The Greek government officially announced that Great Britain was sending her 'unlimited support' in her resistance to the Italian invasion. From London came word that England's pledge to back up Greece would be immediately fulfilled and a special session of the British war cabinet was quickly called to consider the outbreak of this new war.

Greeks had been guilty of "provocations" and before the outbreak of actual hostilities, Rome had issued an ultimatum demanding the right for Italian forces to occupy Greece.

England's aid for her new "ally" would logically come in the form of air and naval forces operating from Egyptian bases, informed sources in London said. British men-of-war were immediately steaming out of these bases toward Greek ports, early war bulletins indicated.

What effect this new theater of military operations would have on the decision of the Turkish and Russian governments to cast their lot with either side thus became an important diplomatic question. ## CAPSULES:

Lottery Party

Selective service officials in Washington put all the numbers from one to several thousand in opaque blue capsules; trotted out a blindfold that had been a museum piece since the World war, and the notables of the nation drew them out of a fishbowl, just as was done in 1917.

Every effort was made to make the capsule party as near like its ancestor as possible.

It was the identical blindfold; supposedly the identical fishbowl (though there was some uncertainty about this) they were the same capsules, the same numbers.

And just to make everything perfect, there also was Lieut. Charles R. Morris of Elizabeth, N. J., who dropped down to the nation's capital to complete the picture. He is the man who blindfolded

Secretary of War Baker at the time No. 258 was drawn in 1917.

Lieutenant Morris even stirred the capsules with the same paddle that they were stirred with before.

Selective service headquarters anounced the classification of the engroup would proceed, but that first roll call would probably be small-about 20 per cent of the

Successive steps of the "peace offensive" against Britain were (first) the boiling of the Balkan pot; (second) the effort to get Spain to bottle up the west end of the Mediterranean or to lend herself to it; (third) the inducing of France to complete her surrender and to hint that the United States would be asked to act as intermediary.

Counter-moves in this foreign policy war were these: (first) Church-"The emergency probably will not ill's talk in French to the French people urging them to stand firm, and assuring them that Britain would win the war; (second) the United States' warning to France that if she lined up with the Axis she need look for no help in case of famine; and (third) the flat statement of Secretary Hull that the United States will take part in no such Few elections within memory peace move.

Thus it was made plain to Europe and Americans alike that there is to be no softening of the United States' foreign policy. NEW YORK.-Close in, in the critical diplomatic huddle at Ankara is our John Van A. Mac-Murray, ambassador to Turkey. A Our Ambassador veteran ca-reer diplo-To Turkey Is a mat, Mr. Grim Fact Chaser MacMurray might have been a star reporter. He has a gim-let mind and is a diligent digger and researcher. While our state department may not have much to say about what happens in Turkey and the Balkans, it will surely have the record, when it all becomes history. As minister to China, Mr. MacMurray studied the country and its people so diligently that his friends said he began to look like a Chinese. There was the matter of likin, or Chinese import taxes. No other western diplomat had worrried much about them. Mr. MacMurray completely surrounded them.

He is the world's greatest authority on the subject. When he left his post in China after five years, he had compiled two stupendous volumes on the general theme of "Rights and Obligations of China From 1894 to 1919." These were only small details of his encyclopedic roundup of knowledge of the Far East. That being the case, they shifted him. Which is a reminder that this writer has a friend, a career diplomat, who learned Chinese and amassed such information in eight years in China, and was shifted to Geneva last year to be replaced in Peking by a young man starting from scratch.

With all his grim fact-chasing Mr. MacMurray has, like all good diplomats, a touch of Dale Carnegie about him-that is, he makes friends and influences people. He has a charming, ingenuous smile, when his addingmachine mind is out of gear, and he has been happily placed in the gold-lace maneuvers of our diplomacy. He was born in Schenectady in 1881, educated at Princeton and Columbia and entered the diplomatic of the far eastern division and minister to China in 1925. In 1930 he became minister to Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, and minister to Turkey in 1937. Many big issues of international politics seem to have gone the way of Chinese likin, and to it; in fact, that is quite imposof Estonia et al, but whatever they are, or were, Mr. MacMurray knows about them.

He had had 37 years in the navy without a swing of the spotlight in his direction. But the victory over the Graf Spee started songs in the Drury lane musical halls about "Hadmiral Ennery Arwood"-a natural-and now he's almost the ruler of the king's navee because he took the measure of the big Graf Spee. He is thickset, square-jawed and ruddy of countenance, planted on the bridge as though he had taken roul there and meant to stay. This war hasn't inspired any clanging, inspiriting Kiplingesque lines, but Admiral Harwood may yet touch them off. Ashore he has spent much time in staff training. He has two sons in their early teens, who expect someday to "climb the rigging like their father used to do.

THE GOLDEN RULE

LESSON TEXT—Lake 6:27-38.
GOLDEN TEXT—As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also to them likewise.—Luke 6:31.

Hiding in a dark cellar will not stop the sun from shining; it will only deprive us of its warmth and life-giving power. Likewise the failure of mankind to receive and practice the great principles of Christian faith does not alter nor weaken them, even though it does deprive humanity of their blessing. It may seem foolish to some to observe an Armistice Sunday in the midst of a world at war, to talk about the golden rule in a selfish world where men hate one another, but the fact is that now is the time to really proclaim the solution of God for man's problems. Then too, let us remember that the failure of mankind as a whole to receive the truth of God does not hinder us from receiving it as individuals. Our relationship to God is an individual matter, even though we also belong to a race or nation. Our lesson pre-

I. A Great Christian Principle (vv. 27-31).

The magnificent breadth of this principle of Christian consideration has often been lost sight of in argument over the detailed interpretation of verses 29 and 30. Surely there is not in mind here any casting to the winds of an intelligent appraisal of the needs of those to whom we give; nor is there any thought of a self-glorifying turning of another cheek in physical combat. It does not teach that our nation may not defend itself against those who attack us. At the same time we must note that it means much more than most of us are willing to read into its words.

What does it mean? It means that in the spirit of Christian love we will give of ourselves and our substance in "large handed but thoughtful charity." It means love for our enemies-no small withholding even from unreasonable people. It means doing unto others what we would have them do unto us. It "requires that we should sell to others as we desire that others sell to us . . that we buy of others as we desire others to buy of us . . . we talk about others he backs as we desire that others should talk about us doing it?" (Dr. John W. Bradbury). The Golden Rule is not the Gospel. No one is saved by living according sible apart from faith in Christ. II. Its Divine Foundation (vv. 32-

The so-called golden rules of men W HEN Capt. Henry Harwood lack the divine element of grace and defeated the Graf Spee pocket | are all in the negative. Confucius said, "Do not do to others what cember, the home office flashed a you would not want them to do to you." Others spoke similarly, but Jesus, building on the divine love which does good to even the evil and the unthankful (v. 35), gives a positive admonition of gracious consideration of others.

We are the children of the Most High God (v. 35) and are to live in accordance with His standards and, what is of equal importance. by His grace and strength. Even Christians are prone to live as their neighbors live (vv. 32-34) until they see how much better God's way is, and realize that He gives enabling grace for a daily walk in that better

III. Its Practice and Reward (vv.

Jesus has already admonished His followers to love and serve both friend and foe. The manner in which that is to be put into practice is further developed by urging them to be merciful, not setting themselves up to judge the conduct of others, but rather giving liberally to them in a spirit of love. This does not forbid judging on the part of those whose official duty it is to judge, nor does it set aside the exercise of sound judgment (Isa. 56:1 and I John 4:1), but it does forbid unauthorized and unkind judgment.

"But will all this pay?" asks Dr. Bradbury (in "The Gist of the Lesson") and answers: "Indeed it will . The measure that we use in measuring out to others is the very measure God will use in measuring in to us. The reason many of us get so small a blessing from God is that we use such a small measure in our beneficences and blessings to others" (see Phil. 4:19, noting vv. 15-19; II Cor. 9:8, noting vv. 6, 7; and I John 3:22, noting vv. 16-21). "One of the most fundamental conditions of prevailing prayer is generosity in giving. A stingy man cannot be a mighty man of prayer (Prov. 21: Read these verses with care, and they will bring a real blessing

"A friend?" Mr. Dumont studied his son's face, and presently his own broke into a smile. The light of understanding was in his eyes. "I get it," he said. "O. K., Stan, fetch her along. I guess if you think as much of her as that, your mother and I will approve."

Stan didn't grasp the significance of the remark. But for the time being he let it pass. There were too many other things to occupy his thoughts. He had to get in touch with Helen at once. There was a are possibility that she couldn't or ouldn't accept his invitation. The Inland lakes nestling down among green mountains, she said, were exactly her idea of a per-fect setting for an ideal vacation. Secretly Stan hoped that the inland lake would prove an ideal setting for something else, too, something that he had been contemplating for a long, long time, but lacked the courage to put into words.

Stan drove Helen up in his roadster two days after his folks left to open their camp for the summer. They arrived in the mellow light of a perfect June evening. Helen uttered exclamations of delight at every turn in the road. When the camp itself came into view her enthusiasm fairly bubbled over. The Dumonts met them on the front porch, and Stan knew with a feeling of relief that both his mother and father approved of Helen. His dad took her hand in his and looked down into her face and smiled warmly. Stan had a momentary thought that an expression of understanding passed between them. But the idea was forgotten in the excitement of showing off the camp for

Helen's benefit. The days that followed were, for Stan, a glorious realization of dreams that he had cherished for five long years. There was but one doubt to mar his happiness, and that doubt was, he knew, the product of his own reasoning. It existed only because of his lack of courage; its continuance was and would be determined by his ability to conquer a hideous fear. For six days Stan harbored the doubt and fear without speaking the words that would decide his future appiness. On the afternoon before the day set for Helen's departure he became desperate. They had gone by canoe to the lake's north end for a picnic lunch, and were returning when it suddenly started to

It was one of those sudden, summer downpours that are usual to upper New York state, quick to come and as quick to go. Before 10 minutes had passed, both of them were drenched to the skin. A quarter-hour later Stan passed the were drenched to the skin. A quarter-hour later Stan nosed the canon into the beach below his father's camp. The rain had stopped, but the sky was still overcast and a chilling wind had come up. "Cold?" he asked anxiously, helping Helen to alight. She looked at him and smiled. "Not a bit." But her teeth were chattering.

Stan stood looking at her a mo-

Stan stood looking at her a moment. Suddenly, impulsively, he seized her in his arms. "Helen, I love you. I want you for my wife—have wanted you for five years—been afraid to ask—afraid of ruin—ing our beautiful friendship. Will you marry me?"

Thirty minutes later they came up the walk to the camp, came into the living room where a cheery, warm blaze crackled in the open fireplace. Mr. and Mrs. Dumont turned to look at them with expressions of concern.

But Stan and Helen had begun to talk at once. "We're engaged!" they said, breathlessly and laughed.

Stan went on: "Now, I know what you meant, Dad. I mean, when you said there's one thing that never Mr. Dumont looked from his son to Helen and a twinkle came into his "Well, well," he said. "So you found out, eh?" He turned to his wife and took her hand. "I was afraid, too, son. Afraid if I proposed, it might ruin everything. I, too, thought that the proper kind of setting would, well, help my cause along. But, in those days a man couldn't select his locale, and after the day on the Public Garden's bridge, I realized how foolish I'd been to think that anything so important could be changed by a set-

"Oh, it doesn't make the slightest difference when you're-" Helen broke off, blushing deeply.

Mr. Dumont smiled. He looked at her, her hair matted to her forehead, her lips blue with cold, her clothes clinging with wetness to her slim young form. And he looked at his son, about whose shoes a puddle of water had formed, and he nodded understandingly. "I can see that," he said. "Even without my memo-I can believe that a proper setting doesn't make much difference when you're in love."

ACK gazed steadfastly at her and sulked. There was, after all, little else he could do. No use to protest-make a scene-only to be humiliated by some cutting remark from her. He suppressed a sigh and set his mouth in a determinedly silent line.

Obvious to this turmoil in the breast of the male beside her, Aithra Donovan laughed and chatted airily. Four men surrounded her, giving rapt attention to each syllable.

The situation galled Jack cruelly. He and Aithra, he felt, could be so matchlessly happy together if it weren't for this constant problem. Men, men, men-they hovered ever about Aithra as yellowjacks around speaking. "Miss Donovan and Mr. Kilgore, please; we're ready for scene eleven, sequence B."

Aithra left her admirers and went oward the set.

It was a brief and intimate little scene, involving just the couple. Aithra, as a debutante of the nineties, was required to incite by subtle suggestion a proposal from her hesitant beau.

"You comport yourself, dear friend David, almost as if my company bored you." The line was spoken with a note of tantalizing coyness that stabbed Jack; she so rarely used it with him.

"I do" wish, if only for vanity's sake, that you were not quite so distant."

Jack listened rebelliously to the fellow's stammered apology; watched with mounting hatred as he crossed the set to sit beside her.

"Ah, then you truly like me?" Aithra was cooing. For answer, Kilgore pressed his hand to his lips. Jack's breathing labored. Love, to him, meant a devotion so great that to diffuse it was unthinkable. But Aithra was an actress; her life consisted of endless angling for the favor and notice of those around her.

Yet Jack was incapable of viewing it so. The cravings and demands of his passionate nature spurned compromise.

He half rose, then sank back again as someone called, "Cut!" and the pair separated. The director said:

"Not quite enough fervor, I'm afraid, Mr. Kilgore. Remember, you've been the bashful suitor a long while and now that you've gotten started, you give it everything. Let's try another take on that last part;

Both players nodded, and in an instant Kilgore was once again blurting forth his awkward proposal. As before, Aithra gave an eager affirmative and fairly threw herself into his arms. Savagely Jack fought for mastery of his rising gorge. But this time the thing was too strong for him. Unreasoning fury gained control at sight of the ardor those two put into their embraces. He commenced to twitch all over, sprang to his feet, and dashed to-ward them. A cameraman saw him coming and tried to block the way, but too late. Jack was past him and lunging at Kilgore. Then Aithra's voice rang out piercingly: "Jack-stop it!!"

The command entered his seething brain like a knife thrust, and suddenly the madness dropped from him. Bracing his feet, he pulled up short with stiff, quivering legs and head adroop. The hand of the wom-an he loved slapped stingingly across his face and she cried:

"You had brute, you! From now on you'll stay at home! . . I'm so sorry, Mr. Kilgbre. It's odd; collies are the most insanely jealous dogs. Did you see that green flame in his eyes?"

The patrolman still stood before the Ferriter door. It was open and I could hear men inside talking and furniture being moved and I saw the short white glare of a flashlight.

"Whoa," he said as I turned toward the open door. "Not there, sap. In here."

He jerked his head toward the Paget apartment, turned the doorknob and waved me in before him. It was dark by now and all the lights were on in the workroom.

Three men were there. The ember head, who I learned was Captain Malachi Shannon of the Homicide squad, kept walking up and down before Higgins who sat and sweated in a chair by the desk where a greasy little dick took shorthand. In the corner, calmly slert, Miss Paget occupied her wheel chair. She seemed more out of place, yet even more wholly enjoying herself, than a bishop in a crap game.

I must have showed what I thought for in the moment's silence, while Shannon walked up and down the rug again and Higgins perspired more, the old lady said:

"The Captain's associates are still busy in the Ferriter flat, David. So I put my own at his service."

The grin, that lent her withered face youth, heartened me. Shannon turned on Higgins again, started to speak, bit his lip, rumpled his hair and said at last: "All right. You can go. But not far. I may want you later.' "Yes, sir." Higgins grunted, heaving himself up. The chair I took was warm from the superintendent's stewing. Jake stood in the doorway, and chewed his cigar. Shannon rumpled his hair some more and then wheeled on me.

"Now get this," he stormed, "I want the truth out of you."

Partly, it was the presence of the old lady; partly, it was because I hadn't liked being pushed around by Jake. My squabble with Duke had boosted my morale, too.

"And get this," I told Shannon and he gaped: "I'll tell you just as much more if you don't yell. His eyes were clever for all the Irish obstinacy of his freckled face. "Tough, eh?" he asked at last.

"With tough guys." I thought I saw traces of amusement on his face. I did not know whether Miss Agatha coughed or snorted. Shannon hesitated. I said: "To save us both time, my name is David Mallory, twenty-nine, employed since last Saturday as a hallman here, living in the superintendent's flat in the cellar." "Ah," Shannon purred, looking at

I drew a breath. "I'll make this," I said, trying to be jaunty about it, "as short and as cheerful as I can. Hunter, who was city editor of the Sphere, liked my work. He sent for me to come on. Hunter was canned the day I'd lanned to come and a so-and-so amed Lomax took his place." "I know him," Shannon nodded.
