McLean Oil Co. Well now Drilling 1400 Ft.

The McLean Oil Company are drilling past 1400 feet, located northwest quarter section 24, block 25, H. & G. N. R. R. Survey.

The log of this well is quite interesting up to date. There have been streaks of blue shale encountered, which is a formation that is always found where the largest wells in Gray county have been located.

Mr. D. C. Haynes, the secretary of the McLean Oil Company, says that he would like to have any of those interested with him in this well to go out to the lease and take a look over this particular area.

It has long been argued that McLean Creek will afford big production just the same as the north fork of the Red river.

The men behind this company are men who have stood the ups and downs of the oil business and are thoroughly conversant with the business and are said to be fair, honest and conscientious operators.

Idle Island

By
ETHEL HUESTON

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—On the verge of nervous collapse, due to overwork, Gay Delano, successful New York artist, seeks rest at Idle Island. She rents a cottage, the "Pine," from an island character, the "Captain," and his sister, Alice Andover, "Administratrix."

CHAPTER II.—Gay finds the cottage is tenanted by an elderly lady, "Aunt Almira," who consents to move to another abode, the "Apple Tree." Awakening from sleep, Gay imagines she sees the face of a Chinaman peering in the window, but on reflection ascribes the vision to imagination. She settles down in her new home, anticipating months of well-earned rest and recuperation.

CHAPTER III.—On an exploration of the island, Gay, standing on the shore, is horrified by the appearance of the drifting body of a drowned man, which she nerves herself to bring to the shore. A bullet wound in the temple shows the man to have been murdered. Gay covers the dead face with a handkerchief, and makes her way to the "Captain" with the story. Returning with him to the shore, she finds no body there, and Gay's story of the incident is set down to an attack of "nerves."

CHAPTER IV.—Gay, unable to convince her neighbors of the truth, draws a picture of the face of the dead man, intending to send it to the authorities as evidence of the apparent crime. She meets a stranger, apparently another visitor, to whom she tells the story and shows the picture. He asks her to let him take it, but Gay refuses. Next day, after a slight argument with "Aunt Almira," Gay finds the picture has been taken from the cottage. "Rand" Wallace, wanderer, and considered something of a "black sheep" by the islanders, expecting to find "Aunt Almira," surprises Gay at household tasks. She likes him at once.

CHAPTER V.—Gay's acquaintance with Rand ripens into affection. She sees the Chinaman again and this time is sure it is not imagination. Rand leaves the island on business. Gay determines to stay for the winter.

"Oh, you startled me. I—I was expecting some one else. Do come in. I am glad to see you again."

"What luck to find you," Ronald Ingram said with a warmth there was no mistaking. "I had no idea you would still be here. You are rather outstaying the summer, are you not?"

"Well—yes—a little, perhaps. But I was—quite ill, and I need—oh, a great deal of rest." Her face flushed with her feverish explanations, and Ronald Ingram studied her keenly.

"So many of the summer people have gone," he said slowly. "I should think you would be afraid to stay on alone. Especially after your experiences here. Was it in this room you saw the light—that night after you found the body in the cove?"

"Yes. In that window, right there." "And the hand? Are you sure of that hand? Stretched out—"

"Of course I am sure. And when I came up in the morning, the sketch was gone. It was here, in this drawer." She lightly pulled out the drawer of the desk. Her pistol, bullet-nasalike, important, lay in full sight. "It was here. And the next morning it was gone. Doors locked, windows barred, just as I left them. But the sketch was gone. So I knew the poor dear wished to be left in peace and undisturbed."

"By George, you make my hair stand on end. And after all that, you stay on here, alone, unprotected—"

"Oh, he was a gentle spirit. He would not harm me."

He smiled and dropped the subject. He said he had come to Portland on business, and had come to the island with only a faint hope that he might find her, or, failing to find her, to get her address in the city. He said he could not bear to drop the little acquaintance, which to him had proved so sweetly charming.

Then he went quickly away, waving back to her as she stood in the lighted doorway beneath the tall pine.

"The Chinaman!" Rand's amazement was unbounded. "The 'Chinaman! What under heaven—"

"Oh, I must have told you about the Chinaman," she said evasively. "You know darned well you never have. What about him?"

"Well, come and sit down. It's a long story— You are quite sure I haven't told you?"

Rand laughed. "Quite sure, you little liar, and so are you."

"Well, you weren't here when I came in. I was so tired, and sick, I was a perfect wreck. Aunt Almira was here, and while she packed up I lay down on the couch here, and slept. Slept! It was the sleep of death for weariness.—She wakened me for dinner, and I ate, and went to sleep again. So she went away and left me sleeping.—Well, it was evening, and I felt— You know how our feet look at me. I could hardly squeeze a look out beneath my lids, for the weariness. But I did. And in the dusk, faint and yellow, I saw the face of a Chinaman, thin pinched scar beneath one eye. As I looked, the face just melted backward into the darkness, so I knew it was a dream and went to sleep again."

Rand lighted a cigarette hastily but said nothing, and Gay went on.

"Well, you know how sometimes I sit, just dreaming, as the sun sets until it is dark—I did tonight. And I jumped up suddenly to light the lights, although it was not entirely dark, and I saw it at my window, that window—same face, the very same. So it could not have been a dream."

"When was that?"

"Oh, hours ago! Just before the final darkness."

"But it was late when I found him—about an hour ago.—In the meantime, what? Any noises? Were you afraid—"

"No, Mr. Ingram was here."

Rand flicked the ashes from his cigarette thoughtfully. "Ah, Mr. Ingram.—Mr. Ingram—I suppose you told me all about him, too. May one inquire, who is Mr. Ingram?"

"He is the man who— It was he who— It was Mr. Ingram who—"

Gay closed her lips stubbornly. She had often wished to tell him of the affair in the cove, but resentment had always forbidden the confidence. He should have asked her. She glanced at him furtively. His chin was set, and his eyes were anxious. Gay relented.

"Well, Rand, I suppose the family females told you—what happened in the cove?"

Rand smiled faintly, his fingers caressed her arm. Gay hardened again. "I know they thought I was out of my head, but you surely do not believe any such nonsense."

"They thought you saw driftwood, a log or a barrel."

"How about my handkerchief? Did they think I put it on a piece of driftwood?"

"They thought— Now, remember, Gay, you did not mention the handkerchief until they reported there was no body. They thought—well, they thought you made it up to sort of carry out your story, make it hold water."

"What did you think?"

"I thought," he said tenderly, "that some time, in a moment of great confidence, my Gay would tell me about herself, and then I should know all."

Gay laughed, bent suddenly and kissed his hand. "You work me out rationally," she said.

"And Mr. Ingram—" he prompted softly.

"Well, then—No, the cove comes first.—The reason I like Mr. Ingram is because if he is interested in anything, he talks about it. If he wants to know anything, he asks. He doesn't think other people are crazy just because they happened to see something he didn't happen to see himself.—Like the state of Maine," she said vindictively.

"And the cove—"

"Well, then, I slid down the rocks into the cove."

"Why, Gay, why? With a whole island full of accessible shore, why slide down the worst cliff in the bay?"

"Because I thought I couldn't," she answered promptly. "Because every body said ups couldn't get down.—So I did."

Rand rolled his eyes heavenward. "A woman," he said devoutly "is heaven's greatest miracle.—She did because she couldn't.—Go on.—Like your Mr. Ingram, I understand perfectly."

"Well, I tried to get into the clubhouse, and I couldn't. And into the boathouse, and I couldn't."

"You should have burned them to the ground.—If you couldn't get in, you should have."

Gay laughed. "Don't be silly.—Well, it was lovely in the cove, and I stood there and saw—It—coming in.—Rand, it was a man. He came in and with my two hands I pulled him up on the sand. There was a rope about one ankle, a stout rope, with one end dangling loose. He had been shot in the temple—here." She touched her brow with a slender finger. "The blood was washed away, but the hair was clotted about it. I laid his hand upon his breast, and put my handkerchief over his face. I called for help, but of course nobody heard me. So I went for the Captain. You know what happened."

Rand was impressed. She could see that.

"It sounds very reasonable."

"At Dusk I Was All Jumpy Nerves"

...serves, hearing noises, seeing shadows. So I went down and stayed all night with Aunt Almira.—Rand, I was in bed, and when she raised the blinds on this side of the house, toward the hill, you know, she said, 'Oh, you left the lights on.' I didn't, because I went down before dark. So I went over and looked, and there was a light in the window; now it showed, now it faded, pale and misty, not bright. And, Rand, I swear on my word of honor, that we saw—we both saw—a hand reach out from the darkness into the light, a hand long and slim, like his.—And then the light went out, and the hand was gone."

Rand tapped his fingers thoughtfully upon her arm, his eyes dark, brows contracted. His lips were curiously pursed and rigid.

"And this is the strangest thing of all. When I came back the blinds were all down, though I was sure I had left them up. And, Rand, the sketch I had made of the body in the cove was gone."

Rand stared at her a moment, incredulous.

"You innocent! You gullible! You New York!" he shouted. "All that laid right out before you like two and two, and you couldn't piece it together, and see what was going on."

It is the constant pressure of repeated advertisements that brings success.

More customers are caught by advertising than by complaining of how rotten business is.

The man who is not big enough to forget personal differences in the interest of the whole community is not worth much as a community builder.

The fellow who says newspaper advertising does not pay is the one who doesn't advertise. The man who keeps his message in the newspaper knows better.

We noticed an advertisement of a public utilities company in a neighboring town telling how to adjust appliances so as to get the maximum of service with a minimum of expense. It is educational advertising like this that makes a company popular with its patrons. Satisfied customers are any firm's best asset.

We should remember in discussing favorite candidates, that we are all neighbors and each man has a right to see things his own way. Each of the candidates will endeavor to fill the office sought to the best of his ability, but, of course the voters have a right to express their choice. The man who has the best qualifications should be the man chosen, regardless of personal friendship.

Now is a good time to talk with your favorite candidate in regard to his stand on questions that interest you as a citizen of this community. The right man in local office means more many times, as far as local affairs, than those higher up. It now appears that there will be a number of good men offered for city and school offices, and there should be no trouble in arriving at a suitable choice for each office.

6000 people were injured and 902 killed in Texas last year from automobile accidents. Most of the accidents were caused from trying to pass the car ahead and skidding into the ditch; a number were caused by passing from the rear and turning into the road too soon; many were hurt and killed from being ditched to avoid collision; carelessness in driving on wet pavements killed and injured a large number; striking loose gravel and soft dirt claimed a number of victims; collisions on curves was another contributing cause, and meeting cars on the wrong side of the road took its toll as did glaring headlights and parked cars by the side of the road without lights. No lights and one eyed cars were possible for injury and death.

Ineffective brakes and steering gear were guilty as were drivers who lost control, and those "asleep at the wheel." Intoxicated drivers killed and injured a large number.

CHICKENS CAME HOME TO ROOST
A retired man was ready to make his regular run. His wife instructed him to get her some turkey eggs to eat.

In passing through a small town, a dirty country lad approached the conductor with a grin and asked him, "Don't you want some buzzard eggs?"

Looking to play a joke on his wife he gave her a nickel for them. About a month after, he asked his wife, "How are your turkeys getting along?"

"Oh, I decided it was getting to live for turkeys as I just put them in for your lunch."

All one needs in order to become enthusiastic for prohibition is to have a memory of what conditions were in the old days and contrast those conditions with conditions as they are today. As President Boston University, where we have fourteen thousand students enrolled, can hardly think of any greater service to the rising generation than to scrap prohibition.—President Daniel L. 50 Years of De Laval Service and now the best of all Cream Separators

SINCE Dr. De Laval invented the first continuous discharge centrifugal cream separator in 1878, De Laval Separators have always been in the lead. Practically every detail of separator construction has been De Laval originated. As these features have been imitated, further improvements have been made.

Each De Laval has in its day been the leading separator. As a result more than four million have been made. They are used in every country of the world, and there are practically as many in use as all other makes combined.

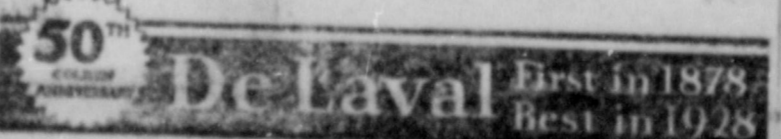

Now the 1928 "Golden Series" De Laval Separators mark another step forward. They are the crowning achievement in 50 years of service to the dairy industry.

They are the most complete, efficient and beautiful cream separators ever made. They are all that could be hoped for in such a machine and must prove a source of pride as well as profit to every owner.

The best way to judge a new "Golden Anniversary" De Laval machine is to see one, and better still to try it side-by-side with any other separator.

We will appreciate an opportunity of demonstrating a new "Golden Series" De Laval to you.

Tires for the new cars are specially selected to give long life

WHEN the new Ford was designed, it was immediately apparent that a new tire would have to be made to match the car's performance. It was distinctly a new problem, for here was a car with quicker acceleration, greater speed and more braking efficiency than any car of similar size or weight.

So that every Ford owner might be assured of maximum tire mileage at the lowest cost, the Ford Motor Company devoted many months to research and experiment in conjunction with the leading tire manufacturers.

As a result, certain definite specifications were developed for tires for the new Ford. These specify cords of certain strength and texture, a large volume of tread and sidewall rubber, sturdy non-skid design, and reinforced plies for protection against bruise breaks—all the strong features of construction formerly considered for only the largest tires.

Great care also was taken to secure the best riding qualities in connection with the transverse springs and the Houdaille shock absorbers.

She called it SIN —he called it A Noble Sacrifice

... who was right?

STANDING in the shadows, Marvin Smith saw Jack's young wife come swiftly, silently into the moonlight. How tired she looked—how ragged her clothes. His pulse quickened. She was getting tired of the struggle. Soon, she would come to him...

"For his sake!" She thought wildly. She had come to these desolate hills a young bride—eager for the love-nest Jack had promised. Love-nest! There were no comforts, not even the bare necessities. Now Jack lay injured... penniless... in pain...

And here was Marvin Smith, offering her money, comfort, luxury! His handsome face was bent close to hers.

"It would be sin," she whispered. "It would be a noble sacrifice," he said. Who was right? Read "Can Love Win This Battle?" in April True Story.

KERVILLE AND SHAMROCK

The Kerville, Texas, Chamber of Commerce considers that its censorship committee, which passes on transient advertising schemes, did as big a service to the community as any other department, by "stemming constant drain on business men by foreign solicitors and advertising grafters." The secretary estimates $11,000 was saved. Appeals for charities and advertising propositions totaling this sum were turned down by the committee during 1928.

A year ago a censorship plan was adopted and a committee appointed, chamber of commerce members agreeing to cooperate in refusing donations and advertising contracts until the lists had first received approval of the censoring board. Less than one-fifth of the propositions investigated were found meritorious. Street beggars were refused the right to solicit and advertising grafters were turned down flat.

Most every town has such a committee. If there is a Retail Merchants Association, that body usually creates a committee. The grafters have had such hard sledding in most towns recently that they have to trim the easy ones in a big way. Shamrock has been unfortunate enough to be among the easy ones. You can count on the fingers of one hand the so-called advertising schemes which have not gone over here.

A few weeks ago a man and a woman promoted a "Church Calendar" here. It went over with a bang. Ads were sold all around the "calendar," which consisted of the names of the churches and pastors and the time of services. The cards were to be delivered to the preachers. The preachers did not think they were worth carrying off. The promoters are gone. The printed calendars are at The Texan office and anyone may have one or all of them for the asking.

There were about twenty such worthless schemes put over last year. They did not have one cent's worth of advertising in them. And all the squawking this newspaper can do doesn't seem to help matters any. Oh, well, if the merchants can stand it, we can. Only it does look silly to let these promoters come in and play us for a bunch of chumps. Maybe we'll learn some day.—Shamrock Texan.

BOOZE AND FLU

One of the leading physicians of the United States publicly and vigorously denounced the effort to capitalize the influenza epidemic by wet propagandists. The use of alcohol in influenza is known to be little short of murderous, predisposing to pneumonia. It is probable that deaths have resulted because of the efforts made by wet propagandists to create the impression among uninformed people that alcohol is a preventative of influenza. It is a ghoulish business.—Deets Pickett.

The population of Texas has increased about 17.6% since 1920, being estimated at more than $5,490,000.

A FEW "DONT'S" FOR CHURCH GOERS

A Dundee Congregational minister, who recently became pastor of a church in the South, has sent a copy of the Monthly Messenger of his church to a brother minister in Scotland. It contains a number of "Dont's for Church Goers" which deserve a wider publicity. Some of the most pointed of them read: "Don't visit; worship." "Don't hurry away; speak and be spoken to." "Don't dodge the preacher; show yourself friendly." "Don't dodge the collection-plate; pay what you are able." "Don't stop in the end of the pew; move over." "Don't start blankly while others sing, read and pray; join in." "Don't wait for an introduction; introduce yourself." "Don't criticize; remember to think of your own frailties." "Don't monopolize your hymn-book; be neighborly." "Don't stay away from church because the church is not perfect; how lonesome you would feel in a perfect church!"—The Scots Observer.

YOU CAN'T BEAT THE IRISH

"Talking about hens," remarked the American visitor to a native of Erin, "reminds me of an old hen Dad had once. She would hatch out anything from a tennis ball to a lemon. Why, one day she sat on a piece of ice and hatched out two quarts of hot water."

"That doesn't come up to a club-footed hen my mother had once," replied the never-to-be-beaten Irishman. "They had been feeding her sawdust instead of oatmeal by mistake and she laid twelve eggs and set on them. When they hatched, eleven of the chickens had wooden legs and the twelfth was a wood-pecker."
