Indians Have Odds On Their Side This Year

Manager And Pitchers Put Cleveland Club Out Front

By HANK HART When the Cleveland Indians open this year's schedule along the American league front, several important things will be in their favor. First, they start with a pitching staff that is second to none in the American league; second, they have a manager who knows baseball. Walter Johnson is the man who can put a team on the diamond that will naturally be feared by their opponents.

SOME "WORLD LEADERS" NEW STERILIZING

Probably it was only natural that the sterilization of mental defective should be forced on public attention these days by Germany, a nation which has turned its back formally on democracy.

Both rest on a basic distrust of the mass of mankind, in that both assume that society as a whole will be much better off if it puts all its affairs uncomplainingly into the hands of a chosen few at the top.

An intelligent comment on this attitude was made not long ago by Dr. W. D. Tait, professor of psychology at McGill University, Montreal. Dr. Tait remarked that society's worst ills come from the things that are done—not by the mental defectives, but by those who are smarter than their fellows.

Now here is a thought worth pondering. Whatever one may say about the weakness which democracy has displayed in these troublous post-war years, the outstanding fact is simply that it is leadership itself which has failed.

Regional Tourney To Be Staged At Abilene On Friday And Saturday

ABILENE—Champions of four high school districts will be here this week to compete in the first annual basketball championship tournament of region 2.

The receiving end of the Indian's pitching staff should not worry Johnson much. Walter has three boys who have entertained pitchers before. Myatt, Spencer, and Fyalk will divide time behind the plate. The Tribe has also secured the services of a new recruit in Bob Garbark who may see more service than the trio named above.

With the heavyweight battle scheduled for tomorrow night, much has been written concerning the boxers, Loughran and Carnera. A press service carries the following: Apparently the veteran from Philadelphia, one of the finest boxers in the ring, has reached his goal.

If Big Spring golfers intend to entertain the 1934 championship tournament of the West Texas Golf Association, now wouldn't be a bit too early to start campaigning. Bill Parker, one of Abilene's most enthusiastic linksmen and quite a sharpshooter on his own part, has been to Wichita Falls, the scene of the 33 event, in an effort to secure the tourney for Abilene.

Almost simultaneously, the head of Madison Square Garden, which is sponsoring the Miami contest, called newspapermen into his office and told them bluntly that no more boxing shows would be held in the arena Rickard built unless and until it was believed (1) that they would not be a financial flop and (2) that even if they were, the Garden would not be "panned" for trying to keep a sick sport alive.

CHAPTER 22

"Easy, Greene old man," cautioned Frank.

"I'd like to write his obituary," snarled the mild Mr. Greene.

Ahkin's voice spoke, flat with finality. "She dies with the others!"

Greene was breathing rapidly. He turned to Frank. "I didn't get all that. What did he say?"

Ortega had spoken to them in English. Frank did not believe that the high-priest understood the language. Yet he must have understood the substance of what Don Raoul had told them because his threat against Janice had tied with their discussion.

He muttered to Greene, "I'll tell you later. Ortega, listen to me: You're a white man. This native here is mad. You can see it in his eyes. You got her into this—never mind us—get Janice out of this, or by —, if it's the last thing I do I'll get you. Get you, hear me! I know a way!"

Ortega smiled uncertainly. "The girl will be all right," he said in English. "Ahkin is bluffing."

Again the priest spoke in level tones. "She has eaten, with these men, the food of the Gods. She has signed. Yum Chac will not accept her alive as a bride; he will take her dead as food."

Ortega's face paled slightly. "No," he said. "We did not agree upon that."

Graham muttered in English. "The man is mad, I tell you!"

The high-priest's glance examined Ortega coldly.

"Senior Ortega," he said softly in his slurring Spanish. "Has it occurred to you that your usefulness in this matter is ended? In fact, I am wondering about your future worth to us."

"What do you mean?" Don Raoul moistened his lips.

"Yesterday a runner from Merida told me that the revolution has ended, unsuccessfully. There is a reward offered by the new Government for your capture."

"I do not care for the money offered," he continued contemptuously, "but it seems that your services have no value to us now." Ahkin's voice became brittle. "Take care, man. Cama-zots is a thirsty God and your heart would be as acceptable as those of these others."

Ortega stepped back into the shadows. As the group filed out of the doorway, his big figure seemed queerly abstract.

Greene mopped his forehead.

"Whew!" he exclaimed. "I'm wringing wet. I wonder if I've got fever. Between that big slob Ortega making me hot, and that wicked-looking priest giving me the chills, I shouldn't wonder. What all went on? I didn't get half of it."

Frank considered. He wondered if he should tell Janice's press agent all the implications. The his fellow had proved his courage. He was a little ashamed of his former annoyance with him in Hollywood.

Hollywood! How remote it seemed. He decided to explain the situation to Greene in every aspect. Two heads were needed to pool every scrap of information that might be of possible value to them in their extremity.

While Greene was excitable, the chance of his flying off the handle must be taken. He said in as light a tone as he could muster:

"Got your notebook, Greene? This is the hottest stuff you've ever heard."

Greene sighed. "I wish I had it at that, only—"

"He studied the bars of the window," Myberg probably wouldn't let me use it if I could."

Despite himself Frank smiled slightly. The little press agent's obsession labeled him an artist.

He spoke to Greene primarily to inform him of the circumstances and also to piece together and clarify the bits of information that were swarming in his own mind.

"We're in a bad spot, Greene," he began. "I'm amazed at just about everything I've seen and heard. The people on the coast call these interior Indians subevados. Unconquered fellows."

"But they've always been reported as a friendly, ignorant lot so long as they were let alone. Occasionally they drift to the coast with blocks of chicle—chewing gum—haven't gained any particular reputation for ferocity."

"Did you notice some of them were nearly white? The old Spanish strain is persistent. That guard, for instance, that brought the water had ruddy hair."

"Some of them have come into the cities and have been absorbed by the modern way of living. A fellow told me one of 'em, some, even, have gone to the States to be educated, but like our own Indians, they generally drift back to the jungle and lapse into the old ways."

"It just shows you that dynamite will do if somebody provides a fuse to touch it off. This Ahkin in your stance. He was the same one I saw run away from the automobile the night Spin Winslow and I caught up with Janice—"

By the way, why wasn't Spin along on this trip?"

"His arm was still on the Fritz," Greene explained. "He may come later. I dunno. Too late to do us any good."

"You've read up on the archeology business. When the Spaniards arrived in this country the natives were sacrificing, they say, twenty thousand young men and women a year in Mexico City alone on their altars."

"Something like that is evidently going on here."

"Pleasant," muttered Greene. "I read where they took them to a cliff brink and threw them off. His lips were a little pale. "I don't like high places. I've never been in an airplane in my life."

"This Ahkin—Ahkin is evidently a title, not a name—," continued Frank, "is doubtlessly the dynamite fuse in this locality. He must be quite a man. The jungle is all cleaned up and the old temples reconstructed better than the Peabody people have done at Chichen lizza. But did you notice his eyes? harried by fantastic visions. His shoulder would have begun to heal and it itched excruciatingly. As the moon sailed higher it threw its beams against their prison. The rays filtered through the two openings in the walls above him. He heard Greene toasting.

"I thought so," said little Mr. Greene. "Listen Frank, and remember this: You did a foolish thing on the temple top the other night. If you get a break—any kind of a break—forget me. Forget me, will you? Take Janice and get the hell out of this place! Good night. I'm going to sleep and think about having our throats cut. Pleasant dreams."

Graham slept fitfully, his rest moonlight, that stabbing through the windows, sprawled one upon the wall, on upon the floor.

Across the moon-patch on the floor, gridironed, with the shadows of the window bars, a faint gray tracery seemed to wriggle toward him.

In an instant he was upon his feet and stepped softly toward the center of the cell. His toe touched an object; he stopped and picked it up. It was a stone, the size of a large walnut. Tied to it was a strong white cord that lay along the floor to the wall, then up and out of the window opening!

He tugged gently upon it. Immediately there was an answering double pull! He drew the cord toward him without further resistance, watching the window. There was a flicker of white at the sill, and with a faint plop, a paper, rolled like a scroll, fell at his feet.

His fingers trembled slightly as he untied the string that secured it. He unrolled the paper and found that it was a message of some kind pencilled in Spanish. He held it to the faint light. It was addressed to himself, beginning with the elaborate salutation of Spanish pueblo, "Muy estimado señor, y mi amigo Don Francisco G-r-hema."

It was signed Juan Piedra—the lad who by this time, had he escaped the search parties, should have been well upon his way to the coast!

These Thirty Years' Movie At Auditorium

Picture Presented By Courtesy Of Local Concern

It virtually starts and ends with a race and company's product is victorious of course.

"These Thirty Years," showing Tuesday and Wednesday evenings in the Municipal auditorium through the courtesy of the Big Spring Motor company, is a subtle story of automotive industry.

Woven as it is into a romance of two generations it furnishes an interesting background for the story.

Dave, a country lad, comes into possession of $800 when the estate is auctioned off.

Not long after he returns with one of the contraptions and seeks to persuade a prominent man to enter business with him.

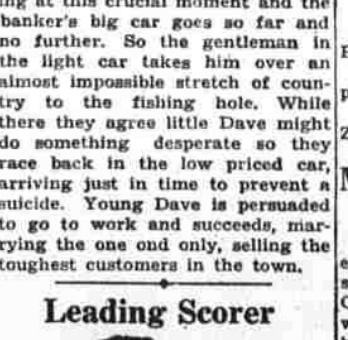

Dave approaches the doctor who says he will stick to dobbing. The town braggart makes cutting remarks and challenges Dave to a race.

After so long a time Dave Jr. and the braggart's daughter enter the picture and fall in love.

The banker and the other partner in the original agency go fishing at this crucial moment and the banker's big car goes so far and no further.

Young Dave is persuaded to go to work and succeeds, marrying the one and only, selling the toughest customers in the town.

Gangway—One Side, Please, For A Real Diamond Veteran

Joe Suggden, then, for a piece about a young fellow on the payroll of the St. Louis Cardinals who has worn a baseball uniform for 40 years, still wears one and is going strong.

Nobody knows for sure just when Durable Joe Suggden began playing baseball. The record books show that back in 1893, when America was agog over the first Chicago World Fair, he was catching for the Pittab-rgh Pirates.

Joe's hair is white. His face is wrinkled. His hands are gnarled from stopping fast shoots which have broken every finger on his "meat" hand at least once.

But he still holds out the big mitt for the swiftest, trickiest balls the pitchers can throw and asks no odds of any of the youngsters.

Suggden caught his last game in the majors in 1932, when Branch Rickey, now vice president of the Cardinals, was a kid backstop just breaking in with the St. Louis Browns.

Has Youngster's Viewpoint An scout and coach Suggden has been with the Tigers, Browns and Phillies since then, although practically all of his service in recent years has been with the Redbirds.

While it is obvious, as he warms up for another active season at his favorite sport, that Joe will never see 60 again, he keeps the youngster's viewpoint. Unlike many old-timers who loudly assert pitchers like Mathewson and Waddell far surpassed the present crop, Durable Joe mentions Grove, Dean and Hubbell right in the same breath with yesterday's immortals and makes no apologies for it either.

It must give old Joe Suggden, here, a chuckle when he reads of our modern sports "veterans." He's been in baseball 40 years and considers that he's just getting warmed up good.

Fredric March in
'Design For Living'
At Ritz Tuesday

Ernst Lubitsch's brand new Paramount picture, "Design for Living" is playing at the Ritz Theatre today and tomorrow.

It has for its leading players Fredric March, Gary Cooper, Miriam Hopkins and Edward Everett Horton and was brought to the screen by Ben Hecht from Noel Coward's sensational stage success of the same name.

Motion pictures have rarely attempted pictures dealing with the subject of "Design for Living."

Paramount, struck with the amusing entertainment possibilities of the stage play, bought it for a Lubitsch picture and placed a most important cast in the film.

On a Paris-bound train, Miriam Hopkins, vivacious young artist, first meets the two men who are to change her life. They are George Curtis, also an artist and Tom Chambers, playwright, played by Cooper and March respectively.

Tom and George both fall madly in love with her. To further complicate matters, Miss Hopkins falls in love too. Only she is too fond of Tom to tell him she loves George, and she loves George too much to hurt to tell him about Tom.

After lengthy discussions, the problem is solved. She is to live with them, but she will be a mother of the arts. Sex is out entirely. So with this goal for their happiness, the three of them settle down together in their triangular love-nest. But happiness isn't won so easily, and the manner in which they eventually do get-together brings the picture to a most amusing ending.

AUSTIN (UP)—A married man's overcoat can be sold for his debt but a single man's clothing is exempt. Rep. Harlee Morrison, Terrell, discovered when he studied the present state laws withholding certain personal property from seizure by creditors.

His study brought out other strange things. The law literally separates the sheep from the goats. Twenty head of sheep can be retained by a farmer against all creditors, but his goats can be taken. He can keep hogs, but turkeys, ducks, geese, chickens and guineas may be sold.

He can keep a horse and buggy. The law does not mention an automobile, but courts have construed the provision for keeping a horse and buggy to mean that the family is entitled to one vehicle, and have refused to deprive them of an automobile.

"Carl Laemmle Appreciation Program" At Ritz Next Sunday

R & R Theatres has joined the motion picture industry in paying homage to Carl Laemmle, venerable head of Universal Pictures Corporation, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of his coming to America and his twenty-eighth as a producer of motion pictures, by designating its new and greater R & R Super Road Show which comes to Ritz Theatre next Sunday "The Carl Laemmle Appreciation Program."

This program is composed exclusively of Universal pictures. It is featured by Universal's fourth outstanding production this season, "Beloved" a dramatic romance with haunting music and songs, co-starring John Boles and Gloria Stuart; and includes "Palsie Walsie," a comedy with Henry Armetta and Mickey Daniels, and Oswald, the lucky rabbit, in "Chicken Reel."

Mr. Laemmle is a unique figure in the motion picture industry. No other man has been boss of his own producing studios for any period comparable to Carl Laemmle's presidency of Independent Motion Picture Company—or IMP—which he founded to feature Mary Pickford, then a little ingenue whose name as a Biograph player had never been divulged to moviegoers, and of IMP's outgrowth, the great Universal Pictures Corporation of today.

For twenty eight years Mr. Laemmle has been a big factor in Advance! Not Retreat!

MAN OF STRAW
By W. R. WHITE, Ft. Worth, Tex.

Those who oppose prohibition are fond of saying, "You can't make people good by law."

What prohibitionist ever claimed that people could be made righteous? No prohibitionist undertakes to legislate righteousness into the soul of any man. The anti-prohibitionists set up a man of straw and talk about him. Character is formed by a knowledge of what is right and self-control sufficient to hold the life in the right path. Every prohibitionist knows this and so does everybody else with any common sense.

Laws are made solely for the protection of society. If a man is an island, alone, he needs no law and can have none. All statutes would be useless, superfluous, out of place to him.

But the moment another person arrived on that island, a society would be formed and each of the two would have rights to be respected and regarded by the other. All laws are made necessary by relations of the members of society.

Law can not inject honesty into the heart of a man; but it can make it decidedly to his interest not to steal or rob. Serious constatation of detection, a court trial and a term in the penitentiary helps people to be outwardly good as members of society. This is what law is for.

There are at hand innumerable illustrations of how law makes it to the interest of people to regard the rights of others to life, property and the pursuit of happiness.

If any liquid does not intoxicate or cause the one who drinks it to be dangerous or harmful to others, then a law against drinking that liquid, or selling it, or transporting it would not be a good law. Call that liquid by any name, just so long as it is harmless to society it should not be legislated against.

But is beer harmless? Is whisky harmless? Is any liquid with an alcoholic content capable of producing intoxication, no matter by what name it is called, harmless to society? Everybody knows that every such liquid is harmful. Why lie about it? Why make hypocritical arguments and try to deceive sensible people?

There are four reasons for being in favor of liquor:
