MARRIAGE A SCHOOL. SAVE A LITTLE. PROTECT NATURAL RESOURCES

A learned legislator says married women ought not to work, and if their husbands earn as much as $2,000 a year, the woman's earnings should be taxed 20 per cent.

Under old laws a husband could take what his wife earned; even now in England he controls the children that she produces.

For the State to rebuke her industry by taxing her earnings 20 per cent would be something new.

Bolshevism decides that little girls must not play with dolls, because that encourages the bourgeois or capitalist idea of family life, developing a taste for motherhood and household duties.

Bolshevism interprets the little girl with a doll correctly, but will no more overcome the love of dolls than it could overcome the instinct of self preservation. Maternity is planted in the hearts of little girls by a Power far above Bolshevism, just as ambition of another kind is planted in the hearts of little boys. And that ambition is what makes Communism an impossibility.

Dr. M. S. Taylor wires from Chicago, "Contribute your opinion on legalizing communicable marriage."

That question was settled when Eve appeared from Adam's rib.

Woman is naturally monogamous, is determined to make man so, will do it eventually, and marriage is the school of monogamy.

A communicable marriage expresses doubt, proves lack of confidence on which marriage should be based, while it is perfectly legal now.

Three being legal, is a poor, cold, old-fashioned marriage.

Fortunately, the average young couple have no doubts whatever, and only regret the marriage cannot last a million years just to prove it.

Sometimes they are disappointed, nearly always through the husband's fault. But meanwhile the children have been born, blessed with the influence of trust and affection.

The value of a man to his wife, the respect he has for her, and his mother for each other, is the basis for each other, and wife starts marriage in doubt, each leaving the door open for escape, the children's inferiority will reflect their parents' "I may decide to quit" marriage.

The important thing in marriage is the quality of the children, and the next generation.

William Fox has bought 307 more theatres, seating 350,000 for $100,000,000.

Twenty-five years ago Fox got into the theatre business because his employer refused to raise his $17 a week salary. Fox had just married. The employer said, "Not only I can't raise your $17 a week, but you are getting $2 too much. I am going to pay what you are worth, $15."

Fox had saved $580 on $17 a week, got control of a tiny moving picture theatre, that could take in $1.30 when packed. Now he has 356 theatres.

Always save something. If you have brains it will increase. If not, saving will keep you out of the poor house, anyhow.

The Prince of Wales, hopefully discussing trade revival, wonders whether human beings invent earrings or trousers first. Man's passion for adornment, he thought, probably produced earrings before clothes.

He is right about that. Darwin tells of Patagonian ladies, living in a climate often bitter, that would not think of coming from their huts to let a stranger see them until they had painted their faces and arranged their hair. But they did come out without one stitch of clothing.

A British nobleman, by the way, owns a real earring taken from the ear of King Charles the First after his head had been cut off.

The United States pays more toward the expenses of the League of Nations than any other country except Britain—although we are not in the League. That's usual. We paid more than any other nation for that war—about fifty million dollars a day while we were in it, and then the allied fighters ten thousand millions of dollars—yet it wasn't our war.

Our troubles will come in America when our natural resources are exhausted—coal, oil, iron, forests, etc.

At present we are busy using, wasting. Some day we may be busy regretting. Emil Kekich, sent to Sweden by Herbert Hoover's Department of Commerce, reports that Sweden has solved her forest problem.

The annual growth of timber in Sweden exceeds the annual cutting by 100,000,000 cubic feet, or 1,200,000,000 lineal feet.

Work Started On Ozona White Way

Crew On Way Thursday To Begin Installing Improvement

A crew of workmen was on the way to Ozona Thursday to begin installation of the new Ozona White Way, according to announcement made by Otho Drake, local commercial manager of the West Texas Utilities Company. The crew was expected to be here in time to begin actual work on the White Way Thursday afternoon.

Fourteen handsome iron light standards are to be installed in the downtown section, eight of them around the city park and the other six to be placed at corners in the business section.

In addition to these fourteen standards, the company will install 48 bracket lights in the residence sections and a giant light atop the courthouse. A proposal has also been made to place an electric sign reading "Ozona" on top of the courthouse which could be seen for miles away on any road leading into the city. The Utilities Company has agreed to furnish power free of charge for this sign and the county has a proposal to get it installed at cost. No action has yet been taken in this matter, however.

The White Way is expected to be completed in about two weeks, Mr. Drake said. When it is finally completed, the Utilities Company is planning on a local celebration on the occasion of its first lighting, he said.

Seniors Announce Play For March 9th

Members of the 1928 Senior class of the Ozona High School will present the class play at the Ozona Theatre Friday night of next week, March 9, it was announced this week by class officers.

The title of the play is "Ohkay," described as a thrilling mystery drama. Special music for the occasion will be furnished by the Crockett County Band and there will be a number of vaudeville specialties between acts, it was announced. An admission charge of 35 and 50 cents will be made. Class officers declared that the cast would be announced next week.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Pierce spent the week-end in San Angelo.

West Texas Race Assn. Organized

Joe Pierce Of Ozona Chosen Vice Pres. Of Organization

Joe Pierce, president of the Crockett County Fair Association, was chosen vice-president of the West Texas Fair and Racing Association, tentatively organized at a meeting of representatives of fair associations in six West Texas towns held at San Angelo Saturday afternoon.

Walter D. Beall, secretary of the All-West Texas Exposition of San Angelo, was chosen president of the association. Permanent organization will be formed at another meeting in San Angelo March 24, it was decided. Fair organizations in Brownwood, San Saba and Fredericksburg will be asked to join the association making it a nine-member circuit for the races. Millard Cope of San Angelo was named secretary.

The purpose of the association is to improve the horse races and special attractions at fairs in the members towns and to co-operate in setting fair dates to avoid conflict. Better races can be secured by forming a circuit of non-conflicting fairs, it was pointed out, because more and better horses will be brought to the meets because owners can take them from one meet to another at a lower transportation cost and with change at larger purses. Better carnival attractions can be secured because it will be possible to make one town after another and a competent secretary and starter can be employed to work races in each member place and a better arrangement for setting dates can be worked out to avoid conflict.

A committee to confer with officers of the organization in perfecting the organization at the meeting March 24 was appointed by the temporary organization Saturday. This committee is composed of one representative from each member town as follows: W. R. Barnes, Sonora; J. E. Hill, Eldorado; Lee Downs, Brady; Paul Perner, Ozona; J. M. Treadwell, Menard; and W. D. Beall, San Angelo.

Carter Dalton served as temporary chairman Saturday afternoon and called the gathering to order. Sonora was represented by W. R. Barnes and James R. Caldwell. The Ozona delegation included Joe Pierce, John Bailey and Paul Perner. San Angeliots on hand were Walter Beall, Carter Dalton and Millard Cope. The Menard delegates were E. L. Nesbit of the Chamber of Commerce and J. M. Treadwell. The committee from Eldorado failed to arrive, though advising by long distance telephone that the Schleicher County fair organization wanted to be included in the association. Eldorado and Eldorado were called in to represent that place. Those from Brady included J. E. White, Ben Strickland, Mr. Downs and Mr. Ford.

The meeting was called at the suggestion of Mr. Barnes of Sonora, to whom a vote of thanks was given at the close of the session. Mr. Barnes is manager of the organization at the Sutton county capital which sponsors the rodeos each year.

A set of rules, modeled after those adopted at the best tracks in the country, will be submitted when the organization is permanently organized in March. Officers were instructed to have the rules prepared at that time.

Crockett Co. Band Makes Its Debut

Concert In Park Wednesday Evening Is Enjoyed

The Crockett County Band made its initial appearance in public for the approval of the people of Ozona Wednesday evening when it presented a short concert in the city park. Director Jack Nance had almost the entire squad out for the concert and although the event was not broadly heralded, it attracted a big crowd of local people to the scene.

There were twenty-two instruments in the band in concert, five clarinets, four cornets, three trombones, three drums, four saxophones, one baritone horn and two bass horns. The band played five numbers and those who heard the concert declared that the band performed remarkably well for its first appearance.

COUCH AWARDS CONTRACT FOR NEW BUILDING

Structure Across From Hotel To House Three Business Firms

USE STUCCOED TILE Dry Goods Store, Rainbow Cafe, Occupants Oberkampf Third

Another new business building for Ozona and at least one new business enterprise will be added before the middle of summer, it became certain late last week when S. E. Couch, local ranchman and financier, awarded contracts for the construction of a building on the lot which he owns across the street south from the Hotel Ozona.

The new building will in reality be three buildings, for it will be constructed to house three business enterprises. The structure will extend from the Joe Oberkampf building north to the corner and will have a 70-foot front. It will be divided equally into three business houses.

One of the buildings will be occupied by a new dry goods and ready-to-wear store to be established by Ben Lemon and brother, experienced dry goods and clothing men from Rochester, Texas. A. L. Thompson, proprietor of the Rainbow Cafe, will occupy another part of the building and the third has been leased to Joe Oberkampf, who has made no announcement of what class of business will occupy the new structure.

The Lemon Brothers spent several days here last week and their proposal to establish the dry goods and clothing store was responsible for Mr. Couch's decision to erect the new business buildings. They signed up a four year lease on one of the stores.

The Rainbow Cafe, which is now located in a sheet iron building on the site of the proposed new building, will be established in temporary quarters while its new home is under construction. The building now occupied by the restaurant may possibly be moved off the site and still occupied by the concern while the building is under construction.

The new building is to be constructed of hollow tile and stuccoed on the outside. The inside walls will be plastered and the completed building is expected to be one of the prettiest in town.

Materials have already been ordered and work will start as soon as they begin arriving. The building is to be completed by June 1, provided no delays are encountered in the construction work.

The men who will establish the new dry goods and clothing store in the new building are said to be experienced in that business and have plenty of capital to invest. They have announced that the new store will be first class in every respect and will handle only the best merchandise the market affords.

With completion of the two new buildings now under construction Ozona will gain two new dry goods and clothing stores, such an establishment having leased the new Smith Building now being constructed on the corner lot north of the W. E. West buildings on Main Street. Mr. Smith has declined to make public the name of the firm which is to establish the new business in his building.

3-Year-Old Son Of Guy Drake Dies In Hospital At Temple

Billy Guy Drake, 3-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Drake of San Angelo and a nephew of Otho Drake, local commercial manager for the West Texas Utilities Company, died in a hospital at Temple at 7:20 Friday night following an illness lasting several months.

The body was returned to San Angelo for burial and funeral services were conducted at 4:30 Saturday afternoon. The child is survived by his parents and a younger brother, Russell Drake. Mr. Drake is in the commission business at San Angelo with his father.

Among Ozona friends of the family attending the funeral services were Mrs. Bright Baggett, Mrs. Paul Perner, Miss Pauline Perner and Mrs. Harry J. Friend.

The Crockett County Band, although still but an infant of about three months, made its debut in Ozona Wednesday afternoon—and how! Some pessimist said not so long ago that a person would be able to buy some good band instruments cheap in Ozona in a few months. We would have been glad if he could have heard the concert Wednesday afternoon.

Of course, it's nothing to equal Sousa as yet, but a band organized from part raw material with but three months practice together has made a good showing if it is able to play "Home, Sweet Home," say we. And if you think the Crockett County Band isn't an accepted fact in these parts, witness—it has been asked to play for the Senior play to be given in a few weeks. How's that for fast work?

POOR LITTLE THING

A magazine said to be the national organ of the younger sets of some thirty-five American cities has just published an account of the passing of flapperism. The flapper, however, has been dead for some time. Poor little thing, she died, not of exposure, as some might think, but rather of lack of it.

The flapper began to fail when grandmother first bobbed her hair and lopped a couple of inches of cloth off the bottom of her skirts. From then on she languished and the final blow came when the accounts of her goings on caused people only to shrug their shoulders and say "What of it?"

A demure, shy little girl is peeking from the wings. Soon she will trip modestly upon the stage so lately occupied by that brazen flapper.

But the flapper had her good points—and they were obvious. She has passed many of them along to the modest little girl who has taken her place. And in ten years or so, the flapper will be back with us. It was ever so.

WORDS, WORDS, WORDS

After seventy years of painstaking labor, the celebrated Oxford dictionary has finally been completed. The last word has been found and set down. This last word, zyx, the 411,947th word in the language, is the obsolete form of what would now be "thou sayest." It seems the ideal last word for a book of words.

Back in 1882, Sir James Murray sent the first pages of A to press. This explains why such a common word—now—as "appendicitis" is not in this huge dictionary of ten volumes. In 1882, "appendicitis" had not been recognized as a separate disease and the word had not been coined.

But there will be a supplement to the work to take care of just such omissions. The supplement will have to be a very large one, and perhaps it is just a bit early to begin talking about it since Volume X, the last one, of this great dictionary is not to be published until late in March. But no dictionary will ever catch up with a language as alive as English.

The far north was suggested on the outside by ice piled around trees and at the door guests were met by a boy and girl usher dressed as Eskimos. An airplane ride over the North Pole, and portrayal of the life history of Washington were features of the program.

Those enjoying the hospitality were Misses Burton, Kaderli, Evans, Wheat, Mildred Davis, Eva

WHO'S WHO IN THE STORY

GRIMSTEAD, the "Buccaneer" of this swashbuckling story, is stranded among the California redwoods in his "private craft," a high-powered car, when its gasoline tank is broken.

BURTON GRIMSTEAD, his "spoiled" daughter, is with him against her will, especially so as she perceives her father's object is to throw her into the company of ROSS GARDINER, Grimstead's sinister "Second in Command," a capable, good looking young man.

SIMMINS, chauffeur and house man, of gay spirits, repressed because of his ultra English-butler dignity. He is sent for help and returns with a young man in a small car.

CHAPTER III

A Prophecy

Simmins' agile mind saw the point, and he realized that if this young man were supposed to have offered his services in going for help, there would have been no earthly reason in returning to the fire. He would simply have turned around and headed for Tecolote and its garage.

"Yes, sir, certainly, sir," he answered Mr. Grimstead's remark. "But, sir, although the tank is ruined, sir, it occurred to me that by filling the vacuum tank by hand every few miles we would be able to work our car to Tecolote, sir, in not over two hours. We would have to borrow from this gentleman only about two and a half gallons of gasoline, sir," ended Simmins virtuously.

He managed by his manner to convey the impression that all these details had been considered and discussed with his new companion. As a matter of fact Simmins was spinning it out as he went along.

"Quite right, Simmins," Grimstead said.

But Miss Burton stirred. "I suppose this gentleman has that much gasoline to spare," she threw in, apparently idly.

That was the weak point, Simmins did not know.

"It's too bad, but I have no gas," the stranger announced calmly.

"Well, distillate, alcohol, kerosene, whatever it is," said Grimstead a little impatiently. "My car will run on them, at a pinch."

"Not a single drop," repeated the man; "I run on—well, electricity."

"Electricity!" cried Grimstead and Gardiner in unison. "Where do you—"

But the technical discussion was sidetracked. The Irish terrier, who had been sitting atop the pack, riveted his gaze on Punkety-Snivvles and went into action, seized that personage in his mouth and deposited his burden in his master's hand.

"Come here, you old idiot," ordered his master. "This is a dog. I know it doesn't look like one; but smell of it. You see," he explained, looking up, "I am naturally of a lazy but curious disposition, so I have trained Rapscaillon to bring me in anything strange he runs across in the woods as long as it isn't skunks. But he ought to know a dog when he smells it!"

"Oh, shut up!" the young man addressed him, and cuffed the atom smartly.

Never before had Punkety-Snivvles felt the hand of authority. But now Punkety-Snivvles did shut up.

"If you have quite finished punishing my dog, will you kindly return my property?" Burton asked coldly, after a moment.

"Why, certainly," acquiesced the young man. "Do you really care for it?"

And then a queer thing happened. Burton opened her mouth, intending to squelch this upstart, but as she looked up straight into his laughing eyes something ingenious expectant in the depths of them caused her to say:

"No, I despise it!"

"I thought you would," responded the young man in sympathetic tones. "Well, great is the power of fashion! Here, Simmins," he ordered, "take this nuisance away somewhere. You ought to get a real dog here. Rapscaillon; you've got to apologise to the lady. First show her your paws are clean."

Rapscaillon extended his right paw, keeping the other still rigidly elevated. Nobody could have resisted him. Burton did not.

"You darling!" she cried, dropping on her knees before him.

At this moment Grimstead's booming tones broke in.

"Young man," said he, "It's an imposition, I know; but you see how we are situated. Could you drive back to Tecolote and get us help?"

"Surely, I'll do anything I can," agreed the young man heartily. "My name is Davenport."

"Grimstead is mine. That's fine! Get them to send a touring car tonight, and then tomorrow we can make arrangements for repairs."

But Davenport shook his head doubtfully.

"Not tonight," he decided. "Tomorrow."

Grimstead flushed. "It would be rather hard on my daughter—" he began stiffly.

Davenport laughed aloud.

"It's going to rain; and it's going to rain hard! I probably would not make Tecolote, and you'd be very wet and uncomfortable."

"Rain!" cried Gardiner contemptuously.

"The wind's due north and has been all day," Grimstead pointed out, "and besides, it's the dry sea son."

"Look at the stars! It's a heavenly night," contributed Burton.

"Apparently that is so," smiled Davenport. "Nevertheless we are in for a storm and a very heavy one. I think it would be better for me to wait here until morning and help make you comfortable. I have a camp outfit; and plenty of provisions."

"I suppose," said Gardiner sarcastically, "that you can tell us just when it's going to rain and how many inches we will have."

"I might," replied Davenport unexpectedly. "Wait a minute."

He stood upright and stared off into space for perhaps half a minute; then slowly his eyes re-concentrated.

"It will begin to rain about 1 or 1:30," he stated quietly, "and will continue for 8 hours and 20 minutes—or five minutes either way. I could not tell you exactly how many inches will fall; but it will be a heavy and continuous down-pour with high wind—a tempest. On a guess for that sort of a storm lasting that long, five inches."

"Five inches! A cloudburst!" Gardiner snorted.

"Yes, this is a bad storm," agreed Davenport seriously. "Another thing; that tree just beyond your car, the one near the edge of the road, will be blown down, so we'd better move the car, and be careful where we pitch camp." Gardiner muttered contemptuously to himself.

"How do you claim to know these things so accurately?" demanded Burton bluntly.

"Suppose we wait, until morning, and see if I do know them," smiled Davenport.

"Yes, that's a good idea," approved Grimstead drily. "And if we really are to stay here all night, suppose we see what we can do toward making ourselves comfortable."

CHAPTER IV

Put up or Shut up!

Davenport unleashed the camping outfit from his car and they made their way to the lower end of the meadow, where Simmins built a fire.

The shelters up, Davenport started Simmins to digging semi-circular ditches around their up-grade sides. This was, he explained, to carry aside the flood waters at which Gardiner, unable to contain himself further, uttered an exclamation of impatience.

"I beg your pardon?" said Davenport.

"I said nothing," Gardiner told him, "but I'd as soon say now that it would be well to drop this childish foolishness and get down to

You wouldn't go barefoot in a blizzard

Nor try to get by in wet and slush with the soles of your shoes worn thin.

Yet smooth tires in winter expose you to far greater dangers than thin shoes. Aside from skidding, the doubtful ability of smooth tires to carry you through all kinds of weather and over every road without a flat is a risk that few car owners want to take. No one likes to get out of the car in knee-deep snow or a torrent of rain and sleet to put on a spare tire.

The most comfortable assurance is to know your car is "well shod" for winter driving; that you can go and come where and when you please without a thought to your tires.

Dr. Frank Crane Says

A NEW START
We often wish that we could live our lives over. We see where we have made mistakes, and see in the clutches of what untoward things we have been caught, and we would like to start again with the no knowledge we possess. Most resolutions that are formed are useless because they have not enough steam behind them. We haven't the power to carry them into effect. The one motivating power that we all have at hand and which we can call on in any emergency is love. Love something. Find something or somebody that you love. Make your resolution for the sake of that love and backed by it. A resolution that is purely intellectual or purely from the will is not of as much value as one which is backed by the power of a supreme love. It may be that the love of a mother er that you have neglected so far but for whom you really feel strong affection. It may be love of a wife, or children, or a friend. Whatever it is, it is a life buoy for your sinking will. Lay hold of it and it will keep you up.

As well try to run a locomotive without steam or an automobile without gasoline as try to steer your life without love.

It is the motive power that underlies the will.

All of us love something. Search your heart for some object upon which you can center all your affection and by that love you shall be saved.

Love is the keeping of all the Commandments and love is the true savior of man.

We remember an instance in the Scriptures of a woman who was a great sinner, but who was pardoned because she loved much.

Love is the only thing that counterbalances our wrong-doings.

All conclusions that are reached by anything else than love are falsehood. Love sees and understands. Hate is blind.

business. It's getting late." "By childish foolishness you refer—?"

"All this heavy digging and elaborate buffoonry. There's about as much chance of rain as there is of snow. You must take us for easterners or fools. We know something of the California climate."

Davenport sauntered carelessly over to where Gardiner stood. Gardiner drew himself up. When within hand distance Davenport came to a halt. The men stared each other in the eye.

"You are not overly polite," remarked Davenport, "and I don't believe I like you, anyway. But I'll just lay you a little bet that it does rain and that the redwood yonder falls."

Gardiner's face flushed at the other's tone. He made his decision to teach this upstart a lesson.

"I'll take you," he said suddenly "on condition that I name the bet."

"All right."

"Very well, then. Ten thousand dollars!"

Burton uttered a little cry of reproach. Grimstead, who had been listening amusedly, interposed.

"That's beyond a joke, beyond all reason, Gardiner," he objected "Have some sense of proportion—"

"Thank you, Mr. Grimstead, but don't bother," Davenport cut in. "I'll take the bet. I'll just get it down in writing and get you to witness it, if you will; so we'll have a little record of the transaction."

"I expect to collect this bet," warned Gardiner, stung by the suggestion of this precaution.

"If you win," amended Davenport, "and I expect to collect it if I win."

"Mr. Grimstead can vouch for my solvency. Where are your guarantees?"

The young man looked a trifle puzzled.

"I have none for the moment, of course, but the instant we go to a town!"

Gardiner laughed.

"You'll mortgage the garage to pay up—of course," he sneered. "No, put up or shut up!"

Davenport shook his head and laughed.

"You're a quibbler, Gardiner! I'll bet you're legal adviser to a predatory corporation."

Gardiner laughed a nasty, sneering, walk-the-plank laugh.

"Bet's off," said he, "I thought it would be!"

"The bet is not off," spoke up Burton suddenly. "I will guarantee Mr. Davenport."

At this the silent wood gods uttered three rousing but silent cheers.

CHAPTER V

On Time

By the time this bet was all arranged, one good-sized storm had broken and cleared, anyway. Burton had told her father plainly that she was of age and mistress of her own fortune. Gardiner had appealed to Davenport's better nature not to take advantage of an "emotional young girl."

Davenport had winked shamelessly at Burton and proclaimed himself a Shylock when it came to money.

The terms of the bet had been restated, and the men's watches synchronized.

Davenport and Simmins cut a number of willow poles to form a sort of platform, or rather floor. On this they ran the two cars.

"Now when we go out we can lay more poles to form a corduroy," the young man said.

"I say sir," said Simmins, "I have a few quid laid by, I'd like it jolly well if you could cut me in on that bet for a tenner or so."

Davenport stared.

"Aren't you taking big chances?" he inquired, "What do you know about the weather?"

"Not a thing, sir!" replied Simmins cheerfully. "But I do know a tidy bit about sportsmen, sir; and I'd back you, sir, against Mr. Gardiner any day of the week."

"Thank you, Simmins. You're in for a ten spot, as you say."

All matters settled, Davenport suggested it would be a good idea to turn in.

"Turn in!" cried Burton. "I couldn't sleep a wink. I'm going to sit right here until 2 o'clock, and greet that storm! How could you even suggest sleep?"

"Well," replied Davenport, "suit yourself, of course. But if you'll pardon me, I'll just snatch a few winks. I've been driving all day, and I expect we won't any of us get much sleep after the thing hits."

He crawled under the lean-to shelter and wrapped a blanket around his shoulders.

"Before you leave us," said Grimstead, "I would like to ask what you meant when you said we were likely to be together for the next week or so."

"Knowledge of California mud," replied Davenport; and was apparently at once asleep.

In a few minutes the dying fire was deserted. The lean-to covered four recumbent forms.

Inside the little tent Miss Burton Grimstead lay on the cot staring upward at the flicker of the flames cast across the wall. She would wait thus until the zero hour had passed.

It was understandable how the men could sleep in the face of thrilling suspense.

She lay for some time, flat on her back, watching the flicker of the fire against canvas. Several times her eyes blurred into a staring, and the leaping shadows became monstrous. Then they faded and she slept.

Some time later she came to herself with a start, lighted a match and glanced at her wrist watch.

One-fifteen! Fifteen minutes remained before the conclusion of this fantastic bet; and there, through a slit in the tent shone a star in its patch of blue.

A profound disappointment seized her.

Never had she experienced such absolute stillness. Burton became acutely conscious of the beat of her pulses, the singing of her ears. By holding herself quiet she could even hear faintly the roar of the sea; and that was over a mountain range and many miles.

She struck another match. One-twenty-two! Some one stirred the other shelter, arose, and poked the embers of the fire to a flame.

Burton thought it must be Ross Gardiner. She turned her head impatiently. How near the surf sound ed!

Overhead a tiny twig struck the canvas with a sharp spat. After an interval another, and another. Suddenly Burton thrust open the flap and thrust her head shoulders through.

The roar of the surf was now even more plainly to be heard. A warm drop splashed her forehead, another her cheek. Airs were stirring, soft as velvet.

The man at the fire was not Gardiner but Davenport. The young man had on a yellow slicker and sou'wester hat. He looked up and caught her eye.

"She's coming," said he, cheerfully. "Listen to her!"

And then Burton suddenly realized that the roar was not that of the surf, but of the tempest hurtling through the forest.

She stepped to the fire, glancing curiously at the recumbent figures under the other shelter.

"Once a man's asleep, he's hard to awaken until after 3 o'clock," Davenport answered her unspoken wonder, "unless he's been brought up in the open and so is sensitive to outside things. But they'll awaken quickly enough in a few minutes!"

Oughtn't you to awaken Mr. Gardiner to witness he's lost his bet?" she asked.

"He probably wouldn't acknowledge these few drops as rain," said

Davenport easily. "He's a natural quibbler."

"There are less than four minutes."

Davenport glanced at his own wrist watch.

"Three," said he composedly. "Gardiner and I set our watches alike, you recall."

"Oh, dear!" cried Burton. "Don't worry; it will be here in less than two. Listen."

The roaring was louder "It frightens me," she confessed

"It's like the approach of a wild ravening beast."

"You are safe," he told her confidently; "I'll answer for it. Believe that and enjoy it as the great and fearful spectacle it will be. But get into the tent now. You must not get wet, for there will be no chance to dry off; and when this hits it will come in buckets."

They turned together to the tent. One of the figures under the shelter stirred uneasily, some faint

Confidence

Readers desiring a personal reply can address Miss Flo in care of this newspaper

Dear Miss Flo:

I have been going with a girl for six months. Recently we quarreled and she refuses to speak to me now. I have been told by friend that it was my fault. Shall I admit it? Her birthday's coming soon. Do you think it would be right for me to send her flowers or candy? I like her awfully well and would like to be friends with her again. M. W.

If the girl's friendship means so much to you I should think you would be very willing to tell her you were at fault and apologise. Never be ashamed to admit you were wrong. Remember it takes a big person to do it and she will think more of you for it.

By all means send her flowers. She will acknowledge them and then perhaps a reconciliation can be affected.

Dear Miss Flo:

I am a girl eighteen years old and have been keeping company with a boy twenty years old. We expect to get married but it will not be possible to do so for at least five years. We have agreed that in the meantime each of us will be free to go out with other boys and girls. Do you think this is wise? At times I am afraid he will learn to care more for another girl than he does for me.

To go out with other girls and boys is the sensible thing to do, and will help you to decide wisely. You are both young, and it is possible that you will find that you are not in love with each other after all. For if there is a chance that your friend will fall in love equal chance that you will fall in love with another boy. By going out with others you will both be in a position to know for certain whether or not you want to marry.

And in the meantime—don't be jealous of the other girls. Be a sport about it and remember—if he should come to care for another girl, you will be much better off to have him realize it before you are married than after.

Dear Miss Flo:

I am in love with a girl who has just broken her engagement to another man. She has told me that she likes me very much and goes out with me a lot. I want to ask her to marry me but first I want to be sure she loves me. How can I win her love? R. R.

By showing her every consideration possible—and not forcing your attention on her just yet. Knowing that you care for her she will appreciate your restraint. Remember that she is going through a very trying period of readjustment and disappointment. Win her respect and sincere affection first—then your chances for winning her love will be better.

U. S. AS A COMPETITOR

Business men generally are opposed to having Uncle Sam as a business competitor, and with good reason. Private enterprises have to pay taxes, license fees, and overhead charges, besides being called upon to contribute to innumerable projects for community betterment. A government competitor has none of these expenses.

The private enterprise in order to continue to exist, must earn a reasonable profit. But if a government business loses money the taxpayers make up the deficit.

An illustration of this is seen in the Post Office Department which is a competitor of printers all over the country. By printing stamped envelopes it is daily taking a great volume of business from small printing plants which are a great convenience to their communities and should be encouraged rather than hindered by the government.

There is no excuse for the government's engaging in any business that may be efficiently and economically conducted by its private citizens, whether this business be large or small. The whole history of the government in business is filled with examples of incompetency and losses which the tax payers have had to make good.

The National Association of Manufacturers is strongly opposed to any government operation of industries. Other bodies of men take the same view. All these might well lend a hand to the printers of the country in their effort to end the unfair competition of the Post Office Department.

"Roll out! Roll out!" yelled Davenport. "Roll out and see it rain! At a thousand drops for a cent my ten thousand would be overpaid a thousand times.
