

Next Sunday's Lesson

LIVING WITH PEOPLE OF OTHER RACES

By Rev. Cecil G. Goff
Golden text, Acts 10:34. Lesson text, John 4:5-10; Acts 10:30-35.

Race prejudice is a thing which has held Christianity back to a great extent, both in modern and days long gone. The question of missions is today with many as it was in the early days with Peter—mission work was good under certain conditions, but Peter wanted to prescribe the conditions.

Many Christians believe in missions and give their money to that end, who at the same time maintain an un-Christian spirit by "snubbing" the Chinese laundryman and the negro street sweeper. There are many others who do not believe in foreign missions, but rather in beginning at home, who maintain the un-Christian spirit of having never gone out of their way to speak a word concerning God to a lost neighbor.

God is no respecter of persons. The black and yellow men on the other side of the globe look just as good to Him as we of fairer complexion.

v. 6. Jesus and His disciples had There are five great color races—red, black, white, brown and yellow. God made them all—caused them all to spring from one common source, His first human creation. If we believe in Christ's great mission command, we have on our very shores thousands of all races needing the saving Gospel of Jesus Christ. Here is our opportunity. Those negroes in Alabama do not present to you and me an opportunity of service, but those of our own community present that spiritual problem and opportunity. The world has grown so small today that all mankind has been drawn very close together physically, and needs to be likewise drawn spiritually.

John 4:5. Sychar was the Shechem of history (Gen 3:4), was named in assigning the land of promise (Joshua 17:7), was the scene of covenant renewal by the tribes (Joshua 24:22). At the time of the captivity those few Israelites left intermarried with other peoples. It was a thing forbidden. Thus this "half-breed"—half Hebrew and half Gentile, people was devoutly hated by the Jews. A Jew ordinarily would not journey through the Samaritan country. But Jesus frequently passed through. He taught and saved many there.

v. 6. Jesus and His disciples had left Judea going north. It was noon.

Jesus was tired and stopped at Jacob's old well while the rest went to buy food.

v. 7. While Jesus sat resting, a woman came to draw water. The well was the only near water supply.

v. 8. Jesus asked her for a drink. The request was unusual and yet Jesus wished to teach the woman a lesson. He knew her, knew her wicked life. Jesus knew she needed cleansing.

v. 9. The woman was surprised. This was a new experience—a Jewish teacher speaking to her and asking for a favor. She possibly thought there was a catch in it somewhere and asked frankly why a Jew was willing to ask for or accept a drink from her.

v. 10. Jesus told the sin-sick woman that she had no idea to whom she spoke. She saw a common Jewish teacher. Really He was a prophet and the Son of God. It did not take the woman long to discover the fact that she was speaking to more than an ordinary Jewish teacher. He promised her not ordinary water from the well, but living water that springs up within one's being. Jesus was ready and anxious to break down all racial barriers to save a soul.

Acts 10:30-35. God had a servant who was a loving, obedient man—Peter. He was at Joppa. He was willing to carry the story of Jesus Christ to the Jews, but he was prejudiced against the Gentiles. In fact he believed that a Gentile as such could not be saved. There are men who live today who believe that one whose skin is different in color to their own have no souls. Any man tainted with such belief is a poor Christian—if a Christian at all. The disciples had been God's apostles in Jerusalem and Judea, but were not willing to continue into Samaria and the uttermost parts of the earth.

God had a Roman centurion over in Caesarea who was a faithful man and who prayed much. God determined to teach Peter a lesson. While Peter was asleep God sent him visions in preparation for a coming visitor. So when Cornelius' servant arrived, Peter was ready to go. Thus Peter saw God save Cornelius and his family. He was then convinced that God was no respecter of persons.

Our trouble is that race prejudice has been bred into most all of us, and it crops out now and then in one form or another. One of the most needed Christian graces in this cosmopolitan land of ours is that of "brotherly love." It is needed to teach us that there is a mission work needed to be done in the heart of every unsaved man, no matter what his color, nationality or occupation.

A TAXPAYER'S PROSPECTS

Bureaucracy was firmly entrenched in Europe long before we thought of the word. Today the taxpayers of Europe are paying a terrific price for the vast multitudes of services rendered by their governments.

A Frenchman today pays about one-third of his income in taxes, which number nearly 200. If he has an income of $5,000, is married and lives in a pleasant apartment, he must pay something like $820 in four direct taxes which are based on his income and his rent.

When he goes to the theatre one-third of the admission is a tax. If he travels, 25% of the fare is tax, and his hotel bill is taxed. Matches, cigarettes, servants, wines, and a host of other things are subject to excise levies.

We have not yet reached this point in the grim story of American taxation. But we are perilously close to it. Each year has seen the imposition of new burdens, with little or no effort to stem the tide of public spending.

"I conversed yesterday with a German for three hours, although I don't know any German."

"That was very clever. All by signs?"

"No, he speaks English perfectly." -Nagels Lustige Welt.

There are more than 700 species and subspecies of birds in Texas, including both local and migratory birds.

PEONIES BEST PLANTED IN FALL

Peonies are such hardy, thrifty perennials that they just grow and grow, and soon become firmly established. We are apt to overlook the fact, however, that new and improved varieties are constantly making their appearance.

The American Peony Society publishes an authoritative manual in which about 300 selected varieties are carefully described. It is interesting to note that in this manual are listed the names of hundreds of other peonies which the society recommends to be discarded, not because the flowers are unworthy, but because the selected list contains newer types of similar appearance which are much more desirable.

An ideal background against which a peony may display its magnificent flowers is a group of shrubs. Take care that sufficient space is allowed for the peonies as their roots forage deep.

Peonies are such delightful flowers that it is difficult for one not to be an enthusiast to the point of growing dozens of them. If peonies become one's hobby arrange the plants so they are displayed to best advantage. Create a special garden for them, and interplant some delphiniums, hardy phloxes, asters, and perhaps chrysanthemums, to provide interest when the peonies are out of flower.

How to Plant Peonies

The ground should be deeply prepared and well fertilized. Be sure, though, that it contains no fresh manure, for if the roots come in contact with fresh manure, the plant will become sick and fail to bloom. Prepare the ground well in advance of planting, and make a thorough job of it, for peonies like plenty of rich soil. Allow about three feet of open ground to each plant and see that they get an abundance of sunshine.

The first season they should be protected a little from freezing in order to prevent their being heaved out of the ground. Afterward they are better off without litter or any covering which might harbor disease.

In planting peonies do not bury them too deep. The eyes should be just under the surface when the soil has thoroughly settled. In newly made beds they should be set about two inches deep to allow for subsequent settling.

Peonies are reliable plants. They are remarkably free from insect or fungus troubles and you need rarely spray them. Just keep them well cultivated and fertilized with bone meal each year and they will delight you with their constant improvement and flowers of unrivaled beauty.

"At quarter past six this evening, I was murdered—and what's more—in a few minutes—I'm going to see the gentleman who took my life." He left them glancing knowingly at one another and tapping their foreheads. In the great conference hall the national representatives had assembled. The meeting had been called to order, and the vote was about to be taken which would decide Europe's course for the next decade. "Even though one of our colleagues is absent," said the chairman, "this conference must end without further delay. Monsieur Perant will cast the vote for Sylvania. There were no comic smiles on some faces as he spoke. "We will proceed to take the ballot." Each envoy arose in alphabetical order and cast his vote. Nearer and nearer to Sylvania came the roll call. "Romania! Serbia! Spain!" Then—"Sylvania!" "Just a moment, gentlemen!" They wheeled at that sharp familiar tone. Onslow stood there. "Aren't you a little hurried? I admit I'm a trifle late—but—almost didn't come at all. However, I'm here in time. The only one that counts!" In his hand stretching over the ballot box was the black ballot which showed the mark of universal peace behind which Sylvania's enemies hoped...
