POLITENESS

By O. L. D. Tiner

Politeness is the stuff that gentlemen and ladies are made of.

I can remember when it was considered impolite to pass a lady without tipping your hat, and most men tipped their hats to a woman if she was not a lady, and it was considered impolite to remain in your seat and let a lady stand up in a street car, train or anywhere else. Those customs have almost been relegated to the background since women are becoming so mannish, and to an old timer it looks impolite for a woman to walk down the street with pants on, let alone in shirt and shorts.

How a woman ever got it into her cranium to appear in public with half her body exposed to the gaze of every buck negro and roughneck is beyond the comprehension of my intellectual capacity and it makes me want to say, "Get thee behind me, Mrs. Satan." On the other hand, when I was a boy a young man asked a young lady "Do you object to a gentleman smoking in your presence?" and she retorted with, "A gentleman never tried it, sir."

Politeness is one of the greatest assets in a business way that part of the human race ever fell heir to. You have seen a person walk an extra block and take an inferior grade of goods in order to trade with a polite merchant, and go way round a merchant who had trampled on his feelings in a rude way. One man said that it paid to be polite even to a dog and he would show his appreciation by wagging his tail.

The proper degree of politeness is all right and proper, but you have seen people effusive in their manner toward you, and whenever you find one like that he is just soft soaping and putting taffy in your ear, and he has an old dubbed off axe with a big gap to grind out and will ere long be calling on you to turn his grindstone, and he won't fall to bear down either. He reminds me of some poetry in the old McGuffey's reader which starts out like this: "Won't you come into my parlor? said the spider to the fly."

King Solomon must have been over polite to the ladies, for the number that hung around him, and sometimes I think that Lord Chesterfield spread it on like modern girls spread on the rouge, and I believe Sir Walter Raleigh stumbled over a big long plank when he pulled off his coat and spread it in a mud hole so the queen could walk over dry shod. When my wife gets extra nice and polite and is all kisses and smiles and has an extra good dinner I proceed at once to dig down into the deepest recesses of my pockets and hand her over the long green and surrender unconditionally.

An old cowman once expressed his opinion of politeness as he was shipping some cattle to Kansas City when he asked the brakeman a question and the brakeman cut him off short. The cowman was so disgusted with the brakeman's impolite answer that he said to him, "Politeness is the cheapest thing on earth and a man that is not polite is an infernal—" and he mentioned a word that is generally considered the first lick in a fight in the Lone Star State. The Bible itself gives some of the best instructions where politeness is concerned, in the shape of the golden rule and such passages as "A soft answer turneth away wrath," and no better code of action has ever proven more polite or just.

RESULTS COUNT

Hardboiled advertising buyers now say: "We care not for your circulation records, lineage reports, other claims of superiority, for all we want is results." Business results come to those who deserve them and this world does not operate on a sure-thing basis.—Editor and Publisher.

Any regular advertiser can testify to the results from advertising in The McLean News.

Hill Speaker at Luncheon Lions Club

Guy Hill of Shamrock, state president of the U. S. Highway 66 Association, was guest speaker at the Lions Club luncheon held Tuesday.

Mr. Hill gave some interesting statistics on the value of tourist trade, stating that the tourist crop on Highway 66 to towns like McLean and Shamrock is in equal value to the agricultural, gas and oil production combined.

In working out figures for McLean it was found that some 17% of McLean's population is dependent upon the selling of gasoline and oil and the automobile industry; about 280 people being entirely dependent upon the filling station business and some 90 persons in the automobile and allied industries.

Mr. Hill said that the bulk of the argument for the staging of the Texas centennial celebration is based upon the commercial value of the exposition and very little upon patriotic motives. He quoted a statement by Walter D. Cline, in which it was said if the whole number of expected visitors to the celebration could be in the state on the same day, they would consume every bit of food in the state in 24 hours.

The speaker explained the present status of highway 66, saying that less than 100 miles of unpaved road remains unprovided for from Chicago to Los Angeles.

An orchestra and singers from the Hazel Hurd Players tent show entertained the Lions with several selections, and T. A. Landers was called upon for a report of the zone meeting.

Messrs. Hallmark of Shamrock, and Willard H. White, West Texas district manager of Butler Bros. Dallas, were presented as visitors, responding with talks.

Chivalry is not dead; knighthood is still in flower while firemen remain what they are. Not a man of the department who would not rush thru smoke and flame, up swaying ladders or under tottering walls to save some helpless woman or child.

Risking life to save life, quick springing into places of direct danger facing fierce fires, smothering smoke and falling walls to help and save. It isn't your house that is burning nor do you stop to think whether it is a shack or the best in town; it is yours to tumble out and run. Men of the fire department, you teach us some important lessons. We honor you.

WE HAVE LEARNED

It is quite an achievement, we have been told by certain eminent philosophers, to learn to find happiness in small things; things that to the average person seem insignificant and meaningless.

We have learned to find at least a degree of happiness in the courteous nod from one whom we consider a friend; we have learned to appreciate a sincere and understanding smile. We have learned, too, how to enjoy the view of bits of nature which are visible through barred windows, or from a flower in one of the numerous flower gardens within the walls.

We have learned to expect at least a ray of sunshine in a letter from home or from one who has proved himself a friend in our hour of misfortune.

We have also learned to overlook the mistakes of others—to judge not lest we be judged.

We can truthfully say that our time has not been ill-spent because WE HAVE LEARNED—The New Era

S. S. LESSON

By Rev. Cecil G. Goff
Pastor First Baptist Church

THE CHRISTIAN AT PRAYER

Lesson text, Matt. 6:5-15. Golden text, Romans 12:12.

The lesson for this week is a part of the Master's sermon on the mount. In the early part of the ministry of Jesus He prayed all night and in the morning He chose His disciples. He called them to Him and there gathered around them a great multitude and Jesus brought one of the most marvelous messages that has ever fallen on the ear of mankind since God first created him. Our lesson is the portion of this message that has to do with prayer.

In the beginning of His words about prayer, Jesus just takes it for granted that we pray regularly—"And when thou prayest." Jesus did not question as to whether we were to pray or not. He did not entertain the idea that we might not pray regularly, for even a moment. Therefore it seems that a prayerless life, as many nominal Christians live, is almost a sacrilegious life. At least we can say without contradiction that a prayerless life is a sinful life.

The thought of the Master first seems to be that all men should pray. The second thought is that their prayers should be sincere prayers. One might ask the question, could a man pray unless he was sincere? Certainly a man could not pray a prayer that could reach the throne of God and be answered unless it was a sincere prayer. Jesus is including in His message all that which men call prayer. So far as God is concerned, much of what is called prayer is not prayer at all.

Jesus called attention to the then common custom of the Jews who often went out on the street corners and made long loud prayers to Jehovah. This was supposed to be a mark of piety. Jesus said that those who so prayed on the street corners and in the open courts of the temple did so that men might see them and take note of their piety. He said that they had their reward. They wanted to be seen and heard of men and receive their favorable remarks. Innumerable Christians pray from time to time in public under similar circumstances. The supposed intended purpose of the prayer is to lead a congregation in prayer, but the thought that takes precedence in the mind of the prayer in some cases is the effect his prayer may have on his hearers. The prayer that is prayed with a question in the mind that is not uttered entirely subject to God's will is not a prayer. It is sometimes difficult for the self-centered human heart to be satisfied with the will of God. Yet it is the privilege of every Christian to learn as the years of his Christian experience pass to be satisfied with the will of God. We will also learn that the closer we live to God the nearer our wills will be together. The Father is our ruler and is not to be ordered. God may change His will toward us as He did in the case of King Hezekiah, when we approach Him in the right spirit, but we are to be satisfied with the will of God.

The man who seeks the solitude and quiet of a secret place that he may talk with God is sincere in his intent. There is no sham about such conduct. It grows out of an inner yearning and desire to commune with his Maker and Savior. Such prayer is apt to be heard and answered.

Again the Master says that there is no reason to pray as the heathen do with vain and useless repetitions. Prayer does not depend on length or the continued repetition of the words. In fact, Jesus says that the Father knows before we pray what we need. He intimates that we need not pray for the thing we do not need. And God knows not only what we need, but what we are going to pray before it ever leaves our lips. Therefore, the secret of prayer is the condition of the heart of the inner man, and its relationship with the Father.

Jesus then tells His disciples how to pray. He gives this great classic example of prayer. This prayer is often called the "Lord's Prayer," but that is found in the seventh chapter of John. The prayer here is really the "model prayer." There are several things to be noted briefly. The prayer opens and closes with reverence, honor, and love for the Father in heaven. A part of the prayer is dedicated to asking the Father for the necessities and protections of life. But the entire prayer is hinged on a man's current relation to the Father.

One portion prays forgiveness on the grounds that we forgive those who have harmed us. A man's relation to his fellowmen depends upon his attitude toward God (1 John 4:21). Most of us forget when we are asking God to forgive us, about our own unforgiving spirits. Without forgiveness on our parts there is none on the part of God. But our relationship to Him must be even deeper than this. We must be willing for the will of God to be done. A prayer that is not uttered entirely subject to God's will is not a prayer. It is sometimes difficult for the self-centered human heart to be satisfied with the will of God. Yet it is the privilege of every Christian to learn as the years of his Christian experience pass to be satisfied with the will of God. We will also learn that the closer we live to God the nearer our wills will be together. The Father is our ruler and is not to be ordered. God may change His will toward us as He did in the case of King Hezekiah, when we approach Him in the right spirit, but we are to be satisfied with the will of God.

Text: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh, but in vain."—Psalm 127:1.

THE FOLLY OF WORRYING

People are greatly distressed in different parts of the world. Floods in Japan; terror in Spain; ruthless assassinations in France; plots to overthrow governments and to start another war; murders and kidnapping atrocities in the United States as well as strikes, violence and price wars. The present educated world has still to deal with all kinds of problems that people of a thousand years ago had to contend with. Comforts and industries have improved in our modern era, but in spite of that history does repeat itself, the objections of today's "debunkers," notwithstanding.

The citizens of our country have a lot to think about. Yet, worrying over these things will not help a single soul. It will not aid anyone to worry about the prices of food and clothing that may prevail next winter and summer; it will not do anyone a bit of good to strain his mind whether his liberty in this "land of the free" will be curtailed or whether there ever will be a permanent army of the unemployed. Human reason has failed. We must look higher up for guidance; we must seek aid from our God.

"Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh in vain." Everything lies in the hands of the Almighty God. He is loving and kind. God is also just. If people refuse to depend upon Him and think that by their own reason and strength they can accomplish great things and solve national, economical and political problems, God, according to His justice will punish them severely. History and past experience teaches us that. The president of our country did not promise any "Epic" or an infallible plan to eliminate depression in our country in one or two years. He said it may take ten years. If the NRA fails completely we cannot blame him. He is only a human instrument that is trying to do his best to alleviate suffering and poverty in our country. "Our help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth." We must go to Him.

It is blasphemy to say that if God is loving and kind that He would not permit such crises to exist in the world. Many people forget that we human beings are sinful. If we do not turn to God for help; if we do not beg Him as our heavenly Father to succor us in our distress then we cannot expect Him to be kind to us. He has always helped those who were in need. But—it is up to Him to aid when He decides is best. We cannot command Him to help at a certain hour or minutes. We must always say: "Thy will be done, O Lord, and not mine."

While storm clouds are hovering above us we cannot see clear skies and sunshine. "Every perfect gift is from a Father who cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variability, neither shadow of turning." James 1:17. Our heavenly Father will enlighten us and shower His perfect gifts upon us in due time if we only beg Him for them. If we do not acknowledge Him as our Father how then can we expect Him to acknowledge us as His children? God provides. Cease worrying, for it is but mere folly. He gives us a mind and reason to plan our work and to look ahead in our earthly sojourn in this world. But He does not want us to worry and doubt in His mercy and providence. "It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows." Psalm 127:2a. To worry about our problems and lack trust and confidence in God is an insult to God Himself.

Let us better our lives and with a firm and believing heart trust in God alone. He will never forsake His obedient and humble children. Worry not, but believe, dear soul, and your heavenly Father will comfort, protect and provide for thee. Amen.

By Edward W. Pickard

Two men of great importance in the maintenance of peace in Europe were removed from the scene by the bullets of the assassin, Petrus Kalemien who slew King Alexandria of Yugoslavia and Louis Barthou, French foreign minister, in Marseilles. "Another Sarejevo?" was the question in every mind, and, indeed, there was some slight danger that the crime would start another great war. Alexander was just beginning a "good will" visit in France, which was closely tied up with Barthou's plan for accord between France and Italy, and Barthou was soon to go to Rome to further the scheme. Yugoslavia is allied to France, but is not at all friendly to Italy, and Alexander hated Mussolini personally, believing that the duce gave moral support to the rebellious Croats. But the king did not want war, and was willing to help along the proposed accord if it was not inimical to his country.

If trouble does follow after the assassination, it probably will start with revolution in Yugoslavia. Only by assuming and exercising dictatorial powers was Alexander able to keep peace in the hodgepodge that comprises the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, otherwise Yugoslavia, and it is not certain that there is anyone else there who can do it. Civil war might tempt some other nation to intervene and grab part of the realm, and in that case a general conflict might be precipitated.

Alexander's eldest son, Peter, who was at school in England, was promptly proclaimed king and, being only eleven years old, will rule under a regency of three men who were named in the political will of the murdered monarch. Whether these three men can hold the kingdom intact is a question. Only the Serbs are really loyal to the royal house, though all the people had admired the strength and bravery of Alexander, whose life had been attempted four times before.

The death of Alexander was held especially important to Germany by the statesmen of that country, for they had looked to him to curb to a considerable extent the alleged ambitions of Mussolini. He was considered a close friend of the reich and a potential ally.

France was not only worried by the possibility of trouble in the Balkans, but also deeply mourned the death of Barthou, one of her ablest statesmen, and, indeed, one of the ablest in Europe. He had been working assiduously on his pet scheme for a security pact for eastern Europe; and, although Germany had scored him for trying to build a diplomatic and economic ring about the reich, last June he personally negotiated an accord between France and Germany that was believed to give assurance of peace.

Petrus Kalemien, the assassin, who was quickly killed by the French police, was found to have been traveling on a forged Czech passport. Two men who accompanied him on his mission of death were captured near the Swiss border, and another was being hunted down in Fontainebleau forest. Where they came from and what organization was back of the assassinations had not been learned at this writing. The police thought they belonged to a secret Macedonian revolutionary society.

Civil war in Spain was precipitated by the radical elements, starting with a 24-hour general strike which was declared by the Socialists and Communists in answer to the formation of a conservative government by Premier Alejandro Lerroux under the domination of reactionary Catholics. Within a few hours bloody conflicts broke out in many regions, and Catalonia, the northeast corner of the country, decided this was the time to establish itself as an independent republic. Luis Companys, president of the state, announced: "Catalonia is breaking off relations with the rest of Spain. I demand complete discipline from every one." He called on Gen. Domingo Batet, commander of the garrison at Barcelona, to swear allegiance to the new regime, but that wily soldier spurned for time, and before an hour had passed he received orders from Madrid to declare a state of seige. His troops battled with the Catalans, and soon had Companys and his fellow leaders cooped up in the presidential palace. Reinforcements for the government forces arrived swiftly by land, sea and air.

Then the artillery opened up, and after the palace had been thoroughly shelled, Companys and his colleagues surrendered and were marched to a prison ship in Barcelona harbor. The revolution was over and the new Catalan republic went out of existence. It was rumored the collapse was partly due to a dispute between Companys and former Premier Manuel Azana, a co-leader in the revolt. Azana was found in hiding and arrested.

Surrender of Companys did not end the fighting in northern Spain, for the revolutionists in various regions continued their desperate efforts, but the government considered the revolt really had been suppressed. There was no telling how many had been killed or wounded, but certainly the casualty lists were terribly long.

For a long time Catalonia, a hotbed of radicalism, has sought separation from the rest of Spain, and there is no reason to suppose that the stormy Catalans will now be submissive. But for the present they are beaten.

Gen. Douglas Mac Arthur, chief of staff and now in command of the U. S. H. Q. combat air force and also of the ground forces, is planning to develop a fighting fleet of super battle planes. The first step will be the organization of the G. H. Q. air forces of at least 1,000 planes grouped in five "wings" based on both coasts and in the Middle West. This would bring the army corps up to about 1,300 planes, making an aerial fighting fleet approximately the equal of any in the world.

"All air forces, in spite of the incessant talk of disarmament and the efforts made at Geneva to curtail them," General MacArthur says, "are increasing. The whole trend throughout the world has been to increase aerial forces. Weapons of war have a certain need and necessity and are very sensitive to relativity. That is to say, everyone wants what the other fellow has, and the trend has been up."

Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania has in the past been in sympathy with much of President Roosevelt's program, but he has now definitely broken away by coming out in favor of the reelection of Senator David A. Reed, anti New Deal Republican, whose defeat would be most welcome to the administration. Immediately after Pinchot announced his stand in a speech at Wilkes-Barre, Postmaster General Farley conferred with Mr. Roosevelt and then, as chairman of the Democratic National committee, gave out a stinging attack on Pinchot. In it he referred to Senator Reed as "perhaps the most outstanding foe of the President's policies," who, if elected, would "do everything in his power to hamper the President's program and to make a misdeal out of the New Deal."

It is said that the Pennsylvania Democrats are importuning the President to take a hand personally, and perhaps make a speech in the state in an effort to win over rock-ribbed Pennsylvania and retire Senator Reed in a defeat which could also be construed as a slap at Pinchot and Andrew W. Mellon.

President Roosevelt has made it plain that the Civilian Conservation Corps, one of the least criticized features of his recovery program, is to be continued indefinitely. He wrote to Robert Fechner, director of the corps, saying:

"I have been greatly interested and encouraged by the fine report from your visits to CCC camps in many parts of the country.

"This kind of work must go on. I believe that the nation feels that the work of these young men is so thoroughly justified and, in addition, the benefits to the men themselves are so clear that the actual annual cost will be met without much opposition or much complaint."

The present authorized enrolled strength is 369,838, and enlistment of 100,000 is now under way to fill vacancies resulting from discharges. Mr. Fechner said 10,000 were dropping out each month to take private jobs.

Rhode Island Republicans are quite satisfied with Felix Hebert as senator and have renominated him. For governor the state convention named Gen. Luke H. Gallan, veteran of the Spanish-American and world wars.

Government crop benefit checks for more than $352,000,000 have been paid to farmers participating in the production adjustment program, according to figures compiled by the AAA. Some $575,000,000 additional is scheduled for payment under programs used for payment under programs now in effect, nearly 60% of it before the end of the year. Thus the farmers' stake in the AAA approximates $1,000,000,000.

Payments already made or to be made before January are included in the estimate of the bureau of agricultural economics which places 1934 cash farm income at about $6,000,000,000 compared to $5,000,000,000 last year, and $4,333,000,000 in 1932.

There is an interesting report circulating in Wisconsin, especially in Madison. It is to the effect that President Glenn Frank of the University of Wisconsin is looking toward the Republican Presidential nomination in 1936 and that this idea explains his refusal to permit Lloyd K. Garrison to remain in Washington as head of the national labor relations board.

The Madison Capital Times said it understood Doctor Frank feels the Republican party is in need of a "liberal" candidate, yet not a "dangerous" liberal, and believes he is in a position to qualify.

To interviewers Doctor Frank declined to comment on the newspaper story. He said his insistence that Garrison return to his duties as dean of the law school was solely in the interests of the university.

Delegates to the American Federation of Labor convention in San Francisco adopted unanimously and with cheers a resolution proposing legislation for a six-hour day and five-day week for all workers, private and government.

A committee appointed to investigate possibilities and merit of shorter work periods reported favorably. William Green, president of A. F. of L., made an impassioned speech in favor of shorter work periods during which he said the federation can be expected to mobilize its economic strength to make a concerted drive on industry and owners of industry for adoption of a six-hour day and five-day week and that legislation by congress would be sought at the forthcoming session so that there will be enforcement of this economic reform, not to make less work for those already employed, but to create work opportunities for more people.

Resolutions as adopted provide for no reduction in wages to result from shorter work periods. Also resolutions opposing inflation of the currency, demanding equal representation with employers on NRA boards and viewing the "rushing national debt with alarm and misgivings" were adopted.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, won a victory when the convention voted unanimously for the organization of workers into single unions embracing whole industries, as distinguished from craft unions limited to particular trades. The executive council was instructed to issue charters for the creation of national and international unions in the automotive, cement, aluminum and other mass production industries.

The council was also ordered to inaugurate organization campaigns in the iron and steel industries.

The federation also went on record in favor of pensions for the aged, for mothers of dependent children, and for sickness and unemployment benefits. "The voice of Hauptmann is the voice I heard in the cemetery that night when the $50,000 ransom was paid," said Col. Charles A. Lindbergh to the grand jury in Trenton, N. J., after he had listened to the suspect in the kidnaping and murder case. The grand jury accepted this as clinching testimony and returned an indictment against Bruno Hauptmann charging murder.

The words, "Hey, doctor. Over here doctor," were spoken by the man who got the ransom money from Lindbergh's intermediary, Dr. John P. Condon. They were spoken in the cemetery where the payment was made. Lindbergh heard them and remembered the voice.

Conferring with the full membership of the new national industrial recovery board headed by S. Clay Williams, President Roosevelt let it be known that he was far from satisfied with NRA enforcement in the past and asked the board to devise more vigorous and effective methods. Price-fixing and production control were discussed, but not at length, and with the general understanding that, although price-fixing policies of the Johnson regime would be reversed on paper, no sweeping action would be taken to upset existing codes and any action at all would come slowly.

Huey Long scored another political victory in Louisiana. Lieut. Gov. J. B. Foranet, the senator's candidate for judge of the State Supreme Court, won over Judge Thomas Porter, whose campaign was based on his opposition to the "kingfish."

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Williams had as guests Sunday Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Boone and children, Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Dishen, Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Criswell and little daughter, all of Amarillo; also Mrs. C. L. Sharp and son, Winston, who arrived in Amarillo Sunday morning from Los Angeles, Calif. The ladies are daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Williams. Mrs. Sharp will make an extended visit with her parents, and with friends and relatives in Amarillo and Canyon.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Bogan and son, Jack; Mrs. C. C. Bogan and daughter, Ann; and Mrs. Sam Hodges visited their sons and brothers at McMurry College, Abilene, last week.

FLAME OF THE BORDER

By VINGIE E. ROE....

COPYRIGHT DOUBLEDAY, DORAN & Co. Inc.

W.N.V. SERVICE

Sonya Savarin, a prisoner in the camp of El Diablo, opium smuggler, pleads with her keeper for a means of escape from the horror awaiting her, by self-destruction, but to no avail. Concha, her love for Stone overcoming her hatred for her successor, which she knows Sonya to be, arranges for the escape of the pair. They flee the camp in an airplane, but as they leave she realizes that Concha has paid, with her life, for their chance of escape.

With El Diablo and Manuel in close pursuit, the pair fly in the direction of the girl's home. Stone, unarmed, realizes that capture means a cruel death for both of them, but is helpless. He lands on Lone Mesa, but Diablo and Manuel also land. Resigned to their fate, Stone and Sonya make a run for the mesa's rim, determined to throw themselves over the precipice.

(CONCLUSION)

And then, high on the thin blue air there came a sound as old as the lined walls behind, a sound to chill the blood, to shock the very soul. Near and high and savage, primitive as life itself, the war cry of the Navajos. It pealed above the crackling gun, stopped the man and the woman like a hand upon their shoulders.

And out from the dusky shadows the crumbling walls three shadows like darting flames. In the very heart of whirling to meet them, El Diablo and his henchman were at their onslaught, went down with them.

As Starr Stone ran toward Sonya followed, tall Two Fingers rose with the dapper pilot by the neck in his powerful hand. Behind him Hosteen Nez and T'so came struggling up with the great bulk of El Diablo fighting and bending between them.

"Woman," said Two Fingers, "have these two done to you your man?" "I escaped—I and Starr Stone here—in this plane, but they followed us across the Border to catch and kill us both. We landed here—but they—mistake the height. They—they—struck the edge, and—fell."

"Is it not so?" she asked of Two Fingers, turning. "It is so," the Indian replied. "And you, Hosteen Nez, Hosteen T'so, have I not spoken truly?" "Truly," these said quietly, nodding, their English limited.

"My heaven!" said Serge Savarin. "My heaven! But who is this man with you? It seems I ought to know. Where have I seen him?" "You have never seen him," said Sonya swiftly, "and he is my own man. I've known him since the spring. I've meant to tell you, Rod, for months, that you must let me go—that I can never marry you. I think I never knew what love could be before. Now I am irrevocably lost to you, my life set to this man's life. Forgive me."

Rodney Blake did not move, his hands clasped on his pommel. "Sonya," he said, "I know this man. I saw him once at that Indian's hogan. I felt a message of this moment then. But that is neither here nor there. I do not release you. We're taking you home with us now—I'm taking you to New York as soon as possible. Away from this fantastic country you'll return to sanity, to your normal self, and shudder at this memory. Come along, Serge."

And he started forward, flung himself from his saddle. Marston followed him; Serge Savarin hesitated. But here for the first time Starr Stone spoke, moved from Sonya's side. "Not quite, my friends," he said. "And in his extended hand was that excellent automatic which El Capitan Diablo would never need again, trained on them both."

At that grim command, Rodney Blake stopped in his tracks, the other behind him.

What's happened to you?"

But Rodney Blake sat silent, his narrowed eyes taking in the group before him: the haggard woman, the scarecrow man with his right arm around her, the Indians, and the mad old preacher of the Word.

And Sonya Savarin looked back, her mind racing for the words which she must say, the tale she must tell. With guarded eyes she glanced around: at Two Fingers, at Hosteen Nez, at Hosteen T'so; these three who had cleared the world of danger for her, who had saved her and hers from death.

These three—whom no one must ever know had done what they had done. "I," she said, wetting her dry lips again, have been in Mexico—kidnaped by two men who have—died. I escaped—I and Starr Stone here—in this plane, but they followed us across the Border to catch and kill us both. We landed here—but they—mistake the height. They—they—struck the edge, and—fell."

She looked bravely in the three men's eyes, her low voice clear and quiet, even though she could not help the little gaps between her lying words. "Is it not so?" she asked of Two Fingers, turning. "It is so," the Indian replied. "And you, Hosteen Nez, Hosteen T'so, have I not spoken truly?" "Truly," these said quietly, nodding, their English limited.

"My heaven!" said Serge Savarin. "My heaven! But who is this man with you? It seems I ought to know. Where have I seen him?" "You have never seen him," said Sonya swiftly, "and he is my own man. I've known him since the spring. I've meant to tell you, Rod, for months, that you must let me go—that I can never marry you. I think I never knew what love could be before. Now I am irrevocably lost to you, my life set to this man's life. Forgive me."

Rodney Blake did not move, his hands clasped on his pommel. "Sonya," he said, "I know this man. I saw him once at that Indian's hogan. I felt a message of this moment then. But that is neither here nor there. I do not release you. We're taking you home with us now—I'm taking you to New York as soon as possible. Away from this fantastic country you'll return to sanity, to your normal self, and shudder at this memory. Come along, Serge."

And he started forward, flung himself from his saddle. Marston followed him; Serge Savarin hesitated. But here for the first time Starr Stone spoke, moved from Sonya's side. "Not quite, my friends," he said. "And in his extended hand was that excellent automatic which El Capitan Diablo would never need again, trained on them both."

At that grim command, Rodney Blake stopped in his tracks, the other behind him.

"You, Mr. Savarin, have a right to know that your sister is free as the wind to choose—her man and her life. If I am that man, I give you my word that she shall not regret her choice through me. If that life is with me, I give you my word again that it shall be all that I can make it with my heart's very blood. But she shall choose. Sonya—remember, you are free."

"Free!" the girl cried. "And I have already chosen! To the end of life I choose you, Starr Stone!" Once more the other turned his head, put his free arm around her, smiled down with his wild blue eyes that were midnight black by now. "Then, Padre," he said to the servant of the Lord, "can you say the marriage service?" "Surely, my son," the old man answered softly.

"Will you say it here and now, for her and for me?" "Gladly. The young heart must have its mate while the world is new. All things lose their brightness, and youth is short at best."

The shabby, thin old figure moved forward with a strange dignity. "Thy right hand, child," he said to Sonya, "and thine, son. No," shaking his silver locks, "not with that engine of destruction in it."

So Starr Stone changed the gun from his right hand to his left, but its blunt nose never wavered from its mark. He took Sonya's hand, and with his eyes fixed on the faces of the three men held at bay before him, he began to answer the lovely questions of the ancient ritual. "Wilt thou, Starr, take this woman, Sonya, to be thy lawful wife, to love, cherish and protect," the tender words went on, "till death do you part?" "I will," he said.

"And wilt thou, Sonya, take this man, Starr, to be thy lawful husband—to love, honor, and obey . . ." Sonya's clear "I will" sounded in the high silence like the tones of a distant bell. Then Starr Stone bent and kissed her swiftly. "The covenant," he whispered, "for ever and forever."

"Forever," she repeated. "Padre," said the man, "for this service I give you my deep thanks. Some day I'll give you gold. Gentlemen, I warn you, stay where you are. I'm leaving with my wife." And backing away, Sonya in the circle of his arm, he went step by step toward the plane.

Once in its shadow he lifted her to her seat, reached for the belt, drew the buckle. Sonya clung about his neck, laughter in her throat, tears on her cheeks. "Where?" she cried. "Oh, Starr, where?" "To a new life," he said steadily, "to a new world—to the West."

"Wait," she said, "one minute while I leave the old." "Serge, dear," she said clearly, "don't forget me—ever—and forgive me if you can. My love to you always, and to Lila and to Babs. Keep darkness for me. Rod—dear Rod—forgive me, too. Mr. Marston, if you're quick enough, you may find that one who sends the contraband to your city—at the store in town. Good-by, Serge—some day I'll be coming back. Until then, God keep you."

She changed swiftly to Navajo. "Two Fingers," she called, "Hosteen Nez, Hosteen T'so—my hand on my heart to you—my people—my friends. I shall not forget." And presently there was the roar of the motor, the trembling beneath her as the little gray ship came to pulsing life, Starr Stone in the pilot's seat, the moving of the moonlit rock of the mesa's top, the turn, the surge, the gathering speed, the lift, the thrill of quiet as they lost contact and sailed away across the mesa's rim. Swiftly they rose, and the tall stars came down to meet them, gloriating.

As they had faced together bravely death and danger and disaster, so now they faced together bravely life and all it held for that white flame of immortality which lights all mortal flesh, true love.

Children Eat 325 Pound Sandwich at Chicago Fair

Chas. Ed Grauel (center) and John R. Thompson, Jr., were kept busy serving portions out of this 8-foot square ham sandwich last Children's Day at the World's Fair. The sandwich weighed 325 pounds. More than 60 pounds of dough, containing 5 pounds of yeast, 15 pounds of shortening and twelve gallons of milk and 63 pounds of ham and 10 pounds of butter made up the sandwich. It was impossible to estimate the number of individual sandwiches it made, but there was such a mob of children clamoring for one that Chef Grauel had to cut 'em mighty thin even to begin to go around. There is always some special and unique stunt arranged for every Children's Day (Thursday) when admission to the Fair, and almost everything else, is only a nickel.

A FEW EARNEST SOULS

Whenever any public event or public improvement is carried forward to accomplishment, the burden of effort is usually carried by a few earnest souls who see that there is a job to be done and then go ahead and do it.

A small town that has a good city park, a good ball team, is well paved, has well kept lawns, puts on a good 4th of July celebration, has adequate lighting, or has or does anything at all better than the average place usually owes it to the initiative of a few who have ability and who will work.

One man's hobby is beautifying his home grounds. By the judicious use of trees and shrubs and painstaking care of them he sets an example to his neighbors and other householders which may have a marked effect on an entire community, even though few may have the time or patience to even approach the excellence he attains. That man may consider a good home baseball team a thing of minor importance, or even useless foolishness.

Another man may look with admiration on the first man's beautiful lawn and hedge, but as far as putting that much effort in having one himself he has never even thought of it. But he may take hold of the seemingly thankless job of managing a good ball team; he might even have the intestinal fortitude to try to be its umpire. Baseball is his hobby. He helps the community by doing his part to have a good team.

Another man may think baseball is the bunk and that a wonderful blue spruce tree in a pleasing setting is something to enjoy with only a fleeting glance as he drives by. But he possibly believes that good paved streets with plenty of bright lighting is a necessity for his home town.

and he goes ahead and pushes thru the improvement against opposition of the "do nothings" and the "pay nothings" with which every place is cursed.

With another it's a fine golf course, with another it's a better city hall or a better school system. Each man may have a different way of helping his community and help it in connection with some activity in which he takes a personal interest.

Give the boys a good hand, whatever activity they try to put across! They're trying to do something in a creditable manner, even though their way of doing it may not be exactly our way of doing it. At least recognize the fact that they are putting honest efforts into the job. It takes a lot of different kinds of live people to make a town.—Star News, Medford, Wis.

Mrs. Gnags—"I often think that women are more courageous than men."

Mr. Gnags—"Yes. Where would you find a man who was brave enough to stop in the middle of a busy street and pull out a spigot and toll himself up before a crowd?"

Bank Teller—"How much do you wish to deposit, madam?"

Madam—"Oh, I don't mean that end of an account. I mean an account like I have at the stores."

Three years ago Mrs. Epling installed sun-irrigation lath in her garden of 30 by 60 feet at a cost of $240 and is still finding its use beneficial. On July 22 she planted 10 rows of pinto beans which came up on July 28, and on September 11 she exhibited some of the fresh beans at the Carson county home demonstration exhibit. At that time she said she had a bountiful supply for canning and for fresh use.

"The Dawn of a New Creation"

The Golden "Dawn of a New Creation" is now at hand—the Modern Method of Health Restoration is being constantly demonstrated by the many and most remarkable recoveries, through the applied principles of Specific Chiropractic Adjustments.

Intelligence, Work and Honesty are the three essential elements that have combined to make our work so great a success. We cannot get more out of life than we put in it. The successful man of today must be head and shoulders above his competitor.

Brains are the result of Training, Education and Experience, and the man who does things and can be depended upon is the man whose services are in demand. Success can only be had by merit. No science can be greater than the men who demonstrate it to the world. Specific Chiropractic Adjustments are different from all others, and that we succeed where others fail is evidenced by the fact of the great number of patients. To have built up this magnificent practice means that we have been getting results.
