bradford was delirious. Nothing would quiet him until a detective was stationed in the house for protection. Bradford passed from sad to worse so that by the seventh day he was as good as dead. The crisis had come! He would either get better by night or he would die. The doctor was very puzzled and had done all he could.

By the next morning Bradford was a corpse. Everyone in the large house was through into a terrible state of excitement. It was a cry of his servants but would have risked his life for his master. Everywhere there was weeping.

Before noon, many people had arrived to offer their sympathy to Joan. By noon the large grounds were thronged with people, some who were friends, others enemies, and some who only came to satisfy their curiosity. Among them was one whom no one had ever seen before. Surely he did not come to offer his sympathy. No one there knew Not even Joan. Why had he? Who was he? Who was he? Who was his purpose? (To be continued)

THE TRUSTFUL CANDIDATE

"I am willing," said the candidate after he had hit the table a blow with his fist, "to trust people."

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Jim Stanley, wealthy New York business man, unable to concentrate in his dictation to his secretary, has the machine taken to his home, intending to finish his work there. Rollin Waterman, his business partner and closest friend, comes in and tells her she (Nina) has been arranged—but by Stanley. The girl comes to determine which of them is the real villain, first ask her to marry him. Waterman wins.

CHAPTER II.—Nina Morgan, Waterman's secretary, also has her mind made up. She tells her father, who is a doctor, and resents Waterman's plan to marry her. Waterman tells her he is practically penniless and must make a job marriage. He urges Nina to go to her father and tell her she (Nina) has been arranged—but by Stanley. The girl comes to determine which of them is the real villain, first ask her to marry him. Waterman wins.

CHAPTER III.—Doris admits to her father her interest in both Stanley and Waterman, and is sure they are both in love with her, but she is unable to pass up her mind which to marry.

CHAPTER IV.—Nina goes to Doris with her story, securing a promise that Doris will not reveal the source of her information. She convinces Doris of Stanley's duplicity, and leaves her broken hearted, and realizing that it is Stanley she really has loved.

CHAPTER V.—Waterman that evening asks Doris to marry him, and she, believing Stanley unworthy, accepts him. According to the arrangement, Stanley appears, to learn his girl has been married. He accepts the situation, and as a wedding present gives her a share of the business to Waterman, but day he arranges with his secretary, Frank Wilson, to take charge of the other business interests. He is going to India.

CHAPTER VI.—Doris, unable to put Stanley completely out of her mind, and Waterman part of Nina's story, she promises to "try" to find the girl, that full collaboration can be made. Waterman is deeply in debt to a gambler, Bronfield, and the latter promises payment. Waterman quiets him by his news of his engagement to the wealthy Doris Colby.

CHAPTER VII.—Waterman makes a casual arrangement with Nina which assures her silence.

CHAPTER VIII.—Frank Wilson, who has long been aware of Waterman's crooked business methods, and his debts, sees Nina at the wedding and vague suspicions are aroused in his mind. He leaves Waterman's employ, and later begins to importune Doris for money, ostensibly for the "business" but actually for gambling purposes.

CHAPTER IX.—At Waterman's urging Doris wears her magnificent diamond necklace, which had been her mother's, to the opera. That night she disappears. Doris's father enlists Bronfield's aid in tracing the stolen necklace, and the gambler's wide underworld acquaintance makes him a likely party to furnish information about the gem. He is apparently satisfied with the results of Bronfield's efforts.

"At first, yes—there was such a lot to do about your withdrawal from the bank. But for some months I have already seen him."

"Any gossip about him?"

"No, no. I'm his friend—you can see that."

"Well, sir, there's no doubt he's a pretty well-nicked in the street and, well, it's only a matter of course, but—"

"Time on, come on."

"I know he's been drinking a good deal, but he's got to his feet, walked to the window, and stood looking out. I'm afraid you never really liked him, did you, Frank?"

suggestion to make as to the construction of four scenarios.

"And what's that?"

"I don't like the name of your villain."

"You ought to, it's your own."

"Frank," cried Stanley, "stop that thing, stop it!"

Wilson obeyed. In amazement the two looked at each other. Presently Stanley, much puzzled, remarked, "That's not my voice."

"It was at first, sir."

"Yes, yes, I know—but after that somebody else spoke. What on earth do you make of it?"

"I don't know."

"What I mean is, after the dictation, after it said 'very sincerely yours,' it spoke in another voice."

"Two other voices, I thought, sir."

"Yes, I thought so, too. Did you recognize them?"

"I thought I did."

"Whose voices were they?"

"Well, sir, I should say that one of them was Mr. Waterman's."

"Yes, and the other voice was a woman's—didn't you think so?"

"Yes, sir, I did."

"Did you recognize it?"

"I think, sir, it was the voice of Nina Morgan."

small it barely gives me a decent living. Stanley owns the works, he's loaded with the money—always has been. What's worse, I owe everybody in the world. I'm short a lot of stocks in the bull market—I'll be wiped out tomorrow if the rise goes on. In short I'm all in. Only one thing can save me—marriage to a rich woman. And Doris Colby is just that—a very rich woman. Now you stick by me, and I'll stick—"

Silence fell upon the room like a blow.

"Go on, go on, go on!" growled Stanley, grinding his teeth, but the secretary answered:

"That's all there is. The cylinder was used up."

There was a long silence before Wilson heard, in a voice he scarcely recognized: "I can't believe it. I can't believe my own ears. Rollin, my friend!"

"It's clear enough, sir," said Wilson quickly. "Nina Morgan went to Miss Colby and told her this vile slander. Miss Colby turned you down and married Waterman."

"I can't believe it," murmured Stanley. "Even now I can't believe it. And yet it accounts for so many things little looks and phrases that passed between those two in the office. They meant nothing to me then, and now they all come back with a new and terrible meaning." He cudgeled his memory. "Yes, yes—and that last night—the last time I saw her. When I entered the room Rollin and she were alone. She had just accepted him. I thought then she looked queer—not at all like a happy girl. She passed it off, but she was queer just the same, and no wonder. That vile woman had just been there telling her this terrible tale about me, making me a monster in her eyes."

He tossed both hands in the air, and cried, "By G—d, I'll not sit down under this!" He crossed the room in three strides, seized Wilson by the elbow with a grip that hurt and said, "Look here, tell me everything that you know about him—I mean, since I went away."

At last Wilson had his opportunity, and he used it. Sunk into the depths of the big chair, Stanley, his face buried in his hands, heard him to the end. Then he spoke. To Wilson it was the voice of a stranger.

"In short, he's betrayed her as he betrayed me. I knew something was wrong when I saw her last night, but I never dreamed—how could I have dreamed?—it was like this, Frank. What's become of that girl?" he cried with a sudden burst of energy, "the Morgan girl, Nina Morgan, d—n her!"

"I don't know, sir. She never came back to the office after you went, I suppose he set her up an establishment somewhere."

"On Doris' money?"

"I suppose so."

"And you've never seen her since?"

"No, sir, not to speak to."

"Find her! Find her! Spare no thought!"

Wilson smiled also. "I see, sir—we're two conspirators."

He shoved the cylinder back a bit, pressed the starting lever, and these were the words they heard:

"Glad to discuss the matter at length and in detail. Very sincerely yours."

tionless for a time. Presently he furnished in his pocket, produced a letter, and read in a sinking voice:

"Dear old man: I haven't seen you for so long. Come and lunch with me on Wednesday. We've lots to talk about. Faithfully yours, Rollin."

"Faithfully mine," he muttered. He returned the letter to his pocket and sat with glowing eyes staring into space, seeing nothing—thinking—thinking. Minutes he sat like that. At length Wilson approached him, put one hand upon his shoulder, and said: "It's getting late, sir—let's go."

ONE NEWSPAPER ENOUGH

There is usually a false idea of the demands of a community for a second or third newspaper. Such demand doesn't exist. There may be a demand for a better newspaper than the one in the field, but that would only indicate the owner ought to sell out or get new blood into the business before it decays. Better newspapers, not more of them, are the demand of the time.—Inland Printer.

To the 5000 who daily become owners of the new Ford car

THE service obligation of the Ford Motor Company and its dealer organization is now growing at the rate of 5000 cars a day. It is to these new car owners that this message is addressed. The new Ford is a remarkably fine car for one that costs so little. It is simple in design, constructed of the finest materials, and built to unusually close measurements. These are the reasons it performs so wonderfully. These are also the reasons its service requirements are so few and the up-keep cost so low. When you receive your new car, the dealer will explain the simple little things that should be attended to at regular intervals to insure the best performance. He will also tell you something of his own facilities for doing this work promptly and at small cost. With the purchase of your car, you are entitled to Free Inspection Service by your dealer at 500, 1000 and 1500 miles. This service is due you and we urge you to take full advantage of it. Proper care during this breaking-in period means a great deal to the life of your car.

Included in the Free Inspection Service is a check-up of the battery, the generator charging rate, the distributor, the carburetor adjustment, lights, brakes, shock absorbers, tire inflation and steering gear. The engine oil is also changed and chassis lubricated. No charge whatever is made for labor or materials incidental to this inspection service, except where repairs are necessary because of accident, neglect, or misuse. The labor of changing the engine oil and lubricating the chassis is also free, although a charge is made for the new oil. We believe that when you see the good effects of this inspection you will continue to have it done regularly throughout the life of your car. Wherever you live, you will find the Ford dealer very helpful in keeping your car in good running order for many thousands of miles at a minimum of trouble and expense. He operates under close factory supervision and has been trained and equipped to do this work promptly, thoroughly and economically.

Voting for your party, right or wrong, cannot be democracy.

It is a strange thing for Democrats to have to campaign in Texas after the primaries.

The News force is learning to run the new press this week, and some of our readers may receive copies that are not perfectly printed; however, we hope our readers will indulge us until such time as we may have things in good working order.

The new fire rules will mean not only better protection to property, but protection to life. The way of running a fire and getting in the fireboys' way at every opportunity must cease, if we are to have the protection we are entitled to.

McLean needs more large water mains to give adequate protection in case of fire and to reduce insurance premiums. Next summer will probably bring a need for a new well also. These are problems that face the city council, and deserve thought from the citizenship.

The proposed amendments to the state constitution relating to terms of all offices of the public school system and the creating of a state board of education are progressive and should be voted upon favorably. The present school machinery was devised over 50 years ago, and a more modern system is needed for efficient operation.

It seems strange that in this enlightened age people will be content to risk the mad dog menace until someone is bitten. Something like 99% of the dogs owned in town are absolutely useless, many people would say 100%; yet they are allowed to run at large until one runs amok and damage is done. There is no excuse for allowing unlicensed dogs in the city limits.

Pampa Business Men's Association has appointed a committee to pass on all advertising schemes and plans submitted to local merchants. All members will have a card posted in their place of business referring solicitors to the central committee, and will refuse to accept anything turned down by the committee. This step was taken on account of the many worthless advertising schemes presented to the merchants. This is a commendable action of the Pampa merchants and will save them many dollars in the course of a few months. A plan of this kind was attempted by the McLean Chamber of Commerce a few years ago, and could well be revived at this time.

Texas voters have a habit of turning down all state amendments, and such a procedure will be correct, in the opinion of this paper, in regard part of the amendment relating to exempting from taxation property used by organizations engaged in promoting the religious, educational and physical development of young people is too vague to be understood, and would probably be abused. As the law now stands, church buildings actually used for worship are exempt, but parsonages are not. However, most tax assessors do not list parsonages for taxation. Churches are many times more able than individuals to pay taxes, and the better separated church and state can be kept, the better for all concerned.

WHY BE AN EDITOR?

Running a newspaper is just like running a hotel only different. When a man goes into a hotel and finds something on the table which does not suit him, he does not get up and raise hooey with the landlord and tell him to stop his darned old hotel. Well, hardly. He sets that dish on one side and wades into some of the many dishes that do suit him. It is different with some newspaper readers. They find an article occasionally that does not suit them exactly, and without stopping to think, they please hundreds of other readers, make a grandstand play of their supreme assurity and hasten to stop their paper.—Ira R. Franklin in the Appleton City (Mo.) Journal.

Edmet Thompson and family of Amarillo spent last week end here.

WANAMAKER ON ADVERTISING

One of the most successful of American merchants was John Wanamaker. His stores in New York and Philadelphia stand as a monument to his merchandising genius, and his ideas have been copied by thousands of American stores. This is what John Wanamaker once said about newspaper advertising: "Our little allowance of advertising money in the early days of our store went to the newspaper, as it does nearly altogether today, because if I ever have a monument for discovering anything, it will be for finding out that the only advertising of direct and instant benefit to both merchant and customer is in the newspaper of known circulation."

THOUGHT IT WAS "JUICE"

A young salesman was seen to turn away from a prospective buyer of an electric washing machine, a disgusted look on his face. The "boss" immediately wanted to know why. "She doesn't want an electric washing machine," the young man replied. "I explained in detail just how to operate it, turned on the current, and showed her how it works, and finally she pointed to the hole in the bottom and asked: "What is that for?" "To let the water out," I said. "Oh, then, it doesn't wash by electricity, does it? You have to use water?" Advertising doesn't jerk it, pulls.

SECRET DADDY

My daddy's always telling me about how good he used to be; He did what he was told to do. And he was neat and tidy, too; He learned his lessons every day. And he would rather work than play; But when my grandpa's visiting with us, my daddy, if I'm bad, forgets to say a single thing about his goodness as a lad.

My daddy said he never told a fib or made his parent's cold.

He always tried to help along. Being good and kind and sweet; And eating what boys ought to eat; And when my grandma visits here; My daddy never boasts to me about how good and sweet and deal a little boy he used to be.

My daddy always took delight in doing only what was right; When he was just about my size; He wanted to be great and wise; But when my grandpa comes, and when my grandma's here to visit, then my daddy merely gives a wink Or smiles if I've been kind of wild. And doesn't try to make us think that he was once an angel child. —S. E. Kiser, in Harper's Monthly.

PROHIBITION VS. SAFETY

The man in the automobile may be opposed to the Eighteenth Amendment, but he will instantly discharge a drinking chauffeur. The train may be crowded with delegates to the anti-prohibition convention, but they would mob the engineer who took a drink while drawing his precious freight. The industrial magnate may talk critically of sumptuary laws, but he will apply them like a despot to the man who watches over the drive.

I LIKED HER

She was good looking and had a fine shape. They told me she was fast, and she was. But I liked her. She never smoked, and in times of need she was just a good pal. She was not painted in a vulgar way, just a line of red here and there to give her a sparkling appearance. She was easy on your pocketbook. When you took her out you were sure of a good time.

But I traded her in and bought a new one last week.

SUNFLOWERS TAKE PLACE OF COTTON

Will South Plains farmers turn from raising cotton to raising sunflowers? Greeting as though it may sound, farmers have already done that very thing. One large land owner, J. R. Weaver, who has 16 sections of land now in cultivation near Lamesa, has told all the farmers on those lands that he would rather they would not raise a stalk of cotton on his land. He did not demand that they should not raise cotton, but expressed the desire that they would not.

And another strange announcement—there will be about 10,000 acres of land near Lamesa planted to sunflowers next year, according to an estimate made by the Lamesa Chamber of Commerce.

The reason is logical.

T. G. Waldrip of Lamesa, while in the Avalanche office today, explained that he has been experimenting with several varieties of sunflower for the past year or so, having experimented with four varieties this year on 1,600 acres.

Beats Cotton in Returns

"I find that the Manchurian sunflower is the best for this section," Mr. Waldrip stated. "We raise sunflowers for commercial purposes and have discovered that they can be raised for about half the trouble cotton requires and beat cotton about $3 an acre in returns. This is figuring cotton at a fourth of a bale using cotton at 20c per pound.

"With only about half a crop of sunflowers on my 1,600 acres this year, we will get 650 pounds to the acre, and the present price bid on the seed is 5c per pound, or $100 a ton. That figures $32.50 per acre. And the half crop is due to worms, same as short cotton, corn and other crops have been damaged."

Mr. Waldrip explained that the seed of the sunflower is used by manufacturers of poultry and stock feed and that they are also crushed for the purpose of extracting oil, which is used for similar purposes as cotton seed oil.

Unaffected by Frost

Other things favorable to the raising of sunflowers, as compared to raising cotton, Waldrip said, is that ordinary frost does not affect them, it taking a degree as low as 16 to injure them. And it is primarily a dry weather plant, as everyone knows.

"I don't intend to ever plant another stalk of cotton," Mr. Waldrip declared, "and there is not a man who has raised sunflowers this year that will ever raise another stalk of cotton." Then he told of the estimate of the Lamesa Chamber of Commerce and Mr. Weaver's request to others on his farms.

"We plant as early as March, and have the crop threshed and through with by the middle of August," he said, "this year we planted in May and are through threshing all but about 200 acres. I planted some 60 acres on the fourth, fifth and sixth of July, as another experiment, and those six acres are almost ready for threshing now."

The sunflowers crop is planted with a corn planter, in rows similar to corn planting, about two pounds of seed to the acre being required. After the flower plant is up, it is ready for harvesting within 90 days.—South Plains Farmer.

THE APPEAL OF THE SOAP BOX

A large crowd stood on a street corner listening to a soap box orator deliver a Socialist speech. It was an unusually good speech, witty and intelligent, and of course very sarcastic about wealth in certain aspects; that is, there was a good bit of sarcasm about working men becoming millionaires, bondholders, Wall Street heroes and residents of the Republic. Did I think for a minute that here was a crowd of workers eager to drink in wisdom, sound, though humane, views on economics? Maybe, for a minute.

But I quickly saw what held that crowd, or I thought that insight was given me on this point. It was not simply the impulse of a crowd to assemble; it was not merely the love of a moment's sensation on an idle evening; these had their part, but what kept that crowd obviously, intensely interested—even, as I could see, rather dreamily and enviously interested—was the fact that the money, lots of money, easy money.

He painted a vivid picture of the ease, the power, the advantages of great wealth—which he was careful to state was unearned, was unjustly acquired, and was outrageously held by virtue of the force of the capitalist state. It was the theme of wealth, however, that this crowd of workers enjoyed. They reveled, as I could see, in these visions spread before them of capitalists clipping coupons with an idle, bored air, of banks bursting with bonds and gold, of lordly magnate planning vacation trips to the bright, alluring, foreign part of the earth; of rich men who could have their choice of women and their fill of wine.

I judged that these listeners were not so very thoughtful, that their sense of justice was not deeply offended, that they were not inspired by thought of profound and righteous social change.

Alas, poor human nature, they were reflecting how nice it would be to stand in the wicked rich man's shoes; they yearned, and wondered how they could join the pirate crew; they thought again that in this land of opportunity they, even they, might rise to such splendid heights on the shoulders of their fellows. It was a cynical, disillusioning for me to read these thoughts in the crowd; but I am sorrowfully persuaded that my reading was correct.—The Haldeman-Julius Weekly.

HARVEST COULDN'T WAIT

A Canadian farmer of Scottish extraction kept up the religious traditions of his race by reading each morning to his family and family help consecutive chapters of the Bible. One morning in the harvest season when time was precious, he struck the sixth chapter of first Chronicles, which contains 81 verses of genealogical names. He droned on till he came to "And Shallum begat Hilkiah and Hilkiah begat Azariah, and Azariah begat Seriah, and Seriah begat Johozadak." There he paused and looked over the leaf. "Well, my friends," he said, "they begat another right down to the end of the page, and a long way over on the other side, so we'll just leave them to it. Off we go to yer work!"
