EAT MORE LAMB

"If the present consumption of lamb meat and mutton over the whole United States can be increased by one percent, it will mean that next year, instead of having a million surplus lambs on the market there will be a million too few to take care of the demand."

This is the statement made by Vic Pierce in discussing the efforts of the Eat More Lamb Club of Texas to stimulate interest of Texas Sheep raisers in a proposed national advertising campaign to popularize lamb and mutton meat on the American table.

This campaign must necessarily start off on a more or less modest scale, but some of the best advertising minds in the country and leaders among the producers are behind the movement and it gives excellent promise of being carried through. If this campaign is carried out, it will be one of the greatest forward steps in the history of the sheep producing industry all over the United States.

A detailed explanation of the advertising campaign by which it is hoped to increase the consumption of lamb and mutton will be given by speakers for the Eat More Lamb Club at a meeting to be held at the Courthouse here Saturday morning, beginning at 9 o'clock. Victor Pierce, Crockett County chairman of the club, has arranged the meeting and urges every ranchman and every person in Crockett County directly or indirectly interested in the sheep raising industry to be present. That means everybody in the county is invited, for who is not directly or indirectly interested in sheep raising. This project, if carried to a successful conclusion will do more toward stabilizing the industry than anything ever yet attempted, and certainly the sheep raising sections of Texas should show a keen interest and should take advantage of an opportunity to learn details of the plan.

THINGS ARE LOOKING UP

From what we hear from different parts of the United States, it is New York City that is deepest in the slough of despond right now, while in almost every other section the sunshine is beginning to shine through the clouds of business depression.

It has been a tough year; there is no denying that. What with the financial slump that began more than a year ago, and this year's wide-spread drought, and the tumble in the price of wheat and cotton, and the shutting down of factories, we haven't been through such a "hard times" year since 1921. But it has its compensations, by comparison with previous similar situations. Commodity prices have not gone up but have come down. Most of those thrown out of work had something ahead to tide them over.

The main thing the matter with the country right now is timidity. The head of a big bank said the other day: "Our bank has more money in it right now than it ever had, but where is it? It is mostly in time deposits, drawing interest, or in saving accounts. People are hoarding instead of spending. If everybody would spend even ten per cent of what they have saved up, it would start the wheels of industry going again speedily."

And we hear that the "Buy Now" movement, which started a few weeks ago, has spread around the country and that people everywhere are beginning to take the dimes out of the savings banks and the dollars out of the checking accounts and buy the commodities which are for sale everywhere at bargain prices.

This is going to be a "useful" Christmas, from all indications. People generally are planning to give as Christmas gifts things which are not merely ornamental or luxurious, but such useful presents as new things for the home. That is all to the good, for it puts money circulating in channels where it is most needed.

Some smart fellow proposed a few weeks ago that everybody ought to spend ten cents a day that he had not intended to spend. That sounded foolish to some, but a lot of people have taken it up, and the accumulation of dimes thus started on their merry way is beginning to show its effect.

"Big money" is not timid. One large financial house announced the other day that it had clients ready to invest anything from a million dollars upward. They did not want to bother with trifles worth less than a million, but they would buy into anything profitable in million-dollar units. The ones who are holding back are the ordinary folks like us. But if we believe in the future of the United States we can prove our faith by beginning again to spend our money for necessities and a little bit more, and when we are all doing that the "hard times" will be over.

YOUR NEIGHBOR CHI & RO

Chi—"Hello, how are you today?"
Ro—"Oh rotten, got indigestion."
Chi—"What you been eating to get it?"
Ro—"Dr. Sissorbill says I must quit eating pork and steak."
Chi—"Well, why don't you quit them?"
Ro—"Well, the butcher owes me a bill."
Chi—"Why not take it out in LAMB CHOPS?" 1p

TO THE PUBLIC...

Before we purchased $2,000 worth of the latest machinery for a cleaning and pressing plant in connection with the laundry, we proposed to local tailors that they meet prices offered by the San Angelo laundry and tailor shops that were sending trucks here at regular intervals. This proposal brought no response and, believing that the people of Ozona are entitled to have their work done at home at as good a price as they can get it done out of town, and solely with the idea of providing such service for Ozona people so that it would no longer be necessary for them to send out of town, we decided to install machinery and keep San Angelo laundry and dry cleaning trucks out of Ozona.

When we decided to go into the cleaning and pressing business, we decided to go into it right, and purchased the latest and best equipment on the market and employed an experienced tailor to be in charge of that department. Mr. Ross Huffstедler, our tailor, has had many years experience in the business and could not in any sense of the word be called a "novice" in the business. He has lived in Ozona many years and Ozona people know what class of work he can do, for he has served them from both the other tailor shops. Not only have we offered cleaning and pressing work at prices BELOW those of the San Angelo concerns, but also we offer only FIRST CLASS work. If the work we turn out does not measure up to that of any competitor in town or out of town, all we want is to know it and whatever the trouble is it will be corrected.

We are well pleased with the showing which this new department has made in the brief time it has been in operation and feel that we have supplied a long felt need in Ozona. We appreciate your business and we are after more business, but we want this understood, that WE ARE TOO BIG TO SOLICIT BUSINESS FOR AN OUT-OF-TOWN CONCERN. We solicit your laundry and dry cleaning work for an Ozona institution and we guarantee you as good work and as low or lower prices on both than you can get anywhere —which includes San Angelo.

ROB MILLER, Manager

"Is it true?" she appealed helplessly. She forgot her dislike for Julie. In her present distress she would have turned to her worst enemy for consolation. "You heard what I said. Sadie declares she is my son's wife. How can she be when he is not married? He never liked women—he has said so scores of times."

"I think it's quite true," Julie answered with stiff lips. She took Mrs. Ardron's hands and held them, hardly realizing what she was doing. "I'm quite sure it's true that Sadie is his wife." She said again gently.

She was unutterably grateful when just as she felt she could bear no more, the doctor came into the room. Mrs. Ardron at once turned her attention to him and Julie slipped away. She took her coat from a maid on the landing and went out into the street.

"She is my wife—"

They seemed to be the only words that would take form and find utterance in her brain—

For Chittenham she had sent Lawrence Schofield away. For Chittenham she had deliberately dashed Schofield's happiness to the ground.

"I have changed my mind. I can't marry you. I don't care for you enough." She had told Lawrence that only this morning. And now once more the brief drama was ended—or wasn't it? After all, nothing was really altered. He had deceived her about Sadie, it was true, but apart from that things were in no wise changed. Chittenham still loved her and she loved him—and if he still wanted his freedom and Sadie was willing to give it to him—

"Giles—Giles—"

The memory of Sadie's agonized cry came back to her, ending a-fresh the peace which she was trying so hard to regain. It had been the cry of a woman to a man she loved, or so Julie told herself in bitterest jealousy, and she remembered how often Sadie had spoken of Giles—and in what a queer, rather shy way—as if—even then it had seemed to Julie almost as if there might have been something between them. And now she knew. Sadie was his wife. The one woman of all the many in the world who had a right to him and to his love and his protection—the protection she had claimed only that afternoon in her hysterical fear.

The maid came tapping at the door.

"Aren't you very wet, Miss? Can I dry your clothes for you?"

"No, no. I'm not wet, and I don't want anything, you need not wait."

She heard the girl move reluctantly away and then a moment later the shutting of the front door. But it was a long time before Julie moved or stirred. The room was quite dark save for the yellow light from the street lamp outside, and the fitful rain had settled into a steady downpour and was beating against the window.

Julie moved with difficulty. She was cold and aching in every limb. She slipped off her wet clothes and put on a warm dressing-gown her hands were shaking with cold.

She was pouring the water from the kettle when a knock came on the front door—a heavy knock that sounded both urgent and insistent. Bim, perhaps! Julie put the kettle down and flew across the little hall. Bim, dear Bim. Julie felt as if already half her troubles were lifted from her as she drew back the latch—then she gave a little choking cry.

"You—!"

"Yes—you must let me come in, Julie," Chittenham said, and without a word Julie stood aside. She was conscious instantly of something different—strange about him—something that killed both the mingled hope and anger that struggled for supremacy in her heart. She felt that if she went to his arms she would be repulsed—that if she showed him bitter scorn it would leave him unmoved—that nothing could touch him.

"I had to come—I'm sorry if you are angry with me—but I had to come—just to say good-bye—"

He turned and half raised his head, looking at Julie. Then suddenly his face changed—it was as if the strangeness were wiped out of it in a single flash, giving place to such a look of unutterable pain that Julie caught her breath in an involuntary cry.

"To say good-bye—?"

"Yes"—he took a quick step towards her and then stopped—"Sadie is blind," he said.

Julie stared at him, her eyes blank, her lips parted; then after a long moment: "What do you mean?" she whispered.

Chittenham made a little impatient gesture.

"Just that—what I have said, she is blind—apparently she has felt it coming and been dreading it for months. That is why she came from America without telling me—she went to see some German specialist—I don't know yet what he told her, she was too ill and frightened to be very coherent. And then this fellow Chrysler on top of it all—you heard what he said about some one in the room never seeing the sunshine again— Didn't he speak of blindness—darkness—God knows what! The fellow should be locked up. Sadie took it to herself, of course, and the sudden shock finished it; perhaps it would have happened anyway, the doctor thinks so, but even he cannot tell, he says she may temporarily recover her sight—if she doesn't—"

He stopped abruptly, and Julie said in a shaking voice:

"How awful! How perfectly awful."

So it was. She felt shocked, stunned and yet it was quite impartially, every other emotion was clouded over, stifled by those first words which Chittenham had spoken to her.

"I had to come, just to say good-bye."

What had he meant by that? Good-bye! How could they ever say good-bye after last night? He had said then that they would never part again. Chittenham went on:

"I was sure you would understand what a difference it makes, I was sure you would try to help me, Julie—dear! You see, she hasn't any one but me, you see, there are some things it's impossible for a man to do when a woman's ill—and frightened—I couldn't leave her, how could I? You see—you wouldn't wish it, would you? It would be like—like trampling a woman down to reach our happiness, a blind woman, too defenceless—I—I—"

He broke down hopelessly. What could he say. What excuse

The Way of Life

by BRUCE BARTON

VICTORY

Three interesting and very different experiences occurred one Sunday last fall.

In the morning we sat in the chapel of an historic academy in New England and, while the preacher prayed, we peered a little. Our eyes wandered over the bowed heads of the boys; our imaginations were busy with thoughts of what might be in store for them.

Riding back to New York on the train we read an impressive speech by the President of the United States.

When the train stopped at Hartford we looked out of the window to see a crowd filling the air with rice and confetti, and presently an embarrassed but happy young couple hurried through the car and into a drawing room.

Of these events—the prayer in the academy chapel, the speech of Mr. Hoover, the marriage of an unknown and apparently commonplace young couple—which was the most important? Which will leave the most lasting impression on history?

No one can possibly tell. If every child and every happening were labelled "This is important" or "This is unimportant" the business of living would soon lose its zest. The eternal uncertainty of it keeps it exciting.

For example, a King of England, coming down from Scotland, stopped for refreshment at a little town called Scrooby. The young man who waited on the table was so obscure that the king probably never noticed him. But who is more important in the light of history, the weak King James I of England or the strong young man William Brewster who sailed on the Mayflower and became the first governor of Massachusetts?

In 1704 occurred the Battle of Blenheim. Most of us remember nothing about it except the last lines of Robert Southey's poem: "And what was the use of it all?" asked little Tweedledee.

"I don't know," the man said, "but 'twas a famous victory." Just one year before, not far from the battle-field, was born a red faced baby. His name was John Wesley.

Battles, kingdoms, fortunes—they are all part of the great human drama. But the thrill lies in the fact that a word dropped into the fertile mind of a boy, or a young couple starting a new home or a helpless infant uttering its first cry—these also may have undying significance.

And any one of us, quite unwittingly, may be a part of a famous victory.

or explanation could he offer that would sound plausible or justified?

He tried to take her hand, but she drew it sharply away. She felt that she could bear anything, be brave over everything, if only he would not touch her. He was right in what he said. Of course he was right. Sadie was his wife, and his place was to stand by her. No man could do less, she herself would despise him if he did less, and yet—behind everything a panic-stricken cry was trying to make itself heard in her heart:

"What about me? What about me?"

Then, as if in answer to the unspoken cry, Chitttenham was beside her—so close to her that for a wild moment she thought he must be going to take her in his arms, and her heart almost stood still, and then went racing on again so violently that it seemed to be choking her. And she looked up desperately, meeting his eyes fixed upon her with such a look of love and longing in them that it was more than she could bear. She put out her hands appealingly:

"Go away, please go away," she whispered.

"Julie." He caught her hands in his. "Forgive me, Julie. Say you forgive me, that you don't hate me that you understand."

"What do I want you to do? Why, nothing. There is nothing we can do, we must just go on. I always knew it would be like this, even last night. There's nothing we can do. I shall marry Lawrence Schofield, I suppose, if he will take me back again."

"Julie—don't be cruel!"

"I am not so cruel as you are. I never wanted you to come into my life. It was you who followed me." With a smothered sob she turned to rust past him to the door. But Chitttenham was too quick for her, he reached the door before she did barring her way.

"Let me go—let me go."

She beat at him with impotent hands, the tears raining down her face. "Oh, let me go, let me go—"

"Not like this, Julie; we can't part like this—oh, my dear, dear child—"

She was in his arms, her face hidden on his shoulder, his lips against her hair while he whispered over and over again how much he loved her, how only she filled his heart. But what could he do? If only she would tell him what he could do? But Julie had no answer, and presently her bitter sobbing ceased, and she lay quietly in his arms. It was she who spoke first, after a long silence.

"I'm sorry I cried, it was silly! And so useless. After all, it's no more than I expected—I always knew if I let myself care for any one it would be like this—" She drew away from him. "I think you had better go before I make another scene for you to remember me by."

She wiped her eyes and tried to smile.

"It's all right—please go now—" She averted her eyes. "Please go now, and please never come back again."

It was what Chitttenham had wanted her to say, with all a man's dislike of scenes and suffering, he had hoped that she would refuse to listen to him and send him away, but now that she had done so, he knew it was not what he had wanted, after all. He had wanted her to keep him against his better judgment; he had clung to the belief that she would try to keep him from Sadie for whom he had no feeling but the merest pity—a pity that was not, and never could be, akin to love.

With Julie sobbing in his arms it had seemed impossible ever to let her go—he loved her so much—no woman had ever before stirred his heart and his imagination—no woman ever would. If they never met again it would be the same always; she was his, they were made for each other. He thought of his wife as she had been when he left her an hour ago, frantic with fear, crying and sobbing; it made him shudder to remember the way she had clung to him, begging him not to leave her.

"After all, you're my husband, and I've got nobody else in the world. I know I haven't been as nice to you as I might have been, but don't leave me now I'm blind, don't leave me, Giles. Oh, my God what will become of me?"

The pathos of her was heart-breaking. Sadie, who had always been so independent, so free, to be clinging to him like this, imploring him not to leave her. She was his wife, he was pledged to her by honor. And yet now that Julie had told him to go—he broke out passionately.

"How can you think of marrying Schofield? What happiness would it be for you if you don't love him—"

"I don't expect to be happy," Julie laughed shakily. "Anyway, it cannot matter to you any longer. Please go away and leave me."

"Julie!" he said pleadingly. She said nothing. She hardly seemed to be listening, and he let his arms fall from about her.

"I shall see you to-morrow."

Still no answer, and after a moment he went out into the little hall and opened the front door.

He was so sure she would call to him, perhaps run after him. He was so sure that in a moment she would be in his arms, her lips crushed against his—he counted the seconds feverishly by his heart-beats.

But Julie did not move, and she gave no sign.

Chitttenham looked back.

"Julie!"

He waited a moment, but the silence remained unbroken, and he went out of the flat, shutting the door behind him.

It seemed to Julie that she stood for hours, leaning against the wall, her body so tired that it was too much effort even to move over to the fire and a comfortable chair. Her head ached miserably. With a supreme effort she dragged herself across the room to the fire. It had burnt down, and she replenished it with shaking hands. She felt as if already a lifetime had passed since Chitttenham came to the flat, and yet only a moment ago he had been there with her, so close that she had but to put out her hand to touch him, and now he had gone back to Sadie, back to his wife!

"I will never willingly see him again," Julie told herself passionately. "He has deceived me twice. I will never forgive him as long as I live."

She got up almost violently as though driven by the sudden reaction of thought.

She would sent at once to Schofield. She would not lose a moment. She went to the 'phone and called his number, but it was only after a long time that the hotel people could give her any news of him.

He was out at the moment, they said, but he was certainly returning that night.

There was a little pause—then: "Mr. Schofield is leaving London early to-morrow morning."

"Leaving—"

Julie felt as if her last anchor had been torn from her—the waves of misery and utter loneliness seemed to beat up afresh all round her. The voice at the other end of the 'phone asked politely if a message could be taken.

"No—oh, no, thank you."

The Story of the Christmas Seal

"Mother, why do our seals have this on them?" Betty was pointing to the double-barred cross above Santa's head.

"That, my dear, means health and happiness."

Perhaps you would like to hear the story of how the idea of having this kind of a Christmas seal started. There was a man who worked in a postoffice in Denmark about twenty-five years ago who was very much interested in children. He knew some children who were ill with tuberculosis and whose families were too poor to give them the best kind of care and he wished that he had enough money to build a hospital to take care of them. One night, near Christmas time when he was working late, cancelling stamps on the many thousands of letters passing through the post-office on their way to carry Christmas greetings, he began to think of how many people wanted to give happiness to others at this time of year and how many messages of good will were passing through his hands. All at once this idea came into his head. "Suppose everyone who sent a letter through the mail wishing a Merry Christmas to a friend would buy another stamp for a penny. No one would mind spending an extra penny for this, but all those pennies added together would make enough money to build a home where those poor children might get well." The more he thought about this idea the more he liked it and he made up his mind to try to interest some friends to help him carry it out. And so the first Christmas seals were made, and people were asked to put them on their Christmas letters and packages. So many people bought the seals that a great deal of money was raised and it became the custom to sell them every year at Christmas time in Denmark. A fine hospital was built for the children who were ill with tuberculosis and the money was used to give them every care.

Several years later Jacob Riis received a letter in New York from an old friend in Denmark carrying one of the Christmas seals. He made inquiries as to what it meant, and the idea so delighted him that he wrote an article about it for a magazine. This magazine article gave an idea to an American woman, Miss Emily Bissell, who was anxious to find a way to raise money to take care of some people who were ill with tuberculosis. She persuaded friends to help her and they made the first American Christmas seals in 1907. From this small beginning, the sale of Christmas seals grew fast, and now a campaign to sell them is carried on each year in every state in the union. People all over the country who are interested in fighting the disease of tuberculosis have come to believe that they can help to do this by joining in this campaign. The double-barred cross, which you asked me about, is recognized all over the world as the emblem of the fight against tuberculosis.

At first the money raised by selling seals was used to take care of people who were sick but gradually it began to be realized that we ought to do something to keep people from getting sick. The idea back of the Christmas seal has grown until now we think not only of healing people, who have tuberculosis, but of seeing that everybody knows how to keep well and strong.

Less than half as many people die of tuberculosis in this country each year now as used to die at the time these seals were first sold, and though a great many things have helped to make this true, we believe that to these little seals, with their power of interesting people in the cause and raising money for the work, should go a part of the credit. Because they cost only one cent each, it is possible for everyone to help and many children like to use some of their pennies to buy seals.

Christmas is a time when we like to send good wishes to our friends, and when we put one of these little seals on a card which says, "Merry Christmas and Happy New Year," it means that we are wishing our friend good health so that he may be able to be happy and that we are trying to do our share towards bringing health and happiness to other people.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR
JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M. D.

OVERWORK
He came into my office last week, eyed me suspiciously, I thought; acted as if he'd fly out if the last thing happened that was unusual to him. He gave his age as 52, had been behind a counter all his life; hadn't had the time to get married, or to attempt anything not directly beneficial to himself. He had within the last month sold his business and felt bereaved by so doing. He was of foreign extraction, we a z e n e d, tremulous, greedy-looking. Examination revealed no organic disease whatever.

But there are human disorders graver even than organic disease. Here was a man with a worn-out nervous system. Every thought of rest and recreation had forsaken him long ago. He had one obsession—that he might be compelled to go to the poorhouse or starve to death before his time.

I all but lost my temper when he skittered all over the room as I tried to take his blood-pressure—made more noise than a frightened child—this man of over fifty I told him he ought to be turned over my knee and warmed with a bed slat. He looked at the door, wistfully I thought, and I told him he was perfectly welcome to decamp; go back to "business" and wind up in the bug-house! This aroused his ire a little, and he told me he hadn't been born yesterday that he knew what he was doing. I congratulated him for his first natural expression in my presence, and told him he had probably been born, but he had never lived—he had just existed! We finally agreed and shook hands—on a schedule of conduct for him.

There is a man, a perfectly good man—headed straight for the insane asylum, unless he reforms right now, and it may be too late. Why is he in this condition? Just the mad chase for a dollar! He has it—at the price of all health and comfort. There are thousands of good men, doing the same foolish thing. This letter is just a warning; learn to rest while it is today.

THE NEW CHEVROLET SIX HAS MANY IMPROVEMENTS

The introduction of the new Chevrolet Six marks the most impressive forward step in Chevrolet's twenty-year record of constant progress and improvement. For this Bigger and Better Six offers new beauty, new luxury, new completeness and new quality—yet it sells at lower prices!

In every curve and sweep of Chevrolet's modern lines—in every detail of its new Fisher bodies, you will see the fine hand of the master designer and the skillful craftsman. And the more closely you inspect it, the more deeply impressed you will be.

The improvements in the new Chevrolet Six begin at the smart new chrome-plated headlamps and extend throughout the entire car. The radiator is deeper. The lines are longer and lower, giving an air of exceptional fleetness and grace. And the interiors of the new Fisher bodies provide a new degree of comfort and luxury; greater roominess; fine quality mohair or broadcloth upholstery; more pleasing interior fittings; and a new, completely equipped instrument panel.

The chassis of the new Chevrolet Six has also been refined and advanced in a number of different ways. The frame is heavier, deeper and stronger than before. There is a smoother operating, long lived clutch; a sturdier front axle; an entirely new steering mechanism; an easier shifting transmission. In fact, every vital feature of the new car has been made better to provide more thorough satisfaction for the owner.

And along with these improvements, Chevrolet offers the smooth performance of a 50-horsepower, six-cylinder motor—four long semi-elliptic springs—four hydraulic shock absorbers—a safety gasoline tank at the rear of the car—and an economy of operation not surpassed by any automobile.

» » AT NEW LOW PRICES « «

Fine as it is, the new Chevrolet Six now sells at lower prices—making the economy and satisfaction of Chevrolet ownership even more outstanding. We urge you to come in and see the Bigger and Better Chevrolet. Its modern design reflects the spirit of the times—and it represents a value which will command the interest of every buyer in the low-price field.

MAIN STREET LOOKS AT BROADWAY BY ERNEST CAMP JR

New York—Elections are hazardous events in this amazing town. During the balloting here on November 4, four policemen were taken off their regular 'beat' near a certain department store and assigned to duty at a nearby voting booth. Hardly had the balloting got under way when in rushed a young woman, greatly excited, and summoned two of the police to the store. A couple of burglars had looted the place.

The funniest story going the rounds concerns a wild party given down in Greenwich Village. It was a costume affair, and among the guests was a man named Caesar, who came attired in the flowing toga of a Roman senator.

After an evening of revelry, the story goes, Caesar awoke in the misty hours of Sunday morning and sleepily looked about him. To his vast alarm he found that he was lying flat on his back with a wooden surface above him.

It was very evidently a coffin—until he kicked out wildly and discovered that he had been left alone, lying under a table. Still atremble with fright, he rushed to a window, leaped out, and lit a streak for home.

At this point his flight was arrested by a policeman who, passing by, grew suspicious at the sight of one fleeing through a window at such an hour of morning.

His costume in comic disarray, the captive hiccuped his story to the cop's doubting ears. Finally, however, the latter decided to believe the yarn and let him go.

"Run along," the copper said, turning to walk away. Then, on an afterthought, he called to the retreating figure, "Say, you didn't tell me your name."

"Caesar" came the prompt reply from the one in flowing robes. It was too much. Without another word the copper collared him and hustled him off to the station house.

What's in a name?

Dominick Pacelli was "taken for a ride." He managed to escape with his life—but also three bullet wounds in his head. He went to a Newark hospital, was treated and told he could go home. But this he refused to do, insisting that he be assigned to a room. He lay there all day Monday.

Shortly after dark, two men drove up in an automobile. They parked the car in front of the hospital and walked in at the main entrance. They walked down the main corridor and up the stairs to the second floor.

Two shots rang out. Nurses screamed. Patients grew hysterical. Two men, one waving a smoking pistol, waded backed the crowd and escaped into the street. And, in the room on the second floor, Pacelli lay dead in his bed. Thorough, these gangsters.

New Yorkers at a football game display as much "college spirit" as a herd of creditors at a bankruptcy meeting.

If one of them cuts loose with a lusty yell, somebody has stepped on his foot.

To the hardened New Yorker a football game, like everything else is a bee-z-miss proposition. If the team he staked five bucks upon is a couple touchdowns up or down, why get steamed up about it?

Didn't he drop fifty grand in Wall Street on Consolidated Soap—and did he bat an eyelash?

The only real reason why these birds attend the games in person is to enable the Mrs. to show off the new chinchilla coat. If they had their way about it, they would stay home and follow the day's investments by radio.
