

MAN MADE THE TOWN

by RUBY M. AYRES

At twenty-two the only thing Diana really desired was another woman's husband. A nervous wreck from the excitement and strain of London's gay life, she is taken by her aunt, Mrs. Gladwyn, to a famous specialist's office. The physician orders her to the country for a long rest. She rebels, but the doctor is handsome and sympathetic. She learns that he is not the great man himself but an assistant, Dr. Rathbone. "God made the country and man made the town," he tells her, and she agrees to go to a rural retreat.

Before she leaves she goes to Dennis Waterman's flat, where they are surprised by Linda, Dennis's wife, who takes the situation quite calmly. "I suppose she wants you to marry her?" she asks Dennis.

At the night club where she goes with Dennis, Diana collapses. She regains consciousness in a little country cottage, with a nurse, Miss Starling, bending over her. Dr. Rathbone's home was close by, Miss Starling told her.

After three weeks Dennis Waterman calls. He tells her he will have to go away, and his manner, as he leaves her, suggests that his love is waning. But Dennis has not been gone many days before Diana finds herself asking Miss Starling all sorts of questions about Dr. Rathbone.

THE STORY

"I shall never love anyone else"

he said, her voice taking a higher pitch of excitement. "No matter what anyone says." She paused breathlessly, but he made no comment, and she went on in the same way: "Aunt Gladwyn says it's indecent to love a married man; she says the modern girl is indecent. I suppose you think so too."

He ignored the last words. He said gravely:

"The fact that a man is married cannot prevent a woman from loving him, but it should prevent her—prevent them both—from behaving foolishly."

"That depends what you mean by foolishly. His wife won't divorce him, but it only wishes she would, but she won't, and so—" he stopped suddenly, feeling rather foolish.

"And so—what?" Rathbone asked.

"And so," Diana rushed on recklessly, "as soon as he comes home and I'm well enough, I'm going away with him."

"I see. Well, if he's a decent fellow—"

She gave a strangled cry.

"I thought you would lecture me, thought you would try to prevent me from going."

The ghost of a smile lit his eyes. "I prevent you? Why should I? Do you think I flatter myself that could prevent you from doing anything you wish—once you are well?"

She looked a little sullen.

"No, but I thought you might try," she said ingenuously.

He went back to his old position of leaning on the bed rail, his hands loosely clasped together before him.

"No lecturing in the world has ever yet stopped a woman who is in love from doing what may seem foolish to other people," he said quietly.

"You think it would be foolish?" he insisted.

"To go away and live with a man who is already married and who cannot get his freedom?" he queried. "Well, it all depends. In our place I should be afraid that he had already wearied of one woman it would not be difficult for him to weary of another."

"He never loved his wife."

"That is what he tells you. That is what all men tell all women in the circumstances you describe."

"You seem to know a great deal about it."

Rathbone stood up. He looked infinitely weary all at once.

"Then you must be prepared for him to grow tired of what, after all, can never be anything more than an ordinary liaison. I've seen so many of them, and they all end sadly. It seems a pity—you are so good to be wasted on 'that sort of thing,' as you call it. I wonder you don't think so too."

She said sullenly, but with flushing cheeks, "Only the other day you told me you doubted if I was worth trying to keep alive."

"Did I? Perhaps I've changed my mind. Is there anything else you want to say to me before I go?"

"You're not going already?"

"I think I'd better—before I make you too angry."

"I'm not angry," she said. "I like you, though nobody has ever been so—so brutal to me as you have."

"Isn't 'frank' a truer word?"

"Perhaps—but sometimes frankness can be brutal."

She was sitting up in bed, her head resting on her hunched-up knees, her big eyes fixed on his face. "But I like you," she said again seriously. "Whenever you come into the room it's like a breath of country air."

He laughed, though he looked a little embarrassed, and took his leave.

CHAPTER IX

Diana grew well with much greater rapidity than either Rathbone or the Creature had expected.

In a week's time she was getting up after her breakfast, dressing herself, and spending long hours in the tiny garden of the little house.

Mrs. Gladwyn sent some stacks of books and enough illustrated papers to keep the entire village occupied a month.

She also sent large boxes of chocolates and expensive fruit which Diana gave to the village children who came to stare at her shyly through the gate. There was no back garden to the cottage only the long straight plot in front, with a high clipped hedge that shut it out from the narrow lane.

One day Miss Starling said: "I don't think it is altogether nice of you to encourage that boy so much. He already has ideas far above his station."

"What boy?" Diana asked, though she knew perfectly well to whom the Creature referred.

"The boy from the Meadow Farm," Miss Starling explained. "Jonas, don't they call him? He is only a pupil to Mr. Shurley, learning farming like any laborer."

Diana laughed in frank amusement.

"But he's only seventeen, at the most," she objected. "Just a lad—and he amuses me—goodness knows there are not many amusing people in the village, as far as I can see."

"He is a very grown-up seventeen," the Creature asserted firmly. "And your aunt—"

"If my aunt was in the least concerned about my health or my morals she would not have gone off to Aix, as she has done, without even bidding me a fond farewell."

Diana interrupted flippantly. She yawned and got up from the deck chair, where she had been lying, and walked down to the gate.

It would be fun to go down to the village and see what sort of a place it really was. She opened the gate, hatless as she was, and went out into the lane.

Diana reached the end of the lane and stood looking to right and left, uncertain which way to go, and it was at that moment that a light farm trap driven by a lad in breeches and a loose shirt open at the neck turned out of a lane close by.

He saw Diana and pulled the horse to a standstill, and Diana asked eagerly:

"Where are you going? and would you like to take me with you?"

She had made friends with

What Is In The Paint You Buy?

Here are a few of the items that go to make up paints that are on the market today—

CARBONATE OF LEAD. The purest of white leads. (Chalks when used without zinc). This is what the old master painter used.

SULPHATE OF LEAD. A cheaper grade of white lead. A residue from the carbonate of lead.

ZINC OXIDE. A very white substance, covers well but cracks (alligators) when used without carbonate of lead.

BARYTES. A chalky substance but very heavy. Usually used to make the paint weigh heavy. Has no paint value.

SILICA AND SILICATES. Ground rock. No paint value but used for suspension.

CALCIUM CARBONATE. (Lime) Used in most cheap paints and mail order paints.

SPANISH WHITING. A cheap white substance used in cheap paints. Putty is made of whiting.

LITHOPONE. A white pigment that is used with success inside but is not desirable in an outside paint.

TITANIUM OXIDE. A heavy white element that is used in most double body paints. Very good but not as good as lead.

Our paint is composed of the best products obtainable, and is classed by the Bureau of Standards as a 100% pure paint.

Our white paint has 66 2-3% Carbonate of lead and 33 1-3% Zinc Oxide.

OUR WHITE PAINT cost you $3.50 per gal. and covers 400 sq. feet, two coats per gal. or 87½¢ PER SQUARE.

MAIL ORDER PAINT cost you $2.90 per gal. and covers 250 sq. feet, two coats per gal. or $1.16 PER SQUARE.

Come to see us and we can prove these facts to you. Look at some of these pigments in our window.

Man Made The Town

Jonas when he called daily at the cottage with eggs and cream, and she knew without any warning from Miss Starling that, lad though he was, he was greatly attracted to her.

In a few years time he would be a fine-looking man. She quite agreed with the Creature for once in her assertion that he was a very grown-up seventeen.

His face lit up when she spoke to him now.

"I'm only going over to the other side of the village," he said.

"Well, take me," she urged again.

He reached down a slender brown hand, which seemed somehow oddly out of keeping with his rough clothes and general appearance, and carefully helped Diana into the high, hard seat beside him.

"Jonas," she said, "do you know where Dr. Rathbone's house is?"

"Jonas nodded. "Yes, I know."

Diana turned an eager face to him.

"Let's go there," she said. "I should love to see where he lives."

"It's more than five miles away."

"But that's nothing in a trap like this."

"I know . . . but won't they miss you?"

"I daresay, but that doesn't matter." She laid her hand on his arm. "Do let's go there," she urged softly. "It's such a lovely afternoon, and it's weeks since I was out by myself like this."

He would have gone to the ends of the earth for her, and Diana knew it well enough.

She felt quite happy and a little excited. The seat was rather hard, it is true, and made her body ache a little, and the sun was getting hot on her bare head, but these were trifles.

At last he pointed across the hedge on the right side of the road. "Dr. Rathbone's house is just there," he said. "You'll see the chimneys in a minute through the trees."

Diana was a little disappointed to find that Rathbone's house stood so far back from the road that even when they had driven round to the front of it one could only catch glimpses between the trees of pointed red gables and queer Jacobean chimney pots.

She stood up in the little trap, her hand resting on Jonas's shoulder, but even then, beyond splashes of vivid coloring here and there in the garden, most of it was effectively shut out by a high brick wall which had many trees and shrubs planted on its rear side.

She sat down again with a little disappointed sigh.

Jonas was pulling the trap to the side of the road to avoid a big car that had just at that moment rounded the bend. The road was not very wide at that point, and there was hardly room for the two to pass in safety.

"How dangerous to drive at that speed," Diana said, and at the same moment recognized Rathbone's car. She turned eagerly to look after it as with a wide sweep it pulled up to the closed gate.

The back hood of the landaulet was down, and sitting there a very young woman with Titian red hair: Diana had only time to notice those two facts before the trap was round the bend and the car hidden from view.

"That was Dr. Rathbone's car," she said in a small voice.

"Was it?" Jonas was not interested.

"There was a woman in it," Diana said.

"Was there? It's the one who lives at the house, I expect."

She looked up at him.

"I thought Dr. Rathbone was a bachelor."

"So he is."

She frowned impatiently.

"Then who is the woman?" she asked.

Jonas shook his head.

"I don't know, but I know she lives there."

"What's her name?" she said.

"Miss Rosalie."

"Rosalie what?"

"I've forgotten," he said almost sullenly.

"Only Rosalie?" Diana persisted. "Not Rosalie anything else? She must have another name!"

"If she has, I've never heard it."

Neither of them spoke again till they were back in the village street once more. It was half-past five by the church clock; the big bell chimed as they passed. There was nobody in the little garden when Jonas jumped down and gave his hand to Diana.

"You'll have to lift me down," she said. "I'm tired."

He took her in his arms very carefully, as if fearing to injure her, and set her down gently on the path beside him.

Diana said, "Thank you," and gave him a little smile that quickened his heartbeats.

Miss Starling told her Dr. Rathbone had called to bid her good-bye.

Diana was startled and insisted on sending Jenny over with a note asking him to call, marking her note, "very urgent."

She waited in her room, feeling sure he would come.

Presently she drifted off into a vague sleep of sheer exhaustion from which she was aroused by Miss Starling's hand on her shoulder.

The room was nearly dark, lit only by the pearly gray twilight.

"Dr. Rathbone is downstairs," the Creature said.

CHAPTER X

Diana started up, trembling a little, and conscious of a queer sensation through all her body, as if someone had poured healing balm onto an intolerable pain.

"Oh . . . please put on the light and ask him to come up."

"Dr. Rathbone says he is in a great hurry and could you come down?"

She went downstairs into the room and shut the door behind her. Rathbone was standing by the table turning the pages of a magazine with impatient fingers. He threw it aside as Diana entered.

"Well?"

She thought there was not quite the old friendly tone in his voice, or was that her imagination?

Diana echoed "Well?" and could think of nothing else to say.

She stood leaning against the door, still trembling a little from her sudden awakening from sleep.

Call us for an individual investigation of your use of electric services, to determine the cost of cooking by electricity in your home. You may be surprised to know that there are many ways in which electric cooking actually decreases the total of electric and gas bills.

West Texas Utilities Company

is the POINT

DON'T MAKE YOUR HOME TOWN THE GOAT!

Every little penny spent with your own home town merchants helps your town to grow in strength and prosperity. Particularly is that true now that the dollar has increased in value several times. Formerly where only dollars counted, pennies now count, and the business life of your town feels keenly the loss of every penny that is kept from circulating locally, either because it was spent elsewhere or because it has been withheld instead of being applied to the payment of current accounts.

Many Ozona business firms now feel themselves cramped because of past due accounts—money that is due them and money which they would put back into circulation by paying their obligations if they could collect it. If you owe an account that is past due, your word and your reputation is being weighed in the balance. When you sign your name to a note for borrowed money you intend to pay that money back. When you buy merchandise with the understanding that you will pay for it in thirty days, you give only your word—you are not asked to sign a note. The merchant who sells you merchandise on such a basis trusts you and believes that you will keep your word.

When the day arrives that your account becomes due and you have not paid it nor made explanation of why you have not, is it not reasonable to suppose that the value of your word and your reputation for square dealing suffer? Of course, due account is taken of oversight but if your account remains persistently overdue, you are bartering your reputation against a comparatively small amount of money.

If you owe a past due account, the man you owe is entitled to your frank confidence. If you owe him and can't pay, go to him and tell him so. Don't withdraw your patronage just because you owe him—he is more entitled to it than ever. If you send your cash out of town and let your home town merchants bear the burden of your past due accounts, if you allow the benefit of your purchasing power to accrue to other communities, you are stifling the business of your town—YOU ARE MAKING YOUR HOME TOWN THE GOAT.

Keep YOUR MONEY in YOUR OWN HOME TOWN where it will do YOU the most good. The success of your local merchants means as much to you as it does to them.

64 Are Present For Musical Tea

Ozoma Music Club Members Hostesses At Gathering

Sixty-four members and guests of the Ozoma Music Club were present for a Musical Tea given last Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. L. B. Cox. Each member of the club brought an invited guest for the afternoon's program.

Members and visitors were entertained with a program of instrumental and vocal music. The program opened with a song "Bluebonnet Time" by the club. Miss Norene Allison gave a piano solo that was greatly enjoyed and a vocal quartet composed of Mrs. John W. Henderson, Mrs. L. B. Townsend, Mrs. Joe Pierce and Mrs. F. T. McIntire sang "The Morning Song" by Jahn. Other numbers on the program included a piano solo by Miss Maxine Murdock, a pianologue, "A Journey Through Life with Music" by Mrs. Royce Smith with Miss Murdock at the piano, a vocal solo by Mrs. George Montgomery, with Mrs. Vic Pierce at the piano, a piano solo by Mrs. W. N. Hannah, and a piano duet by Miss Alline Hampton and Mrs. J. M. Dudley. Miss Hampton played several numbers on the piano while refreshments were being served.

Refreshments consisted of ice cream and kisses. Those enjoying the event were Mesdames Royce Smith, M. M. An auditor of one of the largest department stores in Houston told us they kept track of prices so closely that he had known of the price of one article changing three times in one day. We are keeping just that close watch ourselves, so, while the above are current prices—we cannot guarantee them 24 hours. Rapid fluctuations in wholesale prices make it interesting.

Announcing Reduced Water Rates

10% Saving for Prompt Payment of Monthly Accounts

Effective May 1st, a discount of 10 PER CENT will be allowed on all water bills IF PAYMENT IS MADE ON OR BEFORE THE 10th OF THE MONTH for the previous month's service. There will be no exceptions to this rule. To be eligible for this reduction all bills MUST BE PAID IN FULL on or before the tenth.

This reduction will be in effect throughout the summer months—April, May, June, July, August and September. This policy has been decided upon as a means of stimulating use of water in the beautification of home grounds this summer and by way of "doing our bit" toward helping Ozona people over the 'depression'

In making this reduction of the greatest benefit, we must ask the co-operation of our patrons. All bills will be mailed out on the first of the month. Patrons must mail check or call at the office ON OR BEFORE THE TENTH to take advantage of the discount. No further notice will be given.

Although no discount will be allowed on delinquent accounts, those in arrears may share in the 10 per cent discount by paying current bill promptly.
