Dental Health Puppet Show Is Presented To School Children

Little Jackie was unhappy because he had the toothache and couldn't go to the zoo. Instead, his mother took him to the dentist who doctored his tooth and taught him the four dental health rules—See a dentist three times every year, brush the teeth at least twice a day, exercise the teeth and eat the right kind of food.

In brief, that is what grade school children learned here yesterday when a puppet show sponsored by the state dental health department was presented at the city auditorium for their entertainment and education.

The young audience responded hilariously to the antics of the puppets including Tony the fruit vendor, Benito the organ grinder and Jocko the monkey. Going home from the dentist, Jackie met the vendor and bought fruit and learned it was still not too late for a visit to the zoo. In the concluding scene the children laughed heartily when Jackie and his sister danced to the rhythm of the organ grinder because there was still time for the zoo.

Puppets were cleverly manipulated by Miss Ruth Snow and Wilson Greenwell who have traveled over various parts of the state presenting the health feature to thousands of children. After the show was over they came out on the stage and demonstrated how they worked the puppets with their hands.

The show was brought to Howard county by Dr. Lee Rogers who is county dental chairman. Two shows were given here yesterday and one at Midway. Others are to be presented at various schools in the county this week.

Over three million children are reported to have seen the puppets since this troupe and three others started on a tour in the United States a few years ago. The shows were originally sent out by the Good Teeth Council for Children in Chicago which develops projects of similar nature for the promotion of dental health education.

Baby Review To Be Held Here; Plans Are Set

Mothers of children or pre-school age in Big Spring and vicinity are invited to enter their babies in the Better Baby Show and Welfare Program conducted by the Blue Mountain Lodge No. 777 of Royal Neighbors of America. Registrations are scheduled to begin Saturday, Feb. 5, at the J. C. Penney Co., 106 E. Third street, and continue through Tuesday, Feb. 8. Special gifts are given the first fifty children registered.

Immediately following the close of registrations, physical examinations of all baby entrants will begin and engraved certificates, blue ribbons and gold seal diplomas will be awarded to the most physically perfect babies.

A "Baby Beauty Revue" will be held Tuesday, Feb. 22 at the municipal auditorium. All youngsters will be garbed in sunnits, bathing suits or tight fitting trunks, and will parade before six officially selected out-of-town judges who will judge each contestant upon the beauty of form and feature and personality. From these will be chosen the most beautiful little girl and the most handsome little boy for the titles of Miss and Master Big Spring and be awarded a beautiful loving cup. Other youngsters who have rated exceedingly high in beauty will be given blue ribbons and beauty medal certificates.

The champions of babyland will be presented in a "Baby Coronation Pageant" at the auditorium.

In charge of the program are: Mrs. Edna Pond, Orsela; Mrs. Edna Bowers, vice-queen; Mrs. Bertha Barton, chancellor; Mrs. Mabel Hall, recorder; Mrs. Beatrice Bond, receiver; Mrs. Verna Hull, poet orator; Mrs. Perry Lee Nabor, Mrs. Alice Wright and Mrs. Cleo Byers.

Moore School Will Present Amateur Contests Friday

An amateur program will be given at the Moore school Friday night beginning at 8 o'clock according to Miss Ash Phillips, principal of the school.

The program is the third of a series given on the first Friday night in each month. Joe Robert Myers, radio announcer for the kiddies revue, will be master of ceremonies. The contest will be featured in two divisions, one of which will include all contestants twelve years of age and under and the other will include those above that age.

First, second and third prizes will be made in each division and winners are to be chosen by the applause of the audience.

Numbers already registered include string band, numbers, vocal selections, accordion, dance numbers, piano solo and brass band.

Founders Day Topic For Discussion At Senior High P.T.A.

"Founders Day" was the topic for discussion at a meeting of the Senior High P.T.A. yesterday afternoon at the school. Melvin J. Wise, minister of the Church of Christ, brought a brief devotional and Mrs. A. M. Rowe talked on "Why We Observe Founders Day." The program was under the direction of Mrs. Shino Phillips. Candle lighting service was held with Mrs. H. S. Paw in charge. First, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh candles were discussed by Mrs. R. Lanum, Mrs. F. V. Gaten, Mrs. Charles Frost, Miss Pearl Butler, Miss Lorraine Lamar, J. A. Coffey and Mrs. E. M. Conley.

Rushes Discussed By Sub-Deb Club

Rushes were discussed by members of the Sub-Deb club when they met recently at the home of Miss DeAlva McAllister. They plan to rush only juniors and seniors this year. Plans were also discussed for a vacation trip this summer.

Misses Nancy Phillips and Be Clements were guests.

Members present were Emily Stalcup, Dorothy Rae Wilkerson, Marguerite Reed, Bobby Taylor, Mary Nell Edwards, Joelle Tompkins, Inez Knau, Rosemary Lanier, Wanda McQuinn, Emma Mae Rowe, Betty Lee Eddy, Billie Bass Shives, Maurine Rowe and the hostess.

Word from Mr. and Mrs. Albert M. Fisher, who are vacationing in Mexico, D. F., state that they are enjoying their visit there to the greatest extent. They joined Mrs. Fisher's brother, Will A. Kaufman and wife, at the German hotel in the Mexican capital. They expect to be gone about two weeks.

O. E. S. Honors Over 19,000 Job Placements Made Charter Member In 1937 By Local TSES Office

In Celebration Fiftieth Anniversary Of Local Lodge Is Observed By Group

Mrs. Annabell Birdwell of San Antonio, one of the only two living charter members of the local Order of Eastern Star, was honored yesterday evening when the lodge celebrated its 50th anniversary of organization. Mrs. Lela Hyfax of Marfa is the other charter member but she was unable to be present.

A check with 50 numbers on it was in the east end of the hall and as Mrs. Maude Brooks called out the past masters, she moved the hands of the clock, assisted by Mrs. Dorothy Sanders. Past masters present passed through an arch as their names were called and presented Mrs. Birdwell with a yellow rosebud. Miss Eloise Haley gave an original verse of each master.

A group dressed as near as possible to represent those present for the organization of the lodge in 1988. Those taking part in this were Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Williamson, Mrs. Ruby Reed, Mrs. Frances Fisher, Mrs. Alma Baker, Mrs. Maude Brooks, Mrs. Beulah Carrick, Mrs. Laura Wills, Mrs. Grace Miller, Mrs. Eleanor Slaughter, W. E. Carnike, Mrs. Edith Murdoch, Mrs. Carrie Pruitt and Mrs. F. O. Lewis. Brief history of the lodge was read by Mrs. Agnes Young.

Almost one hundred attended the celebration and were served from a lace covered table centered with a three-tiered birthday cake bearing 50 gold candles.

Old favorite hymn selections were sung by H. F. Williamson, Mrs. R. C. Moser and Mrs. Reed.

Jobs filled by the local office of the Texas State Employment Service during 1937 totaled 19,022, it was announced Wednesday by S. G. Merritt, senior interviewer in charge.

Private industry provided 15,805 openings filled by the Employment Service, while the remainder of the jobs filled last year were in public works, such as highway and building construction.

Jobs providing regular employment filled by the local office totaled 951, while openings providing work of one month or less in duration accounted for 18,071 placements, Merritt said. Farm work provided 37,708 jobs filled by this office.

Most of the placements made locally last year were in agricultural and construction industries.

The local 1937 placement record showed that 19,022 jobs were filled with 14,168 men and 4,854 women workers. Placements of war veterans made last year by the Big Spring office totaled 65. Merritt's records showed.

In obtaining orders for workers, staff members of the local office made 1,392 initial contacts with employers, 853 reverts to employers last year.

On Dec. 31, 1937, applicants actively seeking employment through the Big Spring office totaled 1,875 compared with 1,601 in the active file of the same office one year previous. During 1937, the local office received 17,980 new applications, Merritt said.

Each opening is filled solely on the basis of the workers' qualifications and the employer's requirements, Merritt emphasized. The employer makes the final selection of the workers he wishes to employ, and no charge is made either to the employer or to the worker, he said.

IT'S TIME TO CUT THIS TOLL

The National Safety Council Tuesday released its report on accidental deaths occurring in the nation in 1937.

The figures are appalling, when one sits down to study their magnitude. But one is moved to wonder if the size of the totals doesn't leave the average citizen a bit indifferent like he is when he learns the public debt has mounted to so many billions of dollars.

But it is high time that we study the figures on fatalities. The Council reports that accidental deaths during the past year numbered 106,000.

Traffic accidents top the list in fatalities. Lives claimed in such mishaps totaled 39,700. In other classifications, accidents in the home numbered 32,000; occupational mishaps, 19,000; public (non-traffic), 19,000.

What is the answer to all this? Well, in such things as home and occupational mishaps, one answer is a continued, continuous, pounding-home education policy.

And such programs as that of the city of Dallas may be one answer. Dallas reported yesterday that traffic was moving much more sanely there, because there had been 7,192 traffic arrests in January.

We can't always blame the laws, such as drivers' license statutes, legislation requiring mechanically perfect cars, and the like.

Washington Daybook

By Preston Grover

WASHINGTON—Congress is being guinea-pigged and doesn't seem to mind it.

It began when Dr. George W. Calver, physician for congress, hit upon an idea he thought would reduce the percentage of congressional sniffles.

Congressmen don't sniffle more than the average run of citizens, perhaps not as much since they live a more sequestered life and the places where they work are air-conditioned.

Yet a few were occasionally reporting up with eyes red from cold germs.

Calver while back Dr. Calver spent several weeks in a laboratory working on a cold preventive. There were several on the market and he experimented, refining a technique of his own which he felt certain would be harmless and likely beneficial.

Last season he took on volunteers, including a number of members of congress. His test group included 50. To them he began giving pills which come under the head of "oral vaccines" since you swallow them instead of having them scratched into your arm—or into your thigh if you are on the society side.

Each patient—including the members of congress—took one small white pellet daily, a half-hour before breakfast, for a week. After that it was two a week.

More Than Mere Pills

His experiment indicated the treatment was effective in about 80 per cent of the cases so this year he offered his idea to the wide world. Taking the tablet is only part of the job. You must follow health rules to help out.

Last year Dr. Calver had little placards hung in each elevator in the capital and senate-house office advising people to stay away from others with colds, to drink lots of water, avoid stuffy rooms, exercise plenty and avoid overeating and constipation. This year, he added to the list, the following:

"If you are susceptible to colds, see first aid room staff about new vaccine taken by mouth for the prevention of colds."

We tried to get him to let us publish the formula, but he objected. He said it was not radically different from several "oral vaccines" on the market but he thought the job should be done under direction of a physician. He told us that any physician wanting the formula could get it by asking, "Being a physician he could not reveal the names of members of congress who are taking the treatment, but commented:

"You would be surprised if I told you some who are."

Notes On Statesmanship

So-That's-How Note: "We Southerners are a self-conscious, irritable minority and the Southern politician in a master of appealing to his listeners by references to such things as Southern womanhood, Southern ideals, magnolia blossoms, and plantation songs on the banks of the Mississippi."

Now-Now-Senator Note: Past-colored Senator Lewis of Illinois was introduced recently to the charming wife of a prominent member of the senate and after a moment of casual chatter back and forth he whispered in the lady's ear:

"When you go home, tell your husband I have met the woman who writes his speeches."

Man About Manhattan

by GEORGE TUCKER

NEW YORK—Twenty years ago, while padding about the cane fields of Louisiana, I was given a book that set a standard for most of my reading during the next several years. It was "The Clansmen," by Thomas Dixon, and it came "The Birth of a Nation," and a vogue in novels relating to the War Between the States.

In our neighborhood was a little girl with pigtails and sunny blue eyes who borrowed the book and when she brought it back half of the blank page at the end of the book had been torn and folded up and held in place by a two-cent stamp. Under it was the terse line, "Don't read this."

In burning curiosity I begged her to tell me what she had written. But she would not, and I never unfolded the sheet to see for myself until the other day. The note said, "I hereby promise on my honor that under no circumstances will I ever marry a Yankee." It was signed "Marjory, 1918."

Marjory had flaxen hair and was continually surrounded by beaux. Then she moved to Texas, and I never saw her again. But in one of those sentimental moods which lay hold of us all now and then I wrote her a letter after reading her "vow" on the back page of "The Clansmen," and sure enough in a few days came an answer:

"I am happy to announce that Marjory of the blue eyes and the 1918 resolutions kept her vow. She is married to a Texan and lives in San Antonio. I don't know what this has to do with a Broadway column, but I thought you'd like to know."

A little experiment in psychology has helped George Judd, manager of the Boston symphony, solve a vexing problem. For years his telephone was at his elbow, but George Judd was answering telephones even worse than you and I hate paying the rent. He instructed his men to move the telephone to a table in the far corner of the office. Then he told his friends: "Every time you telephone me I have to leave my desk and walk clear across the room."

Since then his calls have been reduced by 50 per cent.

Hollywood Sights And Sounds

HOLLYWOOD—The film colony's weekend horizon is continually expanding. More than ever before, Hollywood over Saturdays and Sundays is a "deserted village."

Every weekend automatically divides the stellar residents into two classes: those who are working, those who are not. For most of the latter, the exodus begins earlier than Saturday noon. For many of the former, Saturday noon means a quick getaway. Shortly after Saturday noon, the celebrity population of Hollywood is at its lowest—unless, during the Santa Anita racing season, you include Arcadia within the figurative boundaries of the colony.

A few years ago the big weekend excursion was aimed at Malibu Beach. Malibu is a community of eight and nine-room "cottages" about an hour's ride from the heart of Hollywood.

Celebrities still go there, come Saturday, to relax, swim, sun, play beach games and stay up roasting weiners or bridge partners.

Hideouts Numerous But Malibu now is just one of the pebbles on the recreation beach. Palm Springs, the desert resort, horned in first. Three hours from Hollywood—four if you take your time—Palm Springs boasts healthful beauty, ultra-ultra accommodations, and splendid isolation except for tourists and autograph hunters.

From autumn until spring, each year, harried stars go there to get away from it all and be seen. About a year ago, however, the famous of filmland began looking at maps and making startling discoveries, to wit, that there were Other Places! Unexplored, tucked all mishaps, 19,000; public (non-traffic), 19,000; occupational mishaps, 19,000; public (non-traffic), 19,000.

So when you want to locate your favorite star on a Sunday morning you're up against it. Victorville (desert) and La Quinta (near Palm Springs) and Furnace Creek (in Death Valley) and Arrowhead (in the mountains) are just starters.

Ranch Attracts Some Bob Montgomery's present favorite is Sun Valley, the Idaho winter sports resort. For a quick trip from here flying is essential. Dolores del Rio, Jeanette MacDonald, Joan Crawford and Franchot Tone make quick jaunts to the new B-Bar-H ranch, which other movie stars have since "discovered." The Marx brothers are Palm Springs addicts, but Clark Gable divides his free time between that resort, La Quinta, and half a dozen other spots.

Rev. W. S. Garrett, pastor of the East Fourth Street Baptist church, left Tuesday afternoon for Dallas, where he will undergo treatment in a hospital there.

EMPIRE FOR A LADY BY ALAN LE MAY

Chapter 14

"THESE DYAKS CAN SHOOT" Christine was wearing white flannel slacks such as a yachtswoman or the master of a passenger vessel might wear, and a white silk blouse pinned at the throat with a silver buckle. Some part of my confused brain observed that the working of the silver buckle was that of Indo-China, she looked very cool and clean as she sat down now in one of our weather-moulded chairs. I suppose she should have made me aware that I should have been as much jungle dirt as would stick, but I did not care anything about all that; none of it even then came to my mind.

"Why didn't you tell me you were running guns to the Dyaks?" I insisted. She said, "Sit down." I hesitated and then kicked an empty ammunition case near her chair. "Closer," she said, and I moved closer.

"Why didn't your brother come here?" I demanded. "We're in a hell of a hole—I have no time to waste saying a lot of things that I'll only have to repeat to somebody else. Who's supposed to be in authority on your yawl, anyway?" She made a single quick motion of head and hands. "My brother is dead with fever; they're holding him in his bunk. Captain Stocker can barely stand. If you have anything to say to anyone, you may as well say it to me."

"So you've taken over," I said with heavy sarcasm. "I'm trying to go on with things my father began," she said. "I thought again of the scholarly aesthetic face of Anthony Forrester, in the steel engraving. 'I suppose it was your father's plan to run contraband arms to the head-hunters,' I said savagely, 'and raise more pure hell than's been seen around here yet?'"

"She said wearily, 'Perhaps.' "What Are You Up To?" "I suppose you think," I rushed on, "that the Dyaks are going to loot Mantusen and then you're going to swindle the Dyaks. Well, I'll tell you something about that. The Dyaks will never take one penny's worth of loot from Mantusen. If it comes to a finish, the Malays will smash up everything they have, and kill their wives and their slaves, and then rush out fighting juramentado. That's another thing your father should have known, and you too. Your dumb fool get-rich-quick scheme has accomplished only one thing—it has probably cost the life of James Clyde."

"Mr. Thorne," she said faintly. "I swear to you, I would have stopped him if I had known. But he seemed so sure of what he was doing—"

"We knew you were running guns," I said. "And we could see that you didn't know your business, nor anything about it. But naturally we didn't suppose you were turning the jungle upside down to no profit at all. The first we knew about it was when Mantusen showed us one of the Dyak guns."

"And Clyde walked straight into Mantusen's arms," the girl said. "I can't believe it, even yet." "It was a trap, because you made it a trap, and then said nothing. Now I want to know what you people are up to here—and I need to know quick."

"She sat motionless, leaning back in the canvas chair where James Clyde should rightly have been. Over her head our ragged strip of awning was marbled by rippling reflections from the sun-struck water; and that same uneasy, restlessness was moving across her face, accenting her quiet."

"I tell you, I didn't know Clyde would get into the river. He said himself that the only thing to do was to pull out and take his cargo somewhere else. There were a dozen other places he could have landed his guns—the Sultan of Saramba would have paid him very high."

"You thought Clyde would simply up-anchor and run?" "That was too much to hope for, of course. I supposed he would loiter around here for days, perhaps weeks, arguing and complaining, and when he saw that he couldn't complete his own deal try to edge in on ours, if he could find out what it was. How was I to know that he would go crashing up the Siderong like a headstrong child?"

"Headstrong child," I repeated. "You realize, of course, that he wouldn't have done it except for you."

Her head went up suddenly at that. She could have been no more startled if I had slapped her face. "Do you think that?" "He had to give the Dyaks something to think about besides swarming over your yawl."

"There was a silence. When she spoke her voice was low and intense. 'I heard what you told the mate. I may not have understood you. But if I did, you are thinking of something you must not try. Not even the Linkang can live an hour in that river.'

"I have No Choice" "If I do it because I've got to do it. Nothing else is going to get Clyde out."

"But the guns—the guns—" "Every gun you're put in their hands will be against me. I know that. I suppose you spent last night lusting a lot more."

"I could hardly hear her answer. "Yes."

"How many have you unloaded?" "Two hundred and 23."

"It's too many," I said. "But—it could be worse. It would be a lot worse if Dyaks could shoot. Thank God they close both eyes. We'll just have to keep blasting at 'em and get 'em. But don't heaven, if you had only—"

"But," she said, white-faced, "these Dyaks can shoot."

"I started to say that this was nonsense, that no Dyak ever learned to handle a firearm. But now I remembered the slapping from the jungle which had picked off 22 Malays, and I recalled what Mantusen had said; 'Mantusen had thought at first that Malays or white men must be handling the guns.'

"Every one of those rifles," Christine Forrester said, "is in the hands of a man who can pick off an enemy at 500 yards."

"This was too much, I said. 'That's absolutely and literally impossible for a Dyak.' "You don't understand," she kept saying. "You don't understand. I still have nearly 1,000 guns left in the hold of the Avon. I don't intend to unload them all—at least not now. But I came here prepared to arm 500 sharpshooters—every one of them a trained shot. And I have to go ahead and do it."

"These are not my guns," Her lips were bloodless and twisted as she spoke. "These guns already belong to the Dyaks. If anything ever belonged to anybody, my father promised them. They were already in the hold of the Avon when he died. I have to go on and carry out what he started to do. I tell you, I haven't any choice!"

"I must have shouted at her then. 'Are you insane? Are you going to keep pouring guns into this boiling—'"

"My father started this revolt," she said.

"That stopped me," I said vaguely.

"Your father did what?"

"My father spent years of his life—his last years, organizing this and preparing for it. Famine tribes are raised up by years of patient work. If this attack breaks, the tribes that are up will be banded into the farthest corners of the islands, until every last one of their leaders is destroyed."

"I let that soak in for a minute. 'There are quite a few people wandering around the islands,' I said at last, 'with nothing better to do than encourage a lot of unrest. Your father, I am known to be a queer character. I am not surprised to hear that he was also a nuisance. I must say, I can't see how that fact is going to help us here.'

She drew in her breath as if for another of her quick outpourings of words; then she made a hopeless gesture with both hands and started again. "If I could talk to you for a week," she said wearily, "I could make you understand what is happening here. I could make you believe me. I could show you things that would force you to believe me. But there isn't any time for all that. I can only tell you exactly what is true, as quickly as I can. And you have to believe me, because if you don't, both you and James Clyde are finished." BRITAIN MAY NOT COMPETE IN OLYMPICS

LONDON, Feb. 2 (AP)—Sentiment in Great Britain against British representation at the Tokyo Olympic games in 1940 is national in scope, says Lord Aberdare, who will represent Great Britain at the meeting of the International Olympic committee in Cairo in March.

Aberdare said a clear distinction should be made between the boycott of the Berlin Olympics in 1936 and the movement against Tokyo. He pointed out that the Berlin boycott was confined to a small faction while "resentment against Japan here is national, and, judging from United States reports, international."
