LINDY-A LEGEND

That was an interesting little story from Minneapolis the other day, telling how Colonel Lindbergh has replaced such a famous character as Jack of the beanstalk legend in the hearts of modern children.

University of Minnesota scientists, as you may remember, made the test. Out of 100 kindergarten children, they found that 90 knew who Lindbergh was and what he had done—and only 58 knew about the famous Jack.

There probably is some sort of moral behind all of this, but what it may be is hard to discover. It certainly does testify, though, to the completeness with which the famous aviator has taken possession of the hearts of American youth. The man has already become a legend; and the legend is apt to last for a great many years.

Fine arts groups of the city have re-scheduled their recitals and concerts for the week of May 1 to give us a free hand on the afternoons of May 3-6 inclusive. To show our appreciation, we are going to make up for this trouble by staging a great cooking school. Holding it in the Yucca theatre, everybody will get a good, upholstered, comortable seat, a decided advantage over the facilities we provided last year when we couldn't get enough chairs and had to string out "backless" benches and planks.

Details of the school are going to be announced daily now, and we hope all of the women in town, as well as the business men, will watch with interest. This is going to be a wonderful opportunity for demonstrating high class foods, kitchen and household equipment and other articles that women are interested in, and the women of Midland are going to turn out several hundred strong each day to take it all in.
