Says Fortifications, However, May Not Follow

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20 (AP)—President Roosevelt said today he favored the bill authorizing $5,000,000 for defense improvements on the island of Guam but contended this did not necessarily mean fortification.

In a lengthy discussion with reporters of the item in the $65,000,000 bill introduced yesterday in both houses of congress, the president also differentiated between authorizations and actual appropriations.

Nazi Financial Policies Due To Be Altered

Walther Funk, Who Has Hit At U.S., To Run Money Program

BERLIN, Jan. 20 (AP)—Chancellor Hitler today shelved Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, Nazi Germany's high-collared money wizard, in a lightning move which thrust the great reichsbank under control of the Nazi party.

Funk In Charge

The bank, which under the able hand of Schacht had retained comparative independence, was put under the presidency of rotund Walther Funk, minister of economics and number one barter salesman.

Only today Funk published a blast at the United States, asserting Germany would buy from the Balkans and Turkey the goods she used to get from America.

Just at breakfast time Funk received a letter from Hitler's new chancellery giving him three specific tasks.

The most important of these was Hitler's request that he transform the Schacht-controlled institution "into a German bank of issue unconditionally subjected to the sovereignty of the state in conformity with national socialist principles."

The other two tasks given Funk—now Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering's right-hand man as director of the four-year plan—were:

To safeguard the "absolute stability of wages and prices and thereby continue to maintain the value of the mark";

To "enlarge the capital market for private needs."

The reichsbank under the Dawes plan was made into a semi-independent organization with foreign shareholders. Although foreign influence was eliminated by the decree of February 10, 1937, the 42-year-old Schacht ran the bank as his own bastion and often got into hot water with the nazis over their huge expenditures and purposes for which the money went.

Schacht, who had been in the cabinet as minister without portfolio, was retained in the cabinet with unnamed "special duties."

From a foreign trade viewpoint Funk's appointment will have little direct effect because Schacht has had nothing to do with the trade policy since 1937.

A communique announcing the surprise move said "unified leadership of the economic, financial and money market policy was necessary to fulfill the additional tasks placed on business for the building up of greater Germany."

Oil Pumper Shoots At Two Others In Climax To Fuss

ODESSA, Jan. 20 (AP)—Paul Bruner, 34-year-old unemployed pumper, killed two friends with pistol fire, shot at two others and then killed himself in an oil field argument at nearby Goldsmith late last night.

Dead from Bruner's gunfire were Jay Melton, 39, a welder and Mrs. Peggy Gladhart, 28, unemployed waitress.

Coroner Randolph Gillespie returned a formal verdict of murder and suicide.

Constable Burns said he reached the Melton home shortly after the shootings and Melton, sprawled on the floor with fatal wounds in the abdomen, said:

"Bruner shot us all."

Mrs. Melton and H. B. Overholt, also in the house at the time, said they fled through the front door, escaping in the shower of bullets. They told officers Bruner had stepped outside the house for a few minutes and, upon returning, shot Melton first, He wheeled on Mrs. Gladhart, on a bed, and killed her and then sent a bullet coursing through his own heart.

The pearl-handled revolver was still in his right hand when Constable Burns arrived.

FIRE EXTINGUISHED

Firemen saved the day, so far as a portion of the negro population is concerned, when they extinguished a blaze at the Dreamland hotel Thursday at 11 p. m. Wiring had shorted and produced a small blaze and much smoke before firemen brought the fire under control.

GALES DAMAGE MANY VESSELS

By the Associated Press

Heavy winds which reached full gale proportions in some sections today continued their sweep of the Atlantic ocean, whipping up mountainous waves from Be-nuda, to Iceland.

Shipping was imperiled. Giant liners plying the trade route between New York and European ports were struck crosswise by the winds while freighters, off the regular passenger routes, were tossed about by huge waves.

The coast guard cutter Cayuga was preparing to tow to Boston the helpless freighter Black Condor from its previous position 75 miles southeast of Sable Island, N. S. A line was reported to have been put aboard. The Black Condor lost its propeller in a northerly gale Thursday.

The weather bureau reported that the storm were three in number, gradually merging with a long trough centered just north of the great circle route and crossing the path taken by passenger liners on route to Europe.

The Norwegian tanker Jaguar split in twain between the Azores and Hatteras Thursday. The crew of 37 were rescued from the two sections of the ship by the freighter Duval.

The British freighter Gethsemane lapped into St. George's, Bermuda Tuesday with eight injured crew members and her engines disabled.

The crew of seven of the Nova Scotian schooner Laura Annie Burns was taken off their ship just before she sank in New Brunswick and taken to Boston.

NEW GOVERNOR'S NEW TAX PLAN

So far-reaching is Gov. W. Lee O'Daniel's transaction tax system for financing state age assistance costs—nothing like it is in existence in any state—that analysis of the measure must await full study of all statistics involved.

According to general interpretation of the O'Daniel plan, a levy of 1.5 per cent would be levied on practically every purchase of goods or services, and already there have come to light many prospective complications.

Mr. O'Daniel says his tax would yield some $45,000,000 annually. He would abolish the ad valorem tax, however, so that the ultimate income to the state would be reduced.

The governor is to be commended first, because he is willing to accept full responsibility for the plan. His policy of submitting the topic as a constitutional amendment also is the correct one, for certainly no such sweeping revenue proposal should be enacted without an expression from the people.

There are some major objections to the transaction tax that come to light immediately. For one thing, it appears to be discriminatory against Texas manufacturers.

And regardless of what its proponents say, the transaction tax must be considered as a broadened, or "pyramided" sales tax, because the levy on each transaction means that the tax would be levied some three to four times before any product eventually reaches the consumer.

The matter of enforcement and collection seems to us to be one almost in the realm of impossibility. Some system of collection not heretofore conceived would have to be set up to keep track of the complexities covering all transactions; evasions would always be a threat, and care would have to be taken lest a disproportionate amount were spent for collections.

And there exists the argument that always have held good against the sales tax: that it hits poor and rich alike, inequitably, and that it builds up the "hidden" levy whereby the people are assessed so universally and so regularly that they come to forget a tax exists, until they are paying a tremendous burden without realizing how excessive it is.

Mr. O'Daniel will hear a lot more on the subject of government finance before this proposal is disposed of.

THE SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD'S REPORT

The report of the social security board, which was presented to congress on Monday, embodies many recommendations that have been made by experts and by critics of the existing social security laws since they were passed.

Probably the most important item in the report is one which is only a suggestion, since the THOMPSON board recognizes the responsibility of the treasury department in that connection.

The board suggests that part of the cost of the insurance should be borne by other than pay-roll taxes.

The most successful insurance system that has operated for a large number of wage earners over a long period of time is the British. It, in framing our insurance legislation, we had taken our cue from the British we would have made a much more reasonable system.

After the war, however, when there were prolonged periods of very high unemployment, the system broke down.

Since, like ours, it had to be carried by employed workers, their taxes rose to 10 per cent of their wages, and even then the revenues were wholly inadequate to carry the necessary benefits to the unemployed.

The British system of old-age pensions and unemployment insurance benefits has an entirely different social philosophy behind it, and a much more liberal and realistic one.

Instead of financing the insurance out of pay-roll taxes and making the whole system into one of compulsory thrift, the British government distributes the burden over the entire economic order, admitting that its object is to prevent purchasing power from ever slumping below a certain level.

The point is that the British system has worked. The constant maintenance of internal purchasing power above a certain level has prevented any such collapse in the domestic market as we have suffered here.

And although for psychological reasons it is well for the worker to make some contribution to the provisions for his unemployment and old age, the financing of the social insurance chiefly by means of payroll taxes should certainly be considered from the viewpoint of its effect on technological unemployment.

Such a means would also enormously simplify the bookkeeping and administration, which is now in any case, quite unnecessarily complicated.

The system of setting up contributions and benefit rates on the basis of a percentage of wages earned makes a separate wage class of every wage earner and involves for the employer the most complicated administration imaginable and the waste of an enormous amount of costly time.

An attempt should really be made to find out what it costs the country to make out the forms it requires from every company. The paper-work overhead could be reduced to a minimum by using a few categories of flat rates and the stamp system, as they do in England.

The board's recommendations that old-age unemployment insurance be extended to increased categories of workers is obviously sound, as is the recommendation that the widows of workers qualify for old-age insurance should be entitled to their husbands' benefits.

Man About Manhattan by GEORGE TUCKER. NEW YORK—With Max Adelbert Baer in town, crocuses in bloom, and January acting like a kittenish co-ed, screw-ball stories would seem to be in order. And so, if you have already heard this, kindly pretend that it is new.

A nice young man, a very tipsy young man, passed a milk truck while walking home in the early dew. He thought it would be fun to speak to the horse, so he tipped his hat and said, "Good morning." To his utter amazement the horse nodded its head and replied, "I want to wish you a good morning, too."

"The Great Man Votes." Screen play by John Twist from story by Gordon Malherbe Hillman. Directed by Garson Kanin. John Barrymore, Peter Holden, Virginia Weidler, Katharine Alexander, Donald MacBride, Bonnie Bartlett, Brandon Tynan, Elizabeth Hession.

HOLLYWOOD—Here is a 1939 magazine story with which Producer Cliff Reid fell in love with some eight years ago and kept on the shelf until he had found the right writer, director and cast. The completed picture is a drama come true for Reid and all concerned. And if the audiences don't cheer it, then—but see if you don't!

"The Great Man Votes" has a slightly fantastic but original idea. Barrymore plays a once-great scholar, apt on classical allusions and too fond of the bottle, who keeps his two children (Weidler and Holden) on his earnings as a nightwatchman.

The children, proud of him but secretly wishing he amounted to something so they could equal the boasts of other school kids, have a fight with the son (Bartlett) of the local ward-hunter (MacBride), then flee to the country to the wealthy home of their dead mother's parents. They fear the ward boss's wrath will be vented on their father—and so it happens.

But then, in a sharply satirical sequence of a party caucus and the ward boss's cringing unimportance before his superiors, it is brought out that Barrymore, as the only voter in MacBride's strategic 13th precinct, is the all-important man in the majority election.

MacBride eats humble pie, promises Barrymore a fine position which he accepts because his parents-in-law are threatening to take his children.

The final sequences show the hero's triumphal parade to the polls—where, after casting his vote, Barrymore delivers a touching address to the crowd on the privileges of the ballot. And though you may have worried about that vote, considering the stakes, you needn't have. There's a suggested romantic interest, the sympathetic school-teacher (Alexander).

"Stand Up and Fight." Screen play by James M. Cain, James Murnigh, Harvey Ferguson, from story by Forbes Parkhill. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke II. Wallace Beery, Robert Taylor, Florence Rice, Helen Broderick, Charles Bickford, Barton MacLane.

Crammed with as much "fight" as "stand up," this one is a roaring, plotty meller about the fight between the B. & O. railroad and a stage line in the days when "iron horses" were newfangled. They work in slave-running, romance, and all manner of dirty work to keep it going, and complicatedly won't care for it much unless they think the scenery atones. (The scenes of that early, authentic train are exciting, too).

DAUGHERS SERVICE

by GRACE ELLIOTT TAYLOR

Chapter Three OPPORTUNITY. Petronella blamed herself, bitterly. Deep down she had known this would happen. As soon as she read those stilted, self-conscious little articles, over which Peter had tried so hard, he wrote much better than that, in his scribbled diary. She brushed tears out of her eyes. That Air Mail letter, crawling meekly to father, agreeing that they would both come out to Burma, was as good as written and posted. Peter had the offer of a steady job. She, the chance of accompanying him, of being spoiled, and having the time of her life, in a country where there were more men than women. Where even competition from girls like Molly wouldn't worry you very much. Father said she would be out every night.

It might not be so bad. If she did not fall in love and marry, as father wanted, Aunt Malsie had promised her that she could come home and train for a career; that the "Forest House" should be her home, if she needed it. Looking at things sensibly, this desperate bid for entry into the over-crowded newspaper world, in London, and probably always being crazy and senseless. Even if Peter had landed a job, he might not have held it down. And here he came again! But this time Peter was hurrying. He looked eager.

"Peter, you haven't—?" "No, yet, but there's hope! You've got to come inside with me. The chap asked me to wait, because somebody important called to see him. I told him you were outside. He looked out of his office window." Peter indicated the building towering above them.

"I could see you, just standing on one leg, the way you do. He thought you looked tired. Perhaps you were a bit? I suppose I have been gone some time. Anyway, he said I was to bring you in. He's a terribly decent fellow, Petrol! Gray haired, but not old. You'll like him. Even if he kicks me out, like all the rest, he'll do it accompanied by sound advice."

"Perhaps he won't! Perhaps he'll give you a chance! Peter, this is exciting!" They sat on the edges of chairs, in the outer office. The room was full of people, machines, desks, files. There was perpetual coming and going, and telephoning. No one took the slightest notice of them. Gradually, Petronella's hot hands cooled, and her panic subsided. They could see a dark burk, shadowed against frosted glass, on the door marked "News Editor." They heard the rumble of voices which belonged to Martin Rowdon, and his visitor. It began to look unlikely that she would ever see him. In a moment they would be told to go away.

But, abruptly, the door was thrown open, and he was standing there. He was a hearty man, with a large head, nearly white hair, and fine eyes, that seemed to find her amusing.

"Under Your Very Nose" "Now you two! Come along in. Sorry to have kept you waiting. Never become a journalist, my dear. It's a terrible life," agreed Petronella hastily, lest he should think that she, too, was looking for a job.

He glanced at her a second time, and smiled. His eyes complimented her, as if telling her that he thought she might do very much better than become a newspaper woman. Since Petronella's looking-glass no longer told her discouraging things, she was growing accustomed to the admiration of men. It was a gratifying, but a natural accompaniment to life. Rowdon pulled up a chair for her. Sitting at his desk he looked at, and spoke to Peter.

"I've been thinking about you, since I sent you down to get your sister. I can't do anything for you," he said bluntly. Petronella made no sign, but her heart cried out in sympathy for Peter. She sat facing Rowdon. He did not turn her head to look at her brother. He picked up Peter's typewriter. He threw it down with a shrug.

Peter sprang to his feet, hastily. Petronella took the big, out-thrust hand. She thanked him.

"I'm sure you're right. He ought to go. We haven't taken interest in the country. Father mentions the trouble in his letters, but it always sounds rather a muddle."

"What does your father do in Burma?" "He's in the Military Police," answered Peter. "He's just been made a Colonel."

"That might help, too," Petronella suggested. "From now on, we'll specialize."

"Goodby—Good Luck" Rowdon's eyebrows went up in amusement. "We?" he queried. "Your sister might not make such a bad newspaper woman as she seems to think!"

Peter shook hands with him. "Thank you very much, sir. I'll make the most of the opportunity, if it turns up. You haven't seen the last of me!"

"I hope I haven't, Malone. Sorry I must turn you out, now, Goodby, and good luck. To both of you!" Rowdon, smiling, at Petronella. "I think Burma is going to be lucky!"

She laughed at his gallantry. She liked Martin Rowdon. She hoped that they would meet again.

"You're not by any chance party Irish, too? You say such very nice things to me."

announcement, an article by Funk appeared in a special edition of the magazine Der Vierjahresplan (four year plan) threatening to transfer Germany's trade with the United States to the Balkans.

It was generally regarded in informed circles as Germany's answer to President Roosevelt's congressional message attacking Nazi and fascist policies.

More Radical Policy Seen in London

LONDON, Jan. 20 (AP)—London diplomatic and financial circles interpreted the ousting of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht from the presidency of the German reichsbank today as a prelude to a more radical German economic and monetary policy.

Informed sources believed he was deposed because he told Chancellor Hitler the German economic structure could not withstand the present heavy expenditures on building and armaments.

Schacht was said here to have urged that no further measures be taken against Jews until discussions were completed with the inter-governmental refugee committee representatives.

Barter System Due To Be Continued

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20 (AP)—American trade experts said today they believed Adolf Hitler had decided to continue Germany's artificial system of barter trade regardless of any possible effects on world economy.

They drew this conclusion from Hitler's removal of Hjalmar Schacht as president of the reichsbank and his replacement by Walter Funk, minister of economics.

Funk, American experts said, has sworn to push Germany's barter system for all it is worth. Schacht, on the other hand, has been quoted as saying barter was a "medieval method" and that "it is incredibly barbarous to exchange machinery against grain, radios against tobacco, or rubber against cotton, as if we were savages bartering ivory against shells."

When it became apparent the transplantation was successful, Evans gave away his seeing-eye dog, a faithful companion for eight years. "He had more sense than some humans," his master opines, "for he wouldn't go against traffic—and humans will."

Seeing more and more entertain him and hearing the voices of old acquaintances cheers him and reminds him of the day he arrived in Pecos 33 years ago. Capt. Bill McDonald looked him up since he was a stranger and said, "You're either a ranger or a horse thief."

Evans made a quick retort: "I know all who aren't rangers are horse thieves and I'm not sure about all the rangers." But his "horse thief" title stuck and old timers often address him by that.

Relief

alone has the power to determine appropriations.

One letter, sent in response to a telegraphed protest to the senate, continued:

"The request of the president for an appropriation of $875,000,000 was made on continuing approximately 3,000,000 persons on work relief during the winter months, and decreasing that number to about 2,700,000 persons by June. If the congress should see fit to decrease the appropriation which the president has recommended, it is obvious that a very much larger number of persons on relief will have to be discharged.

"I assure you that the needs of WPA are very close to the president's heart. I can say very truthfully that none of the numerous other problems of government receives more time nor more personal attention than the president now is giving this question."

The fact that the White House was sending out such letters was regarded by well-informed persons as another evidence of administration efforts to swing strong public support behind the president's relief request.

Signs of such a move first became apparent at his press conference Tuesday when Mr. Roosevelt said flatly that a reduction of the amount voted by the house would result in taking possibly 1,000,000 persons off WPA rolls.

tionally restored is told interestingly by Evans. Arrangements had been completed for the surgery, but he had to have a donor. Funk-Belter was given to it in the press and a condemned man in Sing Sing prison—a native of West Texas—wrote Evans and offered him his corneas.

Evans spent a week with the man, "just keeping him company," before the operation was performed the day of the scheduled execution. Shortly afterwards, the doomed man walked sightless down the "last mile" with the blessings of a man who later would see again.

When it became apparent the transplantation was successful, Evans gave away his seeing-eye dog, a faithful companion for eight years. "He had more sense than some humans," his master opines, "for he wouldn't go against traffic—and humans will."

Suspended Term Is Recommended In Ray Case

After three hours of deliberation a 70th district court jury Thursday evening brought in a verdict of guilty in the E. E. Ray embezzlement case but recommended his sentence of five years be suspended.

Ray has been on trial for two days for the offense in connection with a piano sale. District Judge Cecil Collins, who heard the case, yielded his bench Friday to Judge A. S. Mauzey of Sweetwater who heard the felony theft case against Ben Keese.

Keese, who was returned Thursday by Sheriff Jess Slaughter from Austin, entered a plea of not guilty to the charge on which Emmett O'Brien previously had entered a plea of guilty and been given a suspended sentence.

The grand jury went back into session Friday morning and outside of a few brief minutes in court, District Attorney Martelle McDonald spent the morning in consultation with the grand jurors.

Divorce petitions approved in the court during the week included R. O. Burgess versus Louise Burgess and Corrie McKinnon versus S. M. McKinnon.

Connally Opposes Giving Submerged Lands To Govt.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21 (AP)—Senator Connally (D-Tex) protested today against a senate resolution which would vest in the federal government title to all submerged coastal lands.

The resolution, by Senator Nye (R-ND), would give the government possession of valuable oil properties.

In a letter addressed to Chairman Adams (D-Colo) of the senate public lands committee, to which the resolution was referred, Senator Connally declared:

"I am strongly opposed to the resolution and beg to request that I have opportunity to appear before the committee before any action is taken on the resolution.

"When Texas achieved its independence and established a republic, it acquired title and ownership to all coastal lands. When it entered the union it retained title and ownership to all such lands.

"By no exercise of power can the United States divest Texas of the ownership of these lands. I solemnly protest the passage of this resolution."

Bob Burns Is Featured In Ritz Film

"Arkansas Traveler" To Play Friday And Saturday

Bob Burns followers who liked the work of their star in "Wells Fargo" and would like to see him again in a character role without benefit of bazooka should be pleased with the type of characterization the Arkansas comedian is given in "The Arkansas Traveler," which is at the Ritz theatre Friday and Saturday.

Casting aside the bazooka and musical comedy wisecracks, which started him on the path to screen fame, Burns now portrays the most colorful character of his career—a happy-go-lucky wandering printer who edits a country newspaper in order to help a lady in distress and ends up by overturning a powerful political regime. While his new role differs from all others Burns has played, it is reminiscent of the "homey backwoodsman" he portrayed in last season's "Wells Fargo."

The homespun story shows "the Traveler" interrupting his life of wandering in a hoboe cavalcade when he arrives in a small town and finds the lady-owner of the local newspaper in danger of being put out of business by crooked politicians. The lady concerned is played by Fay Bainter, one of the first ladies of the stage and screen, whose performances in "Jessebel" and "White Banners" won her admirers everywhere.

When Burns takes over the editorship of Miss Bainter's paper, things begin to happen in the home town. Determined to wipe out corruption in the community, he holds by challenges the machine politicians and the war is on! But every time the politicians pull a rabbit out of the hat, "the Traveler" goes them one better. In a roaring climax, when they seize his presses, Burns counters by enlisting his fellow-hoboes to help him erect a radio station in time to come out against a bond issue, upon which the fate of the political machine depends.

Weaving in and out of the story of Burns' adventures as a crusading editor is a tender romance between Jean Parker, playing Miss Bainter's spirited daughter, and handsome John Beal, the scapegrace son of the local boss-ruled mayor. Others in the supporting cast are Lyle Talbot, Porter Hall, Dickie Moore and Irvin S. Cobb.

Odessa Man Elected By Medical Group

Dr. Roscoe H. G. Cowper, Big Spring, was succeeded Thursday evening by Dr. V. H. Headlee, Odessa, as president of the Big County Medical Society when officers for the year were elected in the organization's meeting at Odessa.

Two other Big Spring physicians retired from the roster of officials while another was elected to one of the high posts of the society. Dr. J. E. Hogan, Big Spring, was named vice-president, succeeding Dr. L. W. Legett, Midland, Dr. B. W. Miller, Odessa, became secretary-treasurer, succeeding Dr. Frank Boyle, Big Spring, and Dr. J. M. Devereaux, Midland, replaced Dr. G. H. Wood, Big Spring, on the board of censors.

Next meeting of the society will be held in Big Spring on Feb. 16 when a speaker from the state association will bring an address on a subject of special interest. Members of the society plan to make it an invitational event. At Odessa Thursday evening, Dr. Headlee and Dr. Miller gave case reports and projected motion pictures on a technical subject.

INJURED MAN IS IN SERIOUS CONDITION

Stephen Egan, retired real estate dealer of Bethel, Conn., in Big Spring hospital since Wednesday week ago when he sustained a fractured left leg and internal injuries in an automobile accident on the west highway fifteen miles of the city, remained in a serious condition late Friday afternoon at the Big Spring hospital, where he has been under treatment. His private secretary, Paul Kroha, also of Bethel, Conn., injured in the same accident, was less seriously hurt, having sustained only facial lacerations and body bruises, and is able to be up and about. The two were en route to Los Angeles and San Francisco, and were to have sailed from the latter port for Honolulu, on a vacation trip.

The hyena's jaws are strong enough to crush hard bones.

FARM WOMAN, BABY SON DIE

Death Friday claimed a mother and her baby, at a Big Spring residence.

Mrs. Clyde Owens, farm woman of the Cosboms-Vincent area, succumbed at 1808 Lancaster, where she had been brought for medical attention, shortly after an infant son succumbed.

Funeral arrangements, under direction of the Eberley Funeral home, had not been completed early this afternoon. Mrs. Owens is survived by her husband and five children.

RADIO ENTERTAINERS TO VOTE ON STRIKE

NEW YORK, Jan. 20 (AP)—Radio entertainers prepared strike ballots in three cities today—ballots which may silence many of the major commercial programs of the national network—after 1,200 performers in New York voted to strike if such a call comes from their national organization.

The 1,200 members of the New York local of the American Federation of Radio Artists voted unanimously last night in favor of the strike.

A strike vote is scheduled to be taken tonight by the Chicago local, Los Angeles group votes tomorrow and the San Francisco unit Sunday.
