Fear for Safety of Infant Is Felt in Some Quarters

Battles Eagles

Spotting some eagles attacking a band of mountain sheep, Mrs. Griffith Lloyd of Colorado Springs, above, well known aviatrix, dove her plane toward the slopes of Pike's Peak to frighten off the birds. Instead, they attacked her, following the plane to 15,000 feet. One eagle swooped into the cockpit, battering Mrs. Lloyd and Stuart Wandell, veteran pilot, riding as passenger. Mrs. Lloyd regained control as the ship went into a dive and finally escaped.

Investigation of Man To Be Held Some Time Today

HOPEWELL, March 15. (UP)—Fear for the safety of the Lindbergh baby was felt in some quarters today as the two-weeks' mark neared in the mystery of the kidnaping. Police continued blind alley chases for real clues to his abductors. The centerpiece of police work today was the scheduled examination of Frank Bergh, yachtsman. This forenoon a police communique said Max Phillips had voluntarily related his experience in an attempted kidnaping in 1926 "which was frustrated." Bergh's name cropped up in the course of this statement. Police said information given by Phillips would be given necessary attention to ascertain if his attempted kidnapers are connected with this case. Phillips is wealthy and resides at Eatontown, N. J. Bergh owns a yacht which was recently anchored at Oyster Bay. Kidnaping May Shatter Dreams of Commuter HOPEWELL, March 15.—One of the pathetic things about the Lindbergh kidnaping is the way it has shattered the publicity-shy Lindberghs' dream of a retreat, a haven from the merciless spotlight. The searching investigation into the kidnaping has revealed what plans they had; plans that now may never come true. High up on Sourland mountain, away from the world, they set their home. Soon Lindbergh would have been the first aerial commuter. Soon he would have been the advantage of real country life with New York not much more than half an hour away by air.

Like Every Man's Dream He would have lived with his wife and baby and a few servants far from the noise and heat and crowds of cities. Evenings, with his shirt collar open, he would sit on the porch of the clean, white Normandy-type house and look out across the panorama of Jersey landscape that stretches away to the south. His plan was this: Early this summer the private landing field adjoining his home was to be finished. From it he would take off in his fast plane in the morning for the Newark airport or Floyd Bennett field, and would then reach Manhattan quickly. Business would occupy his day. At night he would pack his bag and return to his home. This is why the rutted, muddy roads from Hopewell to his home were never improved. That is why he endured a bumpy, bounced over bumpy, stony roadbeds in an automobile during the many trips he has made to and from his home.

Worked on Air Field Himself

Just before the kidnaping he had planned enthusiastically to finish his private air field. During the winter little work had been done, but with spring around the corner he expected to hire a large force of men and machines. The day before the kidnaping, dressed in old clothes, he was outside looking over the incomplete flying field, which is so laid out that a plane could take off against the prevailing westerly winds. Then he worked on it himself, setting stake markers and making suggestions to surveyors. He enjoyed that because he could wear old clothes. Lindbergh never liked starched shirts. His interest in the flying field kept him at home. He seldom drove to Hopewell, and if he did it was to buy gasoline or other supplies. Members of the city saw him occasionally, nodded respectfully and said "Morning, Colonel."

He almost never stopped to chat, for his shy nature makes it impossible for him to converse with people he doesn't know well. Besides, since the home was started he has been so interested in making his dream come true, that he has had opportunity for little else. His wife, imaginative, highly appreciative of beauty, has been as enthusiastic as he about the entire project. They had planned a specially-constructed fence to be placed on the porch so that baby Lindy could play there and learn to love the Jersey countryside as he grew into a boy. Back of the house is a wide yard, soon to have been a playground for little Lindy. Colonel Lindbergh expected to bring in toys, playground apparatus. Now it may be only a dream. For the crib on the second floor is empty.

Rodeo Performers Here This Morning

Arizona rodeo performers were on their way back home today after competing at the Stock Show with varying degrees of success. Hugh Bennett, with his well known dun paint horse, Hazel Eyes, stopped here to refuel his mount and his car, returning to Fort Thomas, Arizona, after annexing second places in calf roping and bull dogging at Fort Worth. Richard Merchant, with his bay horse, Happy, had fifth place in calf roping to his credit. Pecos Joe, versatile cowboy performer, accompanied him. Merchant was questioned as to desirable breeding of horses for competition in the arena. "You need all of the cold blood you can get, if you can get speed. But you can't get it," he added, "without the old Thoroughbred blood."

Bennett said he would not make the show at the cattlemen's convention at El Paso, beginning today, that he was "homesick." He has been married only a short time, he explained. A penalty of 10 seconds on his last calf allowed Pardoe, a well known roper, to beat him in the calf roping, Pardoe winning by two seconds, and he was third in bulldogging.

While China's 'Mud Forts' Balked Japanese

Individual trenches, like these shown here, helped to make Chinese positions hard to capture during the bitter fighting about Woosung. As soon as Japanese gunfire killed or wounded one soldier, he was speedily replaced. This photograph, taken during the height of a battle, shows one Chinese hurling a "potato masher" grenade while fellow troops have their rifles leveled upon the enemy lines.

Old-fashioned but fearsome guns like this one roared China's defiance of the Japanese invaders. This anti-aircraft piece is a fixed mount gun in the now-famous Woosung forts, where Chinese troops astounded the world by holding off the better-equipped Japanese forces for three weeks.

ODESSA, March 15.—Extreme realism was offered patrons of the Lyric theatre Friday evening, when the theatre offered "The Fourth Alarm," an all-smoke extravaganza on the old theme of "Firemen Save My Child." In the midst of a torrid fire scene with flames roaring across the screen, heavy clouds of smoke flying skyward, buildings crashed to earth and our hero struggling through flame and fog to the room where the heroine was trapped, patrons of the theatre began to cough and their eyes to smart. The theatre was full of smoke. A large piece of coke had fallen down between the shield and the stove on one side of the building and finally broke into a blaze. Protected by the asbestos shield, it could do very little damage, but caused some realistic discomfort to the viewers of the movie fires.

POLITICS SET RUMORS FLYING; ODESSAN NAMED

By GORDON K. SHEARER United Press Staff Correspondent

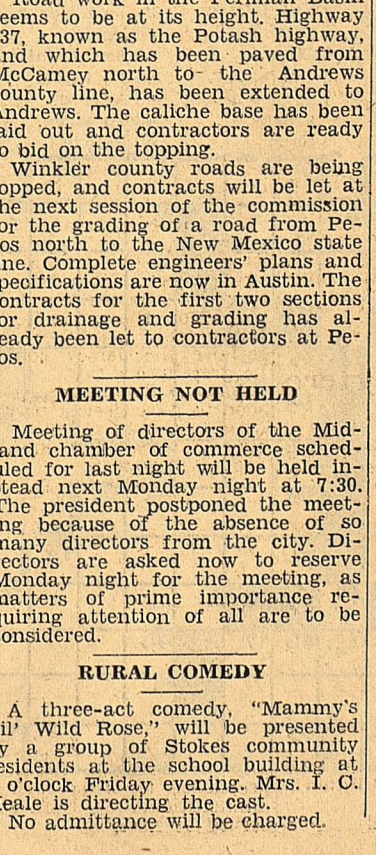

AUSTIN, Tex., March 15. (UP)—The Texas state political campaign is now in the midst of its rumor stage. Some of the rumors are highly fanciful. One may hear: That Governor Ross S. Sterling is not going to run and that former Governor Dan Moody will enter the lists in opposition to Mrs. Miriam Ferguson. That Mike Hogg of Houston may enter the governor's race. That former Governor Pat M. Neff will decline the proffered presidency of Baylor university and remain on the state railroad commission. There are good reasons for believing none of these things will happen. Governor Sterling is having statisticians collected on his administration and is making the usual speaking appearances that a candidate would make at this time. Former Governor Dan Moody has a lucrative law practice with which he could not be expected to abandon to make a race for an honor he has held. He also would face "third term" opposition. Moody's future as a speaker of the house is highly likely to be in later years when with a competence put aside, he might enter the United States Senate.

Mike Hogg, son of the famous Governor James Hogg, has turned a deaf ear to suggestions that he run. Railroad commission appointees do not generally look upon as Neff men are anxiously studying their future status. While indulging in political fancies, consider these possibilities: Former Governor James E. Ferguson might still the state that "Ma is running for Pa" by himself running for congressman-at-large, an office he could hold despite the impeaching act of Congress. There are good reasons for believing none of these things will happen. Governor Sterling is having statisticians collected on his administration and is making the usual speaking appearances that a candidate would make at this time. Former Governor Dan Moody has a lucrative law practice with which he could not be expected to abandon to make a race for an honor he has held. He also would face "third term" opposition. STILL TRYING

A recent dispatch from Washington points out that although airplanes are being brought nearer to perfection each year, men are still trying to invent devices that will enable them to strap on wings and fly away under their own power by flapping their arms.

Only last November such a device was patented, although it is not known yet whether its inventor has actually been able to fly with it.

This return to the earliest principles of attempting flight looks odd, in view of the great advances that have been made in aeronautics; but, really, it probably represents a form of aviation that would interest the average man, if it could be perfected, infinitely more than any other.

To be able to fly up in the air like a bird, just for the fun of it, without depending on a motor—that comes closest to those old, wistful dreams of flying. If such a scheme ever is made practical, it ought to be enormously popular.

ing a jockey instead.

Pete Patterson stuck around here last summer and fall, rode and timed every horse in the country that could run, and now he has moved over to San Angelo where he can quietly select and train just the right horse for every race we will have here July fourth.

Or can he? Maybe he can and maybe he can't get the horses in that section of the country. Of course Tom Nance may think so much of the San Angelo stock that he will be bluffed right on the start but we don't know what the local crop of two-year-olds will do yet.

Booger Bryant has a new car. He says there is just as much difference between it and his old one as there is between Piccolo Pete and Tomcat.

And now we have to watch John Dumble. He's the fellow who jerks a pony up off the grass, comes in and beats the fast ones. But what was that car load of oats Clarence stored in his barn for?

out her chosen cards. She was too generous-hearted to make a nigardly surrender. Steven deserved under his affectionate regard Ellen forced herself to eat and respond, as best she could, to his mood of deep and quiet happiness. It almost brought the tears she had held back when she saw how she was helping herself it took to make him nappy.

When he bent across the table to kiss her Ellen's lips were willing, fresh and young. She knew something was lacking from that kiss that never would be there, but Steven did not know. His arms tightened about her. His voice filled with passion as he whispered that she was his own.

Somewhere she heard the ringing of a telephone and felt an inward gasp of relief as he released her. She saw her husband from among the quees unfamiliar look fade from his eyes.

"It's Syms again, I imagine," he told her irritably. "He's called a dozen times today. Fergus told me. Ellen felt a dull surprise. "You haven't talked to him?" "I'm not going to. He's not to spoil my first evening with my bride. Oh, Ellen, Ellen."

Again the girl was swept with fear. Steven was her husband. He had a right to use that possessive, caressing tone. She belonged to him.

Fergus appeared on the veranda. "It was Mr. Syms calling, sir," he said to Steven. "I told him you were not to be here tonight as he informed me, but he was considerably upset. He said it was imperative for him to see you, sir."

"It's always imperative for him to see me," Steven grumbled. "This time he has to wait until morning. We'll stop at his office before we sail."

"Very well, sir."

Fergus was gone with one curious sidewise glance at Ellen—a fleeting glance that seemed to her to convey contempt and condemnation, as if Fergus thought she had no right to be sitting at Steven Barclay's table.

"I don't like that man," she said sharply. "Then he's lost his job," Steven told her.

"Oh, I don't want that," she protested, dismayed. "It's only that he makes me nervous."

The words fell on Ellen's heart like so many separate blows. Too late now—forever too late for it to be of any consequence to her—Larry Harrowgate was free. Oh, it was impossible cruel that he should have been free at the very hour she was saying the words that bound her for life.

The newspaper, dropped from Ellen's hands and into the fire. The nightmarer went on and on. Presently Steven returned to the room and she heard herself talking to him. She was so dazed and confused by what she was saying. She understood that Larry must have gone to the apartment two nights before to tell her he was free. Her mother must have sent him.

Ellen raised one hand with a trembling gesture and in the freighth she felt the frosty sparkle of her wedding ring. This was no evil dream from which she would awake.

"Are you tired, my darling?" Steven asked. "No, not tired," she said. "Not tired at all."

She followed him to the enclosed veranda where supper had been laid for two. She acknowledged the introduction to Fergus, the only servant in the place, and thought vaguely that she disliked him. The butler moved about, saying "madame" and "madame" that until she could have screamed with the reiteration of the fact that she was Steven's wife. Wild impossible fancies assailed her. She thought of throwing herself on Steven's mercy—begging him to let her go. No. She could not do that.

In time she would forget. She must forget. She was Steven's wife now. Only this morning she had promised to cleave unto him through sickness and health, through poverty and riches. There was no escape from those solemn vows.

She heard whispering tree branches against the window panes, the lapping of invisible water, the sleepy occasional chirp of a nesting bird. Outside were fireflies drifting to an fro. Outside was the velvet blackness of a perfect night. Inside the table gleamed with candlelight shining on fine old silver and china, and touching the purple of hot-house grapes. Across the table Steven smiled at her, so proud and confident, so serene and sure of her love.

She could not break his heart. She must try to remember, she thought sardonically, that if her own heart broke it broke amid pleasant surroundings. This was the life of which she had dreamed. She had it now. What blind fools girls were and what a fool she herself had been. There was no one else to blame. Not even her mother. Ellen knew she herself had decided that love could be made to yield to affection and gratitude, ease and luxury.

She must be a good sport, play

SOCIETY

New Officers Are Named for Women's Auxiliary

Election of new officers for the Women's auxiliary of the First Presbyterian church took place Monday afternoon at a general business meeting which was attended by approximately 28 women.

Mrs. T. R. Wilson was elected president to succeed Mrs. Andrew Fasken. An efficient corps of officers to assist her included Mrs. W. G. Whitehouse, first vice president; Mrs. W. P. Knight, second vice president, and Mrs. C. A. McClintic, secretary and treasurer.

Installation of the officers will be held at the next meeting. Reports from all departments of the auxiliary for the past year show splendid accomplishments had been made. Of special interest was the report that Circle B had more than reached its year's quota.

Discussions were held of plans for the new auxiliary year. Prayers at the meeting were offered by Mrs. C. A. McClintic and Mrs. Harry Anderson.

The Bible study class will be held next Monday, it was announced. Club," he said apologetically. "You'd like it much better there, but I'm afraid we'd see people I know and we must wait until later. Anyhow, you want to dance and dance and dance."

"I do," she said again.

Ellen was disappointed with the supper club. Steven had wanted a private room. She yielded to his wishes although she really wished to be with the gay and rowdy crowd outside.

Presently the manager brought thought the champagne was delicious. Ellen had never tasted it before and Steven watched amusedly as she lifted the pale, amber liquid to her lips. He made a wry face at his first sip and left the remainder of the glass unfinished. But Ellen thought the champagne was delicious.

Her troubles began to lose substance and she became really gay. Steven was so accustomed to women who were practiced drinkers that he thought her gaily spontaneous and was glad they had come to dance.

After a while when he was called away to the telephone Ellen poured a great deal of champagne for herself and drank it. She knew she was attempting to escape reality and that she must keep the knowledge from Steven. But the important thing was to escape. When he returned, a worried frown between his eyes, and told her that Syms had called the house again, it did not seem important or even interesting.

As they passed, she hardly realized they were leaving and that Steven, deep circles of fatigue beneath his eyes, was adjusting her silver cape about his shoulders, paying a check and leading her through a brightly lighted room filled with noisy people.

Out in the cold night air her head cleared instantly. Her fears were back. She felt she was getting into the car and was silent as they drove away. "All right, Ellen?" Steven asked. "She thrust cold hands into her cuffs so that he should not claim them. "I'm all right," she said, adding in a shamed voice, "I took some of the champagne when you were out of the room."

He laughed and called her an audacious child. They were back at the house again, stealing like conspirators into the great, dark living room and up the stairs. He was whispering to her in the darkness, intimately, tenderly.

Steven left her and her bedroom door. "I'll come back to you, my darling," he whispered. (To Be Continued)

Harpo Marx Is Caught in Joke

HOLLYWOOD.—Almost every day some new secret is brought to light around Hollywood. Today's reveals how Harpo Marx, one of that famous Marx quartet, started playing the harp and why he never says anything either on the stage or screen.

It seems that some years ago while Harpo was working as a bell hop in a New York hotel, the Marx family started out on a vaudeville tour. Just before they were to leave, Ma Marx decided that she couldn't leave Harpo in the big city all alone. So he was taken along. But there was no time for anyone to write any lines into the act for him. So he just walked around on the stage, saying nothing.

He Gets a Harp!

That went on for several weeks until Ma decided that she would have to do something. So she asked him what musical instrument he would like to play. "A harp," replied Harpo, knowing that they were expensive and thinking that his mother would not be able to buy him one, thereby enabling him to continue loafing.

However, Ma finally dug up an old second-hand one for $40. But it was so old parts of it used to fall off right on the stage. Then they got a railroad wreck. Seeing the insurance collector settling with a passenger who had been injured, Harpo dashed back to see if his harp had been smashed.

Only the case was damaged. That didn't stop him, though. Taking a piece of glass, he freshened all the cracks in it and then demanded a settlement from the insurance agent. He got $250. Later when he returned to New York he sold the harp to a music store for $300.

Sold for $750

About a week afterwards he was telling a friend about how he had bought the harp for $40, had collected $250 insurance on it and then had sold it for $300.

"Yes," replied the friend, "and that store just sold it for $750 as an antique."

I don't know just how much Mack Sennett knows about hypnotism, but that is to be the subject of "Hypnotized," the 15-reel comedy which soon is to go into production under his personal direction.

The other night at a meeting of the Wampas, Hollywood organization of publicity men, Mayor John Porter of Los Angeles further revealed his ignorance of what's going on around him. After going into detail of how he had peered for his first newsreel appearance, he declared that he thought that entitled him to membership in the Wampas. Apparently he thought those press agents out in front were a flock of ham actors.

And now Jean Hersholt comes forward with the theory that one of the principal uses for make-up is to put the actor in the right mental state for the character he is portraying.

"As you look at yourself in the mirror, while changing your facial features with make-up, you can't help acquiring certain mental characteristics of that character," Jean declares.

SOLONS MOVE TO SAFEGUARD DEPOSITS OF BANK CUSTOMERS, END HOARDING

By RODNEY WITCHER
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON.—If every bank depositor knew he could always get his money back regardless of what happened to the bank, people would stop hoarding and confidence in the credit system would be largely restored.

That's the theory behind several bills in Congress for a federal bank deposit guarantee law. It is proposed that up to $5,000 of deposits held by depositors would be insured in case a bank failed. Methods are also proposed which would make the Federal Reserve Bank and examining banks so strictly that bank failures would become uncommon.

Bankers Oppose Bill
The bankers grimly oppose the guarantee.

Last year 2290 banks closed. Their deposits amounted to $1,759,000,000 and it is estimated that the average depositor's loss is about 50 per cent. The guarantee bills would utilize the Federal Reserve system and apply to all member banks, the theory being that all banks which could qualify for membership would be compelled to do so because depositors would only place their money where it was assuredly safe.

The usual idea is to build up deposit guarantee funds in each Federal Reserve district by assessing a certain fractional percentage against the average daily deposits of each bank, although Senator Fletcher of North Carolina has a bill requiring deposit of five per cent of the amount of each bank's capital for the fund and giving control of it to the Comptroller of the Currency.

Public Right to Safety
Congressman Arthur P. Lammack, a manufacturer from Columbus, O., would levy $3 annually on each $1,000 of deposits, authorizing the Federal Reserve banks which would control the plan, to make emergency assessments as high as $5 per $1000.

"Any depositor should have as much safety as the government," Lammack says.

"The expense of such guarantee is infinitesimal that you would not think banks would be for it, but they are against it, as all corporations are against anything new that resembles a tax."

"My bill would cover all national banks and all state banks which could qualify for Federal Reserve membership. Those which couldn't meet the requirements couldn't do business."

Past Experience
Other bills to guarantee depositors have been introduced by La Guardia of New York, Hare of South Carolina and Jenkins of Kentucky. The Tennessee bill set up a new Federal Guarantee and Insurance Corporation with stockholder banks and capital stock of $100,000,000.

The Federal Reserve law measure originally carried a provision for allotment of Federal Reserve profits to a guarantee fund, but it was knocked out.

Guarantee proposals have been made whenever bank failures have occurred in large numbers during depressions and a guarantee law for national banks was advocated in the Democratic platform of 1908, following the panic of 1907.

Eight states have tried guarantee laws for state banks: Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, Mississippi, South Dakota, North Dakota and Washington. The laws have all been repealed or have faded out within the last 10 years. Collapse of the Nebraska law, which functioned well for many years, has been attributed by its admirers to unfriendly politicians and bankers. But eventually, in all cases, the fund became smaller than the demands on it.

Dr. Cadman Writes Letter to Officer

The following letter was received by Harry L. Haight, president of the Men's Bible class from the Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, D. D., of New York.

Dr. Cadman has a national reputation for his brilliant religious oratory and in the science of correct reasoning it is not possible to imagine his superior. His Sunday's religious talks are reaching the hearts of thousands of persons throughout the United States and the fact that he has sent a message to the Midland class "demonstrates the high regard in which he is held," said an official. His letter was read to the class and "the impression it created is best exemplified by expressions heard from the members to the effect that if Dr. Cadman could spend time to send such a message 2000 miles nothing should interfere with the religious progress the class is trying to accomplish," it was further said.

Dr. Cadman's letter was read also from the pulpit of the First Baptist church by the Rev. Winston F. Borum, who paid tribute to Dr. Cadman.

The letter follows:

"Allow me to congratulate you upon this non-denominational Bible class which has been so well begun and continued by you. It is indeed good news to know that ranchers come into it from the surrounding country, even as far distant as fifty or sixty miles and I have no doubt that your highest attendance is 526, a record, considering the sparse population of your locality.

"I pray that God's richest blessing may rest upon the men and upon their teacher.

"As a matter of fact, the man who knows the Bible, whatever else he does not know, is an educated man, and the man who does not know the Bible, whatever else he knows, is not an educated man. I am not now quoting some celebrated divine or religious teacher, but the late Professor Thomas Huxley, who though an agnostic in some of his leanings, was a great lover of the Bible. Its constant and faithful study reveals the intellectual, moral and spiritual life of a man as no other book can."

Prior to the address of the regular teacher of the class, W. R. Lence, vice president of the Abilene Southern railway, gave a five-minute talk on the inconsistencies of many religious publications. He will later accept an invitation to address the class for the full time allotted for lecturing. Lence is the teacher of a Bible class in Abilene.

Film Director Will Lose Old Hat Yet

William C. de Mille's old slouch hat, which is as much a part of his equipment on the set as Ernst Lubitsch's unlighted cigar or Josef von Sternberg's cane, has been to the cleaners.

The Paramount director is thankful he saved it from a trip to the studio incinerator, instead.

De Mille has worn the old hat for years. It is one of his most highly prized possessions.

Recently while directing Miriam Hopkins, Phillips Holmes, Wynne Gibson, Stuart Erwin and Irving Pichel in "Two Kinds of Women," de Mille removed his head-covering for a moment and threw it on a chair. It fell on the floor and the set property boy, tidying up the set, thought the dilapidated-looking thing had been discarded and threw it in a can of refuse and sweepings.

De Mille retrieved it in the nick of time, and when the prop boy started to apologize, remarked:

"Young man, they've been trying to throw my old hats away in the studio and at home, for 14 years. I'll have to give you credit. You came the closest to succeeding."

NO SPECIAL SESSION

AUSTIN, (UP)—The Texas legislature will not act upon the proposed amendment to the federal constitution, changing the dates of the congressional session and presidential terms, until January 1933.

There is little prospect of a special session of the Texas legislature at any time this year. Gov. Ross S. Sterling has repeatedly said he sees no need for one.

Copies of the proposed amendment have been received from the state department at Washington. This will be submitted to the legislature when legislatures of 36 states ratify the change it will become effective. The amendment eliminates the "lame duck" session of congress and permits the incoming congressmen to take office Jan. 1 following November elections.

In a note scribbled to police, Hunt claimed that Coleman, who was his former best friend, had alienated the affections of Mrs. Hunt.

Wheeler, Woolsey At Grand Theatre

If you thought "Caught Plastered" and "The Cuckoos" were good vehicles for the comedy favorites, Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey (and, of course, Dorothy Lee) you should see "Peach-O-Reno" now at the Grand Theatre.

In "Peach-O-Reno" the comedians, and the producers, RKO-Radio Pictures, have done a difficult thing. They have "topped" a long succession of comedy mirthquakes by a wide margin. "Peach-O-Reno" will probably stand long as the funniest picture Wheeler and Woolsey have produced.

One excellent reason for it is the superlative supporting cast, which contains such favorites as Joseph Cavithon, Zanna O'Neal, Cora Witherspoon and Mitchell Harris of the stage fame, Sam Hardy, and Arthur Hoyt. All top-flight comedians, they have distinct characters unusual in comedies of every one of them is at his best.

Jail Robbery Suspect Today

Unless someone will come to his assistance, an athlete of the high school will move away with his family Wednesday. He is willing to pay a nominal amount for board. The boy is 17 years old and is a good football player, one much needed for next season's squad. He will spend the night with a friend, but his family has moved most of its effects and he will join it unless he has a place offered here, the chamber of commerce says.

LOSSES NEGLIGIBLE

ODESSA, March 15.—Ranchmen in the Odessa section are of the opinion that the recent snows the past week will give the needed moisture to the ranches in this section. There has been no cattle loss reported by the association up to Monday noon, March 14. Some of the cattle were weakened by the cold winds, but no serious damage has been done.

Warmer weather came just in time to save a loss among some of the ranches.

Voting of Army Officers Asked

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., (UP)—Legal opinion on the right of army officers to vote in city elections is being sought by Mayor C. M. Chambers here.

In the mayor's opinion, officers should have the privilege of voting if they have lived in the state and county long enough to qualify. He will seek the advice of William Mitchell, United States attorney general, and James V. Alfred, Texas attorney general.

If legally possible, Chambers proposes to submit an amendment to the city charter extending to officers the voting privilege. If their voting can be legalized by amendment of the state constitution, he will ask Texas legislators to submit such an amendment at the next session.

Texas is one of the few states where a retired army officer cannot hold office.

27 MILES ... then another 14

with the CRANKCASE DRY to prove the PENETRATION of Germ Processed Oil and Value of the "Hidden Quart"

"Hooley!" jeered one of the bystanders in a Muskogee, Oklahoma, filling station when F. J. Morgan told how the "Hidden Quart" of Conoco Germ Processed Oil had protected many cars from harm when run with the crankcase empty.

To prove his point, Mr. Morgan had the Germ Processed Oil drained from his crankcase and, accompanied by the doubter, started for Checotah, 27 miles away.

A crowd met the car at Checotah, but Mr. Morgan drove on to Eufaula, 14 miles farther, 41.6 miles

We neither encourage "dry crankcase" experiments nor guarantee success under all conditions. But unsolicited letters from motorists, now in our files, tell of this and hundreds of other runs with empty crankcases but without damage.
