Exit Scootem.

BY BILLIE BIGGERS

Scootem was a yellow puppy, Free and happy, young and gay, Full of fun and jokes and frolic, Always ready to run and play,

He had a home all neat and cozy Underneath a bachelor's floor, And there he'd while away the hours Till time to run and play some more.

All the neighbors round loved Scootem. And 'twes a neighborhood remark That we would go thru fire for Scootem If we could only hear him bark.

The midnight always seemed so dreary As if haunted by some spectral owl, When brought back from the land of slumber By the dismal call of Scootem's howl.

All the children round were lonesome When little Scootem did not appear, And minds were filled with dark foreboding And every heart was filled with fear.

For fear some accident had fallen On Scootem's unprotected head And that at last when we had found him

Thus lived the little puppy Scootem Underneath the bachelor hall, With all the comforts dogs can wish for, And friends to answer every call.

And thus he could have lived forever Had he trod the paths of rectitude, But like all other greedy mortals He envied other people's food.

So Scootem wandered forth one morning In search of better food,

He never meant to steal, now mind you, He never thought of being rude.

That other people counted waste, But nothing was just what he fancied, And nothing seemed to suit his taste, ectly. Thus they are incor

APOLEON lost the battle of Waterloo because a division of his army was behind time and he died a prisoner at St. Helena, and France lost her place in civilization. The pages of history are replete with stories of nations that have withered and decayed because their leaders were behind time and the stream of progress s lined with the wrecks of nations that lost their opportunity be. ause their leaders procrastinated. There can be no greated ragedy than that of an overtaken horizon.

And ties him to the old clothes line.

But young Scootem, now suspicious, Does not like the looks of things, So he goes to jerking fiercely Till the clothes line fairly rings.

Then the ropes which bind him tightly Break and roll him like a ball, But he ups and flees for safety

Neath the friendly bachelor's hall. Then his neighbor's little nephew

Comes and stands beside the door, Coaxes to him, ah, so gently, Calls him pet names as of yore

But young Scootem eyes him keenly, Sees the gleam upon his face, And decides to stay in safety And not risk another race.

But as Samson in all his power Yielded to a woman's charm, Scootem yielded to a woman And wondered what could be the harm.

Hair so red and eyes so laughing And face all devoid of guile, Scootem yielded without a murmer And followed that bewitching smile.

To the barn she straightway led him, Fixed a nice bed in a box,

Put poor Scootem in and walked out, Shut the door and turned the locks.

Scootem whined and fought and whimpered, Then despaired and went to sleep, To be aroused by heavy footfalls And hearts that were to hard to weep.

In their hands they carried weapons, Laughed and jested all the while, Round his neck they put a bail wire, Led him forth with fiendish smile.

In his eyes he plead for mercy, But they heeded not his call, In the air he saw the weapon Nearly ready now to fall.

Through the air the axe fell crashing With a dull thud on his head, The world swam before his eyes then faded, Scootem tottered and then fell dead.

Thus we have the end of Scootem, For his life he tried to beg, For he thought there was no harm done When he sucked his neighbor's egg

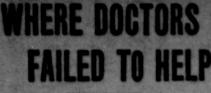

The New Method Did you ever think that you paid a bill twice or have you ever had the misunderstanding about the payment of a bill? Deposit your money in our bank, pay your bills with checks and the return checks are receipts for the money paid. Get in the habit and you will never return to the old method of paying with currency.

hard to achieve in any apparel having less individuality than this special class. A turban and a hat, both designed for a widow, are pictured here. They are wonderful examples of this class of millinery. The turban, which might more con sistently be called a turban-bonnet, is as simple in outline as possible and covered with English crape drawn smoothly over the crown. Its distinction lies in the graceful draping and great length of the beautiful vell. A width of crape, two yards long, is finished with a hem set on at the bottom a quarter of a yard deep. The other end is wound about the turban frame, exactly in the fashion of an ulation widow's veil, all in one. A ly than ever before

I always like to see even a small house well built. When a man is investing in a house, either as a home for himself or as a renting investment, it has always seemed to me that a good, thoroughly constructed, substantial house is the best kind to build. A very little extra in the first cost makes all the difference between a mere shack, which will tumble down in a few years, and a house of the same size constructed in a way to endure for generations. The difference in the ease of heating the two houses is all on the side of the well-built structure, and the extra rent, if it is to be rented, and its freedom from repair if it is to be lived in by the owner, will very soon make up for the added expense at the start. As our country grows older and becomes more thickly populated, it will without doubt follow more and more the example set by England, and will profit by the experience of our cousins on the other side. Our ordinary frame construction is not used at all any more over there. Everything is brick, stone, tile or cement. The adis laid smoothly about it. A broad crape bow is poised across the front with a crape-covered buckle at its vantages of this are clearly demonstrated by the last annual report of the fire insurance board. In England last cents. Beware Germ of Discontent.

Just as soon as the germ of discontent begins to work in our mind, everything begins to look gloomy. Life takes on a pessimistic tinge. Nothing is right or goes right. The body catches the cue. We grow irritable. We soold the children or reprimand our business associates. This means that wires are crossed in the nerve region. Next, the stomach sulks. We don't want anything to eat, and what we do eat disagrees with us. Then, our head begins to ache. The world loks bluer and bluer. Our spirits sag. It is like an endless chain. The mind affects the body, and the body in turn lowers the tone of the mind. And so it goes; and, unless we put a stop to it, the last date of the discontented man or woman calls for a medical board and a sanatorium.

ALFALFA ON DRY LAND

Three Conditions Under Which Farmers May Try Crop.

First, Where Sufficient Moisture Can Be Secured, in Locations Where Pumping Plant is Handy and on Deep Soil.

(By PHILO K BLINN, Alfalfa Special-ist, Colorado Agricultural College.) Alfalfa under dry farming conditions can not be expected to grow the same measure of success that it does under irrigation, nor should the dry farmer expect success when alfalfa is sown in the same maner that is usually sown under irri-tion; a different system of cultivaist be employed.

Alfalfa is a very drought enduring dant when it is once well estabthed, if its roots can reach some deep sub-soil moisture, but it is a mistaken idea that the roots of alfalfa will penetrate through dry soil to reach dature; it is impossible. It is esmatial at the very start, in seeding alfalfa, that there should be moisture in the sub-soil. It is useless to attempt to need alfalfa on dry land, that for several years, so that moisture has penetrated to considerable depth. If one contemplates seeding alfalfa, the best plan is to summer till the previous season with clean cultivation.

There are at least three conditions under which farmers could be advised to try alfalfs in the dry farming distriets.

1. Along creek beds or water courses, where water or molsture from underflow would supply the plants sufficiently to produce a fair crop.

2. In locations that might be watered with a pumping plant, or where France from storms could be diquately ditched and furrowed to re PLAN FOR SAVING RAINFALL ceive the water that might be available after heavy storms from land lying above. There are doubtless many such spots through the dry farming sections that could be well devoted to alfalfa

2. On deep soil that has good moisture retention, and that has been deeply tilled to establish sub-soll moisture, alfalfa could be sown with a view to producing seed by seeding in wide rows, 35 to 40 inches apart. and sown very thinly in the rows. This has been a success in an experimental way at several points in the United States, and when the conditions are understood, there is doubtless a great field for some men situated to engage in alfalfa seed growing.

Under all dry farming conditions it. is advisable to sow alfalfa in rows for intertillage, to conserve the molsture and to control the weeds, the width of the rows depending somewhat upon the probable moisture sup-Under conditions almost equal to frrigation, rows 18 to 20 inches apart have been successful, but on dry land which receives only the actual precipitation of 12 to 15 inches, rows The rains will soak into the soil in-40 inches spart are necessary, the stead of running off the surface or ad of plants in the rows must be evaporating. The extra expense of ited water supply with a great herd of following such a plan ought not to cattle. Cultivation is absolutely essential to all dry farming crops, and especially at a much smaller cost. It pays big alfalfa, to hold the moisture and to interest on the investment even at the keep elean of weeds. A thin stand of higher figure. alfalfa if neglected will become a useless weed patch. There are several difficulties to be met in growing alfalfa in rows. First, couring a stand of plants, and fighting weeds, which can only be met by thorough preparation of the soil and good careful cultivation. Second, blowing and washing of the cultivated soil between the rows by wind and rains. Selecting the fields not subject to these troubles is a wise precaution. and it is advisable to sow the rows in the opposite way to the direction of the prevailing winds, but in the same direction that the water will run best. This is sometimes impossible to do, then one has to cater to the most probable danger.

Drouth of 1911 Stirred Up Interest Among Farmers on Problem of Moleture Conservation.

ADVANTAGE OF DEEP TILLAGE

The great drouth of 1911 caused a crop shrinkage of hundreds of mil-lions of bushels. But it wrought a benefit that cannot be calculated. It stirred up an interest in deep tilling, and the conservation of moisture that will spread until every farmer knows how to protect his crops against the dryest season. You hear deep tillage discussed at the farming congresses. says the Farm, Stock and Home, You read about it in every leading farm paper. It is the talk at the institutes and granges. It will not be many years nutil we are getting out of our poor soil all that it is capable of producing -and that, too, without "soil mining" or "soil robbing."

The introduction of deep tillage tools is another reason for the widespread determination to go deeper into the soil, at this time. Heretofore it has been exceedingly difficult for the farmer to till as deeply as rec mended with the ordinary plows at his command. But such tools have proved that they not only till soil deeply but that they make a pulverized seed bed -all in one operation. The seed bed prepared by such tools is thus an ample reservoir to hold the early spring has not been previously deeply plowed rains. It will absorb three times as much moisture as a shallow tilled field. The farther down the moisture goes the less the evaporation. The farther down the soil is pulverized the roots will go, thus getting all the drink they need even when no rain falls. We have plenty of moisture now. Heavy rains everywhere. We will have oceans of water all winter and next spring. It may make thoughtless people tired to think about water now-but the long-headed farmer knows that he will need water just as much next July and August as he did in 1911-and he will prepare to save it.

Plow the Field as Soon as Crop Has Been Harvested and Follow This Up With Drag.

Moisture conservation is hot a sure cure for crop failure. Every farmer, though, knows what three or four inches of additional rain during a dry season will do, and when it is realized that it is possible and feasible to conserve moisture to that extent it begins to look as though the saving of moisture from one year to another would help some in case of short rainfail. Three or four inches of rain carried over from one season to the next means three or four hundred tons of water an acre in the subsoll-water enough to carry a growing crop through any ordinary dry weather. It is possible to carry even more than this from one year to another, says A. H. Leidigh, assistant professor of crops at the Kansas agricultural col-How can the rainfall be saved? Plucking of the fowls begins imme diately after killing and should be rapidly done.

The success of turkey raising depends upon the kind of care given for the first five or six weeks.

Geese fattened wholly on pasture or with the addition of a little corn make a tender, juicy article of flesh not to be equaled.

Chickens will not scratch when they are overfed nor when there is no feed in the litter. The idea is to keep them scratching.

The successful feeding of poultry depends largely on the ability of the feeder to notice the condition of the chickens on feed.

The material from which eggshells are made is carbonate of lime, and there are many forms in which this may be furnished.

Vigor and bealth are necessary if a hen is to lay right, and the only way these can be gained is through proper care and feed.

Hens that are not laying these days can be coaxed sometimes by feeding them a small amount of cut bone or fresh meat in some form.

A shed of poles covered with straw and open to the south will winter the geene nicely if provided with clean, fresh bodding from time to time.

A small flock of healthy hens, given the best of care and attention, the best of care and attention, will give a yearly profit of $1 per hea after paying for the food consumed. - There are several signs that inds-cale good health-a bright red comb, activity, readiness for food, and a coses and smooth appearance of the

Uncle Sam's Bare-Legged Soldiers

UNCLE SAM has in his army some sands of little brown men of to be found in nearly all parts of the the mid-Pacific, who approximate all grades of civilization and a lack of it and who are well typified by the acpanying illustration, which shows the Philippine soldier in the course of being transformed. A year before this picture was taken these men were wild in the woods, with nothing but a breechelout in the way of clothing. They have advanced to a stage where they take great pride in their caps and coats, but still refuse to adopt the trousers and shoes. A year later, repeating it. however, they will be found as fully The Filipino is being found to be equipped as is their captain shown in the foreground.

The Philippine constabulary, of officer these troops have charged forwhich these men are a part, is now a tifled positions with a resulting death little more than 5,000 strong, includ percentage as high as 40 and have re-ing officers and men. To be exact fused to give up the charge.

were organized during the war of occupation. The scouts readily adopted the methods of the Americans and showed themselves easily amenable to discipline. With them as a basis, the force has been gradually increased until members of the constabulary are island, and have come to be as much depended upon to keep order as are the American troops. The Filipino boys are taken when they know nothing of the English language and little of civilized life. They are provided with shelter and food and get small wages. There is a scramble to get into the service. By nature these Malay Mongolian races are great imitators. When they see a

How a Congressman Became an Indian

N the office of Representative Steen erson of Minnesota hangs a pipe of peace and hatchet-once buried-that are mementoes of the time Steenerson was adopted by the Chippewa innerson was a grown man at the time of the adoption. He had never come a regular Indian. He had done several favors for the Chippéwas and they made him a member of the tribe, just as a college might bestow an LL. D. When it came to the actual conferring of the tribal title there were war dances, smoking of the pipe of peace, burying the hatchet, and much more merry doings that made Steenerson think what a fine thing it would be if the Elks and the Knights Indian's belt lacked about five inches of meeting. The chief multiered something that made all the Indians smile, though they were not due to smile until to ward the end of the following mouth. Even in his more giddy moments the average Chippewa is about as jocose as the portraits of George Washing ton. Steenerson learned that the chief's facetious remark was: "When him been Indian little while him be small enough there for belt to meet all right." Templars could arrange to hold a joint grand lodge meeting. Jolly as it all was, the indians were as solemn as if they had just spent several months previous standing in front of cigar stores. Toward the close of the exercises the chief waited toward Steenerson and proceedal to invest him with a wampum balt, or surcingle, that his soul to Blackstock, price not deposed. We made him sign a brief confession, but I knew that wouldn't be sufficient, and it was then too late and Dundas too far gone to do more with him. So I called in a central office man I happened to know, and turned Dundas over to him to be taken to a Turkish bath and licked into shape; and it did the trick, with a hearty breakfast and plenty of black coffee for a chaser. He was pretty shaky next morning, but I coaxed him into a taxi and had him at the district attorney's office before he knew what was up.
