66 Calves Shipped Out

One of the most momentous events in baby beef ever consummated in this section occurred when Messrs. Cecil & Puckett received and shipped to the local yards last Friday 66 calves which they had purchased from various sources in this vicinity. The calves brought from $25.00 to $35.00 per head and taken as a whole were an excellent bunch. The following gentlemen contributed to the grand total of the number set opposite their names:

W. H. Bates & Son, 250
W. P. Rogers, 175.
Mont Noel, 181.
Edgar Thompson, 195.
J. R. Hindman, 10.
V. L. Hindman, 20.
J. M. Carpenter, 170.
Will Hedrick, 40.
C. M. Carpenter, 33.
J. H. Hudgins, 31.
J. D. Back, 29.
J. S. Morse, 346.

The J. M. Carpenter, C. M. Carpenter, Will Hedrick and J. H. Hudgins cattle had been purchased by F. H. Yokley and resold to the shippers. The Bates & Son cattle had been purchased by Cooper & Crabtree and resold to the shippers.

In addition to the above shipment Mont Noel loaded out 68 calves, 31 cows and 3 bulls for the Kansas City market.

We were unable to learn the price paid for each individual herd, but it is estimated that the average price was $27.50 per head. The J. M. Carpenter calves were as fine a bunch of graded stuff as was ever produced in the McLean country and they were closely seconded by the Bates bunch.

It is the intention of Messrs. Cecil and Puckett to distribute the calves at different points in Indiana, Ohio and New York to be fed during the coming winter. A few will go to the market at once.

The gentlemen expressed themselves as being well pleased with the calves and with the treatment accorded them at the hands of the local stockmen and left with the avowed intention of being in the McLean market next year.

It is a well known fact that no country on the globe is better adapted for the production of cattle than the Panhandle and with the price soaring to undreamed of heights it is a matter of wonder that the industry does not claim the attention of every farm owner in this section. The man with limited range, who depends principally upon raising feed to keep his herd should make an effort to get the better grade of stuff, thereby producing a much higher priced animal for practically the same outlay of time and expense as would be required in producing an inferior one.

An instance that is entirely in point with that argument was the offer made E. L. Harlan for his calves out of the thoroughbred Hereford herd which he purchased from J. D. Back last year—$50.00 around. Think of it! Not only did he get the offer but he also refused it in the belief that they were worth more money.

The day of the big free cattle range is over as is also the day when large tracts can be leased for a small amount of money, but the small stock farmer is gradually coming into his own and the continued prosperity of this section depends largely upon the successful effort of the individual farmers to build up small herds of cattle, hogs and other livestock to consume the products of the farm. In this manner will the marketing problem be settled and in this manner will the farm mortgage be eliminated.

Plant more cattle and hogs.

Local Winners At Clarendon

In the rush of other matters last week we failed to mention the fact that F. M. Faulkner, who entered sheep and mules at the Clarendon fair, was the winner of both blue and red ribbons in every class in which his stock were competing. The list of his winnings were as follows:

For a single mule any age, first and second.

For a team of mules any age, first and second.

On sheep, yearling bucks, first and second.

The gentleman expressed himself as highly pleased with the cordial treatment extended him at the hands of the fair managers and says he will most certainly be prepared to enter the prize ring again next year, making his specialty on sheep. He says the mules, mention of which was made in this paper three weeks ago, were quite a drawing card at the fair and many expressions of wonder and amazement were heard regarding their unusual size and quality.

He expects to show the animals at the Fort Worth Fat Stock Show in the spring and has little doubt but what they will again take first place.

Revival Continues.

The Revival meeting at the Church of Christ continues this week and the general interest is increasing with every service. Rev. W. P. Skaggs won much laudatory comment by the depth of thought and intimate knowledge displayed in his sermons. The singing under the direction of Prof. L. Q. C. Taylor is of the character that appeals and adds materially to the interest of the services.

Just how long the meeting will continue is not announced but it will continue over Sunday and probably longer. On last Sunday afternoon those who had been converted, five in number, were baptised in the presence of a large crowd of spectators at the George Weaver tank south of town.

Hulon Loyd Injured.

Hulon Loyd sustained a sprained right arm and several injuries about the head on last Saturday afternoon when the horse which was riding fell with him, having stepped in a dog hole. The young man was assisting with a herd of cattle which his father was holding and in running after a cow the horse stepped into the hole and fell breaking his neck instantly. The young man was unconscious for a time but revived before his father found him.

He was brought to town Saturday night for medical aid and is reported resting nicely.

Relative Merits of Genius and Talent

By LINDSAY SWIFT

When Macaulay described that tireless New Zealander standing on the ruins of London bridge and viewing the wreck of empire, he omitted to state that this traveler of the future would find on the parapets two worthies discussing the relative merits of genius and talent.

What are these two qualities or possessions of human mind? Bulwer called talent "doing something better than others," and that will answer very well. If there were not an immense amount of talent in the world there would not be so much success, and the movement of life would be backward, not forward.

But what is genius? Is it the highest degree of talent; or is it something wholly distinct—a special gift to certain rare individuals? Does it partake in a measure of the divine or creative power, or is it a survival of that fiercer primitive energy so necessary to the survival of man or animal when life was only a desperate struggle to exist at all.

Mr. Henry Adams, in his remarkable "Letter to the American Teachers of History," speaks of the cocoon lemur as probably the most energetic creature that ever came into being, and man has probably lost a large measure of the original force such an animal possessed.

Perhaps it would not be going too far to say that Aristotle and Julius Caesar were the greatest individuals this planet has produced. It seems to be true that with the enormous increase of human efficiency and of applied talent that the appearance of indubitable genius of the highest order becomes rarer.

But we may, I think, dismiss any consideration of these marvelous personalities of every age. Their position is fixed and unassailable. There is also an every-day genius—the unusual capacity displayed in our common life, that is well worth our attention.

A very simple instance of the application of this quality of genius into ordinary affairs is shown by that simple little invention suggested by Ben Franklin on one of his several voyages across the Atlantic. The ship's cook wanted to make pea soup, but could find no way to grind up the peas to a suitable consistency.

Now the man of talent will take up these wonderfully simple, yet potentially great ideas and will improve upon them, introduce them to the world, and will do what the genius often cannot do—make money out of his ability and skill.

Advance of Women All Over the World

By J. E. DUMARS, Boston, Mass.

Women of the present day read fiction. They also go into many subjects that heretofore have only been published for men. I am connected with a magazine that has a circulation of two million. Each subscription is paid in advance and the magazine is devoted entirely to woman and her work.

They have the same love for their home and children, but the advancement of the school room has had a great deal to do with the change in their mode of life and way of thinking.

I do not mean to say that because the modern woman does not want to know how to make a pie that she does not take interest in her household duties.

Years ago the only reading matter contained in women's magazines was devoted to receipts and useful household hints. But it is different now. Women have a great work in the world and their advancement has been very rapid.

A number of the magazines published exclusively for women are among the most widely circulated periodicals in this country.

World Has Little Use for Jesus

By Rev. William Rader, San Francisco

When Jesus was popular, and that was when he fed the multitude bread; a few days later he was unpopular because he talked to the same multitude about their souls and bread from above.

He was popular when he ministered to bodily wants, but unpopular when he ministered to spiritual ones. It is the same today—a preacher or a church can be popular by ministering to things of the flesh.

Should we turn this church into a hospital every newspaper in the city would applaud because we were doing some practical good, and the populace would cheer.

When it comes to the church doing its main function, to remind people of the city to come, then the world turns away.

It is because he is a man of sorrow that he means so much to us Christians, because he tells us of the unseen world.

For the things that are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.

How Many Society Women Drink Cocktails

By CHAS. T. WILSON, Chicago

Formerly when fashionable women wanted to drink a cocktail they had to do a lot of maneuvering to get one. At present all a woman has to do is to enter the dining room of the first fashionable hotel she is passing and hand her order to the waiter.

She need have no fear, for the waiter is well aware of this, and will not serve it to her openly. Perhaps it will reach her in an after-dinner coffee cup, or the chances are that she will receive it in an ice-cream glass, surrounded by a lot of fancy cakes or some pretty tulle to hide the contents of the glass.

If two or three women are together and give an order for cocktails it will not be surprising to see the waiter serve it in a silver soup dish, and dip the cocktails out with a ladle into small cups.

Straight-Backed Coat Most Comfortable.

TWO views of the straight-backed coat, cut away in front above the waist line, and hanging straight from the shoulders, shows how easy and comfortable looking it is. The waist line is not defined either in the blouse and skirt or in the coat. The blouse deserves its name as it hangs over the top of the skirt and the effect is apparently to make the waist large rather than small.

Other models in these coats are longer in front and gathered in to a loose belt or band, placed at the normal waist line or a little below it. And there are a few models for present wear with shorter sleeves. Three-quarter length with turned back or lingerie cuffs. It must be conceded that they are smart-looking on trim figures and those not much beyond the normal in size.

The straight back is a godsend to one who is a little round shouldered. The collar stands away from the back of the neck and the curve from the neck to shoulder blades is very slight. There is no curve from that point to the bottom.

But the straight-back is not for everyone and there are plenty of other models to choose from. All the new designs may be said to hang on the figure rather than to fit it. Among them the Russian blouse is sure to appeal to many for in point of style there is nothing smarter. It is a cold weather garment, however, and to be discussed a little later.

Washable Veil Both Charming and Fashionable

THESE two veils have, in addition to the advantage of being clean, at least three others: they are becoming, they are durable and (what means more to the eternal feminine) they are fashionable.

Many more veils and other dress accessories are made to stand washing than in former seasons. Each year manufacturers of fabrics increase their efforts to find stable colors and methods of strong weaving, for nearly all articles of apparel. All fabrics appeal more surely and permanently to the buying public if this item of standing the wash is among their virtues.

For cleanliness is an essential of elegance. Women have taken to heart the axiom that to be elegant things must first be clean. The veil of fine meshed net has widely scattered embroidered dots and a graceful border made by applying rennaissance braid and fine cord. The latter is chain-stitched by machinery to the net.

Such veils are always in fashion, more or less, and will last a lifetime. They sell from fifty cents up to two dollars apiece, as an average. The more elaborate the border, the more expensive the veil; therefore there are patterns that cost more than two dollars. Even at a higher price this veil is not a bad investment since it may be used as a fichu, or for trimming a bodice or as a flounce. Two veils of this kind made a beautiful decoration for a dressy waist.

A newer weave is shown in the veil of shadow lace made of mercerized cotton. This design is unlike the older laces and had its birth in the places this one decoration where it will call attention to some pleasing feature in her face, perhaps the soft curve of her cheek, or the fine line of the jaw, or perhaps the exquisite modeling and coloring of her ear. Sometimes this single figure is outlined in black thread. The effect of these spots is rather startling at first glance.

face as a veil of closer mesh but it is amazingly becoming. Such veils are to be found "by the piece" or made singly. That is, they may be bought by the yard as well as in individual veils. The oddest ones are woven with a single design of some sort (usually a flower form), somewhere on the veil. The clever wearer flowers suitable for evening. When selecting flowers for the dinner table or other decorative purposes under the condition of artificial light, bear in mind that all yellow and blue flowers appear much paler and rather dead by artificial light, while white flowers and the brilliant hued flowers stand out with more snap. On the other hand, the soft green foliage appears to greater advantage under artificial light than does the very dark green foliage, though bright greens show up far better under these conditions.

Fichus to Be Worn This Fall. From Paris comes the announcement that in fall neckwear fichu effects to be worn either with separate blouses or with the fashionable and popular one-piece dress, are to be strongly favored. Old lace, if one is so fortunate as to possess such a thing, is used more advantageously in a fichu than any other type, but fashionable fabrics are thus employed.

IN ENGLISH INFERNO

Scenes in Windes, Where Men Work in Armor.

Precautions Taken by Bleaching Powder Packers Telling in Deadly Chemical Factories—Good Wages for Big Risks.

All the way from "Fairlyland" to "Helltown" range the nicknames which have been given to the town of Windes, in England, by eminent visitors to this strange, busy little world where chemistry is king.

The very atmosphere has a vivid, artificial quality that makes it different from other atmospheres. The factories send out great volumes of vari-colored smoke, which help to make the brilliant chemical sunsets for which the town is noted. The workmen, many of them, go to their toll attired in strange looking costumes to protect them from the fumes of the gases which they must inhale during their work. They look like beings from another sphere or like weird warriors armed for conflict with demons of the underworld.

Windes and the chemical trades stand for each other, says the London Sphere. "All sorts of chemical compounds which are used to perfect the products of other factories are sent out from the town. More alkali is sent out from Windes than from anywhere else in the world. Great quantities of soda compounds are manufactured to be used in paper works. The cotton mills send to Windes for their bleaching materials, the potters get their glazing materials from the town. Mining engineers depend on Windes for the cyanide process which extracts the gold from its ore. Hundreds of other substances, such as wall distempers, nitroglycerine and baking powder, are made in Windes, wholly or in part.

The name "Helltown" was conferred upon the place by a journalist who once visited it and was horribly impressed by the chemical factories. A scientist of equal eminence with the journalist took the opposite point of view and was so delighted with all the extraordinary processes which were to be seen in the shops that he called the place "Fairlyland." The town is a flourishing one. The workmen make good wages and in some of the worst trades have short hours, but even so their lives are shortened by the unnatural atmosphere which they inhale.

Among those who have the most hardships to endure in connection with their work are the bleaching powder packers, who breathe through 24 thicknesses of flannel, wear goggles and calico clothing around which brown paper is tightly wrapped. This is necessary because these men must enter the chambers in which chlorine gas is turned on lime. It used to be a tradition that nothing green could grow within three miles of Windes, but the inhabitants, who are very loyal to their unique dwelling place, point proudly to their large and flourishing public park, whose verdant foliage disproves this tradition. There are 20,000 persons in the town. The men work either in the chemical factories or in iron or copper works.

PUT BLAME ON THE DEVIL

Sudan Natives Have Comforting Belief That Absolves Them From Personal Blame.

Everything that goes wrong is attributed by the Berberines, a tribe of the Sudan, to the devil. Ethel S. Stevens, in "My Sudan Year," quotes a story told her by Bishop Gwynne of his "boy's" coming to him one day and announcing "The devil is in the house."

"Oh," said the bishop, "that is very interesting! When did he arrive?" "He came in with the cooking from the souk market yesterday evening."

"Really?" commented the bishop, puzzled. "Yes, and in the night he came out of the cook and passed into me."

"Oh, and what did he do?" "He went to the cupboard and broke a plate and the top of the jam jar." "A light broke in on the bishop."

"Oh, he was after the jam! I suppose he ate some?" "Yes," said the boy, "he did!"

The idea of devil possession is not merely an elaborate form of excuse; the native servant really believes it. Youth's Companion.

Doctored a Toy Dog. Dr. R. S. Stearns of Sellwood, Ore., has performed a remarkable surgical operation. The patient was a shaggy toy dog which was brought in by Richard, the two-and-a-half-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Brock of Sellwood. In some way the tail became detached from the body, and the child heard that the doctor could repair the damage.

A little later Richard was missing from home and search was made for him. Later the search party entered the office of Dr. Stearns, where they found the physician engaged in performing the operation, while little Richard looked on with tearful interest. After the operation Richard emerged from the doctor's office with a satisfied smile on his face.

DE MAUPASSANT AS CANNIBAL

Famous French Novelist Said to Have Had Human Flesh on His Table.

Paris.—"Guy de Maupassant as Cannibal" is the subject of a remarkable reminiscence just published the first time by a well-known medical man, Maurice Pillet, in the Scientific Review. Pillet recounts the one day the great writer was coming out of his club when a carman suddenly fell from the top of a tall drop at his feet. De Maupassant picked him up and took him to a hospital, but the man died on the way. Asking the house surgeon, who was friend of his, De Maupassant begged him, as soon as the autopsy was over to let him have a piece of the doctor's flesh. The next day the doctor sent a small quantity of this unseasoned meat to De Maupassant, who at once sent it down to his kitchen, with instructions to grill it for lunch.

After finishing the grim dish De Maupassant decided that anthropophagy need have no attractions for the European gourmet, as the human meat was very insipid and tasted like overdone veal.

Edith motioned Mr. Arrelsford away from the door. He went with ill-concealed impatience to the far side of the room and waited anxiously to give the signal, anxious that something should miscarry because of this unfortunate unwillingness of the girl to play her part.

"What is it, dear?" whispered her mother. "Mamma," said Edith, she forced her words out, "he—loves me."

"Impossible!" returned Mrs. Varney, controlling her voice so that the other occupant of the room could not hear. "Yes," faltered the girl, "and I—"

"You don't mean," said Mrs. Varney, "that you return—"

But Mr. Arrelsford's patience had been strained to the breaking point. He did not know what interchange was going on between the two women, but it must be stopped. He came forward resolutely. The girl saw his determination in his face.

CHAPTER VIII.—Continued. "Where are these women in there yet?" asked peremptorily. "There is the key?" Edith Varney left the room and went to the door. "This is on this side," she said. "Will you lock it, please?" The woman softly turned the key in the lock, and returned to the drawing room without a sound. As she was about to close the door, she heard the noise of the opening of one of the long French windows in the room. Edith Varney started forward. She began breathing in a low, feverish excitement. Edith Varney left the room and went to the door. "This is on this side," she said. "Will you lock it, please?" The woman softly turned the key in the lock, and returned to the drawing room without a sound. As she was about to close the door, she heard the noise of the opening of one of the long French windows in the room. Edith Varney started forward. She began breathing in a low, feverish excitement. "Mamma!" Edith Varney hurried toward her and caught her outstretched hand. "I want to speak to you," whispered Edith. "He can't wait," said Arrelsford, "I will see you later."

"Here, this way, Mrs. Varney," said Arrelsford, taking that lady by the arm and going down to the far end to the door covered by the portieres. The two disappeared, and it was impossible for a soul to see them in the darkness of the hall, although they could see clearly enough, even in the dimly lighted drawing room, everything that would happen. Edith stood as if rooted to the floor, the paper still in her hand, when Thorne opened the sash which she had closed behind her and entered in his turn the window through which she had come a short time before. He stepped eagerly toward her. "You were so long," he whispered, "coming for me, that—" He stopped abruptly and looked at her face, "is anything the matter?" "No." "You had been away such a long time that I thought—" "Only a few minutes," said the man passionately. His voice was low and gently modulated, not because he had anything to conceal but because of the softness of the moonlight and the few candles dimly flickering upon the walls of the great room, the look in the girl's eyes, and the feeling in his heart. A few minutes, the girl had said—Ah, it was indeed a few years to him.

"If it was a few years to you," returned the girl with a violent effort at lightness, although her heart was torn to pieces with the emotions of the moment, "what a lot of time there is." "No," said Thorne, "there is only tonight." Edith threw out her hand to check what she would have heard, but Thorne caught it. He came closer to her. "There's only tonight, and you in the world," he said. "You overwhelm me." "I can't help myself. I came here determined not to tell you how I loved you, and for the last half hour I have been telling you nothing else. I could tell you all my life and never finish. Ah, my darling, my darling—there's only tonight and you." Edith swayed toward him for a moment, completely influenced by his ardor, but then drew back. "No, no," she faltered. "You mustn't." She glanced around the room apprehensively. "No, no, not now!" "You are right," said the man. She dragged herself away from him. He would not retain her against her will, and without a struggle he released her hand. "You are right. Don't mind what I said, Miss Varney. I have forgotten myself, believe me." He drew further away from her. "I came to make a brief call, to say good-bye and—"

Edith looked from Arrelsford's set face, with his bitter words, the truth of which she was too just not to acknowledge, ringing in her ears, to the face of her mother. It was a sweet face, full of sympathy and love, but it was set in the same way as the man's. The patriotism of the woman was aroused. The kind of help that Edith wanted in her mother's look she did not find there. "You mustn't do this, Edith; you must do your part," said Mrs. Varney. The resolution of the girl gave way. "He is there," she faltered piteously, "he is there at the further end of the veranda. What more do you want of me?" Her voice rose in spite of her efforts to control herself. "Call him to the room, and do it naturally. If anyone else should do it he would suspect something immediately and be on his guard." "Very well," said the girl helplessly. "I will call him."

Edith swayed toward him for a moment, completely influenced by his ardor, but then drew back. "No, no," she faltered. "You mustn't." She glanced around the room apprehensively. "No, no, not now!" "You are right," said the man. She dragged herself away from him. He would not retain her against her will, and without a struggle he released her hand. "You are right. Don't mind what I said, Miss Varney. I have forgotten myself, believe me." He drew further away from her. "I came to make a brief call, to say good-bye and—"

"Prisoner, Sir, Broke Out of Libby."

"Prisoner, Sir, Broke Out of Libby." said the girl, handing him the folded dispatch. She had intended to look him full in the face as he took it, but at the last moment her courage failed her. She looked away and did not see the instant but quickly mastered start of surprise. She was only conscious that Thorne had possessed himself of the document. "What is it?" asked Thorne, holding it in his hand. "That is what I want you to tell me," said the girl. "Oh, don't you know?" said Thorne, now entirely master of himself. "No," answered the girl, but there was something in her voice which now fully aroused the suspicions of the man. "It appears to be a note from some youth. Its duty, in self-preservation, is to inflict punishment. A part of this self-preservation duty, however, is to prevent the growth of murderers. In so far as society allows slums to exist and other degrading influences to be fostered, it is not without responsibility for the criminal."

ASQUITH'S OLD HOME

Humble Birthplace of the Powerful British Premier.

Morley in Yorkshire, England, Now an Important Manufacturing and Mining Town of 30,000—Croft House Located There.

London.—In a small self-contained house, in a little town of 5,000 inhabitants, was born in September, 1852, the man who now leads the government controlling the biggest and richest empire this world has ever known. Today the little place, Morley in Yorkshire, England, has grown to be an important manufacturing and mining town of 30,000 inhabitants. The birthplace of Rt. Rev. Hon. Mr. Asquith, Croft House, is still in a good state of preservation, standing now as it has for nearly a century at least in its own grounds. Unassuming, and not at all pretentious, but real homeliness and comfort, the house forms a by no means unfitting monument to the man born in it, who has arrived at great position. Yorkshiremen are not given to belittling the success of their fellows, nor indeed to making little of anything that might add to the glory of the county. In order that the world might not forget that it owed Mr. Asquith to Yorkshire—he left there at seven years of age—and to remind Mr. Asquith that his county was proud of him, a great celebration in his honor was held there recently. On this occasion the prime minister was made one of the four freemen of the borough, an honor which he deeply appreciated. Mr. Asquith has never forgotten the little town in the West Riding. Once, when he was referring in a speech to the peace rejoicing that followed the close of the Crimean war, he indulged in an interesting reminiscence. "I remember well," he said, "carrying a small flag bearing a pacific inscription amongst the Sunday school children of the town." This shows that Mr. Asquith's memory of Morley must be very tenacious, for he could have been only four years, or less, at the time. He was then a member of the Sunday school of Rehoboth Congregational chapel, now St. Mary's Congregational church, once a Roman Catholic church. The town is an important center of the woolen industry. But there are other trades by which Morley thrives, and the clatter of the clogs of girl mill-workers is to be heard in its steep streets morning and evening; grimy-faced colliers, always laughing and joking, as if they did not follow the most perilous of occupations, go to and fro between their homes and the pits, and pale-faced weavers, who work at the cloth mills, look as if each one had stepped out of the pages of "Silas Marner." There is said to be no one in Morley now who remembers Mr. Asquith as a boy, and it is very probable.

2 VEGETABLES ON ONE VINE

Old Virginia Man Grows Potatoes and Tomatoes From the Same Plant. Martinsburg, W. Va.—George Snively, seventy-two years old, a horticulturist of Shady Grove, has duplicated a feat he accomplished when he was a boy of fourteen, considerably before the time of Luther Burbank, the "plant wizard." Snively has been successful in grafting a tomato stalk on a potato vine and having the plant reproduce itself. This feat, according to horticulturists, never before has been accomplished. When fourteen years old, Snively, in making experiments with the tomato grafting them together and having the plant produce both tomatoes and potatoes. He, however, was never able to perfect his method. For fifty-eight years he has toiled patiently in an effort to create a new plant that would produce tomatoes on the vine above ground and potatoes on the roots below the soil. But the old horticulturist at last has achieved success. On his big farm in Shady Grove can be seen several of the hybrid tomato-potato plants. Snively said there is no question as to the success of his experiments. He says that he has so far perfected his system of grafting the two plants as to make it certain both vegetables ultimately will be raised on one plant.

Uric Acid Is Slow Poison

Excess uric acid left in the blood by weak kidneys, causes more disease than any other poison. Among its effects are backache, headache, dizziness, irritability, nervousness, drowsiness, "blues," rheumatic attacks and urinary disorders. Later effects are dropsy, gravel or heart disease. If you would avoid uric acid troubles, keep your kidneys healthy. To stimulate and strengthen weak kidneys, use Doan's Kidney Pills—the best recommended special kidney remedy.

After a Pleasant Evening. Mr. Sydney Buxton told an amusing story for the purpose of illustrating a point at a recent dinner. A certain convivial soul, who had been invited to dine with a friend, whose house was at the end of a dark and muddy lane, was advised to bring a big lantern. After a very jovial evening the convivial one left and struggled home through the mud, firmly gripping his heavy burden by the handle. Next morning he received this message from his host: "Here with your lantern; please return parrot and cage."

Had a Chance Now. While he was playing on a certain Scottish course, a politician remarked to his caddie: "By the way, the last time I was here I played with Tom McGregor. He's grand player!" "Aye," said the caddie, "but ye could beat McGregor noo." The politician, knowing what a fine player McGregor had shown himself, was immensely pleased at what he deemed the caddie's compliment to his own improved play. "Do you think so?" he exclaimed. "Aye," came the slow reply, "McGregor's deid!"

RESPONSIBLE FOR THE SLUM... Society Can Not Ignore Its Share of Blame When the Facts Are Brought to Light of Day.

While a noted physician was making these statements before a body of learned colleagues, a jury in Chicago found three boys, aged consecutively seventeen, eighteen and nineteen years, guilty of murder and convicted them to long terms in prison. The slayers were all slum products. Their youth saved them from hanging.

Strange Guests at St. Bernard. An enormous flock of swallows was overtaken by a heavy snowstorm near the famous Hospice of St. Bernard in the Alps last winter. The Difference in Men. One man will settle down into the routine of his calling, digging the rut deeper each day, until he loses power to see out from them. Another, in the same vocation, shows an ability to make each day's work a source of new growth in power and in appreciation. So, one person will rest passively on the fact of some well-established love or friendship, and thus lose, after a time, the beauty of the relationship and the meaning it once possessed for his life, while another actively woos the love of his friend every day, and so finds a deep, ever opening below deep in the relationship, with an ever fresh realization of the truth and wonder of life.—Edward Howard Griggs.

Commercial Club Needed

During the past week we have heard some considerable talk among the business men concerning the advisability of organizing a commercial club to take over the "boosting" responsibility that has lain heavy and dormant on our hands for the past two or three years. During the period mentioned very little has been done to promote the community advancement of the town and vicinity. Individual effort has been expended along individual lines only and concerted effort for the public welfare has been woefully lacking.

There are daily problems confronting us as a community which are not attempted for the very simple reason that there is no one to take the initiative. In the absence of that optimistic spirit engendered by a wide-awake commercial organization the individual citizen becomes pessimistic and pessimism, like optimism, being a disease, we are gradually allowing it to consume us to the extent that it is not uncommon to hear those who are most interested in the welfare of the town express the certain opinion that "McLean is dead".

Why are we dead? Do we have a business stringency peculiar to this section alone? Are our crop productions and other industrial pursuits inferior to those of other communities? Certainly not. The mere fact that we are diseased with fatal malady, pessimism, causes us to look at the world through "glasses darkly" and we cannot comprehend the extent of our commercial and industrial horizon. Let us awaken to a realization of the fact that we have as good a country as can be found

HALTER-BREAKING COLT NOT DIFFICULT

Turned Out to Pasture.

(By J. M. BELL.) Twenty-odd years ago the writer got a New York horse dealer...

First time cornered in a stall by several farm hands, which may be a frolic to the latter but quite contrary to the former.

A wild, green colt is as strong as a bull when thus cornered, a man tries to throw a noose over the terrified animal's head...

Again they try the noose, and this time successfully. The sweating, plunging young animal is now drawn up to the partition by three husky farm laborers...

Men are hanging to the end of the long rope, an end of which is run through the bit.

The colt reaches the end of its tether with a jerk which nearly dislocates his jaw...

Now he is forced to move. Away he springs, to be jerked back suddenly. In the course of an hour the men and the victim are equally worn out...

The dams were well fed and regularly worked at least eleven months out of the twelve, if the weather permitted.

They kept in good working order, did good work all the year round and four out of five raised a thrifty colt.

Never let a colt grow to any age and size without halter breaking him. Hundreds of valuable young horses are much injured in disposition by letting them run until they are from two to three years of age...

PRETTY NAMES FOR BOOKS

Real Old-Time Titles Sound Decidedly Strange to the Eye of the Reader Today.

The following are some of the curious titles of old English books:

"A Most Delectable Sweet Perfumed Nosegay for God's Saints to Smell At."

"Biscuit Baked in the Oven of Charity. Carefully Conserved for the Chickens of the Church, the Sparrows of the Spirit, and the Sweet Swallows of Salvation."

"A Sigh of Sorrow for the Sinners of Zion Breathed Out of a Hole in the Wall of an Earthly Vessel Known Among Men by the Name of Samuel Fish" (a Quaker who had been imprisoned).

"Eggs of Charity Layed for the Chickens of the Covenant and Billed With the Water of Divine Love. Take Ye Out and Eat."

"The Spiritual Mustard Pot to Make the Soul Sneeze With Devotion."

Most of these were published in the time of Cromwell.—London Strand.

HADN'T TOLD ANY UNTRUTH

Colored Witness Simply Stated a Fact, Though It Was Not the Information Desired.

In St. Louis a stout colored woman, apparently about forty years old, was called as a witness in an assault case before a police judge.

"I am eighty-four and I live down near the river, and this is what I saw when the fight took place."

She then gave her account of the assault.

On cross-examination the attorney for the defense asked her when and where she was born, and she replied: "Right here in St. Louis, in July, '72."

"Then," cried the lawyer in a triumphant tone, "what do you mean by saying that you are eighty-four?"

"Oh," replied the old darty, "that ain't my age; that is my bust measurement."

ECZEMA ITCHED AND BURNED

Falmouth, Ky.—"Two years ago I was troubled with skin and scalp troubles. I would have pimples that would break out and form sores on my face and head, with terrible itching. The eczema on my face and head itched and burned and when I scratched it, it made sores and I was very disfigured for the time being. My head became so sore I could not touch it with a comb; it became a mass of sores. My hair fell out gradually."

"I was afflicted about a year before I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and after using them three weeks I was getting better and in less than three months, after using eight cakes of Cuticura Soap and five boxes of Cuticura Ointment, I was completely cured of eczema." BUCKWHEAT MAKES GOOD CATTLE FEED

Quick Growing Crop and Straw is Good Absorbent for Use About the Stables.

(By A. J. LEGG.) Thirty years ago farmers were prejudiced against buckwheat as a farm crop. They thought buckwheat a very exhaustive crop and that it ruined their soil.

Now nearly every farmer in this section grows a few acres of buckwheat, and while it is a quick-growing crop and, of course, removes considerable of the plant food, it does not seem to be harder on the soil than corn or oats.

Buckwheat will keep down the weeds and keep the soil practically free from them. It is an excellent crop with which to sow grass and clover on account of this, and also because it matures quickly and leaves the young plants in complete possession of the soil.

As to the value of the buckwheat, it makes a good feed for all the stock and the straw is a good absorbent to use about the stable. The nutritive ratio of buckwheat is about one to seven.

As to its cultivation, it may be sown here as late as August and mature a crop. It only requires about 60 tons in which to mature. An acid days in which to mature. A fertilizer phosphate seems to be the fertilizer to use.

The West Virginia experiment station found that 150 pounds of acid phosphate per acre was the most economical fertilizer to use on buckwheat.

A heavier application did not pay the extra cost of the fertilizer in increased yield.

One bushel of Japanese buckwheat, or three pecks of the Silver Hull variety per acre, is enough seed to use.

The soil should be well prepared, by plowing, harrowing and rolling. It is usually better to plow the ground two or three weeks before seeding. The crop is sown here at any time from May until August, with fairly good results.

The earlier sowings do not usually yield as many bushels per acre as the late ones, but the seed is usually better matured and weighs heavier.

Alfalfa and Sweet Clover. Where it is difficult to obtain a stand of alfalfa it is quite possible sowing sweet clover a year or two before seeding to alfalfa would prove advantageous. Sweet clover will enrich the soil and put it into good condition for seeding alfalfa.

BISHOP'S POINT WELL MADE

Rebuke to Which It is Hard to See How the Curate Could Make an Answer.

Bishop Oliphant of Llandaff had a well-to-do young man as curate who had rather sporting instincts. He kept his own horses and always drove tandem. The bishop disapproved, and decided to administer a rebuke on a favorable opportunity.

"I really must protest," said the bishop, "at your driving about in such a manner."

"Well, my lord," said the curate, "you are driving two horses, and so am I. What is the difference?"

"If, when you are at prayers at the cathedral, the congregation placed their hands in the same position as you have placed your horses what would become of the dignity and solemnity of the service?"—London Mail.

Had His Goat, Evidently. A Springfield man, replying to his wife's petition for divorce, says: "Defendant states that the plaintiff is much better qualified than the defendant to carry her part in nagging contests; that she commands a better and more extensive vocabulary than the defendant, and simply overwhelmed him with her complaints and reproaches, and she was so master of her feelings that she could readily pass from storm to sunshine, from abuse to tears, from harsh language to tenderness, and from nagging, plaintiff could upon the appearance of a third person so readily become all smiles and suavity that her sudden and complete changes of moods completely bewildered defendant."—Kansas City Star.

Marked Similarity. "If 12 persons were to agree to dine together every day, but never sit in exactly the same order around the table," didactically stated the professor, "it would take them 13,000,000 years, at the rate of one dinner a day, and they would have eaten more than 474,000,000 dinners, before they could get through all the possible arrangements in which they could place themselves."
