Shower Held for Mrs. June Woods Fri.

A miscellaneous shower honoring Mrs. June Woods, a recent bride, was held Friday afternoon at the home of Roy Barker. Members of the Bible class of the Church were hostesses for the occasion.

Misses from last year Tiger-ettes consisting of Misses Marie Juanita Hancock, Ava and Bradford, sang two numbers. Mrs. Adkins read "The Seven Men," and Mrs. W. E. Bogan read "The Photographer's Bride." The bride's chair was beautifully decorated and the gifts attractively arranged on one side of the chair, with a cut flowers in the center.

A cake with the inscription "The Bells Have Rung," was cut and served with those present.

Those present were: Mesdames W. E. Bogan, Thurman Adkins, Wilson, Bill Galloway, Ted Donald Beal, Chas. S. Cooke, Butler, John B. Vannoy Austin, J. W. Burrows, Sr., J. W. Calaway, Raymond C. B. ## NEWSPAPERS ARE BACKBONE

As every retailer knows, newspapers remain the backbone plus the retail publicity appropriate. During the last few years, the need for more economical operations, stores have plugged the leaks which sapped pulling power from the publicity dollar. A more intensive use of fewer media has developed. As a result, newspapers today come in for a greater share of the publicity dollar than they did five or ten years ago."

W. Spauth, National Retail Dry Goods Association.

GOOD SIZED CROWD HERE SATURDAY

ARTHUR BRISBANE SAYS:

"The most important and influential newspaper, by far, in proportion to circulation, is the so-called 'country newspaper,' smaller dailies and weeklies. "Their readers know who runs them, and those readers, not living in city apartments, with a can opener, buy everything from the paint on the roof to the cement in the cellar floor, from the piano and radio in the sitting room to the car in the garage."

Frock That Puts Accent on Youth

Always a good beginning, this youthful tailored collar on the simple yoke makes a demure foil for the dainty softness of the bodice. The prettiness of the chic frock is furthered with a graceful flare sleeve—or it may puff, if you prefer. The results are so satisfying you'll find it real fun to run up this little dress in a dainty printed silk or cotton. A soft handkerchief linen would be stunning, too, and so easy to tub. Buttons and belt can pick up a color in the print and make a striking accent.

Pattern 9343 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 3 1/2 yards 39-inch fabric. Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and size.

Send your order to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York, N. Y.

SELF-INVITED

John—How'd you like to eat dinner with me tonight?
Joan—I'd love to.
John—Okay, tell your mother I'll be there about six o'clock.

Her Policy

Kathryn—What a lovely engagement ring! Your fiancé must be rich to afford so big a stone.
Kitty—Rather. You see, I was engaged to five men this season, and persuaded them to go in together on a syndicate ring. I hate a lot of little ones.—Detroit News.

Popular, Anyway

"Did you see that tall, dark man at the wedding reception? He didn't take his eyes off me the whole time."
"So I noticed, dear. He was one of the detectives guarding the presents."

A Real Need

The judge asked a negro in court if he wanted a lawyer.
"No, suh, I don't want no lawyer, but I suddenly could use a couple of good witnesses."

Starting His String

Stranger (watching boy fishing)—How many have you caught, sonny?
Sonny—When I get another I'll have one.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Crisis Is Near in Geneva Over Italy's Adventure

MATTERS in Geneva were rapidly approaching a crisis—a crisis for Italy and Ethiopia, for European peace and for the League of Nations itself.

The Italian cabinet, in which Mussolini holds eight portfolios, announced in Rome that Italy would accept no compromise and would not retreat from the course it has laid out in East Africa; that its military preparations were being intensified, and that its forces were adequate "to respond to any menace whatever."

Still more important, in the light of developments, was the cabinet's announcement of strengthening its military forces in Libya, where General Balbo has been establishing a strong line of air reposts. This colony borders Egypt on the west, and there was immediately a lot of speculation as to whether Mussolini planned to attack the British empire in that region. Italian forces in Libya have received reinforcements of 40,000 men with tanks and field artillery, and are much stronger than the British forces in Egypt. Economic sanctions were imposed on Italy. Mussolini might well reply by threatening Great Britain in that quarter, by invasion and by arousing the native population to revolt.

Premier Laval's speech before the League of Nations was exceedingly clever but did not clear the situation sufficiently. While he gave assurance that France would abide by the league covenant and fulfill its obligations, he hinted that his government would demand in return that Britain enter a definite engagement to carry out the program agreed upon in London on February 3—an air Locarno with automatic enforcement and the conclusion of Danubian and Baltic security pacts.

One after another the nations represented in the league announced their support of the British stand against Italy. If the British do not back down—and that seems unlikely—and if Italy persists in its adventure, the league will be called on to apply article 15 of the covenant. This requires the submission of any dispute, likely to lead to a rupture, to the council which must then try to effect a settlement. The council also will adopt as its own the report of the committee of five, which has failed to find a solution acceptable to Italy. The parties to the dispute are obligated to keep the peace for three months in any event, which would prevent an Italian campaign before the rains set in again in Ethiopia.

If in the next three months either side accepts the council's decision, the other party is automatically outlawed if it starts a war at any time in the future. In that case, the penalties against an aggressor as provided in article 16 must take effect automatically.

It is believed in Geneva that the penalty easiest to apply would be a general boycott of all trade with Italy. In that case the course followed by the United States would be all important. The European statesmen feel confident that they can count on President Roosevelt, once a war breaks out, to interpret cotton, wheat, and other raw materials as war material and under the American neutrality legislation forbid direct shipment to Italy and Ethiopia.

Mr. Davis Tells President of Conditions in Europe

NORMAN H. DAVIS, American ambassador at large, called on President Roosevelt at Hyde Park and gave him a clear picture of the situation in Europe. After leaving the conference, Mr. Davis said to reporters that war in Europe is extremely probable but he sees no reason why the United States should become involved.

There had been hopes, Mr. Davis said, for a conference on naval disarmament this fall. But the Italo-Ethiopian dispute has removed any such possibility.

New German Laws Bear Down on the Jews

SIX hundred members of the German reichstag, all fervent Nazis, met in special session in Nuremberg and at the demand of Reichsfuehrer Hitler passed two laws bearing down hard on the Jews in the reich. The first of these new statutes prescribes prison sentences as penalties for marriages between Jews and citizens of German or kindred blood, and declares such marriages void if performed in a foreign country. Extra-marital relations between Jews and Aryans also are punishable by prison sentences. Jews are forbidden to employ women under forty-five years in their households after January 1, on penalty of imprisonment. Jews are not allowed to hoist the national flag, being limited to the Zionist blue and white emblem.

The second law provides that only a person who "belongs to the protective association of the German empire and is especially obligated to the reich" may be a citizen of Germany. This citizen must be of German or kindred blood and show that he is willing to serve the German people. Thus Jews and Germans of whom the Nazis disapprove may be excluded.

Hitler also put through a third law establishing the Nazi Swastika as the national and trade flag of Germany. The war ministry was instructed to adopt a war flag of black, white and red.

In his address to the reichstag Hitler said that by the laws adopted he hoped to deliver a fatal blow to Communism and Jewry. He also discussed the Memel question and warned Lithuania that justice must be done to Germans in Memel "before events take forms that one day may be only regretted."

Secretary Hull's Reply on Brodsky Protest

OFFICIAL annoyance in Germany over the remarks of Magistrate Brodsky of New York who called the Hitler regime "a throwback to barbarism" probably was allayed by the note from Secretary of State Hull. This explained that the federal government had no control over the magistrate, but Mr. Hull in it gave a sound verbal spanking to Brodsky for "indulging in expressions offensive to another government with which we have official relations."

Smetona Says Lithuania Will Fight for Memel

CHANCELLOR HITLER'S remarks about Memel aroused President Antanas Smetona to putting out the first interview he has granted in six years. In it he declared that Lithuania, relying to the utmost on the legality and justice of her stand and action in Memel affairs, is ready at any time to defend her position before the permanent court of international justice.

But should an effort be made to disregard legality and justice, in favor of force, Lithuania is prepared, stated President Smetona, to "defend Memel with all the means at her command."

He regards Lithuania's chief problem in Memel today the action of Germany in practically stopping all imports from Lithuania with "resultant economic pressure" and what he terms the "relentless influence of foreign propaganda."

Continuing, President Smetona said: "Memel is to us an economic necessity, not a political issue. We are too small a nation to engage in political bargaining, as we are too small a country to engage in contra-propaganda. Our only point is that Memel, containing Lithuania's only seaport, is an essential part of Lithuania. And the freedom and preservation of Lithuania is to her people a precious thing."

Soft Coal Strike Averted for Another Week

STRIKES that would have closed down a large part of the country's soft coal industry were averted for a time at least by the vigorous action of President Roosevelt and Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. McGrady, the Labor department's best conciliator. The controversy between the miners and operators has been going on for eight months and many negotiations have been attempted. In a meeting with the President and McGrady at Hyde Park the United Mine Workers agreed to permit existing wage pacts to continue in force seven more days, thus averting the walkout that would have started September 16. Negotiations toward a new wage contract were then started, with McGrady representing President Roosevelt.

F. C. Hoyt Is Appointed New Alcohol Administrator

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT appointed Franklin Chase Hoyt, former judge of the Children's court in New York city, to be federal alcohol administrator to succeed Joseph C. Choate, who administered the federal alcohol control act until that legislation was knocked out by the Supreme court's NRA decision.

Ball Player Is Killed in Fight on Flying Plane

L EN KOENECKE, outfielder for the Brooklyn Dodgers, was killed in an airplane over the Long Branch race track near Toronto in a fight with Pilot W. J. Mulqueeny of Detroit and his helper, Irwin Davis. Koenecke had chartered the plane at Detroit to go to Buffalo and it is said had been drinking. The pilot said the ball player persistently annoyed him and then engaged in a wild fight with Davis, and to save the plane from a crash Mulqueeny hit Koenecke on the head,

FLOYD GIBBONS Adventurers' Club

Hello, Everybody!

"The Dog That Never Barked"

By FLOYD GIBBONS Famous Headline Hunter

HERE comes Skippy. Not the Skippy of my old pal, Percy Crosby, but just a dog namesake of his—and what a dog! Skippy belongs to Walter Eckert, and don't you dare to say a dog is not man's best friend around Walter.

I've got a weakness for dogs. Once in Paris I traveled all across the city in a coughing French taxi to visit the famous dog cemetery that occupies a little island in the Seine. At the entrance there is a life-sized statue of a Saint Bernard. The statue stands over the grave of the greatest of all dog heroes—a dog who saved the lives of over 30 people!

My friend, O. O. McIntyre—one of the greatest newspaper columnists of all time—was with me, and "Odd"—that's his right name—actually put a wreath of flowers on that Saint Bernard's grave.

King George VII of England was devoted to a little short-haired fox-terrier he had, and often referred to "Spot" as his "only friend." At the king's death Spot trotted along faithfully in the funeral cortege behind his master's body. The dog was inconsolable, and in a few short weeks followed his royal master to the grave—dead of a broken heart! But Skippy is not dead. Not by a long shot! She—this Skippy is a she—is very much alive, and eating her head off at the Eckert home, and here's why:

It's the Kids Who Are "Boss" to Skippy.

Skippy has two little pals in the persons of Walter's two sons, Walter, Jr., and Bob. Skippy tolerates Walter, Sr., and Mrs. Eckert because, after all, someone has to feed a dog and buy a license and all that, but the big shots of the house, as far as Skippy is concerned, are Junior and Bob.

The two boys and Skippy are just as close as King Edward and Spot ever were. They were raised together—Skippy was only two weeks old, and the youngest boy one when the alliance was formed. One night in February, 1932, Mr. Eckert says, he had tucked the boys safely in bed and was playing a game of cards with his brother-in-law and the women folk, when Skippy began to bark.

Now a dog's bark shouldn't amaze anyone, but it did the Eckerts for the simple reason that Skippy was not a barking dog. When anything went wrong about the house Skippy would simply walk over and investigate quietly. She might nip you if you were after the family jewels, but she was a dog who just didn't believe in barking.

But this night Skippy made such an awful fuss that Walter got up and walked around the house to see if something was wrong. Finding no footprints in the snow, he had just sat down again—when Skippy started a canine riot.

The doggone dog, Walter says, just about dragged him to the front of the house, and kept up a continual noise of barking and whimpering. Walter tried to get her to keep quiet for fear that she would wake the children, but Skippy ran up the stairs and just wouldn't calm down.

When Skippy Begs, She Receives.

The Eckerts have a little gate at the top of the stairs to keep the children from falling down, and Skippy seemed to be so excited about that gate that Walter finally came up to see if the boys had gotten out of bed. He found the gate closed and everything quiet, and was just about to walk down again and play some more cards when Skippy sat up and begged.

Well, you can't refuse a dog when she begs, so Walter opened the gate. Like a flash, Skippy shot through the gate and, yelping with all her Gordon Setter strength, she bounded in the boys' room. Walter says he was curious, but not in the least alarmed, as he followed her. But, when he turned on the light in the nursery and saw the dog in Bob's crib excitedly tearing at the child's bedclothes, he understood. One look, and Walter jumped for his son's crib!

Which Proves Dogs Often Smarter Than Us.

The little boy had twisted somehow in his sleep and lay head down, at the foot, under the tightly tucked covers—slowly smothering to death!

Well, you can imagine how that frightened father went into action. He had Bob out of that bed in a jiffy. His yell brought the others upstairs on the run. The little boy's face was already nearly black from suffocation, but they worked his little arms and legs—to establish respiration—anything to keep him alive!

The anguished parents suffered torments of dread as they fought to get the air into those starving lungs. Someone phoned the doctor, but before he arrived Bob opened his eyes and took a deep breath, and started to cry—and so would you, if you had opened your eyes and saw four terror-stricken faces peering down at you.

Bob was all right in a few minutes, but he sure wrecked a perfectly good card game. The grown folks forgot all about their cards and went looking for Skippy. That lady—her duty done—was curled up and blissfully sleeping as though saving lives were an everyday occurrence with her.

Skippy was a somewhat surprised dog when she got a big plate of bones and permission to sleep in the same room with the boys, but I'm not. Are you?

Few Men Have Knack to "Never Forget a Face"

The fellow who smirks as he says, "You know, I never forget a face," is self-deluded. How can he know that he never forgets a face? He remembers those he remembers but that does not prove he forgets none.

His delusion that he has a perfect memory for faces can be explained in part as the consequence of an imperfect memory. He sees faces that look vaguely familiar. He has met those people but he doesn't know where. He doesn't remember who they are, how they earn their livings, what happened when he met them. Because he has forgotten almost everything except the faces he concludes he has an infallible memory for faces. A little candid introspection would teach him that what he has, instead, is a well-developed capacity for forgetting, says the Chicago Tribune. He remembers people's faces a little better than he remembers other, and possibly more important, things about them.

His delusion is nourished by the fact that every so often he meets people whom he remembers but who have forgotten him. The probable explanation of this phenomenon is not flattering. It means only that other people's faces and characters are more memorable than his. They have a quality which makes them hard to forget. His face is the kind which is difficult to remember.

Water Not Classed as Food

Water, although essential to life, is not generally classed as a food. Two-thirds of the human body is composed of water, and most of the chemical changes which take place in the body occur in solution in that liquid, but the water itself is never decomposed in the digestive processes. Health authorities usually define food as anything that nourishes the body, a definition which excludes water. Sometimes, however, water is regarded as food in the broad sense that food is anything normally taken into the body, either solid or liquid, or any element necessary to maintain life.

Of Thousands of Bugs, 300 Are Man's Enemies

It might be hastily concluded that insects are the earth's deadliest wild animals, and that a relentless battle should be fought for their complete extermination.

This denunciation of insects, fortunately, cannot be extended indefinitely, writes Albert Dickman in the Scientific American, for to our astonishment we soon realize that our list is disappointingly short and that, after investigation, man's convicted enemies in the insect world amount to only about 300 species.

When we realize, too, that at the present time over 500,000 species of insects have been classified, and that thousands of unclassified specimens are accumulating in museums, universities, and in the pockets of entomologists, we find we cannot justly condemn a whole class because of an extremely small number of disreputable members.

Suppose insects do destroy 10 per cent of our crops? What of it? What a small fee they exact, when we consider that without the aid of insect pollination we would have practically no crops at all!

It is very likely that man, in the future as in the past, will continue to keep in abeyance those of them which are injurious to his health and well-being, and at the same time divert the activities of others to the common good.

Cliff Dwellings Mysteries

The cliff dwellings of Mesa Verde, in southern Colorado, are one of America's mysteries. There have been many conjectures about the people who built and inhabited the dwellings on this table land 6,000 feet above sea level. What remains of the stone and clay dwellings gives evidence that they were a civilized race worshipping in temples and burying their dead with rites that testify to a highly advanced religion. No research, however, has been able to place definitely the period in man's civilization when these dwellings were occupied.

EVERYDAY NEW YORK

BY O. O. MCINTYRE

NEW YORK—Thoughts while strolling: Sign above Lexington avenue tailor shop: "Confidential Tailors." Probably whisper as they measure instead of yelling one's girth around the block. Anyway it's better than "Reliable." They say the better dressed medics are brain specialists and psychiatrists.

There's the perfectly tailored author and alienist, Dr. Louis Berg. Also the Park avenue medico, Dr. Emmanuel Josephson, who pays his calls afoot, hatless and in polo shirt. Quietest place in town these days: That second floor office in Vesey street with the sign, "Sleighbells."

Oscar Hammerstein II. Debonaire, grave and striding. He's back from Hollywood where he wrote a movie opera of fisher folk. But found more Sorrento air at San Francisco's fisherman's wharf than in Italy. There's Arthur Hornblow too, displaying a sunburn acquired in Sudan.

They think New York torrid this summer. But in the Sudan the mercury hits 115 in the shade. And in the papers the other day was a fine line notice of the fall of Khartoum and the death of General Gordon. That's forgotten everywhere except in the Sudan. Sic transit gloria mundi!

Admiral Byrd in Times Square. Out of the cocoon of furs, he is the ultimate panicle of Narragansett elegance. In white with radiant tie and shirt. Al Bedell's smoke stack collar. Pretty Jean Dalrymple. Crack from Spokane: "If radio is such good advertising, why can't Joe Penner sell his duck?"

Outdoor dining that has so seized midtown New York is old hat to patrons of several Gotham cafes. For 19 years second Avenue's Cafe Royal has prided itself on its latticed and tub-tree terrace a la Paree. It's the rendezvous of Honored Jewish Journalists and musicians, who argue with arms folded on their chairs, chiefly on Auer, mathematics and the philosophy of Lenin.

Then there are the quiet, cool, cellars on Washington street in the Armenian quarter. Of Rembrandtesque gloom, with a stove at one end and catering exotic provender. Coffee thick enough to hold a spoon upright and delicately flavored with orange and cinnamon. Several were haunts of the exiled poet, Kahlil Gibran, who wrote and illustrated "The Madman" on the damp tables. For dessert: Shish-kebab and the many-layered honey and flake nut pastry, Baklava, rolled out with wooden pins two yards long. Armenians are the greatest novel readers in the world. And the blue-eyed, gracious children in the quarter are the handsomest in Manhattan.

Most of the more than one hundred chess clubs in Manhattan flourish on the lower East Side. Some official, some social but all esthetic. And dense with tobacco smoke and hairy Mahatmas of the game. They play rapt, wordless, as aloof as spirits on distant mountain peaks, and in the cold realm of pure brain. Or maybe in an intellectual Nirvana. Silent furies on the board, brilliant attacks worthy of Foch done in one slow move of the hand, or a Waterloo achieved in an hour. Your real adept leaves this world entirely. Napoleon played at chess all his life but never got to master it. Coolidge was a good player. So is Otis Skinner.

New fad: Going in for unusual drinks. The teetotaler George Buckley has a decenter of old English perry, stronger than schnapps, Welsh mead and made of black honey. Greek Mayrodaphne is again coming into its own. Also Scotch heather wine and Davon crack made of plums. Billy Seaman has a weird collection, including a Chinese brandy made of legs of mutton. It comes in stone jars and smells like Japanese sake. Sake, by the way, is served warm. There's Mexican tequila, too, with a lick of lemon and salt. Arak, the unisexed liquor, is not the same as arack, the East Indian drink made of pineapple trimmings. Fanny Hurst brought back from Honolulu to Carl Van Vechton a gallipot of okulehu, liquid TNT. In a milk shake there it's called: "O holy cow!" The most difficult wine to get is Imperial Tokay from Hungary. Hardly more than three gallons are available. Thick, not pressed from the grape but exuded, it has more vitamins than punch.

From my apartment window I often see against the skyline a man waving a pole in attitude of conjuration but amid a flock of pigeons. They fly away, displeased, then return—usually with new recruits in their ranks. That way he augments his flock. He started off quite modestly three years ago with just one pair. He may be an passionate pigeon fancier. Or just a lonely Metropolitan bird lover!

In home economics 2 the class has been canning. We have canned 42 pints of vegetables which cost an average of 2 1/2c per pint. We have also canned 29 pints of apples and jellies which cost 8 1/4c per pint. We are now studying marketing. The first year classes are getting their patterns for their undergarments and will start sewing the last of the week. The Home Economics Club is to be organized this week. We hope it will be the best club we have ever had. We want all girls interested in the club to join.

TIGERS STAGE COME-BACK AND DEFEAT CANADIAN 7-6

The McLean Tiges came back in the game the second half fighting like Tigers are supposed to fight. Friday night in the game with the Panhandle Panthers, and overcame a 6-0 lead administered during the first quarter, and won the evenly matched and hard fought game 7-6.

Panhandle staged a last quarter rally that came very near resulting in a victory for the Panthers, and held McLean fans breathless during the last five minutes of play. Taking the ball on their own 20 yard line in four successive completed passes, they placed the ball within the McLean 20 zone. Two offside penalties brought them back near the 30 yard and they were never able to advance further.

Stratton and Christian stood out in the McLean offense, while Davidson and Rogers did most of the advancing for the Panhandlers.

McLean made 13 first downs while Panhandle made 8.

The Lineups:

McLean—line, Johnson, Kennedy, Chilton, McCarty, Cooke, King, Nicholson; backs, Christian, Cunningham, Graham, Stratton; substitutes, Back, Chambers, Roth, Laswell.

Panhandle—line, Denny, Howe, McCook, Reagan, Jasper, Anderson, Eagle, Back, Davidson; backs, Davidson, Rogers, Watts, C. Sparks; substitutes, Stern, Curtis, N. Sparks.

Referee, Nicholus; umpire, Wisdom; head lineman, Greer; timekeepers, Jones and Powers.

TIGERS MEET MOBEETTIE HERE THURSDAY NIGHT

After two non-conference victories over Canadian and Panhandle, Bill Allen, papa Tiger, will open his conference schedule with Mobeettie Thursday night.

Mobeettie is apparently a weak team, having lost a conference game to Shamrock and a non-conference game to White Deer, but Coach Allen is taking no chances and will send the best he has into the game against them.

The games with Canadian and Panhandle have meant much to both the Tigers and their coach in discovering their weak points.

The starting lineup will probably be the same that was started in the two former games.

Jas. F. Heasley and A. W. Brewer were in Pampa Monday.

Deputy Sheriff Scott Tennin was in Pampa the first of the week.

Bosses Won't Hire People with Halitosis (BAD BREATH)

People who get and hold jobs keep their breath agreeable

With the best to choose from these days, employers favor the person who is most attractive. In business life as in the social world, halitosis (unpleasant breath) is considered the worst of faults.

Unfortunately everybody suffers from this offensive condition at some time or other—many more regularly than they think. Fermentation of food particles skipped by the tooth brush is the cause of most cases. Delaying teeth and poor digestion also cause odors.

The quick, pleasant way to improve your breath is to use Listerine, the quick deodorant, every morning and every night.

Listerine halts fermentation, a major cause of odors, and overcomes the odors themselves. Your breath becomes sweet and agreeable. It will not offend others.

If you value your job and your friends, use Listerine, the safe antiseptic, regularly. Lambert Pharmaceutical Company, St. Louis, Mo.

The West Texas chamber of commerce favors a lowering of the state property taxes and the levying of a general sales tax.

While the sales tax is considered a nuisance by most people, it seems to be definitely on the way for those states that up to now have kept away from it.

Sales are increased and good will is built by continuous, consistent, truthful advertising throughout the year. Foremost authorities on retail store advertising maintain that from 2% to 3% of the net sales should be spent for advertising; however, many successful stores spend more. Newspaper advertising is given first place as the best medium, by all authorities.

The 34 Panhandle counties from Hardeman north voted dry in the last election, only six of the counties returning wet majorities. Oldham had a 14 vote majority, Moore 24, Gray 84, Carson 114, Potter 300 and Hutchinson 315.

This leaves little doubt as to the sentiment in this section. The fact of the matter is, the vote showed that the state north of Austin is dry—the wet gaining their strength in the large cities down state.

Automobile accidents caused more deaths in Texas last year than the combined deaths from typhoid fever, smallpox, measles, diphtheria, scarlet fever, whooping cough, and infantile paralysis; but little attention is paid to the fact, and there is no vaccination or serum that can be used against the automobile.

Text: "But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."—Joshua 24:15b.

DECIDE TODAY!

There are certain times in the life of each individual when he must make important decisions. A person must decide about his future vocation, about his education, his friends, societies and organizations. A person must also decide definitely about his religious life: either to serve the Lord Jesus Christ or the devil. Many people serve the devil but deny the fact. If a person serves anyone or anything else besides the true, Triune God, he is serving the devil—whether he believes it or not!

The Bible gives us a splendid example of a definite decision in regard to service to the Lord. The leader, Joshua, assembled the tribes of Israel at Shechem. There he gave them a brief history of God's benefits and blessings from the time of Terah, the father of Abraham. He wanted to bring the people to a realization of God's will; he wanted them to know why they existed and why different events in their history happened the way they did. They were to realize that in spite of all odds, ridicule and criticism of the world they were to fear the Lord and to perform His holy will. After he brought out the vital facts he exhorted them to serve the true God and to cease serving false gods, mammon, materialism. He said the following in very simple language: "Now therefore fear the Lord, and serve Him in sincerity and truth: and put away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt; and serve the Lord." (Joshua 24:14).

Immediately after that he emphasized that it is of paramount importance to make their decisions immediately, without delay. Said Joshua: "And if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose you THIS DAY whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell." (Joshua 24:15a.)

Joshua gave them an alternative in order that they could convince themselves first and then make their final decision whom they would serve. From his words they could not help but realize that to serve anyone else than the God of Truth would be hopeless folly. And in order to show them what he as leader would do, Joshua stated the following immortal words: "But as for me and my house WE WILL SERVE THE LORD."

Dear reader! Have you made your decision in regard to your religious life? Have you already decided whom you will serve? If so, well and good. If not, why not? Will you live tomorrow: Why not decide today?

Tomorrow may be too late! The decision must be made. But—after it is made, after you decide to serve the Lord as Joshua did, abide by your decision. Do not waver but stay with the Lord. Remain faithful unto death. The Lord wants you. Will you go to Him? Jesus calls today. Accept His invitation today!

Despite the fact that there are no wealthy publishers, except now and then one in the largest daily field, and they are not interested in this particular matter, someone is always figuring out that "the newspapers are making altogether too much money."

By the new hocus pocus a probated estate is saved the trifling sum of $5.40. The publisher handles a very particular publication for an amount so small that it is of little importance in providing the means of maintaining costly, special equipment and skilled labor.

While this petty economy is effected nothing has been done to bring any saving in administrator and attorney's fees which are the important part of the expense of probating an estate. These fees remain at 1 1/4% of the estate's appraised valuation.

The average estate may be set at about $20,000. For carrying it through probate:

The administrator gets $300.
 The attorney gets $300.

SYNOPSIS

Following his father's criticism of his life and withdrawal of financial assistance, Hal Ireland, son of a wealthy banker, practically without money but with the promise of a situation in San Francisco, which he must reach at once, from New York, takes a cross-country auto paragon on a "share expense" basis. Other passengers include an attractive girl, Barry Trafford; middle-aged Giles Kerrigan; Sister Anastasia, a nun; and an individual whom he instinctively dislikes, Martin Crack. Barry's reticence annoys him. To Kerrigan he takes at once, but he distrusts Crack. He finds the intimacy with Kerrigan ripening, and makes a little progress with Barry through a misunderstanding. Hal is directed to Barry's bedroom, instead of his own, and they exchange kisses. That day he tells her he loves her. The only answer that she mustn't love him, Crack brutally insults Kerrigan. Hal forces him to apologize abjectly. On his insistence, Barry tells him that, at her father's urging, she had married a man many years older than she, and had promised her father on his deathbed to stick to her husband, "no matter what happened," for ten years. That was four years ago, and despite her knowledge of her husband's unworthiness, she is determined to keep her promise, though admitting her love for Hal. No argument he can make will move Barry. That night she begs him, in a note, not to insist on seeing her, as he has declared he will. He disregards her missive, and goes to her in her room.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

As if he had expected it, he pushed the paper into his pocket, said good night to the clerk, and went upstairs. There was light around Barry's door and he knocked softly. He heard the bed creak, her deliberate footsteps came, her low, resigned voice admit she knew who was there even as she asked.

"Barry, you've got to come out," he said.

"Hal, no," she said, gently pleading.

"Then I'll come in," he pushed the door, and as if she had expected that too, he felt her weight against it.

"Don't, Hal," she said, less surely; "for the love of heaven, please don't. I'll come out to you—for five minutes."

"No," said Hal. "If you come out, there'll be no conditions. And if you don't come out, I come in."

"Hal, I'm tired; I've got a headache—please, oh, please, my darling."

"You haven't a headache, and you'll forget you're tired, Barry. I'm serious as death, as sin, as happiness; if you won't come to me, I'll come to you. Do you understand that?"

He waited a few seconds for her to speak again; then he pushed the door against her strength until she dropped back from it and he stood inside, closing it behind him. There was no key, nor any eye for the bolt to engage, so he left it and faced her.

She turned from him as if the room had grown too small, murmuring, "Dear G—d, if you haven't given me a way to keep him out, you must want him here."

Hal took her arm above the elbow and turned her to him, then held her other arm too and shook her once, gently, to stir the heavy-lidded study that held her eyes. "You believe there is God?" he said.

"If I do," she said, meeting his look steadily, "you don't know better than I what he wants of me."

Her chin was up bravely over where the parting of the little stiffened collar showed her white, firm throat; between the turbulent bushes where her golden hair ended, her cheeks drew a little inward to compose her full lips in their faintly pursed pride.

As he held her before him, by the arms and looked into the living blue of her eyes—deeply strengthened against him, yet never blind to the wonder of what had occurred—there fell suddenly across his heart a bad shadow, as if somewhere a silent signal for hurry had been made. His voice sounded too slow, too undisciplined for his quickened purposes as he said to her: "Angel of heaven, it's nothing to tell you I'd die for you— is it. Love is as much as you said it was, so that all its old meanings have fallen away and I can speak it only to tell you I love you; and to say I love you so much I'd die for you is nothing more—is it."

His voice made no inquiry, but his eyes waited upon hers for the known answer. Her quiet golden head moved a little aside and back again, and her deep look gravely understood him.

"Barry, do you love me?"

She looked down at the mouth that had asked her that, then back at his eyes as her bare whisper said, "You know it; God forgive me for letting you."

"You'd never need to tell me you loved me so much you'd die for me—would you?"

"No," she said.

"You'd mean me to know you would, just by saying you loved me—wouldn't you?"

"Yes."

Without changing the composure of his tone he said: "But you won't shake off the wrong slavery of a spurious bargain with your father and with a man who has no claim upon you; you won't risk a little time of trouble in your conscience, of unrest in your disillusioned duty to a figure of love that had his best life in your own fancy as a child; you'd die for me, but you won't do this other, won't even willingly listen to me tell you why you must, how you can."

She looked at him, the dark awe of alarm taking her eyes more deeply; she said nothing. But under the very heart of her look, he saw a shining, liquid fullness that had come so slowly she herself might not have felt it. And before the tears could form, he had her—warm and mortal—in his arms.

"That's it," he whispered, feeling her soft cheek wet against his. "You cry, and when you're cool and calm again, I'll show you the simple, honorable, little things that are all we need to do to have the world—to ourselves, for always."

She shook her head against his shoulder, but not, Hal triumphantly felt, with the same stubborn conviction.

Clear footfalls ringing on the sidewalk opposite reminded Hal that the lighted room must be in plain view of anyone who cared to look at the windows. But one of the shades wouldn't stay down; so, back at the door, he cursed the impossibility of locking it, and turned out the light.

The glow of the street against the ceiling showed the meager furniture, and Barry waiting for him. He went to her.

"It can't happen—ever," she said, as if to herself. "And you must go away, in a minute—soon, before—oh, God help me, my darling."

Her good lips turned quickly to his. He held her close—her whole, surrendered loveliness living against him; it was as if she gave the best treasures of her life to the keeping of his exultant body, as if their nearness found its way of growth to inseparable communion, miraculous and destined both. She would forget he must go; and he knew he must not.

A quick, single creak was all the warning that came from the hall, bringing Hal to a sense of time elapsed, to sharp, premonitory alertness. Doc's ugly growl was begun as the door-latch clicked; it broke into a sharp bark at the sound of a step in the room; and the door crisply closed again. A key scraped metal, found the keyhole, and turned the lock over, plucked smartly out again. Then the snap of the switch put light in the frugal room, and Hal was looking into Martin Crack's light-blue eyes, their lazy, private smiling harassed by a rattish intensity, as of hate and fear and triumph all together. Only his voice was still drowsy as he said, "I kinda thought it'd be tonight."

For a moment Hal was afraid that the bursting of hot poisons in him must blind him, gag him, nauseate him beyond any power to act.

"You little snooping son of a—cat!" he said, the heavy savagery of his voice somehow saved from trembling.

"What're you doing here?"

Indolently Crack's hand slipped into his side pocket: Hal knew the sight of that evil little golf ball would snap the last shackle on his control; but Crack drew out a stubby double-deringer to point at him, and a small, preposterous agent of reason remaining in Hal noted how that old-fashioned weapon suited Crack's old-fashioned fiddleness.

"You guess what I'm doin'," said Crack in sly, almost sensual mischief. The bed creaked. Hal became aware of his arms, hanging down beside him, drained of certainty, ready to tremble, as after great effort. Then the physical revulsion under his fury abruptly choked itself, left him to a numb, miserable disgust, a tainted exhaustion of blood that would pass for calm. And in it there throbbed only one calm. And in it there throbbed only one calm. And in it there throbbed only one calm.

As if He Had Expected It, He Pushed the Paper into His Pocket.

And in it there throbbed only one calm. And in it there throbbed only one calm. And in it there throbbed only one calm.

"You did," said Hal drily. "And what's there to be sensible about?" The small check in Crack's return to basking satisfaction did Hal good.

Hal looked at Barry. She sat on the edge of the bed, knees drawn up, legs tightly encircled by her arms, golden head a little bowed over her dark, sulen stare at the washstand in the corner.

"Well," said Crack, with a sort of sly modesty in achievement; "we can use dough an' we can use publicity. You got the say which."

"You'll have a h—l of a time getting money," Hal said out of his listless calm, "so shoot on the other, if you think it'll get you anywhere."

"I guess it'll get us somewhere all right," said Crack. "But I figured Mr. Frederick Ireland'd sooner make it dough if you wouldn't."

By G—d, what a dirty trick on the Old Man, getting him into a mess like this! . . . Shame like an instant of fright, held Hal's veins and made his lungs seem to shrink. Providence, you Ireland! Providence! Let a narrow, white bug leer at you in the rotten trap you waked into, and leave Providence to take care of the Old Man. Christmas! Leave Providence to take care of your hate, too. Look at Martin Crack, named for a saint, no doubt—look at him sitting there, a venomous lackey of evil: don't fight him, don't match your pristine wits against his basking viciousness, don't disturb your fine, wounded spirit now that the first fury is out of you.

Hal thanked God his revolted calm had staved steady upon him till he saw what he must do. He could stall, somehow, for another day, until patient Sister Anastasia was delivered at her sorry destination; and in Los Angeles, a free agent, he would be his father's—his own Providence in this. In the room of a city hotel, alone with Crack, he might remember those immense, riven compositions in defiance through which they had minutely traveled, scenes in which it did not matter what happened to a man.

And while these flashing things tumbled past Hal's bitter attention, he said quietly, "If it interests you what Frederick Ireland would think I'd ask him."

"You know him better'n I do," said Crack. "What do you figger he'll think?"

"How well do you know him?"

"Don't know him," said Crack; "but you'd ought to. You're his son, aren't you?"

"Is that a statement?" Hal asked.

"Or a request for information."

"Don't seem like you were exactly denyin' it."

"No," said Hal, "I don't remember having denied it, since I've known you."

He glanced at Barry as he reached for a cigarette. She hadn't stirred.

"You're Ireland's son," Crack said. "Frederick—the big whack."

"Sure," said Hal confidently.

"And you got no idea what he'll think when he hears you been caught in a married woman's room by her husband?"

"If I told you what you didn't like, you wouldn't believe it," said Hal, as if Crack were being a little dull-witted about it.

The shy smile slipped over Crack's fair-skinned face again, and he said, "Look, Ireland, we don't want to get you in a lotta trouble." A hot swirling under Hal's composure made him hold himself hard; in Los Angeles, in the room alone with Crack, he would remember that "we."

"Well?" said Hal, "S'pose you don't."

"Here's the thing," Crack said: "if you'll talk dough, the whole works stops right here in this room—between the three of us. If you won't, we gotta go to Uncle Frederick. An' after that, it's court an' the newspapers."

"That's a program anyway," said Hal. "Push them number one off, and go to Mr. Ireland. Is that all you want to know?"

"Don't you wanta save yourself trouble?"

"Yes, you bet," said Hal, and the casual reading of his own voice fortified him. "But I don't see any trouble."

"You don't," said Crack. "You don't wanna stop this right here?"

Hal welcomed with vicious pleasure the undertone of impatience. He said, "By paying you money?"

"Yes."

Hal puffed the fragment of a laugh through his nose and said, "Wouldn't pay you a nickel even if it meant anything to me."

"Maybe you don't think I know you're Ireland's son," said Crack, his voice breaking peevishly as he raised it. "I haven't denied it yet," said Hal. "Anyone'd think you didn't want to go ahead with this."

Crack watched him again and liked it less. The cunning in his eyes tried for a space of minutes to challenge Hal's unworried look, then suddenly the peevishness blew to a hot ember of malice, hissing in his words like a coal settling through snow: "By G—d! if all this is wasted, fl—!" With one unguarded look of sweating hatred of Hal, he jerked a pencil and a telegraph form from his pocket and went to the bureau, elbows out, to write quickly at a message.

Muscle Bound

Several conditions are described by the term muscle bound, but perhaps the commonest is that by which muscles, through constant practice, are trained to oppose one another rather than to act together in efficient work. Thus, when a muscle is called into play involuntarily its opponent also contracts and the result is less efficient action. The condition can obviously be altered first by rest and then more efficient training of the muscles.

HITCH-HIKING FLY SPREADS DISEASE

The common house fly is a hitch-hiker. However, the fly doesn't bother to jerk a thumb and ask a ride; it flies into moving autos or even trains or airplanes without permission and often travels hundreds of miles before leaving its chosen vehicle.

This habit of flies traveling great distances on other power than their own has made local fly eradication campaigns less effective than the campaigners hoped. Cases have been found where a fly carried disease germs on its legs and body for miles and infected people in the community where it settled. No previous cases of the disease were in existence in the new community and health authorities could find no other source of infection than flies.

Repeated warnings of physicians and health officials have apparently failed to instill a proper fear of the house fly in the average mind. However, a more thorough knowledge of the habits of a fly would increase the respect for this tiny insect, according to authorities on the subject.

Decent cleanliness in any home requires protection against the menace of flies. Whether a fly is home-born or a hitch-hiking visitor, he is a danger. Fortunately, an effective fly-killing program can be conducted in any home by the use of a reliable fly spray containing an ample quantity of Pyrethrins, a product derived from Pyrethrum flowers, which is death to flies, when sprayed in a fine mist.

MAN PLAYS WITH LEOPARDS

Possessing a strange fascination for wild animals, a mysterious man has been visiting the London Zoo recently and playing with the leopards. He arrives usually at quiet times, leaps over the fence in front of the cages, rolls up his shirt-sleeves, and then, one by one, caresses and even kisses the great beasts. When he stretches his bare arm between the bars the animals come to him, and fight among themselves for his favor, but never harm him. In another cage a Kenya lion tries to get through the bars to win a caress. The stranger is about thirty-five years old, with shoulders of an athlete and the wistful smile and delicate hands of a poet.

"I've discovered Calumet's big, new 10¢ can!"

"No more 'by-guess-and-by-golly' baking in this house now!"

says Mrs. Owen H. Fleming, 1235 Judson Ave., Evanston, Ill.

Mrs. Fleming was one of the first women to get the big, new 10¢ can of Calumet, the Double-Acting Baking Powder.

"No need for any woman to take chances with her baking now," she says. "That new 10¢ can of Calumet certainly means that the very best can be bought at a bargain."

Ask your grocer to show you the new, bigger 10¢ Calumet can!

A SIMPLE TWIST... and the Easy-Off Top lifts off. No spilling, no broken finger-nails!

WHY DOES CALUMET give such astonishing "baking luck"? Why is Calumet different from other baking powders? Because Calumet combines two distinct leavening actions. A quick one for the mixing bowl. A slower one for the oven. . . . And Calumet's famous double-action is so perfectly balanced and controlled that it produces perfect leavening—every time.

All Calumet prices are lower!

Calumet is now selling at the lowest prices in its history. The Full-Pound Can now sells regularly for only 25¢. And if you want a smaller size—get the new, big 10¢ can—a lot of good baking for a dime—with Calumet, the Double-Acting Baking Powder.

By Jean Mueller

Now that the days are cooler and our parties are getting back in full swing, there is always a demand for simple, tasty menus that will not take too much of the hostesses time. This salad can be prepared the day before and is very delicious:

FRUIT SALAD

4 egg yolks
1/2 cup cream
Juice of 1 lemon.
Cook in a double boiler until thick. When cool add 1 point of cream, whipped stiff.
18 marshmallows cut in pieces
1 can diced pineapple
1 pound green grapes
Any other fruit can be substituted. This salad can be kept in the refrigerator for two or three days. In fact it is much better if it stands. With the above recipe you can serve cheese and crackers, fudge cake and coffee.

FUDGE CAKE

1/2 cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
1 square bitter chocolate
1 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
Vanilla
1/2 cup walnuts
Serve in squares without frosting.

CABBAGE BALLS

1 1/2 pounds lean pork shoulder ground.
Season and enclose in cabbage leaves. Roast in the dutch oven, or put in a frying pan and cook over the stove for about one hour. Brown the balls in butter, and then add enough water to cover them about half way.

APPLE PUDDING

2 cups apples—cut small

About 2/3 cup sugar
1/3 cup water
Let it stand together while preparing batter.

The Batter

1/2 cup sugar
1 level teaspoon butter
1/2 cup milk
Scant cup flour
Large teaspoon baking powder
Salt
Put in a well buttered shallow pan. Spread apples over it. Then pour 1/2 cup boiling water on top of it. Bake forty minutes in a hot oven.

DO YOU KNOW THAT:

1. To avoid leaving out some ingredient when you are baking, get out everything that the recipe calls for and place them on the left side. As you use them, place them on your right side?
2. If cookie dough is mixed the night before and is allowed to stay in the refrigerator over-night, and then cut in slices and baked, you will save a lot of time when cutting the cookies?

3. A few drops of vinegar added to a cake frosting instead of cream of tartar, makes the frosting fluffy?

A HOLE IN ONE!

Ed, Bob and Doc were resting on the second green, which is behind a mound at Abenaquil, last Tuesday, when a battered ball came over the rise and rolled into a sand trap. The player was not in view.
"Let's make him think he did it in one," said Ed to his mates.
So they picked up the ball and put it in the hole.
Presently weary Bill walked over the mound and looked about for his ball. The three men rushed at him, shouting: "Did you hit that ball? Bravo! You've done it in one, old boy. Look! It's in the hole!"
Bill looked bewildered.
"Here's how it rolled," they said, tracing a course across the green. "A perfect shot! The right angle and the right strength. Bravo!"
Weary Bill pulled out a tattered score card.
"Good," he said. "That makes it

HAMBURG, Great Seaport

View of the Port of Hamburg.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNY Service.

HAMBURG thinks in terms of ships, of fish, and trade with far-flung places. Overseas news, especially news that affects trade for better or worse, means more to it than all the politico-social tangle of Berlin or Munich.

Since the days of sail, its sons have scoured every nook of the world to barter, buy, and sell. Many now extensive German colonies in South America and the Orient began as small groups of traders and clerks first sent from here. Some marry foreign women, retire well-to-do, and bring their families back here to educate the children.

This close tie with distant lands accounts for Hamburg's well-known study of tropic economies and diseases. Its researches into new uses for imported raw materials, the world-wide work of its trade groups, and the desire of its young people to learn foreign languages and to travel abroad. Visit in any Hamburg home, or any industrial museum where foreign products are seen, and at once you are struck with youth's eager interest in men, events, and things overseas.

During the years when endless shiploads of immigrants left Germany for the New World, Hamburg was the port from which millions of them sailed, including those from middle and eastern Europe.

Many a Hamburg sitting room is cluttered with curios and quaint mementos brought back from distant voyages by father, uncle, or brother. Always, Hamburg shares its sons with the sea—many never to return.

From here red-faced crews in smelly oilskins and high boots sail each season to fish the wind-swept North Sea, working as far away as Iceland. The loss of life, ships, and nets in this trade is recorded in many a North sea ballad. Herrings they harvest in countless millions, herrings being to the North sea what bananas are to Central America. Special fish cars, gaudily painted like circus trains, run at high speed from North sea fish ports to fish-hungry cities as far away as Vienna.

What the "Free Port" Means. That phrase, "the Free Port of Hamburg," means what? Only this:

Away back in 1189 Frederick Barbarossa (the Red Beard) gave Hamburg its "free charter." Though a state now in the German republic, it still enjoys a peculiar degree of independence. Its ancient senate still functions in traditional Spanish dress. While Hamburg joined the German customs union in 1888, the senate cannily maintained its free-trade rights by holding back a part of its harbor area as a free port. Shut off by a high iron fence, this section is a city within itself, free from the plague of duties and customs inspectors.

Here are mammoth warehouses piled high with China silk, frozen meats from Argentina, coffee from Brazil, farm machines from the United States, many waiting reshipment to strange named Baltic ports, none to pay a cent of customs duty to Germany. Here many of the world's huge ships are built; here are foundries and machine shops. Here, too, flocks of factories profit by the free use of imported raw material and easy shipping facilities.

Hamburg, as a German state, has tariff protections, but this part of it enjoys free trade in all its enormous transit commerce. This benefit is shared by American firms who have warehouses here.

Like Manhattan island, crowded Hamburg uses tunnels. Between St. Paul and the Steinwarder side of the Elbe, in the harbor sections, a double tube leads under the river. It is similar to the Hudson tunnels at New York, except for approaches. So crowded are the river banks that no space could be spared for inclines; hence, at each end, men and vehicles use elevators, which lift and lower them 77 feet below street level. Domed temple-like structures house these elevators, whose high windows pour daylight down to the bottom of each shaft. Fig-iron weights hold the tubes from shifting. The tunnels, their walls faced with glazed tiles and decorated with sculptured reliefs, are brilliantly illuminated. On bad days, when fog or ice slows down the Elbe ferries or crowds the bridges, pedestrians and cyclists all prefer the dry, warm tubes.

Many Languages There. Hamburg is a polyglot port. Shopping street window cards read "Englisch Spoken," "Se Habla Espanol," "On Parle Français," Syrian cafes display sidewalk dinner signs in "fish-worm" writing. The hoariest newspaper joke tells of one store whose sign read, "German spoken here."

English words and phrases "five o'clock tea," "sport," "morning coat," "gentleman," even "boule dogue" for bulldog—are often sandwiched in German speech and news text. "Jazz" is pronounced "yotz." At the theater one sometimes hears the phrase "Echt Amerikanische Yotz Band," meaning "real American jazz band!" Germans take their pleasures seriously. Sport is highly organized so that fun-making may function smoothly, like electric cargo cranes in the harbor! Hamburg crowds leaving for winter sports take every conventional article advertised in fashion journals. Watch the Luft Hansa planes, whose pilots can't start till uniformed air policemen come with orders; or observe the race crowds on Derby day, where many wear monocles and London sport clothes, and see with what clocklike precision all events are clocked off. In busy cafes waiters keep count of beers served by the number of paper coasters stacked under each guest's glass. Go out in Mecklenburg to shoot, and servants carry your coat, lunch, gun, shells, even a stool to sit on, while others drive the game past you, in easy shooting range. In a vast St. Paul pleasure palace you see dinner dancers suddenly scurry from the floor when uniformed attendants rush in, as if raiding the place, dragging mats, rugs, poles, wires, and all the gear of aerial acrobats. In a jiffy this is set up, and girls in tight leotards fly through the smoke or swing in out over the tables by trapeze. Just as magically, all this spectacle vanishes; again the jazz band plays, and back to the floor the diners rush to dance again.

Alster Lake in the City. Alster lake is set in Hamburg like a reflection pool in some ornate exposition grounds. Imagine Times Square, in New York city, as a tree-bordered lake, alive with toy ferries, rafts, pleasure craft, floats, and swans. Hamburg's Alster lake is like that, only larger. A river, the Alster, on its way to the Elbe plays wide as it reaches the city. A dam divides the lake, cutting off one end, the Inner Alster, in Hamburg's busiest quarters; so that hotel guests, department store and office building workers can look down on cafes and canoes and watch huge flocks of swans fed at troughs like pigs. Gulls are tame; they fly past and peck bread from your extended hand.

Neat white cafes, with glassed-in verandas, fragrant with potted plants and window flower boxes, stand along the promenade that runs about the lake. Crowds gather here to sit and sup, and listen to the band or watch boat races, but are politely blind to opera love-making in cozily cushioned canoes that drift by, often with gramophone playing.

Riding to Hamburg in a third-class coach affords a quick flash of life among the masses. Through snatches of salty dialogue overheard run the themes about which working people think. Jobs, wages, the price of food and clothes, what the government ought to do, politics in its many variations—the same here as everywhere. Also, you hear many poor are leaving the city to save rents and try to live on the land. Some men in the coach, returning from visits with country kin, carry a goose, a sack of fruit or potatoes.

"It was better before the war." "Ach, ja, the good old peace times!" Peace, war, fires, floods, and cholera—Hamburg has known them all since Charlemagne first laid out the place as a port from which to fight the Wends, the Swedes, and other half-wild pagans hereabout, whose descendants later helped people England, Danes, French, Russians—all have struck their blows at Hamburg. But, from the day that Rome soldiers built the first hut and sounded their bugle blasts over the swampy Elbe lands down to the steam-siren chorus of today, Hamburg has slowly grown in power and influence, till now she is the greatest seaport in continental Europe. Heirress of the Hanseatic league, Germans call her.

As in olden days her sailing ships pioneered the Seven seas, so now her liners, freighters, and tankers follow every ocean lane and her voice is the sound of steamers whistling.

First Artificial Teeth. The first artificial teeth were made white, and dentists were obliged to stain them to suit their clients; nowadays they have no trouble of that kind, for they have no fewer than 30 different shades from which to choose, and there is no tooth in the world that cannot be perfectly matched. The variety in shape is equally wide. In all, the dentist has a choice of something like two thousand different shapes. Artificial teeth are made of a special porcelain, which is about as perfect a material as can be imagined. Before this was discovered they were sometimes carved out of solid ivory.

As to College Wardrobe, Here's What

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A LOGICAL way to assemble the all important "back-to-school" wardrobe is to divide it into two types—the "musts" which are absolutely necessary, and the "would like to have," which make clothes a thrill and a venture.

In the "musts" smart shirtwaist frocks in the new silk weaves should alternate with sweater and skirt outfits. We speak particularly of "new silk weaves" because that's what they really are—"new." Handsome, practical, dependable-wearing silks which have the "look" of wool, are the last word in smart fabrics. Don't overlook, especially, the new spun silks which have a rustic-looking rough-surfaced texture. These wool silks, as they are sometimes called, are practically crushless, and though they look like wool they are much cooler for early fall days and steam-heated class rooms. They launder nicely, too.

The girl seated in the little inset picture is off to class in a strictly tailored frock of plaid wool silk which, to look at, you would think was wool. The dress buttons down the back and has cuffs and Peter Pan collar of pique.

The shirtwaist dress is full of bright ideas this fall. Round yokes, jeweled or fancy metal buttons, fur Peter Pan collars glorify the new silk models. Skirts have silk pleats; box pleats placed just above the knee all around are new and girlish looking.

The two-piece type of dress vies with one-piece styles. Perfect for campus wear is a two-piece frock as pictured to the left in the illustration. It is made of one of the chic tie-silks which are having such a pronounced vogue. This one is wine color with green dots. The blouse has flap pockets and the skirt buttons all the way down the front.

Prom-trotting daughters can really let themselves "go" on the subject of clothes. They can be glamorous and exciting and sophisticated and gloriously young, too, in satin, silk velvet or one of the new metal silks. This year's evening frocks go in for molded bodices and waistlines, wide belts or sashes and fullness spreading gently from the waist. Bodices are tricky. Sometimes they are merely a straight band of the fabric held up by camisole or "shoestring" straps. Again they are built up to cover the front of the throat in elaborately twisted, draped and winged treatments, with low-back décolletage.

Girls adore black. Let your daughter wear black in glenning slipper satin or black velvet and then tell her to have her beau send her flowers for her hair instead of her corsage if she wants to be swish. Daughter will be very grand in a black slipper front frock as pictured. It has the high-in-front winkle effect above mentioned, contrasting the low-cut décolletage at the back. The shiny belt is allover-stitched, which is the latest wrinkle for belts.

If your young hopeful is going to a co-ed college, she will want a few soft dressmaker-type afternoon dresses. For tea dancing nothing could be more ideal than a black silk-satin ensemble. Don't merely ask the salesman for "satin." For satisfaction in wear and appearance specify silk satin and insist upon it. The dress should have a cowl neck—that means glittering clips to daughter. The jacket should be cut on the classic lines of her sports jacket, with patch pockets and notched lapels. The skirt should come just below the break of the calf. Worn with one of the new baby bonnets of black silk velvet with ostrich plume tips, daughter will be devastating to her "date."

EVENING ENSEMBLE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Velvet for evening, velvet for day-time, velvet, velvet, velvet! All signs point to a velvet season. The evening ensemble pictured is of deep red stiff velvet—a Chanel model. Luxurious marten collar and cuffs add to the glory of this superb creation. Note the glory of fastening of the gown. Many of the Paris dresses show a down-the-front button closing. Often on sheer or lightweight materials dozens upon dozens of tiny buttons are placed as close as possible and the effect is utterly feminine and charming.

FASHION SIGNALS GREEN FOR AUTUMN

Yellow, the sun's own color, is usually a summer favorite. This year has been no exception; yellow with brown, yellow with black and yellow with green is yellow still. This brings to mind that green is being wagered on as the follow-up color.

When utterly satiated with the idea of current fashions it's a relief to be able to peer into the future. On a recent peek behind the scenes the discovery was made that green looked good to many manufacturers whose fall lines are in preparation. And why not? It's one of the Renaissance colors and a change from the inevitable browns, reds and rust. Each autumn brings a change also from the blues in which we have been steeped all summer.

There are a number of likely looking green woolen dresses ready to make their shop window debuts. Some of them are sure to win applause. It won't be long now before shopping throngs will flatten their noses against the plate glass front which shields the cloth-clad mannequin from the street.

Green, White Jade Having Tremendous Vogue in Paris

Green and white jade is having a tremendous vogue of popularity in Paris now. One-third of every jewelry shop window is devoted to fascinating carved necklaces, pins, clips and earrings, while fat rounded bracelets of uncarved jade are matched by round jade rings. Knickknacks of carved jade such as small, fat Buddhas and awkward elephants are made in green and white jade and vary in size from tiny miniatures to statuettes of 8 or 10 inches in height.

Fall Fabrics. Materials used by smart designers for evening clothes include velvet, lame, metal fabrics, "cellophane" mixtures, brocades and lace.

PEASANT COTTAGE POT HOLDER SET

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

With a very little handwork you can have this charming little peasant cottage with a fence around it, right in your kitchen. When you are not using it the house fits inside the pocket formed by the fence. Colors in the house and field beyond are stamped and stenciled and require merely outlining. Size finished about 9 by 12 inches.

Package A-11 contains the stamped and tinted material of linene for the potholder and the container, also the binding for fence and instructions how to make it up. Sent postpaid for 15 cents.

Address HOME CRAFT CO., DEPT. A, NINETEENTH AND ST. LOUIS AVE., ST. LOUIS, MO.

Half-and-Half Law Case

When a Dutchman refused to cross the frontier into Germany to give evidence, a strange court was held near Elten. The Dutchman was willing to give evidence, so the court removed to the Dutch customs house on the frontier, a little way from Elten. There a table was placed half in Dutch and a half in German territory. The witness, standing on Dutch land, made his statement to the German judges sitting in Germany. —Tit-Bits Magazine.

Nervousness, Constipation, and Poor Appetite.

check their diets for this all-important, 3-purpose vitamin

Many are nervous, poor in appetite, system out of order, because their daily diets lack enough of the precious Vitamin B for keeping fit. Few things keep them back like a lack of this protective food element. So give everyone Quaker Oats every morning. Because in addition to its generous supply of Vitamin B for keeping fit, it furnishes food-energy, muscle and body-building ingredients. For about 1/2c per dish.

Start serving it tomorrow for a 2-weeks test. Quaker Oats has a wholesome, nut-like, luscious appeal to the appetite. Flavors, surpassingly good. All grocers supply it.

Get Rid of Malaria!
Banish Chills and Fever!

To conquer Malaria, you must do two things. (1) Destroy the infection in the blood. (2) Build up the blood to overcome the effects and to fortify against further attack. There is one medicine that does these two things and that is Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic! The tasteless quinine in Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic destroys the malarial infection in the blood while the iron builds up the blood. Thousands of people have conquered Malaria with the aid of Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic. In addition to being a noted remedy for Malaria, it is also an excellent tonic of general use. Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic is pleasant to take and contains nothing harmful. Even children like it and they can take it safely. For sale at all drug stores. Now two sizes—50c and $1. The $1 size contains 2 1/2 times as much as the 50c size and gives you 25% more for your money.

WORLEY WARNS AGAINST PENSION AGENTS

Austin, September 24, 1935.
Mr. T. A. Landers,
McLean News,
McLean, Texas.

Dear Mr. Landers:
It has come to my attention that agents claiming to be able to rush through old age pension applicants are working in the counties comprising my representative district. These agents are fraudulently misrepresenting facts and usually collect some small amount from the old people who will probably be eligible for pension, when the Legislature enacts suitable pension laws.

It is my opinion that your newspaper, in carrying a notice of warning against such low specimens of humanity in their operations, would be doing your readers a good deed. I would also appreciate it, because I feel confident that it is this type of citizen who can least afford to give his money away.

If I can be of any service to you down here, I shall be happy to have you advise.

With best wishes and personal regards, I am,
Sincerely yours,
EUGENE WORLEY,
State Representative.

BUSINESS FAILURES INCREASE

Austin, Sept. 24.—Commercial failures in Texas during August increased substantially in number over both the previous month and the corresponding month last year, according to the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research. Total liabilities of the bankrupt firms were below those of the previous month but decidedly above those of August last year. Failures averaged seven per week, an increase of 40% over the previous month and 75% over the like period last year. Average liability per failure was $20,655, down 26% from the previous month, but 75% above August, 1934.
