Officers Fear Girl Abducted
Plainview Lass Bought Ticket To Ft. Sumner Agent Says

CLOVIS, N. M., Aug. 21 (AP)—Authorities here today expressed the opinion that Margaret Locke, 15-year-old Plainview girl, was kidnapped. Officers indicated they had several persons under surveillance but declined to reveal their names.

The girl disappeared Friday. She was last seen here. Santa Fe railroad ticket agents after a thorough check, said they were certain the girl alighted from a westbound train at Fort Sumner Friday night. James Morrison, Clovis ticket clerk, sold a ticket to a girl that night. It was revealed the ticket agent at Fort Sumner sold no tickets beyond that point that night.

A Mrs. Taft, who lives near Clovis told officers today that a girl fitting the Locke girl's description came to Clovis from Plainview Friday afternoon. She said the girl gave her name as Margaret Stovall. She explained she was going to Clovis to visit an aunt. She brought no luggage, she stated, because her father was coming to Clovis the next day.

The woman said the girl stated her father had served as jailer at Plainview about 10 years. J. H. Locke, the missing girl's father, was formerly county jailer at Plainview.

City Hall Site Dirt Work Nearing Completion; City Officials Appeal To Residents To Provide Men Work

Last of the approximately 125 local men who have been afforded part-time employment for several weeks removing the high knoll from the city hall site at Fourth and Nolan streets, will be laid off Tuesday, said city officials this morning.

The work there will be finished and officials issued an appeal to residents to "stretch a point," if necessary, to provide work for the men who will be thrown out of employment, at least temporarily. Cleaning of vacant lots, improvement of yards and other premises were urged.

"It is hoped that many property owners will provide work for these men and, at the same time, improve the appearance and sanitary condition of the city, by having weeds cut, trash removed," said City Manager Spence. "When this work is done it would improve things considerably if the cleaning process were extended all the way to the alleys and curb lines, instead of stopping at property lines."

Nitro Found In Wall By Workmen Cashed In 1902 Papers Show

DALLAS, Aug. 21. (UP)—Safe blowers' tools, hidden in the wall of an old saloon here in 1902, were found today as workmen razed the building. The cache contained hammers, punches, chunks of soap, nitroglycerine and dynamite.

Had the explosives been set off, death to a score of workmen would probably have resulted, building inspectors said. Stopping a laborer with upraised sledge-hammer, Inspector E. V. Davis removed an old bundle. The explosives were wrapped in copies of the Dallas News dated September 28, 1902, and the Denver Post, dated August 17 of the same year.

The dynamite and nitroglycerine were dropped into the Trinity river by police. The building under destruction was a combination saloon and hotel, known in earlier days as the hangout of "tough guys."

Plea For Used Glass Jars For Distribution Made By Mrs. Eubank

Town women are asked to keep in mind, said Mrs. Eubank, the great need of many families in the county for all kinds of glass jars and containers to put preserves and jellies in. If they will save all such containers for which they have no use, and call either Mrs. Allgood at 1129 or Mrs. Eubank at 8, the jars will be collected sometime during the week.

If they wish they may leave them at the Clubhouse on Saturdays. These will be distributed among the county women every Saturday at the market.

Women are also asked to save paper bags, egg cartons and miscellaneous containers and bring them to the clubhouse market.

HOW'S your HEALTH

Dr. Inge Golden's Academy of Medicine... Every convulsive seizure in a child, no matter how mild and passing, demands careful medical attention.

Experience has shown that the child who has suffered one convulsive seizure is more susceptible to a second, and the third may follow in an even shorter interval.

The causes of convulsive seizures are numerous and can be determined only by careful and skillful study.

Convulsions are seldom fatal unless they appear in the course of a serious illness, such as pneumonia, whooping cough or pneumonia.

On the other hand, although this happens but rarely, a severe convulsive seizure may cause permanent brain injury.

Convulsive attacks usually present an emergency situation. The parent is, therefore, called upon to give first aid treatment while waiting for the doctor.

Bearing in mind the highly irritable and excitable state of the nervous system of the patient, the first principle to be observed is that the patient should be disturbed as little as possible.

Could any be applied to the head. This can be done by means of an ice cap or by means of cold cloths.

Dry heat and counter-irritation may be applied to the surface of the body, to the arms and the legs.

The mustard bath, a standard form of treatment even before grandmothers' time, is of value, provided the child need not be too much disturbed during its administration.

Under other circumstances, a mustard pack and a mustard foot bath may be used.

In the infant, it is commonly a wise procedure to irrigate the colon thoroughly with warm water—the irrigation being kept up until the water returns clear.

If the child suffers a high temperature during its convulsive seizure, instead of applying counter-irritants to the skin, it is more desirable to give the child a cool bath and sponging.

MOON OF DELIGHT by Margaret Bell Houston... The lady was holding the necklace out to him. "Senorita! Where did you find it?" "On the sidewalk I was passing in my car. I saw your card in the paper."

Senorita! Where did you find it? "On the sidewalk I was passing in my car. I saw your card in the paper." "When was this?" he asked. "Last night—or rather early this morning—as I was returning to the Tigon."

"It must have been directly after we dropped it. I can't tell you what this means to her. There is a reward, Senorita."

The lady shook her head. "I do not wish the reward," she said. "But surely you have charities?" "So must you," she said. "Give it to one—for me."

"Come and meet my mother," Kirk urged. "I'll go first and prepare her. Do sit down."

Nelly Belsare was beaming when Kirk came in with the beautiful Senorita. There were traces of tears on her cheeks, and the necklace have long been peculiar. For one thing there are two separate street car systems. For years efforts have been made to merge them satisfactorily, but as yet negotiations "have been in vain."

Aside from the rush hours—between 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning and after 4:30 in the afternoon—the street cars are not so great.

The first time the great French engineer, L'Enfant, laid out the city his plans were along military lines.

To prevent a recurrence of anything like what happened in Paris during the reign of terror he placed at various points in the city "circles"—beautifully gardenized little parks.

It was his idea that guns placed here would have an all round fire down six or eight converging streets.

These circles no doubt would discourage a mob, but they also discourage fast and direct street car traffic. They must ramble around them.

STREET CARS TABOO The wide diagonal avenues, with a few exceptions, are reserved for vehicular traffic. No street cars are permitted to operate on them.

Uncle Sam also has a habit of planting one of his big government buildings right in the middle of a street. Frequently one of these will block off two or three through streets. Again the street cars and vehicular traffic must wind about to dodge them.

Pending traffic reforms, the government clerks are taking full advantage of the cheap cab rates. The street car companies complain that they are losing thousands of passengers.

Congress and the district government look on helplessly, wondering what they can do.

Sunday-Snake Bites... By HERBERT FLUMMER... WASHINGTON—The national capital is at present enjoying the keenest taxi war the city has known.

ONE of the pressing problems that face the nation is that of veteran's relief and it is one that will require careful and considered study in order to determine the national policy in a way that will be fair to the veterans and yet not place an intolerable burden on American taxpayers.

Dr. Henry Smith Frithell of the Carnegie Foundation may be extreme in his charges of "bonus patriotism" against the leaders of veterans' organizations. It is quite possible, however, that some veteran leaders are exhibiting vast claims of cash and free services from the government in order to strengthen their political positions within their organizations.

On the other hand, the demands for a reduction of the bonus amount—the bulk and the size of the "bonuses" was indicated that when the American Legion's executive committee was faced to vote the vote of the Legion's national convention against an advance cash payment on the adjusted service certificates were emphatically called the "bonus."

If that were the case, it would be a "raid" on the national treasury, but were forced to bow to a demand from the membership in general.

As a result of favorable congressional action, payments on the service certificates now have reached $20 million dollars. This amount is almost equal to the estimated deficit to the federal treasury for this year.

It is indicated now that the following proposals will come before congress for consideration, either at the next session or after the presidential campaign of 1932:

1. Immediate payment of the was clutched in her hand. "Kirk draw the big chair up to the bed. Now tell us again, Senorita—" "Senorita Flores, Mother."

"Ah, yes, Kirk says you are from Seattle. My daughter Delphine and I spent a week there. I saw a bull fight. I suppose you have seen a great many bull fights, Senorita?"

Senorita was smiling. "Yes a great many."

"What a shame the football season's over. You'll have to stay till it comes again," said Kirk.

"Yes, yes," agreed Nelly. "You must make a long visit. Suppose some one else had seen the necklace!" she cried. "Please, Senorita, I shall feel terribly if you won't take some reward."

"This is my reward," said the senorita, "seeing how happy you are."

Nelly Belsare stretched out an imperious hand. "Lorena, to the colored maid, 'bring my jewel case.'"

Lorena went into the next room and returned with a silver casket. Nelly Belsare lifted the lid. "Choose something," she said to Juanita.

Juanita smiled, her eyes turning with appeal to Kirk. Kirk said, "Senorita Flores has declined any reward. Mother, perhaps Senorita Flores will put us under further obligations. Perhaps she will let us see her often while she is in New Orleans."

The senorita replied that such a course would give her happiness. "Then you are staying!" cried Nelly.

"Through the Spring," Juanita answered. Why did she say that? The man's eyes, meeting hers, had seemed to put the words into her mind. She rose, a little frightened.

"Kirk will do the calling, dear. I don't call any more. But I shall see a great deal of you if you are here through the Spring. Never can I thank you enough."

Kirk went with Juanita down the stairs. He saw her to her car, and as she rode from him she smiled. No, he had never seen her before. Always when she smiled the illusion left him.

When Conchita brought up Juanita's tray that evening, Molly came with her. Divitt would not be home till nine o'clock, so she was dining with Juanita. Molly was dressed already for the pasture. "How'd everything go?" she asked when Conchita had padded out. "Were they glad to get it back?"

"They insisted on giving me a reward," she added. Molly looked up quickly. "You didn't take it?"

"No. She brought out her jewel case and told me to choose."

"I should think that it would be big for her to carry."

"Oh, not that big! Besides, it was the maid who brought it."

"She lets the maid open the safe?" asked Molly.

"They weren't in a safe. They were in a drawer. But the maid seems trustworthy."

"And you resisted choosing?" asked Molly.

"It wasn't hard to resist—except I felt I'd hurt her feelings."

"I'll bet she says her prayers to those stones," said Molly.

Juanita shook her head. "I thought of a little girl playing with her dolls."

"Did they invite you back?"

"Yes, and— Juanita's face brightened. Molly was so affable tonight. Mr. Starnard may come to see me. I couldn't tell him not to—"

"Of course not!" Molly looked thoughtful. "But don't fall in love. Suppose Juanita should want to get married? Odd Divitt hadn't foreseen such a possibility. You aren't thinking of that, Juanita?"

Juanita had turned from her. Whiteness dropping over her face. "You needn't be afraid," she said. "That's good," Molly rose. "Won't it be fun passing cigarettes to the old lady and knowing she don't know you?"

But to Juanita's relief, Kirk and Mrs. Belsare were not there. Adrian Fouché was alone. He bought abundantly of cigarettes, and Juanita pinned a carnation in his buttonhole conscious of Cabreau watching from the wall.

Kirk and Juanita find the garden peasant tomorrow. Meanwhile Divitt's Spanish caller may herald new developments.

Hints For Homemakers

WITH fruits and berries plentiful and cheap, and sugar selling at a price as low as we have seen in a generation, this is the ideal year for special activity in home preserving. Put up in attractively sealed and labeled glasses and jars, jams and jellies will make inexpensive and deeply appreciated Christmas gifts for friends and relatives when the Yule season rolls around.

A few juniper berries, obtainable at the drug store, placed in a frying pan that has been heated until very hot, will release aromatic fumes which will quickly drive the odor of cooking out of the house.

New York City, has recently completed a series of reliefs of the Stations of the Cross for the Church of St. Anne. He has discovered the secret of the famous Della Robbia terra-cotta and these reliefs form the largest single pieces of ceramic sculpture ever made. They are beautifully glazed on blue grounds exactly like those of the old Italian master.

EXPLAIN SIMILARITY OF ROASTING PROCESS AND HOUR-GLASS

Hills Bros.' Patented Process Produces a Fine, Even Roast Because Coffee Berries Pass Through the Roasters "a Little at a Time"

A stream of sand sifting from a globe on top through a narrow neck into a corresponding globe on the bottom... that's an hour-glass. And just as its accuracy depends upon an even, continuous flow...

Temperature and flow of coffee through the roasters are automatically controlled with this process. As a result, every berry is roasted to the degree that assures perfect flavor in every pound.

It is Controlled Roasting that gives Hills Bros. Coffee a flavor no other coffee has. Insist on Hills Bros. Coffee. It is packed in vacuum cans. Air, which destroys the flavor of coffee, is removed and kept out of these cans. Even ordinary "air-tight" cans won't keep coffee fresh. But Hills Bros. Coffee is ever-fresh. Order some today. Ask for it by name, and look for the Arab trademark on the can.

Mrs. Bob Austin Throws Open Her Lovely Home In Charming Morning Party For Departing Member of the Social Set

Four tables of bridge players assembled at the hospitable home of Mrs. Bob Austin Thursday morning to bid farewell in a charming party to Mrs. George Wilke, who is leaving in the next two weeks to assume her duties as hostess at Sterling House in Texas Christian University, Fort Worth.

Summer flowers furnished the color notes and theme for the party. The guests followed a new order of progression called "Play It With Flowers," according to the tallies which represented different colored blooms.

After the games the guests assembled around the large dining table in the dining room which was beautifully decorated with the prevailing colors of yellow and green. They were served a three-course luncheon.

Mrs. Wilke was presented with a lovely piece of lingerie as a guest prize and consoled for making long with both salts. Mrs. H. C. Timmons made high score and received a pair of hose.

The guests, in addition to the honoree, were Mrs. V. H. Flower, W. E. Clark, H. C. Timmons, W. T. Strange, Jr., L. D. Davenport, Wm. F. Cushing, C. D. Baxley, Fred Stephens, Lee Hansen, of Lamesa, A. E. Sevice, J. D. Ellis, Bernard and Joyce Fisher, L. A. Eubank and Miss Portia Davis.

The Wise Hostess Serves
But One Course at Parties

By JOSEPHINE E. GIBSON
When we entertain, deciding upon the menu for the party supper is an important problem—and often a puzzling one. Suppers planned for late in the evening should be composed of interesting and unusual food; yet, for the sake of the hostess, they should be easy to serve and require very little last minute preparation. Your guests, too, would prefer that you serve something light and simple, for most people, realize that it is not wise to eat an elaborate meal too near bed time.

The wise hostess solves this problem by limiting her refreshments to one course. This may be a salad, a rabbit, waffles, or a dessert and coffee but she serves only one course, and not two or three. This is the best way to avoid having a meal that is entirely too hearty to be eaten so late.

The following single-course party suppers are easy to prepare and serve, and are of a type that your guests will enjoy.

- Mixed Fruit Salad with Cream Cheese and Currant Jelly Dressing
- Crisp Crackers
- Drop Cookies
- Coffee
- Pineapple or Peach Upside-Down Cake with Whipped Cream
- Coffee
- Salted Nuts
- Deviled Rabbit on Buttered Toast
- Cubes
- Hot Buttered Roll
- Sliced Dill Pickles
- Coffee
- Mint
- Fruit Salad with Cream Cheese and Currant Jelly Dressing
- 3 slices bananas; 1 cup diced pineapple; 1 cup white cherries or grapes; 1 cup marshmallows, quartered.

Chill fruits thoroughly and heap in deep cups of crisp lettuce. Serve with the following dressing: Cream Cheese and Currant Jelly Dressing: 1-4 teaspoon salt; 1-4 teaspoon sugar; dash of paprika;

Indian Relics Are Unearthed In Lamar County

TEXAS UNIVERSITY SENDS FIRST PARTY TO EXCAVATE MOUND

By MAUDE NEVILLE
(Paris News Staff Writer)

A JOURNEY surely unexcelled even in its moments of wildest imagining has just been made by all that is mortal of a group of Lamar county's earliest inhabitants. Still imbedded in the earth to which the bodies were consigned when their spirits had departed for the Happy Hunting Grounds, the skeletal remains of three Caddoan Indians, surrounded by funerary pottery and shell ornaments, was transported by automobile trailer from an ancient burial mound at Direct, to the University of Texas at Austin.

As the first scientific party to visit Lamar county for archaeological research, the university's group of anthropologists has made this mound the scene of the first undertaking of its kind within the borders of Texas—that of the removal of a group burial still intact in the earth in which the bodies were buried.

The state university's anthropology department, under direction of Prof. J. E. Pearce, last summer opened up the East Texas area to scientific investigation of ancient man's remains, accumulating a large amount of stone artifacts, pottery and bones to be used as a basis for comparative study with the relics of other early culture developments.

"How old are they?" is the question more frequently asked than any two others in regard to the mounds and their builders and it is one point on which the university anthropologists—or any others refuse to commit themselves. Absence of any metal or its use indicated in making objects found leads to the opinion that the mounds were constructed before the builders had any contact with the white man. The American Indian, when the first white explorers came upon him, was just a typical stone age man, he had not developed beyond what scientists term the New Stone or Neolithic period.

Mound builders belong primarily to the Mississippi River valley, and the mounds here mark approximately the western edge of this type of culture, verging westward upon the nomadic life of the plains tribes.

Work was carried on in several East Texas counties last summer and again early this season by the University workmen, but it was not until the latter part of July that they pitched camp beside the well near the mound on T. M. Sanders' property northwest of Direct, draped mosquito bars over their army cots and got out their picks and shovels, ready for business.

And the lion's share of the labor is nothing more or less than super-ditch digging, as anyone who has ever watched that crew in action can attest. One of the men, as he swung shovel-fuls of the hard-packed earth out of the trench was heard to remark: "This is the part of this archaeology business that people don't appreciate; all they think about when somebody says 'excavation' is what you do with a trowel and a case knife."

As a matter of fact, the very first excavation of this mound was done with a plow but no one, least of all the plowman, dreamed of what lay beneath the surface of the earth.

This happened a quarter of a century ago, and what with spring and fall cultivation, washing by rain and wind-shifted sand, the contour of the original eminence is very little like its original topography—aside from the disfigurement resulting in the past few weeks' assault with picks and shovels. Approximate dimensions of the mound at the time the work was undertaken were four to eight feet above the level of undisturbed ground, the difference in height on the south and north slopes being several feet. While its contours merge almost imperceptibly into the bank which may have been lapped by the waters of a lake now disappeared, the dimensions of the true mound are estimated at about 75 by 150 feet. At the time Mr. Sanders acquired the land, which is in the Bois d'Arc creek bottom less than a mile from where the stream joins Red River, this mound and several less sharply defined ones were grown over in timber and had to be cleared before cultivation could be started.

After his first find, which consisted of three inverted bowls, shell beads and a conch dipper, Mr. Sanders' interest grew in the curious things he encountered and whenever he came across any indication of further objects, he would stop and dig them out. They gave the neighbors something to talk about when they stopped by Sanders' home of a Sunday afternoon, and were frequently brought out and exhibited to all and sundry as curiosities.

In the course of years, the articles accumulated grew to be a fairly representative collection of skeletal remains, pottery, implements and ornaments. Many of the objects have been broken or chipped in taking them out of the earth; others were damaged or lost through repeated handling and the children acquired some as playthings. Imagine playing Indian with real tomahawks and arrowheads!

Nevertheless, a number of pottery pieces, great quantities of shell beads, a half dozen or more skulls, several interesting shell medallions, and various implements of bone, stone and flint, remained in fair condition when sold by Mr. Sanders to the university this year for its museum.

At the same time, he granted the institution exclusive rights for excavation purposes and is now aiding the university workmen in the labor. His chief find of any interest he says, is the skeletal remains of two or three dogs, very few of which have ever been unearthed here. The only other animal bones definitely identified among the objects found are those of buffalo and deer.

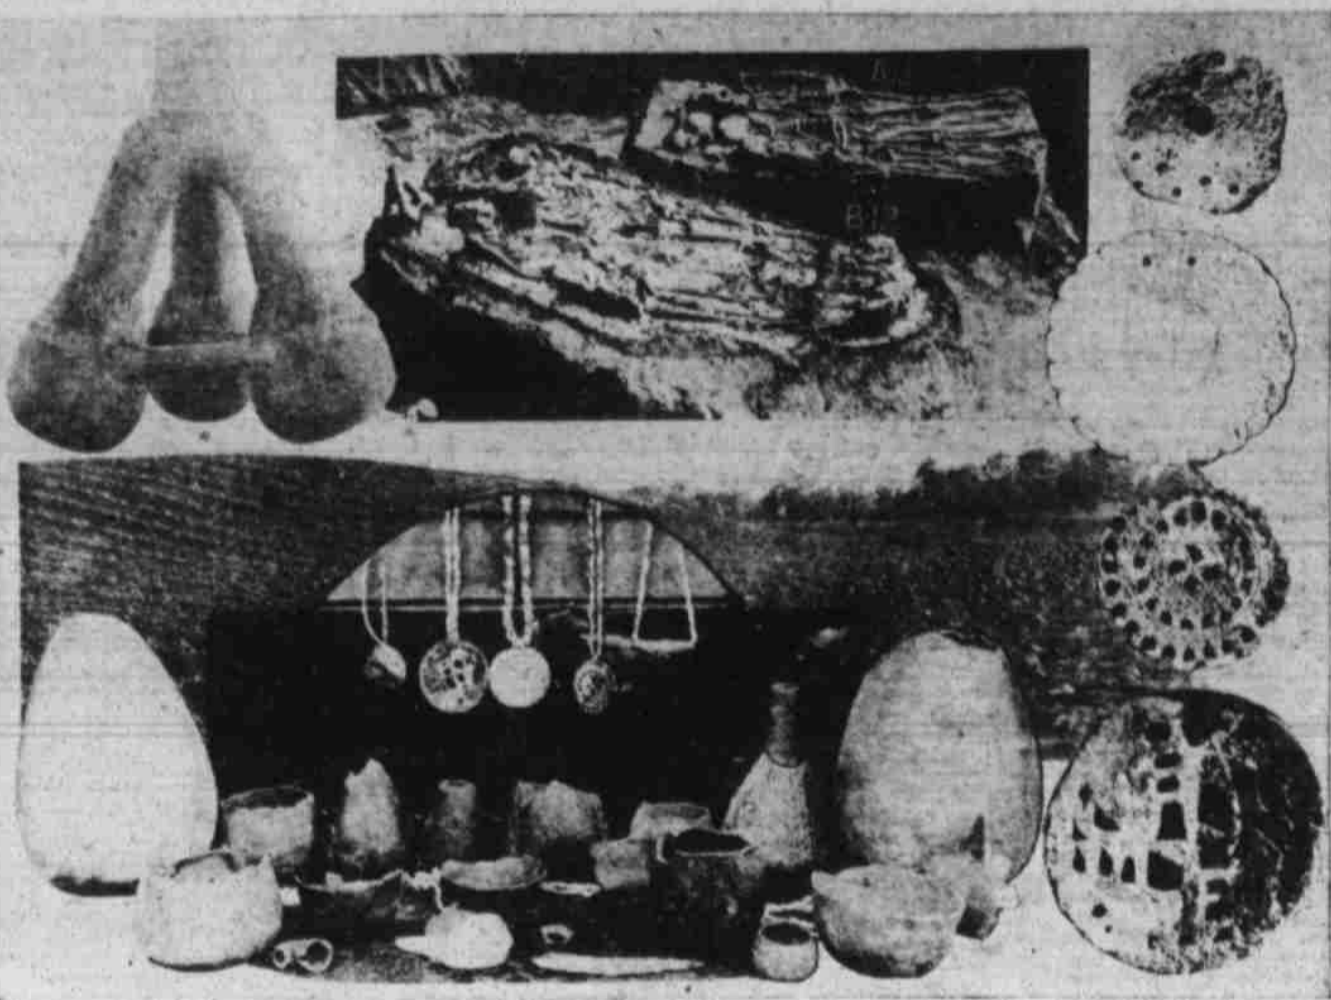

Relics Well Preserved.

DUE to the excellent drainage afforded by the construction of the mound, and the nature of its hard-packed soil, both bones and pottery are well preserved, particularly in comparison with those taken from other East Texas locations, where skeletal remains crumbled to dust on being exposed to the air.

The state of preservation of the bones and the large number of shell objects found will compensate somewhat for the scarcity of the pottery here—though pottery, by the anthropologist is regarded as "the most serviceable of all classes of prehistoric remains for working out sequences of culture and chronologies" particularly when it is found in superimposed layers of earth. This is true of this mound, but the pottery and other remains found in the upper and lower levels are so nearly identical that there probably was only a negligible lapse of time between the periods of occupation indicated.

Group burials averaging usually from four to six skeletons in a grave, have been encountered in the excavation, all having their heads toward the east, the bodies having been laid flat on the back, according to the accepted Caddo practice. Since there is little or nothing in the way of scars or fractures of the bones to indicate that the individuals met death violently, the presumption is that those so buried were the victims of epidemics or plagues—for this was a day before vaccines and health officials and quarantines, though a crowded village presented the same public health dangers that face all thickly populated centers.

SANDERS COLLECTION GOES TO U. OF T. MUSEUM

—New Staff Photos

Relics of an ancient Indian civilization found in a mound on property owned by T. M. Sanders at Direct in Lamar county have been sold to the University of Texas, and a party from the anthropology department of the University, under direction of Prof. J. E. Pearce, is now engaged in excavating the site, for other remains. Upper center two group burials, uncovered in the mound, that in the foreground after it had been covered with melted paraffin, preparatory to being taken out intact, for exhibit at the university museum. Upper left, curious triple bottle found with the burial group. Center, the mound now being excavated by the University workmen, as it appeared before operations were begun. Lower group, collection, sold by Mr. Sanders to the university, including jars, pots, bottles and bowls of clay pottery, clipped and ground implements and weapons of stone and flint; a pipe bowl and other articles. Suspended from shell beads strung together are medallions of gorgets of shell, elaborately pierced and engraved in conventionalized design. Right, the same ornaments shown about one-half actual size. At the top is an unfinished piece; below, three typical gorgets (neck ornaments or pendants) with typical Caddo Indian symbols used as the basis of the decorative designs.

Pottery vessels placed around the skulls, beads about the throat, wrists, waist and knees, and in some instances, the shell medallions or gorgets, on or near the chest, are the usual accompaniments of each burial. In taking out the remains, the position of these ornaments is carefully noted and photographs made for future study as each group is uncovered.

Since the smallest fragments are of scientific interest and sometimes of unusual significance, removal of the earth is a monumental undertaking in itself, since it must be moved by hand labor, as it was built, without the aid of any mechanical device.

Picks and shovels, carefully wielded so as to avoid destruction of possible finds, have moved tons of earth since the work was begun, and once an object or group is located, painstaking use is made of trowel, case-knife and brush to clear away the soil and take the articles out intact.

Caddoan Characteristics

THE Caddos, like other mound building people, were agriculturists, as shown by the bone and crude stone tools for tilling the ground; they were expert in the manufacture of pottery and apparently in the making of shell beads and ornaments.

The war bonnet was probably the only headgear known to this nation, but the skulls found nearly all show signs of having been bound before maturity was reached, so as to make the front of the skull slope upward and back to a peak-like eminence at the top of the head. Certainly the ladies could never have found this season's low crowned hats becoming.

If the Caddos ran true to form, according to the journals of early writers and the customs of other Indian peoples, the women were the manual laborers—tilling the soil, tanning hides and skins, making pottery and other utensils and implements for various purposes.

When the housewife of those "high and far-off times" as Kipling describes them, wanted to make a garment, she did not send little Rain-in-the-Face to the corner store for a package of assorted needles and some 60 thread, because there was no corner store, no needles and no thread, as they are known today. Instead, Mrs. Indian hunted up a sharpened bit of bone from a deer's foreleg, perhaps hardened in the fire, and with this she pierced holes in the hide or skins which had been cut with a sharp-edged flint to the desired pattern. The pieces of material were then laced together with animal sinew or twisted fibre from some tough bark. When she went out to hoe the garden, she used a buffalo shoulder blade held perhaps by rawhide thongs to a forked stick for a handle, or the blade may have been a roughly chipped piece of thin flat stone, also having a crude handle.

The earliest known pottery is believed to have been evolved from ancient basket forms. Mr. Pearce in an article for the "Interscholastic League" of Texas says that many primitive peoples first wove a basket of the desired form, lined it with clay and then burned the basket off, thus firing the clay and making the vessel water-proof. However, the East Texas Indians had advanced beyond this stage, and in the same article, Mr. Pearce also describes the method used by these later tribes.

Clay tempered with sand or powdered mussel shell, to keep it from cracking as it was baked, was kneaded to the desired consistency and then rolled into a thin coil or rope. Round and round to make a flat bottom, just as in weaving baskets, the clay coil was wound, and the coils smoothed together for a uniform surface as the vessel grew in the potter's hands.

Usually, the vessel was decorated before the pot was fired; sometimes it was done afterward, but the difference is not usually hard to distinguish. Marks made before firing are apt to be much smoother and deeper than those scratched on the harder surface of pieces already baked.

The pieces take various forms—large shallow bowls, others smaller and deeper, pots of many sizes, jars with and without handles and most interesting of all, long-necked bottles. Many of the vessels are black or gray in color, but those of finer workmanship are nearly all covered with a red clay coating which formed a beautiful and durable glaze.

An unusual bottle found by the university crew is in reality a triple vessel converging in a single opening with a short neck, the three tubular receptacles with bulbous bases on which the vessel rests being joined by thin rungs of pottery. Where each division curves to meet the base of the neck is a crude representation of a human face with eyes, nose and mouth incised in the pottery.

Another interesting combination form found resembles a jar in the lower portion, which is joined to a long neck such as other bottles have. A ridge or flange rising above the joining gives the effect of a bottle inside a pot. Around the edge of this flange, at equal intervals are four small loop-handles. There are also traces of decoration of a darker clay than that of the glaze on the pot.

Several large flat bowls have been discovered with bones as the sole remainder of the prehistoric menu. Many of these have been crushed flat by the weight of earth, but the pieces are carefully taken out and the vessels whenever possible, will be reconstructed. One of these with a uniform six-toothed edge held the skeletal remains of a fish, indicating that Red River even then helped to vary the diet of folks living nearby.

Among the vessels found by Mr. Sanders prior to the university party's work here, are two large egg-shaped water jars, about eighteen inches high. Each has a small round opening at the top, and in the edge, two holes on opposite sides, for suspension. These were included in the collection sold by Mr. Sanders to the university this year.

The bottles nearly all have similar decoration—triple rows of raised nubs from the bottom of the pot to the base of the neck. These carry out typical Caddo motifs of decoration; the groups of rows dividing the surface of the bottle into either three or four equal parts.

Several stone pipes and pipe bowls of pottery have been found in this mound, the former having the four winds symbol, indicating that the pipes may have been intended for ceremonial purposes. One recalls old chronicles which tell of the smoking of the calumet as a preliminary to councils or other occasions, the smoke being wafted successively to the four points of the compass as incense to the gods.

The gorgets discovered in Sanders' mound typify in their decorations many of the characteristic symbols employed by the Caddos, as described in an article on "The Analysis of Decoration Upon Pottery from the Mississippi Valley" by C. C. Willoughby and published in the "Journal of American Folklore," a number of years ago.

Many of these symbols were common to many American Indian nations, and are found in different variations in different sections. In the paper mentioned, the symbol for the sun is variously described as a dot, a circle or several eccentric circles.

The sign of the four winds or four cardinal directions was an equal-armed cross in any of its many variations. As the circle indicated not only the sun but the horizon as well, the cross inside appears as the symbol of the universe as the Indian conceived it. From this also grew the American swastika, two S-shaped curves crossing in the center to form right angles.

In some of the gorgets or medallions more elaborate in decoration, the cross forms the central motif; some are pierced and carved into delicate filigree work, the precision with which the formal patterns are executed being astonishing when one considers the crude tools with which they were fashioned.

One of these at least uses a conventionalized bird motif, the long neck curving toward the center so that the heads meet and the wings outspread so as to touch the outer border.

Another, fully as intricate in design, has the curved swastika design in the center and two circles of perforations which with the lines engraved upon the surface, give an almost face-like appearance to the ornament.

Still another medallion, not pierced except by two holes evidently to permit suspension about the neck, has the cross and circle in the center, and rayed lines engraved and the divisions geometrically divided, the edge evenly rounded into twenty-four scallops.

While the method of making pottery is more or less the same among primitive peoples all over the world, the manufacture of the countless shell beads and these gorgets and other objects of shell is still to a large extent a matter of conjecture.

material from which these ornaments, as well as ceremonial cups or dippers were fashioned. In making the latter, the outer surface of the shell was ground smooth and the inner convolutions sawed out to form the vessel.

Party Encamped at Mound.

M. R. HARRINGTON, whose study of the Caddoan Indians has been most extensive, devotes considerable space to discussion of these shell ornaments and beads in a publication issued by the Museum of the American Indian.

He says while they might have been derived ready-made through intertribal trade with the Gulf coast (since the shells are of marine origin), "there is no reason why they could not have been made by the Caddo, being laboriously sawed, scraped and ground into form with sharp flints and gritty stones . . . drilling of shallow holes could easily be accomplished with a flint drill."

The mound now is being excavated is but one of several in this immediate locality, a low bank being well defined between this one and another one to the west on the border of Bois d'Arc creek. As water is always a primary consideration for the casual camper as for the city dweller, so the Indians made this their first essential in the selection of a camping site, and the mounds may have been built to afford refuge in times of floods.

A good campsite is equally important to the anthropologists who have set up temporary housekeeping within a short distance of the "diggings". The party is under direction of A. T. Jackson, in charge of field operations and personal representative of Prof. Pearce, head of the anthropology department of the state university. Mr. Jackson is the author of a number of articles on Texas history, folklore and traditions.

The personnel includes B. B. Gardner who last year had charge of some of the field operations for the university and was tutor in archaeology there. He leaves in September to enter Harvard where he has a fellowship.

Two former students of the university, O. A. Hart and John Davis have been with the party this summer as well as last year, and others with the group this season are Walter Goldschmidt, student and laboratory worker at the university, Carl Chelf, prospective student there, and J. M. Henderson of Llano, amateur archaeologist.

At present, the entire energies of the archaeology department of the state university are being centered on the work on this site. Earlier in the season, some of the men had been engaged in operations on the coast in Chambers county, and prior to that time, excavations and explorations were in progress in Upshur, Camp, Harrison, Franklin, Hopkins, and Wood counties. Last summer, Titus and Morris counties were the scene of extensive and fruitful operations, and some work was done in Red River and Fannin counties.

Excavation was begun on the steeper north side of the mound, to determine the level there of undisturbed earth—the point at which the manmade eminence began. Exploratory trenching was continued on through the mass of earth to the south, until burials and other remains began to be encountered.

Cross trenches, east and west, the length of the mound, were dug out as more finds were uncovered, until the central portion of it is a labyrinthine maze of irregular passages and excavated chambers, the earth now being heaped up to the north side far higher than the top of the mound at the time work was started.

"I thought they said they were going to dig this mound down," says a resident of Direct as he watched the operations one day, "but it looks to me now like they are digging it UP instead."

Each burial as it is found is identified with a serial number and every skeleton, pot or other object in the group is labeled correspondingly and definitely located on a key map of the mound and in sketches of the individual burials. This will permit each to be studied in relation to the whole.

Carefully packed to avoid breakage, the relics are taken to Austin as from time to time, members of the party make the trip to the capital city, and all these objects will be placed in the University museum, available to all students and others interested in anthropology research.

The workmen discovered long ago that a minimum of clothing is coolest for work under a broiling sun, and as use of shelters is not always feasible, the coppery color they have acquired makes resemblance to the red man at least skin deep, and is apt to give the observer, coming upon one of them unexpectedly, the startling effect of seeing an Indian above ground as well as the remains below.

Moving a Group Burial.

IN undertaking the removal of a group burial, one typical of those encountered in the mound was selected for the purpose the pottery and ornaments being left in place about the skeletons. The earth was cleared away from the top and around the group was cut down several inches so as to leave a slab projecting several inches from the foundation soil.

Molten paraffin was then poured over the top of the slab, permeating bones and soil, so that as the wax cooled and hardened, the skeletons were held firmly in place. The top of the mass was then packed with excelsior and burlap to protect the bones.

A crosscut saw failing to serve in loosening the slab from its foundation of undisturbed soil, a stand of barbed wire was tried and found to be effective. Sheets of corrugated iron were then forced under the severed mass to form a solid base. Beneath this, timbers were inserted and cross pieces nailed to them to form a framework.

Poles cut from saplings were pushed under the frame, and the assistance of several interested spectators enlisted to aid in hoisting the weighty burden, then borne out of the trench and loaded into the trailer for the journey to Austin.

As a result, anthropology students and others interested in Texas archaeology will be enabled to study a Caddoan burial "as is" without making a field trip or visiting the site of excavating operations, for the group is destined for a place in the university's museum.

Mr. Pearce and others interested in the projects have for several years past bent their efforts toward having a state museum established, since without an adequate place for proper preservation of these relics, many specimens will be irrevocably lost.

Referring to the proposed museum, Mr. Pearce in a recent lecture delivered in the open air theatre at the university said: "The digging up of all these invaluable specimens may seem idle to some people, but later on, they will become the basis of a great cosmopolitan museum in Texas. Other museums the world over will be glad and anxious to trade characteristic relics of their sections of the earth for pieces of flint or pottery that speak so eloquently of the Indian life of Texas which the white man ruthlessly destroyed."

It was in connection with this lecture on "Digging Up the Past in Texas," that Mr. Pearce displayed for the first time in public a number of interesting vessels and artifacts which were unearthed in East Texas by these same workmen now operating in Lamar county.

Tigers Nose Out Stanton In Exciting Contest Thursday

One of those oft heard of but seldom seen home runs that broke up a fall game in an extra inning of play came off the bat of Crouch in the tenth inning.

A desperate rally in the last half of the ninth pulled the Tigers from behind a 5-3 lead held unconsciously by Stanton.

In the tenth Valdez popped a foul to Timmons, twirler for Stanton.

Conahoma, Texas, Aug. 17, 1931. Editor Herald: I was much surprised to read in a recent issue of your valuable paper, the announcement of a telegram sent by you, to Governor Minter, asking him to join with other governors of other states, to issue a proclamation requesting farmers to plow under half their cotton crop.

Just why such a suicidal proposal as this should be made by intelligent business men, is something I can't understand. It would seem to stand in the same category, with that of a farmer who would advise a merchant or a manufacturer who has goods on hand, to throw them into the water, because there is no ready market, to burn half their stock in order to create a market for the remainder which they could sell at a profit.

The farmers have spent this year, labor and money, in making this crop and by reason of conditions over which they have no control the prices of their products are far below cost of production. It has been pointed out by economists and those in position to know what they are talking about, that the chaotic condition of the world markets, is the result of a lack of buying power of the consuming public. Assuming this to be true what could the farmer hope to gain by destroying half or any other fraction of his crop? It would seem to be a much cheaper course for the farmer to simply let his crop go, and remain in the "patch" and allow the elements to perform the work of destruction.

There is no denying the fact, that the cotton farmer is facing a storm—so far as a market for his cotton is concerned, but as I see it, he has no one to kick but himself for this deplorable state of affairs. He is the helpless victim of his own greed and folly in shipping the present surplus to market, instead of harvesting his great staple by pulling, snapping and stacking, he has sealed his doom for all time or at least until this cut-throat practice is stopped. If he thought for a minute that he was putting one by on the spinners and buyers, he certainly has another "think" coming now. This imprudent and irrevocable practice of pulling, shedding and snapping and mechanical gathering of our great southern staple, has flooded the market with a low grade cotton which the world does not want and the "trade" can not use except as a weapon with which to hammer down the price of our best grades of cotton, and this they are doing with a vengeance if we may believe what the best posted authorities tell us.

The only way to effectually and permanently relieve the present distressed condition of the cotton farmer, is for the federal government to ascertain the amount of bolly, dogtail and other unusable grades now held in store, which no doubt represents a large per cent of the huge carry over we hear such a howl about, and when and where ever found, to have the government proceed to cotton, and destroy same, and then have the best grades of the cotton states pass a law at the earliest possible date, making it a felony punishable by a term of from five to twenty years in the penitentiary and a fine of from $5,000 to $10,000, or both, for any man to gin, sell or offer for sale a bale or part of a bale of bolly cotton, either pulled, snapped, sheared or machine gathered.

Such a law, if properly enforced, would automatically solve the acreage problem. It would cure the plight of unemployment so far as the South is concerned. The howl of overproduction would fade away like the wail of the banshee. It would give our long suffering politicians a much needed rest from the arduous task of deciding ways and means of helping the farmer and restore prosperity and happiness to the people of our whole Southland.

Let our governors and law makers, consider this plan before ordering the cotton plowed up.

Move To Plow Up Cotton Not Ended Board Head Says

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21 (UP)—The federal farm board has not abandoned its proposal to plow under a third of the current cotton crop, and looks for drastic acreage curtailment to result from the suggestion, Chairman Stone said today.

At his weekly press conference, Stone said most of the cotton states governors had expressed opposition to the plan, but denied it had been given up.

It's scarves and suits this season. At the left Fay Wray wears a scarf of black and white tweed. Her hat has the material of the scarf for a clever side effect. At the right Eleanor Boardman wears a smart tailored tweed suit set off with ascot tie and close fitting hat.

101 Ranch Show Again Stranded

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21 (UP)—The 101 Ranch Wild West Show was stranded again today—this time by legal writs backing up its 400 employees' demand for payment of back wages.

Starting here in Oklahoma after two weeks' delay in Washington the circus moved just six miles to Maryland and was stopped there by the train as it crossed into the state from the District of Columbia. They were armed with a suitcase of attachments papers.

The attachments said the circus owners were "absconding debtors" and decreed that the train must not be moved until a hearing is held. If the employers are upheld by the courts, the show could be sold at auction to satisfy their claims for $25,000.

The employees had been on a two-week strike in Washington, refusing to move a tent stake until they were paid. Manager Charles T. Boulware finally imported a gang of Negro laborers to load the equipment, cattle, horses and supplies, and the train pulled out at night.

Meanwhile attorneys for the employees appeared at Justice of the Peace Oscar Moore at Capital Heights, Md. For relief under the Maryland wage law.

Ninety-seven writs were in the court's hands when they stopped the train and 200 more were being drawn up today.

Professors, freaks and romantics tumbled out of the circus grinning. Camp fires sprang up. Dice rattled. The show folk made themselves comfortable, confident that they would get their money after all.

Manager Boulware, chafed his beard in two.

"Let 'em have the show," he grumbled. "They're doing us a favor by taking it off our hands."

SUIT SPOTS VIADUCT WEEK

BEAUMONT, Texas, Aug. 21 (UP)—A temporary injunction has been granted in fifty-sixth district court here restraining the city and the Southern Pacific railroad from carrying out any of the terms of a contract providing for construction of a railroad viaduct through downtown Beaumont. A bond in excess of $500,000 for the work was posted in July.

The suit was brought by several individuals and a building company, attacking the validity of the contract and alleging the instrument unreasonable in that the city allegedly could force the railroad to provide traffic relief under the city charter and laws of the state.

worked here with Community Chest, Boy Scout and Red Cross work in addition to his pastoral duties.

Mr. Kelley summed up his expression of appreciation for Mr. Owen by saying that "he is the sweetest hearted man I've ever known."

The minister's position is difficult. He lives alone. He must devise his work out of his own heart and generally with little help from officers of the church. Mr. Kelley pointed out. Most estimates of ministers are whoppers. Mr. Owen's work here has been hard but I have yet to know of him playing himself. When a man works under the handicap that we have faced, he can keep his heart sweet. You've found a jewel of a man and a preacher.

Without Mrs. Owen, said Mr. Kelley, certain heart-braking things would not have happened in the church here.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen both spoke briefly.

Mr. Miller, the lieutenant governor, a veteran Kansan, said he had rarely seen such a manifestation of genuine fellowship in a club as shown in the program of the day.

"If the administration had been so eager to serve the people of Texas as it obviously was to serve the Standard Oil trust, it would promptly have sued the major companies for violating the Texas anti-trust law when they misused their absolute control of market outlets by cutting the price they paid for East Texas crude oil to a few cents a barrel. And if the state administration had wanted to give the people of Texas an even break in the oil business, it would have taken steps to tax the big companies out of the filling station business, so that Texas producers and refiners might be able to retail their products here at home."

The governor's adventure in socialism, usurping authority which the 42nd legislature in special session refused to grant him, will make him a one term governor. The people of Texas are not yet ready to have their state government operated as a Standard Oil subsidiary, nor to surrender constitutional government in favor of a military dictatorship."

Frontier Relics Found

MONAHANS, Aug. 21 (UP)—Grim reminders of the early days of struggle and thirst in West Texas and the days when the Comanche Indians maintained their last camp at the weeping willow springs, 12 miles north of Monahans, are being collected by souvenir hunters.

Half a dozen old guns, old models, loaded and ready to shoot, have been found. Spurs of copper, old trinkets, wagon yokes and some human skulls—all have been taken from the Indian camping place where 200 immigrants were killed. The collection in the office of the Monahans News was begun by Sam Hayes.

ing done by women, the most surprising thing to a foreigner is the type of work in which a Russian maid indulges. Buxom peasant women, to whom work on the farms of their native caucasia is drudgery actually enjoy wielding a pick and shovel on some great construction enterprise or railroad. Ten hours barefooted track walking under a broiling sun is accomplished with all the enthusiasm you might expect to find in a group of picknickers.

Any kind of work in which machinery plays a part seems particularly to attract the young women. In Moscow where the reconstruction of the streets is being carried on with amazing speed, most of the operators of the American steam rollers are young women.

A young Russian woman would be in paradise—a red paradise—if a concrete mixer were entrusted to her.

When it comes to the traffic situation in Russia, the women are the only chauffeurs who seem to realize that it is possible to drive a car under 60 miles an hour. Unlike the men, they have discovered that most cars are equipped with brakes for a definite purpose. Merely driving a car is not enough, for the women who have gone in for mechanics and are capable of applying their knowledge.

Policewomen
Most of the really effective looking police are women whose muscular equipment cuts them admirably for any Russian variety of the "third degree" that may become necessary. They still wear skirts. A look at some of the buxom cops sets you wondering what police brutality might be like in the land of Lenin.

Not all Russian women have turned to manual labor as a means of displaying their talents. Many have entered professions such as medicine where they are treated on equal terms with their male fellow workers. Dentistry has proved a popular field for the women, and many a Muscovite molar has stopped throbbing and aching thanks to some young woman's skill.

An unusually large number of women are employed in the banks and offices in work which would appear to be a man's job. In such work also the women seem to have more initiative and determination than the average male worker. They seem to realize that, in the eyes of the rest of the world at least, they are on trial and they are bound to prove that there are few things for which they are not suited.

The Russian theater has also attracted a large number of women. They may be found working in all the various phases of theatrical production.

No matter whether a woman is working with her brains or her hands, she feels in Russia that she is playing a real part in a great enterprise which depends for success on the cooperation of thousands of people like herself. Feeling thus about the situation it is easy for women workers to keep up their interest and enthusiasm naturally.

WOMEN IN ODD DRIVE TO AVERT MEN'S WAGE CUT

PITTSBURGH—(INS)—Fighting to save the jobs and the wage scales of their husbands, almost 500 women in this section have banded themselves together in a campaign to build up passenger traffic of a railway company here.

The wives, mobilized as if a war-time emergency existed, are pushing a vigorous drive among their friends and acquaintances to urge them to ride the electric cars more often and thus stave off feared reductions in the payroll.

Railway officials instigated the movement, appealing to the women to attempt to avert a wage cut by mass electric car salesmanship. Meetings were held throughout the railway district, with superintendents and managers addressing the assembled wives.

VOLUME XXVI

BIG SPRING, TEXAS, FRIDAY, AUGUST 21, 1931.

NUMBER 45

Murray Predicts $1 Per Barrel By Friday

One of the most sensible articles on the subject of community betterment and city planning that we have ever read appears in the current issue of The Kiwanis Magazine. Orvis M. Jordan of the Park Ridge club, Illinois, is the author.

We can think today of no other matter that would be so valuable for this column and the articles follows.

The immortal Topsy of Uncle Tom's Cabin did not have any parents. She just grew. That is the way with a lot of towns. Nobody ever planned them. Perhaps an accident makes a town. And another accident spoils it again. The village where Abraham Lincoln kept a grocery store never came to much. Another village in a marsh became within a hundred years one of the four great cities of the world—Chicago. It is only here and there that one finds cities with any very definite study of what its future is going to be.

Even when cities are planned, very often the planners cannot think of anything except to make them bigger. It is so seldom that people are intelligently concerned about making them better. Yet the most interesting cities of the world have never been the biggest. Athens was not one of the three large cities of the Roman empire, nor was Jerusalem. Antioch of Cilicia was the third city in size in that world. But who ever bothers about Antioch? It was out of Jerusalem and Athens that influences went to remake civilization. The reverence for these ancient centers will keep them alive to the end of time.

Even in our modern world, the biggest city is not the most interesting or the most worth while to live in. Why would rather visit Hamburg than Oberammergau in Germany? No tourist ever boasts of having seen Hamburg. But he does take pride in having spent two days in a village which has less than 3,000 permanent residents? Who would rather spend time in Liverpool than in Oxford? Oxford has something which intrigues every person who visits Great Britain.

All of which suggests that if we wish to be favorably known in this big world, our city must have something more than mere biggest. It must have quality. It must be a good place in which to live. Intelligent city planning must include all the elements that make a good community. People leave towns because the schools are inferior just as often as because business is bad. They go to places where the churches are more helpful, or where the cultural opportunities are more pronounced.

The service club which stresses a motto "We Build" must have a program wide enough to include the big considerations of community development. Building is better than hoisting. Sales talks will never help sell a town to a newcomer when it is not a good buy. Frivolous promotion is easy and cheap, but it gets nowhere.

Our ideal city of Evermanville must first of all be concerned with the public health. Health is no longer merely a personal concern. Let a man be ever so careful of his health, if he is exposed to another man who is careless, he may find himself ill. The town that tolerates a frog pond full of polywogs is going to have malaria, in all probability. The town that has no health officer, or an incompetent one, is bound to have contagious diseases that cost money and endanger life. One of the best ads that a town can have is to show that it has a low death rate. To have this there must be consideration of hospital facilities, medical attention for the very poor and a public indifference with regard to the hygiene that will preserve health. If the ordinary man knew as much about his body as a doctor does, the life insurance

Dealers are responsible for the stamping of the supply they have on hand when the law becomes effective. However, they will receive them afterward already stamped by the jobber or wholesaler.

It was the consensus of opinion that packages of 20 cigarettes would retail for 18 cents or two packages for 35 cents under the law. However, it was deemed probable in local circles that a 20 cent price would be levied on a single package with a 5-cent cut available when the cigarettes were bought in two package lots.

Wide Section Of Southwest Feels Tremors Of Earth

5:44 A.M. Time Of Vibrations Of Earth Here

People Recount Sensations Felt When Ground Swayed

People in Big Spring, along with residents of a wide region in Texas and eastern New Mexico, experienced a new sensation Sunday morning.

Earth tremors were registered over a territory extending from Amarillo to San Antonio, Fort Worth to El Paso.

The disturbance was felt here about three minutes beginning at 5:44 a. m.

There was no actual damage in Big Spring.

Powdered plaster fell down walls of a few of the older buildings.

Light fixtures swung. A few electric refrigerators were "kicked on." Beds wobbled. Dishes rattled. Window weights beat against frames.

The whole town spent Sunday and Monday exchanging accounts of sensations felt when slumber was disturbed by the tremors.

Guests in hotels, especially the taller buildings, reported the most pronounced manifestations of the disturbance.

There were a few guests dashed from their rooms, one couple having "made" four flights of stairs in an effort to reach the street, before the vibrations ended.

The only audible reflection of the quake was the rhythmic swinging of window weights, against frames.

A. M. Ripps reported he was passing in front of the Montgomery Ward building when the first vibrations started. Windows rattled and he retreated to the middle of the street, he said.

Will Knox Edwards said he had just arisen when the "shaking" started and, passing a china cabinet in the dining room, caught it just before dishes fell to the floor.

Mrs. Nat Shick and daughter, Lillian, who were in California two days ago when an earthquake did considerable damage, were aware of the nature of the disturbance as "a nice little earthquake we're having," Miss Shick said to awaken her father.

Art Goebel, Conqueror of Pacific, Here Enroute To Start of Air Race

Good-Natured Flier Tells of Conditions Speedsters Cope With

A tall, dark-haired young man clad in a gray flannel suit Sunday quietly stood on the veranda of the American Airways terminal and chatted freely. In fact so quiet was he that people in more than 50 automobiles parked along the bounds of the landing field did not know that Art Goebel, winner of the Dole flight prize, whom they had come to see on board the west bound air transport.

Goebel was on his way to Los Angeles, California, where he is making preparations to enter the annual Cleveland air races to be held in late August and early September. He came from Dallas on the ship that was to pick up W. L. "Young" Stripling and his charming wife in El Paso.

The noted flier who ranks along with Colonel Lindbergh, Captain Frank Hawks, and others as leading American figures in aviation, is so unostentatious that it was difficult to distinguish him from the other passengers who are alighted from the ship. A fellow passenger on the ship was asked if Goebel was on the plane and replied that he did not think so, adding that surely the aviator would be flying one of his own ships.

Goebel was singled from the crowd by an engraved belt buckle he was wearing.

He was cordial and talked fluently, though in a soft tone of voice. "Yes, I intend to try at the transcontinental speed record held by Captain Hawks, but I am interested primarily in entering the Cleveland air races, if I make Cleveland in plenty of time I will continue my flight to New York."

From Dallas Goebel has been in Dallas recently. He has also been working on plans for a Diesel airplane motor.

Asked if he thought that type of motor held any possibilities in the future of aviation, he answered: "Yes, undoubtedly. It produces more power, can run longer and is, by far the most economical. It also produces more speed."

He predicted that it would not be long before aircraft would feature that type of engine altogether.

"Oh, my ship is already out of the factory," he explained when asked if he were on his way to superintend the construction of the ship. "It is a Lockheed-Loxheed Vega. The cruising speed? Well, I don't know yet. I haven't tried it. But that doesn't make a great deal of difference. Speed on long stretches depends largely on weather conditions. Most of the speed records established are made by flyers who sit around and wait for favorable conditions and then fly. But in this coming race I won't be able to do it."

As to Speed No direct altitude in regard to flying for speed he said it was variable. "Anyone who watches the wind and makes a study of the weather charts and balloon flights can tell when it is a good time and map a course accordingly. As a general rule the winds are more turbulent down here than in the north. "Or, are they" he asked.

No direct route will be used in the coming Cleveland air races because craft may vary two or three hundred miles off the route and still make better speed under certain conditions, he said.

"You can't tell about it, if you hang around and watch the weather. It costs you a neat sum each day. Once, however, I hit it right and flew across the United States at 15,000 feet and had good tail wind all the way. But that is the exception rather than the rule.

On being asked how on his trip he had fared, he replied: "Thanks." Then he added with a good natured smile, "Well, we'll have a lot of fun trying anyway."

Beaumont Bull Story Prize Yarn Of Year

BEAUMONT, Texas, Aug. 14 (AP) Hugh Walpole, famous novelist, once wrote a short story of a bull fight, as follows:

Chapter 1 One bull, three toradors Chapter 2 One bull, two toradors Chapter 3 One bull, one torador Conclusion One bull

Beaumont's bull fight story would well be written like this: First and Last Chapter No bull, no toradors Council sion

If it happened when rumors flew thick and fast, hat local Mexicans were going to bring real bulls and real toradors here and stage a bullfight at the Mexican Independence day celebration September 15 and 16. The rumors even found their way to print in our daily newspaper.

The story immediately spurred the Humane society into action. It immediately was followed by an emphatic denial by Ramira Mench, chairman of the committee on arrangements, that any such bloody event was even remotely contemplated by the committee.

BUFFS WIN FIRST HALF TEXAS LEAGUE PENNANT OFF BEAUMONT SHIPPERS

BEAUMONT, Aug. 14 (AP)—Houston won the first half pennant of the Texas league here by making timely base walk-offs off three Beaumont pitchers to romp away with a 5 to 2 win in the deciding game of the play-off. Five thousand fans packed the stands to see the Buffs grab their third victory in the titular play-off, losing but one and tying one in the five games played.

Tex Hurts Hand
Tex Carleton started for the Buffaloes but when he eased up after being hit on the finger by a ball returned by Springs, he was relieved in the fifth when the first two Shippers reached first safely. George Washington Payne came to Tex's rescue and except for the Beaumont flurry in the eighth that netted two runs, Payne was never in trouble. Izzy Goldstein started for the Exporters but fled under a barrage of blows in the fifth, Guy Green completing this round. Buck Marrow stepped to the box at the beginning of the sixth and finished. Carleton received credit for the win and Goldstein the loss.
In the sixth inning Taylor and Springs came to blows at the key stone bag. When the Buff catcher spilled the Exporter shortstop as he slid into second trying to break up a force play, he thought Taylor fell on him a little too hard and grabbed Eddie's legs. Taylor came up and they clinched, but were soon parted.

More Hostilities
In the seventh inning Fritz and Selph came to blows after the Exporter first baseman believed the Houston second baseman had spiked him deliberately. After taking the ball from Schube, Fritz whirled and threw it at Selph, hitting him between the shoulders. Selph waded in and they passed a dozen blows before order was restored.
The Buffs jumped away to a two-run lead in the opening inning when Hook singled to center, moved to second on Smith's sacrifice and scored when Selph singled to left. Selph stole second and came home on Medwick's single to left after Peal had whiffed.

The Buffs added two more in the fifth. Carleton led off with a single to right and was forced by Hook on an attempted sacrifice. Hook moving to second when Taylor threw wild to first trying to complete a twin killing. But Selph doubled to left to count Hook and Peal. Selph doubled to center to count Selph. Green replaced Goldstein and walked. Medwick, but Sturdy grounded out.

The Buffs added two singles by Carey and Payne gave the Buffs their other run in the eighth. It was in this inning the Exporters counted their two rallies. Taylor beat out an infield hit to Sturdy and went to second on Schube's single to right. Both advanced on White's infield out, and when Hughes singled to short left, Taylor scored and Schube took third. White Payne was throwing out Easterling, Schube counted.

Plenty 'O Lasses! Big Spring Farmer Ready To Cook 3000 Gallons From Bumper Ribbon Cane Crop

Walter Landers, whose farm is located six miles north of here, is not worrying about the price of cotton.
He says he knew last spring cotton wouldn't be worth anything this season so he figured out some other way to make some money.
Today Mr. Landers and a half dozen helpers are operating an old-time syrup mill, something that is rarely seen in West Texas.
And, it's an unusually efficient mill, too.
When other farmers learned the mill was ready to operate they began hauling in regular red top sorghum, which they had planted for feed, to be made into syrup.
Landers' own cane crop covers 85 acres. Most of it is seeded ribbon cane. The stalks average more than eight feet in height—walking down through the field makes you feel you're down in some deep East Texas sand bottom.
Estimated yield of syrup from the Landers crop is 2500 to 3000 gallons. The product now is worth about 85 cents per gallon. A plan is being worked out to offer the home product for sale through Big Spring retailers.

Mr. Landers bought a 12-foot by 4-inch cooking pan and a small mill. He set the pan on a brick firebox, put the mill on a knoll adjacent to the pan, took two old Ford motors he had around the place and set one for motive power, turning the other into an air compressor.
The air compressor, using but two cylinders, is set parallel to the motor. A drum with a regular crank is located next to it. Fuel oil and compressed air provide an even, intense heat—economically produced. Fuel oil—costs fifty cents per barrel at the refinery and about three barrels a day is sufficient.
As the raw juice from the cane leaves the mill it runs through a strainer into a barrel beside the mill. By gravity it flows through a pipe to the pan, where the cooking process begins.
After being sufficiently cooked the syrup runs through a small outlet through another strainer into covered receptacle fitted with a faucet. It is drawn, then, directly into the buckets.
In a few days Landers' cane crop will be ready to strip and then he will begin making his own syrup.

C-C Directors Hold Session County Fair Matter Delayed Until Next Regular Meeting
Members of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce, in a regular meeting Monday evening, voted to delay any appeal for new members.
The special committee named to determine whether sufficient funds to guarantee premiums for a county agricultural fair could be obtained was directed to make its final report at the next meeting.
It was voted to hold a meeting of the railroad committee not later than November 1 or earlier, if conditions justify.
Minutes of a previous meeting were amended to form a motion which was adopted, that the city commission be asked to make an investigation of utility rates.
Carl Blomaheld was named contact man to the Junior Chamber of Commerce board.

Crosses Bridges As They Come
AUSTIN, Aug. 18 (UP)—Rosa Shaw Sterling, multi-millionaire governor of Texas, who "crosses bridges only when he comes to them," does things according to the strict letter of the law. His martial law proclamation and shutdown order for the East Texas oil field was issued after long and careful deliberation.
A big man, weighing 260 pounds, Gov. Sterling is slow of motion and cautious of speech. He called four assistant attorneys general into a conference yesterday to help him write his martial law proclamation. While it was written and correspondents were called in to receive advance copies, the ruddy, bespectacled executive would answer no questions.
"You've got a complete document

Justice of Peace Wires Governor Deputy Sheriff Ordered Him Out Of County; At Odds Over Death Probe

AUSTIN, Aug. 15 (AP)—A. R. Mace, captain of rangers in the Corpus Christi district, said tonight he had ordered two of his men to go this afternoon to San Patricio county, where Miss Dorothy Symons was killed a short time ago.
Captain Mace took the action after receiving a telegram from two Aransas Pass commissioners.
"He gives everything to the newspapers doesn't he?" he remarked of Gov. W. H. (Alfalfa Bill) Murray when Murray was sending telegrams to Austin before he issued martial law orders for Oklahoma.
The governor is publisher of the Houston Post-District, one of the state's most widely circulated morning papers.
"I'd fire any one on my paper who put something in it I asked him not to put in," he told correspondents when he was considering martial law requests.
He is mild and frugal of emotion. When he was grilled and well-nigh necked by members of the house of representatives during its investigation, Gov. Sterling retained his composure and his temper.
Unlike his tobacco-chewing, stoop-shouldered, cotton-clad contemporary in Oklahoma, Gov. Sterling does not use tobacco in any form. He will not drink intoxicating liquor. He wears expensive clothes, but removes his coat and vest when at work. When he is particularly busy he receives delegations in his shirt-sleeves.
In shadows
His desk is in the darkest corner of his office and the governor sits in shadow, his face illuminated by the glow from a desk lamp. His speech, like that of "Alfalfa Bill" Sterling of the common people, smacks of folksy sayings such as "you boys" and sometimes lapses into the use of "come" when "came" is called for by strict rules of grammar. He used to run a freight hauler on Galveston Bay, ferrying hay and grain for his neighbors. He comes from a family of seven brothers and four sisters.
He married when 23 years old, borrowed $2,000 and bought a feed store, paid the money back in a year; opened more stores in the New Humble and Bour Lake oil fields near the Gulf of Mexico.
Sterling did not gamble in oil holdings. His first "plunge" was a purchase of two producing wells. Within a year he had organized the Humble Oil Co. When his young set son, Ross Shaw Jr., died in 1921, Sterling was able to give the Y. M. C. of South Texas a beautiful wooded camp on Galveston Bay as a memorial.

Higher Price For Crude Expected By Gov. Sterling
AUSTIN, Aug. 18 (UP)—Gov. Ross Sterling, seated at a desk covered with belated petitions for martial law in East Texas and congratulatory messages on his shut down of the oil field there, expressed satisfaction today with progress of his efforts to control the huge field.
"I haven't the least doubt that purchasing companies themselves will say that the price of oil will be increased," he said, when asked if he thought an increase in the price of crude oil would follow the shut down.
Gov. Sterling said he was advised by Lieut. Chas. Perlitz, aide to Brig. Gen. Jacob F. Wolters, in command in East Texas, that the entire field would be shut down by tonight. Lieut. Perlitz reported, the governor said, that many operators shut down their wells at 6 a. m. today without waiting for orders. He said that when troops reached East Texas they found that several independent operators, anticipating the order, shut down Sunday.
Oil companies began advising the governor at noon that they will continue their employees on payroll until cessation of the shutdown.
"I commend them for that," Gov. Sterling said. "Oil field workers are not interested in the price of oil but do want something to live on."
He refused to say how long he expected to enforce the shutdown, but said the railroad commission would have its first funds to enforce the new conservation law on Sept. 1 if the shut down has not deprived them of all the anticipated tax on production.
"We'll shut down last 30 days," the governor was asked.
"I hesitate to predict," he replied. "We don't want the boys to get tired over there. A 30-day vacation would be pretty long for some of them."
Gov. Sterling said that curtailment of oil production by 700,000 barrels daily in Texas and 300,000 barrels daily in Oklahoma would certainly have a tendency to increase prices.
"Soon the major companies will have to draw on their storage," he said. "They don't want to use high priced stored oil to make cheap gasoline."
"I shut down the fields so when the railroad commission starts enforcing its new law it can do it on more orderly basis. It is a lot easier to control something when you start from a stationary position than when you take it over out of control."
Marginal, stripper and other wells were included in the general shut down, the governor said, because he wanted to show favoritism for no operators.
A practical oil man himself, he had prepared figures to justify his shutdown order and read them to correspondents. He had them verified by R. D. Parker, chief superintendent of the oil and gas division of the railroad commission.
"I find that one billion five hundred million cubic of gas were being burned every day," the governor said. "Oil company chemists say the gas will produce from 7 to 10 gallons of casinghead gasoline per 1,000 cubic feet.
"Calculating the yield at five gallons for the sake of being conservative, the price at three cents per gallon, that gas would yield a daily income of $225,000. The 700,000 barrels of oil produced per day, at 15 cents per barrel, is worth only $105,000."

Co-Op To Hold Meeting Here
Three Objects In View By Officials; Murray May Speak
The Texas Cotton Cooperation Association will hold a meeting in the court house here Tuesday, September 1, at 2 p. m. It was announced Tuesday.
P. C. Leatherwood, J. W. Woodson and W. C. Rogers are local council men in charge of the meeting.
It is likely R. J. Murray, general manager of the organization, will be the principal speaker.
Three objects are in view by the organization, which is holding meetings in many counties. They are: (1) establishment of a system whereby growers would be paid on basis of quality of lint; (2) obtaining more profit for the grower by a system that would carry the cotton from grower to consumer at minimum cost; (3) establishment of a marketing system owned and controlled by growers and powerful enough to influence more effectively the merchandising of the American cotton supply.

Way Cleared For New Road In Lower Valley
SAN BENITO, Aug. 14 (AP)—Injunctions have been dissolved, right-of-way secured, contract awarded, and other preparations made for paving the remaining unpaved section of General Zachary Taylor's historic old military highway in the valley.
The two gaps in Cameron county are to be paved by the state highway department, half the funds being furnished by the county.
The paving work was threatened for a time by an injunction suit.

Rabies Not More Violent In Summer
EL PASO, Aug. 14 (AP)—Contrary to popular opinion, says Dr. Hugh White, director of the Pasteur Institute at Austin, rabies, or hydrophobia, is not more prevalent in hot weather.
"The disease is of the germ type," he said, "it can only be transmitted when a victim is bitten by an animal suffering with the disease. Climate has little to do with it."
On a visit to El Paso recently, he said seven cases were treated at the institute in January, one in March, two in May and one in June, with none in July.

Terrell Receives 1st Bale Of 1931 Cotton
TERRELL, Texas, Aug. 14 (UP)—The first bale of cotton of the 1931 crop was received here today, raised by Tom Williams of Poth.
The bale was received 13 days later than last season. It will be sold at public auction Friday and a substantial premium will be added to the sale price. The bale weighed 555 pounds.
Counties put under martial law frankly admitted in a telegram to Governor Sterling that local officers could not cope with the situation if opposition developed to shut down orders.
In the homes of the workers there was some concern, too. Thousands of laborers wondered what the shut-down orders would mean to their pay checks. Some 500 producers already had closed in their wells, so the situation was partly adjusted. Large companies had used unemployment as a club to stave off drastic action, and when the governor called out the troops anyway it was feared these companies would immediately discharge their workmen.
A movement was started to ward off this situation, and many producers promised to continue meeting their payrolls during the shutdown. Many others refused to do so.

Crosses Bridges As They Come
AUSTIN, Aug. 18 (UP)—Rosa Shaw Sterling, multi-millionaire governor of Texas, who "crosses bridges only when he comes to them," does things according to the strict letter of the law. His martial law proclamation and shutdown order for the East Texas oil field was issued after long and careful deliberation.
A big man, weighing 260 pounds, Gov. Sterling is slow of motion and cautious of speech. He called four assistant attorneys general into a conference yesterday to help him write his martial law proclamation. While it was written and correspondents were called in to receive advance copies, the ruddy, bespectacled executive would answer no questions.

Wires Governor Deputy Sheriff Ordered Him Out Of County; At Odds Over Death Probe
AUSTIN, Aug. 15 (AP)—A. R. Mace, captain of rangers in the Corpus Christi district, said tonight he had ordered two of his men to go this afternoon to San Patricio county, where Miss Dorothy Symons was killed a short time ago.
Captain Mace took the action after receiving a telegram from two Aransas Pass commissioners.
"He gives everything to the newspapers doesn't he?" he remarked of Gov. W. H. (Alfalfa Bill) Murray when Murray was sending telegrams to Austin before he issued martial law orders for Oklahoma.
The governor is publisher of the Houston Post-District, one of the state's most widely circulated morning papers.
"I'd fire any one on my paper who put something in it I asked him not to put in," he told correspondents when he was considering martial law requests.
He is mild and frugal of emotion. When he was grilled and well-nigh necked by members of the house of representatives during its investigation, Gov. Sterling retained his composure and his temper.
Unlike his tobacco-chewing, stoop-shouldered, cotton-clad contemporary in Oklahoma, Gov. Sterling does not use tobacco in any form. He will not drink intoxicating liquor. He wears expensive clothes, but removes his coat and vest when at work. When he is particularly busy he receives delegations in his shirt-sleeves.
In shadows
His desk is in the darkest corner of his office and the governor sits in shadow, his face illuminated by the glow from a desk lamp. His speech, like that of "Alfalfa Bill" Sterling of the common people, smacks of folksy sayings such as "you boys" and sometimes lapses into the use of "come" when "came" is called for by strict rules of grammar. He used to run a freight hauler on Galveston Bay, ferrying hay and grain for his neighbors. He comes from a family of seven brothers and four sisters.
He married when 23 years old, borrowed $2,000 and bought a feed store, paid the money back in a year; opened more stores in the New Humble and Bour Lake oil fields near the Gulf of Mexico.
Sterling did not gamble in oil holdings. His first "plunge" was a purchase of two producing wells. Within a year he had organized the Humble Oil Co. When his young set son, Ross Shaw Jr., died in 1921, Sterling was able to give the Y. M. C. of South Texas a beautiful wooded camp on Galveston Bay as a memorial.

Depression War Is Its Name
KILGORE, Aug. 18 (UP)—A remark shouted by a high school boy to a greaser daughter as he rode in uniform on a National Guard truck rumbling away to the oil fields echoed today from camp as a sign of the troops mobilized to enforce Gov. Ross Sterling's order to close in all wells in the Bush East Texas region.
"We're here to fight the business depression," called out the headless soldier as he went, laughing and singing, to the "battleground."
The remark was caught up by other soldiers. It was shouted from truck to truck and the Texans who gathered along the way to watch their youths go away to the "war."
All in all, it was a happy army that was given the job of closing the oil fields until the price of crude oil reached $1 a barrel or the state gets new rules for conserving its natural resources. The only casualty was a youth who bounced out of a truck and lost a couple of teeth.
For Ribbles
Most of East Texas viewed the coming of the 800 troops the same way they viewed the first oil which gushed out of the ground in this section last December. Then they looked to the oil to bring them riches. Today they looked to these youthful troopers to save the riches which had come to them so unexpectedly and then faded away when the price of oil dropped from $2.50 to 14 cents a barrel.
Here and there sullen mutterings were heard from producers opposed to the shut down order, and the officers in command of the laughing boys were prepared to meet a serious situation if it should arise.
No clashes were really expected, but there was enough bad feeling between oil field factions that the officers took no chances.
Their feeling was shared by rangers, who have seen this mushroom town spring up without warning and who knew the troubles of sometimes come in new communities.
Kilgore, for instance, sprang up from a sleepy little place of 400 people into a city of 10,000 in less than six months. The new population occasionally gives trouble.

Rotarians At Ice Plant For Weekly Meet

The members of the Rotary Club and the Rotary Anna were the guests of Edwin E. Kelley, Rotarian, and the Southern Ice and Utilities Company at the regular weekly luncheon today.
The meal was served in the boiler room at the plant, the guests being seated at a long table over the brine tank. They were afterwards shown through the ice vaults and the present-day system of ice manufacture explained to them.
E. L. Gibson was chairman for the day.
Mrs. J. B. DeBrigde, head of the public service department, was the hostess. She served the meal, assisted by members of the force, including Mrs. H. E. Dunning, cashier, M. A. Cook, chief clerk, and Mrs. Cole; Ben Cois, sales manager, and Mrs. Cole; J. F. Hall, chief engineer, and Mrs. Hill.
The guests were served an orange punch from punch bowls made of ice whose freezing process Mr. Kelley explained after the luncheon.
The menu consisted of jellied meat loaf and fancy sandwiches, with an ice-cream pudding dessert, all of which was prepared at the plant. The recipes were indicated in recipe books which were given away as souvenirs in addition to pie picks.
Out of town guests included Mr. Mosher of the Mosher Structural Steel Works, a Dallas man, and Mr. Mitchell, manager of the Midland ice plant.
Mrs. DeBrigde was the chief speaker on the program. With a glass-backed refrigerator for demonstration, she explained the principles of refrigeration. The refrigerator contained a pin wheel which showed the circulation of air.
Mrs. DeBrigde told the correct location of foods in a refrigerator, gave a short history of refrigeration and rules for the protection of ice.
When the meeting was closed, Mrs. Kelley showed the members the amount of ice required to keep 6490 cars of canteloupes. He explained the difference in manufacture between white and clear ice and the basic principles of modern ice manufacture.

Award Fund For Officer's Family Gets Additions
The Junior Chamber of Commerce Tuesday renewed its appeal for contributions to an award fund to be presented to the widow of Henry F. Howie, local policeman who was slain Monday of last week.
Employees at the city hall this afternoon were contributing to a fund to be added to this one. The Big Spring Herald made a contribution.
Officials of the organization, which launched the movement the day following Mr. Howie's death, said they would meet this evening and put a time limit on the campaign.
"We inaugurated this movement in the belief that the people of Big Spring have respect for the law and appreciation for men who sacrifice their lives in performance of their duty as peace officers," said one of the Junior chamber directors. "Mr. Howie's family, we believe, should be provided with the award fund to enable the mother and five children to more readily adjust themselves to earning a livelihood without the father. If he had performed some meritorious deed without losing his life he would have received a cash reward. Certainly his family should be remembered, since he made the supreme sacrifice while performing his duties as an officer."
Mrs. Howie and children asked Mrs. Howie today to express their thanks for the many kindnesses shown them in their bereavement.
The award fund campaign was inaugurated without their knowledge.

Higher Price For Crude Expected By Gov. Sterling
AUSTIN, Aug. 18 (UP)—Gov. Ross Sterling, seated at a desk covered with belated petitions for martial law in East Texas and congratulatory messages on his shut down of the oil field there, expressed satisfaction today with progress of his efforts to control the huge field.
"I haven't the least doubt that purchasing companies themselves will say that the price of oil will be increased," he said, when asked if he thought an increase in the price of crude oil would follow the shut down.
Gov. Sterling said he was advised by Lieut. Chas. Perlitz, aide to Brig. Gen. Jacob F. Wolters, in command in East Texas, that the entire field would be shut down by tonight. Lieut. Perlitz reported, the governor said, that many operators shut down their wells at 6 a. m. today without waiting for orders. He said that when troops reached East Texas they found that several independent operators, anticipating the order, shut down Sunday.
Oil companies began advising the governor at noon that they will continue their employees on payroll until cessation of the shutdown.
"I commend them for that," Gov. Sterling said. "Oil field workers are not interested in the price of oil but do want something to live on."
He refused to say how long he expected to enforce the shutdown, but said the railroad commission would have its first funds to enforce the new conservation law on Sept. 1 if the shut down has not deprived them of all the anticipated tax on production.
"We'll shut down last 30 days," the governor was asked.
"I hesitate to predict," he replied. "We don't want the boys to get tired over there. A 30-day vacation would be pretty long for some of them."
Gov. Sterling said that curtailment of oil production by 700,000 barrels daily in Texas and 300,000 barrels daily in Oklahoma would certainly have a tendency to increase prices.
"Soon the major companies will have to draw on their storage," he said. "They don't want to use high priced stored oil to make cheap gasoline."
"I shut down the fields so when the railroad commission starts enforcing its new law it can do it on more orderly basis. It is a lot easier to control something when you start from a stationary position than when you take it over out of control."
Marginal, stripper and other wells were included in the general shut down, the governor said, because he wanted to show favoritism for no operators.
A practical oil man himself, he had prepared figures to justify his shutdown order and read them to correspondents. He had them verified by R. D. Parker, chief superintendent of the oil and gas division of the railroad commission.
"I find that one billion five hundred million cubic of gas were being burned every day," the governor said. "Oil company chemists say the gas will produce from 7 to 10 gallons of casinghead gasoline per 1,000 cubic feet.
"Calculating the yield at five gallons for the sake of being conservative, the price at three cents per gallon, that gas would yield a daily income of $225,000. The 700,000 barrels of oil produced per day, at 15 cents per barrel, is worth only $105,000."

Wild West Show of 101 Ranch Financial Liability Since the Passing of George L. Miller

The Kansas City Star tells the following story of the financial difficulties of the famous 101 Ranch. PONCA CITY, Okla., Aug. 20.—Creditors of the 101 Ranch have been called to meet at the ranch tomorrow afternoon to discuss upon the continuation of ranch activities and to ascertain if an agreement of some nature can be arranged among creditors. Here there is a hopeful atmosphere. Home folks, who have known the ranch so long as a genuine community asset and have always been sympathetic with the programs of the Millers, would prefer to see the ranch continue.

While the 101 Ranch has had much ill luck in the last few years or since the accidental death of Col. George L. Miller in a motor car accident two and a half years ago, it was inability to refinance that was the final straw. George L. Miller was a financial genius. The ranch was his pet and hobby. He had borrowed large amounts of money on ranch land. He always had paid and, still in his forties, he planned paying again or refinancing, if conditions required it. All the other Millers had depended upon him, and when he met death the prop was knocked from under ranch financing.

Debt Started Decline
Col. Joe C. Miller, the eldest of the three brothers that inherited the ranch when their father, Col. George W. Miller, died about a quarter of a century ago, also was killed accidentally about four years ago, and it would seem that incident started ranch difficulties. Col. Joe Miller was killed by monoxide gas poisoning. He was the agricultural manager of the ranch and the wild west showman supreme of the Millers.

To Col. Zack Miller, the only remaining brother, had fallen the cattle interest, the buying and trading of livestock and second in the show management. But both Joe and Zack always looked to George L. to see that the finances were kept straight. They paid no attention to the refinancing programs to the development of oil properties, to the upkeep of things generally. That was the job of George L., and he did it hard-earned. The wild west show has hardly been an asset.

When the show went on the road again in 1925, it was at the urgent request of Col. Joe Miller and against the desires of George L. Joe liked the road and the other brothers finally gave in and raised the money on which he would start. No money was made on the show thereafter, it is understood.

If it wasn't one thing on the road to cause the show to lose money, it was something else. Bad weather, the depression and the high cost of operation were joined with hard competition and even alleged bad practices by competitors. This allegation led recently to the filing of a suit in the federal court in Chicago for 1 million dollars damage, charging that Sells-Floto Ringling Brothers, Barnum & Bailey and their several associate circuses conspired to create a monopoly in the circus business in the United States to the detriment of the 101 Ranch show. Henry B. Johnson, former Oklahoma governor, is attorney for Col. Zack Miller in this case.

Sued Tom Mix
Tom Mix, the movie star, was alleged to have signed with the ranch show two years ago, but he went out instead with Sells-Floto and as a result Miller sued Mix for breach of contract and secured a judgment against him in the federal court at Erie, Pa., for $100,000 which Mix appealed. Then when Mix did not go out with the Millers, Jack Huxie, another film star, did. As a result another show concern sued Col. Zack Miller and the ranch show for $200,000 for inducing Huxie to break an alleged contract in joining Miller.

against bad weather, depression, stiff competition, and lack of finances.

And, not satisfied seemingly with everything that had happened, late brought about an attempt not long ago to assassinate Col. Zack Miller when he was called at night to the door of the "White House," or official home headquarters of the ranch. The bullet intended for Miller struck a door post and buried itself in the heavy upholstery of a living room rocking chair.

Court Actions Accumulate
With George L. Miller gone and the money borrowed on ranch land becoming due, and with refinancing plans seemingly thwarted everywhere because of the attending depression, suits began to accumulate against the ranch. George W. Miller, a nephew and attorney of Ponca City, and the Exchange Trust Company of Tulsa, as executors of the will of George L. Miller, began action in July for an accounting and settlement of the partnership.

The Federal Land Bank of Wichita has brought suit for a $5,000 loan on ranch land; the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company of Boston for $162,000 and the "Assurance Savings Bank of Maryland for $39,000. There are others.

The total debts are understood to be about $750,000. The 101 Ranch owns 20,000 acres of good land, together with the modern improvements at ranch headquarters. Some of it is oil producing land, and all of it is profitable producing.

In addition to the ranch show going on the rocks, that happened also to Col. Zack Miller's second matrimonial venture, and not long ago he obtained a divorce from his wife and the custody of his two children by her, in a Louisiana court. The divorced wife, Mrs. Margaret Blevins-Miller, is living in that state and recently she started a court action against Col. Zack Miller for $100,000, charging slander and defamation of character in getting the divorce. She said her purpose was to seize his Louisiana ranch-land at Society Island and get a proper financial settlement and alimony.

Col. Zack Miller has been a colonel on the staff of Oklahoma governors for many years, as were his own brothers.

Episcopal Laymen's Organization To Meet

SEWANEES, Tenn., Aug. 20 (AP)—A program designed to bring half a million young men in the country to a larger realization of their responsibilities as citizens and church members will be launched at the triennial international convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Episcopal laymen's organization, at the University of the South here, August 27 to September 3.

For nearly a year, a group of the organization's leaders has been working on the plans for the program which, according to Leon C. Palmer, general secretary, will take into consideration the complicated problems which face modern youth.

"The program," Mr. Palmer said, "will challenge the young manhood of the nation to break down barriers of class and racial distrust and selfishness through a three-year system. The plan takes into consideration particularly the effect of present-day industrial organizations, commercialized amusement, modern inventions and the decline of home life upon the boy and young man in their personal development and world outlook."

The plan calls for the organization throughout the country of boys' work commissions which will promote boys' activities generally and will sponsor annual leadership conferences for high school and junior college youth; inspirational conventions and similar gatherings the object of which will be to impress young men with their responsibilities as Christians and citizens.

Among the speakers at Sewanee will be the Most Rev. James We-Wolferry, primate of the American Episcopal church.

Cigarette Bootlegger Is Expected In Texas

BEAUMONT, Tex., Aug. 20 (AP)—A new kind of bootlegger looms for Beaumont—the cigarette bootlegger—and officers are making plans to combat the new illegal peddler, due to make his appearance in dark alleys and other out-of-the-way spots on August 22 or shortly thereafter.

Although Beaumont is only about 30 miles from the Louisiana line at Orange it is expected that distance will prove a little too far for smokers to drive for cigarettes. On the other hand, this proximity will be tempting to the bootleggers, causing a great influx of smuggled, tax-free smokes.

Orange authorities are not worried over thoughts of cigarette bootleggers, since only the Sabine river separates smokers there from tax-free "ready-mades," and there are bound to be First and Last Chance cigarette emporiums just across the stream.

Contrary to popular belief, Russia is not closed to tourists. In fact, the Soviet Government has organized a special bureau of tourist, to arrange trips and handle details for parties of tourists throughout the entire country, and tourist travel has doubled in the past two years.
