Rail Application, Big Spring North, Denied by ICC

NEED FOR ROAD NOT SUFFICIENT

Action Follows Long Fight for T. & P. Northern Route

WASHINGTON, April 13. (UP)—The interstate commerce commission denied the application of the Texas & Pacific railway company to construct a new line from Big Spring to Vega with branches to Amarillo and Lubbock.

The need is not sufficient to justify the road, a statement by the commission said.

FOLLOWS LONG FIGHT
Action of the interstate commerce commission in denying the application for the Texas & Pacific Northern rail line follows months of effort on the part of cities and towns along the proposed route.

Agitation for construction of the road began at a time when expenditure for such construction seemed as a remedy to unemployment and to an approaching business slump and granting of the permit seemed at one time to be imminent.

Efforts toward securing the permit resulted in the securing of much of the right of way and in the conducting of surveys. Briefs setting forth facts about the area affected and the development expected to be required for construction of the road were filed.

Delegations from West Texas made trips to Washington on different occasions in behalf of securing permit for the road.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The "robot chairman." (Oldham, Eng.) Town Council's adaptation of an automatic traffic light to limit speeches, seems appropriate for use on spellbinders who talk as if they were robots.

Those would-be writers of prosperity songs are advised to listen to the birds of spring, tra-la, building their new nests.

That motor company which hired seventy orchestras to play at its spring showings of cars evidently was working on the theory that customers as well as motors now need tuning.

Great Britain appears to be rapidly regaining its position among the nations. It is reassuring to see that John Bull still knows how to take the bull by the horns.

To many who live in the country it seems that when business came back down to earth it landed on the farmer.

And now we have another Roosevelt interested in "The Winning of the West."

A newspaper published in Australia is printed on only one side of the paper. It is presumably the ingenious idea of a publisher who has long been a commuter and realized the possibilities of a huge increase in sales if the individual sitting opposite him was denied access to the printed page.

The occasion when all members of the German Reichstag and spectators in the galleries stood during the rendering of the United States national anthem, in a memorial service in honor of the Washington Bicentenary, is further evidence of friendship between nations.

The abandoned plan for congressional questioning of critics about their attacks on new plays is one good show which the writers did not call off.

The spring winds that used to find youngsters out on the hillsides flying kites now find their sons trying out the latest glider models.

Paradoxically, the 20,000 shade trees to be planted in Santa Clara, Calif., probably will brighten the town considerably.

Although the promotion of Secretary of State Stimson to the rank of brigadier-general in the army reserve has been approved by the Senate, one expects that he will continue to do his best to avoid any necessity of acting in that capacity.

Now that highways in many hues are making their appearance, will the woman motorist consult her road map to see that her hat matches the road she traverses?

Recent labor reports are encouraging because they show an increasing number employed seekings jobs for others.

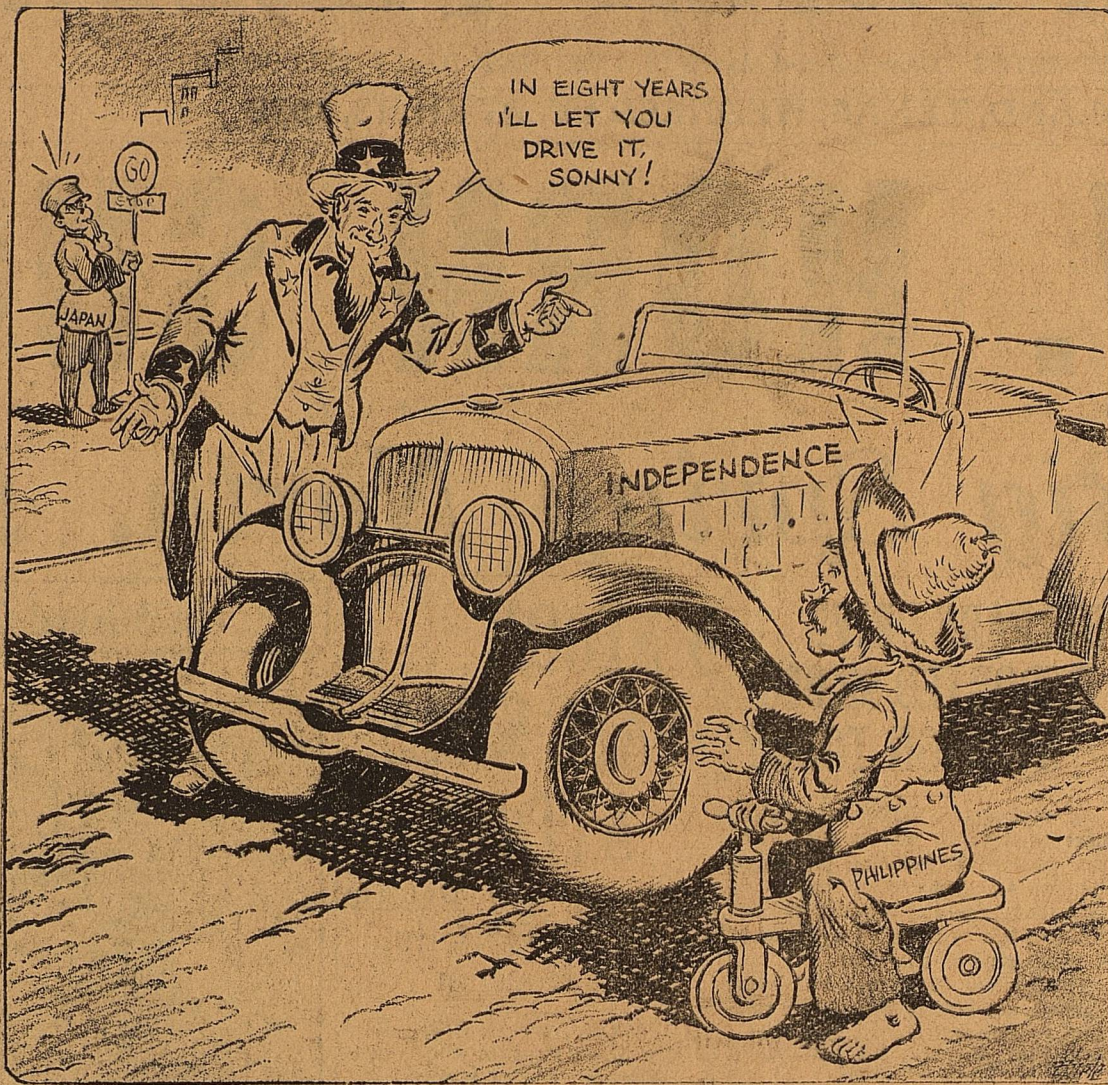

Talking pictures recently introduced in the Fiji Islands probably seemed as strange to the natives as pictures of their dances and ceremonials have been to "civilized" audiences.

"Uncle" Tom Lucas Has a Picturesque Career As an Indian Scout, Cowboy

BIG LAKE.—Starting his life as a cowboy, Indian scout and pioneer of West Texas at the early age of nine, "Uncle" Tom Lucas has followed one of the most picturesque careers of any man surviving today.

Small in stature and wizened by over 55 years of West Texas wind and sun, "Uncle" Tom bears the burden of his 74 years with the agility of a much younger man. Working for the Williams and Wilson Cattle Company, he made his first of thirteen trips across West Texas to New Mexico in 1877. Starting from the head of Dove Creek in Tom Green county in November, he helped drive about 2,000 head of cattle to the newly established ranch on Black River. The herd followed the old stage line that went from Ft. Worth to El Paso and stopped for water at the big lake on the present location of this town.

From the lake the herd was driven to another old historic landste of the west of Grierson springs. The horses were watered and barrels filled, but the cattle had to wait until they got to the Pecos river. Grierson springs, about 14 miles southwest of Big Lake, was then a fort where a troop of white cavalry was stationed to protect the people from Indians and outlaws.

Later a troop of negro cavalry took their places and rumor has it that about fifteen of them were ambushed by Indians when they left their guns in the barracks and went to water their horses. Uncle Tom doubts this to be true, for he says the Indians weren't here to kill but to steal. "I didn't pay much attention to killings in those days," he said. "I was too busy dodging."

Grierson Springs was abandoned as a fort in 1879 after the Indians had drifted further west. That was the first and only trip that Mr. Lucas ever made with a herd to Grierson Springs. When they came to the high hill near the present location of Iraan, the cattle refused to go down the hill. Most of them wouldn't attempt to go down until the next morning when they became thirsty. The Pecos river and the old Pontoon bridge lay about a half mile beyond the foot of the hill. After that they struck out blind and leaving the trail went through Castle Gap and crossed the Pecos at Horsehead crossing.

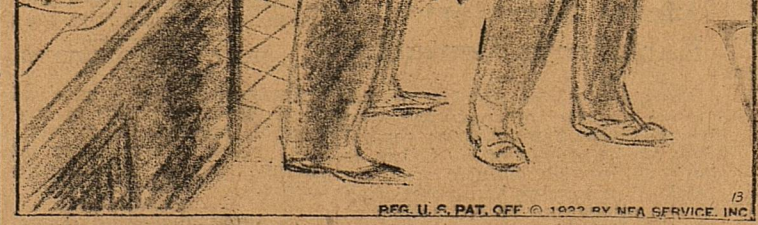

About 26,000 head of cattle were driven across the plains to New Mexico on these trips. Mr. Lucas made two return trips with steers during the period of the trail drives from 1877 to 1884. In reminiscing of the old days long gone, Uncle Tom told of one trip with a herd from the head of the Concho river to Horsehead crossing, a distance of 100 miles that the cattle made without water. To emphasize the extent of the herd, he said that when the lead cattle hit the Pecos river at the crossing the drags were still running through Castle Gap, a total distance of 13 miles.

When asked if he had ever had any fights with the Indians during that time, he answered in the negative. "But I've certainly dodged them plenty to keep from it," he said. "They stole a lot from me and once several gave chase but that's the extent of my Indian fights."

Uncle Tom and Al Bradford, an uncle of Louis Bradford of Big Lake, were camped on the head of Dove Creek one winter riding signs and scouting to see that nothing passed over their beat. They built a picket house of cedar poles with a floor of solid rock and after adding a fire place they spent the winter comfortably.

Adding to the luxury of their surroundings, Uncle Tom discovered an underground cave full of rain water. Sitting astride his cowpony on a knoll one day, he was viewing the surrounding country through his field glasses. His gaze rested on three Indians just emerging from what looked like a cave in the side of a nearby hill. The Indians discovered his presence at the same time and he saw them with a floor of solid rock and after adding a fire place they spent the winter comfortably.

Uncle Tom states that on the Black River ranch of the Williams and Wilson Cattle company, he and a number of men under his command were rounding up some steers to take back to Texas one winter. It began to snow in December so that they were unable to take the trail until February. They took refuge from the cold in an adobe house that had been built on the ranch.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Midland, Texas.

Dear Sir: When this scribe submits an article to the editor for publication it usually is of a factitious character. About a year ago we wrote something about Professor Lackey which was complimentary. We met the professor shortly after and he remarked that he had read our "factitious" effusion. That sort of cured us as he said without a smile which is unusual with the Prof. But right now we are going to be real serious and give some good advice. This advice has been proven to be correct by authorities and should be heeded by everyone who takes his pen in hand and writes a check, assuming there is money enough in the bank to warrant the writing of said check. Down in the left hand corner of most checks is a blank space above which you will find printed instructions to the effect that this check is in full settlement of all items listed below and the acceptance by endorsement constitutes receipt in full. In 90 per cent of the cases the matter is closed and the transaction ended for all time. Too many of us fail to list in this blank space the items the check is intended to pay and about a year hence when completion or due date occur and the check is dug up and it becomes a difficult matter to accurately determine what it was given for. To put on the check the words "on account" means little and may be nullified. The proper method to follow and the one that will give the greatest protection is to describe on the check the details of the account that is being paid. If the items are numerous and are contained in a long statement, give the date of the statement and file the statement away with the check number noted on it. Don't be afraid to use a lot of ink on your check. It's cheap and may save a law suit or at least an unpleasant dispute. We closed a large estate back east in which the former owner died intestate. The surrogate admitted all transactions with the single exception of one large check which because of insufficient data was thrown out and became the subject of a long drawn-out suit which was never satisfactorily adjusted. Put all the dope on your checks that they will hold then you can sleep nights.

HARRY L. HAIGHT.

While they held their pistols in the other.

When they finished Uncle Tom said, "You'd better stay for dinner, boys, or if you prefer we can fix you something to eat to take with you." They agreed to the last suggestion and left.

It is Mr. Lucas' firm belief that the rustlers hid in the wilderness of bushes around the house until dark, watching their every move. When the cowboys had assembled for supper, they again emerged from their hiding place and came in for supper. They ate in the same fashion they had followed at breakfast.

At Uncle Tom's suggestion, they stayed all night, taking some borrowed buffalo robes and blankets

Hankins is taking a vacation on full pay, and he has been working here only four years. Of course he hasn't been off before, but what would you expect in so short a length of service. And then you hear people say reporters have a hard life. Hank is getting two whole days off from work.

As I have said, time and time again, I am the only one on this paper who never takes a vacation.

I have had other calls for verses but still the desire for such eruption doesn't spring from my savage breast. If any of you readers will send me some poems, not to exceed four lines in length, I will try to use them to advantage. I will gladly give you credit for those I can print.

You hear a lot of different opinions among horse men as to what condition a horse should be in to do his best work. Some like 'em fat and some like 'em lean. Some like to feed plenty of oats and others believe too much feed will have the horse thinking he is boss. A couple and sleeping on the roof of the adobe shack. The next morning they finally found some of the horses after walking miles in their high-heeled cowboy boots.

In concluding the narrative of his experiences in the west, he said, "It all sounds thrilling and I guess it was for me at the time. Yet I would not do it over again for all of Texas and New Mexico. Why, for three years I never slept inside of a house." But as is always the case, that wild, free life came to a brilliant conclusion when he married.

the man HUNTERS BY MABEL McELLIOTT

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Susan Carey, stenographer in the office of Ernest Heath, architect, lives with her aunt Jessie on Chicago's west side. Ben Lampman, a moody young musician, admires her and introduces her to a Bohemian crowd which she finds rather tiresome. Jack Waring, employed in the same office as Susan, tries to flirt with her, but she discourages him. She finds she is beginning to care deeply for Bob Dunbar, young millionaire whom she met at the business school. At lunch one day Bob is interrupted in a declaration of his feeling for her by the arrival of Denise Ackroyd, also wealthy. Susan is terribly disappointed. Bob does not telephone, departs for Europe. Mrs. Heath, wife of Susan's employer, calls at the office and snubs the girl.

CHAPTER XIII

Aunt Jessie was going away. It was astonishing but true. Her sister who lived in a little town in Southern Illinois had undertaken a rather serious operation and was convalescing. She wanted Aunt Jessie to come.

"I declare, it doesn't seem right!" Aunt Jessie kept saying over and over. "It seems a pity you couldn't go and stay with the Miltons instead of having Rose come over here. But what with those coming of theirs visiting from Des Moines I suppose we can't help it." She sighed again, frowning, folded her best Philippine nightgown and wrapped her bath slippers in tissue paper.

"I don't see why you make such a fuss," Susan said capably, trying to help and not succeeding very well. "You always say yourself that Rose is so sensible and after all you won't be gone more than two weeks."

Aunt Jessie kept grumbling that it didn't seem right and she declared she was at her wits' end. But she went nevertheless. This was on a Sunday morning. After Susan had seen her aunt off at the dismal old station she came back to a house strangely empty and quiet. She walked through the prim, familiar rooms with the sensation of seeing them for the first time and when Rose came over to join her at a lazy two o'clock dinner, she was rang with the sudden, foolish, irresistible laughter of two young things set free.

They used the best embroidered tablecloth and the thin cups which Susan's great-grandmother had brought out with her from "York State." Aunt Jessie would have been scandalized at the idea of this casual employment of her dearest treasures. The tablecloth and china were generally reserved for weddings and funerals but since Susan saw no chance of the one and hoped there might be none of the other she made the most of this golden moment.

It was fun even to wash dishes with Rose. Susan hung, weak with laughter, over a kitchen chair as her friend described with embellishments the peculiarities of the head of her department.

"Stop! Please don't tell me any more," Susan begged, wiping her eyes. Naturally Rose, delighted at this tribute to her powers as a mimic, continued the performance. As Susan rinsed out the last clean dish towel she glanced with astonishment at the clock.

"It can't be half past three!" she said, appalled. They discussed the matter of a walk to the park or a trolly ride to one of the beaches, but somehow they reached no decision. They dawdled out to the back porch where, in a delicious confusion of Sunday newspapers, cracking taffy wrappers, and the shouts of the children next door, they idled away the afternoon.

That was the beginning of Susan's real holiday. Of course she would have no real vacation this year, since she had only started to work, but it was enough for her. The moment to feel the exquisite importance of being mistress of her own domain.

There came, however, the inevitable day when Rose, always popular and in demand, telephoned that she could not get home for dinner.

"I see. Of course you must go. Have a good time and don't be too late. No, I won't leave the door open. You ring twice and I'll hear you." Susan's tone sounded cheerful but she hung up the receiver with a sense of dismay. The long summer evening stretched out emptily before her.

She stood up to find Jack Waring twinkling at her.

"What's the matter? Somebody stand up you?" he bantered. Susan shook her head.

"The girl who's staying with me while my aunt is away has a date," she explained, hoping her explanation didn't sound as forlorn as she felt. The man smiled.

"Come along with me," he said casually. "Some friends of mine are driving out to a place on the Milwaukee road where they have grand music. I'll take good care of you and get you home early."

Susan hesitated. There was no denying it, the prospect was alluring. In addition, the man's tone and manner were so quietly reassuring, so nearly paternal that she felt rather silly as she demurred.

"Nonsense," Waring said briskly. "You just say 'no' as a matter of form without thinking. I can see that."

His conjecture was so close to the truth that Susan flushed. After all, wasn't it foolish of her to go home alone, eat an uninteresting and solitary supper and moon about waiting for Rose to return, when friendship, gaiety, music and laughter were hers for the stretching out of her hand? Irrationally she wondered if this had been the way Eve had felt about the serpent. Then she smiled and shrugged because the metaphor was so far-fetched. Jack Waring in his conservative dark suit, perfectly groomed and agreeably friendly, was as little like a serpent as anyone could possibly imagine. She was seized with an uncontrollable impulse. "I'll go," she said. "I'd love to."

He was so businesslike about it all, putting her address down in his small notebook, that Susan banished as idiotic the suspicion that for an instant there had been a flash of triumph in his eyes. He was to call for her at seven. Much as she disliked the idea of the neighbors peering at his long, blue roadster with its shattering horn she insisted on this. For one thing she remembered Aunt Jessie's dictum, "If a man can't call for a girl at her own home then I say there's something wrong. These fly-by-nights who meet boys on street corners are no good." It was curious that Susan should think of this and be so insistent about it, because she had heard Aunt Jessie say that many times and it had always irritated her.

She rushed homeward, impatient of the many delays. The west bound trolley seemed unusually slow and jerky. The conductor dropped the token she handed him, passengers fumbled their transfers, and at every cross town line there were maddening waits.

Why she was so excited at the prospect of an evening with Waring Susan could not have exactly said. Perhaps it was his reputation as a lady's man, gleaned from hints dropped by Pierson. Perhaps it was the memory of the dozen and one daily telephone calls which he received. Most of the voices were provocative, femininely feminine. Susan could not help hearing Waring's part in some of these conversations. He called them "dangling." She knew that and was a little contemptuous of it, believing in her young arrogance (and who shall say not rightly?) that the charming English term of endearment should be reserved for the chosen one instead of scattered to the crowd. But ever since the day when the man had shown such sympathetic understanding of her position—the day Mrs. Heath had so unmercifully snubbed her—Susan had come to take a more charitable view of him. After all, she argued, men couldn't all be alike. She began to feel that she had misunderstood Waring. Pierson said Jack's wife had given him a "dirty deal." Maybe that was true.

It was at this stage in her reflections that the car, jerking, wheezing and groaning, reached her corner and she was glad to alight, finding the air under the loam trees of her own block much more agreeable than that of the trolley.

In her own room, she wriggled out of her clothes and ran the tub almost to the brim. She was glad Rose had given her the new, ever scented bath crystals for her birthday. It was her favorite scent. If everything had irked her on the homeward ride, now everything seemed suddenly right. How lucky it was that her flowered chiffon, her only "party" dress worthy of the name, had been returned from the cleaners the night before. How lucky it was she had a natural wave intensified by the summer heat so that all she had to do was press her fingers into the little ridges to make her head a dark, shining, cap of undulation!

She was ready long before seven o'clock. While she waited she began to feel the heat of the door bell. She caught up her gloves in a flurry and for the hundredth time she wished she had a proper summer evening wrap instead of the wretched old black coat from last season. She opened the door with fingers that shook a little.

There he stood, seeming taller than usual, and as always, perfectly turned out.

Susan closed the door of the cottage primly behind her. Aunt Jessie had always told her that a lady never receives a gentleman at home alone. Waring smiled suddenly as if he caught the reason for her abrupt gesture.

"I won't bite, you know," he said with mild raillery and Susan went scarlet. It was annoying to be so transparent.

As she ran down the steps with her escort she forgot everything in her sudden surprise. There, jauntily perched in the rumble seat, a dazed looking young man at her side, sat Ray Flannery.

"Hello," chirped Ray. "I'm starving. Let's go to []"

Odessa Puncher Finds Skeletons

ODESSA, April 12.—Forced by a snowstorm, which recently swept the Big Bend country, into a cave, Billie Magill, employed by W. R. Holland on a ranch southwest of Odessa, found two skeletons supposedly to be those of Indians. The skeletons were removed to Sanderson and several doctors who examined them reported them to be at least 75 to 100 years old. The skeletons, male and female, are well preserved. Several teeth were found in the skull of the male skeleton.

This cave is located on the Stensell ranch located near the little town of Sanderson on the Southern Pacific railroad. Magill stated that no jewelry or trinkets were found. Curators employed by the Smithsonian institute who are working in the Big Bend country will be called in to examine the skeletons.

at the Rainwater diamond each afternoon. The Connor boys won't give out much information at this time, but it is known they are signing up several good players.

Manager Blount of the Telephone team is a skipper any team would like to have. He is not only a good manager, but one of the best players last year. Under his leadership one can expect a well organized team. He says he is putting his boys through a stiff workout, and to date has reduced Harry Bunnell 80 pounds. He may not have the other 40 pounds off before the season begins, but believes Harry will be in the best of condition. Fans of a relief pitcher with man-sized curves, which does not refer to his delivery.

A strong team is expected to be entered by Walker-Smith. Collins will manage the team, and if one can judge by pre-season enthusiasm he would say it will be a real dark horse in the league.

The Reporter-Telegram will be represented by the same line-up as last year with the exception of Lowry and Blair. There is a possibility that Mr. Bonner will carry on the good work of last year's Ritz manager and fill his place at short stop.

The league has been fortunate in again securing the services of John Adams as scorekeeper. Those who remember his exceptionally good work last year will congratulate the managers at their signing him again.

It is the intention of the league to equip a diamond for the girls' league in a well located down town section. This diamond will be equipped with a backstop and benches for the spectators. The managers at the meeting expressed willingness to aid this league in every way possible.

The King's English As Hollywood Talks

Comes a new word to be added to the long list of those offering difficulties to the talkies—"figure." Looks easy, doesn't it? But it raised an amusing problem for Director John Adoffi during filming of the Man Who Played God.

George Arliss, in a picture for Warner Brothers at the Ritz today and Thursday.

"Look here," said Violet Heming, famous stage actress, one day as she rehearsed her lines—only she pronounced it "heah."

"I'm supposed to say, 'That girl over there has a nice figure.' Now over in England we pronounce it 'figah,' but I notice that in America you say 'figure.' I don't know which to use."

"Maybe you can compromise," suggested Ivan Simpson helpfully, "and say 'figyah'."

"But Bette Davis capped the climax.

"In Australia," she interposed, "I hear that they call it 'gwan'!"

She accepted the last syllable, too!

Indications are now that when the line reaches the screen at the Ritz theatre today, the young lady in question will somehow have changed her figure for a "form."

Schwarzkopf, who has admitted only that he saw Colonel Breckinridge, disclosed the conference was held in an apartment of Mrs. Dwight Morrow, mother of Mrs. Lindbergh.

It was understood both Colonel and Mrs. Breckinridge visited Dr. Condon's home late in the day. Consequently Dr. Condon departed from his residence, but his household requested he not be followed, and that he be given an opportunity to conduct his talks with secrecy.

For the eighth consecutive day early editions of a morning newspaper carried the advertisement.

"What is wrong? Have you crossed me? Please, better directions, 'Jafsie.'"

Meantime, it became known that two of the three Norfolk, Va., intermediaries had visited Colonel Lindbergh here yesterday.

The third member of the trio, the Very Rev. H. Dobson-Peacock, refused comment at Norfolk on a report he and his associates were aware of a break among the kidnapers and that Colonel Lindbergh had been warned trickery might be attempted.

Belief Maintained

The southern intermediaries have maintained steadfastly their faith that the persons with whom they have been in touch were the real kidnapers. Colonel Lindbergh has been just as positive of the identity of the criminals to whom he paid the ransom. He has explained that a definite means of identification of the kidnapers was contained in the note they left in the baby's nursery March 1. This is generally believed to have been a cryptic symbol used as a signature.

A police bulletin this afternoon reaffirming the existence of this "positive means of identification" and said it did not involve any part of the baby's clothing.
